AND THE

A C T S O F T H E A P O S T L E S.

THE one half of our undertaking upon the New Testament is now by the assistance of divine Grace finished, and presented to the reader, who it is hoped, the Lord working with it, may hereby be somewhat helped in understanding and improving the sacred history of Christ and his apostles, and making it, as it certainly is, the best exposition of our creed, in which these inspired writers are summed up; which is intimated by that evangelist, who calls his gospel a Declaration of those things which are most surely believed among us, Luke i. 1.

And as there is no part of Scripture which it concerns us more to be well established in the belief of, so there is none which the generality of Christians are more conversant with, or speak of more frequently: It is therefore our duty, by constant pains in meditation and prayer, to come to an intimate acquaintance with the true intent and meaning of these narratives, what our concern is in them, and what we are to build upon them, and draw from them; that we may not rest in such a knowledge of them as that we had, when in our childhood we were taught to read English out of the translation, and Greek out of the originals of these books. We ought to know them as the Physician doth his dispensatory, the Lawyer his books of reports, and the Sailor his card and compass; that is, to know how to make use of them in that which we apply ourselves to as our business in this world, which is to serve God here, and enjoy him hereafter, and both in Christ the Mediator.

The great designs of the Christian institutes, (which these books are the fountains and foundations of) were to reduce the children of men to the fear and love of God, as the commanding active principle of their observance of him and obedience to him; to shew them the way of their reconciliation to him, and acceptance with him, and to bring them under obligations to Jesus Christ as Mediator; and by them to engage them to all instances of devotion towards God, and justice and charity towards all men, in conformity to the example of Christ, in obedience to his law, and in pursuance of his great intentions. What therefore I have endeavoured here has been with this view, to make these writings serviceable to the faith, holiness, and comfort of good Christians.

Now that these writings thus made use of to serve these great and noble designs may have their due influence upon us, it concerns us to be well established in our belief of their divine original. And here we have to do with two sorts of people, some that embrace the Old Testament, but that set up in opposition to the New; pleading, that, if that be right, this is wrong; and these are the Jews. Others that, though they live in a Christian nation and by baptism wear the Christian name, yet under pretence of freedom of thought despise Christianity, and consequently reject the New Testament, and therefore the Old of course.

I confess it strange, that any now who receive the Old Testament should reject the New; since, besides all the particular proofs of the divine authority of the New Testament, there is such an admirable harmony between it and the Old: It agrees with the Old in all the main intentions of it, refers to it, builds upon it, shews the accomplishment of its types and prophecies, and thereby is the perfection and crown of it. Nay if it be not true the Old Testament must be false, and all the glorious promises which shine so bright in it, and the performance of which was limited within certain periods of time, must be a great delusion; which we are sure they are not, and therefore must embrace the New Testament to support the reputation of the Old.

That in the Old Testament which the New Testament lays aside, is the peculiarity of the Jewish nation and the observances of the ceremonial law; both which certainly were of divine appointment; and yet the New Testament doth not at all clash with the Old; for,

1. They were always designed to be laid aside in the fulness of time. No other is to be expected, but that the morning-star should disappear when the sun riseth; and the latter parts of the Old Testament often speak of the laying aside of those things, and of the calling in of the Gentiles.

2. They were very honourably laid aside, and rather exchanged for that which was more noble and excellent, more divine and heavenly. The Jewish church was swallowed up in the Christian, the Mosaic ritual in evangelical institutions. So that the New Testament is no more the undoing of the Old, than the sending of a youth to the university is the undoing of his education in the grammar-school.

3. Providence soon determined this controversy (which is the only thing that seemed a controversy between the Old Testament and the New) by the destruction of Jerusalem, the desolations of the temple, the dissolution of the temple-service, and the total dispersion of all the remains of the Jewish nation; with a judicial defeat of all the attempts to incorporate it again, now for above sixteen hundred years, and this according to the express predictions of Christ a little before his death. And as Christ would not have the doctrine of his being the Messiah much insisted on, till the great conclusive proof of it was given by his resurrection from the dead; so the repeal of the ceremonial law, as to the Jews, was not much insisted on, but their keeping up the observation of it was connived at, till the great conclusive proof of its repeal was given by the destruction of Jerusalem; which made the observation of it for ever impracticable. And the manifest tokens of divine wrath, which the Jews, considered as a people, even notwithstanding the prosperity of particular persons among them, continue under to this day, is a proof, not only of the truth of Christ's predictions concerning them, but that they lie under a greater guilt than that of idolatry; for which they lay under a desolation of seventy years; and that can be no other but crucifying Christ and rejecting his gospel.

Thus evident it is, that in our expounding the New Testament we are not undoing what we did in expounding the Old; so far from that, that we may appeal to the law and the prophets for the confirmation of the great truth which the gospels are written to prove, That our Lord Jesus is the Messiah promised to the fathers, who should come, and we are to look for no other. For though his appearing did not answer the expectation of the carnal Jews, who looked for a Messiah in external pomp and power, yet it exactly answered all the types, prophecies, and promises of the Old Testament, which all had their accomplishment in him: and even his ignominious sufferings, which are the greatest stumbling-block to the Jews, were foretold concerning the Messiah; so that if he had not submitted to them we had failed in our proof; so far it is from being weakened by them. Bishop Kidder's Demonstration of the Christian's Messiah has abundantly made out this truth, and answered the cavils (for so they are, rather than arguments) of the Jews against it, above any in our language.

But we live in an age when Christianity and the New Testament are most virulently and daringly attacked by some within their own bowels, than by those upon their borders; never was Moses and his writings so arraigned and ridiculed by any Jews, or Mahomet and his Alcoran by any Mussulmen, as Christ and his gospel by men that are baptized and called Christians. And this, not under colour of any other divine revelation, but in contempt and defiance of all divine revelation; and not by way of complaint, that they meet with that which shocks their faith, and which, through their own weakness, they cannot get over; and therefore desire to be instructed in, and helped in the understanding of, and the reconciling of them to the truth which they have received; but by way of resolute opposition, as if they looked upon it as their enemy, and were resolved by all means possible to be the ruin of it; though they cannot say what evil it has done to the world or to them. If the pretence of it has transported many in the church of Rome into such corruptions of worship and cruelties of government, as are indeed the scandal of the human nature; yet, instead of being thereby prejudiced against pure Christianity, they should the rather appear more vigorously in defence of it, when they see so excellent an institution as that is in itself so basely abused and misrepresented.

They pretend to a liberty of thought in their opposition to Christianity, and would be distinguished by the name of Free-thinkers. I will not here go about to produce the arguments, which to all that are not wilfully ignorant and prejudiced against the truth, are sufficient to prove the divine original and authority of the doctrine of Christ. The learned find much satisfaction in reading the apologies of the ancients for the Christian religion, when it was struggling with the polytheism and idolatry of the Gentiles. Justin Martyr and Tertullian, Lactantius and Minutius Felix, wrote admirably in defence of Christianity, when it was farther sealed to by the blood of the Martyrs.

P R E F A C E.

Bati is parents and advocates in the present day have another sort of enemies to deal with. The antiquity of the pagan theology, its universal prevalency, the edicts of princes, and the traditions and usages of the country, are not now objected to Christianity; but I know not what imaginary freedom of thought, and an unheard-of privilege of the human nature is trumped up, not to be bound by any divine revelation whatsoever.

Now it is easy to make out,

1. That those who would be thought thus to maintain a liberty of thinking, as one of the privileges of the human nature, and in defence of which they will take up arms against God himself, yet themselves do not think freely, nor give others leave to do so. In some of them a resolute indulgence of themselves in those vicious courses, which they know the gospel, if they admit it, will make very uneasy to them, and a secret enmity to a holy heavenly mind and life, forbids them all free thought; for so strong a prejudice have their lusts and passions laid them under against the laws of Christ, that they find themselves under a necessity of opposing the truths of Christ, upon which these laws are founded. Perit judicium, quando res transit in affectum. Right or wrong Christ's bonds must be broken, and his cords cast from them; and therefore how evident soever the premisses be, the conclusion must be denied, if it tend to fasten these bands and cords upon them; and where is the freedom of thought then? While they promise themselves liberty, they themselves are the servants of corruption; for of whom a man is overcome, of the same is he brought in bondage.

In others of them a reigning pride and affectation of singularity, and a spirit of contradiction, those lusts of the mind, which are as impetuous and imperious as any of the lusts of the flesh and of the world are, forbid a freedom of thinking, and enslave the soul in all its inquiries after religion. Those can no more think freely that resolve they will think by themselves, than those can that resolve to think with their neighbours.

Nor will they give others liberty to think freely; for it is not by reason and argument that they go about to convince us, but by jest and banter, and exposing Christianity and its serious professors to contempt. Now considering how natural it is to most men to be jealous of their reputation, this is as great an imposition as can possibly be; and the unthinking are as much kept from free-thinking, by the fear of being ridiculed in the club of those that set up for oracles in reason, as by the fear of being cursed, excommunicated, and anathematized by the council of those that set up for oracles in religion. And where is the free-thinking then?

2. That those who will allow themselves a true liberty of thinking, and will think seriously, cannot but embrace all Christ's sayings, as faithful and well worthy of all acceptance. Let the corrupt bias of the carnal heart towards the world, and the flesh, and self (the most presumptuous idol of the three) be taken out, and let the doctrine of Christ be proposed first in its true colours, as Christ and his apostles have given it us, and then in its true light, with all its proper evidence, intrinsic and extrinsic; and then let the capable soul freely use its rational powers and faculties, and by the operation of the Spirit of grace, who alone works faith in all that believe, even the high thought, when once it becomes a free thought, freed from the bondage of sin and corruption, will, by a pleasing and happy power, be captivated and brought into obedience to Christ; and when he thus makes it free, it will be free indeed.

Let any one that will give himself leave to think impartially, and be at the pains to think closely, read Mr. Baxter's Reason for the Christian Religion, and he will find, both that it goes to the bottom, and lays the foundation deep and firm, and also that it brings forth the top stone in a believer's consent to God in Christ, to the satisfaction of any that are truly concerned about their souls and another world. The proofs of the truths of the gospel have been excellently well methodized, and enforced likewise by Bishop Stillingfleet in his Origines Sacre; Grotius, in his book of the Truth of the Christian Religion; Dr. Whitby in his General Preface to his Commentary on the New Testament; and of late by Mr. Ditton, very argumentatively, in his discourse concerning the Resurrection of Jesus Christ; and many others have herein done worthily. And I will not believe any man who rejects the New Testament and the Christian Religion, to have thought freely upon the subject, unless he has, with humility and seriousness, and prayer to God for direction, deliberately read those or the like books, which it is certain were written both with liberty and clearness of thought.

For my own part, if my thoughts were worth any one's notice, I do declare, I have thought of this great concern with all the liberty that a reasonable soul can pretend to or desire; and the result is, that the more I think, and the more freely I think, the more fully I am satisfied that the Christian Religion is the true Religion; and what, if I submit my soul sincerely to, I may venture my soul confidently upon.

For when I think freely,

First, I cannot but think, that the God that made man a reasonable creature by his power, has a right to rule him by his law, and to oblige him to keep his inferior faculties of appetite and passion, together with the capacities of thought and speech, in due subjection to the superior powers of reason and conscience. And when I look into my own heart, I cannot but think that this was it which my Maker designed in the order and frame of my soul; and that herein he intended to support his own dominion in me.

Secondly, I cannot but think, that my happiness is bound up in the favour of God, and that his favour will be or not be towards me, according as I do or do not comply with the laws and ends of my creation. That I am accountable to this God, and that from him my judgment proceeds, not only for this world but for my everlasting state.

Thirdly, I cannot but think, that my nature is very unlike what the nature of man was, as it came out of the Creator's hands; that it is degenerated from its primitive purity and rectitude; I find in myself a natural aversion to my duty, and to spiritual and divine exercises, and a propensity to that which is evil; such an inclination towards the world and the flesh, as amounts to a propensity to backslide from the living God.

Fourthly, I cannot but think, that I am therefore by nature thrown out of the favour of God; for, though I think he is a gracious and merciful God, yet I think he is also a just and holy God, and that I am become by sin both odious to his holiness and obnoxious to his justice. I should not think freely, but very partially, if I should think otherwise. I think I am guilty before God, have sinned, and come short of glorifying him, and of being glorified with him.

Fifthly, I cannot but think that, without some special discovery of God's will concerning me and good-will to me, I cannot possibly recover his favour; be reconciled to him, or be so far restored to my primitive rectitude, as to be capable of serving my Creator, and answering the ends of my creation, and being fit for another world. For the bounties of Providence to me in common with the inferior creatures, cannot serve either as assurances that God is reconciled to me, or means to reconcile me to God.

Sixthly, I cannot but think, that the way of salvation, both from the guilt and from the power of sin by Jesus Christ, and his mediation between God and man, as it is revealed by the New Testament, is admirably well fitted to all the exigencies of my case, to restore me both to the favour of God, and to the government and enjoyment of myself: Here I see a proper method for the removing of the guilt of sin, that I may not die by the sentence of the law; by the all-sufficient merit and righteousness of the Son of God in our nature. And for the breaking of the power of sin, that I may not die by my own disease, by the all-sufficient influence and operation of the Spirit of God upon our nature. Every malady has herein its remedy, every grievance is hereby redressed, and in such a way as advances the honour of all the divine attributes, and is suited and accommodated to the human nature.

Seventhly, I cannot but think, that what I find in myself of natural religion doth evidently bear testimony to the Christian religion; for all that truth which is discovered to me by the light of nature, is confirmed and more clearly discovered by the gospel; the very same thing which the light of nature gives me a confused sight of, like the sight of men as trees walking, the New Testament gives me a clear and distinct sight of. And all that good which is pressed upon me by the law of nature is more fully discovered to me, and I find myself much more strongly bound to by the gospel of Christ, the engagements it lays upon me to my duty, and the encouragements and assistances it gives me in my duty. And this is farther confirming to me, that there, just there, where natural light leaves me at a loss and unsatisfied, tells me, hitherto it can carry me but no farther; the gospel takes me up, helps me out, and gives me all the satisfaction I can desire, and that is especially in the great business of the satisfying of God's justice for the sin of man. My own conscience asks, Wherewithal shall I come before the Lord, and bow myself before the most high God? Will he be pleased with thousands of rams? But I am still at a loss, I cannot frame a righteousness from any thing I am or have in myself, or any thing I can do for God or present to God, wherein I dare appear before him; but the gospel comes and tells me, that Jesus Christ has made his soul an offering for sin, and God has declared himself well pleased with all believers in him; and this makes me easy.

Eighthly, I cannot but think, that the proofs by which God has attested the truth of the gospel, are the most proper that could be given in a case of this nature. That the power and authority of the Redeemer in the kingdom of grace should be exemplified to the world, not by the highest degree of the pomp and authority of the kings of the earth, as the Jews expected, but by the evidences of his dominion in the kingdom of nature; which is a much greater dignity and authority than any of the kings of the earth ever pretended tended to, and is no less than divine. And his miracles being generally wrought upon men, not only upon their bodies, as mostly they were when Christ was here upon earth; but, which is more, upon their minds, as mostly they were after the pouring out of the Spirit in the gift of tongues and other supernatural endowments, were the most proper confirmations possible of the truth of the gospel, which was designed for the making of men holy and happy.

Ninthly, I cannot but think, that the methods taken for the propagating of this gospel, and the wonderful success of those methods, which are purely spiritual and heavenly, and destitute of all secular advantages and supports, plainly shew that it was of God, for God was with it; and it could never have spread as it did, in the face of so much opposition, if it had not been accompanied with a power from on high. And the preservation of Christianity in the world to this day, notwithstanding the difficulties it has struggled with, is to me a standing miracle for the proof of it.

Lastly, I cannot but think, that the gospel of Christ has had some influence upon my soul, has had such a command over me, and been such a comfort to me, as is a demonstration to myself, though it cannot be so to another, that it is of God. I have tasted in it, that the Lord is gracious; and the most subtle disputant cannot convince one who has tasted honey that it is not sweet.

And now I appeal to him who knows the thoughts and intents of the heart, that in all this I think freely, (if it be possible for a man to know that he doth so) and not under power of any bias. Whether we have reason to think that those who, without any colour of reason, not only usurp but monopolize the character of Free-thinkers, do so, let those judge, who easily observe that they do not speak sincerely, but industriously dissemble their notions; and one instance I cannot but take notice of, their unfair dealing with their readers, that when for the diminishing of the authority of the New Testament they urge the various readings of the original, and quote an acknowledgment of Mr. Gregory of Christ-church in his preface to his Works, That no profane author whatsoever, &c. and yet suppress what immediately follows, as the sense of that learned man upon it, That this is an invincible reason for the Scriptures part, &c.

We then receive the books of the New Testament as our oracles; for it is evident that that excellent notion of Dr. Henry More's is true, that "they have a direct tendency to take us off from the animal life, and to bring us to the divine life."

But while we are thus maintaining the divine original and authority of the New Testament, as it has been received through all the ages of the Church, we find our cause not only attacked by the enemies we speak of, but in effect betrayed by one that makes our New Testament almost double to what it really is, adding the Constitutions of the Apostles to it, put together by Clement, together with the Apostolical Canons, and making those to be of equal authority with the writings of the Evangelists and preferable to the Epistles. By enlarging the lines of defence thus, without either cause or precedent, he gives great advantage to the invaders.

Those Constitutions of the Apostles have many things in them very good, and may be of use, as other human compositions. But to pretend that they were composed, as they profess themselves to be, by the twelve apostles in concert at Jerusalem, I Peter saying this, I Andrew saying that, &c. is the greatest imposition that can be upon the credulity of the simple.

1. It is certain there were a great many spurious writings that, in the early days of the church, went under the names of the apostles and apostolical men; so that it has always been complained of, as impossible to find out any thing but the canon of scripture that could with any assurance be attributed to them. Baronius himself acknowledgeth it, Cum apostolorum nomine tam facta quam dicta reperiantur esse supposititia; nec sic quid de illis à veris sincerisque scriptoribus narratum sit integrum & incorruptum remanserit, in desperationem planè quandam animam dejiciunt posse unquam assequi quod verum certumque subsistat. Ad. an Christ. 44. sect. 42, &c. There were acts under the names of Andrew the apostle, Philip, Peter, Thomas; a Gospel under the name of Thaddeus, another of Barnabas, another of Bartholomew; a book concerning the infancy of our Saviour, another concerning his nativity, and many the like, which were all rejected as forgeries.

2. These Constitutions and Canons, among the rest, were condemned in the primitive church as apocryphal, and therefore justly rejected; because, though otherwise good, they pretended to be what really they were not, dictated by the twelve apostles themselves, as received from Christ. If Jesus Christ gave them in such instructions, and they gave them in such a solemn manner to the church, as is pretended, it is unaccountable that there is not the least notice taken of any such thing done or designed in the Gospels, the Acts, or any of the Epistles.

They that have judged the most favourably of those Canons and Constitutions have concluded, that they were compiled by some officious hands under the name of Clement towards the end of the second Century, about an hundred and fifty years after Christ's ascension, out of the common practice of the Churches; that is, that which the compilers were most acquainted with or had respect for; when at the same time we have reason to think, that the far greater number of Christian churches, which by that time were planted, had Constitutions of their own, which, if they had had the happiness to be transmitted to posterity, would have recommended themselves as well as these or better. But as the Legislators of old put a reputation upon their laws, by pretending to have received them from some deity or other; so church-governors studied to gain reputation to their sees, by placing some apostolical man or other at the head of their catalogue of Bishops, (See Bishop Stillingfleet's Irenicum, p. 302.) and reputation to their Canons and Constitutions, by fathering them upon the Apostles.

But how can it be imagined, that the apostles should be all together at Jerusalem, to compose this book of Canons with so much solemnity, when we know that their commission was to go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature: And accordingly Eusebius tells us, that Thomas went into Parthia, Andrew into Scythia, John into the Lesser Asia; and we have reason to think, that after their dispersion they never came together again, any more than the planters of the nations did after the most High had separated the sons of Adam.

And I think any one that will compare these Constitutions with the writings that we are sure were given by inspiration of God, will easily discern a vast difference in the style and spirit; What is the chaff to the wheat?

* "Where are ministers, in the style of the true apostles, called priests, high-priests? Where do we find in the apostolical age, that age of suffering, of the placing of the Bishop in his throne? Or of readers, singers, and porters in the church?"

I fear the collector and compiler of those Constitutions, under the name of Clement, was conscious to himself of dishonesty in it, in that he would not have them published before all, because of the mysteries contained in them; nor were they known or published till the middle of the Fourth Century, when the forgery could not be so well disproved. I cannot see any mysteries in them that they should be concealed if they had been genuine; but am sure Christ bids his apostles publish the mysteries of the kingdom of God upon the house-tops. And St. Paul, though there are mysteries in his Epistles much more sublime than any of these Constitutions, chargeth that they should be read to all the holy brethren: Nay these Constitutions are so wholly in a manner taken up, either with moral precepts, or rules of practice in the church, that if they had been what they pretend, they had been most fit to be published before all. And though the Apocalypse is so full of mysteries, yet a blessing is pronounced upon the readers and hearers of that prophecy. We must therefore conclude, that whenever they were written, by declining the light, they owned themselves to be apocryphal, that is, hidden or concealed; that durst not mingle themselves with what was given by divine inspiration; to allude to what is said of the ministers, Acts v. 13. Of the rest durst no man join himself to the apostles, for the people magnified them.

So that even by their own confession, they were not delivered to the churches with the other writings, when the New Testament Canon was solemnly sealed up with that dreadful sentence passed on those that add unto these things.

And as we have thus had attempts made of late upon the purity and sufficiency of our New Testament by additions to it, so we have likewise had from another quarter a great contempt put upon it by the papal power. The occasion this:

One Father Quesnel, a French papist, but a Jansenist, near thirty years ago, published the New Testament in French in several small volumes, with Moral Reflections on every verse; to render the reading of it more profitable and meditation upon it more easy: It was much taken to in France, for the sake of the piety and devotion that appeared in it, and it had several impressions: The Jesuits were much disgusted, and solicited the Pope for the condemnation of it, though the author of it was a papist, and many things in it countenanced popish superstition.

After much struggling in the court of Rome about it, a bull was at length obtained, at the request of the French king, from the present pope Clement XI. bearing date September 8, 1713, by which the said book, with what title or in what language soever it is printed, is prohibited and condemned; both the New Testament itself, because in many things varying from the vulgar Latin, and the Annotations, as containing divers propositions (above an hundred are enumerated) scandalous and pernicious, injurious to the church and its customs, impious, blasphemous, savouring of heresy. And the propositions are such as these: "That the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ is the effectual principle of all manner of good, is necessary for every good action; for without it nothing is done, nay nothing can be done." "That it is a sovereign grace, and is an operation of the almighty hand of God." "That when God accompanies his word with the internal power of his grace, it operates in the soul the obedience which it demands." "That faith is the first grace, and the fountain of all others." "That it is in vain for us to call God our Father, if we do not cry to him with a spirit of love." "That there is no God nor religion where there is no charity." "That the catholic church comprehends the angels and all the elect and just men of the earth, of all ages." "That it has the Word incarnate for its head, and all the saints for its members." "That it is profitable and necessary at all times, in all places, and for all sorts of persons, to know the holy Scriptures." And "that the holy obscurity of the word of God, is no reason for the laity not reading it." And "that the Lord's day ought to be sanctified by reading books of piety, especially the holy Scriptures." And "that to forbid Christians from reading the Scriptures, is to prohibit the use of light to the children of light." Many such positions as these, which the spirit of every good Christian cannot but relish as true and good, are condemned by the pope's bull as impious and blasphemous. And this bull, though strenuously opposed by a great number of the Bishops in France, who were well affected to the notions of Father Quesnel, yet was received and confirmed by the French king's letters patent, bearing date at Versailles, February 14, 1714, which forbid all manner of persons, upon pain of exemplary punishment, so much as to keep any of those books in their houses; and adjudgeth any that should hereafter write in defence of the Propositions condemned by the pope, as disturbers of the peace.

It was registered the day following, February 15, by the Parliament of Paris, but with divers provisos and limitations.

By this it appears that popery is still the same thing that ever it was, an enemy to the knowledge of the Scriptures, and to the honour of divine grace: And what reason we have to bless God, that we have liberty to read the Scriptures, and have helps to understand and improve them; which we are concerned diligently to make a good use of, that we may not provoke God to give us up into the hands of those powers who would use us in like manner.

I am willing to hope that those, to whom the reading of the Exposition of the Old Testament was pleasant, will find this yet more pleasant; for this is that part of Scripture which doth most plainly testify of Christ, and in which that gospel grace which appears unto all men, bringing salvation, shines most clear. This is the New Testament milk for babes, the rest is strong meat for strong men. By these therefore let us be nourished and strengthened, that we may be pressing on towards perfection; and that having laid the foundation in the history of our blessed Saviour's Life, Death, and Resurrection, and the first preaching of his gospel, we may build upon it by an acquaintance with the mysteries of godliness, which we shall be farther let into in the Epistles.

I desire I may be read with a candid and not a critical eye. I pretend not to gratify the curious; the top of my ambition is, to assist those that are truly serious in searching the Scriptures daily. I am sure it is designed, and hope it is calculated to promote piety towards God and charity towards our brethren; and that there is not only something in it which may edify, but nothing which may justly offend any good Christian.

If any receive spiritual benefit by my poor endeavours it will be a comfort to me, but let God have all the glory, and that free grace of his which has employed one that is utterly unworthy of such an honour, and enabled one thus far to go on in it who is utterly insufficient for such a service.

Having obtained help of God I continue hitherto in it, and humbly depend upon the same good hand of my God to carry me on in that which remains; to gird my loins with needful strength, and to make my way perfect; and for this I humbly desire the prayers of my friends. One volume more, I hope, will include what is yet to be done; and I will both go about it, and go on with it, as God shall enable me, with all convenient speed; but it is that part of the Scripture which, of all other, requires the most care and pains in expounding it. But I trust, that as the day, so shall the strength be.

M. H.

A D V E R T I S E M E N T.

THAT which has been offered just before to the reader, was the reverend Author's first draught of a Preface to this volume. He intended to revise it, if God had allowed him a return home from his late journey. But though by the afflicting stroke of his sudden death it wants the advantage of his last hand, yet serious readers will be well pleased to have his first sentiments on those important heads which come there under his consideration: especially since it contains his dying testimony to the Christian religion, the Canon of the New Testament, and the general usefulness of the sacred Scriptures, on occasion of those debates which have been lately started, and made the most considerable noise in the world.

The Exposition itself, as far as the Acts of the Apostles goes, was entirely committed to the press, before he left the city. The reader will perceive his intentions for the rest of the Holy Bible. But the sovereign providence of God, in whose hands our times are, has called this faithful and diligent servant to rest from his labours, and finish well himself, before he could finish this, and several other great and pious designs he had for the service of God and his church.

However it may be acceptable to such as have often entertained themselves and their families with what is already extant, to let them know, that we are not without hopes yet of seeing Mr. Henry's Exposition of the remainder, though it cannot be expected to be altogether so copious and complete, as that which he prepared himself for the public. He drew up several years ago an Exposition of the Epistle to the Romans, which he had designed to transcribe with little alteration, for the beginning of his next volume, and was earnestly solicited to print it by itself, before he had thoughts of writing upon the whole Bible. For the rest, there are copies of his Expositions, both in public and private, taken from him by judicious writers; wherein, though they may not be of equal length, yet Mr. Henry was used to express himself with like propriety, the same pious spirit, and uncommon skill in the Scriptures. There is encouragement to hope, that the revising and preparing of these for the press, will be undertaken (if God give life and health) by an intimate friend of the excellent Author, whose long acquaintance with his spirit and way makes him the most proper person for that service; and his endeared affection will incline him to take the pains necessary for ushering them into the world. This course is apprehended much better, than either to leave such a work unfinished, when it is already advanced so far, or to attempt the continuation of the design with a quite different set of thoughts, and another sort of style and method, that it may be as much Mr. Henry's as possible. But a reasonable time must be allowed before this can be expected. I pray God long to spare the valuable life of that dear friend of the Author's, and every way furnish him for this good work, and all others he may undertake for the good of God's church.

AN E X P O S I T I O N, WITH PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS,

Of the GOSPEL according to
St. MATTHEW.

We have now before us, 1. The New Testament of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, so this second part of the holy Bible is intitled; The new covenant, so it might as well be rendered; the word signifies both: But when it is (as here) spoken of as Christ's act and deed, it is most properly rendered a Testament, for he is the Testator, and it becomes of force by his death, Heb. iv. 16, 17. nor is there, as in covenants, a previous treaty between the parties; but what is granted, though an estate upon condition is owing to the will, the free-will, the good-will of the testator; so is all the grace contained in this book owing to Jesus Christ as our Lord and Saviour; and unless we consent to him as our Lord, we cannot expect any benefit by him as our Saviour. This is called a New Testament, to distinguish it from that which was given by Moses, and was now antiquated, and to signify that it should be always new, and should never wax old and grow out of date. These books contain not only a full discovery of that grace which has appeared to all men, bringing salvation, but a legal instrument, by which it is conveyed to, and settled upon all believers. How carefully do we preserve, and with what attention and pleasure do we read the last will and testament of a friend that has by it left us a fair estate, and with it high expressions of his love to us! How precious then should this Testament of our blessed Saviour be to us, which secures to us all his unseasonable riches! It is his testament; for though as is usual, it was written by others, (we have nothing upon record that was of Christ's own writing) yet he dictated it; and the night before he died, in the institution of his supper, signed; sealed and published it in the presence of twelve witnesses: For though these books were not written of some years after for the benefit of posterity, in perpetuam rei memoriam, yet the New Testament of our Lord Jesus was settled, confirmed and declared, from the time of his death, as a nuncupative will, with which these records exactly agree. The things which St. Luke wrote, were things which were most surely believed, and therefore well known before he wrote them; but when they were written, the oral tradition was superseded and set aside, and these writings were the repository of that New Testament: And this is intimated by the title which is prefixed to many Greek copies, Της καὶνῆς Διαθήκης Ἀπαύλα, The whole of the New Testament, or all the things of it: In it is declared the whole counsel of God, concerning our salvation, Acts xx. 27. As the law of the Lord is perfect, so is the gospel of Christ, and nothing is to be added to it: We have it all and are to look for no more.

2. We have before us the four gospels: Gospel signifies good news or glad tidings; and this history of Christ's coming into the world to save sinners, is without doubt the best news that ever came from heaven to earth; the angel gave it this title, Luke ii. 10. Ευαγγελίζομαι ὑμῖν, I bring you good tidings; I bring the gospel to you. And the prophet foretold it, Isa. lii. 7.—lxi. 1. where it is foretold, that in the days of the Messiah good tidings should be preached. Gospel is an old Saxon word; it is God's spell or word; and God is so called because he is good, Deus optimus, and therefore it may be a good spell or word: And if we take spell in its proper signification for a charm, (carmen) and take that in a good sense, for what is moving and affecting, which is apt (lenire dolorum) to calm the spirits or to raise them in admiration or love, as that which is very amiable we call charming, it is applicable to the gospel, for in it the charmer charmeth wisely, though to deaf adders, Psalm lviii. 4, 5. Nor (one would think) can any charms be so powerful as those of the beauty and love of our Redeemer. The whole New Testament is the gospel: St. Paul calls it his gospel, because he was one of the preachers of it. O that we may each of us make it ours, by our cordial acceptance of it and subjection to it! But the four books which contain the history of the Redeemer, we commonly call the four gospels, and the inspired penman of them Evangelists or Gospel writers; but not very properly, because that title belongs to a particular order of ministers that were assistants to the apostles, Eph. iv. 11. He gave some apostles, and some evangelists. It was requisite that the doctrine of Christ should be interwoven with, and founded upon the narrative of his birth, life, miracles, death and resurrection; for then it appears in its clearest and strongest light. As in nature so in grace, the most happy discoveries are those which take rise from the certain representations of matters of fact: Natural history is the best philosophy; and so is the sacred history, both of the Old and New Testament, the most proper and grateful vehicle of sacred truth. These four gospels were early and constantly received by the primitive church, and read in Christian assemblies, as appears by the writing of Justin Martyr and Irenaeus, who lived little more than an hundred years after the ascension of Christ; they declare they were neither more nor fewer than four received by the church: and there was a harmony of these four evangelists compiled by Tatianus about that time, which he called Τὰ εὐαγγέλιον, The gospel out of the four. In the third and fourth centuries there were gospels forged by divers sects, and published one under the name of St. Peter, another of St. Thomas, another of St. Philip, &c. But they were never owned by the church, nor any credit given to them; as the learned Dr. Whitby shews: And he gives this good reason why we should adhere to these written records, because whatever the pretences of tradition may be, it is not sufficient to preserve things with any certainty, as appears by experience: For whereas Christ said and did many things inmemorable which were not written, John xx. 30.—xxi. 25, tradition has not preserved any one of them to us, but all is lost except what was written; that therefore is it we must abide by, and blessed be God that we have it to abide by; it is the sure word of history.

3. We have before us the gospel according to St. Matthew. The penman was by birth a Jew, by calling a publican, till Christ commanded his attendance, and then he left the receipt of custom to follow him, and was one of those that accompanied him all the time that the Lord Jesus went in and out, beginning from the baptism of John, unto the day that he was taken up, Acts i. 21, 22. and was therefore a competent witness of what he has here recorded: He is said to have written this history about eight years after Christ's ascension. Many of the ancients say he wrote it in the Hebrew or Syriac language, but the tradition is sufficiently disproved by Dr. Whitby; doubtless it was written in Greek, as the other parts of the New Testament were, not in that language which was peculiar to the Jews, whose church and state were near a period, but that which was common to the world, and in which the knowledge of Christ would be most effectually transmitted to the nations of the earth: yet it is probable there might be an edition of it in Hebrew, published by St. Matthew himself, at the same time that he wrote it in Greek; the former for the Jews, the latter for the Gentiles, when he left Judea to go preach among the Gentiles. Let us bless God that we have it, and have it in a language we understand.

C H A P. I.

This evangelist begins with the account of Christ's parentage and birth, his ancestors from whom he descended, and the manner of his entry into the world, to make it appear that he was indeed the Messiah promised; for it was foretold that he should be the son of David, and should be born of a virgin; and that he was so is here plainly shewn; for here is, 1. His pedigree from Abraham, in forty-two generations, three fourteens, ver. 1—17. 2. An account of the circumstances of his birth, so far as was requisite to shew that he was born of a virgin, ver. 18—25. Thus methodically is the life of our blessed Saviour written, as lives should be written for the clearer proposing of the example of them.

1. THE book of the generation of Jesus Christ, the son of David, the son of Abraham.
2. Abraham begat Isaac, and Isaac begat Jacob, and Jacob begat Judas and his brethren.
3. And Judas begat Pharez and Zara of Tamar,
VOL. III. No. CLVI.

and Pharez begat Esrom, and Esrom begat Aram.
4. And Aram begat Aminadab, and Aminadab begat Naasson, and Naasson begat Salmon. 5. And Salmon begat Booz of Rachab, and Booz begat Obed of Ruth, and Obed begat Jesse. 6. And Jesse begat David the king, and David the king begat Solomon of her that had been the wife of Urias. 7. And Solomon begat Roboam, and Roboam begat Abia, and Abia begat Asa. 8. And Asa begat Josaphat, and Josaphat begat Joram, and Joram begat Ozias. 9. And Ozias begat Joatham, and Joatham begat Achaz, and Achaz begat Ezekias. 10. And Ezekias begat Manasses, and Manasses begat Amon, and Amon begat Josias. 11. And Josias begat Jechonias and his brethren, about the time they were carried away to Babylon. 12. And after they were brought to Babylon, Jechonias begat Salathiel, and Salathiel

Salathiel begat Zerobabel. 13. And Zerobabel begat Abiud, and Abiud begat Eliakim, and Eliakim begat Azor. 14. And Azor begat Sadoc, and Sadoc begat Achim, and Achim begat Eliud. 15. And Eliud begat Eleazar, and Eleazar begat Matthan, and Matthan begat Jacob. 16. And Jacob begat Joseph the husband of Mary, of whom was born Jesus, who is called Christ. 17. So all the generations from Abraham to David are fourteen generations: and from David until the carrying away into Babylon are fourteen generations: and from the carrying away into Babylon unto Christ are fourteen generations.

Concerning this genealogy of our Saviour, observe,

1. The title of it: It is the book, (or the account, as the Hebrew word sepher, a book sometimes signifies) of the generation of Jesus Christ, of his ancestors according to the flesh; or it is the narrative of his birth: It is Βίβλος Γενεσιως, a book of Genesis. The Old Testament begins with the book of the generation of the world, and it is its glory that it doth so; but the glory of the New Testament herein excelleth, that it begins with the book of the generation of him that made the world. As God his outgoings were of old from everlasting, Micah v. 2. and none can declare that generation; but as Man he was sent forth in the fulness of time, born of a woman, and it is that generation which is here declared.

2. The principal intention of it: It is not an endless or needless genealogy, it is not a vain glorious one, as those of great men commonly are, stemma quid faciunt? it is like a pedigree given in evidence to prove a title, and make out a claim; the design is to make it out that our Lord Jesus is the son of David, and the son of Abraham, and therefore of that nation and family, out of which the Messiah was to arise. Abraham and David were in their day the great trustees of the promise relating to the Messiah; the promise of the blessing was made to Abraham and his seed, of the dominion, to David and his seed; and those that will have an interest in Christ as the son of Abraham, in whom all the families of the earth are to be blessed, must be faithful loyal subjects to him as the son of David, by whom all the families of the earth are to be ruled. It was promised to Abraham that Christ should descend from him, Gen. xii. 3—xiii. 18. and to David that he should descend from him, 2 Sam. vii. 12. Psalm lxxxix. 3, &c.—cxxxii. 11. and therefore unless it can be proved that Jesus is a son of David, and a son of Abraham, we cannot admit him to be the Messiah: Now this is here proved from the authentic records of the heralds offices. The Jews were very exact in preserving their pedigrees, and there was a providence in it, for the clearing up of the descent of the Messiah from the fathers; and since his coming that nation is so dispersed and confounded that it is a question whether any person in the world can legally prove himself to be a son of Abraham; however it is certain there is none can prove himself to be either a son of Aaron or a son of David, so that the priestly and kingly office must either be given up as lost for ever, or be lodged in the hands of our Lord Jesus. Christ is here first called the son of David, because under that title he was commonly spoken of and expected among the Jews: Those that owned him to be the Christ, called him the son of David, Matt. xv. 22.—xx. 31.—xxi. 15. This therefore the evangelist undertakes to make out, that he is not only a son of David, but that son of David on whose shoulders the government was to be; not only a son of Abraham, but that son of Abraham that was to be the father of many nations.

In calling Christ the son of David and the son of Abraham, he shews that God is faithful to his promise, and will make good every word that he hath spoken; and this, 1. Though the performance be long deferred. When God promised Abraham a son that should be the great blessing of the world, perhaps he expected it should be his immediate son, but it proved to be one at the distance of forty-two generations, and about two thousand years: So long before can God foretel what shall be done, and so long after sometimes doth God fulfil what has been promised. Note, Delays of promised mercies though they exercise our patience, do not weaken God's promise. 2. Though it began to be despaired of. This son of David and son of Abraham, that was to be the glory of his father's house, was born then when the seed of Abraham was a despised people, newly become tributaries to the Roman yoke, and the house of David buried in obscurity; for Christ was to be a root out of a dry ground. Note, God's time for the performance of his promises is when it labours under the greatest improbabilities.

3. The particular series of it drawn in a direct line from Abraham downwards, according to the genealogies recorded in the beginning of the books of Chronicles, as far as those go and which here we see the use of.

Some particulars we may observe in this genealogy.

1. Among the ancestors of Christ that had brethren, generally he descended from a younger brother: so Abraham himself was, and Jacob, and Judah, and David, and Nathan, and Rhese; to shew that the pre-eminence of Christ came not as that of earthly princes, from the primogeniture of his ancestors, but from the will of God, who according to the method of his providence exalteth them of low degree, and puts more abundant honour upon that part which lacked.

2. Among the sons of Jacob besides Judah, from whom Shiloh came, here is notice taken of his brethren; Judah and his brethren: No mention is made of Ishmael the son of Abraham, or of Esau the son of Isaac, because they were shut out of the church: whereas all the children of Jacob were taken in, and though not fathers of Christ, yet were patriarchs of the church, Acts vii. 8. and therefore are mentioned in this genealogy for the encouragement of the twelve tribes that were scattered abroad, intimating to them that they have an interest in Christ, and stand in relation to him as well as Judah.

3. Pharez and Zara the twin-sons of Judah are likewise both named, though Pharez only was Christ's ancestor, for the same reason that the brethren of Judah are taken notice of: And some think because the birth of Pharez and Zara had something of allegory in it: Zara put out his hand first, as the first born, but drawing it in Pharez got the birthright: The Jewish church like Zara, reached first at the birthright, but through unbelief, withdrawing the hand, the Gentile church, like Pharez, broke forth and went away with the birthright; and thus blindness is in part happened unto Israel, till the fulness of the Gentiles be come in; and then Zara shall be born, all Israel shall be saved, Rom. xi. 25, 26.

4. There are four women and but four named in this genealogy, two of them were originally, strangers to the commonwealth of Israel, Rachab a Canaanitess and a harlot besides, and Ruth the Moabitess, for in Jesus Christ there is neither Greek nor Jew; those that are strangers and foreigners are welcome in Christ to the citizenship of the saints. The other two were adulteresses, Tamar and Bathsheba, which was a further mark of humiliation put upon our Lord Jesus, that not only he descended from such, but that his descent from them is particularly remarked in his genealogy, and no veil drawn over it: He took upon him the likeness of sinful flesh, Rom. viii. 3. and takes even great sinners upon their repentance into the nearest relations to himself. Note, We ought not to upbraid people with the scandals of their ancestors; it is what they cannot help, and has been the lot of the best, even our Master himself. David's begetting Solomon of her that had been the wife of Urias is taken notice of (saith Dr. Whitby) to shew that that crime of David being repented of, was so far from hindering the promise made to him, that it pleased God by this very woman to fulfil it.

5. Though divers kings are here named, yet none is expressly called a king but David, ver. 6. David the king; because with him the covenant of royalty was made, and to him the promise of the kingdom of the Messiah was given, who is therefore said to inherit the throne of his father David, Luke i. 32.

6. In the pedigree of the kings of Judah, between Joram and Ozias, ver. 8. there are three left out, viz. Ahaziah, Joash and Amaziah; and therefore when it is said, Joram begat Ozias, it is meant according to the usage of the Hebrew tongue, that Ozias was lineally descended from him, as it is said to Hezekiah, that the sons which he should beget should be carried to Babylon, whereas they were removed several generations from him. It was not through mistake or forgetfulness that these three were omitted, but probably they were omitted in the genealogical tables that the evangelist consulted, which yet were admitted for authentic. Some give this reason for it: It being Matthew's design for memory sake, to reduce the number of Christ's ancestors to three fourteens, it was requisite that in this period three should be left out, and none more fit than they who were the immediate progeny of cursed Athaliah, who introduced the idolatry of Ahab into the house of David; for which this brand is set upon the family, and the iniquity thus visited to the third and fourth generation. Two of these three were apostates, and such God commonly sets a mark of his displeasure upon in this world: They all three had their heads brought to the grave with blood.

7. Some observe what a mixture there was of good and bad in the succession of these kings; as for instance, ver. 7, 8. wicked Rehoboam begat wicked Abia, wicked Abia begat good Asa, good Asa begat good Jehosaphat, good Jehosaphat begat wicked Joram. Grace doth not run in a blood, nor reigning sin neither: God's grace is his own, and he gives or withholds it as he pleaseth.

8. The captivity in Babylon is mentioned as a remarkable period in this line, ver. 11, 12. all things considered, it was a wonder the Jews were not lost in that captivity as other nations were; but this intimates the reason why the streams of that people were kept to run pure through that dead sea, because from them as concerning the flesh, Christ was to come. Destroy it not, for a blessing is in it, even that blessing of blessings Christ himself, Isa. lxxv. 8, 9. It was with an eye to him that they were restored, and the desolations of the sanctuary were looked upon with favour for the Lord's sake, Dan. ix. 17.

9. Josias is here said to beget Jechonias and his brethren, ver. 11. whereby Jechonias is meant Jehoiakim, who was the first-born of Josias; but when it is said, ver. 12. that Jechonias begat Salathiel, that Jechonias was the son of that Jehoiakim who was carried into Babylon, and there begat Salathiel, as Dr. Whitby shews: And when Jechonias is said to have been written childless, Jer. xxii. 30. it is explained thus; No man of his seed shall prosper. Salathiel is here said to beget Zerubbabel, whereas Salathiel begat Pedaiah, and he begat Zerubbabel, 1 Chron. iii. 19. but as before, the grandson is often called the son; Pedaiah it is likely died in his father's life-time, and so his son Zerubbabel was called the son of Salathiel.

10. The line is brought down not to Mary the mother of our Lord, but to Joseph the husband of Mary, ver. 16. for the Jews always reckoned their genealogies by the males: Yet Mary was of the same tribe and family with Joseph, so that both by the mother, and by this supposed father, he was of the house of David; yet his interest in that dignity is derived by Joseph, to whom really according to the flesh he had no relation, to shew that the kingdom of the Messiah is not founded in a natural descent from David.

11. The centre in whom all these lines meet in Jesus who is called Christ, ver. 16. This is he that was so importunately desired, so impatiently expected, and whom the patriarchs had an eye to when they were so desirous of children, that they might have the honour of coming into the sacred line. Blessed be God we are not now in such a dark and cloudy state of expectation as they were then in, but see clearly what these prophets and kings saw as through a glass darkly: And we may have if it be not our own fault a greater honour than that, of which they were so ambitious. For they that do the will of God are in a more honourable relation to Christ, than those that were akin to him according to the flesh, Matt. xii. 50. Jesus is called Christ, that is the anointed; the same with the Hebrew name Messiah: He is called Messiah the prince, Dan. ix. 25. and often God's anointed, Psal. ii. 2. Under this character he was expected; art thou the Christ? the anointed one? David the king was anointed, 1 Sam. xvi. 13. so was Aaron the priest, Lev. viii. 12. and Elisha the prophet, 1 Kings xix. 16. and Isaiah the prophet, Isa. lxi. 1. Christ being appointed to and qualified for all these offices, he is therefore called the anointed; anointed with the oil of gladness above his fellows: And from this name of his, which is as ointment poured forth, all his followers are called Christians, for they also have received the anointing.

Lastly, The general summary of all this genealogy we have, ver. 17, where it is summed up in three fourteens, signalized by remarkable periods: In the first fourteen we have the family of David rising, and looking forth as the morning; in the second we have it flourishing in its meridian lustre; in the third we have it declining and growing less and less, dwindled into the family of a poor carpenter, and then Christ shines forth out of it, the glory of his people Israel.

18. ¶ Now the birth of Jesus Christ was on this wise: When as his mother Mary was espoused to Joseph, before they came together, she was found with child of the Holy Ghost. 19. Then Joseph her husband, being a just man, and not willing to make her a public example, was minded to put her away privily. 20. But while he thought on these things, behold, the angel of the LORD appeared unto him in a dream, saying, Joseph, thou son of David, fear not to take unto thee Mary thy wife: for that which is conceived in her is of the Holy Ghost. 21. And she shall bring forth a son, and thou shalt call his name Jesus:

JESUS: for he shall save his people from their sins. 22. (Now all this was done, that it might be fulfilled which was spoken of the LORD by the prophet, saying, 23. Behold, a virgin shall be with child, and shall bring forth a son, and they shall call his name Emanuel, which, being interpreted, is God with us,) 24. Then Joseph being raised from sleep, did as the angel of the LORD had bidden him, and took unto him his wife: 25. And knew her not till she had brought forth her first-born son; and he called his name JESUS.

The mystery of Christ's incarnation is to be adored, not pryed into; if we know not the way of the spirit in the formation of common persons, nor how the bones are formed in the womb of any one that is with child, (Eccles. xi. 5.) much less do we know how the blessed Jesus was formed in the womb of the blessed virgin. When David admires how he himself was made in secret and curiously wrought, Psalm cxxxix. 13, 14, 15, 16. perhaps he speaks in spirit of Christ's incarnation. Some circumstances attending the birth of Christ we find here, that are not in Luke, though it is more largely recorded there. Here is,

1. Mary's espousals to Joseph. Mary the mother of our Lord was espoused to Joseph, not completely married, but contracted; a purpose of marriage solemnly declared in words de futuro, and a promise of it made if God permit. We read of a man that has betrothed a wife, and has not taken her. Deut. xx. 5. Christ was born of a virgin, but a contracted virgin, 1. To put respect upon the married state, and to recommend it as honourable among all, against that doctrine of devils which forbiddeth to marry, and placeth perfection in the single state. Who more highly favoured than Mary was in her espousals? 2. To save the credit of the blessed virgin, which otherwise would have been exposed: It was fit her conception should be protected by a marriage, and so justified in the eye of the world. One of the ancients saith, it was better it should be asked, Is not this the son of a carpenter? than, Is not this the son of a harlot? 3. That the blessed virgin might have one to be the guide of her youth, the companion of her solitudes and travels, a partner in her cares, and a help meet for her. Some think Joseph was now a widower, and that those who are called the brethren of Christ, Matt. xiii. 55. were Joseph's children by a former wife. This is the conjecture of many of the ancients. Joseph was a just man, she a virtuous woman. Those that are believers should not be unequally yoked with unbelievers; but let those that are religious choose to marry with those that are so, as they expect the comfort of the relation and God's blessing upon them in it. We may also learn from this example, that it is good to enter into the married state with deliberation and not hastily; to preface the nuptials with a contract: It is better to take time to consider before, than find time to repent after.

2. Her pregnancy of the promised seed. Before they came together she was found with child, which really was of the Holy Ghost. The marriage was deferred so long after the contract, that she appeared to be with child, before the time came for the solemnizing of the marriage, though she was contracted before she conceived. Probably it was after her return from her cousin Elizabeth, with whom she continued three months. (Luke i. 56.) that she was perceived by Joseph to be with child, and did not herself deny it. Note, Those in whom Christ is formed will shew it: It will be found to be a work of God, which he will own. Now we may well imagine, what a perplexity this might justly be an occasion of to the blessed virgin: She herself knew the divine original of this conception; but how could she prove it? She would be dealt with as with a harlot. Note, After great and high advancements, lest we should be puffed up with them, we must expect something or other to humble us; some reproach, as a thorn in the flesh, nay, as a sword in the bones. Never was any daughter of Eve so dignified as the virgin Mary was, and yet in danger of falling under the imputation of one of the worst of crimes; yet we find not that she tormented herself about it, but being conscious of her own innocency, kept her mind calm and easy, and committed her cause to him that judgeth righteously. Note, Those who take care to keep a good conscience, may cheerfully trust God with the keeping of their good names, and have reason to hope that he will clear up, not only their integrity, but their honour, as the sun at noon-day.

3. Joseph's perplexity and his care what to do in this case. We may well imagine what a great trouble and disappointment it was to him, to find one he had such an opinion of, and value for, come under the suspicion of such a heinous crime. Is this Mary? He began to think, how may we be deceived in those we think best of! How may we be disappointed in that we expect most from! He is loth to believe so ill a thing of one he believed so good a woman; and yet the matter, as it is too bad to be excused, so it is too plain to be denied. What a struggle doth this occasion in his breast, between that jealousy, which is the rage of man, and is cruel as the grave, on one hand; and that affection which he has for Mary, on the other hand.

Observe, 1. The extremity which he studied to avoid: He was not willing to make her a public example. He might have done it; for by the law a betrothed virgin, if she play the harlot, was to be stoned to death, Deut. xxii. 23, 24. But he was not willing to take the advantage of the law against her, if she be guilty, yet it is not known, nor shall it be known for him. How unlike was the spirit of Joseph here to that of Judah, who in such a case hastily passed that severe sentence, bring her forth and let her be burnt? Gen. xxxviii. 24. How good is it to think on things, as Joseph did here! Were there more of deliberation in our censures and judgments, there would be more of mercy and moderation in them. Bringing her to punishment is here called making her a public example; which shews what is the end to be aimed at in punishments, which is the giving of warning to others: it is in terrorem, that all about may hear and fear. Smite the scorner, and the simple will beware.

Some that have rigour in their temper would blame Joseph for his clemency, but it is here spoken of to his praise: because he was a just man, therefore he was not willing to expose her. He was a religious good man, and therefore inclined to be merciful as God is, and to forgive as one that was forgiven. In the case of a betrothed damsel, if she were lain with in the field, the law charitably supposed that she cried out, Deut. xxii. 26. and she was not to be punished. And some charitable construction or other Joseph will put upon this matter, and therein he is a just man, tender of the good name of one that never before had done any thing to blemish it. Note, It becomes us in many cases to be gentle towards those that come under suspicion of having offended, to hope the best concerning them, and make the best of that which at first appears bad, in hopes it may prove better. Suum ius is sometimes summa injuria. That court of conscience which moderates the rigour of the law, we call a court of equity: Those that are found faulty perhaps were overtaken in the fault, and therefore to be restored with the spirit of meekness; and threatening when justice must be moderated.

2. The expedient he found out for the avoiding of this extremity. He was minded to put her away privily, i. e. to give her a bill of divorce into her hand, before two witnesses, and so to hush-up the matter among themselves. Being a just man, i. e. a strict observer of the law, he would not proceed to marry her, but resolved to put her away, and yet in tenderness for her, determined to do it with all the privacy that might be. Note, The necessary censures of those that have offended ought to be managed without noise. The words of the wise are heard in quiet. Christ himself shall not strive or cry. Christian love and christian prudence will hide a multitude of sins, and great ones, as far as may be done without having fellowship with them.

4. Joseph's discharge from this perplexity by an express sent from heaven, ver. 20, 21. While he thought on these things, and knew not what to determine, God graciously directed him what to do and made him easy. Note, Those that would have directions from God, must think on things themselves and consult with themselves. They are the thoughtful, not the unthinking that God will guide. When he was at a loss and had carried the matter as far as he could in his own thoughts, then God came in with advice. Note, God's time to come in with instruction to his people, is when they are confused and at a plunge in themselves. God's comforts most delight the soul in the multitude of its perplexed thoughts.

The message was sent to Joseph by an angel of the Lord; probably the same angel that brought to Mary the tidings of the conception, the angel Gabriel. Now the commerce with heaven by angels, which the patriarchs had been dignified with, but had been long disused, begins to be revived; for when the first-begotten is to be brought into the world, the angels are ordered to attend his motions. How far God may now in an invisible way make use of the ministration of angels, for the extricating of his people out of their straits, we cannot say, but this we are sure of, they are all ministering spirits for their good. This angel appeared to Joseph in a dream, when he was asleep, as God sometimes spake unto the fathers. When we are most quiet and composed, we are in the best frame to receive the notices of the divine will. The Spirit moveth on the calm waters. This dream no doubt carried its own evidence along with it, that it was of God and not the product of a vain fancy.

Now, 1. Joseph is here directed to proceed in his intended marriage. The angel calls him, Joseph, thou son of David; puts him in mind of his relation to David, that he might be prepared to receive this surprising intelligence of his relation to the Messiah, who every one knew was to be a descendant from David. Sometimes when great honours devolve upon those that have small estates, they care not for accepting them, but are willing to drop them; it was therefore requisite to put this poor carpenter in mind of his high birth. Value thyself. Joseph, thou art that son of David, through whom the line of the Messiah is to be drawn. We may thus say to every true believer, Fear not, thou son of Abraham, thou child of God; forget not the dignity of thy birth, thy new birth. Fear not to take Mary for thy wife; so it may be read. Joseph suspecting she was with child by whoredom, was afraid of taking her, lest he should bring upon himself either guilt or reproach: No, saith God, fear not; the matter is not so. Perhaps Mary had told him that she was with child by the Holy Ghost, and he might have heard what Elizabeth said to her, Luke i. 47. when she called her the mother of the Lord; and if this were so, he was afraid of presumption in marrying one so much above him: But whencesoever his fears arose, they were all silenced with this word, Fear not to take unto thee Mary thy wife. Note, It is a great mercy to be delivered from ones fears, and to have our doubts resolved, so as to proceed in our affairs with satisfaction.

2. He is here informed concerning that holy thing, which his espoused wife was now with child of. That which is conceived in her is of a divine original. He is so far from being in danger of sharing in any impurity by marrying her, that he will thereby share in the highest dignity he is capable of. Two things he is told,

1. That she had conceived by the power of the Holy Ghost; not by the power of nature. The holy spirit that produced the world, now produced the Saviour of the world, and prepared him a body, as was promised him, when he said, Lo, I come, Heb. x. 5. Hence he is said to be made of a woman, Gal. iv. 4. and yet to be that second Adam that is the Lord from heaven, 1 Cor. xv. 47. He is the son of God, and yet so far partakes of the substance of his mother, as to be called the fruit of her womb, Luke i. 42. It was requisite that his conception should be otherwise than by ordinary generation, that so though he did participate of the human nature, yet he might escape the corruption and pollution of it, and not be conceived and shapen in iniquity. Histories tell us of some, who vainly pretended to have conceived by a divine power, as the mother of Alexander, but never any really did so, before the mother of our Lord. His name in this, as in other things, is wonderful. We do not read that the virgin Mary did herself proclaim the honour done her, but hid it in her heart, and therefore God sent an angel to attest it. Those that seek not their own glory, shall have the honour that comes from God; it is reserved for the humble.

2. That she should bring forth the Saviour of the world, ver. 21. She shall bring forth a son; what he shall be is intimated, 1. In the name that should be given to her Son, thou shalt call his name Jesus, a Saviour. Jesus is the same name with Joshua, the termination only made more pliable to the Greek. Joshua is called Jesus, Acts vii. 45. Heb. iv. 8. from the Seventy. There were two of that name under the Old Testament, that were both of them illustrious types of Christ; Joshua that was Israel's captain at their first settlement in Canaan, and Joshua that was their high-priest at their second settlement after the captivity, Zech. vi. 11, 12. Christ is our Joshua, both the captain of our salvation, and the high-priest of our profession, and in both our Saviour; a Joshua that comes in the stead of Moses, and doth that for us which the law could not do, in that it was weak. Joshua had been called Hoshea, but Moses prefixed the first syllable of the name Jehovah, and so made it Jeoshua, Num. xiii. 16. to intimate that the Messiah who was to bear that name should be Jehovah; he is therefore able to save to the uttermost, neither is there salvation in any other.

2. In the reason of that name; for he shall save his people from their sins: not the nations of the Jews only, he came to his own, and they received him not; but all that were given him by the Father's choice, and all that have given themselves to him by their own. He is a king that protects his subjects, and as the Judges of Israel of old, works salvation for them. Note, Those whom Christ saves he saves from their sins; from the guilt of sin by the merit of his death, from the dominion of sin by the Spirit of his grace. In saving them from sin he saves them from wrath and the curse, and all misery here and hereafter. Christ came not to save his people in their sins, but from their sins, to purchase for them, not a liberty to sin, but a liberty from sins, to redeem them from all iniquity, Tit. ii. 14. and so to redeem from among men, Rev. xiv. 4. to himself, who is separate from sinners. So that those who leave their sins, and give up themselves to Christ as his people, are interested in the Saviour and the great salvation he has wrought out, Rom. xi. 26.

5. The fulfilling of the scripture in all this. This evangelist writing among the Jews doth more frequently observe this than any other of the evangelists. Here the Old Testament prophecies had their accomplishment in our Lord Jesus; by which it appears this was he that should come, and we are to look for no other, for this was he to whom all the prophets bear witness. Now the scripture that was fulfilled in the birth of Christ, was that promise of a sign which God gave to king Ahaz. Isa. vii. 14. Behold, a virgin shall conceive; where the prophet encouraging the people of God to hope for the promised deliverance from Sennacherib's invasion, directs them to look forward to the Messiah, who was to come of the people of the Jews, and the house of David; from whence it was easy to infer, that though that was then an afflicted people, that then a distressed house, yet neither the one nor the other could be abandoned to ruin, as long as God had such an honour, such a blessing in reserve for them. The deliverances God wrought for the Old Testament church were types and figures of the great salvation by Christ, and if God will do the greater, he will not fail to do the lesser.

The prophecy here quoted is justly ushered in with a behold, which commands both attention and admiration; for we have here the mystery of godliness which is without controversy great, that God was manifested in the flesh.

1. The sign given is, that the Messiah shall be born of a virgin. A virgin shall conceive, and by her he shall be manifested in the flesh. The word Almah signifies a virgin in the strictest sense, such as Mary professeth herself to be, Luke i. 34. I know not a man, nor had it been any such wonderful sign as it was intended for, if it had been otherwise. It was intimated from the beginning that the Messiah should be born of a virgin, when it was said that he should be the seed of the woman; so the seed of the woman, as not to be the seed of any man. Christ was born of a virgin, not only because his birth was to be supernatural and altogether extraordinary, but because it was to be spotless and pure, and without any stain of sin. Christ would be born, not of an Empress or Queen, for he appeared not in outward pomp or splendor, but of a virgin, to teach us spiritual purity, to die to all the delights of sense, and so to keep ourselves unspotted from the world and the flesh, as that we may be presented chaste virgins to Christ.

2. The truth proved by this sign is that he is the son of God, and the mediator between God and man, for they shall call his name Immanuel; that is, he shall be Immanuel; as when it is said he shall be called, it is meant he shall be the Lord our righteousness. Immanuel signifies God with us; a mysterious name, but very precious; God incarnate among us, and so God reconcilable to us, at peace with us, and taking us into covenant and communion with himself. The people of the Jews had God with them, in types and shadows, dwelling between the cherubims, but never so as when the Word was made flesh, that was the blessed Shechinah. What a happy step is hereby taken towards the settling of a peace and correspondence between God and man, that the two natures are thus brought together in the person of the Mediator; by this he became an unexceptionable referee, a day-man fit to lay his hand upon them both, since he partakes of the nature of both. Behold in this the deepest mystery, and the richest mercy that ever was. By the light of nature we see God as a God above us, by the light of the law we see him a God against us, but by the light of the gospel we see him Immanuel, God with us, in our own nature, and (which is more) in our interests. Herein the Redeemer commended his love. With Christ's name Immanuel, we may compare the name given to the Gospel-Church, Ezek. xlviii. 35. Jehovah Shammah, the Lord is there, the Lord of hosts is with us.

Nor is it improper to say, that the prophecy which foretold that he should be called Immanuel, was fulfilled in the design and intention of it, when he was called Jesus: for if he had not been Immanuel, God with us, he could not have been Jesus a Saviour; and herein consists the salvation he wrought out in the bringing of God and man together; this was it he designed, to bring God to be with us, which is our great happiness, and to bring us to be with God, which is our great duty.

6. Joseph's obedience to the divine precept, ter. 24. being raised from sleep by the impression which the dream made upon him, he did as the angel of the Lord had bidden him, though it was contrary to his former sentiments and intentions, he took unto him his wife, he did it speedily without delay, and cheerfully without dispute; he was not disobedient to the heavenly vision. Extraordinary direction like this here we are not now to expect; but God hath still ways of making known his mind in doubtful cases, by hints of providence, debates of conscience, and advice of faithful friends; each of these, applying the general rules of the written word, we should therefore in all the steps of our life, particularly the great turns of it, such as this of Joseph's, take direction from God, and we shall find it safe and comfortable to do as he bids us.

7. The accomplishment of the divine promise, ter. 25. She brought forth her first-born son. The circumstances of it are more largely related, Luke ii. 1, &c. Note, That which is conceived of the Holy Ghost never proves abortive, but will certainly be brought forth in its season. What is of the will of the flesh, and of the will of man, often miscarries, but if Christ be formed in the soul, God himself has begun the good work which he will perform; what is conceived in grace, will no doubt be brought forth in glory.

It is here further observed, 1. That Joseph, though he solemnized the marriage with Mary his espoused wife, yet he kept at a humble distance from her while she was with child of this holy thing, he knew her not till she had brought him forth. A mighty rout has been made concerning the perpetual virginity of the mother of our Lord; Jerom was very angry with Helvidius for denying it. It is certain it cannot be proved from scripture; Dr. Whitby inclines to think, that it being said, Joseph knew her not till she had brought forth her first-born, it is intimated that afterwards the reason ceasing, he did the duty of a husband to her according to the law, Exod. xxi. 10. 2. That Christ was the first-born, and so he might be called, though his mother had not any other children after him, according to the language of scripture. Nor was it without a mystery that Christ is called her first-born, for he is the first-born of every creature, that is, the heir of all things, and he is the first-born among many brethren, that in all things he may have the pre-eminence. 3. That Joseph called his name Jesus, according to the direction given him. God having appointed him to be the Saviour, which was intimated in his giving him the name Jesus, we must accept of him to be our Saviour, and in concurrence with that appointment we must call him Jesus our Saviour.

C H A P. II.

In this chapter we have the history of our Saviour's infancy, where we find how early he began to suffer, and that in him the word of righteousness was fulfilled, before himself began to fulfill all righteousness; Here is, (1.) The wise men's solicitous enquiry after Christ, ver. 1—8. (2.) Their devout attendance on him, when they found out where he was, ver. 9—12. (3.) Christ's flight into Egypt to avoid the cruelty of Herod, ver. 13—15. (4.) The barbarous murder of the infants of Bethlehem, ver. 16—18. (5.) Christ's return out of Egypt into the land of Israel again, ver. 19—23.

1. NOW when Jesus was born in Bethlehem of Judea, in the days of Herod the king, behold, there came wise men from the east to Jerusalem, 2. Saying, Where is he that is born King of the Jews? for we have seen his star in the east, and are come to worship him. 3. When Herod the king had heard these things, he was troubled, and all Jerusalem with him. 4. And when he had gathered all the chief priests and scribes of the people together, he demanded of them where Christ should be born. 5. And they said unto him, In Bethlehem of Judea: for thus it is written by the prophet; 6. And thou Bethlehem in the land of Juda, art not the least among the princes of Juda: for out of thee shall come a Governor that shall rule my people Israel. 7. Then Herod, when he had privily called the wise men, enquired of them diligently what time the star appeared. 8. And he sent them to Bethlehem, and said, Go and search diligently for the young child, and when you have found him, bring me word again, that I may come and worship him also.

It was a mark of humiliation put upon the Lord Jesus, that though he was the desire of all nations, yet his coming into the world was so little observed and taken notice of, his birth obscure and unregarded; herein he emptied himself, and made himself of no reputation. If the Son of God must be brought into the world, one might justly expect he should be received with all the ceremony possible; that crowns and sceptres should immediately have been laid at his feet, and the high and mighty princes of the world should have been his humble servants; such a Messiah as this the Jews expected, but we see none of all this; he came into the world, and the world knew him not: nay, he came to his own, and his own received him not; for having undertaken to make satisfaction to his Father for the wrong done him in his honour by the sin of man, he did it by denying himself in, and despoiling himself of the honours undoubtedly due to an incarnate deity; yet as afterwards, so in his birth, there were some rays of glory darted forth in the midst of the greatest instances of his abasement. Though there was the hiding of his power, yet he had beams coming out of his hand, Hab. iii. 4. enough to condemn the world, and the Jews especially for their stupidity.

The first we find that took notice of Christ after his birth, were the shepherds, Luke ii. 15. &c. who saw and heard glorious things concerning him, and made them known abroad, to the amazement of all that heard them, ter. 17, 18. After that Simeon and Anna spake of him by the spirit to all that were disposed to heed what they said, Luke ii. 38. Now one would think these hints should have been taken by the men of Judah and the inhabitants of Jerusalem, and that they should with both arms have embraced the long looked for Messiah; but for ought appears he continued near two years after at Bethlehem, and no further notice was taken of him till these wise men came. Note, Nothing will awaken those that are resolved to be regardless. O the amazing stupidity of these Jews! And no less that of many who are called Christians! Observe,

1. When this enquiry was made concerning Christ, it was in the days of Herod the King. This Herod was an Edomite, made King of Judea by Augustus and Antonius, the then chief rulers of the Roman state, a man made up of falsehood and cruelty; yet he was complimented with the title of Herod the great, Christ was born in the 35th year of his reign, and notice is taken of this, to shew that the sceptre was now departed from Judah, and the lawgiver from between his feet; and therefore now was the time for Shiloh to come, and to him shall the gathering of the people be, witness these wise men, Gen. xlix. 10.

2. Who and what these wise men were; they are here called Μάγοι, Magicians; some take it in a good sense, the Magi among the Persians were their philosophers, and their priests; nor would they admit any for their king that had not first been enrolled among the Magi; others think they dealt in unlawful arts, the word is used of Simon the sorcerer, Acts viii. 9—11. and of Elymas the sorcerer, Acts xiii. 6. nor doth the scripture use it in any other sense; and then it was an early instance and pre-sage of Christ's victory over the devil, when those that had been so much his devotees, became the early adorers even of the infant Jesus; so soon were trophies of his victory over the powers of darkness erected. Well, whatever sort of wise men they were before, now they began to be wise men indeed, when they set themselves to enquire after Christ.

This we are sure of, 1. That they were Gentiles, and not belonging to the commonwealth of Israel. The Jews regarded not Christ, but these Gentiles enquired him out. Note, Many times those that are nearest to the means are furthest from the end. See Mat. viii. 11, 12. The respect paid to Christ by these Gentiles was a happy presage and specimen of what would follow, when those that were afar off should be made nigh by Christ. 2. That they were scholars, they dealt in arts, curious arts; good scholars should be good christians, and then they complete their learning when they learn Christ. 3. That they were men of the east, who were noted for their sooth-saying, Isa. ii. 6. Arabia is called the land of the east, Gen. xxv. 6. And the Arabians men of the east, Judg. iv. 3. The presents they brought were the products of that country; the Arabians had done homage to David and Solomon as types of Christ. Jethro and Job were of that country. More than this we have not to say of them. The traditions of the Romish church are frivolous, that they were in number three (though one of the ancients saith they were fourteen) that they were kings, and that they lie buried in Colen, thence called the three kings of Colen; we covet not to be wise above what is written.

3. What induced them to make this enquiry. They in their country, which lay east, had seen an extraordinary star, such as they had not seen before, which they took to be an indication of an extraordinary person born in the land of Judea, over which land this star was seen to hover, in the nature of a comet, or a meteor rather, in the lower regions of the air; this differed so much from any thing that was common, that they concluded it to signify something uncommon. Note, Extraordinary appearances of God in the creation should put us upon enquiring after his mind and will therein; Christ foretold signs in the heavens. The birth of Christ was notified to the Jewish shepherds by an angel, to the Gentile philosophers by a star; to which God spake in their own language, and in the way they were best acquainted with. Some think that very light, which the shepherds saw shining round about them the night after Christ was born, was the very same which to the wise men who lived at such a distance appeared as a star; which we cannot easily admit, because the same star they had seen in the east, they saw a great while after leading them to the house where Christ lay; it was a candle set up on purpose to guide them to Christ.

The

The idolaters worshipped the stars as the host of heaven, especially the eastern nations, whence the planets have the names of their idol gods; we read of a particular star they had in veneration, Amos v. 26. Thus the stars that had been misused came to be put to the right use, to lead men to Christ; the gods of the heathen became his servants. Some think this star put them in mind of Balaam's prophecy, that a star should come out of Jacob, pointing at a sceptre that shall rise out of Israel, see Numb. xxiv. 17. And Balaam came from the mountains of the east, and was one of their wise men. Others impute their enquiry to the general expectation that was at that time in those eastern parts of some great prince to appear; Tacitus in his history, Lib. v. takes notice of it; Pluribus persuasio inerat antiquis sacerdotum literis contineri, eo ipso tempore fore, ut valeceret orians, perfectique Judææ rerum potirentur. Suetonius in the life of Vespasian speaks of it; so that this extraordinary phenomenon was construed as pointing to that king, and we may suppose a divine impression made upon their minds, enabling them to interpret this star as a signal given by heaven of the birth of Christ.

4. How they prosecuted this enquiry, they came from the east to Jerusalem in further quest of this prince; whither should they come to enquire for the king of the Jews but to Jerusalem, the mother city, whither the tribes go up, the tribes of the Lord. They might have said, if there were such a prince born, they should hear of him shortly in their own country; and it would be time enough then to pay their homage to him; but so impatient are they to be better acquainted with him, that they took a long journey on purpose to enquire after him. Note, Those who truly desire to know Christ, and find him, will not stick at pains or perils in seeking after him, then shall we know if we follow on to know the Lord.

Their question is, Where is he that is born King of the Jews? They do not ask, Whether there were such a one born, they are sure of that, and speak of it with assurance, so strongly was it set home upon their hearts; but where is he born? Note, Those who know something of Christ, cannot but covet to know more of him. They call Christ the King of the Jews; for so the Messiah was expected to be, and he is protector and ruler of all the spiritual Israel, he is born a king.

To this question they doubted not but to have a ready answer, and to find all Jerusalem worshipping at the feet of this new King; but they come from door to door with this question, and no man can give them any information. Note, There is more gross ignorance in the world, and in the church too, than we are aware of. Many that we think should direct us to Christ, are themselves strangers to him; they ask, as the spouse of the daughters of Jerusalem, Saw ye him whom my soul loveth? but are never the wiser. However, like the spouse, they pursue the enquiry, where is he that is born King of the Jews? Are they asked, why they make this enquiry? It is because they have seen his star in the east. Are they asked what business they have with him? What have the men of the east to do with the King of the Jews? They have their answer ready, we are come to worship him. They conclude he will in process of time be their king, and therefore they will betimes ingratiate themselves with him, and with those about him. Note, Those in whose hearts the day-star is risen to give them any thing of the knowledge of Christ, must make it their business to worship him. Have we seen Christ's star? study to give him honour.

5. How this enquiry was resented at Jerusalem. News of it at last came to court, and when Herod heard it he was troubled, ver. 3. He could not be a stranger to the prophecies of the Old Testament concerning the Messiah and his kingdom, and the times fixed for his appearing by Daniel's weeks; but having himself reigned so long and so successfully, he began to hope that those promises should for ever fail, and that his kingdom should be established and perpetuated in spite of them; what a mighty damp therefore must it needs be upon him to hear talk of this king being born, now when the time fixed for his appearing was come! Note, Carnal wicked hearts dread nothing so much as the fulfilling of the Scripture.

But though Herod an Edomite was troubled, one would have thought Jerusalem should rejoice greatly to hear that her King comes; yet it seems all Jerusalem, except the few there that waited for the consolation of Israel, were troubled with Herod, and were apprehensive of I know not what ill consequences of the birth of this new King; that it would involve them in a war, or restrain their lusts; they for their part desired no king but Herod; no, not the Messiah himself. Note, The slavery of sin is foolishly preferred by many before the glorious liberties of the children of God, only because they apprehend some present difficulties attending that necessary revolution of the government in the soul. Herod and Jerusalem were thus troubled from a mistaken notion that the kingdom of the Messiah would clash and interfere with the secular powers, whereas the star that proclaimed him king, plainly intimated that his kingdom was heavenly, and not of this lower world. Note, The reason why the kings of the earth, and the people oppose the kingdom of Christ, is, because they do not know it, but err concerning it.

6. What assistance they met with in this enquiry from the scribes and the priests, ver. 4, 5, 6. No body can pretend to tell where the King of the Jews is, but Herod enquires where it was expected he should be born. The persons he consults are the chief priests, who were teachers by office, and the scribes, who made it their business to study the law; their lips must keep knowledge, but then the people must enquire the law at their mouth, Mal. ii. 7. It was generally known that Christ should be born at Bethlehem. John vii. 42. but Herod would have counsel's opinion upon it, and therefore applies himself to the proper persons, and that he might be the better satisfied, he hath them all together, all the chief priests, and all the scribes, and demands of them what was the place, according to the Scriptures of the Old Testament, where Christ should be born? Many a good question is put with an ill design, so was this by Herod.

The priests and scribes need not take any long time to give an answer to this query, nor do they differ in their opinion, but all agree that the Messiah must be born in Bethlehem, the city of David, here called Bethlehem of Judea, to distinguish it from another city of the same name in the land of Zebulun, Josh. xix. 15. Bethlehem signifies the house of bread, the fittest place for him to be born in, who is the true manna, the bread which came down from heaven, that was given for the life of the world: The proof they produce is taken from Micah v. 2. where it is foretold, that though Bethlehem be little among the thousands of Judah, so it is in Micah, no very populous place, yet it shall be found not the least among the princes of Judah, so it is here; for Bethlehem's honour lay, not, as that of other cities, in the multitude of the people, but in the magnificence of the princes it produced. Though upon some accounts Bethlehem was little, yet herein it had the pre-eminence above all the cities of Israel, that the Lord shall count when he writes up the people, that this man, even the man Christ Jesus, was born there, Psal. lxxxvii. 6. Out of thee shall come a governor, the King of the Jews. Note, Christ will be a Saviour to those only that are willing to take him for their Governor. Bethlehem was the city of David, and David the glory of Bethlehem; there therefore must David's son and successor be born. There was a famous well at Bethlehem, by the gate, which David longed to drink of, 2 Sam. xxiii. 15. In Christ we have not only bread enough and to spare, but may come and take also of the water of life freely: Observe here, how Jews and Gentiles compare notes about Jesus Christ; the Gentiles know the time of it by a star, the Jews knew the place of it by the Scriptures, and so they are capable of informing one another. Note, It would contribute much to the increase of knowledge, if we did thus mutually communicate what we know; men grow rich by bartering and exchanging, so if we have knowledge to communicate to others, they will be ready to communicate to us; thus many shall discourse, shall run to and fro, and knowledge shall be increased.

7. The bloody project and design of Herod, occasioned by this enquiry, ver. 7, 8. Herod was now an old man, had reigned thirty-five years; this king was but newly born, and not likely to enterprise any thing considerable of many years, yet Herod is jealous of him: Crowned heads cannot endure to think of successors, much less of rivals, and therefore nothing less than the blood of this infant king will satisfy him, and he will not give himself liberty to think, that if this new-born child should be indeed the Messiah, in opposing him or making any attempts upon him, he would be found fighting against God, than which nothing more vain, nothing more dangerous; passion has got the mastery of reason and conscience.

Now, 1. See how cunningly he laid the project, ver. 7, 8. He privately called the wise men, to talk with them about this matter: He would not openly own his fears and jealousies, it would be his disgrace to let the wise men know them, and dangerous to let the people know them. Sinners are often tormented with secret fears, which they keep to themselves. Herod learns of the wise men the time when the star appeared, that he might take his measures accordingly, and then employs them to enquire further, and bids them bring him an account. All this might look suspicious, if he had not covered it with a shew of religion, that I may come and worship him also. Note, The greatest wickedness often conceals itself under a mask of piety? Absalom clokes his rebellious project with a vow.

2. See how strangely he was beset and infatuated in this, that he trusted it with the wise men, and did not choose any other managers that would have been true to his interests. It was but seven miles from Jerusalem; how easily might he have sent spies to dog the wise men, that should have been as soon there to destroy the child, as they to worship him. Note, God can hide from the eye of the church's enemies those methods by which they might easily destroy the church; when he intends to lead princes away spoiled, his way is to make the judges fools.

9. ¶ When they had heard the king, they departed, and lo, the star which they saw in the east, went before them, till it came and stood over where the young child was. 10. When they saw the star, they rejoiced with exceeding great joy. 11. ¶ And when they were come into the house, they saw the young child with Mary his mother, and fell down, and worshipped him: and when they had opened their treasures, they presented unto him gifts; gold, and frankincense, and myrrh. 12. And being warned of God in a dream, that they should not return to Herod, they departed into their own country another way.

We have here the wise men's humble attendance upon this new-born King of the Jews, and the honours they paid him. From Jerusalem they went to Bethlehem, resolving to seek till they find; but it is very strange they went alone, that not one person of the court, church, or city should accompany them, if not in conscience yet in civility to them, or touched with a curiosity to see this young prince. As the queen of the south, so the wise men of the east will rise up in judgment against the men of that generation, and of this too, and will condemn them, for they came from a far country to worship Christ, while the Jews, his kinsmen, would not stir a step, would not go to the next town to bid him welcome. It might have been a discouragement to these wise men, to find him, whom they sought, thus neglected at home: Are we come so far to honour the King of the Jews, and do the Jews themselves put such a slight upon him and us? yet they persist in their resolution. Note, We must continue our attentances upon Christ though we be alone in them; whatever others do, we must serve the Lord; if they will not go to heaven with us, yet we must not go to hell with them.

Now, 1. See how they found Christ out, by the same star that they had seen in their own country, ver. 9, 10. and there observe, 1. How graciously God directed them; by the first appearance of the star, they were given to understand where they might enquire for this King, and then it disappeared, and they were left to take the usual methods for such an enquiry. Note, Extraordinary helps are not to be expected where ordinary means are to be had. Well, they had traced the matter as far as they could, they were upon their journey to Bethlehem, but that is a populous town, where shall they find him when they come thither? Here they were at a loss, at their wit's end, but not at their faith's end; they believed God that had brought them thither by his word, would not leave them there; nor did he; for behold, the star which they saw in the east, went before them. Note, If we go on as far as we can in the way of our duty, God will direct and enable us to do that which of ourselves we cannot do; up and be doing, and the Lord will be with thee. Vigilantibus non dormientibus succurrit lex. The star had left them a great while, yet now returns. They that follow God in the dark, shall find that light is sown, is reserved for them. Israel was led by a pillar of fire to the promised land, the wise men by a star to the promised seed, who is himself the bright and morning star, Rev. xxii. 16. God would rather create a new thing, than leave those at a loss that diligently and faithfully sought him. This star was the token of God's presence with them, for he is light, and goes before his people as their guide. Note, If we by faith eye God in all our ways, we may see ourselves under his conduct; he guides with his eye, Psal. xxxii. 8. and saith to them, This is the way, walk in it; and there is a day-star that ariseth in the hearts of those that enquire after Christ, 2 Pet. i. 19. 2. Observe how joyfully they followed God's direction, ver. 10. When they saw the star, they rejoiced with exceeding great joy. Now they saw they were not deceived, and had not taken this long journey in vain: When the desire cometh, it is a tree of life. Now they were sure that God was with them, and the tokens of his presence and favour cannot but fill the souls of those that know how to value them with joy unspeakable. Now they could laugh at the Jews in Jerusalem, who probably had laughed at them as coming on a fool's errand. The watchmen can give the spouse no tidings of her beloved, but it is but a little that she passeth from them, and she finds him, Cant. iii. 3, 4. We cannot expect too little from man nor too much from God. What a transport of joy these wise men were in upon this sight of the star, none know so well as those who, after a long and melancholy night of temptation and desertion, under the power of a spirit of bondage, at length receive the spirit of adoption, witnessing with their spirits that they are the children of God; this is light out of darkness, it is life from the dead. Now they had reason to hope for a sight of the Lord's Christ presently, of the sun of righteousness, for they see the morning star. Note, We should be glad of every thing that will shew us the way to Christ. This star was sent to meet the wise men, and to conduct them into the presence-chamber of the king; by this master of the ceremonies they were introduced to have their audience. Now God fulfils his promise of meeting those that are disposed to rejoice, and work righteousness, Isa. lxiv. 5. and they fulfil his precept; Let the hearts of those rejoice that seek the Lord, Psalm cv. 3. Note, God is pleased sometimes to favour young converts with such tokens of his love as are very encouraging to them, in reference to the difficulties they meet with at their setting out in the ways of God.

2. See how they made their address to him when they had found him, ver. 11. We may well imagine their expectations were raised to find this royal babe, though slighted by the nation, yet honourably attended at home, and what a disappointment it was to them when they found a cottage was his palace, and his own poor mother all the retinue he had. Is this the Saviour of the world? Is this the King of the Jews? nay, and the Prince of the kings of the earth? Yes, this is he, who though he was rich, yet for our sakes became thus poor. However these wise men were so wise as to see through this veil, and in this despised babe to discern the glory, as of the only begotten of the Father; they did not think themselves balked or baffled in their enquiry, but as having found the king they sought, they presented themselves first, and then their gifts to him.

(1.) They presented themselves to him; they fell down and worshipped him. We do not read that they gave such honour to Herod, though he was in the height of his royal grandeur, but to this babe they gave this honour, not only as to a king, then they would have done the same to Herod, but as to a God. Note, All that have found Christ fall down before him; they adore him, and submit themselves to him. He is thy Lord, and worship thou him. It will be the wisdom of the wisest of men, and by this it will appear they know Christ, and understand themselves and their true interests, if they be the humble, faithful worshippers of the Lord Jesus.

(2.) They presented their gifts to him. In the eastern nations, when they did homage to their kings, they made them a present; thus the subjection of the kings of Sheba to Christ is spoken of, Psalm lxxii. 10. They shall bring presents, and offer gifts. See Isa. lx. 6. Note, With ourselves we must give up all that we have to Jesus Christ, and if we be sincere in the surrender of ourselves to him, we will not stick at parting with what is dearest to us, and most valuable, to him and for him; nor are our gifts accepted, unless we first present ourselves to him living sacrifices; God had respect to Abel, and then to his offering. The gifts they presented were gold, frankincense, and myrrh, money, and money's-worth. Providence sent this for a seasonable relief to Joseph and Mary in their present poor condition. These were the products of their own country; what God favours us with, we must honour him with. Some think, there was a significance in their gifts; they offered him gold as a king, paying him tribute; to Caesar, the things that are Caesar's; frankincense as God, for they honoured God with the smoke of incense; and myrrh as a man that should die, for myrrh was used in embalming dead bodies.

3. See how they left him when they had made their address to him, ver. 12. Herod appointed them to bring him word what discoveries they had made, and, it is probable, they would have done so, if they had not been countermanded, not suspecting their being thus made his tools in a wicked design. Those that mean honestly and well themselves, are easily made to believe that others do so too, and cannot think the world is so bad as really it is; but the Lord knows how to deliver the godly out of temptation. We do not find that the wise men promised to come back to Herod, and if they had it must be with the usual proviso, if God permit; and God did not permit them, and so prevented the mischief Herod designed to the child Jesus, and the trouble it would have been to the wise men to have been made involuntarily accessory to it. They were warned of God, Κηρυγμάτων, oracula vel responsa accepta; some think, it intimates, that they asked counsel of God, and this was the answer. Note, Those that act cautiously and are afraid of sin and snares, if they apply themselves to God for direction, may expect to be led in the right way. They were warned not to return to Herod or to Jerusalem; these were unworthy to have reports brought them concerning Christ, that might have seen with their own eyes, and would not. They departed into their own country another way, to bring the tidings to their countrymen; but it is strange we never hear any more of them, and that they or theirs did not afterwards attend him in the temple, whom they had worshipped in the cradle: however, the direction they had from God in their return, would be a further confirmation of their faith in this child, as the Lord from heaven.

13. And when they were departed, behold, the angel of the Lord appeared to Joseph in a dream, saying, Arise, and take the young child and his mother, and flee into Egypt, and be thou there until I bring thee word: for Herod will seek the young child, to destroy him. 14. When he arose, he took the young child and his mother by night, and departed into Egypt: 15. And was there until the death of Herod: that it might be fulfilled which was spoken of the Lord by the prophet, saying, Out of Egypt have I called my son.

We have here Christ's flight into Egypt to avoid the cruelty of Herod, and this was the effect of the wise men's enquiry after him, for before that, the obscurity he lay in was his protection: It was but little respect (compared with what should have been) that was paid to Christ in his infancy, yet even that, instead of honouring him among his people, did but expose him.

Now here observe,

1. The command given to Joseph concerning it, ver. 13. Joseph knew neither the danger the child was in, nor how to escape it, but God by an angel tells him both in a dream, as before he directed him in like manner what to do, chap. i. 20. Joseph, before his alliance to Christ, had not been wont to converse with angels as now. Note, Those that are spiritually related to Christ by faith, have that communion and correspondence with heaven, which before they were strangers to.

(1.) Joseph is here told what the danger was, Herod will seek the young child to destroy him. Note, God is acquainted with all the cruel projects and purposes of the enemies of his church. I know thy rage against me, saith God to Sennacherib, Isa. xxxvii. 28. How early was the blessed Jesus involved in trouble! Usually, even those whose riper years are attended with toils and perils, yet have a peaceable and quiet infancy, but it was not so with the blessed Jesus; his life and sufferings began together; he was born a man stricken with, as Jeremiah was, Jer. xv. 10. who was sanctified from the womb, Jer. i. 5. Both Christ the head, and the church his body agree, in saying, Many a time have they afflicted me, from my youth up. Pharaoh's cruelty fastens upon the Hebrews' children, and the great red dragon stands ready to devour the man-child as soon as it should be born, Rev. xii. 4.

2. He is directed what to do to escape the danger; Take the young child, and flee into Egypt. Thus early must Christ give an example to his own rule, Matt. x. 23. When they persecute you in one city, flee to another. He that came to die for us, when his hour was not yet come, fled for his own safety. Self-preservation being a branch of the law of nature, is eminently a part of the law of God. Flee, but why into Egypt? Egypt was infamous for idolatry, tyranny, and enmity to the people of God; it had been a house of bondage to Israel, and particularly cruel to the infants of Israel; in Egypt, as much as in Ramah, Rachel had been weeping for her children, yet that is appointed to be a place of refuge to the holy child Jesus. Note, God, when he pleases, can make the worst of places serve the best of purposes; for the earth is the Lord's, he makes what use he pleases of it; sometimes the earth helps the woman, Rev. xii. 16. God, that made Moab a shelter to his outcasts makes Egypt a refuge for his Son. This may be considered,

1. As a trial of the faith of Joseph and Mary; they might be tempted to think, if this child be the son of God, as we are told he is, has he no other way to secure himself from a man that is a worm, but by such a mean and inglorious retreat, as this? Cannot he summon legions of angels to be his lifeguard, or cherubims with flaming swords to keep this tree of life? Cannot he strike Herod dead, or wither the hand that is stretched out against him, and to save us the trouble of this remove? They had been lately told, that he should be the glory of his people Israel; and is the land of Israel so soon become too hot for him? But we find not that they made any such objections: their faith being tried was found firm, and they believe this is the Son of God, though they see no miracle wrought for his preservation, but they are put to the use of ordinary means. Joseph had great honour put upon him in being the husband of the blessed Virgin, but that honour has trouble attending it, as all honours have in this world; Joseph must take the young child, and carry him into Egypt; and now it appeared how well God had provided for the young child and his mother, in appointing Joseph into relation to them; now the gold which the wise men brought, would stand them in stead to bear their charges. God foresees his people's distresses, and provides against them beforehand. God intimates the continuance of his care and conduct, when he said, Be thou there until I bring thee word; so that he must expect to hear from God again, and not stir without fresh orders. Thus God will keep his people still in a dependence upon him.

2. As an instance of the humiliation of our Lord Jesus. As there was no room for him in the inn at Bethlehem, so there was no quiet room for him in the land of Judea. Thus was he banished from the earthly Canaan, that we, who for sin were banished from the heavenly Canaan, might not be for ever expelled. If we and our infants be at any time in straits, let us remember the straits Christ in his infancy was brought into, and be reconciled to them.

3. As a token of God's displeasure against the Jews, who took so little notice of him; justly doth he leave those who had slighted him; and as an earnest of his favour to the Gentiles, to whom the apostles were to bring the gospel when the Jews rejected it. If Egypt entertain Christ when he is forced out of Judea, it will not be long ere it be said, Blessed be Egypt my people, Isa. xix. 25.

2. Joseph's obedience to this command, ver. 14. The journey would be inconvenient and perilous, both to the young child and to his mother; they were but poorly provided for it, and were likely to meet with cold entertainment in Egypt; yet Joseph was not disobedient to the heavenly vision, made no objection, nor was dilatory in his obedience. As soon as he had received his orders, he immediately arose, and went away by night, the same night, as it should seem, that he received the orders. Note, Those that would make sure work of their obedience, must make quick work of it. Now Joseph went out, as his father Abraham did, with an implicit dependence upon God, not knowing whether he went, Heb. xi. 8. Joseph and his wife having little, had little to take care of in this remove: an abundance incumbers a necessary flight. If rich people have the advantage of the poor while they possess what they have, the poor have the advantage of the rich when they are called to part with it.

Joseph took the young child and his mother. Some observe, that the young child is put first, as the principal person, and Mary is called, not the wife of Joseph, but, which was her greater dignity, the mother of the young child. This was not the first Joseph that was driven from Canaan to Egypt for a shelter from the anger of his brethren; this Joseph ought to be welcome there for the sake of that.

If we may credit tradition, at their entrance into Egypt, happening into a temple, all the images of their Gods were overthrown by an invisible power, and fell like Dagon before the ark, according to that prophecy. The Lord shall come into Egypt, and the idols of Egypt shall be moved at his presence, Isa. xix. 1. They continued in Egypt till the death of Herod, which some think was seven years, others think not so many months. There they were at a distance from the temple, and the service of it, and in the midst of idolaters, but God sent them thither, and will have mercy, and not sacrifice. Though they were far from the temple of the Lord, they had with them the Lord of the temple. A forced absence from God's ordinances, and a forced presence with wicked people, may be the lot, if not the sin, yet cannot but be the grief of good people.

3. The fulfilling of the scripture in all this, that scripture, Hos. xi. 1. Out of Egypt have I called my son. Of all the evangelists, Matthew takes most notice of the fulfilling of the scripture in what concerned Christ, because his gospel was first published among the Jews, with whom that would add much strength and lustre to it. Now this word of the prophet undoubtedly referred to the deliverance of Israel out of Egypt, in which God owned them for his son, his first-born, Exod. iv. 22. but it is here applied by way of analogy to Christ the head of the church. Note, The scripture has many accomplishments, so full and copious is it, and so well ordered in all things! God is every day fulfilling the scripture. Scripture is not of private interpretation, we must give it its full latitude. When Israel was a child, then I loved him; and though I loved him, I suffered him to be a great while in Egypt; but because I loved him, in due time I called him out of Egypt. They that read this, must, in their thoughts, not only look back, but look forward; that which has been shall be again, Eccl. i. 9. and the manner of expression intimates this; for it is said, not I called him, but I called my son out of Egypt. Note, It is no new thing for God's sons to be in Egypt, in a strange land, in a house of bondage; but they shall be fetched out: They may be hid in Egypt, but they shall not be left here. All the elect of God, being by nature children of wrath, are born in a spiritual Egypt, and in conversion are effectually called out. It might be objected against Christ, that he had been in Egypt; Must the son of righteousness arise out of that land of darkness? But this shews that to be no such strange thing; thing; Israel was brought out of Egypt to be advanced to the highest honours, and this is but the doing the same thing again.

16. ¶ Then Herod, when he saw that he was mocked of the wise men, was exceeding wroth, and sent forth, and slew all the children that were in Bethlehem, and in all the coasts thereof, from two years old and under, according to the time which he had diligently enquired of the wise men. 17. Then was fulfilled that which was spoken by Jeremy the prophet, saying, 18. In Rama was there a voice heard, lamentation, and weeping, and great mourning, Rachel weeping for her children, and would not be comforted, because they are not.

Here is, 1. Herod's resentment of the departure of the wise men. He waited long for their return, hopes, though they be slow, they will be sure, and he shall crush his rival at his first appearing; but hears, upon enquiry, that they are gone off another way, which increaseth his jealousy, and makes him suspect that they are in the interest of this new king, which made him exceeding wroth; and he is the more desperate and outrageous for his being disappointed. Note, Inevitable corruption swells the higher for the obstructions it meets with in a sinful pursuit.

2. His politic contrivance, notwithstanding this, to take off him that is born King of the Jews. If he could not reach him by a particular execution, he doubted not but to involve him in a general stroke, which, like the sword of war, should detour one as well as another. This would be sure work; and thus those that would destroy their own iniquity, must be sure to destroy all their iniquities. Herod was an Edomite, enmity to Israel was bred in the bone with him: Doeg was an Edomite, who, for David's sake, slew all the priests of the Lord. It was strange that Herod could find any so inhuman, as to be employed in such a bloody and barbarous piece of work; but wicked hands never want wicked tools to work with. Little children have always been taken under the special protection not only of human laws but of human nature; yet these are sacrificed to the rage of this tyrant, under whom, as under Nero, innocence is the least security. Herod was throughout his reign a bloody man; it was not long before that he destroyed the whole Sanhedrim, or bench of judges: but blood to the blood-thirsty, is like drink to those in a drowsy; Quo plus sunt pota, plus sitiuntur aqua. Herod was now about seventy-years old, so that an infant at this time under two years old, was not likely ever to give him any disturbance: Nor was he a man overfond of his own children or of their preferment, having formerly slain two of his own sons, Alexander and Aristobulus, and his son Antipater after this, but five days before he died; so that it was purely to gratify his brutish lusts of pride and cruelty that he did this: all is fish that comes to his net.

Observe what large measures he took, 1. As to time; he slew all from two years old and under. It is probable, the blessed Jesus was at this time not a year old; yet Herod took in all the infants under two years old, that he might be sure not to miss of his prey: He cares not how many heads fall, whom he allows to be innocent, provided that escape not whom he supposeth to be guilty. 2. As to place; he kills all the male children, not only in Bethlehem, but in all the coasts thereof, in all the villages of that city. This was being overmuch wicked; Eccl. vii. 17. Note, An unbridled wrath, armed with an unlawful power, often transports men to the most absurd and unreasonable instances of cruelty. It was no unrighteous thing with God to permit this; every life is forfeited to his justice, as soon as it commenceth; that sin which entered by one man's disobedience introduced death with it; and we are not to suppose any thing more than that common guilt, or that these children were sinners above all that were in Israel, because they suffered such things; God's judgments are a great deep: The diseases and deaths of little children are proofs of original sin: But we must look upon this murder of the infants under another character: it was their martyrdom. How early did persecution commence against Christ and his kingdom! Think ye that he came to send peace on the earth, no but a sword, such a sword as this, Matt. x. 34, 35. A passive testimony was hereby given to the Lord Jesus. As when he was in the womb, he was witnessed to by a child's leaping in the womb for joy at his approach, so now, at two years old, he had contemporary witnesses to him of the same age: they shed their blood for him, who afterwards shed his for them. These were the infantry of the noble army of martyrs. If these infants were thus baptized with blood, though it were their own, into the church triumphant, it could not be said, but that with what they got in heaven, they were abundantly recompensed for what they lost on earth. Out of the mouth of these babes and sucklings God did perfect praise, otherwise, it is not good to the Almighty that he should thus afflict.

The tradition of the Greek church (and we have it in the Æthiopic missal) is that the number of the children slain was fourteen thousand, but that is very absurd; I believe, if the births of the male children in the weekly bills were computed, there would not be found so many under two years old, in one of the most populous cities in the world, much less in Bethlehem, a small town, that was not near a fortieth part of it: But it is an instance of the vanity of tradition. It is strange that Josephus doth not relate this story; but he wrote long after St. Matthew, and it is probable, he therefore would not relate it, because he would not so far countenance the Christian history, for he was a zealous Jew; but, to be sure, if it had not been true and well attested, he would have contested it. Macrobius, a heathen writer, tells us, that when Augustus Cæsar heard that Herod, among the children he ordered to be slain under two years old, among the rest, slew his own son, he passed this jest upon him, That it was better he Herod's swine than his son. The usage of the country forbade him to kill a swine, but nothing could restrain him from killing his son. Some think, he had a young child at nurse in Bethlehem: others think, that, through mistake, two events are confounded, the murder of the infants, and the murder of his son Antipater. But for the church of Rome to put the holy innocents, as they call them, into their calendar, and observe a day in memory of them, while they have so often, by their barbarous massacres, justified, and even outdone Herod, is but to do as their predecessors did, who built the tombs of the prophets, while they themselves filled up the same measure.

Some observe another design of providence in the murder of the infants: By all the prophecies of the Old Testament, it appears, that Bethlehem was the place, and this the time of the Messiah's nativity; now all the children of Bethlehem, born at this time, being murdered, and Jesus only escaping, none but he could pretend to be the Messiah. Herod now thought he had baffled all the Old Testament prophecies, had defeated the indications of the star, and the devotions of the wise men, by ridding the country of this new king; having burnt the hive, he concludes he had killed the master-bee;

but God in heaven laughs at him, and has him in derision: Whatever crafty cruel devices are in men's hearts, the counsel of the Lord shall stand.

3. The fulfilling of the scripture in this, ver. 17, 18. Then was fulfilled that prophecy, Jer. xxxi. 15. A voice was heard in Ramah. See and adore the fulness of the scripture! That prediction was accomplished in Jeremiah's time, when Nebuzar-adan, after he had destroyed Jerusalem, brought all his prisoners to Ramah, Jer. xl. 1. and there disposed of them as he pleased, for the sword or for captivity: Then was the cry in Ramah heard to Bethlehem, (for those two cities, the one in Judah's lot, and the other in Benjamin's, were not far asunder:). But now the prophecy is again fulfilled in the great sorrow that was for the death of these infants. The scripture was fulfilled,

(1.) In the place of this mourning: The noise of it was heard from Bethlehem to Ramah; for Herod's cruelty extended itself to all the coasts of Bethlehem, even into the lot of Benjamin, among the children of Rachel. Some think the country about Bethlehem was called Rachel, because there she died and was buried: Rachel's sepulchre was hard by Bethlehem, Gen. xxxv. 16—19. Compare 1 Sam. x. 2, Rachel had her heart much set upon children, the son she died in travail she called Benoni, the son of her sorrow: These mothers were like Rachel, lived near Rachel's grave, and many of them descended from Rachel, and therefore their lamentations are elegantly represented by Rachel's weeping.

(2.) In the degree of this mourning: It was lamentation, and weeping, and great mourning; all little enough to express the sense they had of this aggravated calamity. There was a great cry in Egypt when the first-born were slain, and so there was here when the youngest were slain; for whom we naturally have a particular tenderness. Here was a representation of this world we live in: We hear in it lamentation and weeping and mourning, and see the tears of the oppressed, some upon one account, and some upon another. Our way lies through a vale of tears. This sorrow was so great, that they would not be comforted: They hardened themselves in it, and took a pleasure in their grief. Blessed be God, there is no occasion of grief in this world, no, not sin itself, that will justify us in refusing to be comforted. They would not be comforted, because they are not, i. e. they are not in the land of the living, are not, as they were in their mother's embraces: If indeed they were not, there might be some excuse for sorrowing as though we had no hope; but we know they are not lost, but gone before; if we forget that they are, we lose the best ground of our comfort, 1 Thess. iv. 13. Some make this great grief of the Bethlehemites, to be a just judgment upon them for their contempt of Christ: They that would not rejoice for the birth of the Son of God, are justly made to weep for the death of their own sons; for they only wondered at the tidings the shepherds brought them, but did not welcome them.

The quoting of this prophecy might serve to obviate an objection which some would make against Christ upon this sad providence: Can the Messiah, who is to be the consolation of Israel, be introduced with all this lamentation? Yes, for so it was foretold, and the scripture must be accomplished. And besides, if we look further into that prophecy, we shall find, that the bitter weeping in Ramah was but a prologue to the greatest joy, for it follows, Thy work shall be rewarded, and there is hope in thy end: The worse things are, the sooner they will mend: Unto them a child was born, sufficient to repair their losses.

19. ¶ But when Herod was dead, behold, an angel of the Lord appeareth in a dream to Joseph in Egypt, 20. Saying, Arise, and take the young child and his mother, and go into the land of Israel: for they are dead which sought the young child's life. 21. And he arose, and took the young child and his mother, and came into the land of Israel. 22. But when he heard that Archelaus did reign in Judea in the room of his father Herod, he was afraid to go thither: notwithstanding, being warned of God in a dream, he turned aside into the parts of Galilee: 23. And he came and dwelt in a city called Nazareth: that it might be fulfilled which was spoken by the prophets, He shall be called a Nazarene.

We have here Christ's return out of Egypt into the land of Israel again: Egypt may serve to sojourn in, or take shelter in for a while, but not to abide in: Christ was sent to the lost sheep of the house of Israel, and therefore to them he must return. Observe,

1. What it was that made way for his return, the death of Herod, which happened not long after the murder of the infants; some think not above three months: Such quick work did divine vengeance make! Note, Herod must die; proud tyrants, that were the terror of the mighty, and the oppressors of the godly, in the land of the living, their day must come to full, and down to the pit they must go. Who art thou then, that thou shouldst be afraid of a man that shall die? Isa. li. 12, 13. especially considering that at death, not only their envy and hatred are perished, Eccl. ix. 6, and they cease from troubling, Job iii. 17. but they are punished. Of all sins the guilt of innocent blood fills the measure soonest. It is a dreadful account which Josephus gives of the death of this same Herod, Antiq. Jud. lib. xvii. cap. 8, 9, 10. that he was seized with a disease which burned him inwardly with an inexpressible torture, that he was insatiably greedy of meat, had the colic, and gout, and dropsy; such an intolerable stink attended his disease, that none could come near him, and so passionate and impatient, that he was a torment to himself, and a terror to all that attended him; his innate cruelty being thus exasperated, made him more barbarous than ever; having ordered his own son to be put to death, he imprisoned many of the nobility and gentry, and ordered that as soon as he was dead they should be killed; but that execution was prevented. See what kind of men have been the enemies and persecutors of Christ and his followers! Few have opposed Christianity, but what have first divested themselves of humanity, as Nero and Domitian.

2. The orders given from heaven concerning their return, and Joseph's obedience to those orders, ver. 19, 20, 21. God had sent Joseph into Egypt, and there he staid till the same that brought him hither ordered him thence. Note, In all our removes it is good to see our way plain, and God going before us; we should not move either one way or other without order. These orders were sent him by an angel. Note, Our intercourse with God, if it be kept up on our part, shall be kept up on his, wherever we are: No place can exclude God's gracious visits. Angels come to Joseph in Egypt, to Ezekiel in Babylon, and to John in Patmos. Now, 1. The angel informs him of the death of Herod and his accomplices: They are dead which sought the young child's life. They are dead, but the young child lives. Persecuted saints sometimes live to tread upon the graves the sun of righteousness, for they see the morning star. Note, We should be glad of every thing that will shew us the way to Christ. This star was sent to meet the wise men, and to conduct them into the presence-chamber of the king; by this master of the ceremonies they were introduced to have their audience. Now God fulfils his promise of meeting those that are disposed to rejoice, and work righteousness, Isa. lxiv. 5. and they fulfil his precept; Let the hearts of those rejoice that seek the Lord, Psalm cv. 3. Note, God is pleased sometimes to favour young converts with such tokens of his love as are very encouraging to them, in reference to the difficulties they meet with at their setting out in the ways of God.

2. See how they made their address to him when they had found him, ver. 11. We may well imagine their expectations were raised to find this royal babe, though slighted by the nation, yet honourably attended at home, and what a disappointment it was to them when they found a cottage was his palace, and his own poor mother all the retinue he had. Is this the Saviour of the world? Is this the King of the Jews? nay, and the Prince of the kings of the earth? Yes, this is he, who though he was rich, yet for our sakes became thus poor. However these wise men were so wise as to see through this veil, and in this despised babe to discern the glory, as of the only begotten of the Father; they did not think themselves balked or baffled in their enquiry, but as having found the king they sought, they presented themselves first, and then their gifts to him.

(1.) They presented themselves to him, they fell down and worshipped him. We do not read that they gave such honour to Herod, though he was in the height of his royal grandeur, but to this babe they gave this honour, not only as to a king, then they would have done the same to Herod, but as to a God. Note, All that have found Christ fall down before him: they adore him, and submit themselves to him. He is thy Lord, and worship thou him. It will be the wisdom of the wisest of men, and by this it will appear they know Christ, and understand themselves and their true interests, if they be the humble, faithful worshippers of the Lord Jesus.

(2.) They presented their gifts to him. In the eastern nations, when they did homage to their kings, they made them a present: thus the subjection of the kings of Sheba to Christ is spoken of, Psalms lxxii. 10. They shall bring presents, and offer gifts. See Isa. lx. 6. Note, With ourselves we must give up all that we have to Jesus Christ, and if we be sincere in the surrender of ourselves to him, we will not stick at parting with what is dearest to us, and most valuable, to him and for him; nor are our gifts accepted, unless we first present ourselves to him living sacrifices; God had respect to Abel, and then to his offering. The gifts they presented were gold, frankincense, and myrrh, money, and money's-worth. Providence sent this for a seasonable relief to Joseph and Mary in their present poor condition. These were the products of their own country; what God favours us with, we must honour him with. Some think, there was a significance in their gifts: they offered him gold as a king, paying him tribute; to Caesar, the things that are Caesar's; frankincense as God, for they honoured God with the smoke of incense; and myrrh as a man that should die, for myrrh was used in embalming dead bodies.

3. See how they left him when they had made their address to him, ver. 12. Herod appointed them to bring him word what discoveries they had made, and, it is probable, they would have done so, if they had not been countermanded, not suspecting their being thus made his tools in a wicked design. Those that mean honestly and well themselves, are easily made to believe that others do so too, and cannot think the world is so bad as really it is; but the Lord knows how to deliver the godly out of temptation. We do not find that the wise men promised to come back to Herod, and if they had it must be with the usual proviso, if God permit; and God did not permit them, and so prevented the mischief Herod designed to the child Jesus, and the trouble it would have been to the wise men to have been made involuntarily accessory to it. They were warned of God, Κηρυγματιστας, oracula vel responsa accepto; some think, it intimates, that they asked counsel of God, and this was the answer. Note, Those that act cautiously and are afraid of sin and snares, if they apply themselves to God for direction, may expect to be led in the right way. They were warned not to return to Herod or to Jerusalem; these were unworthy to have reports brought them concerning Christ, that might have been seen with their own eyes, and would not. They departed into their own country another way, to bring the tidings to their countrymen; but it is strange we never hear any more of them, and that they or theirs did not afterwards attend him in the temple, whom they had worshipped in the cradle: however, the direction they had from God in their return, would be a further confirmation of their faith in this child, as the Lord from heaven.

13. And when they were departed, behold, the angel of the Lord appeared to Joseph in a dream, saying, Arise, and take the young child and his mother, and flee into Egypt, and be thou there until I bring thee word: for Herod will seek the young child, to destroy him. 14. When he arose, he took the young child and his mother by night, and departed into Egypt: 15. And was there until the death of Herod: that it might be fulfilled which was spoken of the Lord by the prophet, saying, Out of Egypt have I called my son.

We have here Christ's flight into Egypt to avoid the cruelty of Herod, and this was the effect of the wise men's enquiry after him, for before that, the obscurity he lay in was his protection: It was but little respect (compared with what should have been) that was paid to Christ in his infancy, yet even that, instead of honouring him among his people, did but expose him.

Now here observe,

1. The command given to Joseph concerning it, ver. 13. Joseph knew neither the danger the child was in, nor how to escape it, but God by an angel tells him both in a dream, as before he directed him in like manner what to do, chap. i. 20. Joseph, before his alliance to Christ, had not been wont to converse with angels as now. Note, Those that are spiritually related to Christ by faith, have that communion and correspondence with heaven, which before they were strangers to.

(1.) Joseph is here told what their danger was, Herod will seek the young child to destroy him. Note, God is acquainted with all the cruel projects and purposes of the enemies of his church. I know thy rage against me, saith God to Sennacherib, Isa. xxxvii. 28. How early was the blessed Jesus involved in trouble! Usually, even those whose riper years are attended with toils and perils, yet have a peaceable and quiet infancy, but it was not so with the blessed Jesus; his life and sufferings began together; he was born a man stricken with, as Jeremiah was, Jer. xv. 10. who was sanctified from the womb, Jer. i. 5. Both Christ the head, and the church his body agree, in saying, Many a time have they afflicted me, from my youth up. Pharaoh's cruelty fastens upon the Hebrews' children, and the great red dragon stands ready to devour the man-child as soon as it should be born, Rev. xii. 4.

2. He is directed what to do to escape the danger; Take the young child, and flee into Egypt. Thus early must Christ give an example to his own rule, Matt. x. 23. When they persecute you in one city, flee to another. He that came to die for us, when his hour was not yet come, fled for his own safety. Self-preservation being a branch of the law of nature, is eminently a part of the law of God. Flee, but why into Egypt? Egypt was infamous for idolatry, tyranny, and enmity to the people of God; it had been a house of bondage to Israel, and particularly cruel to the infants of Israel; in Egypt, as much as in Ramah, Rachel had been weeping for her children, yet that is appointed to be a place of refuge to the holy child Jesus. Note, God, when he pleases, can make the worst of places serve the best of purposes; for the earth is the Lord's, he makes what use he pleases of it; sometimes the earth helps the woman, Rev. xii. 16. God, that made Moab a shelter to his outcasts makes Egypt a refuge for his Son. This may be considered,

1. As a trial of the faith of Joseph and Mary; they might be tempted to think, if this child be the son of God, as we are told he is, has he no other way to secure himself from a man that is a worm, but by such a mean and inglorious retreat as this? Cannot he summon legions of angels to be his lifeguard, or cherubims with flaming swords to keep this tree of life? Cannot he strike Herod dead, or wither the hand that is stretched out against him, and to save us the trouble of this remove? They had been lately told, that he should be the glory of his people Israel; and is the land of Israel so soon become too hot for him? But we find not that they made any such objections: their faith being tried was found firm, and they believe this is the Son of God, though they see no miracle wrought for his preservation, but they are put to the use of ordinary means. Joseph had great honour put upon him in being the husband of the blessed Virgin, but that honour has trouble attending it, as all honours have in this world; Joseph must take the young child, and carry him into Egypt; and now it appeared how well God had provided for the young child and his mother, in appointing Joseph into relation to them; now the gold which the wise men brought, would stand them in stead to bear their charges. God foresees his people's distresses, and provides against them beforehand. God intimates the continuance of his care and conduct, when he said, Be thou there until I bring thee word; so that he must expect to hear from God again, and not stir without fresh orders. Thus God will keep his people still in a dependence upon him.

2. As an instance of the humiliation of our Lord Jesus. As there was no room for him in the inn at Bethlehem, so there was no quiet room for him in the land of Judaea. Thus was he banished from the earthly Canaan, that we, who for sin were banished from the heavenly Canaan, might not be for ever expelled. If we and our infants be at any time in straits, let us remember the straits Christ in his infancy was brought into, and be reconciled to them.

3. As a token of God's displeasure against the Jews, who took so little notice of him; justly doth he leave those who had slighted him; and as an earnest of his favour to the Gentiles, to whom the apostles were to bring the gospel when the Jews rejected it. If Egypt entertain Christ when he is forced out of Judaea, it will not be long ere it be said, Blessed be Egypt my people, Isa. xix. 25.

2. Joseph's obedience to this command, ver. 14. The journey would be inconvenient and perilous, both to the young child and to his mother, they were but poorly provided for it, and were likely to meet with cold entertainment in Egypt; yet Joseph was not disobedient to the heavenly vision, made no objection, nor was dilatory in his obedience. As soon as he had received his orders, he immediately arose, and went away by night, the same night, as it should seem, that he received the orders. Note, Those that would make sure work of their obedience, must make quick work of it. Now Joseph went out, as his father Abraham did, with an implicit dependence upon God, not knowing whither he went, Heb. xi. 8. Joseph and his wife having little, had little to take care of in this remove: an abundance incumbers a necessary flight. If rich people have the advantage of the poor while they possess what they have, the poor have the advantage of the rich when they are called to part with it.

Joseph took the young child and his mother. Some observe, that the young child is put first, as the principal person, and Mary is called, not the wife of Joseph, but, which was her greater dignity, the mother of the young child. This was not the first Joseph that was driven from Canaan to Egypt for a shelter from the anger of his brethren; this Joseph ought to be welcome there for the sake of that.

If we may credit tradition, at their entrance into Egypt, happening into a temple, all the images of their Gods were overthrown by an invisible power, and fell like Dagon before the ark, according to that prophecy. The Lord shall come into Egypt, and the idols of Egypt shall be whirled at his presence, Isa. xix. 1. They continued in Egypt till the death of Herod, which some think was seven years, others think not so many months. There they were at a distance from the temple, and the service of it, and in the midst of idolaters, but God sent them thither, and will have mercy, and not sacrifice. Though they were far from the temple of the Lord, they had with them the Lord of the temple. A forced absence from God's ordinances, and a forced presence with wicked people, may be the lot, if not the sin, yet cannot but be the grief of good people.

3. The fulfilling of the scripture in all this, that scripture, Hos. xi. 1. Out of Egypt have I called my son. Of all the evangelists, Matthew takes most notice of the fulfilling of the scripture in what concerned Christ, because his gospel was first published among the Jews, with whom that would add much strength and lustre to it. Now this word of the prophet undoubtedly referred to the deliverance of Israel out of Egypt, in which God owned them for his son, his first-born, Exod. iv. 22. but it is here applied by way of analogy to Christ the head of the church. Note, The scripture has many accomplishments, so full and copious is it, and so well ordered in all things! God is every day fulfilling the scripture. Scripture is not of private interpretation, we must give it its full latitude. When Israel was a child, then I loved him; and though I loved him, I suffered him to be a great while in Egypt; but because I loved him, in due time I called him out of Egypt. They that read this, must, in their thoughts, not only look back, but look forward; that which has been shall be again, Eccl. i. 9. and the manner of expression intimates this; for it is said, not I called him, but called my son out of Egypt. Note, It is no new thing for God's sons to be in Egypt, in a strange land, in a house of bondage; but they shall be fetched out: They may be hid in Egypt, but they shall not be left here. All the elect of God, being by nature children of wrath, are born in a spiritual Egypt, and in conversion are effectually called out. It might be objected against Christ, that he had been in Egypt; Must the son of righteousness arise out of that land of darkness? But this shews that to be no such strange thing;

thing; Israel was brought out of Egypt to be advanced to the highest honours, and this is but the doing the same thing again.

16. ¶ Then Herod, when he saw that he was mocked of the wise men, was exceeding wroth, and sent forth, and slew all the children that were in Bethlehem, and in all the coasts thereof, from two years old and under, according to the time which he had diligently enquired of the wise men. 17. Then was fulfilled that which was spoken by Jeremy the prophet, saying, 18. In Rama was there a voice heard, lamentation, and weeping, and great mourning, Rachel weeping for her children, and would not be comforted, because they are not.

Here is, 1. Herod's resentment of the departure of the wise men. He waited long for their return, hopes, though they be slow, they will be sure, and he shall crush his rival at his first appearing; but hears, upon enquiry, that they are gone off another way, which increaseth his jealousy, and makes him suspect that they are in the interest of this new king, which made him exceeding wroth; and he is the more desperate and outrageous for his being disappointed. Note, Inveterate corruption swells the higher for the obstructions it meets with in a sinful pursuit.

2. His politic contrivance, notwithstanding this, to take off him that is born King of the Jews. If he could not reach him by a particular execution, he doubted not but to involve him in a general stroke, which, like the sword of war, should detour one as well as another. This would be sure work; and thus those that would destroy their own iniquity, must be sure to destroy all their iniquities. Herod was an Edomite, enmity to Israel was bred in the bone with him: Doeg was an Edomite, who, for David's sake, slew all the priests of the Lord. It was strange that Herod could find any so inhuman, as to be employed in such a bloody and barbarous piece of work; but wicked hands never want wicked tools to work with. Little children have always been taken under the special protection not only of human laws but of human nature; yet these are sacrificed to the rage of this tyrant, under whom, as under Nero, innocence is the least security. Herod was throughout his reign a bloody man; it was not long before that he destroyed the whole Sanhedrim, or bench of judges; but blood to the blood-thirsty, is like drink to those in a drowsy; Quo plus sunt pota, plus sitiuntur aqua. Herod was now about seventy-years old, so that an infant at this time under two years old, was not likely ever to give him any disturbance: Nor was he a man overfond of his own children or of their preferment, having formerly slain two of his own sons, Alexander and Aristobulus, and his son Antipater after this, but five days before he died; so that it was purely to gratify his brutish lusts of pride and cruelty that he did this: all is fish that comes to his net.

Observe what large measures he took, 1. As to time; he slew all from two years old and under: It is probable, the blessed Jesus was at this time not a year old; yet Herod took in all the infants under two years old, that he might be sure not to miss of his prey: He cares not how many heads fall, whom he allows to be innocent, provided that escape not whom he supposeth to be guilty. 2. As to place; he kills all the male children, not only in Bethlehem, but in all the coasts thereof, in all the villages of that city. This was being overmuch wicked; Eccl. vii. 17. Note, An unbridled wrath, armed with an unlawful power, often transports men to the most absurd and unreasonable instances of cruelty. It was no unrighteous thing with God to permit this; every life is forfeited to his justice, as soon as it commeth; that sin which entered by one man's disobedience introduced death with it; and we are not to suppose any thing more than that common guilt, or that these children were sinners above all that were in Israel, because they suffered such things; God's judgments are a great deep: The diseases and deaths of little children are proofs of original sin: But we must look upon this murder of the infants under another character: it was their martyrdom. How early did persecution commence against Christ and his kingdom! Think ye that he came to send peace on the earth, no but a sword, such a sword as this, Matt. x. 34, 35. A passive testimony was hereby given to the Lord Jesus. As when he was in the womb, he was witnessed to by a child's leaping in the womb for joy at his approach, so now, at two years old, he had cotemporary witnesses to him of the same age: they shed their blood for him, who afterwards shed his for them. These were the infantry of the noble army of martyrs. If these infants were thus baptized with blood, though it were their own, into the church triumphant, it could not be said, but that with what they got in heaven, they were abundantly recompensed for what they lost on earth. Out of the mouth of these babes and sucklings God did perfect praise, otherwise, it is not good to the Almighty that he should thus afflict.

The tradition of the Greek church (and we have it in the Æthiopic missal) is that the number of the children slain was fourteen thousand, but that is very absurd; I believe, if the births of the male children in the weekly hills were computed, there would not be found so many under two years old, in one of the most populous cities in the world, much less in Bethlehem, a small town, that was not near a fortieth part of it: But it is an instance of the vanity of tradition. It is strange that Josephus doth not relate this story; but he wrote long after St. Matthew, and it is probable, he therefore would not relate it, because he would not so far countenance the Christian history, for he was a zealous Jew; but, to be sure, if it had not been true and well attested, he would have contested it. Macrobius, a heathen writer, tells us, that when Augustus Caesar heard that Herod, among the children he ordered to be slain under two years old, among the rest, slew his own son, he passed this jest upon him, That it was better be Herod's swine than his son. The usage of the country forbade him to kill a swine, but nothing could restrain him from killing his son. Some think, he had a young child at nurse in Bethlehem: others think, that, through mistake, two events are confounded, the murder of the infants, and the murder of his son Antipater. But for the church of Rome to put the holy innocents, as they call them, into their calendar, and observe a day in memory of them, while they have so often, by their barbarous massacres, justified, and even outdone Herod, is but to do as their predecessors did, who built the tombs of the prophets, while they themselves filled up the same measure.

Some observe another design of providence in the murder of the infants: By all the prophecies of the Old Testament, it appears, that Bethlehem was the place, and this the time of the Messiah's nativity; now all the children of Bethlehem, born at this time, being murdered, and Jesus only escaping, none but he could pretend to be the Messiah. Herod now thought he had baffled all the Old Testament prophecies, had defeated the indications of the star, and the devotions of the wise men, by ridding the country of this new king; having burnt the hive, he concludes he had killed the master-bee;

3. The fulfilling of the scripture in this, ver. 17, 18. Then was fulfilled that prophecy, Jer. xxxi. 15. A voice was heard in Ramah. See and adore the fulness of the scripture! That prediction was accomplished in Jeremiah's time, when Nebuzar-adan, after he had destroyed Jerusalem, brought all his prisoners to Ramah, Jer. xl. 1. and there disposed of them as he pleased, for the sword or for captivity: Then was the cry in Ramah heard to Bethlehem, (for those two cities, the one in Judah's lot, and the other in Benjamin's, were not far asunder:) But now the prophecy is again fulfilled in the great sorrow that was for the death of these infants. The scripture was fulfilled,

(1.) In the place of this mourning: The noise of it was heard from Bethlehem to Ramah; for Herod's cruelty extended itself to all the coasts of Bethlehem, even into the lot of Benjamin, among the children of Rachel. Some think the country about Bethlehem was called Rachel, because there she died and was buried: Rachel's sepulchre was hard by Bethlehem, Gen. xxxv. 16—19. Compare 1 Sam. x. 2, Rachel had her heart much set upon children, the son she died in travail of she called Benoni, the son of her sorrow: These mothers were like Rachel, lived near Rachel's grave, and many of them descended from Rachel, and therefore their lamentations are elegantly represented by Rachel's weeping.

(2.) In the degree of this mourning: It was lamentation, and weeping, and great mourning; all little enough to express the sense they had of this aggravated calamity. There was a great cry in Egypt when the first-born were slain, and so there was here when the youngest were slain; for whom we naturally have a particular tenderness. Here was a representation of this world we live in: We hear in it lamentation and weeping and mourning, and see the tears of the oppressed, some upon one account, and some upon another. Our way lies through a vale of tears. This sorrow was so great, that they would not be comforted: They hardened themselves in it, and took a pleasure in their grief. Blessed be God, there is no occasion of grief in this world, no, not sin itself, that will justify us in refusing to be comforted. They would not be comforted, because they are not, i. e. they are not in the land of the living, are not, as they were in their mother's embraces: If indeed they were not, there might be some excuse for sorrowing as though we had no hope; but we know they are not lost, but gone before; if we forget that they are, we lose the best ground of our comfort, 1 Thess. iv. 13. Some make this great grief of the Bethlehemites, to be a just judgment upon them for their contempt of Christ: They that would not rejoice for the birth of the Son of God, are justly made to weep for the death of their own sons; for they only wondered at the tidings the shepherds brought them, but did not welcome them.

The quoting of this prophecy might serve to obviate an objection which some would make against Christ upon this sad providence: Can the Messiah, who is to be the consolation of Israel, be introduced with all this lamentation? Yes, for so it was foretold, and the scripture must be accomplished. And besides, if we look further into that prophecy, we shall find, that the bitter weeping in Ramah was but a prologue to the greatest joy, for it follows, Thy work shall be rewarded, and there is hope in thy end: The worse things are, the sooner they will mend: Unto them a child was born, sufficient to repair their losses.

19. ¶ But when Herod was dead, behold, an angel of the Lord appeareth in a dream to Joseph in Egypt, 20. Saying, Arise, and take the young child and his mother, and go into the land of Israel: for they are dead which sought the young child's life. 21. And he arose, and took the young child and his mother, and came into the land of Israel. 22. But when he heard that Archelaus did reign in Judea in the room of his father Herod, he was afraid to go thither: notwithstanding, being warned of God in a dream, he turned aside into the parts of Galilee: 23. And he came and dwelt in a city called Nazareth: that it might be fulfilled which was spoken by the prophets, He shall be called a Nazarene.

We have here Christ's return out of Egypt into the land of Israel again: Egypt may serve to sojourn in, or take shelter in for a while, but not to abide in: Christ was sent to the lost sheep of the house of Israel, and therefore to them he must return. Observe,

1. What it was that made way for his return, the death of Herod, which happened not long after the murder of the infants; some think not above three months: Such quick work did divine vengeance make! Note, Herod must die; proud tyrants, that were the terror of the mighty, and the oppressors of the godly, in the land of the living, their day must come to full, and down to the pit they must go. If thou art thou then, that thou shouldst be afraid of a man that shall die? Isa. li. 12, 13. especially considering that at death, not only their envy and hatred are perished, Eccl. ix. 6, and they cease from troubling, Job iii. 17. but they are punished. Of all sins the guilt of innocent blood fills the measure soonest. It is a dreadful account which Josephus gives of the death of this same Herod, Antiq. Jud. lib. xvii. cap. 8, 9, 10. that he was seized with a disease which burned him inwardly with an inexpressible torture, that he was insatiably greedy of meat, had the colic, and gout, and dropsy; such an intolerable stink attended his disease, that none could come near him, and so passionate and impatient, that he was a torment to himself, and a terror to all that attended him; his innate cruelty being thus exasperated, made him more barbarous than ever; having ordered his own son to be put to death, he imprisoned many of the nobility and gentry, and ordered that as soon as he was dead they should be killed; but that execution was prevented. See what kind of men have been the enemies and persecutors of Christ and his followers! Few have opposed Christianity, but what have first divested themselves of humanity, as Nero and Domitian.

2. The orders given from heaven concerning their return, and Joseph's obedience to those orders, ver. 19, 20, 21. God had sent Joseph into Egypt, and there he staid till the same that brought him hither ordered him thence. Note, In all our removes it is good to see our way plain, and God going before us; we should not move either one way or other without order. These orders were sent him by an angel. Note, Our intercourse with God, if it be kept up on our part, shall be kept up on his, wherever we are: No place can exclude God's gracious visits. Angels come to Joseph in Egypt, to Ezekiel in Babylon, and to John in Patmos. Now, 1. The angel informs him of the death of Herod and his accomplices: They are dead which sought the young child's life. They are dead, but the young child lives. Persecuted saints sometimes live to tread upon the graves graves of their persecutors. Thus did the church's King weather the storm, and many a one has the church in like manner weathered. They are dead, to wit, Herod and his son Antipater, who, though there were mutual jealousies between them, yet probably, concurred in seeking the destruction of this new king. If Herod first killed Antipater, and then die himself, the coasts are cleared, and the Lord is known by the judgments which he executeth, when one wicked instrument is the ruin of another. 2. He directs him what to do; He must go and return to the land of Israel; and he did so without delay, not pleading the tolerable good settlement he had in Egypt, or the inconveniences of the journey, especially if, as is supposed, it was in the beginning of winter that Herod died. God's people follow his conduct wherever he leads them, wherever he lodges them. Did we but look upon the world as our Egypt, the place of our bondage and banishment, and heaven only as our Canaan, our home, our rest, we should as readily arise and depart thither, when we are called for, as Joseph did out of Egypt.

3. The further direction he had from God which way to steer, and where to fix in the land of Israel, ver. 22, 23. God could have given him these instructions with the former, but God reveals his mind to his people by degrees, to keep them still waiting on him, and expecting to hear further from him. These orders Joseph received in a dream, probably, as those before, by the ministration of an angel. God could have signified his will to Joseph by the child Jesus, but we do not find that in those removes he either takes notice, or gives notice of any thing that occurred; surely it was because in all things it behoved him to be made like his brethren; being a child, he spake as a child, and did as a child, and drew a veil over his infinite knowledge and power; as a child he increased in wisdom.

Now the direction given this holy, royal family, is, 1. That it might not settle in Judea, ver. 22. Joseph might think, that Jesus being born in Bethlehem, must be brought up there; yet is prudently afraid for the young child, because he heard that Archelaus reigns in Herod's stead, not over all the kingdom as his father did, but only over Judea, the other provinces being put into other hands. See what a succession of enemies there is to fight against Christ and his church! If one drop off, another presently appears to keep up the old enmity. But for this reason Joseph must not take the young child into Judea. Note, God will not thrust his children into the mouth of danger, but when it is for his own glory and their trial; for precious in the sight of the Lord is the life and death of his saints, precious is their blood to him.

2. That it must settle in Galilee, ver. 22. There Philip now ruled, who was a mild quiet man. Note, The providence of God commonly so orders it, that his people shall not want a quiet retreat from the storm and from the tempest; when one climate becomes hot and scorching, another shall be kept more cool and temperate. Galilee lay far north, Samaria lay between it and Judea, thither they were sent to Nazareth, a city upon a hill, in the centre of the lot of Zebulun; there the mother of our Lord lived, when she conceived that holy thing, and probably, Joseph lived there too, Luke i. 26, 27. Thither they were sent, for there they were well known, and were among their relations; the most proper place for them to be in. There they continued, and from thence our Saviour was called Jesus of Nazareth, which was to the Jews a stumbling-block, for can any good thing come out of Nazareth?

In this is said to be fulfilled what was spoken by the prophets; he shall be called a Nazarene; which may be looked upon, 1. As a name of honour and dignity, though primarily it signifies no more but a man of Nazareth, yet there is an allusion or mystery in it, speaking Christ to be, 1. The man, the branch spoken of, Isa. xi. 1. Where the word is Netzar, which signifies either a branch, or the city of Nazareth; it being denominated from that city, he is declared to be that branch. 2. It speaks him to be the great Nazarite, of whom the legal Nazarites were a type and figure, especially Samson, Judges xiii. 5. and Joseph, who is called a Nazarite among his brethren, Gen. xlix. 26. And to whom that which was prescribed concerning the Nazarites has reference, Numb. vi. 2, &c. not that Christ was strictly a Nazarite, for he drank wine and touched dead bodies; but he was eminently so both as he was singularly holy, and as he was by a solemn designation and dedication set apart to the honour of God in the work of our redemption, as Samson was to save Israel: And it is a name we have all reason to rejoice in, and to know him by.

Or, 2. As a name of reproach and contempt. To be called a Nazarene, was to be called a despicable man, a man from whom no good was to be expected, and to whom no respect was to be paid. The devil first fastened this name upon Christ, to render him mean, and prejudice people against him, and it stuck as a nick-name to him and his followers. Now this was not particularly foretold by any one prophet, but in general it was spoken by the prophets, that he should be despised and rejected of men, Isa. liii. 2, 3. a worm and no man. Psalm xxii. 6, 7. that he should be an alien to his brethren, Psalm lxix. 9, 10. Let no name of reproach for religion's sake seem hard to us, when our Master was himself called a Nazarene.

C H A P. III.

At the story of this chapter, concerning the baptism of John, begins the gospel, Mark i. 1. what went before is but preface or introduction: this is the beginning of the gospel of Jesus Christ. And Peter observes the same date, Acts. i. 22. beginning from the baptism of John, for then Christ began first to appear in him, and then to appear to him, and by him to the world. Here is, 1. The glorious rising of the morning-star, John the Baptist, ver. 1. (1.) The doctrine he preached, ver. 2. (2.) The fulfilling of the scripture in him, ver. 3. (3.) His manner of life, ver. 4. (4.) The resort of multitudes to him, and their submission to his baptism, ver. 5, 6. (5.) His sermon that he preached to the Pharisees and Sadducees, wherein he endeavours to bring them to repentance, ver. 7—10. and so to bring them to Christ, ver. 11, 12. 2. The more glorious shining forth of the Sun of righteousness immediately after; where we have, (1.) The honour done him by the baptism of John, ver. 13—15. (2.) The honour done to him by the descent of the Spirit upon him, and a voice from heaven, ver. 16, 17.

1. IN those days came John the Baptist, preaching in the wilderness of Judea. 2. And saying, Repent ye, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand. 3. For this is he that was spoken of by the prophet Esaias, saying, The voice of one crying in the wilderness, Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make his paths straight. 4. And the same John had his raiment of camel's hair, and a leathern girdle about his loins; and his meat was locusts and wild honey. 5. Then went out to him

Jerusalem, and all Judea, and all the region round about Jordan, 6. And were baptized of him in Jordan, confessing their sins.

We have here an account of the preaching and baptism of John, which was the dawning of the gospel-day. Observe,

1. The time when he appeared: In those days, ver. 1. or after those days; long after what was recorded in the foregoing chapter, which left the child Jesus in his infancy. In those days, i. e. in the time appointed of the Father for the beginning of the gospel, when the fulness of time was come, which was often thus spoken of in the Old Testament, in those days. Now the last of Daniel's weeks began, or rather in the latter half of the last week, when the Messiah was to confirm the covenant with many, Dan. ix. 27. Christ's appearances are all in their season. Glorious things were spoken both of John and Jesus, at and before their births, which would have given occasion to expect some extraordinary appearances of a divine presence and power with them when they were very young; but it is quite otherwise. Except Christ's disputing with the doctors at twelve years old, nothing appears remarkable concerning either of them, till they were about thirty years old. Nothing is recorded in their childhood and youth, but the greatest part of their life is tempus ædulo, it is wrapt up in darkness and obscurity: these children differ little in outward appearance from other children, as the heir while he is under age differs nothing from a servant, though he be lord of all. And this was to shew, 1. That even then when God is acting as the God of Israel, the Saviour, yet verily he is a God that hideth himself, Isa. xlv. 15. The Lord is in this place, and I knew it not, Gen. xviii. 16. Our beloved stands behind the wall long, before he looks forth at the windows, Cant. ii. 9. 2. That our faith must principally have an eye to Christ in his office and undertaking, for there is the display of his power; but in his person is the hiding of his power. All this while Christ was a God-man, yet we are not told what he said or did, till he appeared as a prophet, and then hear ye him. 3. That young men, though well qualified, should not be forward to put forth themselves in public service, but be humble, and modest, and self-diffident, swift to hear and slow to speak.

Matthew saith nothing of the conception and birth of John the Baptist, which is largely related by St. Luke, but finds him at full age, as if dropt from the clouds to preach in the wilderness. For above three hundred years the church had been without prophets; those lights had been long put out, that he might be the more desired, who was to be the great prophet. After Malachi there was no prophet, nor any pretender to prophecy, till John the Baptist, to whom therefore the prophet Malachi points more directly, than any of the Old Testament prophets had done, Mal. iii. 1. I send my messenger.

2. The place where he appeared first: In the wilderness of Judea. It was not an uninhabited desert, but a part of the country not so thick peopled, nor so much inclosed into fields and vineyards, as other parts were; it was such a wilderness as had six cities and their villages in it, which are named, Josh. xv. 61, 62. In these cities and villages John preached, for thereabouts he had hitherto lived, being born hard by in Hebron; the scenes of his action began there, where he had long spent his time in contemplation, and even when he shewed himself to Israel, he shewed how well he loved retirement, as far as would consist with his business. The word of the Lord found John here in a wilderness. Note, No place is so remote as to shut us out from the visits of divine grace; nay, commonly the sweetest intercourse the saints have with heaven is, when they are withdrawn furthest from the noise of this world. It was in this wilderness of Judah that David penned the 63d Psalm, which spake so much of the sweet communion he then had with God, Hos. ii. 14. In a wilderness the law was given, and as the Old Testament, so the New Testament Israel was first found in a desert land, and there God led him about and instructed him, Deut. xxxii. 10. John Baptist was a priest of the order of Aaron, yet we find him preaching in a wilderness, and never officiating in the temple; but Christ, who was not a son of Aaron, yet is often found in the temple, and sitting there as one having authority; so it was foretold, Mal. iii. 1. The Lord whom ye seek shall suddenly come to his temple, not the messenger that was to prepare his way. This intimated that the priesthood of Christ was to thrust out that of Aaron and drive it into a wilderness.

The beginning of the gospel in a wilderness, speaks comfort to the deserts of the Gentile world. Now must the prophecies be fulfilled, I will plant in the wilderness the cedar, Isa. xli. 18, 19. The wilderness shall be a fruitful field, Isa. xxxii. 15. And the desert shall rejoice, Isa. xxxv. 1, 2. which the Septuagint read, the deserts of Jordan, the very wilderness in which John preached. In the Romish church there are those who call themselves hermits, and pretend to follow John, but when they say of Christ, behold, he is in the desert, go not forth, Matt. xxiv. 26. There was a seducer that led his followers into the wilderness. Acts xxi. 38.

3. His preaching. This he made his business: He came not fighting, nor disputing, but preaching, ver. 1. for by the foolishness of preaching Christ's kingdom must be set up.

1. The doctrine he preached was that of repentance, ver. 2. Repent ye. He preached this in Judea among those that were called Jews, and made a profession of religion; for even they need repentance. He preached it not in Jerusalem, but in the wilderness of Judea among the plain country people: for even those who think themselves most out of the way of temptation, and furthest from the vanities and vices of the town, yet cannot wash their hands in innocence, but must do it in repentance. John Baptist's business was to call men to repent of their sins; μετανοείτε, bethink yourselves, admit a second thought to correct the errors of the first, an after-thought: consider your ways, change your minds; you have thought amiss, think again, and think aright. Note, True penitents have other thoughts of God and Christ, and sin and holiness, and this world and the other, than they have had, and stand otherwise affected towards them. The change of the mind produceth a change of the way. Those who are truly sorry for what they have done amiss, will be careful to do so no more. This repentance is a necessary duty in obedience to the command of God, Acts xvii. 30. and a necessary preparative and qualification for the comforts of the gospel of Christ. If the heart of man continued upright and unstained, divine consolations might have been received without this painful operation preceding, but being sinful, it must be first pained before it can be laid at ease; must labour before it can be at rest. The sore must be searched, or it cannot be cured. I wound, and I heal.

2. The argument he used to enforce this call was, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand. The prophets of the Old Testament called people to repent, for the obtaining and securing of temporal national mercies, and for the preventing and removing of temporal national judgments: But now, though the duty pressed is the same, the reason is new and purely evangelical. Men are now considered in their personal capacity, and not so much as in a social and political one. Now repent, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand, i. e. the gospel dispensation of the covenant of grace, the

the opening of the kingdom of heaven to all believers by the death and resurrection of Jesus Christ. It is a kingdom which Christ is the sovereign of, and we must be the willing loyal subjects of. It is a kingdom of heaven, not of this world, a spiritual kingdom: its original from heaven, its tendency to heaven. John preached this at hand, then it was at the door; to us it is come, by the pouring out of the Spirit, and the full exhibiting of the riches of gospel grace. Now, 1. This is a great inducement to us to repent: Nothing like the consideration of divine grace to break the heart, both for sin and from sin. That is evangelical repentance that flows from a sight of Christ, from a sense of his love, and the hopes of pardon and forgiveness through him. Kindness is conquering, abused kindness humbling and melting. What a wretch was I to sin against such grace! against the law and love of such a kingdom! 2. It is a great encouragement to us to repent; repent, for your sins shall be pardoned upon your repentance. Return to God in a way of duty, and he will, through Christ, return to you in a way of mercy. The proclamation of pardon discovers and fetcheth in the malefactor that before fled and absconded. Thus are we drawn to it with the cords of a man and the bands of love.

4. The prophecy that was fulfilled in him, ver. 3. This is he that was spoken of in the beginning of that part of the prophecy of Esaias, which is mostly evangelical, and which points at gospel times and gospel grace; see Isa. xl. 3, 4. John is here spoken of,

1. As the voice of one crying in the wilderness. John owned it himself, John i. 23. I am the voice, and that is all; God is the speaker, who maketh known his mind by John, as a man doth by his voice. The word of God must be received as such, 1 Thess. ii. 13. what also is Paul, and what is Apollos, but the voice. John is called the voice, φωνὴ βοῶντος, the voice of one crying aloud, which is startling and awakening; Christ is called the Word, which being distinct and articulate, is more instructive: John as the voice roused men, and then Christ as the Word taught them; as we find, Rev. xiv. 2. The voice of many waters, and of a great thunder, made way for the melodious voice of harpers, and the new song, ver. 3. Some observe, that as Samson's mother must drink no strong drink, yet he was designed to be a strong man, so John Baptist's father was struck dumb, and yet he was designed to be the voice of one crying. When the crier's voice is begotten of a dumb father, it shews the excellency of the power to be of God, and not of man.

2. As one whose business it was to prepare the way of the Lord, and to make his paths straight; so it was said of him before he was born, that he should make ready a people prepared for the Lord, Luke i. 17. as Christ's harbinger and forerunner, and such a one as intimated the nature of Christ's kingdom, for he came not in the gaudy dress of a herald at arms, but the homely one of a hermit. Officers are sent before great men to clear the way, so John prepares the way of the Lord. 1. He himself did so among the men of that generation. In the Jewish church and nation at that time all was out of course; there was a great decay of piety, the vitals of religion were corrupted and eaten out by the traditions and injunctions of the elders. The Scribes and Pharisees, that are the greatest hypocrites in the world, had the key of knowledge, and the key of government at their girdle. The people were generally extreme proud of their privileges, confident of justification by their own righteousness, insensible of sin, and though now under the most humbling providences, being lately made a province of the Roman empire, yet were unhumbled: they were much in the same temper, that they were in Malachi's time, insolent and haughty, and ready to contradict the word of God; now John was sent to level these mountains, to take down their high opinion of themselves, and to shew them their sins, that the doctrine of Christ might be the more acceptable and effectual. 2. His doctrine of repentance and humiliation, is still as necessary as it was then to prepare the way of the Lord. Note, There is a great deal to be done to make way for Christ into a soul, to bow the heart for the reception of the Son of David, 2 Sam. xix. 14. and nothing more needful in order to this, than the discovery of sin, and a conviction of the insufficiency of our own righteousness. That which letteth will let, until it be taken out of the way; prejudices must be removed, high thoughts brought down, and captivated to the obedience of Christ. Gates of brass must be broken, and bars of iron cut asunder, ere the everlasting doors be opened for the King of glory to come in. The way of sin and Satan is a crooked way; to prepare a way for Christ, the paths must be made straight, Heb. xii. 13.

5. The garb in which he appeared, the figure he made, and the manner of life he lived, ver. 4. They that expected the Messiah as a temporal prince, would think his forerunner must come in great pomp and splendor, that his equipage should be very magnificent and gay; but it proves quite contrary, he shall be great in the sight of the Lord, but mean in the eye of the world, and as Christ himself, having no form or comeliness, to intimate betimes, that the glory of Christ's kingdom was to be spiritual, and the subjects of it such as ordinarily were either found by it, or made by it, poor and despised, and had their honours, pleasures, and riches, derived from another world.

1. His dress was plain. This same John had his raiment of camel's hair, and a leather girdle about his loins; he did not go in long clothing, as the Scribes, or soft clothing, as the courtiers, but in the clothing of a country-husbandman, for he lived in a country-place, and suited his habit to his habitation. Note, It is good for us to accommodate ourselves to the place and condition which God in his providence has put us in. John appeared in this dress, 1. To shew that, like Jacob, he was a plain man, and mortified to this world and the delights and gaieties of it. Behold an Israelite indeed. Those that are lowly in heart, should shew it by a holy negligence and indifference in their attire, and not make the putting on of apparel their adorning, nor value others by their attire. 2. To shew that he was a prophet, for prophets wore rough garments, as mortified men, Zech. xiii. 4. And especially to shew that he was the Elias promised; for particular notice is taken of Elias, that he was a hairy man (which some think is meant of the hairy garments he wore) and that he was girt with a girdle of leather about his loins, 2 Kings i. 8. John Baptist appears no way inferior to him in mortification; this therefore is that Elias that was to come. 3. To shew that he was a man of resolution; his girdle was not fine, such as were then commonly worn, but it was strong, it was a leathern girdle; and blessed is that servant, whom his Lord, when he comes, finds with his loins girt, Luke xii. 35. 1 Pet. i. 13.

2. His diet was plain, his meat was locusts and wild honey; not as if he never eat any thing else, but these he frequently fed upon, and made many meals of when he retired into solitary places, and continued long there for contemplation; locusts were a sort of flying insect, very good for food, and allowed as clean, Lev. xi. 22. it required little dressing, and was light and easy of digestion, whence it is reckoned among the infirmities of old age, that the grasshopper or locust is then a burthen to the stomach, Eccles. xii. 5. Wild honey was that which Canaan flowed with, 1 Sam. xiv. 26. Either it was gathered immediately as it fell in the dew, or rather as it was found in the hollows of trees and rocks, where bees build that were not as those in hives under the care and inspection of men. This intimates, that he eat sparingly, a little served his turn; a man would be long ere he filled his belly with locusts and wild honey: John Baptist came neither eating nor drinking, Matt. xi. 18. Not with that curiosity, formality, and familiarity that other people do. He was so intirely taken up with spiritual things, that he could seldom find time for a set meal. Now, 1. This agreed with the doctrine he preached of repentance, and fruits meet for repentance. Note, Those whose business it is to call others to mourn for sin and to mortify it, ought themselves to live a serious life, a life of self-denial, mortification and contempt of the world. John Baptist thus shewed the deep sense he had of the badness of the time and place he lived in, which made the preaching of repentance needful; every day was a fast-day with him. 2. This agreed with his office as Christ's forerunner; by this practice he shewed that he knew what the kingdom of heaven was, and had experienced the powers of it. Note, Those that are acquainted with divine and spiritual pleasures, cannot but look upon all the delights and ornaments of sense with a holy indifference, they know better things. By giving others this example, he made way for Christ. Note, A conviction of the vanity of the world and every thing in it, is the best preparative for the entertainment of the kingdom of heaven in the heart. Blessed are the poor in spirit.

6. The people that attended upon him, and flocked after him, ver. 5. Then went out to him Jerusalem, and all Judea. Great multitudes came to him from the city, and from all parts of the country; some of all sorts, men and women, young and old, rich and poor Pharisees and Publicans, they went out to him as soon as they heard of his preaching the kingdom of heaven, that they might hear what they had heard so much of. Now, 1. This was a great honour put upon John, that so many attended him, and with so much respect. Note, Many times those have most real honour done them, that least court the shadow of it. Those that live a mortified life, that are humble and self-denying, and dead to the world, command respect, and men have a secret value and reverence for them, more than one would imagine. 2. This gave John a great opportunity of doing good, and was an evidence that God was with him. Now people began to crowd and press into the kingdom of heaven, Luke xvi. 16. and a blessed sight it was to see the dew of the youth dropping from the womb of the gospel-morning, Psal. cx. 3. to see the net cast where there were so many fish. 3. This was an evidence, that now was a time of great expectation; it was generally thought that the kingdom of God should presently appear, Luke xix. 11. And therefore when John shewed himself to Israel, lived and preached at this rate, so very different from the Scribes and Pharisees, they were ready to say of him, that he was the Christ, Luke iii. 15. And this occasioned such a confluence of people about him. 4. Those that would have the benefit of John's ministry, must go out to him to the wilderness, sharing in his reproach. Note, They who truly desire the sincere milk of the world, if it be not brought to them, will go seek out for it. And they who would learn the doctrine of repentance, must go out from the hurry of this world, and be still. 5. It appears by the issue, that of the many that came to John's baptism there were but few that stuck to it; witness the cold reception Christ had in Judea and about Jerusalem. Note, There may be a multitude of forward hearers, were there are but a few true believers. Curiosity, affectation of novelty and variety may bring many to attend upon good preaching, and to be affected with it for a while, who yet are never subject to the power of it, Ezek. xxxiii. 31, 32.

7. The rite or ceremony, by which he admitted disciples, ver. 6. Those that received his doctrine, and submitted to his discipline, were baptized of him in Jordan, thereby professing their repentance, and their belief that the kingdom of the Messiah was at hand. 1. They testified their repentance by confessing their sins; a general confession, it is probable, they made to John, that they were sincere, that they were polluted by sin, and needed cleansing, but to God they made a confession of particular sins, for he is the party offended. The Jews had been taught to justify themselves, but John teacheth them to accuse themselves, and not to rest, as they used to do, in the general confession of sin made for all Israel once a year upon the day of atonement, but to make a particular acknowledgment, every one, of the plague of his own heart. Note, A penitent confession of sin is required in order to peace and pardon; and those only are ready to receive Jesus Christ as their righteousness, who are brought with sorrow and shame to own their guilt, 1 John i. 8. 2. The benefits of the kingdom of heaven now at hand, were thereupon sealed to them by baptism. He washed them with water in token of this, that from all their iniquities God would cleanse them. It was usual with the Jews to baptize those whom they admitted Proselytes to their religion, especially those who were only Proselytes of the gate, and were not circumcised as the Proselytes of righteousness were. Some think it was likewise a custom for persons of eminent religion, that set up for leaders, by baptism to admit pupils and disciples. Christ's question concerning John's baptism, was it from heaven or of men? implied, that there were baptisms of men, who pretended not to a divine mission; with this usage John complied, but his was from heaven, and was distinguished from all others with this character, it was the baptism of repentance, Acts xix. 4. All Israel were baptized unto Moses, 1 Cor. x. 2. The ceremonial law consisted in divers washings or baptisms, Heb. ix. 10. But John's baptism refers to the remedial law, the law of repentance and faith. He is said to baptize them in Jordan, that river which was famous for Israel's passage through it and Naaman's cure, yet, it is probable, John did not baptize in that river at first, but afterwards, when the people that came to his baptism were numerous, he removed to Jordan. By baptism he obliged them to live a holy life, according to the profession they took upon themselves. Note, Confession of sin must always be accompanied with holy resolutions in the strength of divine grace, not to return to it again.

7. ¶ But when he saw many of the Pharisees and Sadducees come to his baptism, he said unto them, O generation of vipers, who hath warned you to flee from the wrath to come? 8. Bring forth therefore fruits meet for repentance: 9. And think not to say within yourselves, We have Abraham to our father: for I say unto you, That God is able of these stones to raise up children unto Abraham. 10. And now also the axe is laid unto the root of the trees: therefore every tree which bringeth not forth good fruit is hewn down, and cast into the fire. 11. I indeed baptize you with water unto repentance; but he that cometh after me is mightier than I, whose shoes I am not worthy to bear: he shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost, and with fire. 12. Whose fan is in his hand, and he will thoroughly purge his floor, and gather his wheat into graves of their persecutors. Thus did the church's King weather the storm, and many a one has the church in like manner weathered. They are dead, to wit, Herod and his son Antipater, who, though there were mutual jealousies between them, yet probably, concurred in seeking the destruction of this new king. If Herod first killed Antipater, and then die himself, the coasts are cleared, and the Lord is known by the judgments which he executeth, when one wicked instrument is the ruin of another. 2. He directs him what to do: He must go and return to the land of Israel; and he did so without delay, not pleading the tolerable good settlement he had in Egypt, or the inconveniences of the journey, especially if, as is supposed, it was in the beginning of winter that Herod died. God's people follow his conduct wherever he leads them, wherever he lodges them. Did we but look upon the world as our Egypt, the place of our bondage and banishment, and heaven only as our Canaan, our home, our rest, we should as readily arise and depart thither, when we are called for, as Joseph did out of Egypt.

3. The further direction he had from God which way to steer, and where to fix in the land of Israel, ver. 22, 23. God could have given him these instructions with the former, but God reveals his mind to his people by degrees, to keep them still waiting on him, and expecting to hear further from him. These orders Joseph received in a dream, probably, as those before, by the ministration of an angel. God could have signified his will to Joseph by the child Jesus, but we do not find that in those removes he either takes notice, or gives notice of any thing that occurred; surely it was because in all things it behoved him to be made like his brethren; being a child, he spake as a child, and did as a child, and drew a veil over his infinite knowledge and power; as a child he increased in wisdom.

Now the direction given this holy, royal family, is, 1. That it might not settle in Judea, ver. 22. Joseph might think, that Jesus being born in Bethlehem, must be brought up there; yet is prudently afraid for the young child, because he heard that Archelaus reigns in Herod's stead, not over all the kingdom as his father did, but only over Judea, the other provinces being put into other hands. See what a succession of enemies there is to fight against Christ and his church! If one drop off, another presently appears to keep up the old enmity. But for this reason Joseph must not take the young child into Judea. Note, God will not thrust his children into the mouth of danger, but when it is for his own glory and their trial; for precious in the sight of the Lord is the life and death of his saints, precious is their blood to him.

2. That it must settle in Galilee, ver. 22. There Philip now ruled, who was a mild quiet man. Note, The providence of God commonly so orders it, that his people shall not want a quiet retreat from the storm and from the tempest; when one climate becomes hot and scorching, another shall be kept more cool and temperate. Galilee lay far north, Samaria lay between it and Judea, thither they were sent to Nazareth, a city upon a hill, in the centre of the lot of Zebulun; there the mother of our Lord lived, when she conceived that holy thing, and probably, Joseph lived there too, Luke i. 26, 27. Thither they were sent, for there they were well known, and were among their relations; the most proper place for them to be in. There they continued, and from thence our Saviour was called Jesus of Nazareth, which was to the Jews a stumbling-block, for can any good thing come out of Nazareth?

In this is said to be fulfilled what was spoken by the prophets; he shall be called a Nazarene; which may be looked upon, 1. As a name of honour and dignity, though primarily it signifies no more but a man of Nazareth, yet there is an allusion or mystery in it, speaking Christ to be, 1. The man, the branch spoken of, Isa. xi. 1. Where the word is Netzar, which signifies either a branch, or the city of Nazareth; it being denominated from that city, he is declared to be that branch. 2. It speaks him to be the great Nazarite, of whom the legal Nazarites were a type and figure, especially Samson, Judges xiii. 5. and Joseph, who is called a Nazarite among his brethren, Gen. xli. 26. And to whom that which was prescribed concerning the Nazarites has reference, Numb. vi. 2, &c. not that Christ was strictly a Nazarite, for he drank wine and touched dead bodies; but he was eminently so both as he was singularly holy, and as he was by a solemn designation and dedication set apart to the honour of God in the work of our redemption, as Samson was to save Israel: And it is a name we have all reason to rejoice in, and to know him by.

Or, 2. As a name of reproach and contempt. To be called a Nazarene, was to be called a despicable man, a man from whom no good was to be expected, and to whom no respect was to be paid. The devil first fastened this name upon Christ, to render him mean, and prejudice people against him, and it stuck as a nick-name to him and his followers. Now this was not particularly foretold by any one prophet, but in general it was spoken by the prophets, that he should be despised and rejected of men, Isa. liii. 2, 3. a worm and no man. Psal. xxii. 6, 7. that he should be an alien to his brethren, Psal. lxxix. 9, 10. Let no name of reproach for religion's sake seem hard to us, when our Master was himself called a Nazarene.

C H A P. III.

At the story of this chapter, concerning the baptism of John, begins the gospel, Mark i. 1. what went before is but preface or introduction: this is the beginning of the gospel of Jesus Christ. And Peter observes the same date, Acts i. 22. beginning from the baptism of John, for then Christ began first to appear in him, and then to appear to him, and by him to the world. Here is, 1. The glorious rising of the morning-star, John the Baptist, ver. 1. (1.) The doctrine he preached, ver. 2. (2.) The fulfilling of the scripture in him, ver. 3. (3.) His manner of life, ver. 4. (4.) The resort of multitudes to him, and their submission to his baptism, ver. 5, 6. (5.) 1. IN those days came John the Baptist, preaching in the wilderness of Judea. 2. And saying, Repent ye, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand. 3. For this is he that was spoken of by the prophet Esaias, saying, The voice of one crying in the wilderness, Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make his paths straight. 4. And the same John had his raiment of camel's hair, and a leathern girdle about his loins; and his meat was locusts and wild honey. 5. Then went out to him

Jerusalem, and all Judea, and all the region round about Jordan, 6. And were baptized of him in Jordan, confessing their sins.

We have here an account of the preaching and baptism of John, which was the dawning of the gospel-day. Observe,

1. The time when he appeared: In those days, ver. 1. or after those days; long after what was recorded in the foregoing chapter, which left the child Jesus in his infancy. In those days, i. e. in the time appointed of the Father for the beginning of the gospel, when the fulness of time was come, which was often thus spoken of in the Old Testament, in those days. Now the last of Daniel's weeks began, or rather in the latter half of the last week, when the Messiah was to confirm the covenant with many, Dan. ix. 27. Christ's appearances are all in their season. Glorious things were spoken both of John and Jesus, at and before their births, which would have given occasion to expect some extraordinary appearances of a divine presence and power with them when they were very young; but it is quite otherwise. Except Christ's disputing with the doctors at twelve years old, nothing appears remarkable concerning either of them, till they were about thirty years old. Nothing is recorded in their childhood and youth, but the greatest part of their life is tempus æternitatis, it is wrapt up in darkness and obscurity: these children differ little in outward appearance from other children, as the heir while he is under age differs nothing from a servant, though he be lord of all. And this was to shew, 1. That even then when God is acting as the God of Israel, the Saviour, yet verily he is a God that hideth himself, Isa. xlv. 15. The Lord is in this place, and I knew it not, Gen. xviii. 16. Our beloved stands behind the wall long, before he looks forth at the windows, Cant. ii. 9. 2. That our faith must principally have an eye to Christ in his office and undertaking, for there is the display of his power; but in his person is the hiding of his power. All this while Christ was a God-man, yet we are not told what he said or did, till he appeared as a prophet, and then hear ye him. 3. That young men, though well qualified, should not be forward to put forth themselves in public service, but be humble, and modest, and self-diffident, swift to hear and slow to speak.

Matthew saith nothing of the conception and birth of John the Baptist, which is largely related by St. Luke, but finds him at full age, as if dropt from the clouds to preach in the wilderness. For above three hundred years the church had been without prophets; those lights had been long put out, that he might be the more desired, who was to be the great prophet. After Malachi there was no prophet, nor any pretender to prophecy, till John the Baptist, to whom therefore the prophet Malachi points more directly, than any of the Old Testament prophets had done, Mal. iii. 1. I send my messenger.

2. The place where he appeared first: In the wilderness of Judea. It was not an uninhabited desert, but a part of the country not so thick peopled, nor so much inclosed into fields and vineyards, as other parts were; it was such a wilderness as had six cities and their villages in it, which are named, Josh. xv. 61, 62. In these cities and villages John preached, for thereabouts he had hitherto lived, being born hard by in Hebron; the scenes of his action began there, where he had long spent his time in contemplation, and even when he shewed himself to Israel, he shewed how well he loved retirement, as far as would consist with his business. The word of the Lord found John here in a wilderness. Note, No place is so remote as to shut us out from the visits of divine grace; nay, commonly the sweetest intercourse the saints have with heaven is, when they are withdrawn furthest from the noise of this world. It was in this wilderness of Judah that David penned the 63d Psalm, which spake so much of the sweet communion he then had with God, Hos. ii. 14. In a wilderness the law was given, and as the Old Testament, so the New Testament Israel was first found in a desert land, and there God led him about and instructed him, Deut. xxxii. 10. John Baptist was a priest of the order of Aaron, yet we find him preaching in a wilderness, and never officiating in the temple; but Christ, who was not a son of Aaron, yet is often found in the temple, and sitting there as one having authority; so it was foretold, Mal. iii. 1. The Lord whom ye seek shall suddenly come to his temple, not the messenger that was to prepare his way. This intimated that the priesthood of Christ was to thrust out that of Aaron and drive it into a wilderness.

The beginning of the gospel in a wilderness, speaks comfort to the deserts of the Gentile world. Now must the prophecies be fulfilled, I will plant in the wilderness the cedar, Isa. xli. 19, 20. The wilderness shall be a fruitful field, Isa. xxxii. 15. And the desert shall rejoice, Isa. xxxv. 1, 2. which the Septuagint read, the deserts of Jordan, the very wilderness in which John preached. In the Romish church there are those who call themselves hermits, and pretend to follow John, but when they say of Christ, behold, he is in the desert, go not forth, Matt. xxiv. 26. There was a seducer that led his followers into the wilderness. Acts xxi. 38.

3. His preaching. This he made his business: He came not fighting, nor disputing, but preaching, ver. 1. for by the foolishness of preaching Christ's kingdom must be set up.

1. The doctrine he preached was that of repentance, ver. 2. Repent ye. He preached this in Judea among those that were called Jews, and made a profession of religion; for even they need repentance. He preached it not in Jerusalem, but in the wilderness of Judea among the plain country people: for even those who think themselves most out of the way of temptation, and furthest from the vanities and vices of the town, yet cannot wash their hands in innocency, but must do it in repentance. John Baptist's business was to call men to repent of their sins; μετανοεῖτε, bethink yourselves, admit a second thought to correct the errors of the first, an after-thought: consider your ways, change your minds; you have thought amiss, think again, and think aright. Note, True penitents have other thoughts of God and Christ, and sin and holiness, and this world and the other, than they have had, and stand otherwise affected towards them. The change of the mind produceth a change of the way. Those who are truly sorry for what they have done amiss, will be careful to do so no more. This repentance is a necessary duty in obedience to the command of God, Acts xvii. 30. and a necessary preparative and qualification for the comforts of the gospel of Christ. If the heart of man continued upright and unstained, divine consolations might have been received without this painful operation preceding, but being sinful, it must be first pained before it can be laid at ease; must labour before it can be at rest: The sore must be searched, or it cannot be cured. I wound, and I heal.

2. The argument he used to enforce this call was, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand. The prophets of the Old Testament called people to repent, for the obtaining and securing of temporal national mercies, and for the preventing and removing of temporal national judgments: But now, though the duty pressed is the same, the reason is new and purely evangelical. Men are now considered in their personal capacity, and not so much as then in a social and political one. Now repent, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand, i. e. the gospel dispensation of the covenant of grace, the

the opening of the kingdom of heaven to all believers by the death and resurrection of Jesus Christ. It is a kingdom which Christ is the sovereign of, and we must be the willing loyal subjects of. It is a kingdom of heaven, not of this world, a spiritual kingdom: its original from heaven, its tendency to heaven. John preached this at hand, then it was at the door; to us it is come, by the pouring out of the Spirit, and the full exhibiting of the riches of gospel grace. Now, 1. This is a great inducement to us to repent: Nothing like the consideration of divine grace to break the heart, both for sin and from sin. That is evangelical repentance that flows from a sight of Christ, from a sense of his love, and the hopes of pardon and forgiveness through him. Kindness is conquering, abused kindness humbling and melting. What a wretch was I to sin against such grace! against the law and love of such a kingdom! 2. It is a great encouragement to us to repent; repent, for your sins shall be pardoned upon your repentance. Return to God in a way of duty, and he will, through Christ, return to you in a way of mercy. The proclamation of pardon discovers and fetcheth in the malefactor that before fled and absconded. Thus are we drawn to it with the cords of a man and the bands of love.

4. The prophecy that was fulfilled in him, ver. 3. This is he that was spoken of in the beginning of that part of the prophecy of Esaias, which is mostly evangelical, and which points at gospel times and gospel grace; see Isa. xl. 3, 4. John is here spoken of,

1. As the voice of one crying in the wilderness. John owned it himself, John i. 23. I am the voice, and that is all; God is the speaker, who maketh known his mind by John, as a man doth by his voice. The word of God must be received as such, 1 Thess. ii. 13. what also is Paul, and what is Apollos, but the voice. John is called the voice, φωνὴ βοῶντος, the voice of one crying aloud, which is startling and awakening; Christ is called the Word, which being distinct and articulate, is more instructive: John as the voice roused men, and then Christ as the Word taught them; as we find, Rev. xiv. 2. The voice of many waters, and of a great thunder, made way for the melodious voice of harpers, and the new song, ver. 3. Some observe, that as Samson's mother must drink no strong drink, yet he was designed to be a strong man, so John Baptist's father was struck dumb, and yet he was designed to be the voice of one crying. When the crier's voice is begotten of a dumb father, it shews the excellency of the power to be of God, and not of man.

2. As one whose business it was to prepare the way of the Lord, and to make his paths straight; so it was said of him before he was born, that he should make ready a people prepared for the Lord, Luke i. 17. as Christ's harbinger and forerunner, and such a one as intimated the nature of Christ's kingdom, for he came not in the gaudy dress of a herald at arms, but the homely one of a hermit. Officers are sent before great men to clear the way, so John prepares the way of the Lord. 1. He himself did so among the men of that generation. In the Jewish church and nation at that time all was out of course; there was a great decay of piety, the vitals of religion were corrupted and eaten out by the traditions and injunctions of the elders. The Scribes and Pharisees, that are the greatest hypocrites in the world, had the key of knowledge, and the key of government at their girdle. The people were generally extreme proud of their privileges, confident of justification by their own righteousness, insensible of sin, and though now under the most humbling providences, being lately made a province of the Roman empire, yet were unhumbled: they were much in the same temper, that they were in Malachi's time, insolent and haughty, and ready to contradict the word of God; now John was sent to level these mountains, to take down their high opinion of themselves, and to shew them their sins, that the doctrine of Christ might be the more acceptable and effectual. 2. His doctrine of repentance and humiliation, is still as necessary as it was then to prepare the way of the Lord. Note, There is a great deal to be done to make way for Christ into a soul, to bow the heart for the reception of the Son of David, 2 Sam. xix. 14. and nothing more needful in order to this, than the discovery of sin, and a conviction of the insufficiency of our own righteousness. That which letteth will let, until it be taken out of the way; prejudices must be removed, high thoughts brought down, and captivated to the obedience of Christ. Gates of brass must be broken, and bars of iron cut asunder, ere the everlasting doors be opened for the King of glory to come in. The way of sin and Satan is a crooked way; to prepare a way for Christ, the paths must be made straight, Heb. xii. 13.

5. The garb in which he appeared, the figure he made, and the manner of life he lived, ver. 4. They that expected the Messiah as a temporal prince, would think his forerunner must come in great pomp and splendor, that his equipage should be very magnificent and gay; but it proves quite contrary, he shall be great in the sight of the Lord, but mean in the eye of the world, and as Christ himself, having no form or comeliness, to intimate betimes, that the glory of Christ's kingdom was to be spiritual, and the subjects of it such as ordinarily were either found by it, or made by it, poor and despised, and had their honours, pleasures, and riches, derived from another world.

1. His dress was plain. This same John had his raiment of camel's hair, and a leathern girdle about his loins; he did not go in long clothing, as the Scribes, or soft clothing, as the courtiers, but in the clothing of a country-husbandman, for he lived in a country-place, and suited his habit to his habitation. Note, It is good for us to accommodate ourselves to the place and condition which God in his providence has put us in. John appeared in this dress, 1. To shew that, like Jacob, he was a plain man, and mortified to this world and the delights and gaieties of it. Behold an Israelite indeed. Those that are lowly in heart, should shew it by a holy negligence and indifference in their attire, and not make the putting on of apparel their adorning, nor value others by their attire. 2. To shew that he was a prophet, for prophets wore rough garments, as mortified men, Zeck. xiii. 4. And especially to shew that he was the Elias promised; for particular notice is taken of Elias, that he was a hairy man (which some think is meant of the hairy garments he wore) and that he was girt with a girdle of leather about his loins, 2 Kings i. 8. John Baptist appears no way inferior to him in mortification; this therefore is that Elias that was to come. 3. To shew that he was a man of resolution; his girdle was not fine, such as were then commonly worn, but it was strong, it was a leathern girdle; and blessed is that servant, whom his Lord, when he comes, finds with his loins girt, Luke xii. 35. 1 Pet. i. 13.

2. His diet was plain, his meat was locusts and wild honey; not as if he never eat any thing else, but these he frequently fed upon, and made many meals of when he retired into solitary places, and continued long there for contemplation; locusts were a sort of flying insect, very good for food, and allowed as clean, Lev. xi. 22. it required little dressing, and was light and easy of digestion, whence it is reckoned among the infirmities of old age, that the grasshopper or locust is then a burthen to the stomach, Eccles. xii. 5. Wild honey was that which Canaan flowed with, 1 Sam. xiv. 26. Either it was gathered immediately as it fell in the dew, or rather as it was found in the hollows of trees and rocks, where bees built that were not as those in hives under the care and inspection of men. This intimates, that he eat sparingly, a little served his turn; a man would be long ere he filled his belly with locusts and wild honey: John Baptist came neither eating nor drinking, Matt. xi. 18. Not with that curiosity, formality, and familiarity that other people do. He was so intently taken up with spiritual things, that he could seldom find time for a set meal. Now, 1. This agreed with the doctrine he preached of repentance, and fruits meet for repentance. Note, Those whose business it is to call others to mourn for sin and to mortify it, ought themselves to live a serious life, a life of self-denial, mortification and contempt of the world. John Baptist thus shewed the deep sense he had of the badness of the time and place he lived in, which made the preaching of repentance needful; every day was a fast-day with him. 2. This agreed with his office as Christ's forerunner; by this practice he shewed that he knew what the kingdom of heaven was, and had experienced the powers of it. Note, Those that are acquainted with divine and spiritual pleasures, cannot but look upon all the delights and ornaments of sense with a holy indifference, they know better things. By giving others this example, he made way for Christ. Note, A conviction of the vanity of the world and every thing in it, is the best preparative for the entertainment of the kingdom of heaven in the heart. Blessed are the poor in spirit.

6. The people that attended upon him, and flocked after him, ver. 5. Then went out to him Jerusalem, and all Judea. Great multitudes came to him from the city, and from all parts of the country; some of all sorts, men and women, young and old, rich and poor Pharisees and Publicans, they went out to him as soon as they heard of his preaching the kingdom of heaven, that they might hear what they had heard so much of. Now, 1. This was a great honour put upon John, that so many attended him, and with so much respect. Note, Many times those have most real honour done them, that least court the shadow of it. Those that live a mortified life, that are humble and self-denying, and dead to the world, command respect, and men have a secret value and reverence for them, more than one would imagine. 2. This gave John a great opportunity of doing good, and was an evidence that God was with him. Now people began to crowd and press into the kingdom of heaven, Luke xvi. 16. and a blessed sight it was to see the dew of the youth dropping from the womb of the gospel-morning, Psaltn ex. 3. to see the net cast where there were so many fish. 3. This was an evidence, that now was a time of great expectation; it was generally thought that the kingdom of God should presently appear, Luke xix. 11. And therefore when John shewed himself to Israel, lived and preached at this rate, so very different from the Scribes and Pharisees, they were ready to say of him, that he was the Christ, Luke iii. 15. And this occasioned such a confluence of people about him. 4. Those that would have the benefit of John's ministry, must go out to him to the wilderness, sharing in his reproach. Note, They who truly desire the sincere milk of the word, it it be not brought to them, will go seek out for it. And they who would learn the doctrine of repentance, must go out from the hurry of this world, and be still. 5. It appears by the issue, that of the many that came to John's baptism there were but few that stuck to it; witness the cold reception Christ had in Judea and about Jerusalem. Note, There may be a multitude of forward hearers, were there are but a few true believers. Curiosity, affectation of novelty and variety may bring many to attend upon good preaching, and to be affected with it for a while, who yet are never subject to the power of it, Ezek. xxxiii. 31, 32.

7. The rite or ceremony by which he admitted disciples, ver. 6. Those that received his doctrine, and submitted to his discipline, were baptized of him in Jordan, thereby professing their repentance, and their belief that the kingdom of the Messiah was at hand. 1. They testified their repentance by confessing their sins; a general confession, it is probable, they made to John, that they were sinners, that they were polluted by sin, and needed cleansing, but to God they made a confession of particular sins, for he is the party offended. The Jews had been taught to justify themselves, but John teacheth them to accuse themselves, and not to rest, as they used to do, in the general confession of sin made for all Israel once a year upon the day of atonement, but to make a particular acknowledgment, every one, of the plague of his own heart. Note, A penitent confession of sin is required in order to peace and pardon; and those only are ready to receive Jesus Christ as their righteousness, who are brought with sorrow and shame to own their guilt, 1 John i. 8. 2. The benefits of the kingdom of heaven now at hand, were thereupon sealed to them by baptism. He washed them with water in token of this, that from all their iniquities God would cleanse them. It was usual with the Jews to baptize those whom they admitted Proselytes to their religion, especially those who were only Proselytes of the gate, and were not circumcised as the Proselytes of righteousness were. Some think it was likewise a custom for persons of eminent religion, that set up for leaders, by baptism to admit pupils and disciples. Christ's question concerning John's baptism, was it from heaven or of men? implied, that there were baptisms of men, who pretended not to a divine mission; with this usage John complied, but his was from heaven, and was distinguished from all others with this character, it was the baptism of repentance, Acts xix. 4. All Israel were baptized unto Moses, 1 Cor. x. 2. The ceremonial law consisted in divers washings or baptisms, Heb. ix. 10. But John's baptism refers to the remedial law, the law of repentance and faith. He is said to baptize them in Jordan, that river which was famous for Israel's passage through it and Naaman's cure, yet, it is probable, John did not baptize in that river at first, but afterwards, when the people that came to his baptism were numerous, he removed to Jordan. By baptism he obliged them to live a holy life, according to the profession they took upon themselves. Note, Confession of sin must always be accompanied with holy resolutions in the strength of divine grace, not to return to it again.

7. ¶ But when he saw many of the Pharisees and Sadducees come to his baptism, he said unto them, O generation of vipers, who hath warned you to flee from the wrath to come? 8. Bring forth therefore fruits meet for repentance: 9. And think not to say within yourselves, We have Abraham to our father: for I say unto you, That God is able of these stones to raise up children unto Abraham. 10. And now also the axe is laid unto the root of the trees: therefore every tree which bringeth not forth good fruit is hewn down, and cast into the fire. 11. I indeed baptize you with water unto repentance; but he that cometh after me is mightier than I, whose shoes I am not worthy to bear: he shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost, and with fire. 12. Whose fan is in his hand, and he will thoroughly purge his floor, and gather his wheat into into the garner; but he will burn up the chaff with unquenchable fire.

The doctrine John preached was that of repentance, in consideration of the kingdom of heaven at hand; now here we have the use of that doctrine. Application is the life of preaching, so it was of John's preaching.

Observe, 1. To whom he applied it; to the Pharisees and Sadducees that came to his baptism, ver. 7. To others he thought it enough to say, Repent, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand; but when he saw these Pharisees and Sadducees come about him, he found it necessary to explain himself and deal more closely. These were two of the three noted sects among the Jews at that time; the third was that of the Essenes, whom we never read of in the gospels, for they affected retirement, and declined busying themselves in public actions. The Pharisees were zealots for the ceremonies, for the power of the church, and the traditions of the elders; the Sadducees ran into the other extreme, and were little better than deists, denying the existence of spirits and a future state. It was strange that they came to John's baptism, but their curiosity brought them to be hearers; and some of them, it is probable, submitted to be baptized, but it is certain the generality of them did not; for Christ saith Luke vii. 29, 30. that when the publicans justified God, and were baptized of John, the Pharisees and lawyers rejected the counsel of God against themselves, being not baptized of him. Note, Many come to ordinances that come not under the power of them. Now to them John here addresseth himself with all faithfulness, and what he said to them he said to the multitude, Luke iii. 7. for they were all concerned in what he said. 2. What the application was, it is plain and home, and directed to their consciences; he speaks as one that came not to preach before them, but to preach to them. Though his education was private, he was not bashful when he appeared in public, nor feared the face of man, for he was full of the Holy Ghost and of power.

1. Here is a word of conviction and awakening. He begins harshly, calls them not rabbi, gives them not the titles much less the applauses they had been used to. 1. The title he gives them is, O generations of vipers: Christ gave them the same titles, Mat. xii. 34—xxiii. 33. They were as vipers, though specious, yet venomous and poisonous, and full of malice and enmity to every thing that was good; they were a viperous brood, the seed and offspring of such as had been of the same spirit, it was bred in the bone with them. They gloried in it, that they were the seed of Abraham, but John shewed them that they were the serpent's seed; compare Gen. iii. 15. of their father the devil, John viii. 44. They were a viperous gang, they were all alike; though enemies to one another, yet confederate in mischief. Note, A wicked generation is a generation of vipers, and they ought to be told so; it becomes the ministers of Christ to be bold in shewing sinners their true character.

2. The alarm he gives them is, who has warned you to flee from the wrath to come? This intimates that they were in danger of the wrath to come and that their case was so near to desperate, and their hearts so hardened in sin, the Pharisees by their shews of religion and the Sadducees by their arguments against religion, that it was next to a miracle to see any hopes of them: What brings you hither? Who thought of seeing you here? What fright have you been put into, that you inquire after the kingdom of heaven? Note, 1. There is a wrath to come, besides present wrath, the vials of which are poured out now; there is future wrath, the stores of which are treasured up for hereafter. 2. It is the great concern of every one of us to flee from that wrath. 3. It is wonderful mercy that we are fairly warned to flee from this wrath; think who has warned us? God has warned us, who delights not in our ruin; he warns by the written word, by ministers, by conscience. 4. These warnings sometimes startle those that seemed to have been very much hardened in their security and good opinion of themselves.

2. Here is a word of exhortation and direction, ver. 8. Bring forth therefore fruits meet for repentance. Therefore, because you are warned to flee from the wrath to come, let the terrors of the Lord persuade you to a holy life. Or therefore, because you profess repentance, and attend upon the doctrine and baptism of repentance, evidence that you are true penitents; repentance is seated in the heart. There it is as a root; but in vain do we pretend to have it there, if we do not bring forth the fruits of it an universal reformation, forsaking all sin, and cleaving to that which is good; these are fruits, ἀγαθὰ τῆς μετάνοιας, worthy of repentance. Note, Those are not worthy the name of penitents, nor their privileges, who say they are sorry for their sins and yet persist in them. They that profess repentance, as all that are baptized do, must be and act as becomes penitents and never do any thing unbecoming a penitent sinner. It becomes penitents to be humble and low in their own eyes, to be thankful for the least mercy, patient under the greatest affliction, to be watchful against all appearances of sin and approaches towards it, to abound in every duty, and to be charitable in judging others.

3. Here is a word of caution, not to trust to their external privileges, so as with them to shift off these calls to repentance, ver. 9. Think not to say within yourselves, We have Abraham to our father. Note, There is a great deal which carnal hearts are apt to say within themselves, to put by the convincing commanding power of the word of God, which ministers should labour to meet with and anticipate; vain thoughts which lodge within those who are called to wash their hearts, Jer. iv. 14. Μὴ δόξετε; Pretend not, presume not to say within yourselves; be not of the opinion, that this will save you, harbour not such a conceit. Please not yourselves with saying this; so some read it; rock not yourselves asleep with this, nor flatter yourselves into a fool's paradise. Note, God takes notice what we say within ourselves, which we dare not speak out, and is acquainted with all the false rests of the soul, and the fallacies with which it deceives itself, but will not discover them, lest it should be undeceived. Many hide the lie that ruins them in their right hand, and roll it under their tongue, because they are ashamed to own it; they keep in the devil's interest, by keeping the devil's counsel. Now John shews them,

1. What their pretence was; We have Abraham to our father; we are not sinners of the Gentiles: it is fit indeed they should be called to repent; but we are Jews, a holy nation, a peculiar people, what is this to us? Note, The word doth us no good when we will not take it as spoken to us, and belonging to us; think not that because you are the seed of Abraham, therefore, 1. You need not repent, you have nothing to repent of; your relation to Abraham, and your interest in the covenant made with him, denominates you so holy, that there is no occasion for you to change your mind or way. 2. That therefore you shall fare well enough, though you do not repent; think not that this will bring you off in the judgment, and secure you from the wrath to come; that God will connive at your impenitency, because you are Abraham's seed. Note, It is vain presumption to think that our having good relations will save us, though we be not good ourselves. What, though we be descended from pious ancestors, have been blessed with a religious education, have our lot cast in families where the fear of God is uppermost, and have good friends that advise us and pray for us, what will all this avail us, if we do not repent and live a life of repentance? We have Abraham to our father, and therefore are intitled to the privileges of the covenant made with him; being his seed, we are sons of the church, the temple of the Lord, Jer. vii. 4. Note, Multitudes, by resting in the honours and advantages of their visible church-membership, take up short of heaven.

2. How foolish and groundless this pretence was; they thought that being the seed of Abraham, they were the only people God had in the world, and therefore if they were cut off he would be at a loss for a church; but John shews them the folly of this conceit, I say unto you (whatever you say within yourselves) that God is able of these stones to raise up children unto Abraham. He was now baptizing in Jordan at Bethabara, John i. 28. The house of passage, where the children of Israel passed over; and there were the twelve stones, one for each tribe, which Joshua set up for a memorial, Josh. iv. 20. It is not unlikely that he pointed to those stones, which God could make to be more than in representation the twelve tribes of Israel: Or perhaps he refers to Isa. li. 12. where Abraham is called the rock out of which they were hewn. That God who raised Isaac out of such a rock, can; if there be occasion, do as much again, for with him nothing is impossible. Some think he pointed to those heathen soldiers that were present, telling the Jews that God would raise up a church for himself among the Gentiles, and entail the blessing of Abraham upon them. Thus when our first parents fell, God could have left them to perish, and out of stones have raised up another Adam and another Eve; Or take it thus; Stones themselves shall be owned as Abraham's seed, rather than such hard, dry, barren sinners as you are. Note, As it is lowering to the confidence of the sinners in Zion, so it is encouraging to the fears of the sons of Zion, that whatever comes of the present generation, God will never want a church in the world; if the Jews fall off the Gentiles shall be grafted in, Matt. xxi. 43. Rom. xi. 12.

4. Here is a word of terror to the careless and secure Pharisees and Sadducees, and other the Jews, that knew not the signs of the times, nor the day of their visitation, ver. 10. Now look about you, the kingdom of God is at hand, and be made sensible.

1. How strict and short your trial is; now the axe is carried before you, now it is laid to the root of the tree, now you are upon your good behaviour, and are to be so but a while; now you are marked for ruin, and cannot avoid it but by a speedy and sincere repentance. Now you must expect that God will make quicker work with you by his judgments than he did formerly, and that they will begin at the house of God: where God allows more means, he allows less time. Behold, I come quickly. Now they were put upon their last trial: now, or never.

2. How sore and severe your doom will be if you do not improve this. It is now declared with the ax at the root, to shew that God is in earnest in the declaration, that every tree though never so high in gifts and honours, though never so green in external professions and performances, if it bring not forth good fruit, the fruits meet for repentance, it is hewn down, disowned as a tree in God's vineyard, unworthy to have a room there, and is cast into the fire of God's wrath. The fittest place for barren trees: what else are they good for? If not fit for fruit they are fit for fuel. Probably, this refers to the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans, which was not as other judgments had been, like the lopping off the branches, or cutting down the body of the tree, leaving the root to bud again, but it would be the total, final, and irrecoverable extirpation of that people, in which all those should perish that continued impenitent. Now God would make a full end. Wrath was coming on them to the utmost.

5. A word of instruction concerning Jesus Christ, in whom all John's preaching centered; Christ's ministers preach not themselves, but him. Here is,

1. The dignity and pre-eminence of Christ above John. See how meanly he speaks of himself, that he might magnify Christ, ver. 11. I indeed baptize you with water, that is the utmost I can do. Note, Sacraments derive not their efficacy from those that administer them, they can only apply the sign, it is Christ's prerogative to give the thing signified, 1 Cor. iii. 6. 2 Kings iv. 31. But he that comes after me is mightier than I. Though John had much power, for he came in the spirit and power of Elias, Christ had more; though John was truly great, great in the sight of the Lord, not a greater born of woman, yet he thinks himself unworthy to be in the meanest place of attendance upon Christ; whose shoes I am not worthy to bear. He sees, 1. How mighty Christ is in comparison with him. Note, It is a great comfort to faithful ministers, to think that Jesus Christ is mightier than they, can do that for them, and that by them, which they cannot do; his strength is perfected in their weakness. 2. How mean he is in comparison with Christ, not worthy to carry his shoes after him. Note, Those whom God puts honour upon, are thereby made very humble and low in their own eyes; willing to be abased, so that Christ may be magnified, to be any thing, to be nothing, so that Christ may be all.

2. The design and intention of Christ's appearing, which they were now speedily to expect; when it was prophesied, that John should be sent as Christ's forerunner, Mal. iii. 1, 2. it immediately follows, The Lord whom ye seek shall suddenly come, and shall sit as a refiner, ver. 3. And after the coming of Elijah, the day comes that shall burn as an oven, Mal. iv. 13. To which the Baptist seems here to refer; Christ will come to make a distinction.

1. By the powerful working of his grace. He shall baptize you, i. e. some of you with the Holy Ghost, and with fire. Note, 1. It is Christ's prerogative to baptize with the Holy Ghost. This he did in the extraordinary gifts of the Spirit conferred upon the apostles, to which Christ himself applies these words of John, Acts i. 5. This he doth in the graces and comforts of the Spirit given to them that ask him, Luke xi. 13. John vii. 38, 39. See Acts xi. 26. 2. Those that are baptized with the Holy Ghost, are baptized as with fire; the seven spirits of God appear as seven lamps of fire, Rev. iv. 5. Is fire enlightening, so the Spirit is a Spirit of illumination? Is it warming? And do not their hearts burn within them? Is it consuming? And doth not the Spirit of judgment as a spirit of burning, consume the dross of their corruptions? Doth fire make all it seizeth like itself? and doth it move upwards? So doth the Spirit make the soul holy like itself, and its tendency is heaven-wards. Christ saith, I am come to send fire, Luke xii. 49.

2. By the final determinations of his judgment, ver. 12. Whose fan is in his hand. His ability to distinguish, as the eternal wisdom of the Father, who sees all by a true light, and his authority to distinguish, as the person to whom all judgment is committed, is the fan that is in his hand, Jer. xv. 7. Now he sits as a refiner. Observe here, 1. That the visible church is Christ's floor; O my threshing, and the corn of my floor, Isa. xxi. 10. The temple, a type of the church, was built upon a threshing-floor. 2. In this floor there is a mixture of wheat and chaff; true believers are as wheat; substantial, useful and valuable: hypocrites are as chaff, light and empty, useless and worthless, and carried about with every wind; these are now mixed good and bad, under the same external profession, and in the same visible communion. 3. There is a day coming when the floor shall be purged, purged, and the wheat and chaff shall be separated. Something of this kind is often done in this world, when God calls his people out of Babylon, Rev. xviii. 4. But it is the day of the last judgment that will be the great winnowing, distinguishing day, which will infallibly determine concerning doctrines and works, 1. Cor. iii. 13. and concerning persons, Mat. xxv. 32, 33. when saints and sinners shall be parted for ever. 4. Heaven is the garner, into which Jesus Christ will shortly gather all his wheat, and not a grain of it shall be lost, he will gather them as the ripe fruits were gathered in. Death's scythe is made use of to gather them to their people. In heaven the saints are brought together, and no longer scattered; they are safe, and no longer exposed; separated from corrupt neighbours without, and corrupt affections within, and there is no chaff among them. They are not only gathered into the barn, Mat. xiii. 30. but into the garner, where they are thoroughly purified. 5. Hell is the unquenchable fire, which will burn up the chaff, which will certainly be the portion and punishment, and everlasting destruction of hypocrites and unbelievers. So that here is life and death, good and evil set before us; according as we now are in the field, we shall be then in the floor.

13. Then cometh Jesus from Galilee to Jordan unto John to be baptized of him. 14. But John forbade him, saying, I have need to be baptized of thee, and comest thou to me? 15. And Jesus answering, said unto him, Suffer it to be so now: for thus it becometh us to fulfill all righteousness. Then he suffered him. 16. And Jesus, when he was baptized, went up straight-way out of the water: and lo, the heavens were opened unto him, and he saw the Spirit of God descending like a dove, and lighting upon him. 17. And lo, a voice from heaven, saying, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased.

Our Lord Jesus, from his childhood till now, when he was almost thirty years of age, had lain hid in Galilee buried alive; but now after a long and dark night, behold the sun of righteousness rises in glory. The fulness of time was come that Christ should enter upon his prophetic office, and he chooseth to do it not at Jerusalem, though it is probable he went thither at the three yearly feasts as others did, but there where John was baptizing; for to him resorted those that waited for the consolation of Israel, to whom alone he would be welcome. John the Baptist was six months elder than our Saviour, and it is supposed he began to preach and baptize about six months before Christ appeared; so long he was employed in preparing his way, in the region round about Jordan; and more was done towards it in these six months, than had been done of some ages before. Christ's coming from Galilee to Jordan to be baptized, teacheth us not to stick at pains and travel, that we may have an opportunity of drawing nigh to God in an ordinance; we should be willing to go far, rather than come short of communion with God: Those that will find, must seek.

Now in this story of Christ's baptism we may observe,

1. How hardly John was persuaded to admit of it. ver. 14, 15. It was an instance of Christ's great humility, that he would offer himself to be baptized of John; that he, who knew no sin, would submit to the baptism of repentance. Note, As soon as ever Christ began to preach, he preached humility, preached it by his example, preached it to all, especially to young ministers. Christ was designed for the highest honours, yet in his first step he thus abaseth himself. Note, Those that would rise high must begin low; Before honour is humility. It was a great piece of respect done to John for Christ thus to come to him; and it was a return for the service he did him, in giving notice of his approach. Note, Those that honour God, he will honour. Now here we have,

(1.) The objection that John made against baptizing Jesus, ver. 14. John forbade him, as Peter did, when Christ went about to wash his feet, John xiii. 6, 8. Note, Christ's gracious condescensions are so surprising, as to appear at first incredible to the strongest believers; so deep and mysterious, that even those who know his mind well, cannot soon find out the meaning of them; but, by reason of darkness, start objections against the will of Christ. John's modesty thinks this an honour too great for him to receive, and he expresseth himself to Christ, just as his mother had done to Christ's mother, Luke i. 43. Whence is this to me, that the mother of my Lord should come to me; John had now won a great name, and was universally respected, yet see how humble he is still! Note, God has further honours in reserve for those whose spirits continue low when their reputation riseth.

1. John thinks it necessary that he should be baptized of Christ: I have need to be baptized of thee with the baptism of the Holy Ghost, as of fire, for that was Christ's baptism, ver. 11. 1. Though John was filled with the Holy Ghost from the womb, Luke i. 15. yet he acknowledges he had need to be baptized with that baptism. Note, Those that have much of the Spirit of God, yet, while they are here in this imperfect state, see they have need of more, and need to apply themselves to Christ for more. 2. John has need to be baptized, though he was the greatest that ever was born of woman; yet being born of woman, he is polluted, as others of Adam's seed are, and owns he has need of cleansing. Note, The purest souls are most sensible of their own remaining impurity, and seek most earnestly for spiritual washing. 3. He has need to be baptized of Christ, who can do that for us which no one else can, and which must be done for us or we are undone. Note, The best and holiest of men have need of Christ, and the better they are, the more they see of that need. 4. This was said before the multitude, who had a great veneration for John, and were ready to embrace him for the Messiah; yet he publicly owns he had need to be baptized of Christ. Note, It is no disparagement to the greatest of men to confess, that they are undone without Christ and his grace. 5. John was Christ's forerunner, and yet owns he had need to be baptized of him. Note, Even those that were before Christ in time, yet depended on him, received from him, and had an eye to him. 6. While John was dealing with others about their souls, observe how feelingly he speaks of the case of his own soul, I have need to be baptized of thee. Note, Ministers, who preach to others and baptize others, are concerned to look to it that they preach to themselves, and be themselves baptized with the Holy Ghost; take heed to thyself first, save thyself, 1. Tim. iv. 16.

2. He therefore thinks it very preposterous and absurd that Christ should be baptized by him: Comest thou to me? Doth the holy Jesus, that is separated from sinners, come to be baptized by a sinner, as a sinner, and among sinners; How can this be? Or what account can we give of it? Note, Christ's coming to us may well be wondered at.

(2.) The over-ruling of this objection, ver. 15. Jesus said, Suffer it to be so now. Christ accepted his humility, but not his refusal; he will have the thing done, and it is fit Christ should take his own method, though we do not understand it, nor can give a reason for it. See, that John had need to be baptized of him, yet he will now be baptized of John, Ἀγὼς ἄγρι, let it be yet so; suffer it to be so now. Note, Every thing is beautiful in its season. But why now? why yet? 1. Christ is now in a state of humiliation, he has emptied himself, and made himself of no reputation: He is not only found in fashion as a man, but is made in the likeness of sinful flesh, and therefore now let him be baptized of John; as if he needed to be washed, though he be perfectly pure; and thus he was made sin for us, though he knew no sin. 2. John's baptism is now in reputation, that is it by which God is now doing his work; that is the present dispensation, and therefore Jesus will now be baptized with water, but his baptizing with the Holy Ghost is reserved for hereafter, many days hence, Acts i. 5. John's baptism has now its day, and therefore honour must now be put upon that, and those that attend upon it must be encouraged. Note, Those that are of greatest attainment in gifts and graces, should yet in their place bear their testimony to instituted ordinances by humble and diligent attendance on them, that they may give a good example to others. What we see God owns, and while we see he doth so, we must own. John was now increasing, and therefore it must be thus yet; shortly he will decrease, and then it will be otherwise. 3. It must be so now, because now is the time for Christ's appearing in public, and this will be a fair opportunity for it. See John i. 31, 32, 33, 34. Thus he must be made manifest to Israel, and be signalized by wonders from heaven, in that act of his own which was most condescending and self-abasing.

1. How Christ insists upon it; it must be so now: He doth not deny but

2. The reason he gives for it: Thus it becomes us to fulfil all righteousness. Note, 1. There was a becomingness in every thing that Christ did for us, it was all graceful, Isa. ii. 10.—vii. 26. and we must study to do not only that which behoves us, but that which becomes us; not only that which is indispensably necessary, but that which is lovely, and of good report. 2. Our Lord Jesus looked upon it as a thing well becoming him to fulfil all righteousness, i. e. (as Dr. Whitby explains it) to own every divine institution, and to shew his readiness to comply with all God's righteous precepts: Thus it becomes him to justify God, and approve his wisdom, in sending John to prepare his way by the baptism of repentance. Thus it becomes us to countenance and encourage every thing that is good by pattern as well as precept. Christ often mentioned John and his baptism with honour, which, that he might do the better, he was himself baptized. Thus Jesus began first to do, and then to teach, and his ministers must take the same method. Thus Christ filled up the righteousness of the ceremonial law, which consisted in divers washings; thus he recommended the gospel ordinance of baptism to his church, put honour upon it, and shewed that virtue he designed to put into it. It became Christ to submit to John's washing with water, because it was a divine appointment; but it became him to oppose the Pharisees washing with water, because it was a human invention and imposition; and he justified his disciples in refusing to comply with it.

With the will of Christ, and this reason for it, John was entirely satisfied, and then he suffered him. The same modesty which made him at first decline the honour Christ offered him, now made him do the service Christ enjoined him. Note, No pretence of humility must keep us off from our duty.

2. How solemnly heaven was pleased to grace the baptism of Christ with a special display of glory, ver. 16, 17. Jesus, when he was baptized, went up straightway out of the water. Others that were baptized, stayed to confess their sins, ver. 6. but Christ having no sins to confess, went up immediately out of the water, so we read it, but not right; for it is ἀνέβη ἐκ τοῦ ὕδατος, from the brink of the river, to which he went down to be washed with water, i. e. to have his head, or face washed, (John xiii. 9.) for here is no mention of the putting off, or putting on of his clothes, which circumstance would not have been omitted, if he had been baptized naked. He went up straightway, as one that entered upon his work with the utmost cheerfulness and resolution; he would lose no time: How was he straightened till it was accomplished!

Now, when he was coming up out of the water, and all the company had their eye upon him,

(1.) Lo the heavens were opened unto him, so as to discover something above and beyond the starry firmament, at least to him. This was, 1. To encourage him to go on in his undertaking, with the prospect of the glory and joy that were set before him: Heaven is opened to receive him, when he has finished the work he is now entering upon. 2. To encourage us to receive him and submit to him. Note, In and through Jesus Christ the heavens are opened to the children of men. Sin shut up heaven, put a stop to all friendly intercourse between God and man; but now Christ has opened the kingdom of heaven to all believers: Divine light and love are darted down upon the children of men, and we have boldness to enter into the holiest. We have receipts of mercy from God, we make returns of duty to God, and all by Jesus Christ, who is the ladder that has the foot on earth and the top in heaven, by whom alone it is that we have any comfortable correspondence with God, or any hope of getting to heaven at last. The heavens were opened when Christ was baptized, to teach us, that when we duly attend on God's ordinances, we may expect communion with him, and communications from him.

(2.) He saw the Spirit of God descending like a dove, or as a dove, and coming or lighting upon him. Christ saw it, Mark i. 10. and John saw it, John i. 33. and it is probable all the standers by saw it, for this was intended to be his public inauguration. Observe,

1. The Spirit of God descended, and lighted on him. In the beginning of the old world, the Spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters, Gen. i. 2. hovered as a bird upon the nest: So here, in the beginning of this new world, Christ, as God, needed not to receive the Holy Ghost, but it was foretold that the Spirit of the Lord should rest upon him, Isa. xi. 1.—lxi. 1. and here he did so; for, 1. He was to be a prophet, and prophets always spoke by the Spirit of God, who came upon them; Christ was to execute the prophetic office, not by his divine nature (saith Dr. Whitby) but by the afflatus of the Holy Spirit. 2. He was to be the head of the church, and the Spirit descended upon him, by him to be derived to all believers, in his gifts, graces and comforts. The ointment on the head ran down to the skirts; Christ received gifts for men, that he might give gifts to men.

2. He descended on him like a dove; whether it was a real living dove, or as was usual in visions, the representation or similitude of a dove, is uncertain. If there must be a bodily shape, (Luke iii. 22.) it must not be that of a man, for the being seen in fashion as a man was peculiar to the second person; none therefore more fit than the shape of one of the fowls of heaven; heaven being now opened, and of all fowl none so significant as the dove. 1. The Spirit of Christ is a dove-like spirit; not like a silly dove without heart, Hos. vii. 11. but like an innocent dove without gall. The Spirit descended, not in the shape of an eagle, which is, though a royal bird, yet a bird of prey, but in the shape of a dove, than which no creature more harmless and inoffensive: Such was the Spirit of Christ, he shall not strive, nor cry; such must Christians be, harmless as doves. The dove is remarkable for her eyes; we find that both the eyes of Christ, Cant. v. 12. and the eyes of the church, Cant. i. 15.—iv. 1. are compared to doves' eyes, for they have the same spirit. The dove mourns much, Isa. xxxviii. 14. Christ wept oft, and penitent souls are compared to doves of the valleys. 2. The dove dove was the only fowl that was offered in sacrifice, Lev. i. 14. And Christ by the Spirit, the eternal Spirit, offered himself without spot to God. 3. The tidings of the decrease of Noah's flood were brought by a dove; with an olive-leaf in her mouth; fitly therefore are the glad tidings of peace with God brought by the Spirit as a dove: It speaks God's good-will towards men; that his thoughts towards us are thoughts of good, and not of evil. By the voice of the turtle heard in our land, Cant. ii. 12. the Chaldee paraphrase understand, the voice of the holy Spirit. That God is in Christ reconciling the world unto himself, is a joyful message that comes to us upon the wing, the wings of a dove, Psalm lxxviii. 13.

3. To explain and complete this solemnity, there came a voice from heaven, which we have reason to think was heard by all that were present. The holy Spirit manifested himself in the likeness of a dove, but God the Father by a voice; for when the law was given, they saw no manner of similitude, only they heard a voice, Deut. iv. 12. and so this gospel came, and gospel indeed it is, the best news that ever came from heaven to earth; for it speaks plainly and fully God's favour to Christ, and us, in him.

(1.) See here how God owns our Lord Jesus: This is my beloved Son. Observe, 1. The relation he stood in to him; he is my Son. Jesus Christ is the Son of God by eternal generation, as he was begotten of the Father before all worlds, Col. i. 15. Heb. i. 3. and by supernatural conception; he was therefore called the Son of God, because he was conceived by the power of the Holy Ghost, Luke i. 35. yet this is not all; he is the Son of God by special designation to the work and office of the world's Redeemer. He was sanctified and sealed, and sent upon that errand, brought up with the Father for it, Prov. viii. 30. appointed to it: I will make him my First-born, Psalm lxxxix. 26. 2. The affection the Father had for him; he is my beloved Son; his dear Son, the Son of his love, Col. i. 13. he had lain in his bosom from all eternity, John i. 18. had been always his delight, Prov. viii. 30. but particularly as Mediator, and in undertaking the work of man's salvation, he was his beloved Son. He is mine elect, in whom my soul delighteth: See Isa. xlii. 1. Because he consented to the covenant of redemption, and delighted to do that will of God, therefore the Father loved him, John x. 17.—iii. 35. Behold then, behold and wonder, what manner of love the Father has bestowed upon us, that he should deliver up him that was the Son of his love, to suffer and die for those that were the generation of his wrath; nay, and therefore love him, because he laid down his life for the sheep. Now know we that he loved us, seeing he has not withheld his Son, his only Son, his Isaac whom he loved, but gave him to be a sacrifice for our sin.

(2.) See here how ready he is to own us in him: He is my beloved Son, not only with whom, but in whom I am well pleased; he is pleased with all that are in him, and are united to him by faith. Hitherto God had been displeased with the children of men, but now his anger is turned away, and he hath made us accepted in the beloved, Eph. i. 6. Let all the world take notice, that this is the Peace-maker, the Days-man, that has laid his hand upon us both, and there is no coming to God as a Father, but by him as Mediator, John xiv. 6. In him our spiritual sacrifices are acceptable, for he is the altar that sanctifies every gift, 1 Pet. ii. 5. Out of Christ God is a consuming fire, but in Christ a reconciling Father. This is the sum of the whole gospel; it is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptance, that God has declared by a voice from heaven, that Jesus Christ is his beloved Son, in whom he is well pleased; with which we must by faith cheerfully concur, and say, that he is our beloved Saviour, in whom we are well pleased.

C H A P. IV.

John Baptist said concerning Christ, He must increase, but I must decrease; and so it proved: For after John had baptized Christ and borne his testimony to him, we hear little more of his ministry; he had done what he came to do, and thenceforward there is as much talk of Jesus as ever there had been of John: As the rising sun advanceth, the morning star disappears. Concerning Jesus Christ, we have in this chapter, 1. The temptation he underwent, the triple assault the tempter made upon him, and the repulse he gave to each assault, ver. 1—11. 2. The teaching work he undertook, the places he preached in, ver. 12—16. and the subject he preached on, ver. 17. 3. His calling of disciples, Peter and Andrew, James and John, ver. 18—22. 4. His curing of diseases, ver. 23, 24. And the great resort of people to him, both to be taught and to be healed.

1. THEN was Jesus led up of the Spirit into the wilderness to be tempted of the devil. 2. And when he had fasted forty days and forty nights, he was afterwards an hungered. 3. And when the tempter came to him, he said, If thou be the Son of God, command that these stones be made bread. 4. But he answered and said, it is written, Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God. 5. Then the devil taketh him up into the holy city, and setteth him on a pinnacle of the temple. 6. And saith unto him, If thou be the Son of God, cast thyself down: for it is written, He shall give his angels charge concerning thee: and in their hands they shall bear thee up, lest at any time thou dash thy foot against a stone. 7. Jesus said unto him, It is written again, Thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God. 8. Again, the devil taketh him up into an exceeding high mountain, and sheweth him all the kingdoms of the world, and the glory of them; 9. And saith unto him, All these things will I give thee, if thou wilt fall down and worship me. 10. Then saith Jesus unto him, Get thee hence, Satan: for it is written, Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve. 11. Then the devil leaveth him, and, behold, angels came and ministered unto him.

We have here the story of a famous duel fought hand to hand, between Michael and the dragon, the seed of the woman and the seed of the serpent, nay, the serpent himself, in which the seed of the woman suffers, being tempted, and so has his heel bruised; but the serpent is quite baffled in his temptations, and so has his head broke; and our Lord Jesus comes off a conqueror, and so secures not only comfort, but conquest at last to all his faithful followers. Concerning Christ's temptation, observe, 1. The time when it was: Then; there is an emphasis laid upon that. Immediately after the heavens were opened to him, and the Spirit descended on him, and he was declared to be the Son of God, and the Saviour of the world; the next news we hear of him is, he is tempted; for then he is best able to grapple with the temptation. Note, (1.) Great privileges, and special tokens of divine favour, will not secure us from being tempted. Nay, (2.) After great honours put upon us, we must expect something that is humbling; as Paul had a messenger of Satan sent to buffet him, after he had been in the third heaven. (3.) God useth to prepare his people for temptation before he calls them to it; he gives strength according to the day; and, before a sharp trial gives more than ordinary comfort. (4.) The assurance of our sonship is the best preparative for temptation: If the good Spirit witnesseth to our adoption, that will furnish us with an answer to all the suggestions of the evil spirit, designed either to debauch or disquiet us.

Then, when he was newly come from a solemn ordinance, when he was baptized, then he was tempted. Note, After we have been admitted into communion with God, we must expect to be set upon by Satan: The enriched soul must double its guard: When thou hast eaten and art full, then beware. Then, when he began to shew himself publicly to Israel, then he was tempted, so as he never had been while he lived in privacy. Note, The devil has a particular spite at useful persons that not only are good, but given to do good, especially at their first setting out. It is the advice of the son of Sirach, Ecclesiasticus ii. 1. My son, if thou come to serve the Lord, prepare thyself for temptation. Let young ministers know what to expect, and arm accordingly.

2. The place where it was; in the wilderness; probably, in the great wilderness of Sinai, where Moses and Elijah fasted forty days, for no part of the wilderness of Judea was so abandoned to wild beasts; as this is said to have been, Mark i. 13. When Christ was baptized he did not go to Jerusalem, there to publish the glories that had been put upon him, but retired into a wilderness. After communion with God it is good to be private a while, lest we lose what we have received in the crowd and hurry of worldly business. Christ withdrew into the wilderness, 1. To gain advantage to himself: Retirement gives an opportunity for meditation and communion with God; even those that are called to the most active life must yet have their contemplative hours, and must find time to be alone with God: Those are not fit to speak of the things of God in public to others, that have not first conversed with those things in secret by themselves. When Christ would appear as a teacher come from God, it shall not be said of him he is newly come from travelling, he has been abroad and has seen the world, but he is newly come out of a desert, he has been alone conversing with God and his own heart. 2. To give advantage to the tempter, that he might have a readier access to him than he could have had in company. Note, Though solitude is a friend to a good heart, yet Satan knows how to improve it against us; Woe to him that is alone. Those that under pretence of sanctity and devotion retire into dens and deserts, find they are not out of the reach of their spiritual enemies, and that there they want the benefit of the communion of saints. Christ retired, (1.) That Satan might have leave to do his worst. To make his victory the more illustrious, he gave the enemy sun and wind on his side, and yet baffled him. He might give the devil advantage, for the prince of this world had nothing in him, but he hath in us, and therefore we must pray not to be led into temptation, and must keep out of harm's way. (2.) That he might have opportunity to do his best himself, that he might be exalted in his own strength; for so it was written, I have trod the wine-press alone, and of the people there was none with me. Christ entered the lists without a second.

3. The preparatives for it, which were two.

(1.) He was directed to the combat; he did not wilfully thrust himself upon it, but he was led up of the Spirit, to be tempted of the devil: The Spirit that descended upon him like a dove, made him meek, and yet made him bold. Note, Our care must be not to enter into temptation; but if God by his providence order us into circumstances of temptation for our trial, we must not think it strange but double our guard; be strong in the Lord, resist steadfast in the faith, and all shall be well. If we presume upon our own strength and tempt the devil to tempt us, we provoke God to leave us to ourselves; but whithersoever God leads us we may hope he will go along with us, and bring us off more than conquerors.

Christ was led to be tempted of the devil, and of him only: Others are tempted when they are drawn aside of their own lust, and enticed, Jam. i. 14. the devil takes hold of that handle, and ploughs with that heifer; but our Lord Jesus had no corrupt nature, and therefore he was led securely without any fear or trembling, as a champion into the field to be tempted purely by the devil.

Now Christ's temptation is, 1. An instance of his own condescension and humiliation. Temptation are fiery darts, thorns in the flesh, buffetings, siftings, wrestlings, combats; all which note hardship and sufferings, therefore Christ submitted to them because he would humble himself, in all things to be made like unto his brethren: Thus he gave his back to the smiters. 2. It was an occasion of Satan's confusion. There is no conquest without a combat. Christ was tempted that he might overcome the tempter; Satan tempted the first Adam and triumphed over him, but he shall not ever triumph, the second Adam shall overcome him, and lead captivity captive. 3. It is matter of comfort to all the saints. In the temptation of Christ it appears that our enemy is subtle, spiteful, and very daring in his temptations, but it appears withal that he is not invincible: Though he is a strong man armed, yet the captain of our salvation is stronger than he. It is some comfort to us to think that Christ suffered being tempted, for then temptations if they are not yielded to are not sins, they are afflictions only, and such as may be the lot of those with whom God is well pleased. And we have an High-priest that knows by experience what it is to be tempted, and therefore is the more tenderly touched with the feeling of our infirmities in an hour of temptation, Heb. ii. 18.—iv. 15. But it is much more a comfort to think that Christ conquered being tempted, and conquered for us; not only that the enemy we grapple with is a conquered, baffled, disarmed enemy, but that we are interested in Christ's victory over him, and through him are more than conquerors.

(2.) He was dieted for the combat, as wrestlers use to be, who are temperate in all things, 1 Cor. ix. 25. but Christ beyond any other, for he fasted forty days and forty nights, in compliance with the type and example of Moses the great lawgiver, and of Elias the great reformer of the Old Testament. John Baptist came as Elias in those things that were moral, but not in such things as were miraculous, John x. 41. that honour was reserved for Christ. Christ needed not to fast for mortification, he had no corrupt desires to be subdued: yet he fasted, 1. That herein he might humble himself and might seem as one abandoned, whom no man seeketh after. 2. That he might give Satan both occasion and advantage against him, and so make his victory over him the more illustrious. 3. That he might sanctify and recommend fasting to us, when God in his providence calls to it, or when we are reduced to straits and are destitute of daily food, or when it is requisite for the keeping under the body or the quickening of prayer, and that is a good preparative for temptation. If good people are brought low, if they want friends and succours, this may comfort them, that their Master himself was in like manner exercised. A man may want bread, and yet be a favourite a favourite of heaven, and under the conduct of the Spirits. The reference which the Papists make of their Lent-fast to this fasting of Christ forty days, is a piece of foppery and superstition which the law of our land witnesseth against, Stat. 5 Eliz. chap. v. sect. 39, 40. When he had fasted forty days he was never hungry; converse with heaven was instead of meat and drink to him, but he was afterwards an hungered; to shew that he was really and truly man; and he took upon him our natural infirmities, that he might atone for us. Man fell by eating, and that way we often sin, and therefore Christ was an hungered.

4. The temptations themselves. That which Satan drove at in all his temptations, was to bring him to sin against God, and so to render him for ever incapable to be a sacrifice for the sin of others. Now, whatever the colours were, that which he aimed at was to bring him, 1. To despair of his Father's goodness. 2. To presume upon his Father's power. 3. To alienate his Father's honour by giving it to Satan. In the two former, that which he tempted him to seemed innocent, and therein appeared the subtilty of the tempter; in the last, that which he tempted him with seemed desirable: The two former are sly temptations, which there was need of great wisdom to discern; the last was a strong temptation, which there was need of great resolution to resist; yet he was baffled in them all.

(1.) He tempted him to despair of his Father's goodness, and to distrust his Father's care concerning him.

1. See how the temptation was managed, ver. 3. The tempter came to him. Note, The devil is the tempter, and therefore he is Satan, an adversary; for those are our worst enemies that entice us to sin, and are Satan's agents, are doing his work and carrying on his designs: He is called emphatically the tempter, because he was so to our first parents and still is so, and all other tempters are set on work by him. The tempter came to Christ in a visible appearance, not terrible and affrighting, as afterwards in his agony in the garden; no, if ever the devil transformed himself into an angel of light, he did it now, and pretended to be a good genius, a guardian angel.

Observe the subtilty of the tempter in tacking this first temptation to what went before to make it the stronger. (1.) Christ began to be hungry, and therefore the motion seemed very proper to turn stones into bread for his necessary support. Note, It is one of the wiles of Satan to take advantage of our outward condition, in that to plant the battery of his temptations. He is an adversary no less watchful than spiteful; and the more ingenious he is to take advantage against us, the more industrious we must be to give him none. When he began to be hungry, and that in a wilderness, where there was nothing to be had, then the devil assaulted him. Note, Want and poverty is a great temptation to discontent and unbelief, and the use of unlawful means for our relief, under pretence that necessity has no law, and it is excused with this, that hunger will break through stone walls; which yet is no excuse, for the law of God ought to be stronger to us than stone walls. Agur prays against poverty, not because it is an affliction and reproach, but because it is a temptation, lest I be poor and steal. Those therefore who are reduced to straits have need to double their guard; it is better to starve to death, than live and grow fat by sin.

(2.) Christ was lately declared to be the son of God, and here the devil tempts him to doubt of that; If thou be the son of God. Had not the devil known that the Son of God was to come into the world he would not have said this; and had he not suspected that this was he, he would not have said it to him; nor durst he have said it, if Christ had not now drawn a veil over his glory, and if the devil had not now put on an impudent face.

1. Thou hast now an occasion to question whether thou be the Son of God or no; for can it be that the Son of God, who is heir of all things, should be reduced to such straits? If God were thy Father he would not see thee starve, for all the beasts of the forests are his, Psalm 1. 10—12. It is true, there was a voice from heaven, This is my beloved Son, but sure it was delusion, and thou wast imposed upon by it; for either God is not thy Father, or he is a very unkind one. Note, 1. The great thing Satan aims at in tempting good people is, to overthrow their relation to God as a Father, and so to cut off their dependence on him, their duty to him, and their communion with him. The good Spirit as the comforter of the brethren, witnesseth that they are the children of God; the evil spirit as the accuser of the brethren, doth all he can to shake that testimony. 2. That outward afflictions, wants and burthens, are the great arguments Satan useth to make the people of God question their sonship; as if afflictions could not consist with, when really they proceed from, God's fatherly love. Those know how to answer this temptation who can say with holy Job, though he slay me, though he starve me, yet will I trust in him, and love him as a friend, even when he seems to come forth against me as an enemy. 3. The devil aims to shake our faith in the word of God, and bring us to question the truth of that. Thus he began with our first parents; yea, hath God said so and so? sure he has not: So here hath God said that thou art his beloved Son? sure he did not say so; or if he did, it is not true. We then give place to the devil, when we question the truth of any word that God hath said; for his business as the father of lies, is to oppose the true saying of God. 4. The devil carries on his designs very much by possessing people with hard thoughts of God, as if he were unkind, or unfaithful, and had forsaken or forgotten those who have ventured their all with him. He endeavoured to beget in our first parents a notion that God forbid them the tree of knowledge because he grudged them the benefit of it; and so here he insinuates to our Saviour that his Father had cast him off, and left him to shift for himself. But see how unreasonable this suggestion was, and how easily answered: If Christ seemed to be a mere man now because he was hungry, why was he not confessed to be more than a man, even the Son of God, when for forty days he fasted, and was not an hungry?

2. Thou hast now an opportunity to shew that thou art the Son of God. If thou hast the Son God, prove it by this, command that these stones (a heap of which probably lay now before him) be made bread, ver. 8. John Baptist said but the other day, that God can out of stones raise up children unto Abraham, a divine power therefore can no doubt out of stones make bread for those children? if therefore thou hast that power, exert it now in a time of need for thyself. He doth not say, Pray to thy Father that he would turn them into bread, but command it to be done; thy Father hath forsaken thee, set up for thyself and be not beholden to him. The devil is for nothing that is humbling, but every thing that is assuming; and gains his point, if he can but bring men off from their dependence upon God, and possess them with an opinion of their self-sufficiency.

2. See how this temptation was resisted and overcome.

(1.) Christ refused to comply with it; He would not command these stones to be made bread: not because he could not; his power that soon after this turned water into wine, could have turned stones into bread; but he would not: And why would he not? At first view the thing appears justifiable enough, and the truth is, the more plausible a temptation is, and the greater appearance there is of good in it, the more dangerous it is: This matter would bear a dispute; but Christ was soon aware of the snake in the grass, and would not do any thing. 1. That looked like questioning the truth of the voice he heard from heaven, or putting that upon a new trial which was already settled: 2. That looked like distrusting his Father's care of him, or limiting him to one particular way of providing for him: 5. That looked like setting up for himself and being his own carver; or, 4. That looked like gratifying Satan, by doing a thing at his motion. Some would have said to give the devil his due, this was good counsel; but for those that wait upon God to consult him, is more than his due; it is like enquiring of the God of Ekron, when there is a God in Israel.

(2.) He was ready to reply to it, ver. 4. He answered and said, It is written. This is observable that Christ answered and baffled all the temptations of Satan, with, It is written. He is himself the eternal Word, and could have produced the mind of God without having recourse to the writings of Moses, but he put honour upon the scripture, and to set us an example he appealed to what was written in the law; and he saith this to Satan, taking it for granted that he knew well enough what was written. It is possible, that those who are the devil's children may yet know very well what is written in God's book; the devils believe and tremble. This method we must take, when at any time we are tempted to sin, resist and repel the temptation, with It is written. The word of God is the sword of the Spirit, the only offensive weapon in all the Christian armoury, Eph. vi. 17. And we may say of it, as David of Goliath's sword, None like that in our spiritual conflicts.

This answer, as all the rest, is taken out of the book of Deuteronomy, which signifies the second law, and in which there is very little ceremonial; the Levitical sacrifices and purifications could not drive away Satan, though of divine institution, much less holy water and the sign of the cross, which are of human invention; but moral precepts and evangelical promises mixed with faith, these are mighty through God for the vanquishing of Satan. This is here quoted from Deut. viii. 3, where the reason given why God fed the Israelites with manna is, because he would teach them that man shall not live by bread alone: This Christ applies to his own case; Israel was God's son whom he called out of Egypt, Hos. xi. 1, so was Christ, Matt. ii. 15. Israel was then in a wilderness, Christ was so now, perhaps the same wilderness. Now; 1. The devil would have him question his sonship, because he was in straits; no, saith he, Israel was God's son, and a son he was very tender of; and whose manners he bore, Acts. xiii. 18, and yet he brought them into straits; and it follows there, Deut. iv. 5. As a man chasteneth his son, so the Lord thy God chasteneth thee. Christ being a son, thus learns obedience. 2. The devil would have him to distrust his Father's love and care; no, saith he, that would be to do as Israel did, who when they were in want, said, Is the Lord among us? and, Can he furnish a table in the wilderness? Can he give bread? 3. The devil would have him as soon as he began to be hungry presently to look out for supply, whereas God, for wise and holy ends, suffered Israel to hunger before he fed them; to humble them and prove them. God will have children when they want, not only to wait on him, but to wait for him. 4. The devil would have him to supply himself with bread; no, saith Christ, What needs that? It is a point long since settled and incontestably proved, that man may live without bread, as Israel in the wilderness lived forty years upon manna: It is true, God in his providence ordinarily maintains men by bread out of the earth, Job xxviii. 5, but he can, if he pleaseth, make use of other means to keep men alive; any word proceeding out of the word of God, i. e. anything that God shall order and appoint for that end, will be as good a livelihood for man as bread, and will maintain him as well. As we may have bread and yet not be nourished if God deny his blessing, Hag. i. 6—9. Alicah vi. 14, for though bread is the staff of life, it is God's blessing that is the staff of bread; so we may want bread, and yet be nourished some other way. God sustained Moses and Elias without bread, and Christ himself just now for forty days; he sustained Israel with bread from heaven, angels food; Elijah with bread sent miraculously by ravens, and another time with the widow's meal miraculously multiplied; therefore Christ needs not turn stones into bread, but trust God to keep him alive some other way now he is hungry, as he had done forty days before he hungered. Note, As in our greatest abundance we must not think to live without God, so in our greatest straits we must learn to live upon God; and when the fig-tree doth not blossom and the field yields no meat, when all ordinary means of succour and support are cut off, yet then we must rejoice in the Lord; then we must not think to command what we will, though contrary to his command, but must humbly pray for what he thinks fit to give us, and be thankful for the bread of our allowance, though it be a short allowance. Let us learn of Christ here, to be at God's finding, rather than at our own; and not to take any irregular courses for our supply, when our wants are never so pressing, Psalm xxxvii. 3. Jehovah-jireh, some way or other the Lord will provide. It is better to live poorly upon the fruits of God's goodness, than live plentifully upon the products of our own sin.

(2.) He tempted him to presume upon his Father's power and protection. See what a restless unwearied adversary the devil is! if he fail in one assault, he tries another.

Now in this second attempt we may observe,

1. What the temptation was, and how it was managed. In general, finding Christ so confident of his Father's care of him, in point of nourishment, he endeavours to draw him to presume upon that care in point of safety. Note, We are in danger of missing our way both on the right hand and on the left, and therefore must take heed, lest when we avoid one extreme we be brought by the artifices of Satan to run into another; lest by overcoming our prodigality we fall into covetousness. Nor are any extremes more dangerous, than those of despair and presumption, especially in the affairs of our souls. Some that have obtained a persuasion that Christ is able and willing to save them from their sins, are then tempted to presume that he will save them in their sins. Thus when people begin to be zealous in religion, Satan hurries them into bigotry and intemperate heats.

Now in this temptation we may observe,

1. How he made way for it: He took Christ, not by force and against his will, but moved him to go, and went along with him to Jerusalem. Whether Christ went upon the ground, and so went up the stairs to the top of the temple, or whether he went in the air, is uncertain; but so it was, that he was set upon a pinnacle, or spire; upon the jane, so some; upon the battlements, so others; upon the wing, so the word is, of the temple. Now observe, 1. How submissive Christ was in suffering himself to be hurried thus, that he might let Satan do his worst, and yet conquer him. The patience of Christ here, as afterwards in his sufferings and death, is more wonderful than the power of Satan or his instruments; for neither he nor they could have any power against Christ but what was given them from above. How comfortable is it, that Christ who let loose this power of Satan against himself, doth not in like manner let it loose against us, but restrains it, for he knows our frame! 2. How subtle the devil was in the choice of the place for his temptations: Intending to solicit Christ to an ostentation of his own power, and a vain-glorious presumption upon God's providence, he fixes him on a public place in Jerusalem, a populous city, and the joy of the whole earth; in the temple, one of the wonders of the world, continually gazed upon with admiration by some one or other; there he might make himself remarkable, and be taken notice of by every body; and prove himself the Son of God; not as he was urged in the former temptation temptation in the obscurities of a wilderness, but before multitudes, upon the most eminent stage of action.

Observe, 1. That Jerusalem is here called the holy city; for so it was in name and profession, and there was in it a holy seed, that was the substance thereof. Note, There is no city on earth so holy, as to exempt and secure us from the devil and his temptations. The first Adam was tempted in the holy garden, the second in the holy city: Let us not therefore in any place be off our watch. Nay, the holy city is the place, where he doth with the greatest advantage and success tempt men to pride and presumption; but blessed be God, into the Jerusalem above, that holy city, no unclean thing shall enter; there we shall be for ever out of temptation. 2. That he set him upon a pinnacle of the temple, which (as Josephus describes it, Antiq. lib. xv. cap. 14.) was so very high, that it would make a man's head giddy to look down to the bottom. Note, Pinnacles of the temple are places of temptation; I mean, 1. High places are so; they are slippery places; advancement in the world makes a man a fair mark for Satan to shoot his fiery darts at. God casts down that he may raise up, the devil riseth up that he may cast down; therefore those that would take heed of falling, must take heed of climbing. 2. High places in the church are in a special manner dangerous: Those that excel in gifts, are in eminent stations, and have gained a great reputation, have need to keep humble, for Satan will be sure to aim at them, to puff them up with pride, and so they fall into the condemnation of the devil. Those that stand high are concerned to stand fast.

2. How he moved it. If thou be the son of God, now shew thyself to the world, and prove thyself to be so, cast thyself down, and then, 1. Thou wilt be admired as under the special protection of heaven, when they see thee receive no hurt by a fall from such a precipice, they will say as the barbarous people did of Paul, that thou art a God. Tradition saith, that Simon Magus by this very thing attempted to prove himself a God, but his pretensions were disproved, for he fell down and was miserably bruised. Nay, 2. Thou wilt be received, as coming with a special commission from heaven. All Jerusalem will see and acknowledge, not only that thou art more than a man, but that thou art that messenger, that Angel of the covenant that should suddenly come to the temple, Mal. iii. 1. and from thence descend into the streets of the holy city, and thus the work of convincing the Jews will be cut short, and soon done.

Observe, The devil said, cast thyself down: the devil could not cast him down, though a little thing would have done it from the top of a spire. Note, The power of Satan is a limited power, hitherto he shall come, and no further. Yet if the devil had cast him down, he had not gained his point, that had been his suffering only, not his sin. Note, Whatever real mischief is done us, it is of our own doing: the devil can but persuade, he cannot compel; he can but say, cast thyself down, he cannot cast us down: Every man is tempted when he is drawn away of his own lust, and not forced but enticed. Therefore let us not hurt ourselves, and then, blessed be God, no one else can hurt us, Prov. ix. 12.

3. How he backed this motion with a scripture, for it is written, he shall give his angels charge concerning thee. But is Saul also among the prophets? Is Satan so well versed in scripture, as to be able to quote it so readily? It seems he is. Note, It is possible a man may have his head full of scripture notions, and his mouth full of scripture expressions, and yet his heart full of reigning enmity to God and all goodness. The knowledge which the devils have of the scripture, increaseth both their mischievousness and their torment: Never did the devil speak with more vexation to himself, than when he said to Christ, I know thee who thou art. The devil would persuade Christ to throw himself down, in hopes he will be his own murderer, and there would be an end of him and his undertaking, which he looked upon with a jealous eye; and to encourage him to do it, tells him there was no danger, the good angels would protect him, for so was the promise, Psalm xci. 11. He shall give his angels charge over thee. Now in this quotation,

1. There was something right: It is true, there is such a promise to the ministration of the angels for the protection of the saints. The devil knows it by experience, for he finds his attempts against them fruitless, and he frets and rages at it, as he did at the hedge about Job, which he speaks of so sensibly, Job i. 20. He was also right in applying it to Christ, for to him all the promises of the protection of the saints primarily and eminently belong, and to them in and through him: That promise, that not a bone of theirs shall be broken, Psalm xxi. 20, was fulfilled in Christ, John, xix. 36. The angels guard the saints for Christ's sake, Rev. v. 6—11.

2. There was a great deal wrong in it, and perhaps the devil had a particular spite to this promise and perverted it, because it often stood in his way, and baffled his mischievous designs against the saints. See here,

1. How he misquoted it: and that was bad: The promise is, they shall keep thee, but how? In all thy ways; not otherwise, if we go out of our way, out of the way of our duty, we forfeit the promise, and put ourselves out of God's protection. Now this word made against the tempter, and therefore he industriously left it out: If Christ had cast himself down, he had been out of his way, for he had no call so to expose himself. It is good for us upon all occasions to consult the scriptures themselves, and not to take things upon trust, that we may not be imposed upon by those that maim and mangle the word of God; we must do as the noble Bereans, that searched the scriptures daily.

2. How he misapplied it; and that was worse. Scripture is abused when it is pressed to patronize sin, and when men thus wrest it to their own temptation; they do it to their own destruction, 2. Pet. iii. 16. This promise is firm and stands good, but the devil made an ill use of it, when he used it as an encouragement to presume upon the divine care. Note, It is no new thing for the grace of God to be turned into wantonness; and for men to take encouragement in sin from the discoveries of God's good-will to sinners; But shall we continue in sin, that grace may abound; throw ourselves down, that the angels may bear us up? God forbid.

3. How Christ overcame this temptation; he resisted, and overcome it as he did the former, with it is written. The devil's abusing scripture did not prevent Christ from using it, but he presently urgeth, Deut. vi. 16. Thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God. The meaning of this is not, therefore thou must not tempt me, but therefore I must not tempt my Father. In the place whence it is quoted, it is in the plural number, ye shall not tempt; here it is singular, thou shalt not. Note, We are then likely to get good by the word of God, when we hear and receive general promises as speaking to us in particular. Satan said, it is written, Christ saith it is written; not that one scripture contradicts another. God is one, and his word one, and in one mind; but that is a promise, this is a precept, and therefore that is to be explained and applied by this: For scripture is the best interpreter of scripture; and those that prophesy, that expound scripture, must do it according to the proportion of faith, Rom. xii. 6. in consistence with practical godliness.

If Christ should cast himself down, it would be the tempting of God, 1. As it would be requiring a further confirmation of that which was so well confirmed. Christ was abundantly satisfied that God was already his Father, and took care of him, and gave his angels a charge concerning him: and therefore to put it upon a new experiment, would be to tempt him; as the Pharisees tempted Christ, when they had so many signs on earth, they demanded a sign from heaven: This is limiting the holy One of Israel. 2. As it would be requiring a special preservation of him, in doing that which he had no call to. If we expect that because God had promised not to forsake us therefore he should follow us out of the way of our duty; that because he has promised to supply our wants, therefore he should humour us and please our fancies; that because he has promised to keep us, we may wilfully thrust ourselves into danger, and may expect the desired end, without using the appointed means; this is presumption, this is tempting God. And it is an aggravation of the sin, that he is the Lord our God; it is an abuse of the privilege we have in having him for our God; he has thereby encouraged us to trust him, but we are very ungrateful, if therefore we tempt him; it is contrary to our duty to him as our God: This is to affront him whom we ought to honour. Note, We must never promise ourselves any more than God has promised us.

3. He tempted him to the most black and horrid idolatry, with the proffer of the kingdoms of the world, and the glory of them. And here we may observe,

1. How the devil made this push at our Saviour, ver. 8. 9. The worst temptation was reserved for the last. Note, Sometimes the saint's last encounter is with the sons of Anak, and the parting blow is the sorest; therefore whatever temptation we have been assaulted by, still we must prepare for worse; must be armed for all attacks, with the armour righteousness on the right hand and on the left.

In this temptation, we may observe,

1. What he shewed him, all the kingdoms of the world; in order to this he took him to an exceeding high mountain, in hopes of prevailing, as Balak with Balaam, he changeth his ground. The pinnacle of the temple is not high enough, the prince of the power of the air must have him further up into his territories. Some think this high mountain was on the other side Jordan, because there we find Christ next after the temptation, John 1. 28, 29. Perhaps it was mount Pisgah, from whence Moses in communion with God had all the kingdoms of Canaan shewed him. Hither the blessed Jesus was carried for the advantage of a prospect; as if the devil could shew him more of the world than he knew already, who made and governed it. From thence he might discover some of the kingdoms that lay about Judea, though not the glory of them; but there was doubtless a juggle and a delusion of Satan in it; it is likely that which he shewed him was but a landscape, an airy representation in a cloud, such as that great deceiver could easily frame and put together; setting forth in proper and lively colours the glories and splendid appearances of princes, and their robes and crowns, their retinue, equipages, and life-guards; the pomps of thrones and courts, and stately palaces, the sumptuous buildings in cities, the gardens and fields about the country-seats, with the various instances of their wealth, pleasure and gaiety; so as might be most likely to strike the fancy, and excite the admiration and affection; such was this shew, and his taking him up into a high mountain, was but to humour the thing, and to colour the delusion; in which yet the blessed Jesus did not suffer himself to be imposed upon, but saw through the cheat, only permitted Satan to take his own way, that his victory over him might be the more illustrious. Hence observe concerning Satan's temptations, that, 1. They often came in at the eye, that is, blinded to the things it should see, and dazzled by the vanities it should be turned from. The first sin began in the eye, Gen. iii. 6. We therefore need to make a covenant with our eyes, and to pray that God would turn them away from beholding vanity. 2. That temptations commonly take rise from the world and the things of it. The lust of the flesh, and of the eye, with the pride of life, are the topics from which the devil fetcheth most of his arguments. 3. That it is a great cheat, which the devil puts upon poor souls in his temptations. He deceives, and so destroys; he imposes upon men with shadows and false colours; shews the world and the glory of it, and hides from men's eyes that sin and sorrow and death which stains the pride of all this glory; the cares and calamities that attend great possessions, and the thorns which crown themselves are lined with. 4. That the glory of the world is the most charming temptation to the unthinking and unwary, and that by which men are most imposed upon. Laban's sons grudge Jacob all his glory; the pride of life is the most dangerous snare.

2. What he said to him, ver. 9. All these things will I give thee, if thou wilt fall down and worship me. See,

1. How vain the promise was. All these things will I give thee. He seems to take it for granted, that in the former temptations he had in part gained his point, and proved that Christ was not the Son of God, because he had not given him those evidences of it which he demanded; so that here he looks upon him as a meer man: Come, saith he, it seems the God, whose Son thou thinkest thyself to be, deserts thee and starves thee, a sign he is not thy Father, but if thou wilt be ruled by me, I will provide better for thee than so; own me for thy father and ask my blessing, and all this will I give thee. Note, Satan makes an easy prey of men, when he can persuade them to think themselves abandoned of God. The fallacy of this promise lies in that, all this will I give thee. And what was all that, it was but a map, a picture a meer phantasm that had nothing in it real or solid, and this he would give him; a goodly prize! yet such are Satan's proffers. Note, Multitudes lose the sight of that which is by setting their eyes on that which is not. The devil's baits are all a sham, they are shows and shadows with which he deceives them, or rather they deceive themselves. The nations of the earth had been long before promised to the Messiah, if he be the Son of God they belong to him; Satan pretends now to be a good angel, probably one of those that was set over kingdoms, and to have received a commission to deliver possession to him according to promise. Note, We must take heed of receiving even that which God had promised out of the devil's hand; we do so when we precipitate the performance, by catching at it in a sinful way.

3. How vile the condition was; if thou wilt fall down and worship me. Note, The devil is fond to be worshipped. All the worship which the heathens performed to their gods was directed to the devil, Deut. xxxii. 17. who is therefore called the god of this world; 2 Cor. iv. 4. 1 Cor. x. 20. And fain would he draw Christ into his interests, and persuade him, now he set up for a teacher, to preach up the Gentile idolatry, and to introduce it again among the Jews, and then the nations of the earth would soon flock unto him. What temptation could be more hideous, more black? Note, It is possible the best of saints may be tempted to the worst of sins; especially when they are under the power of melancholy; as to atheism, blasphemy, murder, self-murder, and what not. It is their affliction, but while there is no consent to it nor approbation of it, it is not their sin; Christ was tempted to worship Satan.

2. See how Christ put by the thrust, baffled the assault, and came off a conqueror. He rejected the proposal,

1. With an abhorrence and detestation. Get thee hence, Satan. The two former temptations had something of colour which would admit of a consideration, but this was so gross as not to bear a parley; it appears abominable minable at the first sight, and therefore is immediately rejected. If the best friend we have in the world should suggest such a thing as this to us, go serve other gods, he must not be heard with patience, Deut. xiii. 6-8. Some temptations have their wickedness written in their forehead, they are open before-hand, that are not to be disputed with but rejected: Get thee hence, Satan, away with it, I cannot bear the thought of it. While Satan tempted Christ to do himself a mischief by casting himself down, though he yielded not, yet he heard it; but now the temptation lies in the face of God, he cannot bear it; get thee hence, Satan. Note, It is a just indignation which riseth at the proposal of any thing that reflects on the honour of God and strikes at his crown. Nay, whatever is an abominable thing which we are sure the Lord hates, we must thus abominate it; far be it from us that we should have any thing to do with it. Note, It is good to be peremptory in resisting temptation, and to stop our ears to Satan's charms.

2. With an argument fetched from scripture. Note, In order to the strengthening of our resolutions against sin, it is good to see what a great deal of reason there is for those resolutions. The argument is very pat and to the purpose, taken from Deut. vi. 13. and x. 20. Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve. Christ doth not dispute whether he were an angel of light as he pretended, or no; but though he were, yet he must not be worshipped, because that is an honour due to God only. Note, It is good to make our answers to temptation as full and as brief as may be, so as not to leave room for objections. Our Saviour has recourse to the fundamental law in this case, which is indispensable and universally obliging. Note, Religious worship is due to God only, and must not be given to any creature: it is a flower of the crown which cannot be alienated, a branch of God's glory which he will not give to another, and which he would not give to his own Son, by obliging all men to honour the Son, even as they honour the Father, if he had not been God equal to him, and one with him. Christ quotes this law concerning religious worship, and quotes it with application to himself: 1. To shew that his estate of humiliation, he was himself made under this law; though as God he was worshipped, yet as man he did worship God, both publicly and privately. He obligeth us to no more than what he was first pleased to oblige himself to. Thus it became him to fulfil all righteousness. 2. To shew that the law of religious worship is of eternal obligation; and though he abrogated and altered many institutions of worship, yet this fundamental law of nature, that God only is to be worshipped, he came to ratify and confirm and enforce upon us.

Lastly, We have here the end and issue of this combat, ver. 11. Though the children of God may be exercised with many and great temptations, yet God will not suffer them to be tempted above the strength which either they have, or he will put into them, 1 Cor. x. 13. It is but for a season that they are in heaviness through manifold temptations.

Now the issue was glorious, and much to Christ's honour; for,

1. The devil was baffled, and quitted the field: Then the devil leaveth him, forced to do so by the power that went along with that word of command, get thee hence, Satan. He made a shameful and inglorious retreat, and came off with disgrace; and the more daring his attempts had been, the more mortifying was the foil that was given him. Magnis tamen excidit ausis. Then when he had done his worst, had tempted him with all the kingdoms of the world, and the glory of them, and found that he was not influenced by that bait, that he could not prevail with that temptation with which he has overthrown so many thousands of the children of men, then he leaves him; then he gives him over as more than a man: Since this did not move him, he despairs of moving him, and begins to conclude that he is the Son of God, and it is in vain to tempt him any further. Note, If we resist the devil, he will flee from us; he will yield, if we keep our ground; as when Naami, saw that Ruth was steadfastly resolved, she left off speaking to her. When the devil left our Saviour he owned himself fairly beaten; his head was broken by the attempt he made to bruise Christ's heel. He left him because he had nothing in him, nothing to take hold of; he saw it was to no purpose, and so gave off. Note, The devil, though he is an enemy to all the saints, he is a conquered enemy. The Captain of our salvation has defeated and disarmed him, we have nothing to do but to pursue the victory.

2. The holy angels came and attended upon our victorious Redeemer, Behold angels came and ministered unto him. They came in a visible appearance as the devil had done in the temptation. While the devil was making his assaults upon our Saviour, the angels stood at a distance, and their immediate attendance and ministration was suspended, that it might appear he vanquished Satan in his own strength, and his victory might be the more illustrious: And that afterwards when Michael makes use of his angels in fighting with the dragon and his angels, it is not because he needs them, or could not do his work without them, but because he is pleased to honour them so far as to employ them. One angel might have served to bring him food, but here are many attending him, to testify their respect to him, and their readiness to receive his commands. Behold this! it is worth taking notice of; 1. That as there is a world of wicked malicious spirits that fight against Christ and his church, and all particular believers, so there is a world of holy blessed spirits engaged and employed for them. In reference to our war with devils, we may take abundance of comfort from our communion with angels. 2. That Christ's victories are the angels triumphs. The angels came to congratulate Christ's success, to rejoice with him, and to give him the glory due to his name; for that was sung with a loud voice in heaven, when the great dragon was cast out, Rev. xii. 9, 10. Now is come salvation and strength. 3. That the angels ministered to the Lord Jesus, not only food, but whatever else he wanted after this great fatigue. See how the instances of Christ's condescension and humiliation were balanced with tokens of his glory. As when he was crucified in weakness, yet he lived by the power of God; so when in weakness he was tempted, was hungry and weary, yet by his divine power he commanded the ministration of angels. Thus the Son of man did eat angels food, and like Elias, is fed by an angel in the wilderness, 1 Kings xix. 4-7. Note, Though God may suffer his people to be brought into wants and straits, yet he will take effectual care for their supply, will rather send angels to feed them, than see them perish. Trust in the Lord, and verily thou shalt be fed, Psal. lxxvii. 3.

Christ was thus succoured after the temptation, 1. For his encouragement to go on in his undertaking, that he might see the powers of heaven siding with him, when he saw the powers of hell set against him. 2. For our encouragement to trust in him; for as he knew by experience what it was to suffer, being tempted, and how hard that was, so he knew what it was to be succoured, being tempted, and how comfortable that was; and therefore we may expect not only that he will sympathize with his tempted people, but that he will come in with seasonable relief to them; as our great Melchizedek, who met Abraham when he returned from battle, and as the angels here ministered to him.

Lastly, Christ having been thus signalized, and made great in the invisible world by the voice of the Father, the descent of the Spirit, his victory over devils, and his dominion over angels, he was doubtless qualified to appear in the visible world as the Mediator between God and man; for consider how great this man was:

12. ¶ Now when Jesus had heard that John was cast into prison, he departed into Galilee; 13. And leaving Nazareth, he came and dwelt in Capernaum, which is upon the sea-coast, in the borders of Zabulon and Nephthalim: 14. That it might be fulfilled which was spoken by Esaias the prophet, saying, 15. The land of Zabulon, and the land of Nephthalim, by the way of the sea beyond Jordan, Galilee of the Gentiles: 16. The people which sat in darkness saw great light; and to them which sat in the region and shadow of death light is sprung up. 17. ¶ From that time Jesus began to preach, and to say, Repent: for the kingdom of heaven is at hand.

We have here an account of Christ's preaching in the synagogues of Galilee, for he came into the world to be a preacher; the great salvation which he wrought out, he himself began to publish, Heb. ii. 3. to shew how much his heart was upon it, and ours should be.

Several passages in the other gospels, especially that of St. John, are supposed in the order of the story of Christ's life, to intervene between his temptation and his preaching in Galilee: His first appearance after his temptation, was when John Baptist pointed to him, saying, Behold the Lamb of God, John i. 29. After that he went up to Jerusalem to the passover, John ii. discoursed with Nicodemus, John iii. with the woman of Samaria, John iv. and then returned into Galilee, and preached there. But Matthew having had his residence in Galilee, begins his story of Christ's public ministry with his preaching there, which here we have an account of. Observe,

1. The time; when Jesus had heard that John was cast into prison, then he went into Galilee, ver. 12. Note, The cry of the saints sufferings comes up into the ears of the Lord Jesus. If John be cast into prison, Jesus hears it, takes cognizance of it, and steers his course accordingly; he remembers the bonds and afflictions that abide his people. Observe, 1. Christ did not go into the country, till he heard of John's imprisonment; for he must have time given him to prepare the way of the Lord, before the Lord himself appear. Providence wisely ordered it, that John should be eclipsed before Christ shone forth; otherwise the minds of people would have been distracted between the two; one would have said, I am of John, and another, I am of Jesus. John must be Christ's harbinger, but not his rival. Moon and stars are lost when the sun riseth. John had done his work by the baptism of repentance, and then he is laid aside. The witnesses were slain when they had finished their testimony, and not before, Rev. xi. 7. 2. He did go into the country as soon as he heard of John's imprisonment; not only to shilt for his own safety, knowing that the Pharisees in Judea were as much enemies to him as Herod was to John, but to supply the want of John Baptist, and to build upon the good foundation he had laid. Note, God will not leave himself without witness, nor his church without guides; when he removes one useful instrument he can raise up another, for he has the residue of the Spirit, and he will do it, if he has work to do. Moses my servant is dead, John is cast into prison; now therefore Joshua arise; Jesus arise.

2. The place where he preached; in Galilee, a remote part of the country, that lay furthest from Jerusalem, and was there looked upon with contempt as rude and boorish. The inhabitants of that country were reckoned stout men, cut out for soldiers, but not polite men, or cut out for scholars. Thither Christ went, there he set up the standard of his gospel; and in this, as in other things, he humbled himself. Observe,

1. The particular city he chose for his residence; not Nazareth where he had been bred up, no he left Nazareth, particular notice is taken of that, ver. 13. And with good reason did he leave Nazareth; for the men of that city thrust him out from among them, Luke iv. 29. He made them his first and a very fair offer of his service, but they rejected him and his doctrine, and were filled with indignation at him and it; and therefore he left Nazareth, and shook off the dust of his feet for a testimony against them there, that would not have him teach them. Nazareth was the first place that refused Christ, and was therefore refused by him. Note, It is just with God to take the gospel and the means of grace from those that slight them and thrust them away. Christ will not stay long where he is not welcome. Unhappy Nazareth! If thou hadst known in this thy day the things that belong to thy peace, how well it had been for thee! But now they are hid from thine eyes.

But he came and dwelt in Capernaum; which was a city of Galilee; but many miles distant from Nazareth, a great city and of much resort. It is said here to be on the sea-coast, not the great sea, but the sea of Tiberias, an inland water, called also the lake of Gennesaret. Close by the falling of Jordan into this sea, stood Capernaum, in the tribe of Nephthali, but bordering upon Zebulon; thither Christ came, and here he dwelt; some think his father Joseph had a habitation here, others that he took a house or lodgings at least; and some think it more than probable, that he dwelt in the house of Simon Peter; however here he fixed not constantly, for he went about doing good; but this was for some time his head quarters, what little rest he had was here; here he had a place, though not a place of his own to lay his head on. And at Capernaum it should seem he was welcome, and met with better entertainment than he had in Nazareth. Note, If some reject Christ, yet others will receive him and bid him welcome. Capernaum is glad of Nazareth's leavings: If Christ's own countrymen be not gathered, yet he will be glorious. And thou Capernaum hast now a day of it; thou art now lifted up to heaven, be wise for thyself, and know the time of thy visitation.

2. The prophecy that was fulfilled in this, ver. 14, 15, 16. It is quoted out of Isa. ix. 1, 2. but with some variation. The prophet in that place is foretelling a greater darkness of affliction to befall the contempters of Immanuel, than befell the countries there mentioned, either in their first captivity under Benhadad, which was but light, 1 Kings xv. 20. or their second captivity under the Assyrian, which was much heavier, 2 Kings xv. 29. The punishment of the Jewish nation for rejecting the gospel should be sorer than either; see Isa. viii. 21, 22. for those captivated places had some reviving in their bondage, and saw a great light again, chap. ix. 2. This is Isaiah's sense; but the Scripture has many fulfillings, and the Evangelist here takes only the latter clause, which speaks of the return of the light of liberty and prosperity to those countries that had been in the darkness of captivity, and applies it to the appearing of the gospel among them.

The places are spoken of, ver. 15. The land of Zebulon is rightly said to be by the sea-coast, for Zebulon was a haven of ships, and rejoiced in her going out, Gen. xlix. 13. Deut. xxxiii. 18. Of Nephthali it had been said, that he should be satisfied with favour, Deut. xxxiii. 23. for from him began gan the gospel; goodly words indeed, and such as bring to a soul God's satisfying favour. The country beyond Jordan is mentioned likewise, for there we sometimes find Christ preaching; and Galilee of the Gentiles, the upper Galilee to which the Gentiles resorted for traffick, and were mingled with the Jews; which intimates a kindness in reserve for the poor Gentiles. When Christ came to Capernaum, the gospel came to all those places round about, such diffusive influence did the Sun of righteousness cast.

Now concerning the inhabitants of these places, observe, 1. The posture they were in before the gospel came among them, ver. 16. They were in darkness. Note, Those that are without Christ are in the dark, nay they are darkness itself; as the darkness that was upon the face of the deep. Nay, they were in the region and shadow of death; which notes not only great darkness, as the grave is a land of darkness, but great danger: A man that is desperately sick, and not likely to recover, is in the valley of the shadow of death, though not quite dead; so the poor people were in the borders of damnation, though not yet damned, dead in law. And which is worst of all, they were sitting in this condition. Sitting is a continuing posture; where we sit we mean to stay; they were in the dark and likely to be so, despairing to find the way out; And it is a contented posture, they were in the dark, and they loved darkness, they chose it rather than light; they were willingly ignorant. Their condition was sad; it is still the condition of many great and mighty nations, that are to be thought of and prayed for with pity. But their condition is more sad, who sit in darkness in the midst of gospel-light. He that is in the dark because it is night, may be sure the sun will shortly arise; but he that is in the dark because he is blind, will not so soon have his eyes opened. We have the light, but what will that avail us if we be not light in the Lord?

2. The privilege they enjoy when Christ and his gospel came among them, as great a reviving as ever it was to a benighted traveller. Note, When the gospel comes, light comes; when it comes to any place, when it comes to any soul, it makes day there, John iii. 19. Luke i. 78, 79. Light is discovering, it is directing, so is the gospel.

It is a great light, noting the clearness and evidence of gospel-revelations; not like the light of a candle, but the light of the sun when he goes forth in his strength. Great in comparison with the light of the law, the shadows of which were now done away. It is a great light, for it discovers great things and of vast consequence; it will last long and spread far. And it is a growing light, intimated in that word, it is sprung up. It was but spring of day with them; now the day dawned, which afterwards shone more and more. The gospel-kingdom, like a grain of mustard-seed, or the morning-light, was small in its beginnings, gradual in its growth, but great in its perfection.

Observe, the light sprung up to them; they did not go to seek it, but were prevented with the blessings of this goodness. It came upon them ere they were aware, at the time appointed: by the disposal of him who commandeth the morning, and causeth the day-spring to know its place, that it may take hold of the ends of the earth, Job xxxviii. 12, 13.

The text he preached upon, ver. 17. From that time, i. e. from the time of his coming into Galilee into the land of Zebulon and Nephthali, from that time he began to preach. He had been preaching before this in Judea, and had made and baptized many disciples, John iv. 1. But his preaching was not so public and constant as now it began to be. The work of the ministry is so great and awful, that it is fit to be entered upon by steps and gradual advances.

The subject Christ dwelt upon now in his preaching, and it was indeed the sum and substance of all his preaching, was the very same that John had preached upon, chap. iii. 2. Repent, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand; for the gospel is the same for substance under various dispensations; the commands the same, and the reasons to enforce them the same; an angel from heaven dare not preach any other gospel, Gal. i. 8. and will preach this; for it is the everlasting gospel. Fear God, and by repentance give honour to him, Rev. xiv. 6, 7. Christ put a great respect upon John's ministry, when he preached to the same purpose that he had preached before him. By this he shewed that John was his messenger and ambassador, for when he brought the errand himself, it was the same that he had sent by him. Thus did God confirm the word of his messengers, Isa. xlv. 26. The Son came on the same errand that the servants came on, Mat. xxi. 37. to seek fruit, fruits meet for repentance. Christ had laid in the bosom of the Father, and could have preached sublime notions of divine and heavenly things, that should have alarmed and amused the learned world, but he pitched upon this old plain text, Repent, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand. 1. This he preached first upon; he began with this: Ministers must not be ambitious of branching new opinions, framing new schemes, or coining new expressions, but must content themselves with plain practical things; with the word that is nigh us, even in our mouth, and in our heart; we need not go up to heaven, or down to the deep, for matter or language in our preaching. As John prepared Christ's way, so Christ prepared his own, and made way for the further discoveries he designed with the doctrine of repentance. If any man will do this part of his will, he shall know more of his doctrine, John vii. 17. 2. This he preached often upon; wherever he went this was his subject, and neither he nor his followers ever reckoned it worn threadbare, as those would have done that have itching ears, and are fond of novelty and variety more than that which is truly edifying. Note, That which has been preached and heard before, may yet very profitably be preached and heard again; but then it should be preached and heard better, and with new affections; what Paul had said before, he said again, weeping, Phil. iii. 1—18. 3. This he preached as gospel; repent, review your ways, and return to yourselves. Note, The doctrine of repentance is right gospel-doctrine. It was not only the austere baptist, that was looked upon as a melancholy morose man, but the sweet and gracious Jesus, whose lips dropt as a honey-comb, that preached repentance; for it is an unspeakable privilege that room is left for repentance. 4. The reason is still the same. The kingdom of heaven is at hand; for it was not reckoned to be fully come till the pouring out of the Spirit after Christ's ascension. John had preached the kingdom of heaven at hand above a year before this; but now it was so much nearer the argument was so much the stronger; now is the salvation nearer, Rom. xiii. 11. We should be so much more quickened to our duty, as we see the day approaching, Heb. x. 25.

18. ¶ And Jesus, walking by the sea of Galilee, saw two brethren, Simon, called Peter, and Andrew his brother, casting a net into the sea: (for they were fishers.) 19. And he saith unto them, Follow me, and I will make you fishers of men. 20. And they straightway left their nets and followed him. 21. And going from thence, he saw other two brethren, James the son of Zebedee, and John his brother, in a ship with Zebedee their father, mending their nets: and he called them. 22. And they immediately left the ship and their father, and followed him.

When Christ began to preach, he began to gather disciples, that should now be the hearers, and hereafter the preachers of his doctrine, that should now be witnesses of his miracles, and hereafter concerning them. Now in these verses we have an account of the first disciples that he called into fellowship with himself.

And this was an instance, 1. Of effectual calling to Christ. In all his preaching he gave a common call to all the country, but in this he gave a special and particular call to those that were given him by the Father. Let us see and admire the power of Christ's grace, own his word to be the rod of his strength, and wait upon him for those powerful influences which are necessary to the efficacy of the gospel-call, those distinguishing influences. All the country was called, but those were called out, were redeemed from among men: Christ was so manifested to them, as he was not manifested unto the world. 2. It was an instance of ordination, and appointment to the work of the ministry. When Christ as a teacher set up his great school, one of his first works was to appoint ushers or under-masters to be employed in teaching-work. Now he began to give gifts unto men, to put the treasure into earthen vessels. It was an early instance of his care for his church.

Now we may observe here,

1. Where they were called, by the sea of Galilee where Jesus was walking, Capernaum standing near that sea. Concerning this sea of Tiberias, the Jews have a saying, That of all the seven seas that God made, he made choice of none but this sea of Gennesaret; which is very applicable to Christ's choice of it, to honour it, as he often did with his presence and miracles. Here, on the banks of the sea, Christ was walking for contemplation, as Isaac in the field, hither he went to call disciples; not to Herod's court, for few mighty or noble are called; not to Jerusalem, among the chief priests and the elders, but to the sea of Galilee; surely Christ sees not as man sees. Not but that the same power which effectually called Peter and Andrew, would have wrought upon Annas and Caiaphas, for with God nothing is impossible; but as in other things, so in his converse and attendance he would humble himself, and shew that God hath chosen the poor of this world. Galilee was a remote part of the nation, the inhabitants were less cultivated and refined, their very language was broad and uncouth to the curious, their speech bewrayed them: Those that were picked up at the sea of Galilee had not the advantages and improvements, no, not of the more polished Galileans, yet thither Christ went to call his apostles that were to be the prime ministers of state in his kingdom; for he chooseth the foolish things of the world to confound the wise.

2. Who they were. Two pair of brothers we have an account of the call of in these verses, Peter and Andrew, James and John; the two former, and probably the two latter also, had had acquaintance with Christ before, John i. 40, 41. but were not till now called into a close and constant attendance upon him. Note, Christ brings poor souls by degrees into fellowship with himself. They had been disciples of John, and so were the better disposed to follow Christ. Note, Those that have submitted to the discipline of repentance shall be welcome to the joys of faith. We may observe concerning them,

1. That they were brothers. Note, It is a blessed thing, when those that are kinsmen according to the flesh (as the Apostle speaks, Rom. ix. 8.) are brought together into a spiritual alliance to Jesus Christ. It is the honour and comfort of a house, when those that are of the same family are of God's family.

2. That they were fishers. And being fishers, 1. They were poor men; if they had had estates or any considerable stock in trade, they would not have made it their trade, however they might have made this their recreation. Note, Christ doth not despise the poor, and therefore we must not; the poor are evangelized, and the fountain of honour sometimes gives more abundant honour to that part which most lacked. 2. They were unlearned men, not bred up to books of literature as Moses was, who was conversant with all the learning of the Egyptians. Note, Christ sometimes chooseth to endow those with the gifts of grace that have least to shew of the gifts of nature. Yet this will not justify the bold intrusion of ignorant and unqualified men upon the work of the ministry; extraordinary gifts of knowledge and utterance are not now to be expected, but requisite abilities must be obtained in an ordinary way, and without a competent measure of these, none are to be admitted to that service. 3. They were men of business, that had been bred up to labour. Note, diligence in an honest calling is pleasing to Christ; and no hindrance to a holy life. Moses was called from keeping sheep, and David from following the ewes, to eminent employments. Idle people lie open more to the temptations of Satan, than to the calls of God. 4. They were men that were accustomed to hardships and hazards; the fisher's trade, more than any other, is laborious and perilous: fishermen must be often wet and cold, they must watch, and wait, and toil, and be often in peril by waters. Note, Those that have learned to bear hardships, and to run hazards, are best prepared for the fellowship and discipleship of Jesus Christ. Good soldiers of Christ must endure hardness.

3. What they were doing. Peter and Andrew were then using their nets, they were fishing, and James and John were mending their nets, which was an instance of their industry and their good husbandry: They did not go to their father for money to buy new nets, but took pains to mend their old ones. What we have, it is commendable to make it go as far and last as long as may be. James and John were with their father Zebedee ready to assist him, and make his business easy to him. Note, It is a happy and hopeful presage to see children careful of their parents and dutiful to them. Observe, 1. They were all employed, all very busy, and none idle. Note, When Christ comes, it is good to be found doing. Am I in Christ? is a very needful question for us to ask ourselves; and next to that, Am I in my calling? 2. They were differently employed, two of them were fishing, and two of them mending their nets. Note, Ministers should be always employed, either in teaching or studying; they may always find themselves something to do, if it be not their own faults; and mending their nets is in its season as necessary work as fishing.

4. What the call was, ver. 19. Follow me, and I will make you fishers of men. They had followed Christ before as ordinary disciples, John i. 37. but so they might follow Christ, and follow their calling too; therefore they were called to a more close and constant attendance, and must leave their calling. Note, Even those that have been called to follow Christ, yet have need to be called to follow on, and to follow nearer, especially when they are designed for the work of the ministry. Observe,

(1.) What Christ intended them for; I will make you fishers of men; this alludes to their former calling: Let them not be proud of the new honour designed them, they are still but fishers; let them not be afraid of the new work cut out for them, for they have been used to fishing, and fishers they are are still. It was usual with Christ to speak of spiritual and heavenly things, under such allusions and in such expressions, as took rise from common things that offered themselves to his view. David was called from feeding sheep to feed God's Israel; and when he is a king, is a shepherd. Note, 1. Ministers are fishers of men, not to destroy them, but to save them, by bringing them into another element: They must fish, not for wrath, wealth, honour, and preferment, to gain them to themselves, but for souls to gain them to Christ. They watch for your souls, Heb. xiii. 17, and seek not your's but you, 2 Cor. xii. 44—16. 2. It is Jesus Christ that makes them so; I will make you fishers of men: It is he that qualifies men for this work, calls them to it, authorizeth them in it, and gives them success in it; gives them commission to fish for souls and wisdom to win them. Those ministers are likely to have comfort in their work that are thus made by Jesus Christ.

(2.) What they must do in order to this: Follow me. They must separate themselves to a diligent attendance on him, and set themselves to a humble imitation of him; must follow him as their leader. Note, 1. Those whom Christ employs in any service for him, it is requisite they be first fitted and qualified for it. 2. Those that would preach Christ, must first learn Christ, and learn of him. How can we expect to bring others to the knowledge of Christ, if we do not know him well ourselves? 3. Those that would get an acquaintance with Christ, must be diligent and constant in their attendance on him. The apostles were prepared for their work, by accompanying with Christ all the time that he went in and out among them, Acts i. 21. There is no learning comparable to that which is got by following Christ. Joshua, by ministering to Moses, is fitted to be his successor. 4. Those that are to fish for men, must therein follow Christ, and do it as he did, with diligence, faithfulness, and tenderness: Christ is the great pattern for preachers, and they ought to be workers together with him.

5. What was the success of this call. Peter and Andrew straightway left their nets, ver. 20. and James and John immediately left the ship and their father, ver. 22. and they all followed him. Note, Those that would follow Christ aright, must leave all to follow him. Every Christian must leave all in affection, sit loose to all, must hate father and mother, Luke xiv. 26. must love them less than Christ, must be ready to part with his interest in them rather than with his interest in Jesus Christ; but those that are devoted to the work of the ministry, are in a special manner concerned to disentangle themselves from all the affairs of this life, that they may give themselves wholly to that work which requires the whole man. Now,

(1.) This instance of the power of the Lord Jesus, gives us a good encouragement to depend upon the sufficiency of his grace. How strong and effectual is his word! he speaks and it is done. The same power goes along with this word of Christ, Follow me, that went along with that word, Lazarus, come forth; a power to make willing, Psalm. cx. 3.

(2.) This instance of the pliability of the disciples, gives us a good example of obedience to the command of Christ. Note, It is the good property of all Christ's faithful servants to come when they are called, and to follow their Master wherever he leads them. They objected not their present employments, their engagements to their families, the difficulties of the service they were called to, or their own unfitness for it, but being called, they obeyed; and, like Abraham, went out not knowing whither they went, but knowing very well whom they followed. James and John left their father, it is not said what came of him; their mother Salome was a constant follower of Christ; no doubt, their father Zebedee was a believer, but the call to follow Christ fastened on the young ones: Youth is the learning age, and the labouring age: The priests ministered in the prime of their time.

23. ¶ And Jesus went about all Galilee, teaching in their synagogues, and preaching the gospel of the kingdom, and healing all manner of sickness and all manner of disease among the people. 24. And his fame went throughout all Syria: and they brought unto him all sick people that were taken with divers diseases and torments, and those which were lunatick, and those that had the palsy; and he healed them. 25. And there followed him great multitudes of people from Galilee, and from Decapolis, and from Jerusalem, and from Judea, and from beyond Jordan.

See here, 1. What an industrious preacher Christ was: he went about all Galilee, teaching in their synagogues, and preaching the gospel of the kingdom. Observe, 1. What Christ preached, the gospel of the kingdom. The kingdom of heaven, that is, of grace and glory, is emphatically the kingdom, the kingdom that was now to come; that kingdom that shall survive, as it doth surpass, all the kingdoms of the earth. The gospel is the charter of that kingdom, containing the King's coronation oath, by which he hath graciously obliged himself to pardon, protect, and serve the subjects of that kingdom; and their oath of allegiance, by which they oblige themselves to observe his statutes and seek his honour; this is the gospel of the kingdom, this Christ was himself the preacher of, that our faith in it might be confirmed. 2. Where he preached, in the synagogues; not there only, but there chiefly, because those were the places of concourse, where wisdom was to lift up her voice, Prov. i. 21. because they were places of concourse for religious worship, and there, it was to be hoped, people's minds would be prepared to receive the gospel; and there the scriptures of the Old Testament were read, the exposition of which would easily introduce the gospel of the kingdom. 3. What pains he took in preaching, he went about all Galilee teaching: He might have issued out a proclamation to summon all to come to him; but to shew his humility, and the condescensions of his grace, he goes to them; for he wants to be gracious, and comes to seek and save. Josephus saith, there were above two hundred cities and towns in Galilee, and all, or most of them, Christ visited. He went about doing good. Never was there such an itinerant preacher, such an indefatigable one as Christ was; he went a begging from town to town to beseech poor sinners to be reconciled to God. This is an example to ministers to lay out to do good, and to be instant and constant in season and out of season, to preach the word.

2. What a powerful physician Christ was; he went about, not only teaching, but healing, and both with his word, that he might magnify that above all his name. He sent his word and healed them. Now observe,

(1.) What diseases he cured, all without exception: He healed all manner of sickness, and all manner of disease. There are diseases that are called the reproach of physicians, that are obstinate to all the methods they can prescribe; but even those were the glory of this physician, for he healed them all, though never so inveterate: His word was the true panpharmakon, all heal.

Three general words are here used to intimate this; he healed every sickness, Noson, as blindness, lameness, fever, dropsy; every disease, or languishing; Μαλακίαν, as fluxes and consumptions; all torments, Βασανισμους, Vol. III. No. CLVII.

gout, stone, convulsions, and such like torturing distempers; whether the disease was acute or chronic; whether it was a racking or a wasting disease; none was too bad, none too hard for Christ to heal with a word's speaking.

Three particular diseases are instanced in it; the palsy, which is the greatest weakness of the body; lunacy, which is the greatest malady of the mind; and possession of the devil, which is the greatest misery and calamity of both; yet Christ healed all: for he is the sovereign physician both of soul and body, and has command of all diseases.

(2.) What patients he had; such a physician that was so easy of access, so sure of success, that cured immediately, without either a painful suspense and expectation, or such painful remedies as are worse than the disease, that cured gratis, and took no fees, could not but have abundance of patients: See here what flocking there was to him from all parts; great multitudes of people came, not only from Galilee and the country about, but even from Jerusalem and from Judea, that lay a great way off, for his fame went throughout all Syria, not only among all the people of the Jews, but among the neighbour nations, which by the report that now spread far and near concerning him, would be prepared to receive his gospel, when afterwards it should be brought them: This is given as the reason why such multitudes came to him, because his fame spread so as it did. Note, What we hear of Christ from others, should invite us to him. The queen of Sheba was brought by the fame of Solomon to give him a visit. The voice of fame is, Come and see. Christ both taught and healed; those that came for cures, met with instructions concerning the things that belonged to their peace. It is well if any thing will bring people to Christ, and those that come to him will find more with him than they expected. These Syrians, like Naaman the Syrian, coming to be healed of their diseases, many of them became converts, 2 Kings v. 15—17. They sought health for the body, and obtained the salvation of the soul; like Saul that sought the asses, and found the kingdom. Yet it appeared by the issue, that many of them who rejoiced in Christ as a healer, forgot him as a teacher.

Now concerning the cures which Christ wrought, let us, once for all, observe the miracle, the mercy, and the mystery of them.

1. The miracle of them: They were wrought in such a manner as plainly spoke them the immediate products of a divine and supernatural power, and they were God's seal to his commission. Nature could not do these things, it was the God of nature; the cures were many, of diseases incurable by the art of the physician, of persons that were strangers, of all ages and conditions; the cures were wrought openly, before many witnesses, in mixed companies of persons that would have denied the matter of fact, if they could have had any colour for it: No cure ever failed, or was afterwards called in question; they were wrought speedily; and not (as cures by natural causes) gradually; they were perfect cures, and wrought with a word's speaking: All which proves him a teacher come from God, for otherwise none could have done the works that he did, John iii. 2. He appeals to these as credentials, Matt. xi. 4, 5. John v. 36. It was expected that the Messiah should work miracles, John vii. 31. miracles of this nature, Isa. xxxv. 5, 6. and we have this proof, beyond dispute, of his being the Messiah; never was any man that did thus; and therefore his healing and his preaching generally went together, for the former confirmed the latter; thus here he began to do and to teach, Acts i. 1.

2. The mercy of them: The miracles that Moses wrought to prove his mission, were most of them plagues and judgments, to intimate the terror of that dispensation, though from God; but the miracles that Christ wrought were most of them cures, and all of them (except the cursing of the barren fig-tree) blessings and favours; for the gospel dispensation is founded and built up in love, and grace, and sweetness; and the management such, as tends not to affright, but allure us, to obedience. Christ designed by his cures to win upon people, and to ingratiate himself and his doctrine into their minds, and so to draw them with the bands of love, Hos. xi. 4. The miracles of them proved his doctrine a faithful saying, and convinced men's judgments; the mercy of them proved it worthy of all acceptance, and wrought upon their affections: They were not only great works, but good works, that he shewed them from his Father, John x. 32. and this goodness, was intended to lead men to repentance, Rom. ii. 4. as also to shew, that kindness and beneficence and doing good to all, to the utmost of our power and opportunity, is an essential branch of that holy religion which Christ came into the world to establish.

3. The mystery of them: Christ by curing bodily diseases, intended to shew that his great errand into the world was to cure spiritual maladies: He is the sun of righteousness that ariseth with this healing under his wings. As the converter of sinners, he is the physician of souls, and has taught us to call him so, Matt. ix. 12, 13. Sin is the sickness, disease, and torment of the soul; Christ came to take away sin, and so to heal these. And the particular stories of the cures Christ wrought, may not only be applied spiritually by way of allusion and illustration, but, I believe, are very much intended to reveal to us spiritual things, and to set before us the way and method of Christ's dealing with souls in their conversion and sanctification; and those cures are recorded, that were most significant and instructive this way; and they are therefore so to be explained and improved, to the honour and praise of that glorious Redeemer, who forgiveth all our iniquities, and so healeth all our diseases.

C H A P. V.

This chapter and the two that follow it, are a sermon, a famous sermon, the sermon upon the mount; it is the longest, and fullest continued discourse of our Saviour's that we have upon record in all the gospels: It is a practical discourse; there is not much of the credenda of Christianity in it, the things to be believed, but it is wholly taken up with the agenda, the things to be done; these Christ began with in his preaching; for if any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine whether it be of God. The circumstances of the sermon being accounted for, ver. 1, 2. follows the sermon itself, the scope of which is, not to fill our heads with notions, but to guide and to regulate our practice. 1. He proposeth blessedness as the end, and gives us the character of those who are entitled to blessedness, very different from the sentiments of a vain world, in eight beatitudes, which may justly be called paradoxes, ver. 3—12. 2. He prescribes duty as the way, and gives us standing rules of that duty. He directs his disciples, (1.) To understand what they are, the salt of the earth, and the lights of the world, ver. 13—17. (2.) To understand what they have to do, they are to be governed by the moral law. Here is, 1. A general ratification of the law, and a recommendation of it to us as our rule, ver. 17—22. 2. A particular rectification of divers mistakes, or rather a reformation of divers wilful, gross corruptions, which the Scribes and Pharisees had introduced in their exposition of the law, and authentic explication of divers branches that most needed to be explained and vindicated, ver. 20. Particularly, here is an explication, (1.) Of the sixth commandment, which forbids murder, ver. 21—26. (2.) Of the seventh seventh commandment, against adultery, ver. 27—32. (3.) Of the third commandment, ver. 33—37. (4.) Of the law of retaliation, ver. 38—42. (5.) Of the law of brotherly love, ver. 43—48. And the scope of all this is to shew that the law is spiritual.

1. AND seeing the multitudes, he went up into a mountain: and when he was set, his disciples came unto him: 2. And he opened his mouth, and taught them, saying,

We have here a general account of this sermon.

1. The preacher was our Lord Jesus, the prince of preachers, the great prophet of his church, who came into the world to be the light of the world. The prophets and John had done virtuously in preaching, but Christ excelled them all: He is the eternal wisdom, that lay in the bosom of the Father, before all worlds, and perfectly knew his will, John i. 18. And he is the eternal word, by whom he has in these last days spoken to us. The many miraculous cures Christ wrought in Galilee, which we read of in the close of the foregoing chapter, were intended to make way for this sermon, and to dispose people to receive instructions from one in whom there appeared so much of a divine power and goodness; and probably this sermon was the summary or rehearsal of what he had preached up and down in the synagogues of Galilee: His text was, Repent, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand. This is a sermon upon the former part of that text, shewing what it is to repent: it is to reform, both in judgment and practice; and he here tells us wherein, in answer to that question, Mal. iii. 7. Wherein shall we return? He afterwards preached upon the latter part of the text, when, in divers parables, he shewed what the kingdom is like, Matt. xiii.

2. The place was a mountain in Galilee. As in other things, so in this our Lord Jesus was but ill accommodated: he had no convenient place to preach in, no more than to lay his head on: While the Scribes and Pharisees had Moses's chair to sit in, with all the ease, honour and state that might be, and there corrupted the law, our Lord Jesus the great teacher of truth is driven out to the desert, and finds no better a pulpit than a mountain can afford him: And not one of the holy mountains neither, nor one of the mountains of Zion, but a common mountain; by which Christ would intimate, that there is no such distinguishing holiness of places now under the gospel, as there was under the law; but it is the will of God that men should pray, and preach every where, any where, provided it be decent and convenient. Christ preached this sermon, which was an exposition of the law, upon a mountain, because upon a mountain the law was given; and this was also a solemn promulgation of the Christian law: But observe the difference; when the law was given, the Lord came down upon the mountain, now the Lord went up; then he spoke in thunder and lightning, now in a still small voice: Then the people were bid to keep their distance, now they are invited to draw near: A blessed change! If God's grace and goodness be (as certainly it is) his glory, then the glory of the gospel is the glory that excelleth, for grace and truth came by Jesus Christ, 2 Cor. iii. 7. Heb. xii. 18. It was foretold of Zebulun and Issachar, two of the tribes of Galilee (Deut. xxxiii. 19.) that they shall call the people to the mountain; to this mountain we are called, to offer the sacrifices of righteousness: Now was this the mountain of the Lord, where he taught us his ways, Isa. ii. 2, 3. Mic. iv. 1, 2.

3. The auditors were his disciples, who came unto him; came at his call, as appears by comparing Mark iii. 13. Luke vi. 13. To them he directed his speech, because they followed him for love and learning, while others attended him only for cures. He taught them, because they were willing to be taught; the meek will he teach his way; and because they would understand what he taught, which to others was foolishness; and because they were to teach others; and it was therefore requisite they should have a clear and distinct knowledge of these things themselves. The duties prescribed in this sermon, were to be conscientiously performed by all those that would enter into that kingdom of heaven they were sent to set up, with hope to have the benefit of it. But though this discourse be directed to the disciples, it was in the hearing of the multitude: for it is said, chap. vii. 28. the people were astonished. Here were no bounds set about this mountain to keep the people off, as were about mount Sinai, Exod. xix. 12. for through Christ we have access to God, not only to speak to him, but to hear from him: Nay, he had an eye to the multitude in preaching this sermon. When the fame of his miracles had brought a vast crowd together, he took the opportunity of so great a confluence of people to instruct them. Note, It is an encouragement to a faithful minister to cast the net of the gospel where there are a great many fish, in hopes some will be caught. The sight of a multitude puts life into a preacher, which yet must arise from a desire of their profit, not his own praise.

4. The solemnity of his sermon is intimated in that word, when he was set. Christ preached many times occasionally, and by interlocutory discourses, but this was a set sermon, καθίστατος αὐτός, when he had placed himself so as to be best heard; He sat down as a judge or law-giver. It intimates, with what sedateness and composure of mind the things of God should be spoken and heard of. He sat, that the scriptures might be fulfilled, Mal. iii. 3. He shall sit as a refiner, to purge away the dross, the corrupt doctrines of the sons of Levi. He sat, as in the throne, judging right, Psal. ix. 4. for the word he spake shall judge us. That phrase, he opened his mouth, is only a Hebrew periphrasis of speaking, as John iii. 1. yet some think it notes the solemnity of this discourse; the congregation being large he raised his voice, and spoke louder than usual. He had spoken long by his servants the prophets, and opened their mouths, Ezek. iii. 27.—xxxiii. 22. but now he opened his own, and spoke with freedom, as one having authority. One of the ancients has this remark upon it: Christ taught much without opening his mouth, viz. by his holy and exemplary life: Nay, he taught, when being led as a lamb to the slaughter, he opened not his mouth: but now he opened his mouth and taught, that the scripture might be fulfilled, Prov. viii. 1, 2—6. Doth not wisdom cry? cry on the top of high places? and the opening of her lips shall be right things. He taught them according to the promise, Isa. liv. 13. All thy children shall be taught of the Lord, for this purpose he had the tongue of the learned, Isa. l. 4. and the Spirit of the Lord, Isa. lxi. 1. He taught them what was the evil they should abhor, and what the good they should abide and abound in; for Christianity is not a matter of speculation, but is designed to regulate the temper of our minds and the tenor of our conversations; gospel time is a time of reformation, Heb. ix. 10. and by the gospel we must be reformed, must be made good, must be made better. The truth, as it is in Jesus, is the truth which is according to godliness, Tit. i. 1.

3. ¶ Blessed are the poor in spirit: for their's is the kingdom of heaven. 4. Blessed are they that mourn: for they shall be comforted. 5. Blessed are the meek: for they shall inherit the earth. 6. Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness: for they shall be filled. 7. Blessed are the merciful: for they shall obtain mercy. 8. Blessed are the pure in heart: for they shall see God. 9. Blessed are the peace-makers: for they shall be called the children of God. 10. Blessed are they which are persecuted for righteousness sake: for their's is the kingdom of heaven. 11. Blessed are ye, when men shall revile you, and persecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely, for my sake. 12. Rejoice, and be exceeding glad: for great is your reward in heaven: for so persecuted they the prophets which were before you.

Christ begins his sermon with blessings, for he came into the world to bless us, Acts iii. 26. as the great high-priest of our profession, as the blessed Melchizedek, as he in whom all the families of the earth should be blessed, Gen. xii. 3. He came not only to purchase blessings for us, but to pour out, and pronounce blessings on us; and here he doth it as one having authority, us one that can command the blessing, even life for evermore, and that is the blessing here again and again promised to the good: his speaking them happy makes them so: for those whom he blesseth, they are blessed indeed. The Old Testament ended with a curse, Mal. iv. 6. the gospel begins with a blessing, for hereunto are we called, that we should inherit the blessing: Each of these blessings Christ here pronounceth, hath a double intendment: 1. To shew who they are that are to be accounted truly happy, and what their characters are: 2. What that is wherein true happiness doth consist, in the promises made to those of such and such characters, the performance of which will make them happy.

Now, 1. This is designed to rectify the ruining mistake of a blind and carnal world. Blessedness is the thing which men pretend to pursue, Who will make us to see good? Psal. iv. 6. but most mistake the end, and form a wrong notion of happiness, and then no wonder they miss the way; they choose their own delusions, and court a shadow. The general opinion is, blessed and happy are they that are rich, and great, and honourable in the world; that spend their days in mirth and their years in pleasure; that eat the fat and drink the sweet, and carry all before them with a high hand, and have every sheaf bowing to their sheaf; happy the people that is in such a case, and their designs, aims, and purposes are accordingly; they bless the covetous, Psal. x. 3. they will be rich. Now our Lord Jesus comes to correct this fundamental error, to advance a new hypothesis, and to give us quite another notion of blessedness and blessed people; which, however, to those that are prejudiced, it may appear a paradox, yet is in itself, and is evident to all that are savingly enlightened, to be a rule and doctrine of eternal truth and certainty, by which we must shortly be judged. If this therefore be the beginning of Christ's doctrine, the beginning of a Christian's practice must be to take his measures of happiness from those maxims, and direct his pursuits accordingly.

2. It is designed to remove the discouragements of the weak and poor that receive the gospel, by assuring them, that his gospel did not make those only happy that were eminent in gifts, graces, comforts, and usefulness; but even the last in the kingdom of heaven, whose heart was upright with God, was happy in the honours and privileges of that kingdom.

3. It is designed to invite souls to Christ, and to make way for his law into them: Christ's pronouncing these blessings, not at the end of his sermon, to dismiss the people, but at the beginning of it, to prepare them for what he had further to say to them, may mind us of mount Gerizzim and mount Ebal, on which the blessings and cursings of the law were read, Deut. xxvii. 12, &c. There the curses are expressed, and the blessings only implied; here the blessings are expressed, and the curses implied; in both life and death are set before us; but the law appeared more as a ministration of death to frighten us from sin; the gospel as a dispensation of life to allure us to Christ, in whom alone all good is to be had: And they who had seen the gracious cures wrought by his hand, chap. iv. 23, 24. and now heard the gracious words proceeding out of his mouth, would say he was all of a piece, made up of love and sweetness.

4. It is designed to settle and sum up the articles of agreements between God and man. The scope of the divine revelation is to let us know what God expects from us, and what we may then expect from him; and no where is this more fully set forth in a few words than here; nor with a more exact reference to each other; and this is that gospel which we are required to believe; for what is faith but a conformity to these characters, and a dependence upon these promises? The way to happiness is here opened, and made a highway, Isa. xxxv. 8. and this coming from the mouth of Jesus Christ, it is intimated that from him and by him we are to receive both the seed and the fruit, both the grace required, and the glory promised: Nothing passeth between God and fallen man, but through his hand. Some of the wisest heathens had notions of blessedness different from the rest of mankind, and looking towards this of our Saviour. Seneca, undertaking to describe a blessed man, makes it out, that it is only an honest good man that is to be so called: De vita beata, cap. iv. Cui nullum bonum malumque sit, nisi bonus malusque animus.—Quem nec extollant fortuita, nec frangant.—Cui vera voluptas erit voluptatum contemptio.—Cui unum bonum honestas, unum malum turpitudine.

Our Saviour here gives us eight characters of blessed people, which represent to us the principle graces of a Christian: On each of them a present blessing is pronounced, Blessed are they; and to each a future blessedness is promised, which is variously expressed, so as to suit the nature of the grace or duty recommended.

Do we ask then who are happy? It is answered,

(1.) The poor in spirit are happy, ver. 3. There is a poor spiritedness, that is so far from making men blessed, that it is a sin and a snare: Cowardice and base fear, and a willing subjection to the lusts of men. But this poverty of spirit is a gracious disposition of soul, by which we are emptied of self, in order to our being filled with Jesus Christ. To be poor in spirit is, 1. To be contentedly poor, willing to be empty of worldly wealth, if God orders that to be our lot; to bring our mind to our condition, when it is a low condition. Many are poor in the world, but high in spirit; poor and proud, murmuring and complaining, and blaming their lot; but we must accommodate ourselves to our poverty, must know how to be abased, Phil. iv. 12. Acknowledging the wisdom of God in appointing us to poverty, we must be easy in it, patiently bear the inconveniences of it, be thankful for what we have, and make the best of that which is. It is to sit loose to all worldly wealth, and not set our hearts upon it, but cheerfully to bear losses and disappointments, which may befall us in the most prosperous state. It is not in pride or pretence to make ourselves poor; by throwing away what God hath given us, especially as those in the church of Rome, who vow poverty, and yet ingross the wealth of nations; but if we be rich in the world, we must be poor in spirit, i. e. we must condescend to the poor, and sympathize with them, as being touched with the feeling of their infirmities; we must expect and prepare for poverty: must not inordinately fear or shun it, but must bid it welcome, especially when it comes upon us for keeping a good conscience, as they, Heb. x. 34. Job was poor in spirit, when he blessed God in taking away, as well as giving.

2. It is to be humble and low in our own eyes; to be poor in spirit, is to think meanly of ourselves, of what we are, and have to do; the poor are often taken in the Old Testament for the humble and self-denying, as opposed to those that are at ease and the proud; it is to be as little children in our opinion of ourselves, weak and foolish, and insignificant, Matt. xviii. 4-19. 14. Laodicea was poor in spirituals, wretchedly and miserably poor, and yet rich in spirit, so well increased with goods, as to have need of nothing, Rev. iii. 17. On the other hand, Paul was rich in spirituals, excelling most in gifts and graces, and yet poor in spirit, the least of the apostles, less than the least of all saints, and nothing in his own account. It is to look with a holy contempt upon ourselves, to value others and undervalue ourselves in comparison of them. It is to be willing to make ourselves cheap and mean and little to do good; to become all things to all men. It is to acknowledge that God is great, and we are mean; he is holy, and we are sinful; he is all, we are nothing, less than nothing, worse than nothing; and to humble ourselves before him, and under his mighty hand.

3. It is to come off from all confidence in our own righteousness and strength, that we may depend only upon the merit of Christ for our justification, and the Spirit and grace of Christ for our sanctification. That broken and contrite spirit, with which the publican cried for mercy to a poor sinner, in this poverty of spirit. We must call ourselves poor, because always in want of God's grace, always begging at God's door, always hanging on in his house.

Now, (1.) This poverty in spirit is put first among the christian graces; the philosophers did not reckon humility among the moral virtues, but Christ puts it first: Self-denial is the first lesson to be learned in his school, and poverty of spirit intitled to the first beatitude. The foundation of all other graces is laid in humility; those that would build high must begin low; and it is an excellent preparative for the entrance of gospel grace into the soul; it fits the soil to receive the seed. Those that are weary and heavy laden, are the poor in spirit, and they shall find rest with Christ.

(2.) They are blessed; now they are so in this world; God looks graciously upon them; they are his little ones, and have their angels. To them he gives more grace, they live the most comfortable lives, and are easy to themselves and all about them, and nothing comes amiss to them; while high spirits are always uneasy.

(3.) Theirs is the kingdom of heaven. The kingdom of grace is composed of such; they are only fit to be members of Christ's church, which is called the congregation of the poor, Psal. lxxiv. 19. the kingdom of glory is prepared for them. Those that thus humble themselves, and comply with God when he humbles them, shall be thus exalted. The great high spirits go away with the glory of the kingdoms of the earth, but the humble, mild, and yielding souls obtain the glory of the kingdom of heaven. - We are ready to think, those that are rich, and do good with their riches, no doubt but theirs is the kingdom of heaven; for they can thus lay up in store a good security for the time to come. But what shall the poor do, that have not wherewithal to do good? Why, the same happiness is promised to those who are contentedly poor, as to those who are usefully rich: If I am not able to spend cheerfully for his sake, if I can but want cheerfully for his sake, even that shall be recompensed: And do not we serve a good Master then?

(2.) They that mourn are happy, ver. 4. Blessed are they that mourn. This is another strange blessing, and fitly follows the former; the poor use to mourn, the graciously poor mourn graciously. We use to think, Blessed are the merry; but Christ, that was himself a great mourner, saith, Blessed are the mourners. There is a sinful mourning that is an enemy to blessedness, the sorrow of the world, despairing melancholy upon a spiritual account, and disconsolate grief upon a temporal account: There is a natural mourning which may prove a friend to blessedness, by the grace of God working with it, and sanctifying the afflictions to us, for which we mourn: But there is a gracious mourning that qualifies for blessedness, an habitual seriousness, the mind mortified to mirth, and an actual sorrow. 1. A penitential mourning for our own sins, this is godly sorrow, a sorrow according to God; sorrow for sin with an eye to Christ, Zech. xii. 10. Those are God's mourners that live a life of repentance, that lament the corruption of their nature, and their many actual transgressions, and God's withdrawals from them; and out of a regard to God's honour mourn also for the sins of others, and sigh and cry for their abominations, Ezek. ix. 4. 2. A sympathizing mourning for the afflictions of others, that weep with them that weep, are sorrowful for the solemn assemblies, for the desolations of Zion, Zeph. iii. 18. Psal. cxxxvii. 1. especially that look with compassion on perishing souls, and weep over them, as Christ over Jerusalem.

Now these gracious mourners, 1. They are blessed; as in vain and sinful laughter the heart is sorrowful, so in gracious mourning the heart hath a serious joy, a secret satisfaction, which a stranger doth not intermeddle with. They are blessed, for they are like the Lord Jesus, who was a man of sorrow, and of whom we never read that he laughed, but often that he wept. They are armed against the many temptations that attend vain mirth, and are prepared for the comforts of a sealed pardon and a settled peace. 2. They shall be comforted; though perhaps they are not presently comforted, yet plentiful provision is made for their comfort; light is sown for them; and in heaven it is certain they shall be comforted, as Lazarus, Luke xvi. 25. Note, The happiness of heaven lies in being perfectly and eternally comforted, and the wiping away of all tears from their eyes: It is the joy of our Lord, a fulness of joy, and pleasure for evermore; which will be doubly sweet to those that have been prepared for them by this godly sorrow. Heaven will be heaven indeed to those that go mourning thither; it will be a harvest of joy, the return of a seedness of tears, Psal. cxxvi. 5, 6, a mountain of joy, to which our way lies through a vale of tears. See Isa. lvi. 10.

(3.) The meek are happy, ver. 5. Blessed are the meek. The meek are those that quietly submit themselves to God, to his word, and to his rod, that follow his conduct and comply with his designs, and that are gentle towards all men, Tir. iii. 2. that can bear provocation without being inflamed by it, are either silent, or return a soft answer, and that can shew their displeasure when there is occasion for it, without being transported into any indecencies; that can be cool when others are hot, and in their patience keep possession of their own souls, when they can scarce keep possession of any thing else: They are the meek, that are rarely and hardly provoked, but quickly and easily pacified, and would, rather forgive twenty injuries than revenge one, having the rule of their own spirits.

Now these meek ones are here represented as happy, even in this world. 1. They are blessed, for they are like the blessed Jesus, in that wherein particularly they are to learn of him, Matt. xi. 29. They are like the blessed God himself, who is Lord of his anger, and in whom fury is not; they are blessed, for they have the most comfortable undisturbed enjoyment of themselves, their friends, their God; they are fit for any relation; any condition, any company; fit to live, and fit to die. 2. They shall inherit the earth; it is quoted from Psal. xxxvii. 11. and it is almost the only express temporal promise in all the New Testament: Not that they shall always have much of the earth, much less that they shall be put off with that only, but this branch of godliness hath in a special manner the promise of the life that now is. Meekness, however ridiculed and run down, hath a real tendency to our health, wealth, comfort and safety, even in this world: The meek and quiet are observed to live the most easy lives, compared with the sroward and turbulent. Or, they shall inherit the land, so it may be read, the land of Canaan, a type of heaven: So that all the blessedness of heaven above, and all the blessings of earth beneath, are the meek man's portion.

(4.) They that hunger and thirst after righteousness are happy, ver. 6. Some understand this as a further instance of outward poverty, and a low condition in this world, which not only exposeth men to injury and wrong, but makes it in vain for them to seek to have justice done them; they hunger and thirst after it, but such is the power on the side of their oppressors, that they cannot have it: They desire only that which is just and equal, but it is denied them by those that neither fear God nor regard man. This is a melancholy case! Yet, blessed are they, if they suffer these hardships for, and with a good conscience; let them hope in God, who will see justice done, right takes place, and will deliver the poor from their oppressors, Psal. ciii. 6. Those that contentedly bear oppression, and quietly refer themselves to God to plead their cause, shall in due time be satisfied, abundantly satisfied, in the wisdom and kindness that shall appear in his appearances for them. But it is certainly to be understood spiritually of such a desire, as being terminated on such an object is gracious, and the work of God's grace in the soul, and qualifies for the gifts of the divine favour.

1. Righteousness is here put for all spiritual blessings: See Psal. xxiv. 5. Matt. vi. 33. They are purchased for us by the righteousness of Christ, conveyed and secured by the imputation of that righteousness to us, and confirmed by the faithfulness of God. To have Christ made of God to us righteousness, and to be made the righteousness of God in him; to have the whole man renewed in righteousness, so as to become a new man, and to bear the image of God; to have an interest in Christ and the promises; this is righteousness. 2. These we must hunger and thirst after: We must truly and really desire them, as one that is hungry and thirsty desires meat and drink, that will not be satisfied with any thing but meat and drink, and will be satisfied with them, though other things be wanting. Our desires of spiritual blessings must be earnest and importunate: Give me these, or else I die; every thing else is dross and chaff, unsatisfying; give me these, and I have enough, though I had nothing else. Hunger and thirst are appetites that return frequently, and call for fresh satisfactions; so these holy desires rest not in any thing attained, but are carried out towards renewed pardons and daily fresh supplies of grace: The quickened soul calls for constant meals of righteousness, grace to do the work of every day in its day, as duly as the living body calls for food. They that hunger and thirst will labour for supplies; so we must not only desire spiritual blessings, but take pains for them in the use of the appointed means. Dr. Hammond, in his practical Catechism, distinguisheth between hunger and thirst: Hunger is a desire of food to sustain, such is sanctifying righteousness: Thirst is the desire of drink to refresh, such is justifying righteousness, and the sense of our pardon.

Now those who thus hunger and thirst after spiritual blessings, they are blessed in those desires, and shall be filled with those blessings. 1. They are blessed in those desires. Though all desires of grace are not grace, feigned, faint desires are not, yet such a desire as this is; it is an evidence of something good, and an earnest of something better. It is a desire of God's own raising, and he will not forsake the work of his own hands. Something or other the soul will be hungering and thirsting after, therefore they are blessed who fasten upon the right object, which is satisfying and not deceiving, and do not part after the dust of the earth, Amos ii. 7. Isa. lv. 2. 2. They shall be filled with those blessings. God will give them what they desire to their complete satisfaction. It is God only who can fill a soul, whose grace and favour is adequate to its just desires, and he will fill those with grace for grace, that in a sense of their own emptiness have recourse to his fulness. He filleth the hungry, Luke i. 53. sates them, Jer. xxxi. 25. The happiness of heaven will certainly fill the soul; their righteousness shall be complete, the favour of God and his image, both in their full perfection.

5. The merciful are happy, ver. 7. This like the rest is a paradox; for the merciful are not taken to be the wisest, nor are likely to be the richest, yet Christ pronounceth them blessed. Those are the merciful who are piously and charitably inclined to pity, help, and succour those that are in misery. A man may be truly merciful, that has not wherewithal to be bountiful or liberal, and then God accepts the willing mind; we must not only bear our own afflictions patiently, but we must by christian sympathy partake of the afflictions of our brethren, pity must be shewed, Job vi. 14. and bowels of mercy put on, Col. iii. 12. and being put on, they must put forth themselves in contributing all we can for the assistance of those that are any way in misery. We must have compassion on the souls of others and help them; pity the ignorant and instruct them, the careless, and warn them; those that are in a state of sin, and snatch them as brands out of the burning. We must have compassion on those that are melancholy and in sorrow and comfort them, Job xvi. 5. on those that we have advantage against, and not be rigorous and severe with them; on those that are in want, and supply them; which if we deny to do, whatever we pretend, we shut up the bowels of our compassion, James ii. 15, 16. 1 John iii. 17, 18. Draw out thy soul, by dealing thy bread to the hungry, Isa. lviii. 7-10. Nay, a good man is merciful to his beast.

Now those that are merciful, 1. They are blessed; so it was said in the Old Testament, blessed is he that considers the poor, Psal. xli. 1. Herein they resemble God, whose goodness is his glory; in being merciful as he is merciful, we are in our measure perfect as he is perfect. It is an evidence of love to God, it will be a satisfaction to ourselves to be any way instrumental for the benefit of others. One of the purest and most refined delights in this world, is that of doing good. In this world, blessed are the merciful, is included that saying of Christ, which otherwise we find not in the gospels, it is more blessed to give than to receive, Acts xx. 35. 2. They shall obtain mercy: mercy with men: when they need it; he that watereth, shall be watered also himself (we know not how soon we may stand in need of kindness, and therefore should be kind) but especially mercy with God, for with the merciful he will shew himself merciful, Psal. cxviii. 25. The most merciful and charitable cannot pretend to merit, but must fly to mercy. The merciful shall find with God sparing mercy, Mat. vi. 14. supplying mercy, Prov. xix. 17. sustaining mercy, Psal. xli. 2. Mercy in that day, 2. Tim. i. 18. Nay, they shall inherit the kingdom prepared for them, Mat. xxv. 34, 35. whereas they shall have judgment without mercy, which can be nothing short of hell fire, that have shewed no mercy.

6. The pure in heart are happy, ver. 8. Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God. This is the most comprehensive of all the beatitudes; here is holiness and happiness fully described and put together.

1. Here is the most comprehensive character of the blessed; they are the pure in heart. Note, True religion consists in heart purity. Those that are inwardly pure, shew themselves to be under the power of pure and undefiled defiled religion. True christianity lies in the heart, the purity of the heart; the washing of that from wickedness, Jer. iv. 14. We must lift up to God, not only clean hands, but a pure heart, Psalm xxiv. 4, 5. 1 Tim. i. 5. The heart must be pure in opposition to mixture, an honest heart that aims well, and pure in opposition to pollution and defilement; as wine unmixed, as water unmuddied. The heart must be kept pure from fleshly lusts, all unchaste thoughts and desires, and from worldly lusts; covetousness is called filthy lucre; from all filthiness of flesh and spirit, all that which comes out of the heart and defiles the man. The heart must be purified by faith, and entire for God, must be presented and preserved a chaste virgin to Christ. Create in me such a clean heart, O God.

2. Here is the most comprehensive comfort of the blessed, they shall see God. Note, 1. It is the perfection of the soul's happiness to see God; seeing him, as we may by faith in our present state, is a heaven upon earth; and seeing him as we shall in the future state, is the heaven of heavens; to see him as he is, face to face, and no longer through a glass darkly, to see him as ours, and to see him and enjoy him; to see him and be like him, and be satisfied with that likeness, Psalm xvii. 15. and to see him for ever and never lose the sight of him; this is heaven's happiness. 2. The happiness of seeing God is promised to those, and those only, that are pure in heart. None but the pure are capable of seeing God, nor would it be a felicity to the impure; what pleasure could an unsanctified soul take in the vision of a holy God? As he cannot endure to look upon their iniquity, so they cannot endure to look upon his purity; nor shall any unclean thing enter into the new Jerusalem; but all that are pure in heart, all that are truly sanctified, have desires wrought in them, which nothing but the sight of God will satisfy, and divine grace will not leave those desires unsatisfied.

7. The peace-makers are happy, ver. 9. The wisdom that is from above is first pure and then peaceable; the blessed ones pure towards God, and peaceable towards men; for with reference to both, conscience must be kept void of offence. The peace-makers are those that have, 1. A peaceable disposition; as to make a lie, is to be given and addicted to lying; so to make peace, is to have a strong and hearty affection to peace. I am for peace, Psalm cxx. 7. It is to love and desire and delight in peace; to be in it as in our element, and to study to be quiet. 2. A peaceable conversation; industriously, as far as we can to preserve the peace that it be not broken; and to recover it when it is broken; to hearken to proposals of peace ourselves, and to be ready to make them to others. Where distance is among brethren and neighbours, to do all we can to accommodate it and to be reconcilers of the breaches. The making peace is sometimes a thankless office, and it is the lot of him that parts a fray to have blows on both sides; yet it is a good office, and we must be forward to it. Some think this is intended especially as a lesson for ministers, who should do all they can to reconcile those that are at variance, and to promote Christian love among those under their charge.

Now those that are so, 1. They are blessed; for they have the satisfaction of enjoying themselves by keeping the peace, and of being truly serviceable to others by disposing them to peace. They are working together with Christ, who came into the world to slay all enmities, and to proclaim peace on earth. 2. They shall be called the children of God; it will be an evidence to themselves that they are so; God will own them as such, and herein they will resemble him. He is the God of peace, the Son of God is the prince of peace, the Spirit of adoption is a spirit of peace. Since God has declared himself reconcilable to us all, he will not own those for his children that are implacable in their enmity to one another; for if blessed are the peace-makers, woe to the peace-breakers. Now by this it appears, that Christ never intended to have his religion propagated by fire and sword or penal laws, nor to own bigotry or intemperate zeal as the marks of his disciples. The children of this world love to fish in troubled waters, but the children of God are the peace-makers, the quiet in the land.

8. Those that are persecuted for righteousness sake are happy. This is the greatest paradox of all, and peculiar to Christianity, and therefore it is put last, and more largely insisted upon than any of the rest, ver. 10, 11, 12. This beatitude, like Pharaoh's dream, is doubted, because hardly credited, and yet the thing is certain; and in the latter part there is a change of the person, blessed are ye; ye my disciples and immediate followers. This is that, which you that excel in virtue are more immediately concerned in, for you must count upon hardships and troubles more than other men, Observe here,

1. The case of suffering saints described, and it is a hard case, and a very piteous one.

1. They are persecuted, hunted, pursued, run down as noxious beasts are, that are sought for to be destroyed; as if a Christian did, caput gelere lupinum, as an out law is said to do, any one that finds him may slay him; they are abandoned as the off-scouring of all things; fined, imprisoned, banished, stripped of their estates, excluded from all places of profit and trust; scourged, racked, tortured, always delivered to death and accounted as sheep for the slaughter. This has been the effect of the enmity of the serpent's seed against the holy seed, ever since, Gen. iii. 15. from the blood of righteous Abel. It was so in Old Testament times, as we find, Heb. xi. 35, &c. Christ has told us it would much more be so with the Christian church, and we are not to think it strange, 1 John iii. 13. He has left us an example.

2. They are reviled, and have all manner of evil said against them falsely. Nick-names and names of reproach are fastened upon them, upon particular persons, and upon the generation of the righteous in the gross, to render them odious; sometimes to make them despicable that they may be trampled upon, sometimes to make them formidable that they may be run upon; things laid to their charge that they knew not, Psalm xxxv. 20. Jer. xx. 18. Acts xvii. 6, 7. Those that have not had power in their hands to do them any other mischief, yet could do this; and those that have had power to persecute, have found it necessary to do this too, to justify themselves in their barbarous usage of them; they could not have baited them if they had not dressed them in bear-skins, nor have given them the worst of treatment, if they had not first represented them as the worst of men: They will revile you and persecute you. Note, Reviling the saints is persecuting them, and will be found so shortly, when hard speeches must be accounted for, Jude 15. and cruel mockings, Heb. xi. 36. They will say all manner of evil of you falsely. Sometimes before the seat of judgment, as witnesses, sometimes in the seat of the scornful, with hypocritical mockers at feasts; they are the song of the drunkards. Sometimes to their faces, as Shimei cursed David, sometimes behind their backs, as the enemies of Jeremiah did. Note, There is no evil so black and horrid, but one time or other it has been said falsely of Christ's disciples and followers.

3. All this is for righteousness sake, ver. 16. for my sake, ver. 11. If for righteousness sake, then for Christ's sake, for he is nearly interested in the work of righteousness; enemies to righteousness are enemies to Christ. This precludes those from this blessedness that suffer justly and are evil spoken of truly for their real crimes, let such be ashamed and confounded, it is part of their punishment; it is not the suffering, but the cause that makes the martyr. Those suffer for righteousness sake, that suffer because they will not sin against their consciences, and that suffer for doing that which is good. Whatever pretence persecutors have, it is the power of godliness that they have an enmity to; it is really Christ and his righteousness that is maligned, hated, and persecuted; for thy sake I have borne reproach, Psalm lxxix. 9. Rom. viii. 36.

2. The comforts of suffering saints laid down.

1. They are blessed, for they now in their life-time receive their evil things, Luke xvi. 25. and receive them upon a good account. They are blessed, for it is an honour to them, Acts v. 41. it is an opportunity of glorifying Christ and doing good, and of experiencing special comforts and visits of grace, and tokens of his presence, 2 Cor. i. 5. Dan. iii. 24. Rom. viii. 29.

2. They shall be recompensed, theirs is the kingdom of heaven. They have at present a sure title to it and sweet foretastes of it, and shall ere long be in possession of it. Though there be nothing in those sufferings that can in strictness merit of God, for the sins of the best deserve the worst, yet this is here promised as a reward, ver. 12. Great is your reward in heaven; so great as far to transcend the service. It is in heaven, future and out of sight, but well secured, out of the reach of chance, fraud and violence. Note, God will provide, that those who lose for him, though it be life itself, shall not lose by him in the end. Heaven at last will be an abundant recompense for all the difficulties we meet with in our way. This is that which has borne up the suffering saints in all ages, this joy set before them.

3. So persecuted they the prophets that were before you, ver. 12. They were before you in excellency, above what you are yet arrived to, they were before you in time, that they might be examples to you of suffering affliction and of patience; James v. 10. They were in like manner persecuted and abused, and can you expect to go to heaven in a way by yourselves? Was not Isaiah mocked for his line upon line? Elisha for his bald head? Were not all the prophets thus treated? therefore marvel not at it as a strange thing, murmur not at it as a hard thing; it is a comfort to see the way of suffering a beaten road, and an honour to follow such leaders. That grace that was sufficient for them to carry them through their sufferings, shall not be deficient to us. Those that are your enemies, are the seed and successors of them that of old mocked the messengers of the Lord, 2 Chron. xxxvi. 16. Matt. xxiii. 25. Acts vii. 52.

4. Therefore rejoice and be exceedingly glad, ver. 12. It is not enough to be patient and content under these sufferings as under common afflictions, and not to render railing for railing, but we must rejoice, because the honour and dignity, the pleasure and advantage of suffering for Christ, is much more considerable than the pain or shame of it. Not that we must take a pride in our sufferings, that spoils all; but we must take a pleasure in them as Paul, 2 Cor. xii. 10. As knowing Christ is herein before-hand with us, and he will not be behind-hand with us, 1 Pet. iv. 12, 13.

13. Ye are the salt of the earth: but if the salt have lost its savour, wherewith shall it be salted? it is thenceforth good for nothing, but to be cast out, and to be trodden under foot of man. 14. Ye are the light of the world. A city that is set on a hill cannot be hid. 15. Neither do men light a candle, and put it under a bushel, but on a candlestick; and it giveth light unto all that are in the house. 16. Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven.

Christ had lately called his disciples and told them they should be fishers of men; here he tells them further what he designed them to be, the salt of the earth and lights of the world, that they might be indeed what it was expected they should be.

1. Ye are the salt of the earth. This would encourage and support them under their sufferings, that though they should be treated with contempt, yet they should really be blessings to the world, and the more so for their suffering thus. The prophets that went before them were the salt of the land of Canaan, but the apostles were the salt of the whole earth, for they must go into all the world to preach the gospel. It was a discouragement to them that they were so few and so weak; what could they do in so large a province as the whole earth? Nothing, if they were to work by force of arms and dint of sword, but being to work silently as salt, one handful of that salt would diffuse its savour far and wide, would go a great way and work insensibly and irresistibly as leaven, Matt. xiii. 33. The doctrine of the gospel is as salt, it is penetrating, quick and powerful, Heb. iv. 12. pricks to the heart, Acts ii. 37. It is cleansing, it is relishing, and preserves from rottenness and putrefaction; we read of the savour of the knowledge of Christ, 2 Cor. ii. 14. for all other learning is insipid without that. An everlasting covenant is called a covenant of salt, Numb. xviii. 19. and the gospel is an everlasting gospel. Salt was required in all the sacrifices, Lev. ii. 13. in Ezekiel's mystical temple, Ezek. xliii. 24. Now, Christ's disciples having themselves learned the doctrine of the gospel, and being employed to teach it to others, were as salt. Note, Christians, and especially ministers, are the salt of the earth.

1. If they be such as they should be, they are as good salt, white and small, and broken into many grains, but very useful and necessary. Pliny saith, Sine sale vita humana non potest degere. See in this, 1. What they are to be in themselves, seasoned with the gospel, with the salt of grace; thoughts and affections, words and actions, all seasoned with grace, Col. iv. 6. Have salt in yourselves, else you cannot diffuse it to others, Mark ix. 50. 2. What they are to be to others; they must not only be good, but do good; must insinuate themselves into the minds of people, not to serve any secular interest of their own, but that they may transform them into the taste and relish of the gospel. 3. What great blessings they are to the world. Mankind lying in ignorance and wickedness, was a great heap of unsavoury stuff ready to putrify; but Christ sent forth his disciples, by their lives and doctrines, to season it with knowledge and grace, and so to render it acceptable to God, to the angels, and to all that relish divine things. 4. How they must expect to be disposed of; not laid on a heap, they must not continue always together at Jerusalem, but must be scattered as salt upon the meat, here a grain and there a grain, as the Levites were dispersed in Israel, that wherever they live they may communicate their savour. Some have observed, that whereas it is foolishly called an ill omen to have the salt fall towards us, it is really an ill omen to have this salt fall from us.

2. If they be not, they are as salt that has lost its savour. If you that should season others are yourselves unsavoury, void of spiritual life, relish, and vigour; if a Christian be so, especially if a minister be so, his condition is very sad; for, 1. He is irrecoverable; wherewith shall it be salted? Salt is a remedy for unsavoury meat, but there is no remedy for unsavoury salt. Christianity will give a man a relish; but if a man can take up and continue the profession to that, and yet remain flat and foolish, and graceless less and insipid, there is no other doctrine, no other means that can be applied to make him savioury. If christianity do not do it, nothing will. 2. He is unprofitable. It is therefore good for nothing; what use can it be put to, in which it will not do more hurt than good? As a man without reason, so is a Christian without grace. A wicked man is the worst of creatures, a wicked Christian is the worst of men, and a wicked minister is the worst of Christians. 3. He is doomed to ruin and rejection. He shall be cast out, expelled the church and the communion of the faithful, to which he is a blot and a burden; and he shall be trdden under foot of men. Let God be glorified in the shame and rejection of those by whom he has been reproached, and who have made themselves fit for nothing but to be trampled upon.

2. Ye are the light of the world, ver. 14. This also speaks them useful as the former, (sole et sale nihil utilis) but more inglorious. All Christians are light in the Lord, Eph. v. 8. and must shine as lights, Phil. ii. 15. but ministers in a special manner. Christ calls himself the light of the world, John viii. 12. and they are workers together with him, and have some of his honour put upon them. Truly the light is sweet, it is welcome; so the light of the first day of the world was so, when it shone out of darkness; so is the morning light of every day; so was the gospel, and those that spread it, to all sensible people. The world sat in darkness, Christ raised up his disciples to shine in it, and, that they may do so, from him they borrow and derive their light.

This similitude is here explained in two things:

(1.) As the lights of the world, they are illustrious and conspicuous, and have many eyes upon them. A city that is set on a hill cannot be hid. The disciples of Christ, especially those that are forward and zealous in his service, become remarkable and are taken notice of as beacons. They are for signs, Isa. viii. 18. men wondered at, Zech. iii. 18. all their neighbours have an eye upon them. Some admire them, commend them, rejoice in them, and study to imitate them; others envy them, hate them, censure them, and study to blast them. They are concerned there to walk circumspectly, because of their observers; they are as spectacles to the world, and must take heed of every thing that looks ill, because they are so much looked at. The disciples of Christ were obscure men before he called them, but the character he put upon them dignified them, and as preachers of the gospel they made a figure; and though they were reproached for it by some, they were respected for it by others, advanced to thrones and made judges, Luke xxii. 30. for Christ will honour those that honour him.

2. As the lights of the world, they are intended to illuminate and give light to others, ver. 15. And therefore,

1. They shall be set up as lights. Christ having lighted these candles, they shall not be put under a bushel, not confined always as they are now to the cities of Galilee, or the lost sheep of the house of Israel, but they shall be sent into all the world. The churches are the candlesticks, the golden candlesticks in which these lights are placed, that their light may be diffused, and the gospel is so strong a light, and carries with it so much of its own evidence, that, like a city on a hill which cannot be hid, it cannot but appear to be from God, to all those that do not wilfully shut their eyes against it. It will give light to all that are in the house, to all that will draw near to it and come where it is: Those to whom it doth not give light must thank themselves, they will not be in the house with it, will not make a diligent and impartial enquiry into it, but are prejudiced against it.

2. They must shine as lights, 1. By their good preaching. The knowledge they have they must communicate for the good of others: not put it under a bushel, but spread it. The talent must not be buried in a napkin, but traded with. The disciples of Christ must not muffle themselves up in privacy and obscurity, under pretence of contemplation, modesty or self-preservation, but as they have received the gift, must minister the same. See Luke xii. 3. 2. By their good living. They must be burning and shining lights, John v. 35. must evidence in their whole conversation that they are indeed the followers of Christ, James iii. 13. They must be to others for instruction, direction, quickening, comfort, Job xxix. 11.

See here, 1. How our light must shine, by doing such good works, as men may see and may approve of; such works as are of good report among them that are without, and which will therefore give them cause to think well of christianity. We must do good works that may be seen to the edification of others, but not that they may be seen to our own ostentation; we are bid to pray in secret, and what lies between God and our souls must be kept to ourselves; but that which is of itself open and obvious to the sight of men, we must study to make congruous to our profession, and praise-worthy, Phil. iv. 8. Those about us must not only hear our good words, but see our good works, that they may be convinced religion is more than a bare name, and that we do not only make a profession of it, but abide under the power of it.

2. For what end our light must shine. That those who see your good works may be brought, not to glorify you, which was the thing the Pharisees aimed at, and it spoiled the acceptance of all their performances, but to glorify your Father which is in heaven. Note, the glory of God is the great thing we must aim at in every thing we do in religion, 1 Pet. iv. 11. In this centre the lines of all our actions must meet. We must not only endeavour to glorify God ourselves, but we must do all we can to bring others to glorify him. The sight of our good works will do this by furnishing them, 1. With matter for praise. Let them see your good works, that they may see the powers of God's grace in you, and may thank him for it, and give him the glory of it, who has given such power unto men. 2. With motives to piety. Let them see your good works, that they may be convinced of the truth and excellency of the Christian religion, may be provoked by a holy emulation to imitate your good works, and so may glorify God. Note, The holy, regular and exemplary conversation of the saints may do much towards the conversion of sinners; those that are unacquainted with religion, may hereby be brought to know what it is; examples teach: And those that are prejudiced against it, may be hereby brought in love with it, and thus there is a winning virtue in a godly conversation.

17. ¶ Think not that I am come to destroy the law, or the prophets: I am not come to destroy, but to fulfil. 18. For verily I say unto you, Till heaven and earth pass, one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass from the law, till all be fulfilled. 19. Whosoever therefore shall break one of these least commandments, and shall teach men so, he shall be called the least in the kingdom of heaven: but whosoever shall do and teach them, the same shall be called great in the kingdom of heaven. 20. For I say unto you, That except your righteousness shall exceed the righteousness of the Scribes and Pharisees, ye shall in no case enter into the kingdom of heaven.

Those to whom Christ preached, and for whose use he gave these instructions to his disciples, were such as in their religion had in eye, 1. To the scriptures of the Old Testament as their rule, and therein Christ shews them they were in the right. 2. To the Scribes and Pharisees as their example, and therein Christ shews them they were in the wrong; for,

1. The rule Christ came to establish, exactly agreed with the scriptures of the Old Testament, here called the law and the prophets; the prophets were commentators upon the law, and both together made up that rule of faith and practice which Christ found upon the throne in the Jewish church, and here he keeps it on the throne.

1. He protests against the thought of cancelling and weakening the Old Testament. Think not that I am come to destroy the law, and the prophets.

1. Let not the pious Jews, that have an affection for the law and the prophets fear that I come to destroy them. Let not them be prejudiced against Christ and his doctrine, from a jealousy that this kingdom he came to set up, would derogate from the honour of the scriptures they had embraced as coming from God, and had experienced the power and purity of; no, let them be satisfied Christ has no ill design upon the law and the prophets.

2. Let not the profane Jews, that have a disaffection to the law and the prophets and are weary of that yoke, hope that I am come to destroy them. Let not carnal libertines imagine that the Messiah is come to discharge them from the obligation of divine precepts, and yet to secure to them divine promises to make them happy, and yet give them leave to live as they list. Christ commands nothing new that was forbidden, either by the law of nature or the moral law, nor forbids any thing which those laws had enjoined; it is a great mistake to think that he doth, and he here takes care to rectify the mistake. I am not come to destroy. The Saviour of souls is the destroyer of nothing but the works of the devil, of nothing that comes from God, much less of these excellent dictates which we have from Moses and the prophets. No, he came to fulfil them. That is, 1. To obey the commands of the law, for he was made under the law, Gal. iv. 4. He in all respects yielded obedience to the law, honoured his parents, sanctified the sabbath, prayed, gave alms, &c. and did that which never any one else did, obeyed perfectly, and never broke the law in any thing. 2. To make good the promises of the law, and the predictions of the prophets, which did all bear witness to him. The covenant of grace is for substance the same now that it was then, and Christ the mediator of it. 3. To answer the types of the law; thus, (as Bishop Tillotson expresseth it) he did not make void, but make good the ceremonial law, and manifested himself to be the substance of all those shadows. 4. To fill up the defects of it, and so to complete and perfect it. Thus the word ἡ ἀρχὴ, properly signifies; as a vessel that had some water in it before, Christ did not come to pour that out, but to fill it up to the brim; or as a picture that is first rough drawn, some shades only of the piece intended, which are afterwards filled up: so Christ made an improvement of the law and the prophets by his additions and explications. 5. To carry on the same design; the Christian institutes are so far from thwarting and contradicting that which was the main design of the Jewish religion, that they promote it to the highest degree. The gospel is the time of reformation, Heb. ix. 10. not the repeal of the law but the amendment of it, and consequently its establishment.

2. He asserts the perpetuity of it; that not only he designed not the abrogation of it, but it never should be abrogated, ver. 18. Verily I say unto you, I the Amen, the faithful witness solemnly declare it, that till heaven and earth pass, when time shall be no more, and the unchangeable state of recompences shall supersede all laws, one jot, or one tittle, the least and most minute circumstances shall in no wise pass from the law till it be fulfilled; for what is it that God is doing in all the operations, both of providence and grace, but fulfilling the scripture? Heaven and earth shall come together, and all the fulness thereof be wrapt up in ruin and confusion, rather than any word of God shall fall to the ground or be in vain. The word of the Lord endures forever, both that of the law, and that of the gospel. Observe, The care of God concerning his law, extends itself even to those things that seem to be of least account in it; the iota and the tittles, for whatever belongs to God, and bears his stamp, be it ever so little, shall be preserved. The laws of men are contrary to themselves of so much imperfection, that they allow it for a maxim, apices juris non sunt jura, but God will stand by and maintain every iota and tittle of his law.

3. He gives it in charge to his disciples, carefully to preserve the law, and shews them the danger of the neglect and contempt of it, ver. 19. Whosoever therefore shall break one of the least commandments of the law of Moses, much more any of the greater, as the Pharisees did who neglected the weightier matters of the law, and shall teach men so as they did, who made void the commandment of God with their traditions, Matt. xiv. 3. he shall be called the least in the kingdom of heaven: Though the Pharisees be cried up for such teachers as should be, they shall not be employed as teachers in Christ's kingdom; but whosoever shall do and teach them, as Christ's disciples would, and thereby prove themselves better friends to the Old Testament than the Pharisees were, they, though despised by men, shall be called great in the kingdom of heaven. Note, 1. Among the commands of God there are some less than others; none absolutely little, but comparatively so. The Jews reckon the least of the commandments of the law to be that of the birds nest, Deut. xxii. 6, 7. yet even that had a significance and an intention very great and considerable. 2. It is a dangerous thing in doctrine or practice to disannul the least of God's commands, to break them, i. e. to go about either to contract the extent or weaken the obligation of them; whoever doth so will find it is at his peril. Thus to vacate any of the ten commandments, is too bold a stroke for the jealous God to pass by. It is something more than transgressing the law, it is making void the law, Psalm cxix. 126. 3. That the further such corruptions as these spread, the worse they are. It is impudence enough to break the command, but it is a greater degree of it to teach men so. This plainly refers to those who at this time sat in Moses's seat, and by their comments corrupted and perverted the text. Opinions that tend to the destruction of serious godliness and the vitals of religion by corrupt glosses on the scripture, are bad when they are held, but worse when they are propagated and taught as the word of God. He that doth so, shall be called least in the kingdom of heaven; in the kingdom of glory, he shall never come thither, but be eternally excluded; or rather in the kingdom of the gospel-church. He is so far from deserving the dignity of a teacher in it, that he shall not so much as be accounted a member of it. The prophet that teacheth these lies, he shall be the tail in that kingdom, Isa. ix. 15. when truth shall appear in its own evidence, such corrupt teachers, though cried up as the Pharisees, shall be of no account with the wise and good. Nothing makes ministers more contemptible and base than corrupting the law, Mal. ii. 8-11. Those that extenuate and encourage sin, and discountenance and put contempt upon strictness in religion and serious devotion, they are the drag of the church. But on the other hand, 1. Those are truly honourable and of great account in the church of Christ, that lay out themselves by their life and doctrine, to promote the purity and strictness of practical religion; that both do and teach that which is good; for those who do not as they teach, pull down with one hand what they build up with the other; and give themselves the lie, and tempt men to think all religion is a sham; but those who speak from experience, who live up to what they preach, they are truly great, they honour God, and God will honour them, 1 Sam. ii. 10. and hereafter they shall shine as the stars in the kingdom of our Father.

2. The righteousness Christ came to establish by this rule, must exceed that of the Scribes and Pharisees, ver. 20. This was strange doctrine to those who looked upon the Scribes and Pharisees to have arrived at the highest pitch of religion. The Scribes were the most noted teachers of the law, and the Pharisees the most celebrated professors of it, and they both sat in Moses's chair, Matt. xxiii. 2. and had such a reputation among the people, that they were looked upon super-conformable to the law, and people did not think themselves obliged to be as good as they; it was therefore a great surprise to them, to hear that they must be better than they, or they should not go to heaven; and therefore Christ here avers it with solemnity, I say unto you, it is so. The Scribes and Pharisees were enemies to Christ and his doctrine, and were great oppressors; and yet it must be owned there was something commendable in them: They were much in fasting and prayer and giving of alms, were punctual in observing the ceremonial appointments, and made it their business to teach others: They had such an interest in the people, that they thought, if but two men went to heaven, one would be a Pharisee; and yet our Lord Jesus here tells his disciples, that the religion he came to establish did not only exclude the badness but excel the goodness of the Scribes and Pharisees. We must do more than they and better than they, or we shall come short of heaven. They were partial in the law, and laid most stress upon the ritual part of it; but we must be universal, and not think it enough to give the priest his tithe, but must give God our hearts. They minded only the outside, but we must make conscience of inside godliness: They aimed at the praise and applause of men, but we must aim at acceptance with God: they were proud of what they did in religion, and trusted to it as a righteousness; but we, when we have done all, must deny ourselves, and say, we are unprofitable servants, and trust only to the righteousness of Christ; and thus we may go beyond the Scribes and Pharisees.

21. ¶ Ye have heard that it was said by them of old time, thou shalt not kill; and whosoever shall kill shall be in danger of the judgment: 22. But I say unto you, That whosoever is angry with his brother without a cause shall be in danger of the judgment; and whosoever shall say to his brother, Raca, shall be in danger of the council; but whosoever shall say, Thou fool, shall be in danger of hell fire. 23. Therefore if thou bring thy gift to the altar, and there rememberest that thy brother hath ought against thee; 24. Leave there thy gift before the altar, and go thy way; first be reconciled to thy brother, and then come and offer thy gift. 25. Agree with thine adversary quickly, whilst thou art in the way with him; lest at any time the adversary deliver thee to the judge, and the judge deliver thee to the officer, and thou be cast into prison. 26. Verily I say unto thee, Thou shalt by no means come out thence, till thou hast paid the utmost farthing.

Christ having laid down these principles, that Moses and the prophets were still to be their rulers, but the Scribes and Pharisees were to be no longer their rulers, proceeds to expound the law in some particular instances, and to vindicate it from the corrupt glosses which those expositors had put upon it. He adds not any thing new, only limits and restrains some permissions which had been abused; and as to the precepts, shews the breadth, strictness and spiritual nature of them, adding such explanatory statutes as made them more clear, and tended much towards the perfecting of our obedience to them. In these verses he explains the law of the sixth commandment, according to the true intent and full extent of it.

1. Here is the command itself laid down, ver. 12. We have heard it and remember it; he speaks to them that know the law that Moses had read to them in their synagogues every sabbath-day; you have heard that it was said by them, or rather as it is in the margin, to them of old time; to your fore-fathers the Jews, thou shalt not kill. Note, The laws of God are not novel upstart laws, but were delivered to them of old times; they are ancient laws, but of that nature as never to be antiquated or grow obsolete. The moral law agrees with the law of nature, and the eternal rules and reasons of good and evil, that is, the rectitude of the eternal Mind. Killing is here forbidden, killing ourselves, killing any other, directly or indirectly; or being any way accessory to it. The law of God, the God of life, is a hedge of protection about our lives. It was one of the precepts of Noah, Gen. ix. 5, 6.

2. The exposition of this command which the Jewish teachers contented themselves with; their comment upon it was, whosoever shall kill shall be in danger of the judgment: This was all they had to say upon it, that wilful murderers were liable to the sword of justice, and casual ones to the judgment of the city of refuge. The courts of judgment sat in the gate of their principal cities, the judges ordinarily in number twenty-three; these tried, condemned, and executed murderers; so that whoever killed was in danger of their judgment. Now this gloss of theirs upon this commandment was faulty; for it intimated, 1. That the law of the sixth commandment was only external, and forbade no more but the act of murder, and laid no restraints upon the inward lusts, from which wars and fightings come. This was indeed the apêlous pseudos; the fundamental error of the Jewish teachers, that the divine law prohibited only the sinful act not the sinful thought; they did herere in cortice, rested in the letter of the law, and never inquired into the spiritual meaning of it: Paul while a Pharisee did not, till by the key of the tenth commandment divine grace let him into the knowledge of the spiritual nature of all the rest, Rom. vii. 7-14. 2. Another mistake of theirs was, that this law was merely political and municipal, given for them, and intended as a directory for their courts, and no more; as if they only were people, and the wisdom of the law must die with them.

3. The exposition which Christ gave this commandment; and we are sure, that according to his exposition of it we must be judged hereafter, and therefore ought to be ruled now. The commandment is exceeding broad, and not to be limited by the will of the flesh or the will of men.

(1.) Christ tells them, that rash anger is heart-murder, ver. 22. Whosoever is angry with his brother without a cause breaks the sixth commandment. By our brother here we are to understand any person, though never so much our inferior, a child, a servant, for we are all made of one blood. Anger is a natural passion, there are cases in which it is lawful and laudable; but it is then sinful when we are angry without cause. The word is size, which signifies both sine causa, sine effectu, et sine modo; so that the anger is then sinful. 1. When it is without any just provocation given, either for no cause, or no good cause, or no great and proportionable cause. When we are angry at children or servants for that which could not be helped, which was only a piece of forgetfulness or mistake, that we ourselves might easily have been guilty of, and for which we would not have been angry at ourselves. When we are angry upon groundless surmises or for trivial affronts not worth speaking of. 2. When it is without any good end aimed at, merely to shew our authority, to gratify a brutish passion, to let people know our resentments, and excite themselves to revenge, then it is vain, it is to do hurt; whereas if we are at any time angry, it should be to awaken the offender to repentance and prevent his doing so again, to clear ourselves, (2 Cor. vii. 11.) and to give warning to others. 3. When it exceeds due bounds, when we are hardy and headstrong in our anger, violent and vehement, outrageous and mischievous, and seek the hurt of those we are displeased at. This is a breach of the sixth commandment, for he that is thus angry would kill if he could and durst; he has taken the first step towards it: Cain's killing his brother began in anger, he is a murderer in the account of God who knows his heart, whence murders proceed, Matt. xvi. 19.

(2.) He tells them, that giving opprobrious language to our brother is tongue-murder, calling him Raca, and Thou fool: When this is done with mildness and for a good end, to convince others of their vanity and folly, it is not sinful: Thus James saith, O vain man; and Paul, Thou fool; and Christ himself, O fools, and slow of heart: But when it proceeds from anger and malice within, it is the smoke of that fire which is kindled from hell, and falls under the same character. 1. Raca is a scornful word and comes from pride, thou empty fellow; it is the language of that which Solomon calls proud wrath, Prov. xxi. 24, which tramples upon our brother, disdains to set him even with the dogs of the flock. This people which knows not the law is cursed, is such language, John vii. 49. 2. Thou fool is a spiteful word, and comes from hatred; looking upon him, not only as mean and not to be honoured, but as vile and not to be loved; thou wicked man, thou reprobate; the former speaks a man without wit, this (in scripture-language) speaks a man without grace; the more the reproach touching his spiritual condition, the worse it is: the former is a haughty taunting of our brother, that is a malicious censuring and condemning him as abandoned of God: Now this is a breach of the sixth commandment; malicious slanders and censures are poison under the tongue, that kills secretly and slowly; bitter words are as arrows that wound suddenly, Psal. lxiv. 3, or as a sword in the bones: The good name of our neighbour, which is better than life, is thereby stabbed and murdered; and it is an evidence of such an ill-will to our neighbour as would strike at his life, if it were in our power.

(3.) He tells them that how light soever they made of their sins, they will certainly be reckoned for; he that is angry with his brother shall be in danger of the judgment and anger of God; he that calls him Raca, shall be in danger of the council, i. e. of being punished by the Sanhedrin for reviling an Israelite; but whosoever saith, Thou fool, thou profane person, thou child of hell, shall be in danger of hell-fire, to which he condemns his brother; so the learned Dr. Whitby. Some think, in allusion to the penalties used in the several courts of judgment among the Jews, Christ shews, that the sin of rash anger exposes men to lower or higher punishments according to the degrees of its proceeding. The Jews had three capital punishments each worse than the other; beheading, which was inflicted by the judgment; stoning, by the council, or chief Sanhedrin; and burning in the valley of the son of Hinnon, which was used only in extraordinary cases: It signifies therefore that rash anger and reproachful language are damning sins; but some are more sinful than others, and accordingly there is a greater damnation, and a sorer punishment reserved for them: Christ would thus shew which sin was most sinful, by shewing which was the punishment whereof was most dreadful.

4. From all this it is here inferred, that we ought carefully to preserve Christian love and peace with our brethren, and if at any time a breach happens, to labour for a reconciliation, by confessing our fault, humbling ourselves to our brother, begging his pardon, and making restitution, or offering satisfaction for wrong done in word or deed according as the nature of the thing is; and to do this quickly, for two reasons:

(1.) Because till this be done we are utterly unfit for communion with God in holy ordinances, ver. 23, 24. The case supposed is, that thy brother have somewhat against thee, that thou hast injured and offended him, either really or in his apprehension: if thou art the party offended, there needs not this delay; if thou have ought against thy brother, make a short work of it, no more is to be done but to forgive him, Mark xi. 25, and forgive the injury; but if the quarrel begun on thy side, and the fault was either, at first, or afterwards thine, so that thy brother has a controversy with thee, go and be reconciled to him before thou offer thy gift at the altar, before thou approach solemnly to God in the gospel services of prayer and praise, hearing the word of the sacraments. Note, 1. When we are addressing ourselves to any religious exercises, it is good for us to take that occasion of serious reflection and self-examination: There are many things to be remembered when we bring our gifts to the altar, and this among the rest, whether our brother hath ought against us: Then, if ever, we are disposed to be serious, and therefore should then call ourselves to an account. 2. Religious exercises are not acceptable to God, if they be done when we are in wrath: Envy, malice and uncharitableness, are sins so displeasing to God, that nothing pleases him which comes from a heart wherein those are predominant, 1 Tim. ii. 8. Prayers made in wrath are written in gall, Isa. i. 15.—lviii. 4. 3. Love and charity is so much better than all burnt-offerings and sacrifice, that God will have reconciliation made with an offended brother before the gift be offered; he is content to stay for the gift, rather than have it offered while we are under guilt and engaged in a quarrel. 4. Though we are dislited for communion with God, by a continual quarrel with a brother, yet that can be no excuse for the omission or neglect of our duty: Leave there thy gift before the altar, lest otherwise, when thou art gone away thou be tempted not to come again. Many give this as a reason why they do not come to church or to the communion, because they are at variance with some neighbour; and whose fault is that? One sin will never excuse another, but will rather double the guilt; want of charity cannot justify the want of piety. The difficulty is easily got over: those who have wronged us, we must forgive; and those whom we have wronged, we must make satisfaction to, or at least make a tender of it, and desire a renewing of the friendship, so that if reconciliation be not made it may not be our fault; and then come, come and welcome, come and offer thy gift, and it shall be accepted. Therefore we must not let the sun go down upon our wrath any day, because we must go to prayer before before we go to sleep, much less let the sun rise upon our wrath on a sabbath-day, because it is a day of prayer.

(2.) Because till this be done we lie exposed to much danger, ver. 25, 26. It is at our peril if we do not labour after an agreement, and that quickly, upon two accounts:

1. Upon a temporal account. If the offence we have done to our brother in his body, goods, or good name, be such as will bear an action, in which he may recover considerable damages, it is our wisdom, and it is duty to our family, to prevent that by a humble submission and a just and peaceable satisfaction; lest otherwise he recover it by law, and put us to the extremity of a prison. In such a case it is better compound and make the best terms we can, than to stand it out; for it is in vain to contend with the law, and there is danger of our being crushed by it. Many ruin their estates by an obstinate persisting in the offences they have given, which would soon have been pacified by a little yielding at first. Solomon's advice in case of suretyship is, Go, humble thyself, and so secure and deliver thyself, Prov. vi. 1—5. It is good to agree, for the law is costly. Though we must be merciful to those we have advantage against, yet we must be just to those that have advantage against us as far as we are able. Agree and compound with thine adversary quickly, lest he be exasperated by thy stubbornness and provoked to insist upon the utmost demand, and will not make thee the abatement which at first he would have made. A prison is an uncomfortable place to those who are brought to it by their own pride and prodigality, their own wilfulness and folly.

2. Upon a spiritual account. Go, and be reconciled to thy brother, be just to him, be friends with him, because while the quarrel continues, as thou art unfit to bring thy gift to the altar, unfit to come to the table of the Lord, so thou art unfit to die; if thou persist in this sin, there is danger lest thou be suddenly snatched away by the wrath of God, whose judgment thou canst not escape or except against; and if that iniquity be laid to thy charge, thou art undone for ever. Hell is a prison for all that live and die in malice and uncharitableness, for all that are contentious, Rom. ii. 8. and out of that prison there is no rescue, no redemption, no escape, no eternity.

This is very applicable to the great business of our reconciliation to God through Christ: Agree with him quickly, whilst thou art in the way. Note, 1. The great God is an adversary to all sinners, Asadikos, a law adversary; he has a controversy with them, an action against them. 2. It is our concern to agree with him, to acquaint ourselves with him that we may be at peace, Joh xii. 21. 2 Cor. v. 20. 3. It is our wisdom to do this quickly, while we are in the way. While we are alive we are in the way, after death it will be too late to it, therefore give not sleep to thine eyes till it be done. 4. Those that continue in a state of enmity to God, are continually exposed to the arrests of his justice and the most dreadful instances of his wrath. Christ is the Judge, to whom impenitent sinners will be delivered; for all judgment is committed to the Son: He that was rejected as a Saviour, cannot be escaped as a Judge, Rev. vi. 16, 17. It is a fearful thing to be thus turned over to the Lord Jesus, when the Lamb shall become a lion. Angels are the officers to whom Christ will deliver them, Matt. xiii. 41, 42. Devils are so too, having the power of death, as executioners to all unbelievers, Heb. ii. 14. Hell is the prison, into which those will be cast that continue in a state of enmity to God, 2 Pet. ii. 4. 5. Damned sinners must lie by it to eternity; they shall not depart till they have paid the uttermost farthing, and that will not be to the utmost ages of eternity: Divine justice will be for ever in the satisfying, but never satisfied.

27. ¶ Ye have heard that it was said by them of old time, Thou shalt not commit adultery: 28. But I say unto you, That whosoever looketh on a woman to lust after her hath committed adultery with her already in his heart. 29. And if thy right eye offend thee, pluck it out and cast it from thee: for it is profitable for thee that one of thy members should perish, and not that thy whole body should be cast into hell. 30. And if thy right hand offend thee, cut it off, and cast it from thee: for it is profitable for thee that one of thy members should perish, and not that thy whole body should be cast into hell. 31. It hath been said, Whosoever shall put away his wife, let him give her a writing of divorcement: 32. But I say unto you, That whosoever shall put away his wife, saving for the cause of fornication, causeth her to commit adultery: and whosoever shall marry her that is divorced committeth adultery.

We have here an exposition of the seventh commandment, given us by the same hand that made the law, and therefore was fittest to be the interpreter of it: It is the law against uncleanness, which fitly follows upon the former; that laid a restraint upon sinful passions, this upon sinful appetites, both which ought always to be under the government of reason and conscience, and if indulged are equally pernicious.

1. The command is here laid down ver. 17. Thou shalt not commit adultery: which includes a prohibition of all other acts of uncleanness, and the desire of them; but the Pharisees, in their expositions of this command, made it to extend no further than the act of adultery, suggesting if the iniquity was only regarded in the heart and went no further, God could not hear it, would not regard it, (Psal. lvi. 18.) and therefore they thought it enough to be able to say, they were no adulterers, Luke xviii. 11.

2. It is here explained in the strictness of it in three things which would seem new and strange to those who had been always governed by the tradition of the elders, and took all for oracle that they taught.

(1.) We are here taught, that there is such a thing as heart-adultery, adulterous thoughts and dispositions, which never proceed to the act of adultery and fornication; and perhaps the defilement which these give to the soul, that is here so clearly asserted, was not only included in the seventh commandment, but was signified and intended in many of those ceremonial pollutions under the law, for which they were to wash their clothes and bathe their flesh in water. Ver. 28. Whosoever looketh on a woman, not only another man's wife, as some would have it, but any woman, to lust after her, has committed adultery with her in his heart. This command forbids, not only the acts of fornications or adultery, but, 1. All appetites to them, all lusting after the forbidden object; this is the beginning of the sin, lust conceiving, Jam. i. 15. it is an ill step towards the sin: and where the lust is dwelt upon and approved, and the wanton desire is rolled under the tongue as a sweet morsel, it is the commission of the sin, as far as the heart can do it, there wants nothing, but a convenient opportunity for the sin itself. Adultera mens est, Ovid. Lust is conscience baffled or biased; biased, if it say nothing against the sin; baffled, if it prevail not in what it saith. 2. All approaches towards them; feeding the eye with the sight of the forbidden fruit; not only looking for that end, that I may lust; but looking till I do lust, or looking to gratify the lust, where further satisfaction cannot be obtained. The eye is both the inlet and outlet of a great deal of wickedness of this kind, witness Joseph's mistress; Gen. xxxix. 7. Samson, Judges xvi. 1. David, 2 Sam. xi. 2. We read of eyes full of adultery, that cannot cease from this sin, 2 Pet. ii. 14. what need have we therefore, with holy Job, to make a covenant with our eyes; to make this bargain with them, that they should have the pleasure of beholding the light of the sun and the works of God, provided they would never fasten or dwell upon any thing that might occasion impure imaginations or desires; and, under this penalty, that if they did, they must smart for it in penitential tears? Job xxxi. 1. What have we the covering of the eyes for, but to restrain corrupt glances and keep out their defiling impressions? This forbids also the using of any other of our senses to stir up lust. If ensnaring looks are forbidden fruit, much more unclean discourses, and wanton dalliances, the fuel and bellows of this hellish fire. These precepts are hedges about the law of heart-purity, ver. 8. And if looking be lust, they who dress and deck, and expose themselves with design to be looked at and lusted after, (like Jezebel, that painted her face and tired her head, and looked out of the window) are no less guilty. Men sin, but devils tempt to sin.

(2.) That such looks and such dalliances, are so very dangerous and destructive to the soul, that it is better to loose the eye and the hand, than thus offend, than give way to the sin, and perish eternally in it. This lesson is here taught us, ver. 29, 30. Corrupt nature would soon object against the prohibition of heart-adultery, that it is impossible to be governed by it; it is a hard saying, who can bear it? Flesh and blood cannot but look with pleasure upon a beautiful woman; and it is impossible to forbear lusting after and dallying with such an object. Such pretences as these will scarce be overcome by reason, and therefore must be argued against with the terrors of the Lord, and so they are here argued against.

1. It is a severe operation that is here prescribed, for the preventing of these fleshly lusts. If thy right eye offend thee or cause thee to offend, by wanton glances or wanton gazings, upon forbidden objects; if thy right hand offend thee or cause thee to offend, by wanton dalliances; and if it were indeed impossible, as is pretended, to govern the eye and the hand, and they have been so accustomed to these wicked practices, that they will not be withheld from them; yet, if there were no other way to restrain them (which, blessed be God through his grace, there is) it were better to us and less hurtful, to pluck out the eye and cut off the hand, though the right eye and right hand, the more honourable and useful, than indulge them in sin to the ruin of the soul: And if this must be submitted to, at the thought of which nature startles, much more must we resolve to keep under the body and to bring it into subjection; to live a life of mortification and self-denial; to keep a constant watch over our own hearts, and to suppress the first rising of lust and corruption there; to avoid the occasions of sin, to resist the beginnings of it, and to decline the company of such who will be a snare to us, though never so pleasing; to keep out of harm's way, and abridge ourselves in the use of lawful things, when we find them temptations to us; and to seek unto God for his grace, and depend upon that grace daily, and so to walk in the Spirit as that we may not fulfil the lusts of the flesh; and this will be as effectual as cutting off a right hand or pulling out a right eye; and perhaps as much against the grain to flesh and blood; it is the destruction of the old man.

2. It is a startling argument that is made use of to enforce this prescription, ver. 29. and it is repeated in the same words, ver. 30. because we are loth to hear such rough things (Isa. xxx. 10.) It is profitable for thee that one of thy members should perish, though it be an eye or an hand, which can be worst spared, and not that thy whole body should be cast into hell. Note, 1. It is not unbecoming a minister of the gospel to preach of hell and damnation; nay, he must do it, for Christ himself did it, and we are unfaithful to our trust if we give not warning of the wrath to come. 2. There are some sins from which we need to be saved with fear, particularly fleshly lusts, which are such natural brute beasts as cannot be checked, but by being frightened; cannot be kept from a forbidden tree, but by a cherubim with a flaming sword. 3. When we are tempted to think it hard to deny ourselves and to crucify fleshly lusts, we ought to consider how much harder it will be to lie for ever in the lake that burns with fire and brimstone: Those do not know, or do not believe what hell is, that will rather venture their eternal ruin in those names, than deny themselves the gratification of a base and brutish lust. In hell there will be torments for the body; the whole body will be cast into hell, and there will be torment in every part of it; so that if we have any care for our own bodies, we will possess them in sanctification and honour, and not in the lusts of uncleanness. 5. Even those duties that are most displeasing to flesh and blood, yet are profitable for us; and our Master requires nothing from us but what he knows to be for our advantage.

(3.) That men's divorcing their wives upon dislike or for any other cause except adultery, however tolerated and practised among the Jews, was a violation of the seventh commandment, as it opened a door to adultery, ver. 31, 32. Here observe,

1. How the matter now stood with reference to divorce. It has been said, (he doth not say, as before, It hath been said to them of old time, because this was not a precept, as those were, though the Pharisees were willing so to understand it, chap. xix. 7. but only a permission) Whosoever shall put away his wife, let him give her a bill of divorce; let him not think to do it by word of mouth, when he is in a passion, but let him do it deliberately, by a legal instrument in writing, attested by witnesses; if he will dissolve the matrimonial bond, let him do it solemnly. Thus the law had prevented harsh and hasty divorces, and perhaps at first, when writing was not so common among the Jews, that made divorces rare things; but in process of time they became very common, and this direction how to do it when there was just cause for it, was construed a permission of it for any cause, Matt. xix. 3.

2. How this matter was rectified and amended by our Saviour. He reduced the ordinance of marriage to its primitive institution; they two shall be one flesh, not to be easily separated, and therefore a divorce is not to be allowed, except in case of adultery, which breaks the marriage covenant; but he that put away his wife upon any other pretence, causeth her to commit adultery; and him also that shall marry her when she is thus divorced. Note, Those who lead others into temptation to sin, or leave them in it, or expose them to it, make themselves guilty of their sin, and will be accountable for it. This is one way of being partaker with adulterers, Psal. i. 18.

33. ¶ Again, we have heard that it hath been said by them of old time, Thou shalt nor forswear thyself, but shall perform unto the Lord thine oaths: 34. But I say unto you, Swear not at all; neither by heaven; for it is God's throne; 35. Nor by the earth; for it is his footstool: neither by Jerusalem; for it is the city of

of the great King. 36. Neither shalt thou swear by thy head, because thou canst not make one hair white or black: 37. But let your communication be, Yea, yea; Nay, nay: for whatsoever is more than these cometh of evil.

We have here an exposition of the third commandment, which we are the more concerned rightly to understand, because it is particularly said, that God will not hold him guiltless, however they may hold themselves, who break this commandment, by taking the name of the Lord their God in vain. Now as to this command,

1. It is agreed on all hands, that this commandment forbids perjury, forswearing, and the violation of oaths and vows, ver. 33. This was said to them of old time, and in the true intent and meaning of the third commandment. Thou shalt not use or take up thy name of God (as we do by an oath) in vain or unto vanity or a lie. He hath not lift up his soul unto vanity, is expounded in the next words, nor sworn deceitfully, Psalm xxiv. 4. Perjury is a sin condemned by the light of nature, as a complication of impiety towards God and injustice towards man, and rendering a man highly obnoxious to the divine wrath, which was always judged to follow so infallibly upon that sin, that the forms of swearing were commonly turned into execrations or imprecations; as that, God do so to me, and more also; and with us, So help me God; wishing that I may never have any help from God, if I swear falsely. Thus, by the consent of nations, have men cursed themselves, not doubting but that God would curse them if they lied against the truth then, when they solemnly called to God to witness to it.

It is added, from some other scriptures, but shall perform unto the Lord thine oaths, Numb. xxx. 2. which may be meant, either, 1. Of those promises to which God is a party; vows made to God, these must be punctually paid, Ecc. v. 4, 5. or, 2. Of those promises made to our brethren, in which God was a witness, he being appealed to concerning our sincerity, these must be performed to the Lord, with an eye to him and for his sake: for to him, by ratifying the promise with an oath, we have made ourselves debtors, and if we break a promise so ratified, we have not lied unto men only, but unto God.

2. It is here added, that the commandment doth not only forbid false swearing, but all rash and unnecessary swearing: Swear not at all, ver. 34. Compare Jam. v. 17. Not that all swearing is sinful, so far from that, that, if rightly done, it is a part of religious worship, and we in it give unto God the glory due to his name. See Deut. vi. 13.—x. 20. Isa. xiv. 23. Jer. iv. 2. We find Paul confirming what he said by such solemnities, 2 Cor. i. 23. when there was a necessity for it. In swearing we pawn the truth of something known, to confirm the truth of something doubtful or unknown; we appeal to a greater knowledge, to a higher court, and imprecate the vengeance of a righteous Judge, if we swear deceitfully.

Now the mind of Christ in this matter is,

(1.) That we must not swear at all, but when we are duly called to it, and justice or charity to our brother, or respect to the commonwealth, makes it necessary for the end of strife, Heb. vi. 16. of which necessity the civil magistrate is ordinarily to be the judge. We may be sworn, but we must not swear; we may be adjured, and so obliged to it, but we must not thrust ourselves upon it for our own worldly advantage.

(2.) That we must not swear lightly and irreverently in common discourse; it is a very great sin, a ludicrous appeal to the glorious Majesty of heaven, which being a sacred thing ought always to be very serious: It is a gross profanation of God's holy name, and one of the holy things which the children of Israel sanctify to the Lord: It is a sin that has no cloke, no excuse for it, and therefore a sign of a graceless heart, in which enmity to God reigns: Thine enemies take thy name in vain.

(3.) That we must in a special manner avoid promissory oaths, of which Christ more particularly speaks here, for they are oaths that are to be performed. The influence of an assertory oath immediately ceaseth, when we have faithfully discovered the truth, and the whole truth, the peril is over; but a promissory oath binds so long, and may be so many ways broken, by the surprise as well as strength of a temptation, that therefore it is not to be used but upon great necessity: The frequent requiring and using of them, is a reflection upon Christians, who should be of such acknowledged fidelity, as that their sober words should be as sacred as their solemn oaths.

(4.) That we must not swear by any creature. It should seem there were some, who in civility (as they thought) to the name of God, would not make use of that in swearing, but would swear by heaven or earth; &c. This Christ forbids here, ver. 34. and shews there is nothing we can swear by, but it is some way or other related to God, who is the fountain of all being, and therefore it is as dangerous to swear by them, as it is to swear by God himself: it is the verity of the creature that is laid at stake; now that cannot be an instrument of testimony, but as it has regard to God who is the summum verum. As for instance,

1. Swear not by heaven; as sure as there is a heaven this is true, for it is God's throne, where he resides, and in a particular manner manifests his glory, as a prince upon his throne: This being the inseparable dignity of the upper world, you cannot swear by heaven but you swear by God himself.

2. Nor by the earth, for it is his footstool: He governs the motions of this lower world; as he rules in heaven, so he rules over the earth; and though under his feet, yet withal under his eye and care, and stand in relation to him as his, Psalm xxvi. 1. The earth is the Lord's; so that in swearing by it you swear by its owner.

3. Neither by Jerusalem, the place which the Jews had such a veneration for, that they could not speak of any thing more sacred, to swear by; but besides the common reference Jerusalem has to God, as part of the earth, it is in special relation to him, for it is the city of the great King, Psalm lxviii. 2. the city of God, Psalm lxvi. 4. he is therefore interested in it, and in every oath taken by it.

4. Neither shalt thou swear by thy head; though it be near thee, and an essential part of thee, yet it is more God's than thine; for he made it, and formed all the springs and powers of it; whereas thou thyself canst not, from any natural intrinsic influence, change the colour of one hair, so as to make it white or black; so that thou canst not swear by thy head, but thou swearest by him who is the life of thy head, and the lifter up of it, Psalm iii. 3.

(5.) That therefore in all our communication we must content ourselves with yea, yea, and nay, nay, ver. 37. In ordinary discourse, if we affirm a thing, let us only say Yea, it is so; and, if need be, to evidence our assurance of a thing, we may double it, and say Yea, yea, indeed it is so; Verily, verily, was our Saviour's yea, yea. So if we deny a thing, let it suffice to say, No; or, if it be requisite, to repeat the denial, and say, No, no: And if our fidelity be known, that will suffice to gain us credit: And if it be questioned, to back what we say with swearing and cursing, is but to render it more suspicious; they that can swallow a profane oath, will not strain at a lie. It is pity, that this, which Christ puts in the mouths of all his disciples, should be fastened as a name of reproach, upon a sect faulty enough other ways, when (as Dr. Hammond saith) we are not only forbidden any more than yea and nay, but are in a manner directed to the use of that.

The reason is observable, for whatsoever is more than these cometh of evil, though it doth not amount to the iniquity of an oath. It comes εξ τῆς ἀπειρίας; so an ancient copy has it: It comes from the devil, the evil one; it comes from the corruption of men's nature, from passion and vehemence; and a reigning vanity in the mind, and a contempt of sacred things: It comes from that deceitfulness which is in men, all men are liars; therefore men use these protestations, because they are distrustful one of another, and think they cannot be believed without them. Note, Christians should for the credit of their religion avoid, not only that which is in itself evil, but that which cometh of evil, and has the appearance of it. That may be suspected as an ill thing, which comes from an ill cause. An oath is physis, which supposeth a disease.

38. ¶ Ye have heard that it hath been said, An eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth: 39. But I say unto you, That ye resist not evil: but whosoever shall smite thee on thy right cheek, turn to him the other also. 40. And if any man will sue thee at the law, and take away thy coat, let him have thy cloke also. 41. And whosoever shall compel thee to go a mile, go with him twain. 42. Give to him that asketh of thee, and from him that would borrow of thee turn not thou away.

In these verses the law of retaliation is expounded, and in a manner repealed. Observe,

First, What the Old Testament permission was, in case of injury; and here the expression is only, Ye have heard that it has been said, not as before concerning the commands of the decalogue, that it has been said, by or to them of old time. It was not a command, that every one should of necessity require such satisfaction, but they might lawfully insist upon it, if they pleased; an eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth. This we find, Exod. xxi. 24. Lev. xxiv. 20. Deut. xix. 21. in all which places it is appointed to be done by the magistrate, who bears not the sword in vain, but is the minister of God, an avenger to execute wrath, Rom. xiii. 4. It was a direction to the judges of the Jewish nation what punishments to inflict in case of maims, for terror to such as would do mischief on the one hand, and for a restraint to such as have mischief done them on the other hand, that they may not insist on a greater punishment than is fitting: It is not a life for an eye, or a limb for a tooth, but observe a proportion: And it is intimated, Numb. xxxv. 31. that the forfeiture in this case might be redeemed with money; for when it is provided, that no ransom shall be taken for the life of a murderer, it is supposed, that for maims a pecuniary satisfaction was allowed.

But some of the Jewish teachers, who were not the most compassionate men in the world, insisted upon it as necessary, that such revenges should be taken, even by private persons themselves, and there was no room left for remission or the acceptance of satisfaction. Even now, when they were under the government of the Roman magistrates, and consequently the judicial law fell to the ground of course, yet they were still zealous for any thing that looked harsh and severe.

Now so far this is in force with us, as a direction to magistrates to use the sword of justice according to the good and wholesome laws of the land, for the terror of evil doers, and the vindication of the oppressed. That judge neither feared God, nor regarded man, who would not avenge the poor widow of her adversary, Luke xviii. 2, 3. And as a rule to lawgivers, to provide accordingly, and wisely to apportion punishments to crimes, for the restraint of rapine and violence, and the protection of innocence.

Secondly, What the New Testament precept is: As to the complainant himself, his duty is, to forgive the injury as done to himself, and no further to insist upon the punishment of it than is necessary to the public good: And this precept is consonant to the meekness of Christ and the gentleness of his yoke.

Two things Christ teacheth us here:

(1.) We must not be revengeful, ver. 39. I say unto you, that ye resist not evil: the evil person that is injurious to you; the resisting of any ill attempt upon us, is here as generally and expressly forbidden, as the resisting of the higher powers is, Rom. xiii. 2. and yet this doth not repeal the law of self-preservation, and the care we are to take of our families: We may avoid evil and may resist it, so far as is necessary to our own security; but we must not render evil for evil, must not bear a grudge or avenge ourselves; nor study to be even with those that have done us a kindness, but to go beyond them by forgiving them, Prov. xx. 22.—xxiv. 29.—xxv. 21, 22. Rom. xii. 17. The law of retaliation must be made to consist with the law of love: Nor, if any have injured us, is our amends in our own hands but in the hands of God, to whose wrath we must give place; and sometimes in the hands of its viceregents, where it is necessary for the preservation of the public peace: But it will not justify us in hurting our brother, to say that he began, for it is the second blow that makes the quarrel; and when we were injured, we had an opportunity not to justify our injuring him, but to show ourselves the true disciples of Christ, by forgiving him.

Three things our Saviour instanteth in, to shew the Christians must patiently yield to those who bear hard upon them, rather than contend; and these include others.

1. A blow on the cheek, which is an injury to me in my body. Whosoever shall smite thee on thy right cheek, which is not only a hurt, but an affront and indignity, 2 Cor. xi. 20. if a man in anger or scorn thus abuse thee, turn to him the other cheek; that is, instead of avenging the injury prepare for another, and bear it patiently: Give not to rude man as good as he brings, do not challenge him, or enter an action against him; if it be necessary to the public peace that he be bound to his good behaviour, leave that to the magistrate; but for thy own part, it will ordinarily be the wisest course to pass it by, and take no further notice of it. There are no bones broke, no great harm done, forgive it, and forget it; and if proud fools think the worse of thee, and laugh at thee for it, all wise men will value and honour thee for it as a follower of the blessed Jesus, who, though he was the judge of Israel, did not smite those who smote him on the cheek, Mt. v. 2. Though this may perhaps with some base spirits expose us to the like affront another time, and so it is in effect, to turn the other cheek; yet let not that disturb us, but let us trust God and his providence to protect us in the way of our duty: Perhaps the forgiving of one injury may prevent another, when the avenging of it would but draw on another; some will be overcome by submission, who by resistance would but be the more exasperated, Prov. xxv. 22. however our amends is in Christ's hands, who will recompense us with eternal glory for the shame we thus patiently endure; and though it be not directly inflicted, if it be quietly borne for conscience sake, and in conformity to Christ's example, it shall be put upon the score of suffering for Christ.

2. The loss of a coat, which is a wrong to me in my estate, ver. 40. If any man will sue thee at the law, and take away thy coat, it is a hard case. Note, It is common for legal processes to be made use of for the doing of the greatest injuries. Though judges be just and circumspect, yet it is possible for ill men, that make no conscience of oaths and forgeries, by course of law, to recover the coat off a man's back. Marvel not at the matter, Eccl. v. 8. but, in such a case, rather than go to law by way of revenge, rather than exhibit a cross bill or stand out to the utmost, in defence of that which is thy undoubted right, let him even take thy eloke also: If the matter be small, which we may part with without any considerable damage to our families, it is good to quit it for peace sake: It will not cost thee so much to buy another eloke, but it will cost thee a great deal more by course of law to recover that; and therefore unless thou canst get it again by fair means, it is better to let him take it.

3. The going of a mile by constraint, which is a wrong to me in my liberty, ver. 41. Whosoever shall compel thee to go a mile, to run of an errand for him or to wait upon him, grudge not at it, but go with him two miles, rather than fall out with him: Say not I would do it if I were not compelled to it, but I hate to be forced; rather say, therefore I will do it; for otherwise there will be a quarrel; and it is better serve him than serve thy own lust of pride and revenge. Some give this sense of it: The Jews taught that the disciples of the wise and students of the law were not to be pressed, as others might, by the king's officers, to travel upon the public service; but Christ will not have his disciples to insist upon this privilege, but to comply rather than offend the government. The sum of all is that Christians must not be litigious; small injuries must be put up, and no notice taken of them; and if the injury be such as requires we should seek for reparation, it must be for a good end and without thought of revenge: Though we must not invite injuries, yet we must meet them cheerfully in the way of duty, and make the best of them. If any say, Flesh and blood cannot pass by such an affront, let them remember, that flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God.

(2.) We must be charitable and beneficent, ver. 42. must not only do no hurt to our neighbours, but labour to do them all the good we can. 1. We must be ready to give: Give to him that asketh of thee. If thou hast an ability, look upon the request of the poor, as giving thee an opportunity for the duty of almsgiving. When a real object of charity presents itself, we should give at the first word; Give a portion to seven, and also to eight; yet the affairs of our charity must be guided with discretion, Psalm cxii. 5. lest we give that to the idle and unworthy, which should be given to those that are necessitous and deserve well. What God saith to us, we should be ready to say to our poor brethren, Ask, and it shall be given you. 2. We must be ready to lend: This is sometimes a great piece of charity as giving; as it not only relieveth the present exigence, but obligeth the borrower to providence, industry, and honesty; and therefore, from him that would borrow of thee something to live on, or something to trade on, turn not thou away: Shun not those that thou knowest have such a request to thee, nor contrive excuses to shake them off: Be easy of access to him that would borrow: Though he be bashful, and hath not confidence to make known his case and beg the favour, yet thou knowest both his need and his desire, and therefore offer him the kindness. Exorabor antequam rogor; honestis precibus occurram. Seneca de Vita beata. It becomes us to be thus forward in acts of kindness, for before we call God hears us, and presents us with the blessings of his goodness.

43. ¶ Ye have heard that it hath been said, Thou shalt love thy neighbour, and hate thine enemy. 44. But I say unto you, Love your enemies; bless them that curse you; do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you, and persecute you: 45. That ye may be the children of your Father which is in heaven: for he maketh his sun to rise on the evil and on the good, and sendeth rain on the just and on the unjust. 46. For if ye love them which love you, what reward have ye? do not even the publicans the same? 47. And if ye salute your brethren only, what do ye more than others? do not even the publicans so? 48. Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect.

We have here (lastly) an exposition of that great fundamental law of the second table, Thou shalt love thy neighbour, which was the fulfilling of the law.

1. See here how this law was corrupted by the comments of the Jewish teachers, ver. 43. God said, Thou shalt love thy neighbour; and by neighbour they understood those only of their own country, nation, and religion; and those only that they were pleased to look upon as their friends: Yet this was not the worst; from this command, Thou shalt love thy neighbour, they were willing to infer what God never designed, Thou shalt hate thine enemy; and they looked upon whom they pleased as their enemies, thus making void the great command of God by their traditions, though there were express laws to the contrary, Exod. xxiii. 4, 5. Deut. xxiii. 7. Thou shalt not abhor an Edomite, or an Egyptian; though these nations had been as much enemies to Israel as any whatsoever. It was true, God appointed them to destroy the seven devoted nations of Canaan, and not to make leagues with them; but there was a particular reason for it, to make room for Israel, and that they might not be snared to them; but it was very ill-natured from thence to infer, that they must hate all their enemies; yet the moral philosophy of the heathen allowed this. It is Cicero's rule, Nemini nocere nisi prius lacesitum injuria. Offic. See how willing corrupt passions are to fetch countenance from the word of God, and to take occasion by the commandment to justify themselves.

2. See how it is cleared by the command of the Lord Jesus, who teacheth us another lesson: But I say unto you, I, who come to be the great peace-maker, the general reconciler, who loved you when you were strangers and enemies, I say, love your enemies, ver. 44. Though men are never so bad themselves, and carry it never so basely towards us, yet that doth not discharge us from the great debt we owe them, of love to our kind, love to our kin: We cannot but find ourselves very prone to wish the hurt, or at least very coldly to desire the good of those that hate us, and have been abusive to us; but that which is at the bottom hereof, is a root of bitterness which must be plucked up, and a remnant of corrupt nature which grace must conquer. Note, It is the great duty of Christians to love their enemies; we cannot have complacency in one that is openly wicked and profane, nor put a confidence in one that we know to be deceitful; nor are we to love all alike; but we must pay respect to the human nature, and so far honour all men: We must take notice with pleasure, of that even in our enemies.

which is amiable and commendable; ingenuity, good temper, learning, moral virtue, kindness to others, profession of religion, &c. and love that, though they are our enemies: We must have a compassion for them, and a good will towards them. We are here told,

(1.) That we must speak well of them: Bless them that curse you. When we speak to them, we must answer their revilings with courteous and friendly words, and not render railing for railing; behind their backs we must commend that in them which is commendable, and when we have said all the good we can of them, not be forward to say more. See 1 Pet. iii. 9. They, in whose tongues is the law of kindness, can give good words to those who give ill words to them.

(2.) That we must do well to them: Do good to them that hate you, and that will be a better proof of love than good words. Be ready to do them all the real kindness that may be, and glad of an opportunity to do it in their bodies, estates, names, families; and especially to do good to their souls. It was said of Archbishop Crammer, that the way to make him one's friend was to do him an ill turn; so many did he serve that had dis-obliged him.

(3.) We must pray for them; pray for them that despitefully use you, and persecute you. Note, 1. It is no new thing for the most excellent saints to be hated and cursed, and persecuted; and despitefully used by wicked people; Christ himself was so treated. 2. That when at any time we meet with such usage, we have an opportunity of shewing our conformity both to the precept and to the example of Christ, by praying for them who thus abuse us. If we cannot otherwise testify our love to them, yet this way we may without ostentation, and it is such a way as surely we durst not dissemble in. We must pray that God will forgive them, that they may never fare the worse for any thing they have done against us, and that he would make them to be at peace with us; and this is one way of making them so. Plutarch, in his laconic apophthegms, has this of Ariosto; when one commended Cleomenses saying, who being asked, what a good king should do? replied, τὸ μὲν φίλος εὐεργετῆιν, τὸ δὲ ἐχθρὸς χάρις ποιεῖν. Good turns to his friends, and evil to his enemies: He said, how much better is it τὸ μὲν φίλος εὐεργετῆιν, τὸ δὲ ἐχθρὸς φίλος ποιεῖν. To do good to our friends, and make friends of our enemies. This is heaping coals of fire on their heads.

Two reasons are here given to enforce this command (which sounds so harsh) of loving our enemies. We must do it,

1. That we may be like God our Father; that ye may be, i. e. may approve yourselves to be the children of your Father which is in heaven. Can, we write after a better copy? It is a copy in which love to the worst of enemies is reconciled to, and consistent with infinite purity and holiness. God maketh his sun rise, and sendeth rain on the just and unjust, ver. 45. Note, 1. Sunshine and rain are great blessings to the world, and they come from God. It is, his sun that shines, and the rain is sent by him. They do not come of course, or by chance, but from God. 2. Common mercies must be valued as instances and proofs of the goodness of God; who in them shews himself a bountiful benefactor to the world of mankind, who would be very miserable without these favours, and are utterly unworthy of the least of them. 3. These gifts of common providence are dispensed indifferently to good and evil, just and unjust; so that we cannot know love and hatred by what is before us; but what is within us; not by the shining of the sun on our heads, but by the rising of the sun of righteousness in our hearts. 4. The worst of men partake of the comforts of this life in common with others, though they abuse them, and fight against God with his own weapons; which is an amazing instance of God's patience and bounty. It was but once that God forbade his sun to shine on the Egyptians, when the Israelites had light in their dwellings; God could make such a distinction every day. 5. The gifts of God's bounty to wicked men that are in rebellion against him, teach us to do good to those that hate us; especially considering that though there is in us a carnal mind which is enmity to God, yet we share in his bounty. 6. Those only will be accepted as the children of God that study to resemble him, particularly in his goodness.

2. That we may herein do more than others, ver. 46, 47. 1. Publicans love their friends. Nature inclines them to it, interest directs them to it. To do good to them which do good to us is a common piece of humanity; which even those whom the Jews hated and despised could give as good proofs of as the best of them. The Publicans were men of no good name; yet they were grateful to such as had helped them to their places, and courteous to those they had a dependence upon; and shall we be no better than they? In doing this we serve ourselves, and consult our own advantage; and what reward can we expect for that, unless a regard to God and sense of duty carry us further than our natural inclination and worldly interest? 2. We must therefore love our enemies that we may exceed them. If we must go beyond Scribes and Pharisees, much more beyond Publicans. Note, Christianity is something more than humanity. It is a serious question which we should frequently put to ourselves, What do we more than others? What excellent thing do we do? We know more than others, we talk more of the things of God than others; we profess and have promised more than others; God has done more for us, and therefore justly expects more from us than from others: But what do we more than others? Wherein do we live above the rate of the children of this world? Are we not carnal, and do we not walk as men below the character of Christians? In this especially we must do more than others, that while every one will render good for good, we must render good for evil; and this will speak a nobler principle, and is consonant to a higher rule than the most of men act by. Others salute their brethren, they hug those of their own party and way of opinion, but we must not so confine our respect; but love our enemies, otherwise what reward have we? We cannot expect the reward of Christians, if we rise no higher than the virtue of publicans. Note, Those that promise themselves a reward above others, must study to do more than others.

Lastly, Our Saviour concludes this subject with this exhortation, ver. 48. Be ye therefore perfect, as your Father which is in heaven is perfect. Which may be understood, 1. In general, including all those things wherein we must be followers of God as dear children. Note, It is the duty of Christians to desire and aim at and press towards a perfection in grace and holiness, Phil. iii. 12, 13, 14. And therein we must study to conform ourselves to the example of our heavenly Father, 1 Pet. i. 15, 16. Or, 2. In this particular before mentioned, of doing good to our enemies, see Luke vi. 36. It is God's perfection to forgive injuries and to entertain strangers, and to do good for evil and unthankful; and it will be ours to be like him. We that owe so much, that owe our All to the divine bounty, ought to copy it out as well as we can.

C H A P. VI.

Christ having in the former chapter armed his disciples against the corrupt doctrines and opinions of the Scribes and Pharisees, especially, in their expositions of the law (that was called their heaven, Matt. xvi. 12.) comes in this chapter to warn them against their corrupt practices, against the two sins, which though in their doctrine they did not not justify, yet in their conversation they were notoriously guilty of, and so as even to recommend them to their admirers, those were hypocrisy and worldly mindedness: sins which of all others the professors of religion need to guard against, as sins that most easily beset those who have escaped the grosser pollutions that are in the world through lust, and are therefore highly dangerous. We are here cautioned, (1.) Against hypocrisy, we must not be as the hypocrites are, nor do as the hypocrites do. (1.) In giving of alms, ver. 1—4. (2.) In prayer, ver. 5—8. We are here taught what to pray for, and how to pray, ver. 9—13. And to forgive in prayer, ver. 14—15. (3.) In fasting, ver. 16—18. (2.) Against worldly mindedness. (1.) In our choice, which is the destroying sin of hypocrites, ver. 19—24. 2. In our cares, which is the disquieting sin of many good Christians, ver. 25—34.

1. TAKE heed that ye do not your alms before men, to be seen of them: otherwise ye have no reward of your Father which is in heaven. 2. Therefore when thou doest thine alms, do not sound a trumpet before thee, as the hypocrites do in the synagogues and in the streets, that they may have glory of men. Verily I say unto you, They have their reward. 3. But when thou doest alms, let not thy left hand know what thy right hand doeth: 4. That thine alms may be in secret: and thy Father which seeth in secret himself shall reward thee openly.

As we must do better than the Scribes and Pharisees in avoiding heart-sins, heart-adultery, and heart-murder, so likewise in maintaining and keeping up heart-religion, doing what we do from an inward vital principle, that we may be approved of God, not that we may be applauded of men; that is, we must watch against hypocrisy which was the leaven of the Pharisees, as well as their doctrine, Luke xii. 1. Alms-giving, prayer, and fasting, are three great Christian duties, the three foundations of the law, say the Arabians: by them we do homage and service to God with our three principal interests; by prayer, with our souls, by fasting, with our bodies, by alms-giving, with our estates. Thus we must not only depart from evil, but do good, and do it well, and so dwell for evermore.

Now in these verses we are cautioned against hypocrisy in giving alms. Take heed of it. Our being bid to take heed of it, intimates it is a sin, 1. We are in great danger of; it is a subtle sin, vain-glory insinuates itself into what we do ere we are aware. The disciples would be tempted to it by the power they had to do many wonderful works, and their living with some that admired them, and others that despised them, both which are temptations to covet to make a fair shew in the flesh. 2. It is a sin we are in great danger by. Take heed of hypocrisy, for if it reign in you it will ruin you. It is the dead fly that spoils the whole box of precious ointment.

Two things are here supposed.

1. The giving of alms is a great duty, and a duty which all the disciples of Christ, according to their ability, must abound in. It is prescribed by the law of nature and of Moses, and great stress laid upon it by the prophets. Divers ancient copies here for τὴν ἀνεκδοκίαν, your alms, read τὴν δικαιοσύνην, your righteousness, for alms are righteousness, Psal. cxii. 9. Prov. x. 2. The Jews called the poor's box; the box of righteousness. That which is given to the poor is said to be their due, Prov. iii. 27. The duty is nevertheless necessary and excellent for its being abused by hypocrites to serve their pride. If superstitious papists have placed a merit in works of charity, that will not be an excuse for covetous protestants that are barren in such good works. It is true our alms-deeds do not deserve heaven, but it is as true we cannot go to heaven without them. It is pure religion, James i. 27, and will be the test at the great day; Christ here takes it for granted, that his disciples give alms, nor will he own those that do not.

2. That it is such a duty as hath a great reward attending it, which is lost if it be done in hypocrisy. It is sometimes rewarded in temporal things with plenty, Prov. xi. 24, 25.—xix. 17. Security from want, Prov. xxviii. 27. Psal. xxxvii. 21—25. Succour in distress, Psal. xli. 1, 2. Honour and a good name which follow those most that least covet it, Psal. cxvii. 9. However it shall be recompensed in the resurrection of the just, Luke xiv. 14. in eternal riches.

Quas dederis, solas semper habebis, ops. MARTIAL.

This being supposed, observe now,

1. What was the practice of the hypocrites about this duty. They did it indeed, but not from any principle of obedience to God, or love to man, but in pride and vain-glory, not in compassion to the poor, but purely for ostentation, that they might be cried up for good men, and so might gain an interest in the esteem of the people with which they knew how to serve their own turn, and to get a great deal more than they gave. Pursuant to this intention, they choose to give their alms in the synagogues, and in the streets, where there was the greatest concourse of people to observe them, who applauded their liberality because they shared in it, but were so ignorant as not to discern their abominable pride. Probably they had collections for the poor in the synagogues, and the common beggars haunted the streets and highways, and upon these public occasions they chose to give their alms. Not that it is unlawful to give alms when men see us; we may do it, we must do it, but not that men may see us; we should rather choose those objects of charity that are less observed. The hypocrites, if they gave alms at their own houses, sounded a trumpet under pretence of calling the poor together to be served, but really to proclaim their charity, and to have that taken notice of and made the subject of discourse.

Now the doom that Christ passeth upon this is very observable: Verily I say unto you, they have their reward. At first view this seems a promise, if they have their reward they have enough, but two words in it make it a threatening.

1. It is a reward, but it is their reward: not the reward which God promiseth to them that do good, but the reward which they promise themselves, and a poor reward it is; they did it to be seen of men, and they are seen of men; they choose their own delusions with which they cheated themselves, and they shall have what they choose. Carnal professors indent with God for preferment, honour, wealth, and they shall have their bellies filled with those things, Psal. xvii. 14, but let them expect no more, these are their consolation, Luke vi. 24, their good things, Luke xvi. 25. and they shall be put off with these. Didst not thou agree with me for a penny? It is the bargain thou art like to abide by.

2. It is a reward, but it is a present reward, they have it; and there is none reserved for them in the future state. They now have all that they are likely to have from God; they have their reward here, and have none to hope for hereafter. Ἀπὸ τοῦ τοῦ παρόντος. It signifies a receipt in full. What rewards the godly have in this life it is but in part of payment, there is more behind, much more; but hypocrites have their All in this world, so shall their doom be; themselves have decided it. The world is but for provision to the saints, it is their spending money, but it is pay to hypocrites, this their portion.

2. What is the precept of our Lord Jesus about it, ver. 3, 4. He that was himself such an example of humility, pressed it upon his disciples as absolutely necessary to the acceptance of their performances. Let not thy left hand know what thy right hand doeth when thou givest alms. Perhaps it alludes to the placing of the Korban, the poor man's box, or the chest into which they cast free-will offerings, on the right hand of the passage into the temple; so that they put their gifts into it with the right-hand. Or the giving of alms with the right-hand, intimates readiness to it, and resolution in it; do it dexterously, not awkwardly, or with a sinister intention. The right-hand may be used in helping the poor, lifting them up, writing for them, dressing their sores, and other ways besides giving to them; but whatever kindness thy right-hand doeth to the poor, let not thy left-hand know it, i. e. conceal it as much as possible; industriously keep it private. Do it because it is a good work, not because it will get thee a good name. In omnibus factis, &c. non teste moramur. Cic de fin. It is intimated, 1. That we must not let others know what we do, no, not those that stand at our left-hand; that are very near us. Instead of acquainting them with it, keep it from them if possible; however appear so desirous to keep it from them, as that in civility they may seem not to take notice of it, and keep it to themselves, and let it go no further. 2. That we must not observe it too much ourselves, the left-hand is a part of ourselves; we must not within ourselves take notice too much of the good we do, must not applaud and admire ourselves. Self-conceit and self-complacency, and an adoring our own shadow, are branches of pride, as dangerous as vain-glory and ostentation before men. We find those had their good works remembered to their honour, who had themselves forgotten them: When saw we thee a hungry or a thirsty?

3. What is the promise of those who are thus sincere and humble in their alms-giving. Let thine alms be in secret, and then thy father which sees in secret will observe them. Note, When we take least notice of our good deeds ourselves, God takes most notice of them. As God hears the wrangings done to us when we do not hear them, Psal. xxxviii. 14, 15, so he sees the good done by us, when we do not see it. As it is a terror to hypocrites, so it is a comfort to sincere Christians, that God sees in secret. But this is not all, not only the observation and praise, but the recompence is of God, himself shall reward thee openly. Note, Those that in their alms-giving study to approve themselves to God, only turn themselves over to him for their paymaster. The hypocrite catches at the shadow, but the upright man makes sure of the substance. Observe how emphatically it is expressed; himself shall reward, he will himself be the rewarder, Heb. xi. 6. Let him alone to make it up in kind or kindness; nay he will himself be the rewarder, Gen. xv. 1. thine exceeding great reward. He will reward thee as thy Father, not as a master who gives his servant just what he earns and no more, but as a Father who gives abundantly more, and without stint to his son that serves him. Nay, he shall reward thee openly, if not in the present day, yet in the great day: then shall every man have praise of God, open praise; thou shalt be confessed before men. If the work be not open, the reward shall, and that is better.

5. And when thou prayest, thou shalt not be as the hypocrites are: for they love to pray standing in the synagogues and in the corners of the streets, that they may be seen of man. Verily I say unto you, They have their reward. 6. But thou, when thou prayest, enter into thy closet, and when thou hast shut thy door, pray to thy Father which is in secret; and thy Father which seeth in secret shall reward thee openly. 7. But when ye pray, use not vain repetitions, as the heathen do; for they think that they shall be heard for their much speaking. 8. Be not ye therefore like unto them: for your Father knoweth what things ye have need of, before ye ask him.

In prayer we have more immediately to do with God than in giving alms, and therefore are yet more concerned to be sincere, which is what we are here directed to. When thou prayest, ver. 5. it is taken for granted that all the disciples of Christ pray. As soon as ever Paul was converted, behold he prayeth. You may as soon find a living man that doth not breathe, as a living Christian that doth not pray. For this shall every one that is godly pray. If prayerless, then graceless. Now, when thou prayest, thou shalt not be as the hypocrites are, nor do as they do, ver. 2. Note, Those who would not do as the hypocrites do in their way and actions, must not be as the hypocrites are in their frame and temper. He names no body, but it appears by Matt. xxiii. 13. that by the hypocrites here he means especially the Scribes and Pharisees.

Now there were two great faults they were guilty of in prayer, against each of which we are here cautioned, vain-glory, ver. 5. 6. and vain repetitions, ver. 7, 8.

1. We must not be proud and vain-glorious in prayer, nor aim at the praise of men. And here observe,

1. What was the way and practice of the hypocrites. In all their exercises of devotion, it was plain the chief thing they aimed at was to be commended by their neighbours, and thereby to make an interest for themselves. When they seemed to soar upwards in prayer, (and if it be right, it is the soul's ascent towards God) yet even then their eye was downwards upon this as their prey. Observe, 1. What the places were which they chose for their devotion; they prayed in the synagogues, which were indeed proper places for public prayer, but not for personal. They pretended hereby to do honour to the place of their assemblies, but intended to do honour to themselves. They prayed in the corners of the streets, the broad streets, (so the word signifies) which were most frequented. They withdrew thither, as if they were under a pious impulse which would not admit delay, but really it was to make themselves to be taken notice of. There where two streets met, they were not only within ken of both, but every passenger turning close upon them would observe them, and hear what they said.

2. The posture they used in prayer, they prayed standing; this is a lawful and proper posture for prayer, Mark xi. 25. When ye stand praying, but kneeling being the more humble and reverent gesture, (Luke xxii. 41. Acts vii. 60. Eph. iii. 15.) their standing seemed to favour of pride and confidence in themselves, Luke xviii. 11. The Pharisees stood and prayed.

3. Their pride in choosing those public places, which is expressed in two things: 1. They love to pray there. They did not love prayer for its own own sake, but they loved it when it gave them an opportunity of making themselves taken notice of. Circumstances may be such, that our good deeds must needs be done openly, so as to fall under the observation of others, and be commended by them: but the sin and danger is when we love it, and are pleased with it because it feeds the proud humour. 2. It is that they may be seen of men: not that God might accept them, but that men might admire and applaud them; and that they might easily get the estates of widows and orphans into their hands (who would not trust such devout praying men?) And when they had them might devour them without being suspected, Matt. xxiii. 14. and effectually carry on their public designs to enslave the people.

4. The product of all this, they have their reward; they have all the recompence they must ever expect from God for their service, and a poor recompence it is. What will it avail us to have the good word of our fellow-servants, if our master do not say well-done. But if in so great a transaction as is between us and God, when we are at prayer we can take in so poor a consideration as the praise of men is, it is just that that should be all our reward. They did it to be seen of men, and they are so; and much good may it do them. Note, Those that would approve themselves to God in their integrity in their religion, must have no regard to the praise of men; it is not to men that we pray, nor from them that we expect an answer; they are not to be our judges, they are dust and ashes like ourselves, and therefore we must not have our eye to them; what passeth between God and our own souls must be out of sight. In our synagogue-worship we must avoid every thing that tends to make our personal devotion remarkable, as they that caused their voice to be heard on high, Isa. lviii. 4. Nor are public places proper for private, solemn prayer.

2. What is the will of Jesus Christ in opposition to this. Humility and sincerity are the two great lessons that Christ teacheth us: Thou, when thou prayest, do so and so, ver. 6. thou in particular by thyself, and for thyself. Personal prayer is here supposed to be the duty and practice of all Christ's disciples: Observe.

1. The direction here given about it.

1. Instead of praying in the synagogues and in the corners of the streets, enter into thy closet, i. e. into some place of privacy and retirement; Isaac went into the field, Gen. xxiv. 65. Christ to a mountain, Peter to the house-top: No place amiss in point of ceremony, if it do but answer the end. Note, Secret prayer is to be performed secretly, that we may be unobserved and so may avoid ostentation; undisturbed, and so may avoid distraction; unheard, and so may use greater freedom; yet if the circumstances be such that we cannot possibly avoid being taken notice of, we must not therefore neglect the duty, lest the omission be a greater scandal than the observation of it.

2. Instead of doing it to be seen of men, pray to thy Father which is in secret; to me, even to me, Zech. vii. 5, 6. The Pharisees prayed rather to men than to God; what ever was the form of their prayer, the scope of it was to beg the applause of men, and court their favours. Well, do thou pray to God and let that be enough for thee. Pray to him as a Father, as thy Father, ready to hear an answer; graciously inclined to pity, help and succour thee. Pray to thy Father which is in secret. Note, In secret prayer we must have an eye to God, as present in all places; he is there in thy closet when no one else is there; there especially nigh to thee in what thou callest upon him for. By secret prayer we give God the glory of his universal presence, Acts xvii. 24. and may take to ourselves the comfort of it.

2. The encouragements here given us to it.

1. Thy Father seen in secret; his eye is upon thee to accept thee when the eyes of no man is upon thee to applaud thee; under the fig-tree I saw thee, said Christ unto Nathanael, John i. 48. He saw Paul at prayer in such a street at such a house, Acts ix. 11. There is no secret sudden breathing after God, but he observes it.

2. He will reward thee openly; they have their reward that do it openly, and thou shalt not lose thine for thy doing it in secret. It is called a reward, but it is of grace, not of debt; what merit can there be in begging? The reward will be open, they shall not only have it, but have it honourably; the open reward is that which hypocrites are fond of, but they have no patience to stay for it; it is that which the sincere are dead to, and they shall have it over and above. Sometimes secret prayers are rewarded openly in this world by signal answers to them, which manifests God's praying people in the consciences of their adversaries; however at the great day there will be an open reward, when all praying people shall appear in glory with the great intercessor. The Pharisees had their reward before all the town, and it was a mere flash and shadow; true Christians shall have theirs before all the world, angels and men, and it shall be a weight of glory.

II. We must not use vain repetitions in prayer, ver. 7, 8. Though the life of prayer lies in lifting up the soul and pouring out the heart, yet there is some interest which words have in prayer, especially in joint-prayer; for in that words are necessary, and it should seem that our Saviour speaks here especially of that; for before he said, when thou prayest, here, when ye pray, and the Lord's prayer which follows is a joint-prayer, and in that he that is the mouth of others is most tempted to an ostentation of language and expression, against which we are here warned; use not vain repetitions, either alone or with others; the Pharisees effected this, they made long prayers, Matt. xxiii. 14. all their care was to make them long. Now observe,

1. What the fault is that is here reprov'd or condemn'd, it is making a mere lip-labour of the duty of prayer, the service of the tongue when it is not the service of the soul. This is expressed here by two words, Βατλολογία, Πολυλογία, 1. Vain repetitions, tautology, battology, idle babbling over the same words again and again to no purpose, like Battus, Sub illis montibus erant, erant sub montibus illis; like that imitation of the wordiness of a fool, Eccles. x. 14. A man cannot tell what he is; and what shall be after him, who can tell? Which is indecent and nauseous in any discourse; much more in speaking to God. It is not all repetition in prayer that is here condemn'd, but vain repetitions. Christ himself prayed, saying the same words, Matt. xxvi. 44. out of more than ordinary fervour and zeal, Luke xxii. 44. So Daniel, chap. ix. 18, 19. And there is a very elegant repetition of the same words, Psal. cxxxvi. it may be of use both to express our own affections, and so to excite the affections of others. But the superstitious rehearsing of a tale of words without regard to the sense of them, as the papists saying by their beads, so many Ave-Marys and Paternosters: or the barren and dry going over the same things again and again, merely to drill out the prayer to such a length, and to make a shew of affection when really there is none, these are the vain repetitions here condemn'd. When we would fain say much, but cannot say much to the purpose; this is displeasing to God and all wise men. 2. Much speaking, i. e. an effluvia of prolixity in prayer, either out of pride or superstition, or an opinion that God needs either to be informed or argued with by us, or out of mere folly and impertinence, because men love to hear themselves talk. Not that all long prayers are forbidden; Christ prayed all night, Luke vi. 12. Solomon's was a long prayer; there is sometimes need of long prayers when the errands and our affections are extraordinary; but merely to prolong the prayer as if that would make it more pleasing or more prevailing with God, is that which is here condemn'd; it is not much praying that is condemn'd, no, we are bid to pray always, but much speaking; the danger of this error is when we only say our prayers, not when we pray them. This caution is explained by that of Solomon, Eccles. v. 2. Let thy words be few, i. e. considerate and well weighed, take with you words, Hos. xiv. 2. Choose out words, Job. iv. 14. and do not say every thing that comes uppermost.

2. What reasons are given against this.

1. This is the way of the heathen, as the heathen do; and it ill becomes Christians to worship their God as the Gentiles worship theirs. The heathen were taught by the light of nature to worship God, but becoming vain in their imaginations concerning the object of their worship, no wonder they became so concerning the manner of it, and particularly in this instance; thinking God altogether such a one as themselves, they thought he needed many words to make him understand what was said to him, or to bring him to comply with their requests: As if he were weak and ignorant and hard to be intreated. Thus Baal's priests were hard at it from morning till almost night with their vain repetitions; O Baal, hear us, O Baal, hear us; and vain petitions they were: But Elijah in a grave composed frame, with a very short concise prayer, prevailed for fire from heaven first, then water, 1 Kings xviii. 26—36. Lip-labour in prayer, though never so well laboured, if that be all, is but lost labour.

2. It needs not be your way, for your father in heaven knows what things you have need of before you ask him, and therefore there is no occasion for such abundance of words. It doth not follow that therefore you need not pray, for God requires you by prayer to own your need of him and dependence on him, and to put his promises in suit; but therefore you are to open your case and pour out your hearts before him and then leave it with him. Consider, 1. The God we pray to is our Father by creation, by covenant, and therefore our addresses to him should be easy, natural and unaffected; children do not use to make long speeches to their parents when they want any thing, it is enough to say, my head, my head. Let us come to him with the disposition of children, with love, reverence and dependence; and then those need not say many words that are taught by the Spirit of adoption to say that one night, Abba, Father. 2. He is a Father that knows our case and knows our wants better than we do ourselves. He knows what things we have need of; his eyes run to and fro through the earth to observe the necessities of his people, 2 Chron. xvi. 9. and he often gives before we call, Isa. lx. 24. and more than we ask for, Eph. iii. 20. and if he do not give his people what they ask, it is because he knows they do not need it, nor is it for their good; and of that he is fitter to judge for us than we for ourselves. We need not be long, or use many words in representing our case, God knows it better than we can tell him, only he will know it from us, what wilt thou I should do unto you? and when we have told him what it is, we must refer ourselves to him, Lord, all my desire is before thee, Psal. cxxxviii. 9. So far is God from being wrought upon by the length or language of our prayers, that the most powerful intercessions are those which are made with groanings that can be uttered, Rom. viii. 27. We are not to prescribe, but subscribe to God.

9. After this manner therefore pray ye: Our Father which art in heaven, Hallowed by thy name. 10. Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven. 11. Give us this day our daily bread. 12. And forgive us our debts, as we forgive our debtors. 13. And lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil: for thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, for ever. Amen. 14. For if ye forgive men their trespasses, your heavenly Father will also forgive you. 15. But if ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your Father forgive your trespasses.

When Christ had condemn'd what was amiss, he directs to do better; for his are reproofs of instruction. Because we know not what to pray for as we ought, he here helps our infirmities, by putting words into our mouths, after this manner therefore pray ye, ver. 9. So many were the corruptions that were crept into this duty of prayer among the Jews, that Christ saw it needful to give a new directory for prayer, to shew his disciples what must ordinarily be the matter and method of their prayer, which he gives in words that may very well be used as a form; as the summary or contents of the several particulars of our prayers. Not that we are tied up to the use of this form only, or of this always, as if this were necessary to the consecrating of our other prayers; we are here bid to pray after this manner, with these words, or to this effect. That in Luke differs from this; we do not find it used by the apostles, we are not here taught to pray in the name of Christ, as we are afterwards: we are here taught to pray, that that kingdom might come which did come when the Spirit was poured out; yet, without doubt it is very good to use it as a form, and it is a pledge of the communion of saints, it having been used by the church in all ages, at least, (saith Dr. Whitby) from the third century. It is our Lord's prayer, it is of his composing, of his appointing; it is very compendious, yet very comprehensive, in compassion to our praying infirmities. The matter is choice and necessary, the method instructive, and the expression very concise. It has much in a little, and it is requisite that we acquaint ourselves with the sense and meaning of it, for it is used acceptably, no further than it is used understandingly, and without vain repetition.

The Lord's prayer, (as indeed every prayer,) is a letter sent from earth to heaven. Here is the inscription of the letter, the person to whom it is directed, Our Father; the place where, in heaven; the contents of it in several errands of request; the close, for thine is the kingdom; the seal, Amen, and if you will, the date too, this day.

Plainly thus: There are three parts of the prayer.

1. The preface, Our Father, which art in heaven. Before we come to our business, there must be a solemn address to him with whom our business lies; Our Father. Intimating, that we must pray not only alone and for ourselves, but with and for others; for we are members one of another and are called into fellowship with each other. We are here taught to whom to pray, to God only, and not to saints and angels, for they are ignorant of us, are not to have the honours we give in prayer, nor can give the favours we expect. We are taught how to address ourselves to God, and what title to give him, that which speaks him rather beneficent than magnificent, for we are to come boldly to the throne of grace.

1. We must address ourselves to him as our Father, and must call him so, He is a common Father to all mankind by creation, Mal. ii. 10. Acts xvii. 28. He is in a special manner a Father to the saints by adoption and regeneration, Eph. i. 5. Gal. iv. 6. and an unspeakable privilege it is. Thus we must eye him in prayer, keep up good thoughts of him, such as are encouraging and not affrighting; nothing more pleasing to God, or pleasant to ourselves, than to call God Father. Christ in prayer mostly called God Father. If he be our Father, he will pity us under our weaknesses and infirmities, Psalm ciii. 13. will spare us, Mal. iii. 17. will make the best of our performances, though very defective, will deny us nothing that is good for us, Luke xi. 11—13. We have access with boldness to him as to a father, and have an advocate with the Father, and the Spirit of adoption. When we come repenting of our sins, we must eye God as a Father, as the prodigal did, Luke xv. 18. Jer. iii. 19. when we come begging for grace, and peace, and the inheritance and blessing of sons, it is an encouragement that we come to God, not as an unreconciled, avenging judge, but as a loving, gracious, reconciled Father in Christ, Jer. iii. 4.

2. As our Father in heaven: so in heaven as to be every where else, for the heaven cannot contain him, yet so in heaven as there to manifest his glory, for it is his throne, Psalm ciii. 19. and it is to believers a throne of grace, thitherward we must direct our prayers, for Christ the Mediator is now in heaven, Heb. viii. 1. Heaven is out of sight and a world of spirits, therefore our converse with God in prayer must be spiritual; it is on high, therefore in prayer we must be raised above the world, and lift up our hearts, Psalm v. 1. Heaven is a place of perfect purity, and we must therefore lift up pure hands, must study to sanctify his name, who is the holy one, and dwells in that holy place, Rev. x. 3. From heaven God beholds the children of men, Psalm xxxiii. 13, 14. And we must in prayer see his eye upon us; thence he has a full and clear view of all our wants and burdens and desires, and all our infirmities. It is the firmament of his power likewise, as well as of his prospects, Psalm cl. 1. He is not only, as a father, willing to help us, but as a heavenly Father able to help us, able to do great things for us, more than we can ask or think; he has where-withal to supply our needs, for every good gift is from above. He is a father, and therefore we may come to him with boldness, but a Father in heaven, and therefore we must come with reverence, Eccles. v. 2. Thus all our prayers should correspond with that which is our great aim as Christians, and that is, to be with God in heaven. God and heaven, the end of our whole conversation must be particularly eyed in every prayer, there is the centre to which we are all tending. By prayer we send before us thither, where we profess to be going.

2. The petitions, and those are six; the three first relating more immediately to God and his honour, the three last to our own concerns, both temporal and spiritual; as in the ten commandments, the four first teach us our duty towards God, and the six last our duty towards our neighbour. The method of this prayer teacheth us to seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and then to hope that other things shall be added.

1. Hallowed be thy name. It is the same word that in other places is translated sanctified. But here the old word hallowed is retained, only because people were used to it in the Lord's prayer. In these words, 1. We give glory to God; it may be taken not as a petition, but as an adoration; as that, the Lord be magnified, or glorified, for God's holiness is the greatness and glory of all his perfections; we must begin our prayers with praising God, and it is very fit he should be first served, and that we should give glory to God, before we expect to receive mercy and grace from him. Let him have the praise of his perfections, and then let us have the benefit of them. 2. We fix our end; and it is the right end to be aimed at, and ought to be our chief and ultimate end in our petitions, that God may be glorified; all our other requests must be in subordination to this and in pursuance of it. Father, glorify thyself in giving me my daily bread, and pardoning my sins, &c. Since all is of him and through him, all must be to him and for him. In prayer our thoughts and affections should be carried out most to the glory of God. The Pharisees made their own name the chief end of their prayers, Jer. 5. to be seen of men, in opposition to which we are directed to make the name of God our chief end; let all our petitions centre in this and be regulated by it. Do so and so for me, for the glory of thy name, and as far as is for the glory of it. 3. We desire and pray that the name of God, that is, God himself in all that whereby he has made himself known, may be sanctified and glorified both by us and others, and especially by himself. Father, let thy name be glorified as a Father, and a Father in heaven; glorify the goodness and thy highness, thy majesty and mercy. Let thy name be sanctified, for it is a holy name; no matter what becomes of our polluted names, but Lord, what wilt thou do to thy great name? When we pray that God's name may be glorified, 1. We make a virtue of necessity, for God will sanctify his own name, whether we desire it or no; I will be exalted among the heathen, Psalm xvi. 10. 2. We ask for that which we are sure shall be granted; for when our Saviour prayed, Father, glorify thy name, it was immediately answered, I have glorified it, and will glorify it yet again.

2. The kingdom come. This petition has plainly a reference to the doctrine which Christ preached at this time, which John Baptist had preached before, and which he afterwards sent his apostles out to preach, the kingdom of heaven is at hand. The kingdom of your Father, which is in heaven, the kingdom of the Messiah, this is at hand, pray that it may come. Note, We should turn the word we hear into prayer, our hearts should echo to it; doth Christ promise, surely I come quickly, our hearts should answer, even so, come. Ministers should pray over the word: When they preach, the kingdom of God is at hand, they should pray, Father, thy kingdom come. What God has promised we must pray for; for promises are given, not to supersede, but to quicken and encourage prayer; and when the accomplishment of a promise is near and at the door, when the kingdom of heaven is at hand, we should then pray for it the more earnestly; thy kingdom come. As Daniel set his face to pray for the deliverance of Israel, when he understood that the time of it was at hand, Dan. ix. 2. See Luke xix. 11. It was the Jews' daily prayer to God, Let him make his kingdom reign, let his redemption flourish, and let his Messiah come and deliver his people. Dr. Whitby, ex Vtriusque. Let thy kingdom come, i. e. let the gospel be preached to all and embraced by all; let all be brought to subscribe to the record God has given in his word concerning his Son, and to embrace him as their Saviour and Sovereign. Let the bounds of the gospel church be enlarged, the kingdom of the world be made Christ's kingdom, and all men become subjects to it, and live as become their character.

3. Thy will be done on earth, as it is in heaven. We pray that God's kingdom being come, we and others may be brought into obedience to all the laws and ordinances of it. By this let it appear, that Christ's kingdom is come, let God's will be done; and by this let it appear that it is come as a kingdom of heaven, let it introduce a heaven upon earth. We make Christ but a titular prince, if we call him King, and do not do his will; having prayed that he may rule us, we pray that we may in every thing be ruled by him. Observe, 1. The thing prayed for, thy will be done, Lord, do what thou pleasest with me and mine, 1 Sam. iii. 18. I refer myself to thee, and am well satisfied that all thy counsel concerning me should be performed; In this sense Christ prayed, not my will, but thine be done. And enable me to do what is pleasing to thee; give me that grace that is necessary to the right knowledge of thy will, and an acceptable obedience to it. Let thy will be done conscientiously by me and others, not our own wills, the wills of the flesh, or the mind, not the wills of men, 1 Pet. iv. 2. much less Satan's will, John viii. 44. that we may neither displease God in any thing we do, (ut nihil nostrum displiceat Deo) nor be displeased at any thing God did, (ut nihil Dei displiceat nobis). 2. The pattern or sampler of it, that it may be done on earth, in this place of our trial and probation, where our work must be done, or it will never be done, as it is done in heaven, that place of rest and joy, that that may at length be our state. We pray that earth may be made more like to heaven by the observance of God's will, which, through the prevalency of Satan's will, is become so near akin to hell; and that saints may be made more like to the holy angels in their devotion and obedience. We are on earth, blessed be God, not yet under the earth; we pray for the living only, not for the dead, that are gone down into silence.

4. Give us this day our daily bread. Because our natural being is necessary to our spiritual well-being in this world, therefore, after the things of God's glory, kingdom and will, we pray for the necessary supports and comforts of this present life, which are the gift of God, and must be asked of him, Τὸν ἀπὸν ἐκτιστόν. Bread for the day approaching, i. e. for all the remainder of our lives. Bread for the time to come, or bread for our being and subsistence, that which is agreeable to our condition in the world, Prov. xxx. 8. Food convenient for us and our families, according to our rank and station.

Every word here hath a lesson in it: 1. We ask for bread, that teacheth us sobriety and temperance; we ask for bread, not dainties, not superfluities, that which is wholesome, though it be not nice. 2. We ask for our bread, that teacheth us honesty and industry; we do not ask for the bread out of other peoples mouth, not the bread of deceit, Prov. xx. 13. not the bread of idleness, Prov. xxxi. 27. but the bread honestly got. 3. We ask for our daily bread, which teacheth us not to take thought for the morrow, Matt. vi. 34. but constantly to depend upon divine providence, as those that live from hand to mouth. 4. We beg of God to give it us, not sell it us, or lend it us, but give it. The greatest of men must be beholden to the mercy of God for their daily bread. 5. We pray, give it to us, not to me only, but to others in common with me. This teaches us charity, and a compassionate concern for the poor and needy: It intimates also, that we ought to pray with our families; we and our households eat together, and therefore ought to pray together. 6. We pray that God would give it us this day, which teacheth us to renew the desires of our souls towards God, as the wants of our bodies are renewed; as duly as the day comes we must pray to our heavenly Father, and reckon we could as well go a day without meat, as without prayer.

3. And forgive us our debts, as we forgive our debtors. This is connected to the former; and forgives, intimating, that unless our sins be pardoned, we can have no comfort in life, and the supports of it: Our daily bread doth but feed us as lambs for the slaughter, if our sins be not pardoned. It intimates likewise, that we must pray for daily pardon, as duly as we pray for daily bread. He that is washed, needed to wash his feet. Here we have,

(1.) A petition: Father in heaven, forgive us our debts, our debts to thee. Note, 1. Our sins are our debts; there is a debt of duty, which, as creatures, we owe to our Creator; we do not pray to be discharged from that, but, upon the non-payment of that there ariseth a debt of punishment; in default of obedience to the will of God, we become obnoxious to the wrath of God; and for not observing this precept of the law, we stand obliged to the penalty: A debtor is liable to process, so are we: A malefactor is a debtor to the law, so are we. 2. Our heart's desire and prayer to our heavenly Father every day should be, that he would forgive us our debts; that the obligation to punishment may be cancelled and vacated, that we may not come into condemnation; that we may be discharged, and have the comfort of it. In suing out the pardon of our sins, the great plea we have to rely upon, is the satisfaction that was made to the justice of God for the sin of man, by the dying of the Lord Jesus our surety, or rather bail to the action, that undertook our discharge.

(2.) An argument to enforce this petition; as we forgive our debtors. This is not a plea of merit, but a plea of grace. Note, Those that come to God for the forgiveness of their sins against him, must make conscience of forgiving those who have offended them, else they curse themselves when they say the Lord's prayer. Our duty is to forgive our debtors; as to debts of money, we must not be rigorous and severe in exacting them from those that cannot pay them without ruining themselves and their families; but this means debts of injury; our debtors are those that trespass against us, that smite us, chap. v. 39, 40. and in strictness of law, might be prosecuted for it; we must forbear, and forgive, and forget the affronts put upon us, and the wrongs done us; and this is a moral qualification for pardon and peace; it encourageth to hope, that God will forgive us; for if there be in us this gracious disposition, it is wrought of God, and therefore is a perfection eminently and transcendently in himself; it will be an evidence to us that he has forgiven us, having wrought in us the condition of forgiveness.

6. And lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil. This petition is expressed,

(1.) Negatively: Lead us not into temptation. Having prayed that the guilt of sin may be removed, we pray, as is fit, that we may never return again to folly; that we may not be tempted to it. It is not as if God tempted any to sin; but, Lord, do not let Satan loose upon us; chain up that roaring lion, for he is subtle and spiteful; Lord, do not leave us to ourselves, Psalm xix. 13. but we are very weak; Lord, do not lay stumbling-blocks and snares before us, nor put us into such circumstances as may be an occasion of falling. Temptations are to be prayed against, both because of the discomfort and trouble of them, and because of the danger we are in of being overcome by them, and the guilt and grief that then follows.

(2.) Positively: But deliver us from evil, ἀπο τὰ πονηρά, from the evil one, i. e. the devil, the tempter; keep us, that either we may not be assaulted by him, or we may not be overcome by those assaults: Or from the evil thing, that is, sin, the worst of evils; an evil, and only evil; that evil thing which God hates, and which Satan tempts men to and destroys them by. Lord, deliver us from the evil of the world, the corruption that is in the world through lust; from the evil of every condition in the world; from the evil of death, from the sting of death which is sin: Deliver us from ourselves, from our own evil hearts: Deliver us from evil men, that they may not be a snare to us, nor we a prey to them.

(3.) The conclusion: For thine is the kingdom, and the power and the glory, for ever, Amen. Some refer this to David's doxology, 1 Chron. xxiv. 11. Thine, O Lord, is the greatness. It is,

1. A form of plea to enforce the foregoing petitions. It is our duty to plead with God in prayer, to fill our mouth with arguments, Job xxiii. 4. not to move God, but to affect ourselves; to encourage our faith, to excite our fervency, and to evidence both. Now the best pleas in prayer, are those that are taken from God himself, and from that which he hath made known of himself. We must wrestle with God in his own strength, both as to the matter of our pleas and the urging of them. The plea here has special reference to the three first petitions: Father in heaven, thy kingdom come; for thine is the kingdom; thy will be done, for thine is the power; hallowed be thy name, for thine is the glory. And as to our own particular errands are encouraging: Thine is the kingdom; thou hast the government of the world, and the protection of the saints, thy willing subjects in it; Thine is the power, to maintain and support that kingdom, and to make good all thine engagements to thy people; Thine is the glory, as the end of all that which is given to, and done for the saints, in answer to their prayers; for their praise watcheth for him. This is matter of comfort and holy confidence in prayer.

2. It is a form of praise and thanksgiving. The best pleading with God is praising of him, it is the way to obtain further mercy, as it qualifies us to receive it. In all our addresses to God, it is fit that praise should have a considerable share, for praise becometh the saints: they are to be to our God for a name and for a praise: It is just and equal; we praise God, and give him glory, not because he needs it, he is praised by a world of angels, but because he deserves it; and it is our duty to give him glory, in compliance with his design in revealing himself to us: Praise is the work and happiness of heaven; and all that would go to heaven hereafter, must begin their praising God. Observe, how full this doxology is, Thy kingdom and the power, and the glory, it is all thine. Note, It becomes us to be copious in praising God. A true saint never thinks he can speak honourably enough of God: Here there should be a gracious fluency, and this for ever. Ascribing glory to God for ever, intimates an acknowledgment, that it is eternally due, and an earnest desire to be eternally doing it, with angels and saints above, Psalms lxxi. 14.

Lastly, To all this we are taught to affix our Amen, so be it. God's Amen is a grant; his fat is, it shall be so: Our Amen is only a summary desire; our fat is, let it be so. It is in token of our desire and assurance to be heard, that we say, Amen, Amen refers to every petition going before; and thus, in compassion to our infirmities, we are taught to knit up the whole in one word, and so to gather up, in the general, what we have lost and let slip in the particulars. It is good to conclude religious duties with some warmth and vigour, that we may go from them with a sweet savour upon our spirits. It was of old the practice of good people to say, Amen, audibly at the end of every prayer, and it is a commendable practice, provided it be done understandingly as the apostle directs, 1 Cor. xiv. 16. and uprightly, with life and liveness, and inward impressions, answerable to that outward expression of desire and confidence.

Most of the petitions in the Lord's prayer had been commonly used by the Jews in their devotions, or words to the same effect, but that clause in the fifth petition, As we forgive our debtors, was perfectly new, and therefore our Saviour here shews, for what reason he added it, not with any personal reflection upon the peevishness, litigiousness, and ill-nature of the men of that generation, though there was cause enough for it, but only from the necessity and importance of the thing itself. God, in forgiving us, hath a peculiar respect to our forgiving those that have injured us; and therefore, when we pray for pardon, we must mention our making conscience of that duty, not only to mind ourselves of it, but to bind ourselves to it. See that parable, Matt. xviii. 23-25. Selfish nature is loth to comply with this, and therefore it is here inculcated, ver. 14, 15.

1. In a promise. If ye forgive, your heavenly Father will also forgive. Not as if this were the only condition required, there must be repentance and faith, and new obedience; but as where other graces are in truth, there will be this, so this will be a good evidence of the sincerity of our other graces: He that relents towards his brother, thereby shews that he repents towards his God. Those which in the prayer are called debts, are here called trespasses, debts of injury, wrongs done us in our bodies, goods, or good names: Trespasses; it is an extenuating term of offences, παράνομα, stumbles, slips, falls. Note, It is a good evidence, and a good help of our forgiving others, to call the injuries done us by a wilfulifying excusing name. Call them not treasons, but trespasses; not wilful injuries, but casual inadvertencies; peradventure it was oversight, Gen. xliii. 12. therefore make the best of it. We must forgive, as we hope to be forgiven; and therefore must not only bear no malice, nor mediate revenge, but must not upbraid our brother with the injuries he has done us, nor rejoice in any hurt that befalls him, but must be ready to help him and do him good, and if he repent and desire to be friends again, we must be free and familiar with him, as before.

2. In a threatening. But if you forgive not those that have injured you, that is a bad sign you have not the other requisite conditions, but are altogether unqualified for pardon; and therefore your Father, whom you call Father, and who, as a father, offers you his grace upon reasonable terms, will nevertheless not forgive you. And if other graces be sincere, and yet you be defective greatly in forgiving, you cannot expect the comfort of your pardon, but to have your spirits brought down by some affliction or other to comply with this duty. Note, Those that would find mercy with God must shew mercy to their brethren; nor can we expect that he should stretch out the hands of his favour to us, unless we lift up to him pure hands, without wrath, 1 Tim. ii. 8. If we pray in anger, we have reason to fear God will answer in anger. It has been said, prayers made in wrath are written in gall. What reason is it that God should forgive us the talents we are indebted to him, if we forgive not our brethren the pence they are indebted to us? Christ came into the world as the great peace-maker, not only to reconcile us to God, but one to another, and in this we must comply with him. It is great presumption and of dangerous consequence, for any to make a light matter of that which Christ here lays such a stress upon. Men's passions shall not frustrate God's word.

16. ¶ Moreover when ye fast, be not, as the hypocrites of a sad countenance: for they disfigure their faces, that they may appear unto men to fast. Verily, I say unto you, they have their reward. 17. But thou, when thou fastest, anoint thy head, and wash thy face; 18. That thou appear not unto men to fast, but unto thy Father which is in secret: and thy Father, which seeth in secret, shall reward thee openly.

We are here cautioned against hypocrisy in fasting, as before in almsgiving and in prayer.

1. It is here supposed, that religious fasting is a duty required of the disciples of Christ, when God, in his providence, calls to it, and when the case of their own souls upon any account calls for it: when the bridegroom is taken away, then shall they fast, Matt. ix. 15. Fasting is here put last, because it is not so much a duty for its own sake, as a means to dispose us for other duties, Prayer comes in between almsgiving and fasting, as being the life and soul of both. Christ here speaks especially of private fasts, such as particular persons prescribe to themselves, as free-will offerings, commonly used among the pious Jews; some fasted one day, some two, every week; others seldomer, as they saw cause; On those days they did not eat till sun-set, and then very sparingly. It was not the Pharisees' tasting twice in one week, but his boasting of it, that Christ condemned, Luke xviii. 12. It is a laudable practice, and we have reason to lament it is that it is so generally neglected among Christians. Anna was much in fasting, Luke ii. 37. Cornelius fasted and prayed, Acts x. 30. The primitive Christians were much in it, see Acts 1. 14-xiii. 3-xiv. 23. Private fasting is supposed, 1 Cor. vii. 5. It is an act of self-denial, and mortification of the flesh, a holy revenge upon ourselves, and humiliation under the hand of God; the most grown Christians must hereby own they are so far from having any thing to be proud of, that they are unworthy of their daily bread. It is a means to curb the flesh and the desires of it, and to make us more lively in religious exercises, as fulness of bread is apt to make as drowsy. Paul was in fasting often, and so he kept under his body, and brought it into subjection.

2. We are cautioned not to do this as the hypocrites did it, lest we lose the reward of it; and the more difficulty attends the duty, the greater loss it is to lose the reward of it.

Now, (1.) The hypocrites pretended fasting, when there was nothing of that contrition and humiliation of soul in them, which is the life and soul of the duty. Theirs were mock-fasts, the show and shadow without the substance: They took on them to be more humbled than really they were, and so endeavoured to put a cheat upon God, than which they could not put a greater affront upon him. The fast that God had chosen, is a day to afflict the soul, not to hang down the head like a bulrush, or for a man to spread sackcloth and ashes under him; we are quite mistaken, if we call this a fast, Isa. lviii. 5. Bodily exercise, if that be all, profits little, that is not fasting to God, even to him.

(2.) They proclaimed their fasting; and managed it so as that all who saw them might take notice that it was a fasting-day with them. Even on these days they appeared in the streets, whereas they should have been in their closets; and they affected a down-look, a melancholy countenance, a slow and solemn pace; and perfectly disfigured themselves, that men might see how often they fasted and might cry them up for devout mortified men. Note, It is said that men, who have, in some measure, mastered their pleasure, which is sensual wickedness, should be ruined by their pride; which is spiritual wickedness, and no less dangerous. Here also they have their reward; that praise and applause of men which they court and covet so much, they have it, and it is their all.

3. We are directed how to manage a private fast, we must keep it private, ver. 17, 18. He doth not tell us how often we must fast, circumstances vary, and wisdom is profitable therein to direct; the Spirit in the word has left that to the spirit in the heart: but take this for a rule, whenever you undertake this study, study therein to approve yourselves to God, and not to recommend yourselves to the good opinion of men; humility must evermore attend upon our humiliation. Christ doth not direct to abate any thing of the reality of the fast, not take a little meat, or a little drink, or a little cordial, no, let the body suffer, but to lay aside the shew and appearance of it; appear with thy ordinary countenance, guise and habit, and while thou deniest thyself thy bodily refreshments, do it so as that it may not be taken notice of, no, not by those that are nearest to thee; look pleasant, anoint thy head and wash thy face; as thou used to do on ordinary days, on purpose to conceal thy devotion, and thou shalt be no loser in the praise of it at last; for though it be not of men, it shall be of God; Fasting is the humbling of the soul, Psalms xxxv. 13. that is the inside of the duty, let that therefore be thy principal care, and as to the outside of it, covet not to let it be seen. If we be sincere in our solemn fasts and humble, and trust God's omniscience for our witness, and his goodness for our reward, we shall find, both that he did see in secret and will reward openly. Religious fasts, if rightly kept, will shortly be recompensed with an everlasting feast. Our acceptance with God in our private fasts, should make us dead, both to men's applauses, we must not do the duty in hopes of them, and to men's censures too, we must not decline the duty for fear of them. David's fasting was turned to his reproach, Psalms lxxix. 10. and yet, ver. 13. Ask for me, let them say what they will of me, my prayer is unto thee in an acceptable time.

19. ¶ Lay not up for yourselves treasure upon earth, where moth and rust doth corrupt, and where thieves break through and steal: 20. But lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through nor steal: 21. For where your treasure is, there will your heart be also. 22. The light of the body is the eye: if therefore thine eye be single, thy whole body shall be full of light. 23. But if thine eye be evil, thy whole body shall be full of darkness. If therefore the light that is in thee be darkness, how great is that darkness! 24. ¶ No man can serve two masters: for either he will hate the one, and love the other; or else he will hold to the one, and despise the other. Ye cannot serve God and mammon.

Worldly-mindedness is as common and as fatal a symptom of hypocrisy as any other, for by no sin can Satan have a surer and faster hold of the soul, under the cloke of a visible and passable profession of religion; than by this; and therefore Christ having warned us against coveting the praise of men, comes next to warn us against coveting the wealth of the world; in this also we must take heed, lest we be as the hypocrites are, and do as they do: The fundamental error that they are guilty of is, that they choose the world for their reward; we must therefore take heed of hypocrisy and worldly-mindedness, in the choice we make of our treasure, our end, and our master.

(1.) In choosing the treasure we lay up. Something or other every man has which he makes his treasure, his portion, which his heart is upon, to which he carries all he can get, and which he depends upon for hereafter. It is that good; that chief good, which Solomon speaks of with such an emphasis, Eccles. ii. 3. Something the soul will have, which it looks upon as the best thing, which it has a complacency and confidence in above other things: Now Christ designs not to deprive us of our treasure, but to direct us in the choice of it; and here we have, must not call them glory, as Laban's sons did, but see and own that they have no glory in comparison with the glory that excelleth. 2. We must not covet an abundance of these things, nor be still grasping at more and more of them and adding to them, as men do to that which is their treasure, as never knowing when we have enough. 3. We must not confide in them for hereafter, to be our security and supply in time to come; must not say to the gold, Thou art my hope. 4. We must not content ourselves with them, as all we need or desire; we must be content with a little for our passage, but not with all for our portion. These things must not be made our consolation, Luke vi. 25. our good things, Luke xvi. 25. Let us consider we are laying up, not for our posterity in this world, but for ourselves in the other world. We are put to our choice, and made in a manner our own carvers: that is ours which we lay up for ourselves: It concerns thee to choose wisely, for thou art choosing for thyself, and shalt have as thou chooseth. If we know and consider ourselves what we are; what we are made for, how large our capacities are and how long our continuance, and that our souls are ourselves, we shall see it a foolish thing to lay up our treasure on earth.

Here is a good reason given why we should not look upon any thing on earth as our treasure, because it is liable to loss and decay: 1. From corruption within. What is treasure upon earth, moth and rust do corrupt. If the treasure be laid up in fine clothes, the moth frets them and they are gone and spoiled insensibly, when we thought them most securely laid up. If it be in corn or other eatables, as his was who had his barns full, Luke xii. 16, 17. rust (so we read it) corrupts that, Brucis, eating, eaten by men, for as goods are increased, they are increased that eat them, Eccl. v. 11. eaten by mice or other vermin; manna itself bred worms; or, it grows mouldy and musty; is struck or smutted or blasted; fruits soon rot: Or, if we understand it of silver and gold, that tarnisheth and cankers; it grows less with using, and grows worse with keeping, James v. 2, 3. the rust and the moth breed in the metal itself and in the garment itself. Note, worldly riches having in themselves a principle of corruption and decay; they wither of themselves and make themselves wings. 2. From violence without. Thieves break through and steal. Every hand of violence will be aiming at the house where the treasure is laid up; nor can any thing be laid up so safe, but we may be spoiled of it. Nunquam ego fortunæ credidi, etiam si cederetur pacem agere, omnia illa quæ in me indulgentissime conferebat, pecuniam, honores, gloriam, eo loco posui, unde posset eas sine metu meo, repetere. Seneca Consul. ad Helv. It is folly to make that our treasure which we may so easily be robbed of.

2. Good counsel, to make the joys and glories of the other world, those things not seen that are eternal, our best things, and to place our happiness in them. Lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven. Note, 1. There are treasures in heaven, as sure as there are on this earth, and those in heaven are the only true treasures, the riches and glories and pleasures that are at God's right hand, which those that are sanctified truly arrive at, when they come to be sanctified and perfected. 2. It is our wisdom to lay up our treasure in those treasures, to give all diligence to make sure our title to eternal life through Jesus Christ, and to depend upon that as our happiness, and look upon all things here below with a holy contempt, as not worthy to be compared with it. We must firmly believe there is such a happiness and resolve to be content with that, and to be content with nothing short of it. If we thus make those treasures our's, they are laid up, and we may trust God to keep them safe for us; thither let us then refer all our designs, and let out all our desires; thither let us send before our best effects and best affections: Let us not burden ourselves with the cash of this world, which will but load us and defile us, and be in danger to sink us, but lay up in store good securities: The promises are bills of exchange, by which all true believers return their treasure to heaven, payable in the future state: And thus we must make that sure that will be made sure. 3. It is a great encouragement to us to lay up our treasure in heaven, that there it is safe; it will not decay of itself, no moth or rust will corrupt it; nor can we be by force or fraud deprived of it; thieves do not break through and steal. It is a happiness above and beyond the changes and chances of time: an inheritance incorruptible.

3. A good reason why we should thus choose, and an evidence that we have done so, ver. 21. Where your treasure is, on earth or in heaven, there will your hearts be. We are therefore concerned to be right and wise in the choice of our treasure, because the temper of our minds and consequently the tenor of our lives, will be accordingly either carnal or spiritual, earthly or heavenly. The heart follows the treasure as the needle follows the loadstone, or the sun-flower the sun. Where the treasure is, there the value and esteem is, there the love and affection is, Col. iii. 2. That way the desires and pursuits go, thitherward the aims and intents are levelled, and all is done with that in view. Where the treasure is, there our cares and fears are, lest we come short of it; about that we are most solicitous; there our hope and trust is, Prov. xviii. 10, 11. there our joys and delights will be; Psalm exix. 111. and there our thoughts will be; there the inward thought will be, the first thought, the free thought, the fixed thought, the frequent, the familiar thought. The heart is God's due, Prov. xxiii. 26. and, that he may have it, our treasure must be laid up with him, and then our souls will be lifted up to him.

This direction about laying up our treasure, may very fitly be applied to the foregoing caution, of not doing what we do in religion to be seen of men. Our treasure is our alms, prayers and fastings, and the reward of them; if we have done these only to gain the applause of men, we have laid up this treasure on earth, have lodged it in the hands of men, and must never expect to hear any further from it. Now it is folly to do this, for the praise of men we covet so much, is liable to corruption; it will soon be rusted and moth-eaten and tarnished; a little folly like a dead fly will spoil it all, Eccl. x. 1. Slander and calumny are thieves, that break through and steal it away, and so we loose all the treasure of our performances; we have run in vain and laboured in vain, because we misplaced our intentions in doing of them: Hypocritical services lay up nothing in heaven, Isa. lviii. 3. the gain of them is gone, when the soul is called for, Job xxvii. 8. But if we have prayed and fasted, and given alms, in truth an uprightness, with an eye to God and to his acceptance, and have approved ourselves to him therein, we have laid up that treasure in heaven, a book of remembrance is written there, Mal. iii. 16. and being there recorded they shall be there rewarded, and we shall meet them again with comfort on the other side death and the grave. Hypocrites are written in the earth, Jer. xvii. 13. but God's faithful ones have their names written in heaven, Luke x. 20. Acceptance with God is treasure in heaven, which can neither be corrupted nor stolen. His well-done shall stand for ever; and if we have thus lain up our treasure with him, with him our hearts will be; and where can they be better?

(2.) We must take heed of hypocrisy and worldly-mindedness in choosing the end we look at. Our concern as to this is represented by two sorts of eyes which men have, a single eye and an evil eye, ver. 22, 23. The expressions here are somewhat dark because concise, we shall therefore take them in some variety of interpretation. The light of the body is the eye, that is plain; the eye is discovering and directing; the light of the world would avail us little without this light of the body; it is the light of the eye.

that rejoiceth the heart, Prov. xv. 30. but what is that which is here compared to the eye in the body?

1. The eye, that is, the heart, so some; if that be single, απλούς, free and bountiful, so the word is frequently rendered, as Rom. xii. 8. 2 Cor. viii. 2.—ix. 11.—13. James i. 5. and we read of a bountiful eye, Prov. xxii. 9. if the heart be liberally affected and stands inclined to goodness and charity, it will direct the man to christian actions, the whole conversation will be full of light, full of the evidencies and instances of true Christianity, that pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father, James i. 27, full of light, i. e. of good works, which are our light shining before men; but if the heart be evil, covetous and hard and envious, griping and grudging (such a temper of mind is often expressed by an evil eye, Matt. xx. 15. Mark vii. 22. Prov. xxiii. 6, 7.) the body will be full of darkness, i. e. the whole conversation will be heathenish and unchristian. The instruments of the church are and always will be evil, but the liberal deviseth liberal things, Isa. xxxii. 5, 6, 7, 8. If the light that is in us, i. e. those affections which should guide us to that which is good, be darkness, if these be corrupt and worldly, if there be not so much as good nature in a man, not so much as a kind disposition, how great is the corruption of the man, and the darkness in which he sits! This sense seems to agree with the context: We must lay up treasure in heaven, by liberality in giving alms, and that not grudgingly but with cheerfulness, Luke xii. 33. 2 Cor. ix. 7. But these words in the parallel place do not come in upon any such occasion, Luke xi. 34. and therefore the coherence here doth not determine that to be the sense of them.

2. The eye, that is, the understanding, so some; the practical judgment, the conscience, which is to the other faculties of the soul as the eye is to the body, to guide and direct their motions; now if this eye be single, i. e. if it makes a true and right judgment and discern things that differ, especially in the great concern of laying up the treasures so as to choose aright in that, it will rightly guide the affections and actions, which will all be full of the light of grace and comfort; but if this be evil and corrupt, and instead of leading the inferior powers, is led and bribed and biassed by them, if this be erroneous and misinformed, the heart and life must needs be full of darkness and the whole conversation corrupt and naught. They that will not understand, are said to walk on in darkness, Psalm lxxxii. 5. It is sad when the spirit of a man that should be the candle of the Lord, is an ignis fatuus, when the leaders of the people, leaders of the faculties, cause them to err, for then they that are led of them are destroyed, Isa. ix. 16. An error in the practical judgment is fatal, it is that which calls evil good and good evil, Isa. v. 20. therefore it concerns us to understand things aright, to get our eyes anointed with eye-salve.

3. The eye, that is, the aims and intentions; by the eye we set our end before us, the mark we shoot at, the place we go to, keep that in view and direct our motion accordingly; in every thing we do in religion, there is something or other that we have in eye; now, if our eye be single, that is, if we aim honestly, fix right ends to ourselves, and move rightly towards them, if we aim purely and only at the glory of God, seek his honour and favour, and direct all entirely to him, then the eye is single; Paul's was so when he said, To me to live is Christ; and if we be right here, the whole body will be full of light, all the actions will be regular and gracious, pleasing to God and comfortable to ourselves; but if this eye be evil, if, instead of aiming only at the glory of God, and our acceptance with him, we look asquint at the applause of men, and while we profess to honour God, contrive to honour ourselves, and seek our own things under colour of seeking the things of Christ, this spoils all, the whole conversation will be perverse and unsteady, and the foundations being thus out of course, there can be nothing but confusion and every evil work in the superstructure: Draw the lines from the circumference to any other point but the centre, and they will cross: If the light that is in thee be not only dim, but darkness itself, it is a fundamental error and destructive to all that follows. The end specifies the action. It is of the last importance in religion, that we be right in our aims and make eternal things, not temporal, our scope, 2 Cor. iv. 18. The hypocrite is like the waterman, that looks one way and rows another; the true Christian like the traveller, that has his journey's end in his eye: The hypocrite soars like the kite, with his eye upon the prey below, which he is ready to come down to when he has a fair opportunity: The true Christian soars like the lark, higher and higher, forgetting the things that are beneath.

(3.) We must take heed of hypocrisy and worldly-mindedness in choosing the master we serve, ver. 24. No man can serve two masters. Serving two masters contrary to the single eye; for the eye will be to the master's hand, Psalm cxlii. 1, 2. Our Lord Jesus doth here obviate the cheat which those put upon their own souls, who think to divide between God and the world, to have a treasure on earth and a treasure in heaven too: please God and please men too: Why not? saith the hypocrite; it is good to have two strings to one's bow: They hope to make their religion serve their secular interest, and so it will turn to account both ways. The pretending mother was for dividing the child: The Samaritans will compound between God and idols: No, saith Christ, this will not do; it is but a supposition that gain is godliness, 1 Tim. vi. 5. Here is,

1. A general maxim laid down, it is likely it was a proverb among the Jews, No man can serve two masters, much less two gods; for their commands will some time or other cross or contradict one another, and their occasions interfere. While two masters go together, a servant may follow them both, but, when they part, you will see to which he belongs: he cannot love and observe and cleave to both as he should: If to the one, not to the other; either this or that must be comparatively hated and despised. This truth is plain enough in common cases.

2. The application of it to the business in hand. Ye cannot serve God and mammon. Mammon is a Syriac word, that signifies gain; so that whatever it is in this world, that is, or that we account to be gain to us (as St. Paul speaks, Phil. iii. 7.) that is mammon. Whatever is in the world, the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eye, and the pride of life, it is mammon. To some their belly is their mammon, and they serve that, Phil. iii. 19. to others their ease, their sleep, their sports and pastimes are their mammon, Prov. vi. 9. to others worldly riches, James iv. 13. to others honours and preferences; the praise and applause of men was the Pharisees' mammon; in a word, self, the unity in which the world's trinity centres, sensual, secular self is the mammon which cannot be served in conjunction with God; for if it be served, it is in competition with him and in contradiction to him. He doth not say, We must not or we should not, but we cannot serve God and mammon, we cannot love both, 1 John ii. 15. James iv. 4. or hold to both; or hold by both in observance, obedience, attendance, trust and dependence, for they are contrary the one to the other. God saith, My son, give me thy heart. Mammon saith, No, give it me. God saith, Be content with such things as ye have. Mammon saith, Grasp at all that ever thou canst, rem, rem, quo cunque modo rem. God saith, Defraud not, never tell a lie, be honest and just in all thy dealings. Mammon saith, Cheat thy own father, if thou canst get by it. God saith, Be charitable. Mammon saith, Hold thy own, this giving undoes us all. God saith, Be careful for nothing. Mammon saith, Be careful for every thing. God saith, Keep holy the sabbath-day. Mammon saith, saith, Make use of that day as well as any other for the world. Thus inconsistent are the commands of God and mammon, so that we cannot serve both. Let us not then halt between God and Baal, but choose ye this day whom ye will serve, and abide by your choice.

25. ¶ Therefore I say unto you, Take no thought for your life what ye shall eat, or what ye shall drink; nor yet for your body, what ye shall put on: Is not the life more than meat, and the body than raiment? 26. Behold the fowls of the air: for they sow not, neither do they reap, nor gather into barns, yet your heavenly Father feedeth them. Are ye not much better than they? 27. Which of you by taking thought can add one cubit unto his stature? 28. And why take ye thought for raiment? Consider the lilies of the field how they grow; they toil not, neither do they spin. 29. And yet I say unto you, that even Solomon in all his glory, was not arrayed like one of these. 30. Wherefore if God so clothe the grass of the field, which to-day is, and to-morrow is cast into the oven, shall he not much more clothe you: O ye of little faith? 31. Therefore take no thought, saying, What shall we eat? or, what shall we drink? or wherewithal shall we be clothed? 32. (For after all these things do the Gentiles seek) for your heavenly Father knoweth that ye have need of all these things. 33. But seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you: 34. Take therefore no thought for the morrow: for the morrow shall take thought for the things of itself: sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof.

There is scarce any one sin that our Lord Jesus doth more largely and earnestly warn his disciples of, nor with more variety of arguments arm them against, than here the sin of disquieting, distracting, distrustful cares about the things of this life, which are a bad sign that both the treasure and the heart are on the earth; and therefore he thus largely insists upon it. Here is,

1. The prohibition laid down: It is the counsel and command of the Lord Jesus that we take no thought about the things of this world. I say unto you. He saith it as our lawgiver, and the sovereign of our hearts; he saith it as our comforter and the helper of our joy. What is it that he saith? It is this, and he that hath ears to hear let him hear it; Take no thought for your life, nor yet for your bodies, ver. 25. Take no thought, saying, what shall we eat? ver. 31. and again, ver. 34. Take no thought, μη μεριμνατε, be not in care. As against hypocrisy, so against worldly cares, the caution is thrice repeated, and yet no vain repetition; precept must be upon precept, and line upon line to the same purpose, and all little enough; it is a sin which doth easily beset us. It intimates, how pleasing it is to Christ, and of how much concern it is to ourselves, that we should live without carefulness. It is the repeated command of the Lord Jesus to his disciples, that they should not divide and pull in pieces their own mind with care about the world. There is a thought concerning the things of this life, which is not only lawful but duty, such as is commended in the virtuous woman, Prov. xxvii. 23. The word is used concerning Paul's care of the churches, and Timothy's care for the state of souls, 2. Cor. xi. 28. Phil. ii. 20.

But the care here forbidden is, 1. A disquieting tormenting care, which hurries the mind hither and thither and hangs it in suspense; which disturbs our joy in God, and is a damp upon our hope in him; which breaks the sleep and hinders our enjoyment of ourselves, of our friends, and of what God has given us. 2. A distrustful unbelieving thought. God has promised to provide for those that are his all things needful for life as well as godliness, the life that now is, food and a covering; not dainties but necessities: He never said, They shall be seated, but verily they shall be fed: Now an inordinant care for time to come, and fear of wanting those supplies, springs from a disbelief of these promises, and of the wisdom and goodness of the divine providence, and that is the evil of it. For present sustenance we may and must use lawful means to get it, else we tempt God; must be diligent in our callings, and prudent in proportioning our expence, to what we have, and pray for daily bread; and if all other means fail, we may and must ask relief of those that are able to give it: He was none of the best men that said, To beg I am ashamed, Luke xvi. 3. as he was, who, ver. 21. desired to be fed with the crumbs; but for the future we must cast our care upon God and take no thought, because it looks like a jealousy of God, who knows how to give what we want when we know not how to get it. Let our souls dwell at ease in him! This gracious carelessness is the same with that sleep, which God gives to his beloved in opposition to the worldling's toil, Psalm cxxvii. 2. Observe the cautions here,

1. Take no thought for your life. Life is our greatest concern for this world, all a man has will he give for his life; yet take no thought about it. 1. Not about the continuance of it; refer it to God to lengthen or shorten it as he pleases; my times are in thy hand, and they are in a good band. 2. Not about the comforts of life; refer it to God to imbitter or sweeten it as he pleases. We must not be solicitous, no not about the necessary support of this life, food and raiment; these God had promised, and therefore we may more confidently expect: say not, what shall we eat? It is the language of one at a loss and almost despairing; whereas though many good people have the prospect of little, yet few but have present support.

2. Take no thought for the morrow; i. e. for the time to come. Be not solicitous for hereafter, how you shall live next year, or when you are old, or what you shall leave behind you: As we must not boast of to-morrow; so we must not care for to-morrow, or the events of it.

2. The reasons and arguments to enforce this prohibition. One would think the command of Christ was enough to restrain us from this foolish sin of disquieting distrustful care, besides the comfort of our own souls so nearly concerned; but to shew how much the heart of Christ is upon it, and what pleasure he takes in those that hope for his mercy, the command is backed with the most powerful arguments that can be. If reason may but rule us, surely we shall ease ourselves of the thorns. To free us from caring thoughts and to expel them, Christ here suggests to us comforting thoughts that we may be filled with them. It will be worth while to take pains with our own hearts to argue them out of their disquieting cares, and to make ourselves ashamed of them. They may be weakened by right reason, but is by an active faith only that they must be overcome. Consider then,

1. Is not this life more than meat, and the body than raiment? ver. 25. Yes, no doubt it is: so he saith, who had reason to understand the true value of present things, for he made them, he supports them; and supports us by them; and the thing speaks itself. Note; 1. Our life is a greater blessing than our livelihood: It is true life cannot subsist without a livelihood, but the meat and raiment which are here postponed to the life and body, is such as is for ornament and delight; for about such we are apt to be solicitous. Meat and raiment are in order to life, and the end is more noble and excellent than the means. The daintiest food and finest raiment are from the earth, but life from the breath of God. Life is the light of men, meat is but the oil that feeds that light, so that the difference between rich and poor is very inconsiderable, since in the greatest things they stand on the same level, and differ only in the lesser. 2. This is an encouragement to us to trust God for food and raiment, and so to ease ourselves of all perplexing cares about them. God has given us life and given us the body; it was an act of power, it was an act of favour; it was done without our care. What cannot he do for us, who did that? What will he not? If we take care about our souls and eternity which are more than the body and its life, we may leave it to God to provide for us food and raiment which are less. God has maintained our lives hitherto, if sometimes with pulse and water, that has answered the end; he hath protected us and kept us alive: He that guards us against the evils we are exposed to, will supply us with the good things we are in need of. If he had been pleased to kill us, to starve us, he would not so often have given his angels a charge concerning us to keep us.

2. Behold the fowls of the air, and consider the lilies of the field. Here is an argument taken from God's common providence towards the inferior creatures, and their dependence according to their capacities upon that providence. A fine pass fallen man is come to, that he must be sent to school to the fowls of the air, and they must teach him, Job. xii. 7, 8.

1. Look upon the fowls and learn to trust God for food, (ver. 26.) and disquiet not yourselves with thoughts what shall you eat. 1. Observe the providence of God concerning them. Look upon them and receive instruction. There are various sorts of fowls, they are numerous, some of them ravenous, but they are all fed and fed with food convenient for them; it is rare that any of them perish for want of food even in winter, and there goes no little to feed them all the year round. The fowls, as they are least serviceable to man, so they are least within his care; men often feed upon them, but seldom feed them; yet they are fed we know not how, and some of them fed fattest in the hardest weather! And it is your heavenly Father that feeds them; he knows all the wild fowls of the mountain, better than you know the tame ones at your own barn-door, Psal. l. 11. Not a sparrow lights to the ground to pick up a grain of corn but by the providence of God, which extends itself to the meanest creatures. But that which is especially observed here is, that they are fed without any care or project of their own; they sow not, neither do they reap, nor gather into barns. The ant indeed doth and the bee, and they are set before us as an example of prudence and industry; but the fowls of the air do not, they make no provision for the future themselves, and yet every day as duly as the day comes provision is made for them, and their eyes wait on God, that great and good house-keeper, that provides food for all flesh.

2. Improve this for your encouragement to trust in God. Are ye not much better than they? Yes, certainly you are. Note; The heirs of heaven are much better than the fowls of heaven, nobler and more excellent beings; and by faith soar higher: of a better nature and nurture; wiser than the fowls of heaven; Job xxxv. 11: though the children of this world that know not the judgment of the Lord, are not so wise as the stork and the crane, and the swallow, Jer. viii. 7. you are dearer to God and nearer; though they fly in the open firmament of heaven. He is their Maker and Lord; their owner and master, but besides all this, he is your Father; and in his account ye are of more value than many sparrows; you are his children; his first born; now he that feeds his birds surely will not starve his babes. They trust you Father's providence, and will not you trust it? In dependence upon that they are careless for the morrow, and being so, they live the merriest lives of all creatures, they sing among the branches, Psalm civ. 12. and to the best of their power they praise their Creator. If we were by faith as unconcerned about the morrow as they are, we should sing as cheerfully as they do; for it is worldly care that mars our mirth and damps our joy, and silenceth our praise as much as any thing.

2. Look upon the lilies, and learn to trust God for raiment: That is another part of our care, what shall we put on; for decency to cover our nakedness; for defence to keep us warm, yea, and with many for dignity and ornament to make them look great in fine; and so much concerned are they for gaiety and variety in their clothing, that this care returns almost as often as that for their daily bread. Now to ease us of this care, let us consider the lilies of the field; not only look upon them, every eye doth that with pleasure, but consider them. Note, There is a great deal of good to be learned from what we see every day, if we would but consider it; Prov. vi. 6.—xxiv. 32.

1. Consider how frail the lilies are; they are the grass of the field. Lilies though distinguished by their colours, yet still are but grass. Thus all flesh is grass, though some in the endowments of body and mind are as lilies, much admired, yet still they are grass; the grass of the field in nature and constitution; they stand upon the same level with others. Man's days at best are as grass, as the flower of the grass, 1 Pet. 24. This grass to day is, and to-morrow is cast into the oven; in a little while the place that knows us will know us no more. The grave is the oven into which we shall be cast, and in which we shall be consumed as grass in the fire, Psal. xlix. 14. This intimates a reason why we should not take thought for the morrow what we shall put on, because perhaps by to-morrow we may have occasion for our grave-clothes.

2. Consider how free from care the lilies are: They toil not as men do to earn cloathing, as servants to earn their liveries, neither do they spin as women do, to make cloathing. It doth not therefore follow, that we must therefore neglect or do carelessly the proper business of this life, it is the praise of the virtuous woman, that she lays her hand to the spindle, makes fine linen, and sells it, Prov. xxxi. 19—24. Idleness tempts God instead of trusting him, but he that provides for the inferior creatures without their labour, much more will provide for us by blessing our labour, which he has made our duty. And if we should by sickness be disabled to toil and spin, God can furnish us with what is necessary for us.

3. Consider how fair, how fine the lilies are. How they grow. What they grow from. The root of the lily or tulip, as other bulbous roots, is in the winter lost and buried under ground, yet when spring returns, it appears and starts up in a little time; hence it is promised to God's Israel, that they shall grow as the lily, Hos. xiv. 5. Consider what they grow to. Out of that obscurity in a few weeks they come to be so very gay, that even Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these. The array of Solomon was very splendid and magnificent; he that had the peculiar treasure of kings and provinces, and so studiously affected pomp and gallantry, doubtless had the richest clothing and the best made up that could be got; especially when he appeared in his glory on high days: And yet let him dress himself as fine as he could, he comes far short of the beauty of the lilies, and a bed of tulips out-shines him. Let us therefore be more ambitious of the wisdom of Solomon, in which he was outdone by none, wisdom to do our duty in our places, rather than the glory of Solomon, in which he was outdone by the lilies. Knowledge and grace are the perfection of man, not beauty, much less fine clothes. Now God is here said thus to clothe the grass of the field. Note, All the excellencies of the creature flow from God the fountain and spring of them. It was he that gave the horse his strength, and the lily its beauty; every creature is in itself, as well as to us, what he makes it to be.

1. As to fine clothing, this teaches us not to care for it at all, not to covet it, not to be proud of it, not to make the putting on of apparel our adorning, for after all our care in this, the lilies will far outdo us; we cannot dress so fine as they do, why then should we go about to vie with them? Their adorning will soon perish and so will ours; they fade, are to-day, and to-morrow are cast as other rubbish into the oven; and the clothes we are proud of are fading, the gloss is soon gone, the colour sheds, the shape goes out of fashion, or in a while the garment itself is worn out; such is man in all his pomp, Isa. xl. 6, 7. especially rich men, James i. 10. they fade away in their ways.

2. As to necessary clothing, this teacheth us to cast the care of it upon God; Jehovah-jireh, trust him that clothes the lilies to provide for you what you shall put on. If he gives such fine-clothes to the grass, much more will he give fitting clothes to his own children; clothes that shall be warm upon them, not only when he quieteth the earth with the south wind, but when he disquiets it with the north wind, Job xxxvii. 17. He shall much more clothe you; for you are nobler creatures, of a more excellent being; if so he clothe the short-lived grass, much more will he clothe you that are made for immortality. Even the children of Nineveh are preferred before the gourd, Jonah iv. 10, 11. much more the sons of Zion, that are in covenant with God. Observe, the title he gives them, ver. 30, O ye of little faith. This may be taken. 1. As an encouragement of true faith though it be but weak, it intitles us to the divine care and a promise of suitable supply. Great faith shall be commended and fetch in great things, but little faith shall not be rejected, even that shall fetch in food and raiment: Sound believers shall be provided for, though they be not strong believers. The babes in the family are fed and clothed as well as those that are grown up, and with a special care and tenderness; say not I am but a child, but a dry-tree, Isa. lvi. 3—5. for though poor and needy, yet the Lord thinketh on thee. Or, 2. It is rather a rebuke to weak faith, though it be true, Matt. xiv. 31. And it intimates what is at the bottom of all our inordinate care and thoughtfulness, it is owing to the weakness of our faith, and the remainders of unbelief in us. If we had but more faith, we should have less care.

3. Which of you, the wisest, the strongest of you, by taking thought can add one cubit to his stature? ver. 27. to his age, so some; but the measure of a cubit speaks it to be meant of the stature, and the age at longest is but a span, Psal. xxxix. 5. Let us consider, 1. We did not arrive to the stature we are of by our own care and thought, but by the providence of God. An infant of a span long is grown up to be a man of six feet, and how was one cubit after another added to his stature? not by his own forecast or contrivance, he grew he knew not how, by the power and goodness of God: Now he that made our bodies and made them of such a size, surely will take care to provide for them. Note, God is to be acknowledged in the increase of our bodily strength and stature, and to be trusted for all needful supplies, because he has made it to appear that he is for the body. The growing age is the thoughtless, careless age, yet we grow; and shall not he who reared us to this provide for us now we are reared? 2. We cannot alter the stature we are of, if we would never so fain: what a foolish and ridiculous thing would it be of a man of low stature to perplex himself, to break his sleep and beat his brains about it, and to be continually taking thought how he might be a cubit higher; when after all he knows he cannot effect it, and therefore he had better be content and take it as it is? We are not all of a size, yet the difference in stature between one and another is not material nor of any great account; a little man is ready to wish he were as tall as such a one, but he knows it is to no purpose, and therefore doth as well as he can with it. Now as we do in reference to our bodily stature, so we should do in reference to our worldly estate. 1. We should not covet an abundance of the wealth of this world, no more than we could covet the addition of a cubit to one's stature, which is a great deal in a man's height; it is enough to grow by inches: such an addition would but make one unwieldy and a burden to one's self. 2. We must reconcile ourselves to our state, as we do to our stature, set the conveniences against the inconveniences, and so to make a virtue of necessity; what cannot be remedied must be made the best of. We cannot alter the disposals of providence, and therefore must acquiesce in them, accommodate ourselves to them, and relieve ourselves as well as we can against inconveniences, as Zaccheus against the inconveniences of his stature by climbing into the tree.

4. After all these things do the Gentiles seek, ver. 32. Thoughtfulness about the world is a heathenish sin and unbecoming Christians. The Gentiles seek these things, because they know not better things; are eager for this world, because they are strangers to a better; they seek these things with care and anxiety, because they are without God in the world, and understand not his providence. They fear and worship their idols, but know not how to trust them for deliverance and supply, and therefore are themselves full of care: but it is a shame for Christians that build upon nobler principles, and profess a religion which teacheth them not only that there is a providence, but that there are promises made to the good of the life that now is, which teacheth them a confidence in God and a contempt of the world, and gives such reasons for both, it is a shame for them to walk as Gentiles walk, and to fill their heads and hearts with these things.

5. Your heavenly Father knows that ye have need of all these things; these necessary things, food and raiment, knows our wants better than we do ourselves; though he be in heaven and his children on earth, he observes what the least and poorest of them has occasion for, Rev. ii. 9. I know thy poverty. You think if such a good friend did but know your wants and straits, you should soon have relief, your God knows them; and he is your Father that loves you and pities you, and is ready to help you; your heavenly Father that has wherewithal to supply all your needs. Therefore away with all disquieting thoughts and cares; go to thy Father, tell him, he knows thou hast need of such and such things; he asks you, Children have you any meat? John xxi. 5. Tell him whether you have or on. Though he knows our wants, he will know them from us; and when we have opened them to him, let us cheerfully refer ourselves to his wisdom, power, and goodness, for our supply. Therefore we should ease ourselves of the burden of care, by casting it upon God, because it is he that careth for us, 1 Pet. v. 7. and what needs all this ado? If he care, why should we care?

6. Seek first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you, ver. 33. Here is a double argument against the sin of thoughtfulness; take no thought for your life, the life of the body, for 1. You have greater and better things to take thought about; the life of your soul, your eternal happiness, that is the one thing needful, Luke x. 42. about which you should employ your thoughts, and which is commonly neglected in those hearts wherein worldly cares have the ascendant. If we were but more careful to please God and to work out our own salvation, we should be less solicitous to please ourselves, and work out an estate in the world. Thoughtfulness for our souls is the most effectual cure of thoughtfulness for the world. 2. You have a surer and easier, a safer and a more compendious way to obtain the necessities of this life, than by carking and caring and fretting about them; and that is by first seeking the kingdom of God; and making religion your business: say not that it is the way to starve, no, that is the way to be well provided for, even in this world. Observe here;

1. The great duty required; it is the sum and substance of our whole duty. Seek first the kingdom of God, i. e. mind religion as your great and principal concern; our duty is to seek, i. e. to desire, pursue and aim at these things; it is a word that has in it much of the constitution of the new covenant in favour of us; though we have not attained, but in many things fail and come short, sincere seeking is accepted, i. e. a careful concern and an earnest endeavour. Now observe, 1. The object of this seeking, The kingdom of God and his righteousness, i. e. we must mind heaven as our end and holiness as our way. Seek the comforts of the kingdom of grace and glory as your felicity; aim at the kingdom of heaven, press towards it, give diligence to make it sure, resolve not to take up short of it; seek for this glory, honour, and immortality; prefer heaven and heavenly blessings far before earth and earthly delights. We make nothing of our religion if we do not make heaven of it. And with the happiness of this kingdom seek the righteousness of it; God's righteousness, the righteousness which he requires to be wrought in us and wrought by us, such as exceeds that of the Scribes and Pharisees; we must follow peace and holiness, Heb. xii. 14. 2. The order of it. Seek first the kingdom of God. Let your care for your souls and another world take place of all other cares: And let all the concerns of this life be made to truckle to those of the life to come; we must seek the things of Christ more than our own things; and if ever they come in competition, we must remember which we are to give the preference to. Seek these things first; first in thy days, let the morning of youth be dedicated to God. Wisdom must be sought early; it is good beginning betimes to be religious. Seek this first every day: let waking thoughts be of God. Let this be our principle to do that first which is most needful, and let him, that is the first have the first.

6. The morrow shall take thought for the things of itself; sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof, ver. 34. We must not perplex ourselves inordinately about future events, because every day brings along with it its own burden of cares and grievances, as if we look about us, and suffer not our fears to betray the succours which grace and reason offer, it brings along with it its own strength and supply too. So that we are here told,

1. That thoughtfulness for the morrow is needless. Let the morrow take thought for the things of itself. If wants and troubles be renewed with the day, there are aids and provisions renewed likewise; compassions, that are new every morning, Lam. iii. 22. The saints have a friend that is their arm every morning, and gives out fresh supply daily, Isa. xxxiii. 2. according as the business of every day requires, Ezra iii. 4. And so he keeps his people in a constant dependence upon him. Let us refer it therefore to the morrow's strength to do the morrow's work, and bear the morrow's burden. To-morrow and the things of it will be provided for without us; what need we thus anxiously care for that which is so wisely cared for already? This doth not forbid a prudent foresight, and preparation accordingly, but a perplexing solicitude, and a prepossession of difficulties and calamities, which may perhaps never come, or if they do may be easily borne, and the evil of them guarded against. The meaning is, let us mind present duty, and then leave events to God; do the work of the day in its day, and then let to-morrow bring its work along with it.

2. That thoughtfulness for the morrow is one of those foolish and hurtful lusts, which they that will be rich fall into, and one of the many sorrows wherewith they pierce themselves through. Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof. This present day has trouble enough attending it, we need not accumulate burdens by anticipating our cumber, nor borrow perplexities from to-morrow's evils to add to those of this day. It is uncertain what to-morrow's evils may be, but whatever they be, it is time enough to take thought about them when they come. What a folly is it to take that trouble upon ourselves this day by care and fear, which belongs to another day, and will be never the lighter when it comes? Let us not pull that upon ourselves altogether at once, which providence hath wisely ordered to be borne by parcels. The conclusion of this whole matter then is, that it is the will and command of the Lord Jesus, that his disciples should not be their own tormentors, nor make their passage through this world more dark and unpleasant by their apprehensions of troubles, than God has made it by the troubles themselves. By our daily prayers we may fetch in strength to bear us up under our daily troubles, and to arm us against the temptations that attend them, and then let none of these things move us.

C H A P. VII.

This chapter continues and concludes Christ's sermon on the mount; which is purely practical, directing us to order our conversation aright, both towards God and man; for the design of the Christian religion is to make make men good, every way good. We have, (1.) Some rules concerning censure and reproof, ver. 1—6. (2.) Encouragement given us to pray to God for a just reproof, ver. 7—11. (3.) The necessity of strictness in conversation urged upon us, ver. 13, 14. (4.) A caution given us to take heed of false prophets, ver. 15—20. (5.) The conclusion of the whole sermon, showing the necessity of universal obedience to Christ's commands, without which we cannot expect to be happy, ver. 21—27. (6.) The impression which Christ's doctrine made upon his hearers, ver. 28, 29.

1. JUDGE not, that ye be not judged. 2. For with what judgment ye judge, ye shall be judged: and with what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you again. 3. And why beholdest thou the mote that is in thy brother's eye, but considerest not the beam that is in thine own eye? 4. Or how wilt thou say to thy brother, Let me pull out the mote out of thine eye? and, behold, a beam is in thine own eye? 5. Thou hypocrite, first cast out the beam out of thine own eye; and then shalt thou see clearly to cast out the mote out of thy brother's eye. 6. ¶ Give not that which is holy unto the dogs, neither cast ye your pearls before swine, lest they trample them under their feet, and turn again and rent you.

Our Saviour is here directing us how to carry it in reference to the faults of others; and it seems intended for a reproof to the Scribes and Pharisees, who were very rigid and severe, very magisterial and supercilious in condemning all about them, as those commonly are that are proud and conceited in justifying themselves. We have here,

1. A caution against judging, ver. 1, 2. There are those whose office is to judge, magistrates and ministers; Christ, though he made not himself a judge, yet came not to unmake them, For by him princes decree justice; but this is directed to private persons, to his disciples, who shall hereafter sit on thrones judging, but not now. Now observe,

(1.) The prohibition. Judge not, we must judge ourselves, and judge of our own acts, but we must not judge our brother; not magisterially assuming such an authority over others, as we allow not them over us; whereas our rule is, to be subject to one another. Be not many masters, James iii. 1. We must not sit in the judgment-seat, to make our word a law to every body. We must not judge our brother, that is, we must not speak evil of him, so it is explained, James iv. 11. we must not despise him, or set him at nought, Rom. xiv. 10. Judge not rashly, pass not such a judgment upon our brother as hath no ground, but is only the product of our own jealousy and ill-nature. We must not make the worst of people, nor infer such invidious things from their words and actions as they will not bear. Judge not uncharitably, unmercifully, and with a spirit of revenge, and a desire to do him a mischief. Judge not of a man's state by a single act, nor of what he is in himself by what he is to us, because in our own cause we are apt to be partial. We must not judge the hearts of others nor their intentions, for it is God's prerogative to try the heart, and we must not step into his throne: nor must we judge of their eternal state, nor call them hypocrites, reprobates, and castaways; that is stretching beyond our line; what have we to do thus to judge another man's servant? Counsel him and help him, but do not judge him.

The judging of those that judge others, is according to the law of retaliation, with what judgment ye judge, ye shall be judged, ver. 2. The righteous God doth many times in his judgments observe a rule of proportion, as in the case of Adonibezek, Judges i. 7. and see Rev. xiii. 10. —xviii. 6. Thus will he be both justified and magnified in his judgments and all flesh will be silenced before him. With what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you again; perhaps in this world, so that men may read their sin in their punishment. Let this deter us from all severity in dealing with our brother, What then shall we do when God riseth up? Job. xxxi. 14. What would become of us, if God should be as exact and severe in judging us, as we are in judging our brethren? If he should weigh us in the same balance? We may justly expect it, if we be extreme to mark what our brethren do amiss; in this, as in other things, men's violent dealings return upon their own heads.

2. Some cautions about reproofing; because we must not judge others, which is a great sin, it doth not therefore follow that we must not reprove others, which is a great duty, and may be a means of saving a soul from death; however, it will be a means of saving our souls from sharing in their guilt. Now observe here, us than the same sins in others; that which charity teaches us to call but a splinter in our brother's eye, true repentance and godly sorrow will teach us to call a beam in our own; for the sin of others must be extenuated, but our own aggravated. 3. There are many that have beams in their own eyes, and yet do not consider it. They are under the guilt and dominion of very great sins, and yet are not aware of it, but justify themselves, as if they needed no repentance or reformation; it is as strange a man can be in such a sinful miserable condition and not be aware of it, as that a man should have a beam in his eye and not consider it; but the God of this world so artfully blinds their minds, as that yet, with great assurance, they say, We see. 4. It is common for those that are most sinful themselves, and least sensible of it, to be most forward and free in judging and censuring others: the Pharisees that were most haughty in justifying themselves, were most scornful in condemning others. They fell foul upon Christ's disciples, for eating with unclean hands, which was scarce a mote, while they bolstered men up in a contempt of their parents, which was a beam. Pride and uncharitableness are commonly beams in the eyes of those that pretend to be critical and nice in their censures of others. Nay, many are guilty of that in secret, which they have the face to punish in others when it is discovered, Cogita tecum fortasse vitium de quo quereris, si te diligenter excussers, in sinu invenies: unigue publico traseris crimini tuo. Seneca de Beneficiis. But 4. Men's being so severe upon the faults of others, while they are indulgent of their own, is a mark of hypocrisy: Thou hypocrite, ver. 5. Whatever such a one may pretend, it is certain he is no enemy to sin, (if he were he would be an enemy to his own sin,) and therefore is not worthy of praise; nay it appears he is an enemy to his brother, and therefore worthy of blame. This spiritual charity must begin at home: for how canst thou say? How canst thou for shame say to thy brother, let me help to reform thee when thou takest no care to reform thyself? Thy own heart will upbraid thee with the absurdity of it; thou wilt do it with an ill grace, and thou wilt expect every one to tell thee, that vice corrects sin: physician, heal thyself; Ipro, squam. See Rom. ii. 21. 5. The consideration of what is amiss in ourselves, though it ought not to keep us from friendly reproofing, ought to keep us from magisterial censuring, and to make us very candid and charitable in judging others. Therefore restore with the spirit of meekness, consider thyself, Gal. vi. 1. what thou hast been, what thou art, and what thou wouldest be, if God should leave thee to thyself.

(2.) Here is a good rule for reprovers, ver. 5. Go in the right method, first cast the beam out of thine own eye. Our own business is so far from excusing us in not reproofing, that our being by it rendered unfit to reprove, is an aggravation of our business; I must not say, I have a beam in my own eye, and therefore I will not help my brother with the mote out of his. A man's offence will never be his defence; but I must first reform myself, that I may thereby help to reform my brother, and may qualify myself to reprove him. Note, Those that blame others, ought to be blameless and harmless themselves. Those that are reprovers in the gate, reprovers by office, magistrates and ministers, are concerned to walk circumspectly and to be very regular in their conversations: An elder must have a good report, 1 Tim. iii. 2—7. The snuffers of the sanctuary were to be of pure gold.

2. It is not every one that is fit to be reproofed; Give not that which is holy unto dogs, ver. 6. This may be considered, either, 1. As a rule to the disciples in preaching the gospel; not that they must not preach it to any that were wicked and profane, Christ himself preached to Publicans and sinners, but such as they found obstinate after the gospel was preached to them, blasphemed it, and persecuted the preachers of it, let them not spend much time among such, for it would be lost labour, but let them turn to others, Acts xiii. 41. So Dr. Whist. Or, 2. As a rule to all in giving reproof. Our zeal against sin must be guided by discretion, and we must not go about to give instructions, counsels, and rebukes, much less comforts to hardened scorners, to whom it will certainly do no good, but who will be exasperated and enraged at you. Throw a pearl to a swine, and he will resent it, as if you throw a stone at him; reproofs will be called reproaches, as they were, Luke xi. 45; Jer. vi. 10. therefore give not to dogs and swine (unclean creatures) holy things. Note, 1. Good counsel and reproof is a holy thing, and a pearl: It is an ordinance of God, it is precious as an ear-ring of gold, and an ornament of fine gold, so is the wise reproof, Prov. xxv. 12. and a wise reproof, like an excellent oil, Psal. cxli. 5. It is a tree of life, Prov. vi. 13. (2.) Among the generation of the wicked, there are some that are arrived to such a pitch of wickedness, that they are looked upon as dogs, and swine, that are impudently and notoriously vile, that have so long walked in the way of sinners, that they are set down in the seat of the scornful, and professedly hate and despise instruction, and set it at defiance, so that they are irrecoverably and irreclaimably wicked; they return with the dog to his vomit, and with the sow to her wallowing in the mire. (3.) Reproofs of instruction are ill bestowed upon such, and expose the reproof to all the contempt and mischief that may be expected from dogs and swine. One can expect no other but that they will trample the reproofs under their feet, in scorn of them and rage against them; for they are impatient of control and contradiction, and they will turn again and rend the reprovers; rend their good names with their revilings, return them wounding words for their healing ones; rend them with persecution; Herod rent John Baptist for his faithfulness. See here what is the evidence of men's being dogs and swine. Those are to be reckoned such who hate reproofs and reprovers, and fly in the face of those that in kindness to their souls shew them their sin and danger. These sin against the remedy; who shall heal and help those that will not be healed and helped? It is plain God has determined to destroy such, 2 Chron. xxv. 16. The rule here given is applicable to the distinguishing, sealing ordinances of the gospel; which must not be prostituted to those who are openly wicked and profane, lest holy things be thereby rendered contemptible, and unholy persons be thereby hardened. It is not meet to take the children's bread and cast it to the dogs. Yet we must be very cautious whom we condemn as dogs and swine, and not till after trial and upon full evidence. Many a patient is lost by being thought to be so, who, if means had been used, might have been moved. As we must take heed of calling the good bad, by judging all professors to be hypocrites; so we must take heed of calling the bad desperate, by judging all the wicked to be dogs and swine. (4.) Our Lord Jesus is very tender of the safety of his people, and would not have them needlessly to expose themselves to the fury of those that will turn again and rent them. Let not them be righteous over much, so as to destroy themselves. Christ makes the law of self-preservation one of his own laws, and precious is the blood of his subjects to him.

7. ¶ Ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you: 8. For every one that asketh receiveth; and he that seeketh findeth; and to him that knocketh it shall be opened. 9. Or what man is there of you, whom if his son ask bread, will he give him a stone? 10. Or if doubtless had the richest clothing and the best made up that could be got; especially when he appeared in his glory on high days: And yet let him dress himself as fine as he could, he comes far short of the beauty of the lilies, and a bed of tulips out-shines him. Let us therefore be more ambitious of the wisdom of Solomon, in which he was outdone by none, wisdom to do our duty in our places, rather than the glory of Solomon, in which he was outdone by the lilies. Knowledge and grace are the perfection of man, not beauty, much less fine clothes. Now God is here said thus to clothe the grass of the field. Note, All the excellencies of the creature flow from God the fountain and spring of them. It was he that gave the horse his strength, and the lily its beauty; every creature is in itself, as well as to us, what he makes it to be.

4. Consider how instructive all this is to us, ver. 30.

1. As to fine clothing, this teaches us not to care for it at all, not to covet it, not to be proud of it, not to make the putting on of apparel our adorning, for after all our care in this, the lilies will far outdo us; we cannot dress so fine as they do, why then should we go about to vie with them? Their adorning will soon perish and so will ours; they fade, are to-day, and to-morrow are cast as other rubbish into the oven; and the clothes we are proud of are fading, the gloss is soon gone, the colour sheds, the shape goes out of fashion, or in a while the garment itself is worn out; such is man in all his pomp, Isa. xl. 6, 7, especially rich men, James i. 10, they fade away in their ways.

2. As to necessary clothing, this teacheth us to cast the care of it upon God; Jehovah-jireh, trust him that clothes the lilies to provide for you what you shall put on. If he gives such fine-clothes to the grass, much more will he give fitting clothes to his own children; clothes that shall be warm upon them, not only when he quieteth the earth with the south wind, but when he disquiets it with the north wind, Job xxxvii. 17. He shall much more clothe you; for you are nobler creatures, of a more excellent being; if so he clothe the short-lived grass, much more will he clothe you that are made for immortality. Even the children of Nineveh are preferred before the gourd, Jonah iv. 10, 11, much more the sons of Zion, that are in covenant with God. Observe, the title he gives them, ver. 30, O ye of little faith. This may be taken, 1. As an encouragement of true faith though it be but weak, it intitles us to the divine care and a promise of suitable supply. Great faith shall be commended and fetch in great things, but little faith shall not be rejected, even that shall fetch in food and raiment: Sound believers shall be provided for, though they be not strong believers. The babes in the family are fed and clothed as well as those that are grown up, and with a special care and tenderness; say not I am but a child, but a dry-tree, Isa. lvi. 3—5, for though poor and needy, yet the Lord thinketh on thee. Or, 2. It is rather a rebuke to weak faith, though it be true, Matt. xiv. 31. And it intimates what is at the bottom of all our inordinate care and thoughtfulness, it is owing to the weakness of our faith, and the remainders of unbelief in us. If we had but more faith, we should have less care.

3. Which of you, the wisest, the strongest of you, by taking thought can add one cubit to his stature? ver. 27, to his age, so some; but the measure of a cubit speaks it to be meant of the stature, and the age at longest is but a span, Psal. xxxix. 5. Let us consider, 1. We did not arrive to the stature we are of by our own care and thought, but by the providence of God. An infant of a span long is grown up to be a man of six feet, and how was one cubit after another added to his stature? not by his own forecast or contrivance, he grew he knew not how, by the power and goodness of God: Now he that made our bodies and made them of such a size, surely will take care to provide for them. Note, God is to be acknowledged in the increase of our bodily strength and stature, and to be trusted for all needful supplies, because he has made it to appear that he is for the body. The growing age is the thoughtless, careless age, yet we grow; and shall not he who reared us to this provide for us now we are reared? 2. We cannot alter the stature we are of, if we would never so fain: what a foolish and ridiculous thing would it be of a man of low stature to perplex himself, to break his sleep and beat his brains about it, and to be continually taking thought how he might be a cubit higher; when after all he knows he cannot effect it, and therefore he had better be content and take it as it is? We are not all of a size, yet the difference in stature between one and another is not material nor of any great account; a little man is ready to wish he were as tall as such a one, but he knows it is to no purpose, and therefore doth as well as he can with it. Now as we do in reference to our bodily stature, so we should do in reference to our worldly estate. 1. We should not covet an abundance of the wealth of this world, no more than we could covet the addition of a cubit to one's stature, which is a great deal in a man's height; it is enough to grow by inches: such an addition would but make one unwieldy and a burden to one's self. 2. We must reconcile ourselves to our state, as we do to our stature, set the conveniences against the inconveniences, and so to make a virtue of necessity; what cannot be remedied must be made the best of. We cannot alter the disposals of providence, and therefore must acquiesce in them, accommodate ourselves to them, and relieve ourselves as well as we can against inconveniences, as Zaccheus against the inconveniences of his stature by climbing into the tree.

4. After all these things do the Gentiles seek, ver. 32. Thoughtfulness about the world is a heathenish sin and unbecoming Christians. The Gentiles seek these things, because they know not better things; are eager for this world, because they are strangers to a better; they seek these things with care and anxiety, because they are without God in the world, and understand not his providence. They fear and worship their idols, but know not how to trust them for deliverance and supply, and therefore are themselves full of care: but it is a shame for Christians that build upon nobler principles, and profess a religion which teacheth them not only that there is a providence, but that there are promises made to the good of the life that now is, which teacheth them a confidence in God and a contempt of the world, and gives such reasons for both, it is a shame for them to walk as Gentiles walk, and to fill their heads and hearts with these things.

5. Your heavenly Father knows that ye have need of all these things; these necessary things, food and raiment, knows our wants better than we do ourselves; though he be in heaven and his children on earth, he observes what the least and poorest of them has occasion for, Rev. ii. 9, I know thy poverty. You think if such a good friend did but know your wants and straits, you should soon have relief, your God knows them; and he is your Father that loves you and pities you, and is ready to help you; your heavenly Father that has wherewithal to supply all your needs. Therefore away with all disquieting thoughts and cares, go to thy Father, tell him, he knows thou hast need of such and such things; he asks you, Children have you any meat? John xxi. 5. Tell him whether you have or no. Though he knows our wants, he will know them from us; and when we have opened them to him, let us cheerfully refer ourselves to his wisdom, power, and goodness, for our supply. Therefore we should ease ourselves of the burden of care, by casting it upon God, because it is he that careth for us, 1 Pet. v. 7, and what needs all this ado? If he care, why should we care?

shall be added unto you, ver. 33. Here is a double argument against the sin of thoughtfulness; take no thought for your life, the life of the body, for 1. You have greater and better things to take thought about; the life of your soul, your eternal happiness, that is the one thing needful Luke x. 42, about which you should employ your thoughts, and which is commonly neglected in those hearts wherein worldly cares have the ascendant. If we were but more careful to please God and to work out our own salvation, we should be less solicitous to please ourselves, and work out an estate in the world. Thoughtfulness for our souls is the most effectual cure of thoughtfulness for the world. 2. You have a surer and easier, a safer and a more compendious way to obtain the necessities of this life, than by carking and caring and fretting about them: and that is by first seeking the kingdom of God; and making religion your business: say not that it is the way to starve, no, that is the way to be well provided for, even in this world. Observe here,

1. The great duty required; it is the sum and substance of our whole duty. Seek first the kingdom of God, i. e. mind religion as your great and principal concern; our duty is to seek, i. e. to desire, pursue and aim at these things; it is a word that has in it much of the constitution of the new covenant in favour of us; though we have not attained, but in many things fail and come short, sincere seeking is accepted, i. e. a careful concern and an earnest endeavour. Now observe, 1. The object of this seeking. The kingdom of God and his righteousness, i. e. we must mind heaven as our end and holiness as our way. Seek the comforts of the kingdom of grace and glory as your felicity; aim at the kingdom of heaven, press towards it, give diligence to make it sure, resolve not to take up short of it; seek for this glory, honour, and immortality; prefer heaven and heavenly blessings far before earth and earthly delights. We make nothing of our religion if we do not make heaven of it. And with the happiness of this kingdom seek the righteousness of it; God's righteousness, the righteousness which he requires to be wrought in us and wrought by us, such as exceeds that of the Scribes and Pharisees; we must follow peace and holiness, Heb. xii. 14. 2. The order of it. Seek first the kingdom of God. Let your care for your souls and another world take place of all other cares: And let all the concerns of this life be made to truckle to those of the life to come; we must seek the things of Christ more than our own things; and if ever they come in competition, we must remember which we are to give the preference to. Seek these things first; first in thy days, let the morning of youth be dedicated to God. Wisdom must be sought early; it is good beginning betimes to be religious. Seek this first every day: let waking thoughts be of God. Let this be our principle to do that first which is most needful, and let him, that is the first have the first.

2. The gracious promise annexed is, that then all these things, the necessary supports of life shall be added unto you; shall be given over and above; so it is in the margin. You shall have what you seek, the kingdom of God, and his righteousness, for never any sought in vain that sought in earnest; and besides that, you shall have food and raiment by way of overplus; as he that buys goods hath paper and pack-thread given him over and above into the bargain. Godliness has the promise of the life that now is, 1 Tim. iv. 8. Solomon asked wisdom, and had that and all other things added to him, 2 Chron. i. 11, 12. O what a blessed change would it make in our hearts and lives, did we but firmly believe this truth, that the best way to be comfortably provided for in this world, is to be most intent upon another world! We then begin at the right end of our work, when we begin with God. If we give diligence to make sure to ourselves the kingdom of God and the righteousness thereof, as to all the things of this life Jehovah-jireh; the Lord will provide as much of them as he sees good for us, and more we would not wish for. Have we trusted him for the portion of our inheritance at our end, and shall we not trust him for the portion of our cup in the way to it? God's Israel were not only brought to Canaan at last, but had their charges borne through the wilderness. O that we were more thoughtful about the things that are not seen that are eternal, and then the less thoughtful we shall be, and the less thoughtful we shall need to be about the things that are seen that are temporal! Also regard not your stuff, Gen. xlv. 20—23.

6. The morrow shall take thought for the things of itself; sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof, ver. 34. We must not perplex ourselves inordinately about future events, because every day brings along with it its own burden of cares and grievances, as if we look about us, and suffer not our fears to betray the succours which grace and reason offer, it brings along with it its own strength and supply too. So that we are here told,

1. That thoughtfulness for the morrow is needless. Let the morrow take thought for the things of itself. If wants and troubles be renewed with the day, there are aids and provisions renewed likewise; compassions, that are new every morning, Lam. iii. 22. The saints have a friend that is their arm every morning, and gives out fresh supply daily, Isa. xxxiii. 2, according as the business of every day requires, Ezra iii. 4. And so he keeps his people in a constant dependence upon him. Let us refer it therefore to the morrow's strength to do the morrow's work, and bear the morrow's burden. To-morrow and the things of it will be provided for without us; what need we thus anxiously care for that which is so wisely cared for already? This doth not forbid a prudent foresight, and preparation accordingly, but a perplexing solicitude, and a prepossession of difficulties and calamities, which may perhaps never come, or if they do may be easily borne, and the evil of them guarded against. The meaning is, let us mind present duty, and then leave events to God; do the work of the day in its day, and then let to-morrow bring its work along with it.

2. That thoughtfulness for the morrow is one of those foolish and hurtful lusts, which they that will be rich fall into, and one of the many sorrows wherewith they pierce themselves through. Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof. This present day has trouble enough attending it, we need not accumulate burdens by anticipating our cumber, nor borrow perplexities from to-morrow's evils to add to those of this day. It is uncertain what to-morrow's evils may be, but whatever they be, it is time enough to take thought about them when they come. What a folly is it to take that trouble upon ourselves this day by care and fear, which belongs to another day, and will be never the lighter when it comes? Let us not pull that upon ourselves altogether at once, which providence hath wisely ordered to be borne by parcels. The conclusion of this whole matter then is, that it is the will and command of the Lord Jesus, that his disciples should not be their own tormentors, nor make their passage through this world more dark and unpleasant by their apprehensions of troubles, than God has made it by the troubles themselves. By our daily prayers we may fetch in strength to bear us up under our daily troubles, and to arm us against the temptations that attend them, and then let none of these things move us.

C H A P. VII.

This chapter continues and concludes Christ's sermon on the mount; which is purely practical, directing us to order our conversation aright, both towards God and man; for the design of the Christian religion is to make man, even good, is evil as well as good. Ver. h, c, 1 Some may come on a course and repent, ver. 1—9, (1) Following a life of sin, it may be to be the end of some life, ver. 1—11, (2) The necessity of shunning a conversation of ungodly as, ver. 12, 13, (3) The necessity for us to take heed of our property, ver. 14—20, (4) The necessity of the whole world, showing the necessity of universal reference to Christ's commands, without which we cannot expect to be happy, ver. 21—27, (5) The impression which Christ's doctrine made upon his hearers, ver. 28, 29.

1. JUDGE not, that ye be not judged. 2. For with what judgment ye judge, ye shall be judged: and with what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you again. 3. And why beholdest thou the mote that is in thy brother's eye, but considerest not the beam that is in thine own eye? 4. Or how wilt thou say to thy brother, Let me pull out the mote out of thine eye? and, behold, a beam is in thine own eye? 5. Thou hypocrite, first cast out the beam out of thine own eye; and then shalt thou see clearly to cast out the mote out of thy brother's eye. 6. ¶ Give not that which is holy unto the dogs, neither cast ye your pearls before swine, lest they trample them under their feet, and turn again and rent you.

Our Saviour is here directing us how to carry it in reference to the faults of others; and it seems intended for a reproof to the Scribes and Pharisees, who were very rigid and severe, very magisterial and supercilious in condemning all about them, as those commonly are that are proud and concerned in justifying themselves. We have here,

1. A caution against judging, ver. 1, 2. There are those whose office is to judge, magistrates and ministers; Christ, though he made not himself a judge, yet came not to unmake them, for by him princes derive justice; but this is directed to private persons, to his disciples, who shall hereafter set on thrones judging, but not now. Now observe,

(1.) The prohibition. Judge not, we must judge ourselves, and judge of our own acts, but we must not judge our brother; not masterfully assuming such authority over others, as we allow not them over us; whereas our rule is, to be subject to one another. R. not many masters. James iii. 1. We must not sit in the judgment-seat, to make our word a law to every body. We must not judge our brother, that is, we must not, speak evil of him, so it is explained, James iv. 11. we must not despise him, or set him at naught, Rom. xiv. 10. Judge not rashly, pass not such a judgment upon our brother as hath no ground, but is only the product of our own jealousy and ill-nature. We must not make the worst of people, nor infer such invidious things from their words and actions as they will not bear. Judge not uncharitably, unmercifully, and with a spirit of revenge, and a desire to do him a mischief. Judge not of a man's state by a single act, nor of what he is in himself by what he is to us, because in our own cause we are apt to be partial. We must not judge the hearts of others nor their intentions, for it is God's prerogative to try the heart, and we must not step into his throne: nor must we judge of their eternal state, nor call them hypocrites, reprobates, and castaways; that is stretching beyond our line; what have we to do thus to judge another man's servant? Counsel him and help him, do not judge him.

The judging of those that judge others, is according to the law of retaliation, with what judgment we judge, we shall be judged, ver. 2. The righteous God doth many times in his judgments observe a rule of proportion, as in the case of Adonibezek, Judges i. 7. and see Rev. xii. 10. - xviii. 6. Thus will he be both justified and magnified in his judgments and all flesh will be silenced before him. With what measure we mete, it shall be measured to you again; perhaps in this world, so that men may read their sin in their punishment. Let this deter us from all severity in dealing with our brother, What then shall we do when God riseth up? 2 Job. xxi. 14. What would become of us, if God should be as exact and severe in judging us, as we are in judging our brethren? If he should weigh us in the same balance? We may justly expect it, if we be extreme to mark what our brethren do amiss; in this, as in other things, men's violent dealings return upon their own heads.

2. Some cautions about reprov^{ing} ; because we must not judge others, which is a great sin, it doth not therefore follow that we must not reprove others, which is a great duty, and may be a means of saving a soul from death ; however, it will be a means of saving our souls from sharing in their guilt. Now observe here,

1. It is not every one that is fit to reprove; those that are themselves guilty of the same faults they accuse others of, or worse, bring shame upon themselves, and are not likely to do good to those they reprove, ver. 3, 4, 5. There is, (1.) A just reproof to the censorious, that quarrel with their brother for small faults, while they allow themselves in great ones, are quick sighted to spy a mote in his eye, but are not sensible of a beam in their own; nay, and will be very officious to pull out the mote out of his eye, when they are as unfit to do it, as if they were themselves stark blind. Note, 1. There are degrees in sin: Some sins are comparatively but as motes, while others are as beams; some are as a gnat, others as a camel. Not that there is any sin little, for there is no little God to sin against; if it be a mote (or splitter, for so it might better be read) it is in the eye; if a gnat, it is in the throat, both painful and perilous, and we cannot be easy or well till they are got out. 2. Our own sins ought to appear greater to us than the same sins in others: that which charity wishes us to call but a blemish in our brother's, a true reprobate and god's sorrow will teach us to call a blemish in our own; for the sin of others must be extenuated, but our own aggravated. It is not necessary that he becomes the same as we, and yet do, in considering it. They are under the guilt and dominion of every great sin, and yet are not aware of it, but judge themselves, as if they needed no repentance or reformation; it is as strange a man can be in such a sinful miserable condition and not be aware of it, as that a man should have a beam in his eye and not consider it; but the God of this world so actually blinds their minds, as that yet, with great assurance, they say, He saith, 1. It is common, for those that are most sinful themselves, and least sensible of it, to be most forward and free in judging and censuring others: the Pharisees that were most laughty in justifying themselves, were most scornful in condemning others. They rebuked upon Christ's disciple for eating with unclean hands, which was scarce a note, while they bolstered men up in a contempt of their parents, which was a beam. Pride and uncharitableness are commonly beams in the eyes of those that pretend to be critical and nice in their censures of others. Nay, many are guilty of that in secret, which they have the face to pursue in others when it is discovered, Cogit tunc fortasse reformare de quo peccaveris, si dicitur iter cesseris, in sanctis tunc inique publice traseris et mortuam, Seneca de Beneficis. But 4. Men's being so severe upon the faults of others, while they are indulgent to their own, is a mark of hypocrisy. Thou hypocrite, ver. 5. 'Whatever such a one may pretend, 'tis certain he is too ready to sin, if he were he would be an enemy to his own sin; and therefore is not worthy of praise; nay it appears he is an enemy to his brother, and therefore worthy of blame. This spiritual charity must begin at home; for he that first trusteth himself. He cannot then for shame say to thy brother, let me help to reform thee, when thou takest no care to reform thyself? Thy own heart will upbraid thee with the absolution of it; thou wilt do it with an ill grace, and thou wilt expect every one to rebuke thee, thou correctest him; physicst him, least touchst him; Ipse, sive tu. See Rom. ii. 21. 5. The consideration of what is amiss in ourselves, though it ought not to keep us from friendly reproofing, ought to keep us from our gistical censuring, and to make us very candid and charitable in judging others. Therefore restore with the spirit of meekness, et in caritate, Gal. vi. 1. what thou hast been, what thou art, and what thou wouldst be, if God should leave thee to thyself.

(2.) Here is a good rule for reprovers, ver. 3. (1.) Cast the beam out of thine own eye. Our own badness is so far from excusing us in not reproving, that our failing by it tends to lead us to reprove, is an aggravation of our badness; I must add, say, I cast out it, and not touch it, and therefore I will not help my brother with the scab out of myself. A man's offence will never be his defence; but I must not avoid it, so that I may thereby, help to reform my brother, and may qualify myself to reprove him. Note, Those that blame others, ought to be blameless, not hurtful to themselves. Those that are reprovers in the gate, i. e. by officers, magistrates and ministers, are concerned to keep their conversation and to be very regular in their conversation. 1. An elder must not enlarge himself, 1 Tim. iii. 2-7. The sinners of the sanctuary were to be reproved 2 Th.

2. It is not every one that is to be reprov'd; Canst not that which is holy unto dogs, ver. 6. His may be considered, either, 1. As a rule to the disciples in preaching the gospel; not that they must not preach it to any that were wicked and profane, Christ himself preached to Publicans and sinners, but such as they found distaste after the gospel was preached to them, blasphemed it, and persecuted the preachers of it, let them not spend much time among such, for it would be lost labour, but let them turn to others, Acts xiii. 41. So Dr. Warby. Or, 2. As a rule to all in giving reproof. Our zeal against sin must be guided by discretion, and we must not go about to give instructions, counsels, and rebukes, much less comforts to hardened scorners, to whom it will certainly do no good, but who will be exasperated and enraged at you. Throw a pearl to a swine, and he will resent it, as if you threw a stone at him; reproofs will be called reproaches, as they were, Luke xi. 45. Jer. vi. 10. therefore give not to dogs and swine (unclean creature) holy things. Not. 1. Good counsel and reproof is a holy thing, and a pearl; It is an ordinance of God, it is precious as an ear-ring of gold, and an ornament of fine gold, so is the wise reproof, Prov. xxv. 12. and a wise reproof, like an excellent oil, Psalm cxli. 5. It is a tree of life, Prov. vi. 13. (2.) Among the generation of the wicked, there are some that are as wild to such a pitch of wickedness, that they are looked upon as dogs, and swine, that are impudently and notoriously vile, that have so long walked in the way of sinners, that they are set down in the seat of the scornful, and professedly hate and despise instruction, and set it at defiance, so that they are irrecoverably and irremediably wicked; they return with the dog to his vomit, and with the sow to her wallowing in the mire. (3.) Reproofs of instruction are all bestowed upon such, and expose the reproof to all the contempt and mischief that may be expected from dogs and swine. One can expect no other but that they will trample the reproofs under their feet, in scorn of them and rage against them; for they are impatient of control and contradiction, and they will turn again and rend the reprovers; and their good names with their revellings, return their wounding words for their healing ones; rend them with persecution; Herod rent John Baptist for his truthfulness. See here what is the evidence of men's being dogs and swine. Those are to be reckoned such who hate reproof, and reprovers, and fly in the face of those that in kindness to their souls shew them their sin and danger. These sin against the remedy; who shall heal and help those that will not be healed and helped? It is plain God has determined to destroy such, 2 Chron. xxv. 16. The rule here given is applicable to the distinguishing, sending ordinances of the gospel; which must not be prostituted to those who are openly wicked and profane, lest holy things be thereby rendered contemptible, and unholy persons be thereby hardened. It is not meet to take the children's bread and cast it to the dogs. Yet we must be very cautious whom we condemn as dogs and swine, and not till after trial and upon full evidence. Many a patient is lost by being thought to be so, who, if means had been used, might have been saved. As we must take heed of calling the good bad, by judging all professors to be hypocrites; so we must take heed of calling the bad, desperate, by judging all the wicked to be dogs and swine. (1.) Our Lord Jesus is very tender of the safety of his people, and would not have them needlessly to expose themselves to the fury of those that will turn again and rent them. Let not them be righteous over much, so as to destroy themselves. Christ makes the law of self-preservation one of his own laws, and precious is the blood of his subjects to him.

7. ¶ Ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you: 8. For every one that asketh receiveth; and he that seeketh findeth; and to him that knocketh it shall be opened. 9. Or what man is there of you, whom if his son ask bread, will he give him a stone? 10. Or if if ye ask a fish, will he give him a serpent? 11. If ye then, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children, how much more shall your Father which is in heaven give good things to them that ask him?

Our Saviour in the foregoing chapter, had spoken of prayer as a commanded duty, by which God is honoured, and which, if done aright, shall be rewarded; here he speaks of it as the appointed means of obtaining what we need, especially grace to obey the precepts he had given, some of which are so displeasing to flesh and blood.

First, Here is a precept in three words to the same purpose, ask, seek, knock, ver. 7. that is, in one word, pray; pray often, pray with sincerity and seriousness; pray, and pray again; make conscience of prayer, and be constant in it; make a business of prayer, and be earnest in it: Ask, as a beggar asks alms: Those that would be rich in grace, must betake themselves to the poor trade of begging, and they shall find it a thriving trade. Ask, i. e. represent your wants and burdens to God, and refer yourselves to him for support and supply according to his promise. Ask, as a traveller asks the way; to pray is to enquire of God, Ezek. xxxvi. 37. Seek, as for a thing of value that we have lost; or as the merchant-man that seeks goodly pearls. Seek by prayer, Dan. ix. 3. Knock, as he that desires to enter into the house knocks at the door. We would be admitted to converse with God, would be taken into his love, and favour, and kingdom; sin has shut and barred the door against us, by prayer we knock; Lord, Lord, open to us. Christ knocks at our door, Rev. iii. 20. Canst, v. 2. and allows us to knock at his, which is a favour we do not allow to common beggars: Seeking and knocking speak something more than asking and praying. 1. We must not only ask, but seek, i. e. we must second our prayers with our endeavours, we must, in the use of the appointed means, seek for that which we ask for, else we tempt God. When the dresser of the vineyard asketh for a year's reprieve for the barren fig-tree, he addeth, I will dig about it, Luke xiii. 7, 8. God gives knowledge and grace to those that search the scriptures and wait at wisdom's gates; and power against sin to those that avoid the occasions of it. 2. We must not only ask, but knock; we must come to God's door, must ask importunately; not only pray, but plead and wrestle with God; we must seek diligently, we must continue knocking; must persevere in prayer, and in the use of means; must endure to the end in the duty.

Secondly, Here is a promise annexed; our labour in prayer, if indeed we do labour in it, shall not be in vain; where God finds a praying heart, he will be found a prayer-hearing God; he shall give thee an answer of peace. The precept is threefold, ask, seek, knock, there is precept upon precept; but the promise is sixfold, line upon line, for our encouragement; because a firm belief of the promise would make us cheerful and constant in our obedience. Now here,

1. The promise is made, and made so as exactly to answer the precept, ver. 7. God will meet those that attend on him: Ask, and it shall be given you; not lent you, not sold you, but given you; and what is more free than gift? It shall, i. e. whatever you pray for, according to the promise, whatever you ask, shall be given you, if God see it fit for you, and what would you more? It is but ask and have: ye have not, because ye ask not, or ask not aright; what is not worth asking, is not worth having, and then it is worth nothing. Seek, and ye shall find, and then you do not lose your labour; God is himself found of those that seek him, and if we find him we have enough. Knock, and it shall be opened; the door of mercy and grace shall no longer be shut against you as enemies and intruders, but opened to you as friends and children. It will be asked, Who is at the door? if you be able to say, a friend, and have the ticket of the promise ready to produce in the hand of faith, doubt not of admission: If the door be not opened at the first knock, continue instant in prayer; it is an affront to a friend to knock, at his door and then go away; though the return tarry, yet wait.

2. It is repeated, ver. 8. it is to the same purpose, yet with some advantage. 1. It is made to extend to all that pray aright, not only you my disciples shall receive what you pray for, but every one that asketh, receiveth, whether Jew or Gentile, young or old, rich or poor, high or low, master or servant, learned or unlearned, they are all alike welcome to the throne of grace, if they come in faith: for God is no respecter of persons. 2. It is made so as to amount to a grant, in words of the present tense, which is more than a promise de futuro. Every one that asketh, not only shall receive, but receiveth; by faith, applying and appropriating the promise; we are actually interested and invested in the good promised; so sure and inviolable are the promises of God, that they do in effect give present possession; an active believer enters immediately, and makes the blessings promised his own: What we have in hope, according to the promise, is as sure, and should be as sweet as what we have in hand. God hath spoken in his holiness, and then Gilead is mine, Manasse is mine, Psalm cviii. 7, 8. it is all mine own, if I can but make it so by believing it so. Conditional grants become absolute upon the performance of the condition; so here, he that asketh, receiveth. Christ hereby putteth his fiat to the petition, and he having all power, that is enough.

3. It is illustrated by a similitude taken from earthly parents, and their innate readiness to give their children what they ask. Christ appeals to his hearers, What man is there of you, though never so morose and ill-humoured, whom, if his son ask bread, will he give him a stone? ver. 9, 10. Whence he infereth, ver. 11. If ye then being evil, yet grant your childrens requests, much more will your heavenly Father give you the good things you ask. Now this is of use,

(1.) To direct our prayers and expectations. We must come to God as children to a Father in heaven, with reverence and confidence: How naturally doth the child in want or distress run to the father with its complaints, My head, my head; thus should the new nature send us to God for supports and supplies. 2. We must come to him for good things, for those he gives to them that ask him; which teaches us to refer ourselves to him; we know not what is good for ourselves, Eccl. vi. 12. but he knows what is good for us, we must therefore leave it with him: Father, thy will be done. The child is here supposed to ask bread, that is necessary, and a fish, that is wholesome; but if the child should foolishly ask for a stone, or a serpent, for unripe fruit to eat, or a sharp knife to play with, the father, though kind, is withal so wise as to deny him. We often ask that of God which would do us hurt if we had it, he knows it, and therefore doth not give it us; denials in love are better than grants in anger; we had been undone ere this, if we had had all we desired; this is admirably well expressed by a heathen, Juvenal, Sat. 10.

*Permittes ipsis expendere numinibus, quid
Conveniat nobis, rebusque sit utile nostris,
Nam pro jucundis aptissima quæque dabunt dii.
Carior est illis homo, quam sibi; nos animorum
Impulsæ, & cæca magnaue cupidine ducti,
Conjugium petimus, partumque uxoris; at illis
Notum est, qui pueri, qualisque futura sit uxor.*

(2.) To encourage our prayers and expectations. We may hope that we shall not be denied and disappointed; we shall not have a stone for bread to break our teeth, (though we have a hard crust to employ our teeth,) nor a serpent for a fish to sting us: We have reason indeed to fear it, because we deserve it, but God will be better to us than the desert of our sins. The world often gives stones for bread, and serpents for fish, but God never doth: Nay, we shall be heard and answered, for children are so by their parents. 1. God has put into the hearts of parents a compassionate inclination to succour and supply their children, according as need is: Even those that have had little conscience of duty, yet have done it, as it were by instinct. No law was ever thought necessary to oblige parents to maintain their legitimate children, nor in Solomon's time their illegitimate ones. 2. He has put himself into the relation of a Father to us, and owns us for his children; that from the readiness we find in ourselves to relieve our children, we may be encouraged to apply ourselves to him for relief. What love and tenderness fathers have, it is from him; not from nature, but from the God of nature; and therefore it must needs be infinitely more in himself. He compares his concern for his people to that of a father for his children, Psalm ciii. 13. Nay, to that of a mother, which is usually more tender, Isa. lxvi. 13—xlix. 14, 15. But here it is supposed, that his love and tenderness, and goodness, far exceeds that of any earthly parent; and therefore it is argued with a much more, and it is grounded upon this undoubted truth, that God is a better Father, infinitely better than any earthly parents are, his thoughts above theirs. Our earthly fathers have taken care of us, we have taken care of our children, much more will God take care of his; for they are evil, originally so; the degenerate seed of fallen Adam; they have lost much of the good nature that was incident to humanity, and among other corruptions have that of crossness and unkindness and unlovingness in them; yet they give good things to their children, and they know how to give, suitably and seasonably; much more will God, for he takes up when they forsake, Psalm xxvii. 10. And, (1.) God is more knowing; parents are often foolishly fond, but God is wise, infinitely so; he knows what we need, what we desire, and what is fit for us. (2.) God is more kind. If all the compassions of all the tender fathers in the world were crowded into the bowels of one, yet compared with the tender mercies of our God, they would be but as a candle to the sun, or a drop to the ocean. God is more rich and more ready to his children than the fathers of our flesh can be, for he is the Father of our spirits, an ever-loving, ever-living Father; the bowels of fathers yern towards undutiful children, towards prodigals, as David's towards Absalom, and will not all this serve to silence unbelief?

12. ¶ Therefore all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them: for this is the law and the prophets. 13. Enter ye in at the strait gate: for wide is the gate, and broad is the way, that leadeth to destruction, and many there be which go in thereat: 14. Because strait is the gate, and narrow is the way, which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it.

Our Lord Jesus here presseth upon us that righteousness towards men, which is an essential branch of true religion, and that religion towards God, which is an essential branch of universal righteousness.

(1.) We must make righteousness our rule, and be ruled by it, ver. 12. Therefore lay this down for your principle, to do as you would be done by; therefore, that you may conform to the foregoing precepts, which are particular, that you may not judge and censure others, go by this rule in general, you would not be censured, therefore do not censure: Or, that you may have the benefit of the foregoing promises, fitly is the law of justice tacked to the law of prayer, for unless we be honest in our conversation, God will not hear our prayer, Isa. i. 15, 16, 17.—viii. 6—9. Zech. vii. 9.—13. We cannot expect to receive good things from God, if we do not do fair things, and that which is honest, and lovely, and of good report among men. We must not only be devout, but honest, else our devotion is but hypocrisy. Now here we have,

1. The rule of justice laid down: Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them. Christ came to teach us, not only what we are to know and believe, but what we are to do; what we are to do, not only towards God, but towards men; not only towards our fellow-disciples, those of our party and persuasion, but towards men in general, all with whom we have to do. The golden rule of equity is, to do to others, as we would they should do to us. Alexander Severus, a heathen emperor, was a great admirer of this rule, had it written upon the walls of his closet, often quoted it in giving judgment, honoured Christ, and favoured Christians, for the sake of it. Quod tibi, hoc alteri; take it negatively, Quod tibi fieri non vis, ne alteri feceris; or positively, it comes all to one: as here, Quod vis tibi fieri, fac alteri. We must not do to others the evil they have done to us, nor the evil which they would do to us if it were in their power; nor may we do that which we think, if it were done to us, we would bear contentedly, but what we desire should be done to us. This is grounded upon that great commandment, Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself. As we must bear the same affection to our neighbour that we would have borne to ourselves, so we must do the same good offices. The meaning of this rule lies in three things. 1. We must do that to our neighbour, which we ourselves acknowledge to be fit and reasonable; the appeal is made to our own judgment, and the discovery of our judgment is referred to that which is our own will and expectation, when it is our own case. 2. We must put other people upon the level with ourselves, and reckon we are as much obliged to them as they to us. We are as much bound to the duty of justice as they, and they as much entitled to the benefit of it as we. 3. We must in our dealings with men suppose ourselves in the same particular case and circumstances with those we have to do with, and deal accordingly. If I were making such a one's bargain, labouring under such a one's infirmity and affliction, how would I desire and expect to be treated? And this is a just supposition, because we know not how soon their case may really be ours; however we may fear, lest God by his judgments do to us, as we have done to others, if we have not done as we would be done by.

2. A reason given to enforce this rule: This is the law and the prophets: It is the summary of that second great commandment, which is one of those two, on which hang all the law and the prophets, Matt. xxii. 40. We have not this in so many words, either in the law, or the prophets, but it is the concurring language of the whole: All that is there said concerning our duty towards our neighbour (and that is no little) may be reduced to this rule, Christ has here adopted it into his law: so that both the Old Testament and the New agree in prescribing this to us, to do as we would be done by. By this rule the law of Christ is commended, but the lives of Christians are condemned by comparing them with it. Aut hoc non evangelium, aut hi non evangelici.

(2.) We must make religion our business, and be intent upon it; we must must be strict and circumspect in our conversation, which is here represented to us as entering in at a strait gate, and walking on in a narrow way, ver. 13, 14. Observe here,

1. The account that is given of the bad way of sin, and the good way of holiness. There are but two ways, right and wrong, good and evil; the way to heaven, and the way to hell; in the one of which we are all of us walking; no middle place hereafter, no middle way now; the distinction of the children of men into saints and sinners, godly and ungodly, will swallow up all to eternity.

Here is, (1.) An account given us of the way of sin and sinners, both what is the best, and what is the worst of it.

1. That which allure multitudes into it, and keeps them in it, that the gate is wide, and the way broad, and there are many travellers in that way.

1. You will have abundance of liberty in that way. The gate is wide, and stands wide open to tempt those that go right on their way. You may go in at this gate with all your lusts about you; it gives no check to your appetites, to your passions; you may walk in the way of your heart, and in the sight of your eyes; that gives room enough. It is a broad way, for there is nothing to edge in those that walk it, but they wander endlessly; a broad way, for there are many paths in it; there is choice of sinful ways, contrary to each other, but all paths in this broad way. 2. You will have abundance of company in that way: Many there be that go in at this gate and walk in this way: If we follow the multitude, it will be to do evil: If we go with the crowd, it will be the wrong way. It is natural to us to incline to go down the stream, and do as the most do; but it is too great a condescension to be willing to be damned for company, and go to hell with them, because they will not go to heaven with us: If many perish, we should be the more cautious.

2. That which should alight us from it is, that it leads to destruction. Death, eternal death, is at the end of it, and the way of sin tends to it, everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord. Whether it be the high-way of open profaneness, or the back-way of close hypocrisy, if it be a way of sin, it will be our ruin if we repent not.

1. What there is in it that frightens many from it, let us know the worst of it, that we may sit down and count the cost of it; Christ deals faithfully with us, and tells us,

(1.) That the gate is strait. Conversion and regeneration is the gate by which we enter into this way, in which we begin a life of faith and serious godliness; out of a state of sin into a state of grace we must pass by the new birth, John iii. 3—5. This is a strait gate, hard to hit, and hard to get through; like a passage between two rocks, 1 Sam. xiv. 4. There must be a new heart, and a new spirit, and old things must pass away: The bent of the soul must be changed, corrupt habits broken, corrupt customs broken off; what we have been doing all our days, must be undone again: We must swim against the stream, much opposition must be struggled with and broken through, from without and from within. It is easier to set a man against all the world than against himself, and yet this must be in conversion. It is a strait gate, for we must stoop, or we cannot go in at it; must become as little children; high thoughts must be brought down; nay, we must strip, must deny ourselves; put off the world, put off the old man; must be willing to forsake all for our interest in Christ. The gate is strait to all, but to some straiter than to others; to the rich, to some that have been long prejudiced against religion. The gate is strait, blessed be God it is not shut up, or locked against us; nor kept with a flaming sword, as it will be shortly, Matt. xxv. 10.

(2.) That the way is narrow. We are not in heaven as soon as we are got through the strait gate, not in Canaan, as soon as we are got through the Red sea; no, we must go through a wilderness, must travel a narrow way, hedged in by the divine law, which is exceeding broad, and that makes the way narrow; self must be denied, the body kept under, corruptions mortified, that are as a right eye and a right hand; daily temptations must be resisted; duties to be done that are against the grain; we must endure hardness, must wrestle and be in an agony; must watch in all things, and walk with care and circumspection; we must go through much tribulation: It is ὁδὸς στενὴ, an afflicted way, a way hedged about with thorns, blessed be God it is not hedged up. The bodies we carry about with us, and the corruptions remaining in us, make the way of our duty difficult; but as the understanding will grow more and more sound, it will open and enlarge, and grow more and more pleasant.

(3.) The gate being so strait, and the way so narrow, it is not strange that there are but few that find it and choose it. Many pass by it through carelessness, they will not be at the pains to find it; they are well as they are, and see no need to change their way: Others look upon it, but shun it; they like not to be so limited and restrained. Those that are going to heaven are but few, compared to those that are going to hell; a remnant, a little flock, like the grape-gleanings of the vintage; as the eight that were saved in the ark, 1 Kings xx. 27. In vitis alter alterum truditur: Quomodo ad salutem revocari potest, quam nullus retrahit, & populus impellit? Seneca, Epist. 29. This discourages many, they are loth to be singular, to be solitary; but instead of stumbling at this, say rather if so few are going to heaven, there shall be one the more for me.

2. Let us see what there is in this way, which, notwithstanding this, should invite us all to it; it leads to life, to present comfort in the favour of God, which is the life of the soul; to eternal bliss; the hope of which at the end of our way, should reconcile us to all the difficulties and inconveniences of the way. Life and godliness are put together, 2 Pet. i. 3. The gate is strait, and the way narrow and up-hill, but one hour in heaven will make amends for all.

2. The great concern and duty of every one of us, in consideration of all this: Enter ye in at the strait gate. The matter is fairly stated, life and death, good and evil, are set before us, both the ways and both the ends; now let the matter be taken entire, and considered impartially, and then choose you this day which you will walk in; nay, the matter determines itself, and will not admit of a debate: No man in his wits would choose to go to the gallows, because it is a smooth pleasant way to it; nor refuse the offer of a palace and a throne, because it is a rough dirty way to it; yet such absurdities as these are men guilty of in the concerns of their souls. Delay not therefore, deliberate not any longer, but enter ye in at the strait gate; knock at it by sincere and constant prayers and endeavours, and it shall be opened; nay, a wide door shall be opened, and an effectual one. It is true, we can neither go in nor go on without the assistance of divine grace; but it is as true that grace is freely offered, and shall not be wanting to those that seek it and submit to it. Conversion is hard work, but it is needful, and blessed be God, it is not impossible if we strive, Luke xiii. 24.

15. ¶ Beware of false prophets; which come to you in sheep's clothing, but inwardly they are ravening wolves. 16. Ye shall know them by their fruits. Do men gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thistles? 17.

Even so every good tree bringeth forth good fruit; but a corrupt tree bringeth forth evil fruit. 18. A good tree cannot bring forth evil fruit, neither can a corrupt tree bring forth good fruit. 19. Every tree that bringeth not forth good fruit is hewn down, and cast into the fire. 20. Wherefore by their fruits ye shall know them.

We have here a caution against false prophets, to take heed that we be not deceived and imposed upon by them. Prophets are properly such as foretell things to come; there were some in the Old Testament who pretended to that without warrant, and the event disproved their pretensions, as Zedekiah, 1 Kings xxii. 11. and another Zedekiah, Jer. xxix. 21. but prophets did also teach the people their duty, so that false prophets here are false teachers: Christ being a prophet and a teacher come from God, and designing to send abroad teachers under him, gives warning to all to take heed of counterfeits, who instead of healing souls with wholesome doctrine, as they pretend, would poison them.

Those are false teachers and false prophets, 1. Who produce false commissions, who pretend to have immediate warrant and direction from God to set up for prophets, and to be divinely inspired, when they are not so. Though their doctrine may be true, we are to beware of them as false prophets. False apostles are those who say they are apostles, and are not, Rev. ii. 2. such are false prophets. Take heed of those who pretend to revelation, and admit them not without sufficient proof, lest that one absurdity being admitted a thousand follow. 2. Who preach false doctrine in those things that are essential to religion, who teach that which is contrary to the truth as it is in Jesus, to the truth which is according to godliness. The former seems to be the proper notion of pseudopropheta, a false or pretending prophet, but commonly the latter falls in with it; for who would hang out false colours, but with design, under pretence of them, the more successfully to attack the truth. Well, beware of them, suspect them, try them, and when you have discovered their falsehood avoid them, have nothing to do with them: Stand upon your guard against this temptation, which commonly attends the days of reformation, and the breathings out of divine light in more than ordinary strength and splendour. When God's work is revived, Satan and his agents are most busy. Here is,

First, A good reason for this caution: Beware of them, for they are wolves in sheep's clothing, ver. 15.

1. We have need to be very cautious; because their pretences are very fair and plausible, and such as will deceive us if we be not upon our guard. They come in sheep's clothing, in the habit of prophets, which was plain and coarse and unwrought; they wear a rough garment to deceive, Zech. xiii. 4. Elijah's mantle the Septuagint calls ἡ μαλλίον, a sheep-skin mantle. We must take heed of being imposed upon by men's dress and garb, as by that of the Scribes, who desire to walk in long robes, Luke xx. 46. Or it may be taken figuratively; they pretend to be sheep, and outwardly appear so innocent, harmless, meek, useful, and all that is good, as none more; they feign themselves to be just men, and for the sake of their clothing are admitted among the sheep, which gives them an opportunity of doing them a mischief ere they are aware: They and their errors are gilded with the specious pretences of sanctity and devotion: Satan turns himself into an angel of light, 2 Cor. xi. 13, 14. The enemy has horns like a lamb, Rev. xiii. 11. Faces of men, Rev. ix. 7, 8. Seducers in language and carriage are soft as wool, Rom. xvi. 18. Isa. xxx. 10.

2. Because under these pretensions their designs are very malicious and mischievous: Inwardly they are ravening wolves. Every hypocrite is a goat in sheep's clothing, but a false prophet is a wolf in sheep's clothing; not only not a sheep, but the worst enemy the sheep has, that comes not but to tear and devour, to scatter the sheep, John x. 12. to drive them from God, and from one another, into crooked paths. Those that would cheat us of any truth, and possess us with error, whatever they pretend, it is mischief to our souls that they intend. Paul calls them grievous wolves, Acts xx. 29. They raven for themselves, serve their own belly, Rom. xvi. 18. make a prey of you, make a gain of you: Now since it is so easy a thing, and withal so dangerous, to be cheated, Beware of false prophets.

Secondly, Here is a good rule to go by in this caution: We must prove all things, 1 Thess. v. 21. Try the spirits, 1 John iv. 1. and here we have a touchstone to try by: Ye shall know them by their fruits, ver. 16—20. Observe,

1. The illustration of this comparison, of the fruits being the discovery of the tree: You cannot always distinguish them by their bark and leaves, or by the spreading of their boughs, but by their fruits ye shall know them. The fruit is according to the tree. Men may in their professions put a force upon their nature and contradict their inward principles, but the stream and bent of their practices will agree with them. Christ insists upon this, the agreeableness between the fruit and the tree, which is such, as that, 1. If you know what the tree is, you may know what fruit to expect: Never look to gather grapes from thorns, nor figs from thistles; it is not in their nature to produce such fruits: An apple may be stuck, or a bunch of grapes hung upon a thorn, so may a good truth, a good word or action be found in an ill man, but you may be sure it never grew there. Note, (1.) Corrupt, vicious, unsanctified hearts are like thorns and thistles, which came in with sin, are worthless, vexing, and for the fire at last. (2.) Good works are good fruit, like grapes and figs pleasing to God and profitable to men. (3.) This good fruit is never to be expected from bad men, no more than a clean thing out of an unclean; they want an influencing, acceptable principle; out of an evil treasure will be brought forth evil things. 2. On the other hand, if you know what the fruit is, you may by that perceive what the tree is. A good tree cannot bring forth evil fruit, nay, it cannot but bring forth good fruit; and a corrupt tree cannot bring forth good fruit; nay, it cannot but bring forth evil fruit; but then that must be reckoned the fruit of the tree, which it brings forth naturally, and which is its genuine product, and which it brings forth plentifully and constantly, and is its usual product. Men are known, not by particular acts, but by the course and tenor of their conversations, and by the more frequent acts, especially those that appear to be free, and most their own, and least under the influence of external motives and inducements.

2. The application of this to the false prophets.

(1.) By way of terror and threatening, ver. 19. Every tree that brings not forth good fruit, is hewn down. This very saying John Baptist had used, chap. iii. 10. Christ could have spoken the same sense in other words, could have altered it, or given it a new turn, but he thought it no diminution to him, to say the same that John had said before him; let not ministers be ambitious of coining new expressions, nor people's ears itch for novelties; to write and speak the same things must not be grievous, for it is safe. Here is, 1. The description of barren trees: They are trees that do not bring forth good fruit: Though there be fruit, if it be not good fruit, though that be done, which for the matter of it is good, if it be not done well, well, in a right manner and for a right end, the tree is accounted barren. 2. The doom of barren trees: They are; that is, certainly they shall be hewn down, and cast into the fire: God will deal with them as men use to deal with dry trees that cumber the ground: He will mark them by some signal tokens of his displeasure; he will bark them by stripping them of their parts and gifts, will cut them down by death, and cast them into the fire of hell, a fire blown with the bellows of God's wrath, and fed with the wood of barren trees. Compare this with Ezek. xxxi. 12, 13. Dan. iv. 14. John xv. 6.

1. By the fruits of their persons, their words and actions, and the course of their conversation. If you would know whether they be right or no, observe how they live; their works will testify for them or against them. The Scribes and Pharisees sat in Moses's chair, and taught the law, but they were proud, and covetous, and false, and oppressive, and therefore Christ warned his disciples to be ware of them and of their leaven, Mark xii. 38. If men pretend to be prophets and are immoral, that disproves their pretensions; those are no true friends to the cross of Christ, whatever they profess, whose God is their belly, and who mind earthly things, Phil. iii. 18, 19. Those are not taught or sent of the holy God, whose lives evidence that they are led by the unclean spirit. God puts the treasure into earthen vessels, but not into such stinking vessels: They may declare God's statutes, but what have they to do to declare them?

2. By the fruits of their doctrine; their fruits as prophets; not that this is the only way, but it is one way of trying doctrines, whether they be of God or no: What do they tend to? What affections and practices will they lead those into that embrace them? If the doctrine be of God, it will tend to promote serious piety, humility, charity, holiness and love, with other Christian graces; but if, on the contrary, the doctrines these prophets preach have a manifest tendency to make people proud, worldly and contentious, to make them loose and careless in their conversations, unjust or uncharitable, factious or disturbers of the public peace; if it indulge carnal liberty, and take people off from governing themselves and their families by the strict rules of the narrow way, we may conclude, that this persuasion cometh not of him that calleth us, Gal. v. 8. This wisdom is not from above, James iii. 15. Faith and a good conscience are held together, 1 Tim. i. 19. —iii. 9. Note, Doctrines of doubtful disputation must be tried by graces and duties of confessed certainty: Those opinions come not from God that lead to sin: But if we cannot know them by their fruits, we must have recourse to the great touchstone, to the law, and to the testimony: Do they speak according to that rule?

21. ¶ Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doth the will of my Father which is in heaven. 22. Many will say to me in that day, Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in thy name? and in thy name have cast out devils? and in thy name done many wonderful works? 23. And then will I profess unto them, I never knew you: depart from me, ye that work iniquity. 24. Therefore whosoever heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them, I will liken him unto a wise man, which built his house upon a rock: 25. And the rain descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that house; and it fell not: for it was founded upon a rock. 26. And every one that heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them not, shall be likened unto a foolish man, which built his house upon the sand: 27. And the rain descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that house; and it fell: and great was the fall of it. 28. And it came to pass, when Jesus had ended these sayings, the people were astonished at his doctrines. 29. For he taught them as one having authority, and not as the Scribes.

We have here the conclusion of this long and excellent sermon, the scope of which is to shew the indispensable necessity of obedience to the commands of Christ: this is designed to clench the nail, that it might fix in a sure place; he speaks this to his disciples that sat at his feet, wherever he preached, and followed him wherever he went: Had he sought his own praise among men, he would have said that was enough; but the religion he came to establish, is in power, not in word only, 1 Cor. iv. 20. and therefore something more is necessary.

First, He shews, by a plain remonstrance, that an outward profession of religion, though making itself never so remarkable, will not bring us to heaven, unless there be an agreeable conversation, ver. 21, 22, 23. All judgment is committed to our Lord Jesus, the keys are put into his hand, he has power to prescribe new terms of life and death, and of judging men according to them: Now this is a solemn declaration pursuant to that power. Observe here,

1. Christ's law laid down, ver. 21. Not every one that saith, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven, i. e. into the kingdom of grace and glory. It is an answer to that question, Psal. xv. 1. Who shall sojourn in thy tabernacle? i. e. the church militant, and who shall dwell in thy holy hill? i. e. the church triumphant. Christ here tells in two things,

(1.) That it will not suffice to say, Lord, Lord; in word and tongue to own Christ for our Master, and to make addresses to him, and professions of him accordingly; in prayer to God, in discourse with men, we must call Christ, Lord, Lord, we say well, for so he is, John xiii. 13. but can we imagine that this is enough to bring us to heaven, that such a piece of formality as this should be so recompensed? or that he who knows and requires the heart, should be so put off with shews for substance? Compliments among men are pieces of civility that are returned with compliments, but they are never paid as real services; and can they then be of an account with Christ? There may be a seeming importunity in prayer, Lord, Lord, but if inward impressions be not answerable to outward expressions, we are but as a sounding brass, and a tinkling cymbal. This is not to take us off from saying, Lord, Lord, from praying, and being earnest in prayer, from professing Christ's name, and being bold in professing it, but from resting in these, in the form of godliness, without the power.

(2.) That it is necessary to our happiness that we do the will of Christ, which is indeed the will of his Father in heaven. The will of God, as Christ's Father, is his will in the gospel, for there he is made known, as the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ; and in him our Father: Now this is his will, that we believe in Christ, that we repent of sin, that we live a holy life, that we love one another: This is his will, even our sanctification. If we comply not with the will of God, we mock Christ in calling him Lord, as they did, who put on him a gorgeous robe and said, Hail, King of the Jews. Saying and doing are two things, often parted in the conversation of men; he that said, I go, Sir, stirred never a step, Matt. xxv. 30. but these two things God has joined in his command, and let no man that puts them asunder think to enter into the kingdom of heaven.

4. The hypocrite's plea against the strictness of this law, offering other things in lieu of obedience, ver. 22. The plea is supposed to be in that day, that great day, when every man shall appear in his own colours, when the secrets of all hearts shall be manifest, and among the rest the secret pretences with which sinners now support their vain hopes. Christ knows the strength of their cause, and it is but weakness: What they now harbour in their bosoms, they will then produce in arrest or judgment to stay the doom, but it will be in vain. They put in their plea with great importunity, Lord, Lord; and with great confidence appealing to Christ concerning it; Lord, dost not thou know, 1. That we have prophesied in thy name? Yes, it may be so, Balaam and Caiaphas were over-ruled to prophesy, and Saul was against his will among the prophets, yet that did not save them: These prophesied in his name, but he did not send them; they only made use of his name to serve a turn. Note, A man may be a preacher, may have gifts for the ministry and an external call to it, and perhaps some success in it, and yet be a wicked man; may help others to heaven, and yet come short himself. 2. That in thy name we have cast out devils? That may be too; Judas cast out devils, and yet a son of perdition. Origen saith, that in his time, so prevalent was the name of Christ to cast out devils, that sometimes it availed when named by wicked Christians. A man might cast devils out of others, and yet have a devil, may and be a devil himself. 3. That in thy name we have done many wonderful works? There may be a faith of miracles, where there is no justifying faith, none of that faith which works by love and obedience. Gifts of tongues and healing would recommend men to the world, but it is only real holiness and sanctification that is accepted of God. Grace and love is a more excellent way than removing mountains, or speaking with the tongue of men and angels, 1 Cor. xiii. 1, 2. Grace will bring a man to heaven without working miracles, but working miracles will never bring a man to heaven without grace. Observe, That which their heart was upon in doing these works, and which they confided in, was the wonderfulness of them: Simon Magus wondered at the miracles, Acts viii. 13. and therefore would give any money for power to do the like. Observe, They had not many good works to plead, they could not pretend to have done many gracious works of piety and charity, one such would have passed better in their account than many wonderful works, which availed not at all while they persisted in disobedience. Miracles are now ceased, and with them this plea; but do not carnal hearts still bolster up themselves in their groundless hopes with the like vain supports? They think they shall go to heaven, because they had been of good repute among professors of religion, have kept fasts and given alms, and have been preferred in the church, as if this would atone for their reigning pride, worldliness, and sensuality, and want of love to God and man. Behold is their confidence, Jer. xlviii. 13. they are haughty because of the holy mountain, Zeph. iii. 11. and boast that they are the temple of the Lord, Jer. vii. 4. Let us take heed of resting in external privileges and performances, lest we deceive ourselves, and perish eternally as multitudes do, with a lie in our right hand.

3. The rejection of this plea as frivolous. The same that is the law-maker, ver. 21. is here the judge according to that law, ver. 23. and he will over-rule the plea, will over-rule it publicly, he will profess to them with all possible solemnity, as sentence is passed by the judge, I never knew you, and therefore depart from me, ye that work iniquity. Observe, 1. Why, and upon what ground, he rejects them and their plea, because they were workers of iniquity. Note, it is possible for men to have a great name for piety, and yet to be workers of iniquity, and those that are so will receive the greater damnation. Secret haunts of sin kept up under the cloak of a visible profession will be the ruin of hypocrites: Living in known sin nullifies men's pretensions, be they never so specious. 2. How it is expressed, I never knew you, i. e. I never owned you as my servants, no, not when you prophesied in my name, when you were in the height of your professions and were most cried up. This intimates, that if he had ever known them, as the Lord knows them that are his, had ever owned them and loved them as his, he would have known them and owned them, and loved them to the end: But he never did know them, for he always knew them to be hypocrites and rotten at heart, as he did Judas, therefore depart from me. Hath Christ need of such guests! When he came in the flesh he called sinners to him, Matt. ix. 13. but when he shall come again in glory, he will drive sinners from him: They that would not come to him to be saved, must depart from him to be damned. To depart from Christ is the very hell of hell; it is the foundation of all the misery of the damned to be cut off from all hope of benefit of Christ and his mediation. Those that go no further in Christ's service than a fair profession he doth not accept, nor will he own in the great day. See from what a height of hope man may fall into the depth of misery! how they may go to hell by the gates of heaven! This should be an awakening word to all Christians. If a preacher, one that cast out devils and wrought miracles, be disowned of Christ for working iniquity, what will become of us if we be found such? And if we be such, we shall certainly be found such: At God's bar a profession of religion will not bear out any man in the practice and indulgence of sin: Therefore let every one that names the name of Christ depart from all iniquity.

Secondly, He shews by a parable, that hearing these sayings of Christ will not make us happy, if we do not make conscience of doing them; but if we hear and do them, we are blessed in our deed, ver. 21—27.

1. The hearers of Christ's word are here divided into two sorts; some that hear and do what they hear; others that hear and do not do. Christ preached now to a mixed multitude, and he thus separates them one from the other, as he will at the great day, when all nations shall be gathered before him. Christ is still speaking from heaven by his word and Spirit, speaks by ministers, by providence, and of those that hear him there are two sorts.

(1.) Some that hear his sayings and do them; blessed be God that there are any such, though comparatively few. To hear Christ is not barely to give him the hearing, but to obey him. Note, It highly concerns us all to do what we hear of the sayings of Christ. It is a mercy that we hear the sayings: Blessed are those ears, Matt. xiii. 16, 17. But if we practise not what we hear, we receive that grace in vain. To do Christ's sayings is conscientiously to abstain from the sins that he forbids, and perform the duties that he requires. Our thoughts and affections, our words and actions, the temper of our minds, and the tenor of our lives, must be conformable to the gospel of Christ, that is the doing he requires. All the sayings of Christ, not only the laws he hath enacted, but the truths he hath revealed, must be done by us: They are a light, not only to our eyes but to our feet; and are designed not only to inform our judgments, but to reform our hearts and lives: Nor do we indeed believe them if we do not live up to them. Observe, It is not enough to hear Christ's sayings and understand them, hear them and remember them, hear them and talk of them, repeat them, dispute for them, but we must hear and do them. This do and thou shalt live. Those only that hear and do are blessed, Luke xi. 28. John xiii. 17. and are akin to Christ, Matt. xii. 50.

(2.) There are others who hear Christ's sayings and do them not; their religion rests in bare hearing and goes no further; like children that have the rickets, their heads swell with empty notions and indigested opinions, but their joints are weak and they heavy and listless; they neither can stir nor care to stir, in any good duty; they hear God's words, as if they desired to know his ways, like a people that did righteousness, but they will not do them, Ezek. xxxiii. 30, 31. Isa. lviii. 2. Thus they deceive themselves, as Micah, who thought himself happy because he had a Levite to be his priest, though he had not the Lord to be his God. The seed is sown but it never comes up; they see their spots in the glass of the word but wash them not off, James i. 22—24. Thus they put a cheat upon their own souls; for it is certain, if our hearing be not the means of our obedience, it will be the aggravation of our disobedience. Those who only hear Christ's sayings, and do them not, sit down in the midway to heaven, and that will never bring them to their journey's end: They are akin to Christ only by the half-blood, and our law allows not such to inherit.

2. These two sorts of hearers are here represented in their true characters, and the state of their case, under the comparison of two builders; one was wise and built upon a rock, and his building stood in a storm; the other foolish and built upon the sand, and his building fell.

Now, (1.) The general scope of this parable teacheth us, that the only way to make sure work for our souls and eternity is, to hear and do the sayings of the Lord Jesus, these sayings of his in this sermon upon the mount, which is wholly practical; some of them seem hard sayings to flesh and blood, but they must be done; and thus we lay up in store a good foundation for the time to come, 1 Tim. vi. 19. a good bond, so some read it; a bond of God's making, which secures salvation upon gospel terms; that is a good bond; not one of our own devising, which brings salvation to our own fancies. Those make sure the good part, who like Mary, when they hear the word of Christ, sit at his feet in subjection to it: Speak, Lord, for thy servant hears.

1. That we have every one of us a house to build, and that house is our hopes for heaven. It ought to be our chief and constant care to make our calling and election sure; and so we make our salvation sure; to secure a title to heaven's happiness, and then to get the comfortable evidence of it; to make it sure and sure to ourselves, that when we fail, we shall be received into everlasting habitations. Many never mind this, it is the furthest thing in their thoughts; they are building for this world as if they were to be here always, but take no care to build for another world. All that take upon them a profession of religion, profess to enquire, what they shall do to be saved? how they may get to heaven at last? and may have a well grounded hope of it in the mean time?

2. That there is a rock provided for us to build this house upon, and that rock is Christ: He is laid for a foundation, and other foundation can no man lay, Isa. xxviii. 16. 1 Cor. iii. 11. He is our hope, 1 Tim. 1. Christ in us is so; we must ground our hopes for heaven upon the fullness of Christ's merit for the pardon of sin, the power of his Spirit for the sanctification of our nature, and the prevalency of his intercession for the drawing out of all that good which he hath purchased for us: There is that in him as he is made known, and made over to us in the gospel, which is sufficient to redress all our grievances, and to answer all the necessities of our case, so that he is a Saviour to the uttermost. The church is built upon this rock, and so is every believer. He is strong and immovable as a rock; we may venture our all upon him, and shall not be made ashamed of our hope.

3. There is a remnant, who by hearing and doing the sayings of Christ, build their hopes upon this rock, and it is their wisdom. Christ is our only way to the Father, but the obedience of faith is our only way to Christ; for to them that obey him, and to them only, he becomes the author of eternal salvation. Those build upon Christ, who having sincerely consented to him as their Prince and Saviour, make it their constant care to conform to all the rules of his holy religion, and therein depend entirely upon him for assistance from God, and acceptance with him, and count every thing but dross and dung that they may win Christ, and be found in him. Building upon a rock requires care and pains; those that would make their calling and election sure, must give diligence. Those are wise builders that begin to build, so as they may be able to finish, Luke xiv. 30. and therefore lay a firm foundation.

4. There are many who profess they hope to go to heaven, but despise this rock, and build their hopes upon the sand which is done without much pains, but it is their folly. Every thing besides Christ is sand. Some build their hopes upon their worldly prosperity, as if that were a sure token of God's favour, Hos. xii. 1. Others upon their external profession of religion, the privileges they enjoy, and the performances they go through in that profession, and the reputation they have got by it. They are called Christians, were baptized, go to church, hear Christ's word, say their prayers, and do no body any harm, and if they perish, God help a great many. This is the light of their own fire, which they walk in; this is that which with a great deal of assurance they venture upon; but it is all sand; too weak to bear such a fabric as our hopes for heaven.

5. There is a storm coming that will try what our hopes are bottomed on, try every man's work, 1 Cor. iii. 13. will discover the foundation, Hab. iii. 13. Rain, and floods, and wind, will beat upon the house; the trial is sometimes in this world; when tribulation and persecution arise because of the word, then it will be seen who only heard the word, and who heard and practised it; then when we have occasion to use our hopes, it will be tried whether they were right and well grounded or no: However, when death and judgment come, when the storm comes, and it will undoubtedly come, how calm soever things may be with us now: Then every thing else will fail us but these hopes, and then, it ever, they will be turned into everlasting fruition.

6. Those hopes that are built upon Christ the rock will stand, and will stand the builder in stead when the storm comes; they will be his preservation, both from desertion and from prevailing disquiet: His profession will not wither, his comforts will not fail, they will be his strength and song, as an anchor of the soul, sure and steadfast. When he comes to the last encounter, those hopes will take off the terror of death and the grave, will carry him cheerfully through that dark valley, will be approved by the Judge, will stand the test of the great day, and will be crowned with endless glory, 2 Cor. i. 12. 2 Tim. iv. 7, 8. Blessed is that servant whom his Lord when he comes finds so doing, so hoping.

7. Those hopes which foolish builders ground upon any thing but Christ, will certainly fail them in a stormy day, will yield them no true comfort and satisfaction in trouble, in the hour of death and in the day of judgment; will be no fence against temptations to apostacy in a time of persecution: When God takes away the soul, where is the hope of the hypocrite? Job xxvii. 8. It is as the spider's web, and as the gilding up of the ghost; He shall lean upon his house, but it shall not stand, Job viii. 14, 15. It fell in the storm, when the builder had most need of it, and expected it should be a shelter to him. It fell when it was too late to build another; when a wicked man dies, his expectation perishes; then, when he thought it should have been turned into fruition, It fell, and great was the fall of it: It was a great disappointment to the builder, the shame and loss was great: The higher men's hopes have been raised, the lower they fall: It is the sorrest ruin of all that attends formal professors, witness Capernaum's doom.

Lastly, In the two last verses we are told what impression Christ's discourse made upon the auditory. It was an excellent sermon, and it is probable he said more than is here recorded, and doubtless the delivery of it from the mouth of him, into whose lips grace was poured, did mightily set it off. Now, 1. They were astonished at his doctrine; it is to be feared few of them was brought by it to follow him, but for the present they were filled with wonder. Note, It is possible for people to admire good preaching, and yet to remain in ignorance and unbelief; to be astonished, and yet not sanctified. 2. The reason was because he taught them as one having authority, and not as the Scribes. The Scribes pretended to as much authority as any teachers whatsoever, and were supported by all the external advantages that could be, but their preaching was mean and flat and jejune; they spake as those that were not themselves masters of what they preached: the word did not come from them with any life or force; they delivered it as a school-boy saith his lesson, but Christ delivered his discourse as a judge gives his charge. He did indeed, dominari in concionibus; his lessons were laws; his word a word of command. Christ upon the mountain shewed more true authority than the Scribes in Moses's seat. Thus when Christ teacheth by his Spirit in the soul, he teacheth with authority. He saith, Let there be light, and there is light.

C H A P. VIII.

The evangelist had given this general idea of the conversation of our Lord Jesus, after his entrance upon his public work, that he went about preaching the gospel, and healing all manner of sickness, chap. iv. 23. and the doctrine he preached was both confirmed and recommended by the cures he wrought: Having therefore in the foregoing chapters given us a specimen of his preaching, he comes now to give some instances of the miracles he wrought, which prove him a teacher come from God, and the great healer of a diseased world. In this chapter we have, 1. Christ's cleansing of a leper, ver. 1—4. 2. His curing a palsy and fever, ver. 5—18. 3. His communing with two that had a mind to follow him, ver. 19—22. 4. His controlling of the tempest, ver. 23—27. 5. His casting out devils, ver. 28—34.

1. W H E N he was come down from the mountain, great multitudes followed him. 2. And behold, there came a leper, and worshipped him, saying, Lord, if thou wilt, thou canst make me clean. 3. And Jesus put forth his hand and touched him, saying, I will; be thou clean. And immediately his leprosy was cleansed. 4. And Jesus saith unto him, See thou tell no man, but go thy way, shew thyself to the priest, and offer the gift that Moses commanded for a testimony unto them.

The first verse refers to the close of the foregoing sermon; the people that heard him were astonished at his doctrine; and the effects of that was, that when he came down from the mountain great multitudes followed him; though he was so strict a lawgiver and so faithful a reprove, they diligently attended him, and were loth to disperse and go from him. Note, Those to whom Christ has manifested himself, cannot but desire to be better acquainted with him. They who know much of Christ should covet to know more; and then shall we know, if we thus follow on to know the Lord. It is good to see people so well affected to Christ, as never to think they can hear enough of him; so well affected to the best things, as thus to flock after good preaching, and to follow the Lamb whithersoever he goes. Now was Jacob's prophecy concerning the Messiah fulfilled; that unto him shall the gathering of the people be; yet those who gathered to him did not cleave to him. They who followed him closely and constantly were but few, compared with the multitudes that were but followers at large.

In these verses we have an account of Christ's cleansing a leper. I should seem by comparing Mark i. 40. and Luke v. 22. that this passage, though placed by St. Matthew after the sermon on the mount, because he would give account of his doctrine first, and then of his miracles, yet happened some time before; but that is not at all material. This is fitly recorded with the first of Christ's miracles, 1. Because the leprosy was looked upon among the Jews as a particular mark of God's displeasure: Hence we find Miriam, Gehazi, and Uzziah, smitten with leprosy for some one particular sin; and therefore Christ, to shew that he came to turn away the wrath of God, by taking away sin, began with the cure of a leper. 2. Because this disease, as it was supposed to come immediately from the hand of God, so also to be removed immediately by his hand, and therefore it was not attempted to be cured by physicians, but was put under the inspection of the priests, the Lord's ministers, who waited to see what God would do. And its being in a garment, or in the walls of a house, was altogether supernatural; and it should seem to be a disease of a quite different nature from what we now call the leprosy. The king of Israel said, Am I a God, that I am sent to recover a man of a leprosy? 2 Kings v. 7. Christ proved himself God, by recovering many from the leprosy, and authorising his disciples in his name to do so too, chap. x. 8. and it is put among the proofs of his being the Messiah, chap. xi. 5. he also shewed himself to be the Saviour of his people from their sins; for though every disease is both the fruit of sin and a figure of it, as the disorder of the soul yet, the leprosy was in a special manner so; for it contracted such a pollution, and obliged to such a separation from holy things, as no other disease did; and therefore in the laws concerning it, Lev. xii. and xiv. it is treated not as a sickness, but as an uncleanness; the priest was to pronounce the party clean or unclean, according as the indications were; but the honour of making the lepers clean was reserved for Christ, who was to do it as the High-priest of our profession; he comes to do that which the law could not do, in that it was weak through the flesh, Rom. viii. 3. The law discovered sin; for by the law is the knowledge of sin, and pronounced sinners unclean, it shut them up, Gal. iii. 23. as the priest did the leper, but could go no further; it could not make the comers thereunto perfect. But Christ takes away sin, cleanseth us from it, and so perfecteth for ever them that are sanctified. Now here we have,

1. The leper's address to Christ. If this happened as it is here placed, after the sermon on the mount, we may suppose that the leper, though shut out by his disease from the cities of Israel, yet got within hearing of Christ's sermon, and was encouraged by it to make his application to him; for he that taught as one having authority could heal so; and therefore he came and worshipped him; as one clothed with divine power. His address is,

Lord, if thou wilt, thou canst make me clean. The cleansing of him may be considered,

(1.) As a temporal mercy, a mercy to the body, delivering it from the disease, which, though it did not threaten life, imbibed it. And so it directs us, not only to apply ourselves to Christ, who has power over bodily diseases for the cure of them, but in what manner to apply ourselves to him; with an assurance of his power, he is as able to cure diseases now, as he was when on earth, but with a submission to his will, Lord, if thou wilt, thou canst. As to temporal mercies, we cannot be so sure of God's will to bestow them as we may of his power, for his power in them is unlimited, but his promise of them is limited as far as it is for his glory and our good; but when we cannot be sure of his will, yet we may be sure of his wisdom and mercy, to which we may cheerfully refer ourselves. Thy will be done: And this makes the expectation easy, and the event, when it comes, comfortable.

(2.) As a typical mercy. Sin is the leprosy of the soul, it shuts us out from communion with God; to which that we may be restored, it is necessary that we be cleansed from this leprosy, and ought to be our great concern. Now observe, It is our comfort when we apply ourselves to Christ as the great physician, that if he will he can make us clean, and we should, with an humble believing boldness, go to him and tell him so. That is, (1.) We must rest ourselves upon his power, be confident of this, that Christ can make us clean. No guilt so great but there is a sufficiency in his righteousness to atone for it; no corruption so strong but there is a sufficiency in his grace to subdue it. God would not appoint a physician to his hospital that is not par negotio, every way qualified for the undertaking. (2.) We must recommend ourselves to his pity, we cannot demand it as a debt, but we must humbly request it as a favour, Lord, if thou wilt. I throw myself at thy feet, and if I perish, I will perish there.

2. Christ's answer to this address, which was very kind, ver. 3.

(1.) He put forth his hand, and touched him. The leprosy was a noisome, loathsome disease, yet Christ touched him; for he did not disdain to converse with publicans and sinners to do them good. There was a ceremonial pollution contracted by the touch of the leper, but Christ would shew, that when he conversed with sinners he was in no danger of being infected by them, for the prince of this world had nothing in him. If we touch such we are defiled; but Christ was separate from sinners, even when he lived among them.

(2.) He said, I will, be thou clean. He did not say as Elisha to Naaman, Go, wash in Jordan; did not put him upon a tedious, troublesome, chargeable course of physic, but spake the word and healed him. 1. Here is a word of kindness, I will. I am as willing to help thee, as thou art to be helped. Note, Those who by faith apply themselves to Christ for mercy and grace, may be sure that he is willing, freely willing, to give them the mercy and grace they come to him for. Christ is a physician that doth not need to be sought for, he is always in the way; doth not need to be urged, while we are yet speaking he hears; doth not need to be sed, he heals freely, not for price or reward. He has given all possible demonstration, that he is as willing as he is able to save sinners. 2. A word of power, Be thou clean. Both a power of authority, and a power of energy are exerted in this word. Christ heals by a word of command to us, Be thou clean; i. e. be willing to be clean, and use the means; cleanse thyself from all filthiness; but there goes along with this a word of command concerning us, a word that doth the work; I will that thou be clean. Such a word as this is necessary to the cure, and effectual for it; and the almighty grace which speaks it shall not be wanting, to those that truly desire it.

3. The happy change hereby wrought, Immediately his leprosy was cleansed. Nature works gradually, but the God of nature works immediately, he speaks, it is done; and yet work effectually; he commands, and it stands fast. One of the first miracles Moses wrought was curing himself of a leprosy. Exod. iv. 7. for the priests under the law offered sacrifice first for their own sin: but one of Christ's first miracles was curing another of leprosy, for he had no sin of his own to atone for.

4. The after-directions Christ gave him. It is fit that those who are cured by Christ should ever after be ruled by him.

(1.) See thou tell no man, i. e. tell no man till thou hast shewed thyself to the priest, and he has pronounced thee clean; and so thou hast a legal proof, both that thou wast before a leper, and art now thoroughly cleansed. Christ would have his miracles to appear in their full light and evidence, and not to be published till they could appear so. Note, Those that preach the truths of Christ should be able to prove them, to defend what they preach, and convince gainsayers. Tell no man, till thou hast shewed thyself to the priest, lest if he hear who cured thee, he should out of spite deny to give thee a certificate of the cure, and so keep thee under confinement. Such were the priests in Christ's time, that those who had any thing to do with them had need be as wise as serpents.

2. Go, shew thyself to the priest, according to the law, Lev. xiv. 2. Christ took care to have the law observed, lest he should give offence, and to shew that he will have order kept up, and good discipline and respect paid to those that are in office. It may be of use to those that are cleansed of their spiritual leprosy, to have recourse to Christ's ministers, and open their case to them, that they may assist them in their inquiries into their spiritual state, and advise and comfort them, and pray for them.

3. Offer the gift that Moses commanded, in token of thankfulness to God, and recompence to the priest for his pains, and this for a testimony unto them; either, (1.) Which Moses commanded for a testimony: The ceremonial laws were testimonies of God's authority over them, care of them, and of that grace which should after be revealed. Or, (2.) Do thou offer it for a testimony, and let the priest know who cleansed thee and how, and it shall be a testimony that there is one among them who doth that which the high-priest cannot do. Let it remain upon record as a witness of my power, and a testimony for me to them, if they will use it and improve it; but against them if they will not; for so Christ's word and works are testimonies.

5. ¶ And when Jesus was entered into Capernaum, there came unto him a centurion, beseeching him, 6. And saying, Lord, my servant lieth at home sick of the palsy, grievously tormented. 7. And Jesus saith unto him, I will come and heal him. 8. The centurion answered and said, Lord, I am not worthy that thou shouldst come under my roof: but speak the word only, and my servant shall be healed. 9. For I am a man under authority, having soldiers under me: and I say to this man, Go, and he goeth: and to another, Come, and he cometh: and to my servant, Do this, and he doeth it. 10. When Jesus heard it, he marvelled, and said to them that followed, Verily, I say unto you, I have not found so great faith, no not in Israel. 11. And I say unto you, that many shall come from the east and west, and shall sit down with Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob, in the kingdom of heaven. 12. But the children of the kingdom shall be cast out into outer darkness: there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth. 13. And Jesus said unto the centurion, Go thy way, and as thou hast believed, so be it done unto thee. And his servant was healed in the self-same hour.

We have here an account of Christ's curing the centurion's servant of a palsy. This was done at Capernaum, where Christ now dwelt, chap. iv. 13. Christ went about doing good, and came home to do good too; every place he came to was the better for him. The persons Christ had now to do with were,

1. A centurion; he was a supplicant, a Gentile, a Roman, a captain, an officer of the army; probably commander in chief of that part of the Roman army which was quartered at Capernaum, and kept garrison there. (1.) Though he was a soldier, and a little piety commonly goes a great way with men of that profession, yet he was a godly man, he was eminently so. Note, God hath his remnant among all sorts of people. No man's calling or place in the world will be an excuse for his unbelief and impiety; none shall say in the great day, I had been religious if I had not been a soldier; for such there are among the ransomed of the Lord. And sometimes where grace conquers the unlikely, it is more than a conqueror; this soldier that was good, was very good. (2.) Though he was a Roman soldier, and his very dwelling among the Jews was a badge of their subjection to the Roman yoke, yet Christ who was King of the Jews, favoured him; and therein has taught us to do good to our enemies, and not needlessly to interest ourselves in national enmities. (3.) Though he was a Gentile, yet Christ countenanced him. It is true, he went not to any of the Gentile towns (it was the land of Canaan that was Immanuel's land, Isa. viii. 8.) yet he received addresses from Gentiles; now good old Simeon's word began to be fulfilled, that he should be a light to lighten the Gentiles, as well as the glory of his people Israel. Matthew, in annexing this cure to that of the leper, who was a Jew, intimates this; the leprosy Jews Christ touched and cured, for he preached personally to them; but the paralytic Gentiles he cured at a distance; for to them he did not go in person, but sent his word and healed them; yet in them he was more magnified.

2. The centurion's servant, he was the patient. In this also it appears that there is no respect of persons with God: for in Christ Jesus, as there is neither circumcision or uncircumcision, so there is neither bond nor free. He is as ready to heal the poorest servant as the richest master; for himself took upon him the form of a servant, to shew his regard to the meanest.

Now in the story of the cure of this servant, we may observe an intercourse or interchanging of graces, very remarkable between Christ and the centurion. See here,

First, The grace of the centurion working towards Christ. Can any good thing come out of a Roman soldier? any thing tolerable, much less any thing laudable? Come and see, and you will find abundance of good coming out of this centurion that was eminent and exemplary. Observe,

1. His affectionate address to Jesus-Christ, which speaks, (1.) A pious regard to our great Master, as one able and willing to succour and relieve poor petitioners: He came to him beseeching him, not as Naaman the Syrian (a centurion too) came to Elisha, demanding a cure, taking state and standing upon a point of honour; but with cap in hand as an humble suitor. By this it appears that he saw more in Christ than appeared at first view, saw that which commanded respect, though to those who looked no further his visage was marred more than any man's. The officers of the army being comptrollers of the town, no doubt made a great figure, yet he lays by the thoughts of his post of honour when he addresseth himself to Christ, and comes beseeching him. Note, The greatest of men must turn beggars when they have to do with Christ. He owns Christ's sovereignty in calling him Lord, and referring the case to him and to his will and wisdom, by a modest remonstrance, without any formal and express petition. He knew he had to do with a wise and gracious physician, to whom the opening of the malady was equivalent to the most earnest request. An humble confession of our spiritual wants and diseases shall not fail of an answer of peace. Pour out thy complaint and mercy shall be poured out.

(2.) A charitable regard to his poor servant. We read of many that came to Christ for their children, but this is the only instance of one that came to him for a servant: Lord, my servant lieth at home sick. Note, It is the duty of masters to concern themselves for their servants when they are in affliction. The palsy disabled the servant from his work, and made him as troublesome and tedious as any distemper could, yet he did not turn him away when he was sick, as that Amalekite did his servant, 1 Sam. xxx. 13. did not send him to his friends, or let him lie by neglected, but sought out the best relief he could for him; the servants could not have done more for the masters, than the master did here for his servant. The centurion's servants were very dutiful to him, ver. 9. and here we see what made them so, he was very kind to them, and that made them the more cheerfully obedient to him. As we must not despise the cause of our servants when they contend with us, Job. xxxi. 13—15. so we must not despise their case when God contends with them, for we are made of the same mould, by the same hand, and stand upon the same level with them before God, and must not set them with the dogs of our flock. The centurion seeks not to witches or wizards for his servant, but to Christ. The palsy is a disease in which the physician's skill commonly fails; it was therefore a great evidence of his faith in the power of Christ to come to him for a cure, which was above the power of natural helps to effect. Observe how pathetically he represents his servant's case as very sad; he is sick of the palsy, a disease which commonly makes the patient senseless of pain, but this here was grievously tormented; being young, nature was strong to struggle with the stroke, which made it painful. It was not paralysis simplex, but scorbatica. We should thus concern ourselves for the souls of our children and servants that are spiritually sick of the palsy, the dead-palsy, the dumb-palsy, senseless of spiritual evil, unactive in that which is spiritually good, and bring them to Christ by faith and prayer, bring them to the means of healing and health.

2. See here is great humility and self-abasement. After Christ had intimated his readiness to come and heal his servant, ver. 7. he expressed himself with the more humbleness of mind. Note, Humble souls are made more humble by Christ's gracious condescensions to them. Observe what was the language of his humility, Lord, I am not worthy that thou shouldst come under my roof; ver. 8. which speaks mean thoughts of himself, and high thoughts of our Lord Jesus. He doth not say, my servant is not worthy that thou shouldst come into his chamber, because it is in the garret; but I am not worthy that thou shouldst come into my house. The centurion was a great man, yet he owned his unworthiness before God. Note, Humility very well becomes persons of quality. Christ now made but a mean figure in the world, yet the centurion looking upon him as a prophet, yea, more than a prophet, paid him this respect. Note, We should have a value and veneration for what we see of God, even in those who in outward condition are every way our inferiors. The centurion came to Christ with a petition, and therefore expressed himself thus humbly. Note, In all our approaches to Christ, and to God through Christ, it becomes us to abase ourselves, and to lie low in a sense of our own unworthiness as mean creatures, and as vile sinners to do any thing for God, receive any good from him, or to have any thing to do with him.

3. See here is great faith: And the more humility the more faith; the more diffident we are of ourselves, the stronger will be our confidence in Jesus Christ. He had an assurance of faith, not only that Christ could cure his servant, but,

1. That he could cure him at a distance: There needed not any physical contact as in natural operations, no application to the part affected, no, not to the blood or the weapon, as is pretended in the sympathetic powder; but the cure he believes may be wrought without bringing the physician and patient together. We read afterwards of those who brought the man sick of the palsy to Christ, through much difficulty, and set him before him, and Christ commended their faith for a working faith: This centurion did not bring his man sick in the palsy, and Christ commended his faith for a trusting faith; true faith is accepted of Christ though variously appearing: Christ puts the best construction upon the different methods of religion that people take, and thereby has taught us to do so too. This centurion believed, and it is undoubtedly true, that the power of Christ knows no limits, and therefore near or afar off are alike to him. Distance of place cannot obstruct either the knowing or working of him that fills all places. Am I a God at hand, saith the Lord, and not a God afar off? Jer. xxiii. 23.

2. That he could cure him with a word, not send him a medicine, much less a charm, but speaking the word only, and I do not question but my servant shall be healed. Herein he owns him to have a divine power, an authority to command all the creatures and powers of nature, which enableth him to do whatsoever he pleaseth in the kingdom of nature, as at first he raised that kingdom by an almighty word, when he said, Let there be light. With men saying and doing are two things; but not so with Christ, who is therefore the arm of the Lord, because he is the eternal word. His saying, Be ye warmed and filled, James ii. 16. and healed, warmed and fills and heals.

The centurion's faith in the power of Christ he here illustrates by the dominion he had as a centurion over his soldiers, as a master over his servants; he saith to one, Go, and he goes, &c. They were at his beck and command, so far that he could by them execute things at a distance; his word was a law to them, dictum factum; well disciplined soldiers know that the commands of their officers are not to be disputed but obeyed: Thus could Christ speak, and it is done; such a power had he over all bodily diseases. The centurion had this command over his soldiers, though he was himself a man under authority; not a commander in chief, but a subaltern officer; much more had Christ this power, who is the supreme and sovereign Lord of all. The centurion's servants were very obsequious, would go and come at every the least intimation of their master's mind. Now, 1. Such servants we all should be to God; we must go and come at his bidding, according to the directions of his word, and the disposals of his providence; run where he sends us, return when he remands us, and do what he appoints. What saith my Lord unto his servants? When his will crosseth our own, then his must take place and our own be set aside. 2. Such servants bodily diseases are to Christ. They seize us when he sends them, they leave us when he calls them back; they have that effect upon us, upon our bodies, upon our souls, that he orders. It is matter of comfort to all that belong to Christ, for whose good his power is exerted and engaged that every disease hath his commission, executes his command, is under his controul, and is made to serve the intentions of his grace. Those need not fear sickness, nor what it can do, who see it in the hand of so good a friend.

Secondly, Here is the grace of Christ appearing towards this centurion; for to the gracious he will shew himself gracious.

1. He complies with his address at the first word: He did but tell him his servant's case and was going on to beg a cure, when Christ prevented him with this good word and comfortable word, I will come and heal him, ver. 7. not I will come and see him, that had spoken him a kind Saviour; but I will come and heal him, that speaks him a mighty Saviour almighty; it was a great word, but no more than he could make good; for he has healing under his wings; his coming is healing. Those who wrought miracles by a derived power did not speak thus positively as Christ did, who wrought them by his own power as one that had authority. When a minister is sent for to a sick friend he can but say, I will come and pray for him; but Christ saith, I will come and heal him; it is well that Christ can do more for us than our ministers can. The centurion desired he would heal his servant; he saith, I will come and heal him; thus expressing more favour than he did either ask or think of. Note, Christ often outdoes the expectations of poor supplicants. See an instance of Christ's humility, that he would make a visit to a poor soldier. He would not go down to see a nobleman's sick child, who insisted upon his coming down, John iv. 47, 48, 49. but proffers to go down to see a sick servant; thus doth he regard the low estate of his people, and give more abundant honour to that part which lacked. Christ's humility in being willing to come gave an example to him and occasioned his humility, in owning himself unworthy to have him come. Note, Christ's gracious condescensions to us should make us the more humble and self-abasing before him.

2. He commends his faith, and takes occasion from it to speak a kind word of the poor Gentiles, ver. 10, 11, 12. See what great things a strong but self-denyng faith can obtain from Jesus Christ, even of general and public concern.

1. As to the centurion himself; he not only approved him and accepted him (that honour have all true believers) but he admired him and applauded him: That honour great believers have, as Job, there is none like him in the earth.

1. Christ admired him not for his greatness, but for his graces. When Jesus heard it he marvelled; not as if it were to him new and surprising, he knew the centurion's faith, for he wrought it; but it was great and excellent, rare and uncommon, and Christ spoke of it as wonderful to teach us what to admire; not worldly pomp and bravery, but the beauty of holiness, and the ornaments which are in the sight of God of great price. Note, The wonders of grace should effect us more than the wonders of nature or providence, and spiritual attainments more than any achievements in this world. Of those that are rich in faith, not of those that are rich in gold and silver, we should say that they have gotten all his glory, Gen. xxxi. 1. But whatever there is admirable in the faith of any it must redound to the glory of Christ, who will shortly be himself admired in all them that believe, as having done in and for them marvellous things.

2. He applauded him in what he said to them that followed. All believers shall in the other world, but some believers are in this world confessed and acknowledged by Christ before men, in his eminent appearances for them and with them. Verily I have not found so great faith, no not in Israel.

Now this speaks, 1. Honour to the centurion, who though not a son of Abraham's loins, was an heir of Abraham's faith, and Christ found it so. Note, The thing that Christ seeks is faith, and wherever it is he finds it, though but as a grain of mustard-seed. He had not found so great faith, all things considered and in proportion to the means; as the poor widow is said to cast in more than they all, Luke xxi. 3. Though the centurion was a Gentile, yet he was thus commended. Note, We must be so far from grudging; that we must be forward to give those their due praise that are not within our denominating or pale. 2. It speaks shame to Israel, to whom pertained the adoption, the glory, the covenants, and all the assistances and encouragements of faith. Note, When the Son of man comes he finds little faith, and therefore he finds so little fruit. Note, The attainments of some that have had but little help for their souls, will aggravate the sin and ruin of many that have had great plenty of the means of grace, and have not made a good improvement of them. Christ said this to those that followed him, if by any means he might provoke them to a holy emulation, (as Paul speaks, Rom. xi. 14.) They were Abraham's seed: in jealousy for that honour, let them not suffer themselves to be outstripped, especially in that grace which Abraham was famous for, by a Gentile.

2. As to others; Christ takes occasion from hence to make a comparison between Jews and Gentiles, and tells them two things which could not but be very surprising to them, who had been taught that salvation was of the Jews.

1. That a great many of the Gentiles should be saved, ver. 11. The faith of the centurion was but a specimen of the conversion of the Gentiles, and a preface to their adoption into the church. This was a string our Lord Jesus harped often upon, he speaks it with assurance; I say unto you, I that know all men; and he could not say any thing more pleasing to himself, or more displeasing to the Jews; an intimation of this kind enraged the Nazarenes against him, Luke iv. 27. Christ gives us here an idea, 1. Of the persons that shall be saved; many from the east and west. He had said, chap. vii. 14. Few there be that find the way to life, and yet here many shall come. Few at one time and in one place, yet when they come altogether they will be a great many. We now see but here and there one brought to grace; but we shall shortly see the captain of our salvation bringing many sons to glory, Heb. ii. 10. He will come with ten thousands of his saints, Jude 14. such a company as no man can number, Rev. vii. 9. Nations of them that are saved, Rev. xxi. 24. They shall come from the east and from the west, places far distant from each other, yet they shall all meet at the right hand of Christ, the centre of their unity. Note, God has his remnant in all places; from the rising of the sun to the going down of the same, Mal. i. 11. The elect will be gathered from the four winds, Matt. xxiv. 31. They are sown in the earth, some scattered in every corner of the field. The Gentile world lay from east to west, and they are especially meant here; though they were strangers to the covenant of promise now, and had been long, yet who knows what hidden ones God had among them then? As in Elijah's time in Israel, 1 Kings xix. 14. and soon after they flocked into the church in great multitudes, Isa. lx. 3, 4. Note, When we come to heaven, as we shall miss a great many thence that we thought had been going thither, so we shall meet a great many there that we did not expect to have met there. 2. Christ gives us an idea of the salvation itself. They shall come, shall come together, shall come together to Christ, 2 Thess. ii. 1. 1. They shall be admitted into the kingdom of grace, on earth, into the covenant of grace made with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob; they shall be blessed with faithful Abraham, whose blessing comes upon the Gentiles, Gal. iii. 14. This makes Zaccheus a son of Abraham, Luke xix. 9. 2. They shall be admitted into the kingdom of glory in heaven. They shall come cheerfully, flying as doves to their windows; they shall sit down to rest from their labours, as having done their day's work; sitting notes continuance, while we stand we are going, where we sit we mean to stay; heaven is a remaining rest, it is a continuing city; they shall sit down as upon a throne, Rev. iii. 21. as at a table, that is the metaphor here; they shall sit down to be feasted; which notes both fullness of communication and freedom, and familiarity of communion, Luke xxii. 30. They shall sit down with Abraham. Those that in this world never so far distant from each other in time, place or outward condition, shall all meet together in heaven; ancients and moderns, Jew and Gentile, rich and poor. The rich man in hell sees Abraham, but Lazarus sits down with him, leaning on his breast. Note, Holy society is a part of heaven's felicity; and those on whom the ends of the world are come, and are most obscure, shall share in glory with the renowned patriarchs.

2. That a great many of the Jews should perish, ver. 12. Observe, 1. A strange sentence passed: The children of the kingdom shall be cast out, i. e. the Jews that persist in unbelief, though they were by birth children of the kingdom, yet shall be cut off from being members of the visible church; the kingdom of God, which they boasted they were the children of, shall be taken from them, and they shall become not a people, nor obtaining mercy, Rom. xi. 20—ix. 31. In the great day it will not avail men to have been children of the kingdom, either as Jews or as Christians; for men will then be judged, not by what they were called, but by what they were. If children indeed, then heirs, but many are children in profession in the family, but not of it, that will come short of the inheritance. Being horn of professing parents denominates us children of the kingdom; but if we rest in that, and have nothing else to shew for heaven but that, we shall be cast out.

2. A strange punishment for the workers of iniquity described; they shall be cast into outer darkness the darkness of those that are without, i. e. of the Gentiles that were out of the church, into that the Jews were cast, and worse: They were blinded and hardened, and filled with terrors, as the apostle shews, Rom. xi. 8, 9, 10. A people so unchurched, and given up to spiritual judgments, are in utter darkness already: But it looks further to the state of damned sinners in hell, which the other is a dismal preface to. They shall be cast out from God and all true comfort, and cast into darkness: In hell there is fire, but no light: it is utter darkness, darkness in extremity, the highest degree of darkness without any remainder, or mixture, or hope of light; not the least gleam or glimpse of it: It is darkness that results from their being shut out of heaven, the land of light: They that are without are in the regions of darkness; yet that is not the worst of it, there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth. (1.) In hell there will be great grief, floods of tears shed to no purpose: Anguish of Spirit preying eternally upon the vitals, in the sense of the wrath of God, is the torment of the damned. (2.) Great indignation: Damned sinners will gnash their teeth for spite and vexation, full of the fury of the Lord; seeing with envy the happiness of others, and reflecting with horror upon the former possibility of their own being happy, which is now past.

3. He cures his servant. He doth not only commend his application to him, but grants him that which he applied himself to him for; which was a real answer, ver. 13. Observe,

1. What Christ said to him; he said that which made the cure as great a favour to him, as it was to his servant, and much greater; As thou hast believed, so be it done to thee: The servant got a cure of his disease, but the master got the confirmation and approbation of his faith. Note, Christ often gives encouraging answers to his praying people, when they are interceding ceding for others. It is kindness to us to be heard for others: God turned the captivity of Job, then when he prayed for his friends, Job xlii. 10. It was a great honour which Christ put upon this centurion, when he gave him a blank, as it were: Be it done, as thou believest: What could he have more? Yet what was said to him is said to us all, Believe, and ye shall receive; only believe. See here the power of Christ, and the power of faith. As Christ can do what he will, so an active believer may have what he will from Christ; the oil of grace multiplies and stays not till the vessels of faith fail.

2. What was the effect of this saying; the prayer of faith was a prevailing prayer, it ever was so, and ever will be so; it appears by the suddenness of the cure that it was miraculous, and by its coincidence with Christ's saying, that the miracle was his, he spake, and it was done; and this was a proof of his omnipotence, that he has a long arm. It is the observation of a learned physician, that the diseases Christ cured were mostly such as were the most difficult to be cured by any natural means, and particularly the palsy. Omnis paralysis præsertim vetusta, aut incurabilis est, aut difficilis curatu, etiam pueris: Atque soleo ego dicere, morbos omnes qui Christo curandi fuerant, propositi difficillimos sua natura curatu esse. Mercurialis de morbis puerorum, lib. ii. cap. v.

14. ¶ And when Jesus was come into Peter's house, he saw his wife's mother laid, and sick of a fever. 15. And he touched her hand, and the fever left her: and she arose, and ministered unto them. 16. When the even was come, they brought unto him many that were possessed with devils: and he cast out the spirits with his word, and healed all that were sick: 17. That it might be fulfilled which was spoken by Isaiah the prophet, saying, Himself took our infirmities, and bare our sicknesses.

Those that pretend to be critical in the harmony of the evangelists, place this passage and all that follows to the end of chap. ix. before the sermon on the mount, according to the order which Mark and Luke observe in placing it. Dr. Lightfoot placeth only this passage before the sermon on the mount, and ver. 18, &c. after. Here we have,

First, A particular account of the cure of Peter's wife's mother, that was ill of a fever; in which observe,

1. The case, which was nothing extraordinary, fevers are the most common distempers, but the patient being a near relation of Peter's, it is recorded as an instance of Christ's peculiar care of, and kindness to the families of his disciples. Here we find, 1. That Peter had a wife, and yet was called to be an apostle of Christ, and Christ countenanced the married state he was in, by being thus kind to his wife's relations. The church of Rome, therefore, which forbids ministers to marry, go contrary to that apostle, from whom they pretend to derive an infallibility. 2. That Peter had a house, though Christ had not, ver. 20. Thus was the disciple better provided for than his Lord. 3. That he had a house at Capernaum, though he was originally of Bethsaida; it is probable, he removed to Capernaum when Christ removed thither, and made that his principal residence. Note, It is worth while to change our quarters that we may be near to Christ, and opportunities of converse with him. When the ark removes, Israel must remove and go after it. 4. That he had his wife's mother with him in his family, which is an example to yoke-fellows to be kind to one another's relations as their own. Probably this good woman was old, and yet was respected and taken care of, as old people ought to be, with all possible tenderness. 5. That she lay ill of a fever. Neither the strength of youth, nor the weakness and coldness of age, will be a fence against diseases of this kind. The palsy was a chronical disease, the fever an acute disease, but both brought to Christ.

2. The cure, ver. 15. (1.) How it was effected; he touched her hand, not to know the disease, as the physicians do by the pulse, but to heal it. This was an intimation of his kindness and tenderness; he is himself touched with the feeling of our infirmities; it likewise shews the way of spiritual healing, by the exerting of the power of Christ with his word, and the application of Christ to ourselves: The scripture speaks the word, the Spirit gives the touch, touches the heart, touches the hand. (2.) How it was evidenced: This shewed that the fever left her, she arose, and ministered unto them. By this it appears, 1. That the mercy was perfected. Those that recover from fevers by the power of nature, are commonly weak and feeble, and unfit for business a great while after; to shew therefore that this cure was above the power of nature, she was immediately so well as to go about the business of the house. 2. That the mercy was sanctified, and the mercies that are so are indeed perfected. Though she was thus dignified by a peculiar favour, yet she doth not take state, but is as ready to wait at table, if occasion be, as any servant. Those must be humble whom Christ has honoured; being thus delivered, she studies what she shall render. It is very fit that those whom Christ hath healed, should minister unto him, as his humble servants, all their days.

Secondly, Here is a general account of the many cures that Christ wrought. This cure of Peter's mother-in-law brought him abundance of patients: He healed such a one, why not me? such a one's friend, why not mine? Now we are here told;

1. What he did, ver. 16. (1.) He cast out devils, cast out the evil spirits with his word. There may be much of Satan's agency, by the divine permission in those diseases, of which natural causes may be assigned, as in Job's boils, especially in the diseases of the mind; but about the time of Christ's being in the world, there seems to have been a more than ordinary letting loose of the devil to possess and vex the bodies of people; he came, having great wrath, for he knew that his time was short; and God wisely ordered it so, that Christ might have the fairer and more frequent opportunities of shewing his power over Satan, and the purpose and design of his coming into the world, which was to disarm and dispossess Satan, to break his power and to destroy his works; and his success was as glorious, as his design was gracious. (2.) He healed all that were sick, all without exception, though the patient was never so mean, and the case never so bad.

2. How the scripture was herein fulfilled, ver. 17. The accomplishment of the Old Testament prophecies was the great thing Christ had in his eye, and the great proof of being the Messiah; among other things, it was written of him, Isa. liii. 4. Surely he hath borne our griefs, and carried our sorrows; it is referred to 1 Pet. ii. 24. and there it is construed, he hath borne our sins: Here it is referred to, and is construed, he has borne our sicknesses; our sins make our sicknesses our griefs; Christ bore away sin by the merit of his death, and bore away sickness by the miracles of his life; nay, though those miracles are ceased, we may say that he bore our sicknesses then, when he bore our sins in his own body upon the tree; for sin is both the cause and the sting of sickness. Many are the diseases and calamities which we are liable to in the body, and there is more in this one line of the gospels to support and comfort us under them, than in all the writings of the philosophers, that Jesus Christ bore our sicknesses, and carried our sorrows; he bore them before us; though he was never sick, yet he was hungry, and thirsty, and weary, and troubled in spirit, sorrowful and very heavy; he bore them for us in his passion, and bears them with us in compassion, being touched with the feeling of our infirmities; and thus he bears them off from us and makes them sit light, if it be not our own fault. Observe how emphatically it is expressed here; Himself took our infirmities, and bare our sicknesses; he was both able and willing to interpose in that matter, and concerned to deal with our infirmities and sicknesses, as our physician; that part of the calamity of the human nature was his particular care, which he evidenced by his great readiness to cure diseases; and he is no less powerful or less tender now, for we are sure never any were the worse for going to heaven.

18. ¶ Now when Jesus saw great multitudes about him, he gave commandment to depart unto the other side. 19. And a certain Scribe came, and said unto him, Master, I will follow thee whithersoever thou goest. 20. And Jesus saith unto him, The foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have nests; but the Son of man hath not where to lay his head. 21. And another of his disciples said unto him, Lord, suffer me first to go and bury my father. 22. But Jesus said unto him, Follow me, and let the dead bury their dead.

Here is, 1. Christ's removing to the other side of the sea of Tiberias, and his ordering his disciples, whose boats attended him, to get their transport vessels ready in order to it, ver. 18. The influences of this son of righteousness were not to be confined to one place, but diffused all the country over; he must go about to do good; the necessities of souls called to him, Come over, and help us, Acts xvi. 9. he removed when he saw great multitudes about him. Though by this it appeared they were desirous to have him there, he knew there were others as desirous to have him with them, and they must have their share of him: His being acceptable and useful in one place, was no objection against, but a reason for his going to another. Thus he would try the multitudes that were about him, whether their zeal would carry them to follow him, and attend on him when his preaching was removed to some distance. Many would be glad of such helps, if they could have them at next door, that will not be at the pains to follow them to the other side; and thus Christ shook off those that were less zealous, and the perfect were made manifest.

2. Christ's communication with two, who upon his remove to the other side were loth to stay behind, and had a mind to follow him, not as others that were his followers at large, but to come into close discipleship, which the most were shy of: for it carried such a face of strictness as they could not digest or be well reconciled to; but here is an account of two that seemed fond to come into communion, and yet were not right; which is here given as a specimen of the hindrances by which many are kept from closing with Christ and cleaving to him: and a warning to us to set out in following Christ, so as that we may not come short; to lay such a foundation, as that our building may stand.

We have here Christ's managing of two different tempers, one quick and eager, the other dull and heavy; and his instructions are adapted to each of them, and designed for our use.

(1.) Here is one that was too hasty in promising, and he was a certain Scribe, ver. 19. a scholar, a learned man, one of those that studied and expounded the law; generally we find them in the gospels to be men of no good character; usually coupled with the Pharisees, as enemies to Christ and his doctrine: Where is the Scribe? 1 Cor. i. 20. He is very seldom following Christ, yet here was one that bid pretty fair for discipleship, a Saul among the prophets.

Now observe, 1. How he expressed his forwardness: Master, I will follow thee whithersoever thou goest. I know not how any man could have said better. His profession of a self-dedication to Christ is, (1.) Very ready, and seems to be ex mero motu; he is not called to it by Christ, or urged by any of the disciples, but of his own accord proffers himself to be a close follower of Christ; is not a pressed man, but a volunteer. (2.) Very resolute; he seems to be at a point in this matter, not I have a mind to follow thee, but I am determined, I will do it. (3.) It was unlimited and without reserve; I will follow thee whithersoever thou goest, not only to the other side of the country, but if it were to the utmost regions of the world. Now we would think ourselves sure of such a man as this, and yet it appears by Christ's answer, that his resolution was rash, his ends low and carnal; either he did not consider at all, or not that which was to be considered; he saw the miracles Christ wrought, and hoped he would set up a temporal kingdom, and he would put in betimes for a share in it. Note, There are many resolutions for religion produced by some sudden pangs of conviction, and taken up without due consideration, that prove abortive, and when they should knit, fall and come to nothing: Soon ripe, soon rotten.

2. How Christ tried his forwardness, whether it were sincere or no, ver. 20. He let him know, that this Son of man, whom he is so eager to follow, has not where to lay his head, ver. 20. Now this account of Christ's deep poverty,

(1.) Is strange in itself, that the Son of God, when he came into the world, should put himself into such a very low condition, as to want the convenience of a certain resting-place, which the meanest of the creatures have: If he would take our nature upon him, one would think he should have taken it in its best estate and circumstances: No, he takes it in its worst. See here, 1. How well provided for the inferior creatures are: The foxes have holes; though they are not only not useful but hurtful to man, yet God provides holes for them in which they are earthed: Man endeavours to destroy them, but thus they are sheltered: their holes are their castles. The birds of the air, though they take no care for themselves, yet are taken care of, and have nests, Psalm civ. 17. nests in the field, some of them nests in the house, in God's courts, Psalm lxxxiv. 3. 2. How poorly the Lord Jesus was provided for. It may encourage us to trust God for necessities, that the beasts and birds have such good provision; and may comfort us if we want necessities, that our Master did so before us. Note, Our Lord Jesus, when he was here in the world, submitted to the disgraces and distresses of extreme poverty; for our sakes he became poor, very poor. He had not a settlement, had not a place of repose, not a house of his own to put his head in, not a pillow of his own to lay his head on. He and his disciples lived upon the charity of well-disposed people, that ministered to him of their substance, Luke viii. 2. Christ submitted to this, not only that he might in all respects humble himself, and fulfil the scriptures which spoke of him as poor and needy, but that he might shew us the vanity of worldly wealth, wealth, and teach us to look upon it with holy contempt; that he might purchase better things for us, and so make us rich, 2 Cor. viii. 9.

(2.) It comes in strangely here. When a Scribe offered to follow Christ, one would think he should have encouraged him, come and I will take care of thee; one Scribe might be capable of doing him more credit and service than twelve fishermen; but Christ saw his heart, and answered to the thoughts of that, and therein teaches us all how to come to Christ. 1. The Scribe's resolve seems to have been sudden, and Christ would have us when we take upon us a profession of religion, to sit down and count the cost, Luke xiv. 28. to do it intelligently and with consideration, and choose the way of godliness, not because we know no other, but because we know no better. It is no advantage to religion to take men by surprise, ere they are aware. They that take up a profession in a pang, will throw it off again in a fret; let them therefore take time, and he will have done the sooner; he that will follow Christ, let him know the worst of it, and expect to lie hard and fare hard. 2. His resolve seems to have been from a worldly covetous principle. He saw what abundance of cures Christ wrought, and concluded he had large fees, and would get an estate quickly, and therefore he would follow him in hopes of growing rich with him; but Christ rectifies his mistake, and tells him, he was so far from growing rich, that he had not a place to lay his head on; and if he follow him, he cannot expect to fare better than he fared. Note, Christ will accept none for his followers that aim at worldly advantages in following him, or design to make any thing but heaven of their religion. We have reason to think that this Scribe hereupon went away sorrowful, being balked in a bargain he thought would turn to account; he is not for following Christ unless he can get by him.

2. Here is another that was too slow in performing. Delay in execution is as bad on the one hand, as precipitancy in resolution is on the other hand; when we have taken time to consider, and then have determined, let it never be said, we left that to be done to-morrow which we could do to-day. This candidate for the ministry, this propositant was one of Christ's disciples already, ver. 21. a follower of him at large; Clemens Alexandrinus tells us from an ancient tradition, that this was Philip; he seems to be better qualified and disposed than the former, because not so confident and presumptuous; a bold, eager, over-forward temper is not the most promising in religion, sometimes the last are first, and the first last. Now observe here,

1. The excuse that this disciple made to shift off an immediate attendance on Christ, ver. 21. Lord, suffer me first to go and bury my father. Before I come to be a close and constant follower of thee, let me be allowed to perform this last office of respect to my father; and in the mean time, let it suffice to be a hearer of thee now and then, when I can spare time. His father (some think) was now sick, or dying, or dead; others think he was only aged, and not likely in the course of nature to continue long; and he desired leave to attend upon him in his sickness, at his death, and to his grave, and then he will be at Christ's service. This seemed a reasonable request, and yet it was not right. He had not the zeal he should have had for the work, and therefore pleaded this because it seemed a plausible plea. Note, An unwilling mind never wants an excuse. The meaning of non vacat, is non placet. He that saith he hath no time, the truth is, he has no mind. We will suppose it to come from a true filial affection and respect to his father, but still the preference should have been given to Christ. Note, Many are hindered from and in the way of serious godliness, by an over-concern for their families and relations; these lawful things undo us all, and our duty to God is neglected and postponed under colour of discharging our debts to the world; here therefore we have need to double our guard.

2. Christ's disallowing of this excuse, ver. 22. Jesus said to him, Follow me; and no doubt power went along with this word to him as to the others, and he did follow Christ, and clave to him, as Ruth to Naomi, when the Scribe in the verses before, like Orpah, took leave of him: That said, I will follow thee; to this Christ said, Follow me; comparing them together, it is intimated, that we are brought to Christ by the force of his call to us, not of our promises to him; it is not of him that willeth, nor of him that runneth, but of God that sheweth mercy, and calleth whom he will, Rom. ix. 16. And further, Note, Though chosen vessels may have excuses, and shift off their compliance with divine calls a great while, yet Christ will at length answer their excuses, conquer their unwillingness, and bring them to his foot; when Christ calls, he will overcome, and make the call effectual, 1 Sam. iii. 10. His excuse is laid aside as insufficient; Let the dead bury their dead. It is a proverbial expression; let one dead man bury another, i. e. rather let them lie unburied, than that the service of Christ should be neglected. Let the dead spiritually bury the dead corporally; let worldly offices be left to worldly people; do not thou incumber thyself with them: Burying the dead is good work, especially a dead father, but it is not thy work at this time; it may be done as well by others that are not called and qualified, as thou art to be employed for Christ; thou hast something else to do, and must not defer that. Note, Piety to God must be preferred before piety to parents, though that is a great and needful part of our religion. The Nazarites, under the law were not to mourn for their own parents, because they were holy to the Lord, Numb. vi. 6, 7, 8. nor was the high-priest to defile himself for the dead, no, not for his own father, Lev. xxi. 11, 12. And Christ requires of those who would follow him, that they hate father and mother, Luke xiv. 26. i. e. love them less than God; we must comparatively neglect and disesteem our nearest relations, when they come in competition with Christ, in either our doing for him or our suffering for him.

23. ¶ And when he was entered into a ship, his disciples followed him. 24. And, behold, there arose a great tempest in the sea, insomuch that the ship was covered with the waves: but he was asleep. 25. And his disciples came to him, and awoke him, saying, Lord, save us: we perish. 26. And he saith unto them, Why are ye fearful, O ye of little faith? Then he arose, and rebuked the winds and the sea; and there was a great calm. 27. But the men marvelled, saying, What manner of man is this, that even the winds and the sea obey him.

Christ had given sailing orders to his disciples, ver. 18. that they should depart to the other side of the sea of Tiberias, into the country of Gadara, in the tribe of Gad, which lay east of Jordan; thither he would go to rescue a poor creature that was possessed with a legion of devils, though he foresaw how he should be affronted there. Now, 1. He chose to go by water. It had not been much about if he had gone by land, but he chose to cross the lake, that he might have occasion to manifest himself the God of the sea, as well as of the dry land; and that all power is his, both in heaven and in earth. And it is a comfort to those who go down to the sea in ships, and are often in perils there, that they have a Saviour to trust to and pray to, who knows what it is to be at sea, and to be in storms there. But observe, when he went to sea, he had no yacht or pleasure-boat to attend him, but made use of his disciples fishing-boats; so poorly was he accommodated in all respects. 2. His disciples followed him; the twelve kept close to him, when others staid behind upon the terra firma, where there was sure footing. Note, They and they only will be found the true disciples of Christ, that are willing to go to sea with him, to follow him into dangers and difficulties. Many would be content to go the land-way to heaven, that will rather stand still or go back, than venture upon a dangerous sea; but those that would rest with Christ hereafter, must follow him now wherever he leads them, into a ship or into a prison, as well as into a palace. Now, observe here,

First, The peril and perplexity of the disciples in this voyage; and in this appeared the truth of what Christ had just now said, that those who follow him must count upon difficulties, ver. 20.

1. There arose a very great storm, ver. 24. Christ could have prevented this storm, and ordered them a pleasant passage, but that would not have been so much for his glory and the confirmation of their faith, as their deliverance was: This storm was for their sakes, as John xi. 4. One would have expected that having Christ with them, they should have had a very favourable gale, but it is quite otherwise; for Christ would shew, that those who are passing with him over the ocean of this world to the other side, must expect storms by the way. The church is tossed with tempests, Isa. liv. 11. it is only the upper region that enjoys a perpetual calm, this lower one is ever and anon disturbed and disturbing.

2. Jesus Christ was asleep in this storm. We never read of Christ's sleeping but at this time; he was in watchings often, continued all night in prayer to God; this was a sleep, not of security, like Jonah's in a storm, but of holy serenity and dependence upon his Father: He slept, to shew that he was really and truly man, and subject to the sinless infirmities of our nature: his work made him weary and sleepy, and he had no guilt, no fear within to disturb his repose: Those that can lay their heads upon the pillow of a clear conscience, may sleep quietly and sweetly in a storm, Psal. iv. 8. as Peter, Acts xii. 6. He slept at this time to try the faith of his disciples, whether they could trust him when he seemed to slight them. He slept, not so much with a desire to be refreshed, as with a design to be awaked.

3. The poor disciples, though used to the sea, were in a great fright, and in their fear came to their Master, ver. 25. Whither else should they go? it was well they had him so near them: They awoke him with their prayers, Lord, save us, we perish. Note, Those who would learn to pray, must go to sea. Imminent and sensible dangers will drive people to him, who alone can help in time of need. Their prayer has life in it, Lord, save us, we perish. 1. Their petition is, Lord, save us. They believed he could save them, they begged he would: Christ's errand into the world was to save, but those only shall be saved that call on the name of the Lord, Acts ii. 21. Those who by faith are interested in the eternal salvation wrought out by Christ, may with an humble confidence apply themselves to him for temporal deliverances. Observe, They call him Lord, and then pray, Save us. Note, Christ will save none, but those that are willing to take him for their Lord; for he is a Prince and a Saviour. 2. Their plea is, We perish; which was, (1.) The language of their fear; they looked upon their case as desperate, and gave up all for gone; had received a sentence of death within themselves, and this they plead, we perish, if thou dost not save us; look upon us therefore with pity. (2.) It was the language of their fervency; they pray as men in earnest that beg for their lives; it becomes us thus to strive and wrestle in prayer; therefore Christ slept, that he might draw out this importunity.

Secondly, The power and grace of Jesus Christ put forth for their succour; then the Lord Jesus awaked, as one refreshed, Psal. lxxviii. 65. Christ may sleep when his church is in a storm, but he will not out-sleep himself; the time, the set time to favour his distressed church will come, Psal. cii. 13.

1. He rebuked the disciples, ver. 26. Why are ye fearful, O ye of little faith? He doth not chide them for disturbing him with their prayers, but for disturbing themselves with their fears. Christ reproved them first, and then delivered them; this is his method to prepare us for a mercy, and then give it us. Observe, 1. His dislike of their fears. Why are ye fearful? ye, my disciples? Let the sinners in Zion be afraid, let heathen mariners tremble in a storm, but you should not be so: Inquire into the reasons of your fear, and weigh them. 2. His discovery of the cause and spring of their fears: O ye of little faith. Many that have true faith are weak in it, and it doth but little. Note, 1. Christ's disciples are apt to be disquieted with fears in a stormy day, to torment themselves with jealousies that things are bad with them, and dismal conclusions that they will be worse. 2. The prevalency of our inordinate fears in a stormy day is owing to the weakness of our faith, which would be as an anchor to the soul, and would ply the oar of prayer. By faith we might see through the storm to the quiet shore, and encourage ourselves with hope that we shall weather our point. 3. The fearfulness of Christ's disciples in a storm, and their unbelief, the cause of it is very displeasing to the Lord Jesus, for it reflects dishonour upon him, and creates disturbance to themselves.

2. He rebukes the wind; the former he did as the God of grace, and the sovereign of the heart, that can do what he pleaseth in us; this he did as the God of nature, the sovereign of the world, that can do what he pleaseth for us: It is the same power that stills the noise of the sea, and the tumult of fear, Psal. lxxv. 7. See, 1. How easily this was done, with a word's speaking: Moses commanded the waters with a rod, Joshua with the ark of the covenant, Elisha with the prophet's mantle, but Christ with a word. See his absolute dominion over all the creatures, which speaks both his honour and the happiness of those that have him on their side. 2. How effectually it was done, there was a great calm, all of a sudden. Ordinarily after a storm there is such a fret of the waters, that it is a good while ere they can settle, but if Christ speak the word, not only the storm ceaseth, but all the effects of it, all remains of it. Great storms of doubt and fear in the soul, under the power of the spirit of bondage, sometimes end in a wonderful calm, created and spoken by the Spirit of adoption.

3. This set them all on wondering, ver. 27. The men marvelled. They had been long acquainted with the sea, and never saw a storm so immediately turned into a perfect calm in all their lives: It has all the marks and signatures of a miracle upon it; it is the Lord's doing, and is marvellous in their eyes. Observe, 1. Their admiration of Christ: What manner of man is this! Note, Christ is a non-such: every thing in him is admirable: None so wise, so mighty, so amiable as he is. 2. The reason of it: Even the winds and the sea obey him. Upon this account Christ is to be admired that he has a commanding power even over winds and seas. Others pretended to cure diseases, but he only undertook to command the winds. We know not the way of the winds, John iii. 8. much less can we control it: but he that bringeth forth the wind out of his treasury, (Psal. cxxxv. 7.) when it is out, gathers it into his fists, Prov. xxx. 4. He that can do this can do any thing, can do enough to encourage our confidence and comfort in him in the

the most stormy day, within or without, Isa. xxvi. 4. The Lord sits upon the floods, and is mightier than the noise of many waters. Christ, by commanding the seas, shewed to be the same that made the world, when, at his rebuke, the waters fled, Psal. civ. 7, 8. as now at his rebuke they fell.

28. ¶ And when he was come to the other side into the country of the Gergesenes, there meet him two possessed with devils, coming out of the tombs, exceeding fierce, so that no man might pass by that way. 29. And, behold, they cried out, saying, What have we to do with thee, Jesus, thou Son of God? Art thou come hither to torment us before the time? 30. And there was a good way off from them an herd of many swine feeding. 31. So the devils besought him, saying, If thou cast us out, suffer us to go away into the herd of swine. 32. And he said unto them, Go. And when they were come out, they went into the herd of swine; and, behold, the whole herd of swine ran violently down a steep place into the sea, and perished in the waters. 33. And they that kept them fled, and went their ways into the city, and told every thing, and what was befallen to the possessed of the devils. 34. And, behold, the whole city came out to meet Jesus; and when they saw him, they besought him that he would depart out of their coasts.

We have here the story of Christ's casting the devils out of two men that were possessed. The scope of this chapter is to shew the divine power of Christ by the instances of his dominion over bodily diseases, which to us are irresistible; over winds and waves, which to us are yet more uncontrollable; and, lastly, over devils, which to us are most formidable of all. Christ has not only all power in heaven and earth, and all deep places, but has the keys of hell too. Principalities and powers were made subject to him, even while he was in his estate of humiliation, as an earnest of what should be at his entrance into his glory, Eph. i. 21. he spoiled them, Col. ii. 15. It was observed in general, ver. 16. that Christ cast out the spirits with his word, here we have a particular instance of it, which had some circumstances more remarkable than the rest. This miracle was wrought in the country of the Gergesenes, some think, they were the remains of the old Gergashites, Deut. vii. 1. Though Christ was sent chiefly to the lost sheep of the house of Israel, yet some sallies he made out among the borderers, as here, to gain this victory over Satan, which was a specimen of the conquest of his legions in the Gentile world.

Now, besides the general instance which this gives us of Christ's power over Satan, and his design against him to disarm and dispossess him, we have here especially discovered to us the way and manner of evil spirits in their enmity to man. Observe, concerning this legion of devils, what work they made where they were and where they went.

First, What work they made where they were, which appears in the miserable condition of these two that were possessed by them, and some think, these two were man and wife, because the other evangelists speak but of one.

1. They dwelt among the tombs, thence they came when they met Christ. The devil having the power of death, not as judge but as executioner, he delighted to converse among the trophies of his victory, the dead bodies of men; but there, where he thought himself in the greatest triumph and elevation, as afterwards in Golgotha, the place of a skull, did Christ conquer and subdue him. Conversing among the graves increased the melancholy and frenzy of the poor possessed creatures, and so strengthened the hold he had of them by their bodily distemper, and did also make them more formidable to other people, who generally startle at any thing that stirs among the tombs.

2. They were exceeding fierce, not only ungovernable themselves, but mischievous to others, frightening many, having hurt some, so that no man durst pass that way. Note, The devil bears malice to mankind, and shews it, by making men spiteful and malicious one to another. Mutual enmities where there should be mutual endearments and assistances, are effects and evidences of Satan's enmity to the whole race: He makes one man a wolf, a bear, a devil to another: Homo homini lupus. Where Satan rules in a man spiritually, by those lusts that war in the members, pride, envy, malice, revenge, they make him as unfit for human society, as unworthy of it and as much an enemy to the comfort of it, as these poor possessed creatures were.

3. They bid defiance to Jesus Christ, and disclaimed all interest in him. ver. 29. It is an instance of the power of God over the devils, that notwithstanding the mischief they studied to do by and to these poor creatures, yet they could not keep them from meeting Jesus Christ, who ordered the matter so as to meet them: It was his overpowering hand that dragged these unclean spirits into his presence, which they dreaded more than any thing else: his chains could hold them, when the chains men made for them could not. But being brought before him, they protested against his jurisdiction, and broke out into a rage, What have we to do with thee, Jesus, thou Son of God? Here is,

(1.) One word that the devil said like a saint, he addressed himself to Christ as Jesus, the Son of God; a good word, and at this time, when it was a truth but in the proving, it was a great word too, what flesh and blood did not reveal to Peter, Matt. xvi. 16. Even the devils know and believe, and confess Christ to be the Son of God, and yet they are devils still, which makes their enmity to Christ so much the more wicked, and indeed a perfect torment to themselves; for how can it be otherwise, to oppose one they know to be the Son of God. Note, It is not knowledge, but love that distinguisheth saints from devils. He is the first-born of hell that knows Christ and yet hates him, and will not be subject to him and his law. We may remember that not long since the devil made a doubt whether Christ was the Son of God or no, and would have persuaded him to question it, chap. iv. 3. but now he readily owns it. Note, Though God's children may be much disquieted in an hour of temptation, by Satan's questioning their relation to God as a Father, yet the Spirit of adoption shall at length clear it up to them so much to their satisfaction, as to set it even above the devil's contradiction.

1. A word of defiance, What have we to do with thee? Now, (1.) It is true that the devils have nothing to do with Christ as a Saviour, for he took not on him the nature of the angels that fell, nor did he lay hold on them, Heb. ii. 16. they are in no relation to him, they neither have nor hope for any benefit by him. O the depth of this mystery of divine love, that fallen man hath so much to do with Christ, when fallen angels have nothing to do with him! Surely here was torment enough before the time, to be forced to own the excellency that is in Christ, and yet that he has no interest in him. Note, It is possible for men to call Jesus the Son of God, and yet have nothing to do with him.

(2.) It is as true that the devils desire not to have any thing to do with Christ as a Ruler; they hate him, they are filled with enmity against him, they stand in opposition to him, and are in open rebellion against his crown and dignity. See whose language they speak that will have nothing to do with the gospel of Christ, with his laws and ordinances, that throw off his yoke, that break his bands in sunder, and will not have him to reign over them; that say to the Almighty Jesus, Depart from us: they are of their father the devil, they do his lusts, and speak his language.

(3.) But is it not true that the devils have nothing to do with Christ as a Judge, for they have, and they know it. These devils could not say, What hast thou to do with us? could not deny but that the Son of God is the Judge of devils; to his judgment they are bound over in chains of darkness, which they would fain shake off, and shake off the thought of.

2. A word of dread and deprecation, Art thou come hither to torment us? i. e. to cast us out from these men, and to restrain us from doing the hurt we would do? Note, To be turned out and tried up from doing mischief, is a torment to the devil, all whose comfort and satisfaction is man's misery and destruction. Should not we therefore count it our heaven to be doing well, and reckon that our torment, whether within or without, that hinders us from well-doing? Now must we be tormented by thee before the time? Note, 1. There is a time in which devils will be more tormented than they are, and they know it. The great assize at the last day is the time prefixed for their complete torture in that tophet which is ordained of old, for the king, for the prince of the devils, and his agents, Isa. xxx. 33. Matt. xxv. 41. for the judgment of that day they are reserved, 2 Pet. ii. 4. Those malignant spirits that are now by the divine permission prisoners at large, walking to and fro through the earth, Job. i. 7. yet are in a chain, hitherto shall their power reach and no further, they will then be made close prisoners that have now some ease, will then be in torment without ease: This they here take for granted, and ask not never to be tormented, despair of relief is the misery of their case, but not before the time; for though they knew not when the day of judgment should be, they knew it should not be yet. 2. The devils have a certain fearful looking for of that judgment and fiery indignation upon every approach of Christ, and every check that is given to their power and rage. The very sight of Christ and his word of command to come out of the man, made them thus apprehensive of their torment. Thus the devils believe and tremble, James ii. 19. It is their own enmity to God and man that puts them upon the rack, and torments them before the time. The most desperate sinners, whose damnation is sealed, yet cannot quite harden their hearts against the surprise of fearfulness, when they see the day approaching.

Secondly, Let us now see what work they made where they went, when they were turned out of the men possessed, and that was in a herd of swine; which was a good way off, ver. 30. These Gergesenes, though living on the other side Jordan, were Jews: What had they to do with swine, which by the law were unclean; and not to be eaten or touched? Probably, lying in the out-skirts of the land, there were many Gentiles among them; to whom this herd of swine belonged: Or they kept them to be sold or bartered to the Romans, with whom they had now great dealings, and who were admirers of swine's flesh.

Now observe, 1. How the devils seized the swine. Though they were a good way off, and one would think out of danger, yet the devils had an eye upon them to do them a mischief: For they go up and down seeking to devour, seeking an opportunity, and they seek not long but they find. Now here,

(1.) They asked leave to enter into the swine, ver. 31. They besought him, with all earnestness, if thou cast us out, suffer us to go away into the herd of swine. Hereby, 1. They discover their own inclinations to do mischief, and what a pleasure it is to them: Those therefore are their children and resemble them, whose sleep departeth from them, except they cause some to fall, Prov. iv. 16. Let us go into the herd of swine, any whither rather than into the place of torment, any whither to do mischief. If they might not be suffered to hurt men in their bodies, they would hurt them in their goods, and in that too they intend hurt to their souls by making Christ a burden to them: Such malicious reaches hath that old, subtle serpent! 2. They own Christ's power over them, that without his sufferance and permission they could not so much as hurt a swine. This is comfortable to all the Lord's people, that though the devil's power be very great, yet it is limited, and not equal to his malice; (what would become of us, if it were?) especially that it is under the control of our Lord Jesus, our most faithful powerful friend and Saviour; that Satan and his instruments can go no further than he is pleased to lengthen their tether; here shall their proud waves be stayed.

(2.) They had leave: Christ said unto them, Go, ver. 32. as God did to Satan when he desired leave to afflict Job. Note, God doth often for wise and holy ends permit the efforts of Satan's rage, and suffer him to do the mischief he would, and even by it serve his own purposes: The devils are not only Christ's captives but his vassals; his dominion over them appears in the harm they do, as well as in the hindrance of them from doing more. Thus even their wrath is made to praise Christ, and the remainder of it he doth and will restrain. Christ permitted this, 1. For the conviction of the Sadducees that were then among the Jews, who denied the existence of Spirits, and would not own there were such beings, because they could not see them: Now Christ would by this bring it as near as might be to an ocular demonstration of the being, multitude, power and malice of evil spirits, that if they were not hereby convinced, they might be left inexcusable in their infidelity. We see not the wind, but it would be absurd to deny it, when we see trees and houses blown down by it. 2. For the punishment of the Gadarenes, who perhaps, though Jews, took a liberty to eat swine's flesh, contrary to the law; however, their keeping swine bordered upon evil; and Christ would also shew what a hellish crew they were delivered from, that if he had permitted it, would soon have choked them as they did their swine. The devils, in obedience to Christ's command, came out of the men, and having permission, when they were come out, immediately they went into the herd of swine. See what an industrious enemy Satan is, and how expeditious; he will lose no time in doing mischief.

2. Observe, Whither they hurried them, when they had seized them. They were not hid to save their lives, and therefore they were made to run violently down a steep place into the sea, where they all perished to the number of about two thousand, Mark v. 13. Note, The possession which the devil gets is for destruction. Thus the devil hurries people to sin, hurries them to that which they have resolved against, and which they know will be shame and grief to them; with what a force doth the evil spirit work in the children of disobedience, when by so many foolish and hurtful lusts they are brought to act in direct contradiction, not only to religion but to right reason, and their interests in this world. Thus likewise he hurries hurries them to ruin, for he is Apollyon and Abaddon, the great destroyer. By his lusts which men do they are drowned in destruction and perdition. This is Satan's will to swallow up and to devour: miserable then is the condition of those that are led captive by him at his will. They are hurried into a worse lake than this, a lake that burns with fire and brimstone.

3. Observe, What effect this had upon the owners. The report of it was soon brought them by the swine-herds, who seemed to be more concerned for the loss of the swine than any thing else, for they went not to tell what was befallen to the possessed of the devils, till the swine were lost, ver. 33. Christ went not into the city, but the news of his being there did, by which he was willing to feel how their pulse beat, and what influence it had upon them, and then act accordingly.

Now, 1. Their curiosity brought them out to see Jesus. The whole city came out to meet him, that they might be able to say they had seen a man who did such wonderful works. Thus many go out in profession to meet Christ for company, that have no real affection for him, nor desire to know him.

2. Their covetousness made them willing to be rid of him. Instead of inviting him into their city, or bringing their sick to him to be healed, they desired him to depart out of their coasts, as if they had taken the devils words out of their mouths, What have we to do with thee, Jesus, thou Son of God? And now the devils had what they aimed at in drowning the swine; they did it; and then made the people believe Christ had done it, and so prejudiced them against him. He seduced our first parents by possessing them with hard thoughts of God, and kept the Gadarenes from Christ, by suggesting that he came into their country to destroy their cattle, and that he would do more hurt than good; for though he had cured two men, yet he had drowned two thousand swine. Thus the devil sows tares in God's field, doth mischief in the Christian church, and then lays the blame upon Christianity, and incenseth men against that. They besought him that he would depart, lest like Moses in Egypt he should proceed to some other plague. Note, There are a great many who prefer their swine before their Saviour, and so come short of Christ and salvation by him. They desire Christ to depart out of their hearts, and will not suffer his word to have a place in them, because he and his word will be the destruction of their brutish lusts, those swine which they give up themselves to the feeding of. And justly will Christ forsake those that thus are weary of him, and say to them hereafter, Depart ye cursed, who now say to the Almighty, Depart from us.

CHAP. IX.

We have in this chapter remarkable instances of the power and pity of the Lord Jesus, sufficient to convince us that he is both able to save to the uttermost all that come to God by him, and as willing as is able. His power and pity appear here in the good offices he did. (1.) To the bodies of people, in curing the palsy, ver. 2—8. Raising to life the ruler's daughter, and healing the bloody issue, ver. 18—26. Giving sight to two blind men, ver. 27—31. Casting the devil out of one possessed, ver. 32—34. and healing all manner of sickness, ver. 35. (2.) To the souls of people. In forgiving sins, ver. 2. Calling Matthew, and conversing freely with publicans and sinners, ver. 9—13. Considering the frame of his disciples, with reference to the duty of fasting, ver. 14—17. Preaching the gospel, and in compassion to the multitude providing preachers for them, ver. 35—38. Thus did he prove himself to be, as undoubtedly he is the skilful faithful physician both of soul and body, that hath sufficient remedies for all the maladies of both; for which we must therefore apply ourselves to him, and glorify him both with our bodies, and with our spirits, which are his, in return to him for his kindness to both.

1. AND he entered into a ship, and passed over, and came into his own city. 2. And, behold, they brought to him a man sick of the palsy, lying on a bed: and Jesus seeing their faith, said unto the sick of the palsy; Son, be of good cheer; thy sins be forgiven thee. 3. And, behold, certain of the Scribes said within themselves, This man blasphemeth. 4. And Jesus knowing their thoughts, said, Wherefore think ye evil in your hearts? 5. For whether is easier to say, Thy sins be forgiven thee? Or to say, Arise, and walk? 6. But that we may know that the Son of man hath power on earth to forgive sins, (then saith he to the sick of the palsy) Arise, take up thy bed, and go unto thine house. 7. And he arose, and departed to his house. 8. But when the multitude saw it, they marvelled, and glorified God, which had given such power unto men.

The first words of this chapter oblige us to look back to the close of that foregoing, where we find the Gadarenes so resenting the loss of their swine, that they were sick of Christ's company, and besought him to depart out of their coasts: Now here it follows, he entered into a ship, and passed over. They bid him begone, and he took them at their word, and we never read that he came into their coasts again. Now here observe, 1. His justice that he left them. Note, Christ will not tarry long there where he is not welcome. In righteous judgment he forsakes those places and persons that are weary of him, but abides with those that covet and court his stay. If the unbeliever will depart from Christ, let him depart, it is at his peril, 1 Cor. vii. 15. 2. His patience, that he did not leave some destroying judgment behind him to punish them as they deserved for their contempt and contumacy. How easily, how justly might he have sent them after their swine, who were already so much under the devil's power. The provocation indeed was very great, but he put it up and passed it by, and without any angry resentments or upbraidings, he entered into a ship and passed over. This was the day of his patience; he came not to destroy men's lives, but to save them; not to kill, but to cure. Spiritual judgments agree more with the constitution of gospel times; yet some observe, that in those bloody wars which the Romans made upon the Jews, which began not many years after this, they first besieged the town of Gadara, where these Gadarenes dwelt. Note, Those that drive Christ from them, draw all miseries upon them. Woe unto us, if God depart from us.

He came into his own city, that was Capernaum, the principal place of his residence at present, Mark. ii. 1. and therefore called his own city. He had himself testified that a prophet is least honoured in his own country and city, yet thither he came; for he sought not his own honour, but being in a state of humiliation, he was content to be despised of the people. At Capernaum all the passages of story recorded in this chapter happened, and are therefore put together here, though in the harmony of the evangelists other events intervened. When the Gadarenes desired Christ to depart, they of Capernaum received him. If Christ be affronted by some, there are others in whom he will be glorious; if one will not, another will.

1. The faith of his friends in bringing him to Christ. His distemper was such, that he could not come to Christ himself, but he was carried. Note, Even the halt and the lame may be brought to Christ, and they shall not be rejected of him. If we do as well as we can he will accept of us. Christ had an eye to their faith. Little children cannot go to Christ themselves, but he will have an eye to the faith of those that bring them, and it shall not be in vain. Jesus saw their faith, his own as well as theirs that brought him; which Jesus saw the habit of, though his distemper perhaps impaired his intellectuals, and obstructed the actings of it. Now their faith was, 1. A strong faith; they firmly believed that Jesus Christ both could and would heal him, else they would not have brought the sick man to him publicly, and through so much difficulty. 2. A humble faith; though the sick man was unable to stir a step, they would not ask Christ to make him a visit, but bring him to attend on Christ. It is fitter we should wait on Christ than he on us. 3. An active faith; in the belief of Christ's power and goodness, they brought the sick man to him lying on a bed, which could not be done without a deal of pains. Note, A strong faith sticks at nothing in pressing after Christ.

The favour of Christ in what he said to him. Son, be of good cheer, thy sins be forgiven thee. This was a sovereign cordial to a sick man, and which was enough to make all his bed in his sickness; and to make it easy to him. We read not of any thing said to Christ; probably the poor sick man could not speak for himself, and they that brought him chose rather to speak by actions than words; they sent him before Christ, that was enough. Note, It is not in vain to present ourselves and our friends to Christ as the object of his pity. Misery cries as well as sin, and mercy is no less quick of hearing than justice. Here is in what Christ said, 1. A kind compellation; Son. Note, Exhortations and consolations to the afflicted speak to them as to sons, for afflictions are fatherly discipline, Heb. xii. 5. 2. A gracious encouragement. Be of good cheer. Have a good heart on it: cheer up thy spirits. Probably the poor man when let down among them all in his bed was dashed out of countenance, was afraid of a rebuke, for being brought in so rudely: But Christ doth not stand upon ceremony, bids him be of good cheer: all would be well, he should not be laid before Christ in vain. Christ bids him be of good cheer, and then cures him. He would have those to whom he deals his gifts to be cheerful in seeking to him, and in trusting to him; to be of good courage. 3. A good reason for that encouragement. Thy sins be forgiven thee. Now this may be considered, 1. As an introduction to the cure of his bodily distemper, thy sins are pardoned, and therefore thou shalt be healed. Note, As sin is the cause of sickness, so the remission of sin is the comfort of recovery from sickness; not but that sin may be pardoned, and yet the sickness not removed; not but that the sickness may be removed, and yet the sin not pardoned: But if we have the comfort of our reconciliation to God, with the comfort of our recovery from sickness; this makes it a mercy indeed to us, as to Hezekiah, Isa. xxxviii. 17. Or, 2. As a reason of the command to be of good cheer, whether he were cured of his disease or no. Though I should not heal thee, wilt thou say thou hast not sought in vain; if I assure thee, that thy sins are pardoned: and look upon that as a sufficient ground of comfort though thou shouldst continue sick of the palsy. Note, Those who through grace have some evidence of the forgiveness of their sins have reason to be of good cheer, whatever outward troubles or afflictions they are under; see Isa. xxxiii. 24.

3. The cavil of the Scribes at that which Christ said, ver. 3. They said within themselves in their hearts, among themselves, in their secret whisperings, this man blasphemeth. See how the greatest instance of heaven's power and grace is branded with the blackest note of hell's enmity; Christ's pardoning sin is termed blasphemy, nor had it been less if he had not had commission from God for it. Those therefore are guilty of blasphemy that have no such commission, and yet pretend to pardon sin.

4. The conviction which Christ gave them of the unreasonableness of this cavil before he proceeded.

1. He charged them with it. Though they did but say it within themselves, he knew their thoughts. Note, Our Lord Jesus has the perfect knowledge of all that we say within ourselves. Thoughts are secret and sudden, yet naked and open before Christ the eternal Word, Heb. iv. 12, 13. and he understands them afar off, Psalm cxxxix. 2. He could say to them which no mere man could, wherefore think ye evil in your hearts? Note, There is a great deal of evil in sinful thoughts, which is very offensive to the Lord Jesus. He being the sovereign of the heart, sinful thoughts invade his right and disturb his possession, therefore he takes notice of them, and is much displeased with them. In them lies the root of bitterness, Gen. vi. 5. The sins that begin and end in the heart and go no further, are as dangerous as any other.

1. How he asserts his authority in the kingdom of grace. He undertakes to make out that the Son of man the mediator has power on earth to forgive sins; for therefore the Father has committed all judgment to the Son, and has given him this authority, because he is the Son of man, John. v. 22—27. If he have power to give eternal life, as he certainly has, John. xvii. 2. he must have power to forgive sin, for guilt is a bar that must be removed, or we can never get to heaven. What an encouragement is this to poor sinners to repent, that the power of pardoning sin is put into the hands of the Son of man, who is bone of our bone! And if he had this power on earth, much more now he is exalted to the Father's right-hand to give repentance and remission of sins, and so to be both a Prince and a Saviour, Acts v. 31.

2. How he proves it by his power in the kingdom of nature, his power to cure diseases. Is it not as easy to say, thy sins be forgiven thee, as to say, arise and walk? He that can cure the disease whether declaratively as a prophet, or authoritatively as God, can in like manner forgive the sin. Now, 1. This is a general argument to prove that Christ had a divine mission. His miracles, especially his miraculous cures confirm what he said of himself, that he was the Son of God, the power that appeared in his cures proved him sent of God, and the pity that appeared in them proved him sent of God to heal and save. The God of truth would not set his seal to a lie. 2. It had a particular cogency in this case. The palsy was but a symptom of the disease of sin; now he made it to appear that he could effectually cure the original disease by the immediate removal of that symptom; so close a connexion was there between the sin and the sickness. He that had power to remove the punishment, no doubt had power to remit the sin. The Scribes stood much upon a legal righteousness, and placed their confidence in that, and made no great matter of the forgiveness of the most stormy day, within or without, Isa. xxvi. 4. The Lord sits upon the floods, and is mightier than the noise of many waters. Christ, by commanding the seas, shewed to be the same that made the world, when, at his rebuke, the waters fled, Psal. civ. 7, 8. as now at his rebuke they fell.

28. ¶ And when he was come to the other side into the country of the Gergesenes, there meet him two possessed with devils, coming out of the tombs, exceeding fierce, so that no man might pass by that way. 29. And, behold, they cried out, saying, What have we to do with thee, Jesus, thou Son of God? Art thou come hither to torment us before the time? 30. And there was a good way off from them an herd of many swine feeding. 31. So the devils besought him, saying, If thou cast us out, suffer us to go away into the herd of swine. 32. And he said unto them, Go. And when they were come out, they went into the herd of swine: and, behold, the whole herd of swine ran violently down a steep place into the sea, and perished in the waters. 33. And they that kept them fled, and went their ways into the city, and told every thing, and what was befallen to the possessed of the devils. 34. And, behold, the whole city came out to meet Jesus: and when they saw him, they besought him that he would depart out of their coasts.

We have here the story of Christ's casting the devils out of two men that were possessed. The scope of this chapter is to shew the divine power of Christ by the instances of his dominion over bodily diseases, which to us are irresistible; over winds and waves, which to us are yet more uncontrollable; and, lastly, over devils, which to us are most formidable of all. Christ has not only all power in heaven and earth, and all deep places, but has the keys of hell too. Principalities and powers were made subject to him, even while he was in his estate of humiliation, as an earnest of what should be at his entrance into his glory, Eph. i. 21. he spoiled them, Col. ii. 15. It was observed in general, ver. 16. that Christ cast out the spirits with his word, here we have a particular instance of it, which had some circumstances more remarkable than the rest. This miracle was wrought in the country of the Gergesenes, some think, they were the remains of the old Gergashites, Deut. vii. 1. Though Christ was sent chiefly to the lost sheep of the house of Israel, yet some sallies he made out among the borderers, as here, to gain this victory over Satan, which was a specimen of the conquest of his legions in the Gentile world.

Now, besides the general instance which this gives us of Christ's power over Satan, and his design against him to disarm and dispossess him, we have here especially discovered to us the way and manner of evil spirits in their enmity to man. Observe, concerning this legion of devils, what work they made where they were and where they went.

First, What work they made where they were, which appears in the miserable condition of these two that were possessed by them, and some think, these two were man and wife, because the other evangelists speak but of one.

1. They dwelt among the tombs, thence they came when they met Christ. The devil having the power of death, not as judge but as executioner, he delighted to converse among the trophies of his victory, the dead bodies of men; but there, where he thought himself in the greatest triumph and elevation, as afterwards in Golgotha, the place of a skull, did Christ conquer and subdue him. Conversing among the graves increased the melancholy and frenzy of the poor possessed creatures, and so strengthened the hold he had of them by their bodily distemper, and did also make them more formidable to other people, who generally startle at any thing that stirs among the tombs.

2. They were exceeding fierce, not only ungovernable themselves, but mischievous to others, frightening many, having hurt some, so that no man durst pass that way. Note, The devil bears malice to mankind, and shews it, by making men spiteful and malicious one to another. Mutual enmities where there should be mutual endearments and assistances, are effects and evidences of Satan's enmity to the whole race: He makes one man a wolf, a bear, a devil to another: Homo homini lupus. Where Satan rules in a man spiritually, by those lusts that war in the members, pride, envy, malice, revenge, they make him as unfit for human society, as unworthy of it and as much an enemy to the comfort of it, as these poor possessed creatures were.

3. They bid defiance to Jesus Christ, and disclaimed all interest in him. ver. 29. It is an instance of the power of God over the devils, that notwithstanding the mischief they studied to do by and to these poor creatures, yet they could not keep them from meeting Jesus Christ, who ordered the matter so as to meet them: It was his overpowering hand that dragged these unclean spirits into his presence, which they dreaded more than any thing else; his chains could hold them, when the chains men made for them could not. But being brought before him, they protested against his jurisdiction, and broke out into a rage, What have we to do with thee, Jesus, thou Son of God? Here is.

(1.) One word that the devil said like a saint, he addressed himself to Christ as Jesus, the Son of God; a good word, and at this time, when it was a truth but in the proving, it was a great word too, what flesh and blood did not reveal to Peter, Matt. xvi. 16. Even the devils know and believe, and confess Christ to be the Son of God, and yet they are devils still, which makes their enmity to Christ so much the more wicked, and indeed a perfect torment to themselves; for how can it be otherwise, to oppose one they know to be the Son of God. Note, It is not knowledge, but love that distinguisheth saints from devils. He is the first-born of hell that knows Christ and yet hates him, and will not be subject to him and his law. We may remember that not long since the devil made a doubt whether Christ was the Son of God or no, and would have persuaded him to question it, chap. iv. 3. but now he readily owns it. Note, Though God's children may be much disquieted in an hour of temptation, by Satan's questioning their relation to God as a Father, yet the Spirit of adoption shall at length clear it up to them so much to their satisfaction, as to set it even above the devil's contradiction.

1. A word of defiance, What have we to do with thee? Now, (1.) It is true that the devils have nothing to do with Christ as a Saviour, for he took not on him the nature of the angels that fell, nor did he lay hold on them, Heb. ii. 16. they are in no relation to him, they neither have nor hope for any benefit by him. O the depth of this mystery of divine love, that fallen man hath so much to do with Christ, when fallen angels have nothing to do with him! Surely here was torment enough before the time, to be forced to own the excellency that is in Christ, and yet that he has no interest in him. Note, It is possible for men to call Jesus the Son of God, and yet have nothing to do with him.

(2.) It is as true that the devils desire not to have any thing to do with Christ as a Ruler; they hate him, they are filled with enmity against him, they stand in opposition to him, and are in open rebellion against his crown and dignity. See whose language they speak that will have nothing to do with the gospel of Christ, with his laws and ordinances, that throw off his yoke, that break his bands in sunder, and will not have him to reign over them; that say to the Almighty Jesus, Depart from us: they are of their father the devil, they do his lusts, and speak his language.

(3.) But is it not true that the devils have nothing to do with Christ as a Judge, for they have, and they know it. These devils could not say, What hast thou to do with us? could not deny but that the Son of God is the Judge of devils; to his judgment they are bound over in chains of darkness, which they would fain shake off, and shake off the thought of.

2. A word of dread and deprecation, Art thou come hither to torment us? i. e. to cast us out from these men, and to restrain us from doing the hurt we would do? Note, To be turned out and tried up from doing mischief, is a torment to the devil, all whose comfort and satisfaction is man's misery and destruction. Should not we then count it our heaven to be doing well, and reckon that our torment, whether within or without, that hinders us from well-doing? Now must we be tormented by thee before the time? Note, 1. There is a time in which devils will be more tormented than they are, and they know it. The great assize at the last day is the time prefixed for their complete torture in that tophet which is ordained of old, for the king, for the prince of the devils, and his agents, Isa. xxx. 33. Matt. xxv. 41. for the judgment of that day they are reserved, 2 Pet. ii. 4. Those malignant spirits that are now by the divine permission prisoners at large, walking to and fro through the earth, Job. i. 7. yet are in a chain, hitherto shall their power reach and no further, they will then be made close prisoners that have now some ease, will then be in torment without ease: This they here take for granted, and ask not never to be tormented, despair of relief is the misery of their case, but not before the time; for though they knew not when the day of judgment should be, they knew it should not be yet. 2. The devils have a certain fearful looking for of that judgment and fiery indignation upon every approach of Christ, and every check that is given to their power and rage. The very sight of Christ and his word of command to come out of the man, made them thus apprehensive of their torment. Thus the devils believe and tremble, James ii. 19. It is their own enmity to God and man that puts them upon the rack, and torments them before the time. The most desperate sinners, whose damnation is sealed, yet cannot quite harden their hearts against the surprise of fearfulness, when they see the day approaching.

Secondly, Let us now see what work they made where they went, when they were turned out of the men possessed, and that was in a herd of swine, which was a good way off, ver. 30. These Gergesenes, though living on the other side Jordan, were Jews: What had they to do with swine, which by the law were unclean, and not to be eaten or touched? Probably, lying in the out-skirts of the land, there were many Gentiles among them, to whom this herd of swine belonged: Or they kept them to be sold or bartered to the Romans, with whom they had now great dealings, and who were admirers of swine's flesh.

Now observe, 1. How the devils seized the swine. Though they were a good way off, and one would think out of danger, yet the devils had an eye upon them to do them a mischief: For they go up and down seeking to devour, seeking an opportunity, and they seek not long but they find. Now here,

(1.) They asked leave to enter into the swine, ver. 31. They besought him, with all earnestness, if thou cast us out, suffer us to go away into the herd of swine. Hereby, 1. They discover their own inclinations to do mischief, and what a pleasure it is to them: Those therefore are their children and resemble them, whose sleep departeth from them, except they cause some to fall, Prov. iv. 16. Let us go into the herd of swine, any wither rather than into the place of torment, any whither to do mischief. If they might not be suffered to hurt men in their bodies, they would hurt them in their goods, and in that too they intend hurt to their souls by making Christ a burden to them: Such malicious reaches hath that old, subtle serpent! 2. They own Christ's power over them, that without his sufferance and permission they could not so much as hurt a swine. This is comfortable to all the Lord's people, that though the devil's power be very great, yet it is limited, and not equal to his malice; (what would become of us, if it were?) especially that it is under the control of our Lord Jesus, our most faithful powerful friend and Saviour; that Satan and his instruments can go no further than he is pleased to lengthen their tether; here shall their proud waves be stayed.

(2.) They had leave: Christ said unto them, Go, ver. 32. as God did to Satan when he desired leave to afflict Job. Note, God doth often for wise and holy ends permit the efforts of Satan's rage, and suffer him to do the mischief he would, and even by it serve his own purposes: The devils are not only Christ's captives but his vassals; his dominion over them appears in the harm they do, as well as in the hinderance of them from doing more. Thus even their wrath is made to praise Christ, and the remainder of it he doth and will restrain. Christ permitted this, 1. For the conviction of the Sadducees that were then among the Jews, who denied the existence of Spirits, and would not own there were such beings, because they could not see them: Now Christ would by this bring it as near as might be to an ocular demonstration of the being, multitude, power and malice of evil spirits, that if they were not hereby convinced, they might be left inexcusable in their infidelity. We see not the wind, but it would be absurd to deny it, when we see trees and houses blown down by it. 2. For the punishment of the Gadarenes, who perhaps, though Jews, took a liberty to eat swine's flesh, contrary to the law; however, their keeping swine bordered upon evil; and Christ would also shew what a hellish crew they were delivered from, that if he had permitted it, would soon have choked them as they did their swine. The devils, in obedience to Christ's command, came out of the men, and having permission, when they were come out, immediately they went into the herd of swine. See what an industrious enemy Satan is, and how expeditious; he will lose no time in doing mischief.

2. Observe, Whither they hurried them, when they had seized them. They were not bid to save their lives, and therefore they were made to run violently down a steep place into the sea, where they all perished to the number of about two thousand, Mark v. 13. Note, The possession which the devil gets is for destruction. Thus the devil hurries people to sin, hurries them to that which they have resolved against, and which they know will be shame and grief to them; with what a force doth the evil spirit work in the children of disobedience, when by so many foolish and hurtful lusts they are brought to act in direct contradiction, not only to religion but to right reason, and their interests in this world. Thus likewise he

hurries them to ruin, for he is Apollyon and Abaddon, the great destroyer. By his lusts which men do they are drowned in destruction and perdition. This is Satan's will to scallow up and to devour: miserable then is the condition of those that are led captive by him at his will. They are hurried into a worse lake than this, a lake that burns with fire and brimstone.

3. Observe, What effect this had upon the owners. The report of it was soon brought them by the swine-herds, who seemed to be more concerned for the loss of the swine than any thing else, for they went not to tell what was befallen to the possessed of the devils, till the swine were lost, ver. 33. Christ went not into the city, but the news of his being there did, by which he was willing to feel how their pulse beat, and what influence it had upon them, and then act accordingly.

Now, 1. Their curiosity brought them out to see Jesus. The whole city came out to meet him, that they might be able to say they had seen a man who did such wonderful works. Thus many go out in profession to meet Christ for company, that have no real affection for him, nor desire to know him.

2. Their covetousness made them willing to be rid of him. Instead of inviting him into their city, or bringing their sick to him to be healed, they desired him to depart out of their coasts, as if they had taken the devils words out of their mouths, What have we to do with thee, Jesus, thou Son of God? And now the devils had what they aimed at in drowning the swine; they did it, and then made the people believe Christ had done it, and so prejudiced them against him. He seduced our first parents by possessing them with hard thoughts of God, and kept the Gadarenes from Christ, by suggesting that he came into their country to destroy their cattle, and that he would do more hurt than good; for though he had cured two men, yet he had drowned two thousand swine. Thus the devil sows tares in God's field, doth mischief in the Christian church, and then lays the blame upon Christianity, and incenseth men against that. They besought him that he would depart, lest like Moses in Egypt he should proceed to some other plague. Note, There are a great many who prefer their swine before their Saviour, and so come short of Christ and salvation by him. They desire Christ to depart out of their hearts, and will not suffer his word to have a place in them, because he and his word will be the destruction of their brutish lusts, those swine which they give up themselves to the feeding of. And justly will Christ forsake those that thus are weary of him, and say to them hereafter, Depart ye cursed, who now say to the Almighty, Depart from us.

CHAP. IX.

We have in this chapter remarkable instances of the power and pity of the Lord Jesus, sufficient to convince us that he is both able to save to the uttermost all that come to God by him, and as willing as is able. His power and pity appear here in the good offices he did. (1.) To the bodies of people, in curing the palsy, ver. 2—8. Raising to life the ruler's daughter, and healing the bloody issue, ver. 18—26. Giving sight to two blind men, ver. 27—31. Casting the devil out of one possessed, ver. 32—34. and healing all manner of sickness, ver. 35. (2.) To the souls of people. In forgiving sins, ver. 2. Calling Matthew, and conversing freely with publicans and sinners, ver. 9—13. Considering the frame of his disciples, with reference to the duty of fasting, ver. 14—17. Preaching the gospel, and in compassion to the multitude providing preachers for them, ver. 35—38. Thus did he prove himself to be, as undoubtedly he is the skilful faithful physician both of soul and body, that hath sufficient remedies for all the maladies of both; for which we must therefore apply ourselves to him, and glorify him both with our bodies, and with our spirits, which are his, in return to him for his kindness to both.

1. AND he entered into a ship, and passed over, and came into his own city. 2. And, behold, they brought to him a man sick of the palsy, lying on a bed: and Jesus seeing their faith, said unto the sick of the palsy; Son, be of good cheer; thy sins be forgiven thee. 3. And, behold, certain of the Scribes said within themselves, This man blasphemeth. 4. And Jesus knowing their thoughts, said, Wherefore think ye evil in your hearts? 5. For whether is easier to say, Thy sins be forgiven thee? Or to say, Arise, and walk? 6. But that we may know that the Son of man hath power on earth to forgive sins, (then saith he to the sick of the palsy) Arise, take up thy bed, and go unto thine house. 7. And he arose, and departed to his house. 8. But when the multitude saw it, they marvelled, and glorified God, which had given such power unto men.

The first words of this chapter oblige us to look back to the close of that foregoing, where we find the Gadarenes so resenting the loss of their swine, that they were sick of Christ's company, and besought him to depart out of their coasts: Now here it follows, he entered into a ship, and passed over. They bid him begone, and he took them at their word, and we never read that he came into their coasts again. Now here observe, 1. His justice that he left them. Note, Christ will not tarry long there where he is not welcome. In righteous judgment he forsakes those places and persons that are weary of him, but abides with those that covet and court his stay. If the unbeliever will depart from Christ, let him depart, it is at his peril, 1 Cor. vii. 15. 2. His patience, that he did not leave some destroying judgment behind him to punish them as they deserved for their contempt and contumacy. How easily, how justly might he have sent them after their swine, who were already so much under the devil's power. The provocation indeed was very great, but he put it up and passed it by, and without any angry resentments or upbraidings, he entered into a ship and passed over. This was the day of his patience; he came not to destroy men's lives, but to save them; not to kill, but to cure. Spiritual judgments agree more with the constitution of gospel times; yet some observe, that in those bloody wars which the Romans made upon the Jews, which began not many years after this, they first besieged the town of Gadara, where these Gadarenes dwelt. Note, Those that drive Christ from them, draw all miseries upon them. Woe unto us, if God depart from us.

He came into his own city, that was Capernaum, the principal place of his residence at present, Mark. ii. 1. and therefore called his own city. He had himself testified that a prophet is least honoured in his own country and city, yet thither he came; for he sought not his own honour, but being in a state of humiliation, he was content to be despised of the people. At Capernaum all the passages of story recorded in this chapter happened, and are therefore put together here, though in the harmony of the evangelists other events intervened. When the Gadarenes desired Christ to depart, they of Capernaum received him. If Christ be affronted by some, there are others in whom he will be glorious; if one will not, another will.

1. The faith of his friends in bringing him to Christ. His distemper was such, that he could not come to Christ himself, but he was carried. Note, Even the halt and the lame may be brought to Christ, and they shall not be rejected of him. If we do as well as we can he will accept of us. Christ had an eye to their faith. Little children cannot go to Christ themselves, but he will have an eye to the faith of those that bring them, and it shall not be in vain. Jesus saw their faith, his own as well as theirs that brought him; which Jesus saw the habit of, though his distemper perhaps impaired his intellectuals, and obstructed the actings of it. Now their faith was, 1. A strong faith; they firmly believed that Jesus Christ both could and would heal him, else they would not have brought the sick man to him publicly, and through so much difficulty. 2. A humble faith; though the sick man was unable to stir a step, they would not ask Christ to make him a visit, but bring him to attend on Christ. It is fitter we should wait on Christ than he on us. 3. An active faith; in the belief of Christ's power and goodness, they brought the sick man to him lying on a bed, which could not be done without a deal of pains. Note, A strong faith sticks at nothing in pressing after Christ.

The favour of Christ in what he said to him. Son, be of good cheer, thy sins be forgiven thee. This was a sovereign cordial to a sick man, and which was enough to make all his bed in his sickness; and to make it easy to him. We read not of any thing said to Christ; probably the poor sick man could not speak for himself, and they that brought him chose rather to speak by actions than words; they sent him before Christ, that was enough. Note, It is not in vain to present ourselves and our friends to Christ as the object of his pity. Misery cries as well as sin, and mercy is no less quick of hearing than justice. Here is in what Christ said, 1. A kind compellation; Son. Note, Exhortations and consolations to the afflicted speak to them as to sons, for afflictions are fatherly discipline, Heb. xii. 5. 2. A gracious encouragement. Be of good cheer. Have a good heart on it: cheer up thy spirits. Probably the poor man when let down among them all in his bed was dashed out of countenance, was afraid of a rebuke, for being brought in so rudely: But Christ doth not stand upon ceremony, bids him be of good cheer: all would be well, he should not be laid before Christ in vain. Christ bids him be of good cheer, and then cures him. He would have those to whom he deals his gifts to be cheerful in seeking to him, and in trusting to him; to be of good courage. 3. A good reason for that encouragement. Thy sins be forgiven thee. Now this may be considered, 1. As an introduction to the cure of his bodily distemper, thy sins are pardoned, and therefore thou shalt be healed. Note, As sin is the cause of sickness, so the remission of sin is the comfort of recovery from sickness; not but that sin may be pardoned, and yet the sickness not removed; not but that the sickness may be removed, and yet the sin not pardoned: But if we have the comfort of our reconciliation to God, with the comfort of our recovery from sickness; this makes it a mercy indeed to us, as to Hezekiah, Isa. xxxviii. 17. Or, 2. As a reason of the command to be of good cheer, whether he were cured of his disease or no. Though I should not heal thee, wilt thou say thou hast not sought in vain, if I assure thee, that thy sins are pardoned: and look upon that as a sufficient ground of comfort though thou shouldst continue sick of the palsy. Note, Those who through grace have some evidence of the forgiveness of their sins have reason to be of good cheer, whatever outward troubles or afflictions they are under; see Isa. xxxiii. 24.

3. The cavil of the Scribes at that which Christ said, ver. 3. They said within themselves in their hearts, among themselves, in their secret whisperings, this man blasphemeth. See how the greatest instance of heaven's power and grace is branded with the blackest note of hell's enmity; Christ's pardoning sin is termed blasphemy, nor had it been less if he had not had commission from God for it. Those therefore are guilty of blasphemy that have no such commission, and yet pretend to pardon sin.

1. The conviction which Christ gave them of the unreasonableness of this cavil before he proceeded.

1. He charged them with it. Though they did but say it within themselves, he knew their thoughts. Note, Our Lord Jesus has the perfect knowledge of all that we say within ourselves. Thoughts are secret and sudden, yet naked and open before Christ the eternal Word, Heb. iv. 12, 13. and he understands them afar off, Psalm cxxxix. 2. He could say to them which no mere man could, wherefore think ye evil in your hearts? Note, There is a great deal of evil in sinful thoughts, which is very offensive to the Lord Jesus. He being the sovereign of the heart, sinful thoughts invade his right and disturb his possession, therefore he takes notice of them, and is much displeased with them. In them lies the root of bitterness, Gen. vi. 5. The sins that begin and end in the heart and go no further, are as dangerous as any other.

1. How he asserts his authority in the kingdom of grace. He undertakes to make out that the Son of man the mediator has power on earth to forgive sins; for therefore the Father has committed all judgment to the Son, and has given him this authority, because he is the Son of man, John. v. 22—27. If he have power to give eternal life, as he certainly has, John. xvii. 2. he must have power to forgive sin, for guilt is a bar that must be removed, or we can never get to heaven. What an encouragement is this to poor sinners to repent, that the power of pardoning sin is put into the hands of the Son of man, who is bone of our bone! And if he had this power on earth, much more now he is exalted to the Father's right-hand to give repentance and remission of sins, and so to be both a Prince and a Saviour, Acts v. 31.

2. How he proves it by his power in the kingdom of nature, his power to cure diseases. Is it not as easy to say, thy sins be forgiven thee, as to say, arise and walk? He that can cure the disease whether declaratively as a prophet, or authoritatively as God, can in like manner forgive the sin. Now, 1. This is a general argument to prove that Christ had a divine mission. His miracles, especially his miraculous cures confirm what he said of himself, that he was the Son of God, the power that appeared in his cures proved him sent of God, and the pity that appeared in them proved him sent of God to heal and save. The God of truth would not set his seal to a lie. 2. It had a particular cogency in this case. The palsy was but a symptom of the disease of sin; now he made it to appear that he could effectually cure the original disease by the immediate removal of that symptom; so close a connexion was there between the sin and the sickness. He that had power to remove the punishment, no doubt had power to remit the sin. The Scribes stood much upon a legal righteousness, and placed their confidence in that, and made no great matter of the forgiveness of

of sin, the doctrine of which Christ hereby designed to put honour upon and to shew that his great errand into the world was to save his people from their sins.

The immediate cure of the sick man. Christ turned from disputing with them, and spake healing to him. The most necessary arguments must not divert us from doing the good that our hand finds to do. He saith to the sick of the palsy, Arise, take up thy bed, and go to thine house; and a healing quickening strengthening power went along with this word, ver. 7. He arose, and departed to his house. Now, 1. Christ bid him take up his bed to shew that he was perfectly cured, and that not only he had no more occasion to be carried upon his bed, but that he had strength to carry it. 2. He sent him to his house to be a blessing to his family, where he had been so long a burden; and did not take him along with him for a shew, which those would do in such a case who seek the honour that cometh from men.

6. The impression which this made upon the multitude, ver. 8. They marvelled and glorified God. Note, All our wonder should help to enlarge our hearts in glorifying God, who alone doth marvellous things. They glorified God for what he had done for this poor man. Note, Others mercies should be our praises, and we should give him thanks for them, for we are members one of another. Though few of this multitude were so convinced as to be brought to believe in Christ and to follow him, yet they admired him, not as God, or the Son of God, but as a man to whom God had given such power. Note, God must be glorified in all the power that is given to men to do good. For all power is originally his; it is in him as the fountain, in men as the cisterns.

9. ¶ And as Jesus passed forth from thence, he saw a man named Matthew, sitting at the receipt of custom: And he saith unto him, Follow me. And he arose, and followed him. 10. ¶ And it came to pass, as Jesus sat at meat in the house, behold many publicans and sinners came and sat down with him and his disciples. 11. And when the Pharisees saw it, they said unto his disciples, Why eateth your Master with publicans and sinners? 12. But when Jesus heard that, he said unto them, They that be whole need not a physician, but they that are sick. 13. But go ye and learn what that meaneth, I will have mercy, and not sacrifice: For I am not come to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance.

In these verses we have an account of the grace and favour of Christ to poor publicans, particularly to Matthew. What he did to the bodies of the people was to make way for a kind design he had upon their souls. Now observe, here,

1. The call of Matthew, the penman of this gospel. Mark and Luke call him Levi; it was ordinary for the same person to have two names; perhaps Matthew was the name he was most known by as a publican, and therefore in his humility he called himself by that name rather than by the more honourable name of Levi. Some think Christ gave him the name of Matthew, when he called him to be an apostle; as Simon, he surnamed Peter. Matthew signifies the gift of God. Ministers are God's gifts to the church, their ministry and their ability for it are God's gifts to them. Now observe,

1. The posture that Christ's call found Matthew in. He was sitting in the receipt of custom, for he was a publican, Luke v. 27. He was a custom-house officer at the port of Capernaum, or an exciseman, or collector of the land-tax. Now, 1. He was in his calling, as the rest of them whom Christ called, chap. iv. 18. Note, As Satan chooseth to come with his temptations to those that are idle, so Christ chooseth to come with his calls to those that are employed. But, 2. It was a calling of ill fame among serious people; because it was attended with so much corruption and temptation, and there was so few in that business that were honest men. Matthew doth himself own that he was before his conversion, as doth St. Paul, 1 Tim. i. 13. that the grace of Christ in calling him might be the more magnified, and to shew that God hath his remnant among all sorts of people. None can justify themselves in their unbelief by their calling in the world; for there is no sinful calling but some have been saved out of it, and no lawful calling but some have been saved in it.

2. The preventing power of this call. We find not that Matthew looked after Christ, or had any inclination to follow him, though some of his kindred were already disciples of Christ, but Christ prevented him with the blessings of his goodness. He is found of those that seek him not. Christ spoke first; we have not chosen him but he has chosen us. He said Follow me; and the same divine almighty power went along with this word to convert Matthew which went along with that word, ver. 6. Arise, and walk, to cure the man sick of the palsy. Note, A saving change is wrought in the soul by Christ as the author, and his word as the means. His gospel is the power of God unto salvation, Rom. i. 16. The call was effectual, for he came at the call; he arose and followed him immediately; neither denied nor deferred his obedience. The power of divine grace soon answers and overcomes all objections. Neither his commission for his place nor his gains by it could detain him when Christ called him. He conferred not with flesh and blood, Gal. i. 15, 16. He quitted his post, and his hopes of preferment in that way; and though we find the disciples that were fishers occasionally, fishing again afterwards, we never find Matthew at the receipt of custom again.

3. Christ's converse with publicans and sinners upon this occasion; Christ called Matthew to introduce himself into an acquaintance with the people of that profession. Jesus sat at meat in the house, ver. 10. The other evangelists tell us that Matthew made a great feast, (which the poor fishermen when they were called were not able to do). But when he comes to speak of this himself, he neither tells us that it was his own house, nor that it was a feast, but only that he sat at meat in the house; preserving the remembrance of Christ's favour to the publicans, rather than of the respect he had paid to Christ. Note, It well becomes us to speak sparingly of our own good deeds.

Now observe, 1. When Matthew invited Christ, he invited his disciples to come along with him. Note, Those that welcome Christ must welcome all that are his for his sake, and let them have a room in their hearts. 2. He invited many publicans and sinners to meet him. This was the chief thing Matthew aimed at in this treaty, that he might have an opportunity of bringing his old comrades acquainted with Christ. He knew by experience what their temptations were, and pitied them; knew by experience what the grace of Christ could do, and would not despair concerning them. Note, Those who are effectually brought to Christ themselves, cannot but be desirous that others also may be brought to him, and ambitious of contributing something towards it. True grace will not contentedly eat its morsels alone, but will invite others. When by the conversion of Matthew the gang was broke, presently his house swarms with publicans, and it shall go hard but some of them shall follow him as he followed Christ. Thus did Andrew and Philip, John i. 41—45.—iv. 29. See Judges xiv. 9.

3. The displeasure of the Pharisees at this, ver. 11. They cavilled at it; why eateth your master with publicans and sinners? Here observe, 1. That Christ was quarrelled with. It was not the least of his sufferings that he endured the contradiction of sinners against himself. None was more quarrelled with by men, than he that came to take up the great quarrel between God and man. Thus he denied himself the honour due to an incarnate deity, which was to be justified in what he spake, and to have all he said readily subscribed to; for though he never spoke, or did any thing amiss, every thing he said and did was found fault with. Thus he taught us to expect and prepare for reproach, and bear it patiently. 2. Those that quarrelled with him were the Pharisees; a proud generation of men, conceited of themselves, and censorious of others; of the same temper with those in the prophet's time, that said, Stand by thyself, come not near me, I am holier than thou; very strict in avoiding sinners, but not in avoiding sin; none greater zealots than they for the form of godliness, nor greater enemies to the power of it. They were for keeping up the traditions of the elders to a nicety, and so propagating the same spirit that they themselves were governed by. 3. They brought their cavil, not to Christ himself, they had not the courage to face him with it, but to his disciples. The disciples were in the same company, but the quarrel is with the master: for they would not have done it, if he had not; and they thought it worse in him that was a prophet, than in them; his dignity they thought should set him at a greater distance from such company than others. Being offended at the master, they quarrel with the disciples. Note, It concerns Christians to be able to vindicate and justify Christ and his doctrines and laws, and to be ready always to give an answer to those that ask them the reason of the hope that is in them, 1 Peter iii. 15. While he is an advocate for us in heaven, let us be advocates for him on earth, and make his reproach our own. 4. The quarrel was his eating with publicans and sinners: to be intimate with wicked people is against the law of God, Psal. cxix. 115.—i. 1. and perhaps by accusing Christ of this to his disciples they hoped to tempt them from him, to put them out of conceit with him, and so to bring them over to themselves to be their disciples, who kept better company; for they compassed sea and land to make proselytes. To be intimate with publicans, was against the tradition of the elders, and therefore they looked upon it as a heinous thing. They were angry with Christ for this, 1. Because they wished ill to him and sought occasion to misrepresent him. Note, It is an easy and very common thing to put the worst constructions upon the best words and actions. 2. Because they wished no good to publicans and sinners, but envied Christ's favour to them, and were grieved to see them brought to repentance. Note, It may justly be suspected those that have not the grace of God themselves, who grudge others a share in that grace, who are not pleased with it.

4. The defence that Christ made for himself and his disciples, in justification of their converse with publicans and sinners. The disciples, it should seem, being yet weak, were to seek for an answer to the Pharisees cavil, and therefore bring it to Christ, and he heard it, ver. 12. or perhaps overheard them whispering it to his disciples; let him alone to vindicate himself and to plead his own cause, to answer for himself and for us too. Two things he urges in his defence.

1. The necessity and exigence of the publican's case, which called aloud for his help, and therefore justified him in conversing with them for their help. It was the extreme necessity of poor lost sinners that brought Christ from the pure regions above to these impure ones, and the same was it which brought him into this company which was thought impure. Now, 1. He proves the necessity of the publican's case. They that are whole need not a physician, but they that are sick. The publicans are sick, and they need one to help and heal them, which the Pharisees think they do not. Note, Sin is the sickness of the soul; sinners are spiritually sick. Original corruptions are the diseases of the soul, actual transgressions are its wounds, or the eruptions of the disease. It is deforming, weakening, disquieting, wasting, killing, but, blessed be God, not incurable. 2. Jesus Christ is the great physician of souls. His curing of bodily diseases signified this, that he arose with healing under his wings. He is a skillful, faithful, compassionate physician, and it is his office and business to heal the sick. Wise and good men should be as physicians to all about them, Christ was so, Hunc affectum versus omnes habet sapiens, quem versus agros suos medicus. Seneca de Const. 3. Sin-sick souls have need of this physician, for this disease is dangerous, nature will not help itself, no man can help us; such need have we of Christ, that we are undone, eternally undone without him. Sensible sinners see their need, and apply themselves to him accordingly. 4. There are multitudes who conceit themselves to be sound and whole, think they have no need of Christ, but that they can shift for themselves well enough without him, as Laodicea, Rev. iii. 17. Thus the Pharisees desired not the knowledge of Christ's word and ways, not because they had no need of him, but because they thought they had none. See John ix. 40, 41.

2. He proves that their necessity did sufficiently justify his conduct in conversing familiarly with them, and he ought not to be blamed for it; for that necessity made it an act of charity, which ought always to be preferred before the formalities of a religious profession; in which beneficence and munificence are far better than magnificence, as much as substance is than show or shadow. Those duties which are of moral and natural obligation, are to take place even of those divine laws which are positive and ritual, much more of those impositions of men and traditions of the elders, which make God's law stricter than he has made it. This he proves, ver. 13. by a passage quoted out of, Hos. vi. 6. I will have mercy, and not sacrifice. That morose separation from the society of publicans, which the Pharisees enjoined, was less than sacrifice; but Christ's conversing with them was more than an act of common mercy, and therefore to be preferred before it. If to do well ourselves is better than sacrifice, as Samuel shews, 1 Sam. xv. 22, 23. much more to do good to others. Christ's conversing with sinners is here called mercy; to promote the conversion of souls is the greatest act of mercy imaginable, it is saving a soul from death, James v. 20. Observe how Christ quotes this, Go ye and learn what that meaneth. Note, It is not enough to be acquainted with the letter of the scripture, but we must learn to understand the meaning of it. And those have best learned the meaning of the scripture, that have learned how to apply it as a reproof to their own faults, and a rule to their own practice. This scripture which Christ quoted, served not only to vindicate him, but, 1. To shew wherein true religion doth consist, not in external observances, not in meats and drinks and shews of sanctity, not in little particular opinions and doubtful disputations, but in doing all the good we can to the bodies and souls of others, in righteousness and peace, in visiting the fatherless and widows. 2. To condemn the Pharisaical hypocrisy of those, who place religion in rituals more than in morals, Matt. xxiii. 23. They espouse those forms of godliness which may be made consistent with, and perhaps subservient to their pride, covetousness, ambition and malice, while they hate that power of it which is mortifying to those lusts.

2. He urged the nature and end of his own commission. He must keep to his orders, and prosecute that for which he was appointed to be the great teacher; now, saith he, I am not come to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance, and therefore must converse with publicans. Observe, 1. What his errand was, it was to call to repentance. This was his first text, Matt. iv. 17. and it was the tendency of all his sermons. Note. The gospel call is a call to repentance, a call to us to change our mind and to change our way. 2. With whom his errand lay, not with the righteous, but with sinners. This is, 1. If the children of men had not been sinners, there had been no occasion for Christ's coming among them. He is the Saviour not of man as man, but of man as fallen. Had the first Adam continued in his original righteousness, we had not needed a second Adam. 2. Therefore his greatest business lies with the greatest sinners; the more dangerous the sick man's case is, the more occasion there is for the physician's help. Christ came into the world to save sinners, but especially the chief, 1 Tim. i. 15. to call not those so much, who, though sinners, are comparatively righteous, but the worst of sinners. 3. The more sensible any sinners are of their sinfulness, the more welcome will Christ and his gospel be to them; and every one chooseth to go where their company is desired, not to those who would rather have their room. Christ came not with an expectation of speeding among the righteous, i. e. those who conceit themselves so, and therefore will sooner be sick of their Saviour than sick of their sins, but among the convinced humble sinners, to them Christ will come, for with them he will be welcome.

14. ¶ Then came to him the disciples of John, saying, Why do we and the Pharisees fast often, but thy disciples fast not? 15. And Jesus said unto them, can the children of the bride-chamber mourn, as long as the bridegroom is with them? But the day will come, when the bridegroom shall be taken from them, and then shall they fast. 16. No man putteth a piece of new cloth unto an old garment: For that which is put in to fill it up, taketh from the garment, and the rent is made worse. 17. Neither do men put new wine into old bottles: Else the bottles break, and the wine runneth, and the bottles perish: But they put new wine into new bottles, and both are preserved.

The quarrels that were picked with Christ and his disciples gave occasion to some of the most profitable of his discourses; thus are the interests of truth often served, even by the opposition it meets with from gainsayers, and thus the wisdom of Christ brings good out of evil. This is the third instance of it in this chapter; his discourse of his power to forgive sin, and his readiness to receive sinners, were occasioned by the cavils of the Scribes and Pharisees; so here from a reflection upon the conduct of his family, arose a discourse concerning his tenderness of it. Observe,

1. The objection which the disciples of John made against Christ's disciples for not fasting so often as they did; which they are charged with as another instance of the looseness of their profession, besides that of eating with publicans and sinners, and it is therefore suggested to them that they should change that profession for another more strict. It appears by the other evangelists, Mark ii. 18. and Luke v. 33. that the disciples of the Pharisees joined with them, and we have reason to suspect, set them on, making use of John's disciples as their spokesmen, because they being more in favour with Christ, and nearer allied to his disciples, could do it more plausibly. Note, It is no new thing for bad men to set good men together by the ears; if the people of God differ in their sentiments, designing men will take that occasion to sow discord, and to incense them one against another, and alienate them one from another, and so to make an easy prey of them. If the disciples of John and of Jesus clash, we have reason to suspect the Pharisees have been at work under-hand blowing the coals. Now the complaint is, Why do we and the Pharisees fast often, but thy disciples fast not? It is pity the duties of religion, which ought to be the confirmpations of holy love, should be made the occasions of strife and contention; but they often are so, as here; where we may observe,

1. How they boasted of their own fasting. We and the Pharisees fast often. Fasting has in all ages of the church been consecrated upon special occasions to the service of religion; the Pharisees were much in it, many of them kept two fast-days in a week, and yet the generality of them were hypocrites and ill men. Note, False and formal professors often excel others in outward acts of devotion, even of mortification. The disciples of John too fasted often, partly in compliance with their Master's practice, for he came neither eating nor drinking, Mat. xi. 18. And people are apt to imitate their leaders, though not always from the same inward principle; partly in compliance with their Master's doctrine of repentance. Note, The severer part of religion is often most minded by those that are yet under the discipline of the spirit, as a spirit of bondage, whereas though these are good in their place, we must pass through them to that life of delight in God and dependence on him, which these are in order to. Now they come to Christ to tell him that they fasted often, at least they thought it often. Note, Most men will proclaim every one his own goodness, Prov. xx. 6. There is a proneness in professors to brag of their own performances in religion, especially if there be any thing extraordinary in them; nay, and not only to boast of them before men, but to plead them before God, and confide in them as a righteousness.

2. How they blamed Christ's disciples for not fasting so often as they did. Thy disciples fast not. They could not but know that Christ had instructed his disciples to keep their fasts private, and to manage themselves so as that they might not appear unto men to fast; and therefore it was very uncharitable in them to conclude they did not fast, because they did not proclaim their fasts. Note, We must not judge of peoples religion by that which falls under the eye and observation of the world. But suppose it was so, that Christ's disciples did not fast so often or so long as they did; why truly they would have therefore have it thought that they had more religion in them than Christ's disciples had. Note, It is common for vain professors to make themselves a standard in religion, by which to try and measure persons and things, as if all who differed from them were so far in the wrong; as if all that did less than they did too little, and all that did more than they did too much; which is a plain evidence of their want of humility and charity.

3. How they brought this complaint to Christ. Note, If Christ's disciples either by omission or commission give offence, Christ himself will be sure to hear of it, and be reflected upon for it. O Jesus, are these thy Christians? Therefore as we tender the honour of Christ, we are concerned to carry ourselves well. Observe, The quarrel with Christ was brought to the disciples, ver. 11. the quarrel with the disciples was brought to Christ, ver. 14. this is the way of sowing discord and killing love, to set people against ministers, ministers against people, and one friend against another.

2. The apology which Christ made for his disciples in this matter. Christ might have upbraided John's disciples with the former part of their question, Why do ye fast often? Nay, you know best why you do it; but the truth is, many abound in external instances on devotion, that scarce do themselves know why and wherefore. But he only vindicates the practice of his disciples, when they had nothing to say for themselves, he had something ready to say for them. Note, As it is wisdom's honour to be justified of all her children, so it is her children's happiness to be all justified of wisdom. What we do according to the precept and pattern of Christ, he will be sure to bear us out in, and we may with confidence leave it to him to clear up our integrity.

But thou shalt answer, Lord, for me: Herbert.

Two things Christ pleads in defence of their not fasting.

1. That it was not a season proper for that duty, ver. 15. Can the children of the bride-chamber mourn as long as the bridegroom is with them? Observe, Christ's answer is so framed, as that it might sufficiently justify the practice of his own disciples, and yet not condemn the institution of John or the practice of his disciples. When the Pharisees fomented this dispute, they hoped Christ would cast blame either on his own disciples or on John's, but he did neither. Note, When at any time we are unjustly censured, our care must be only to clear ourselves, not to recriminate or throw dirt upon others; and such a variety may there be of circumstances, as may justify us in our practice, without condemning those that practise otherwise.

Now his argument is taken from the common usage of joy and rejoicing during the continuance of marriage solemnities; when all instances of melancholy and sorrow are looked upon as improper and absurd, as it was at Samson's wedding, Judges xiv. 17. Now, 1. The disciples of Christ were the children of the bride-chamber, invited to the wedding-feast and welcome there, the disciples of the Pharisees were not so, but children of the bond-woman, Gal. iv. 25—31. continuing under a dispensation of darkness and terror. Note, The faithful followers of Christ that have the Spirit of adoption have a continual feast, while they that have the Spirit of bondage and fear cannot rejoice for joy, as other people, Hos. ix. 1. 2. The disciples of Christ had the bride-groom with them, which the disciples of John had not; their master was now cast into prison, and lay there in continual danger of his life, and therefore it was seasonable for them to fast often. Such a day would come upon the disciples of Christ, when the bridegroom should be taken from them, when they should be deprived of his bodily presence, and then shall they fast. The thoughts of parting grieved them when he was going, John xvi. 6. Tribulation and affliction befel them when he was gone, and gave them occasion of mourning and praying, that is, of religious fasting. Note, 1. Jesus Christ is the bridegroom of his church, and his disciples are the children of the bride-chamber. Christ speaks of himself to John's disciples under this similitude, because it was the same that John had used, when he called himself a friend of the bridegroom, John iii. 29. And if they would by this hint call to mind what their Master then said they would answer themselves. 2. The condition of those that are the children of the bride-chamber is liable to many changes and alterations in this world, they sing of mercy and judgment. 3. It is merry or melancholy with the children of the bride-chamber, according as they have more or less of the bride-groom's presence. When he is with them, the candle of God shines upon their head, and all is well; but when he is withdrawn, though but for a small moment, they are troubled, and walk heavily; the presence and nearness of the sun makes day and summer, his absence and distance night and winter. Christ is all in all to the church's joy. 4. Every duty is to be done in its proper season: See Eccles. vii. 14. James v. 13. There is a time to mourn and a time to laugh, to each of which we should accommodate ourselves, and bring forth fruit in due season. In fasts, regard is to be had to the methods of God's grace in us, when he mourns to us, we must lament; and also in the dispensations of his providence concerning us; there are times when the Lord God calls to weeping and mourning; regard is likewise to be had to any special work before us, Matt. xvii. 21. Acts xiii. 2.

2. They had not strength sufficient for that duty. This is set forth in two similitudes, one of putting new cloth into an old garment, which doth but pull the old to pieces, ver. 16. the other of putting new wine into old bottles, which doth but burst the bottles, ver. 17. Christ's disciples were not able to bear these severe exercises so well as those of John and of the Pharisees, which the learned Dr. Whitby gives this reason for: There were among the Jews not only sects of the Pharisees and Essenes, who led an austere life, but also schools of the prophets, who frequently lived in mountains and deserts, and were many of them Nazarites; they had also private academies to train men up in a strict discipline; and possibly from these many of John's disciples might come, and many of the Pharisees; whereas Christ's disciples being taken immediately from their callings had not been used to such religious austerities, and were unfit for them, and would by them be rather disheartened for their other work. Note, 1. Some duties of religion are harder and more difficult than others, like new cloth and new wine, which require most intenseness of mind, and are most displeasing to flesh and blood; such is religious fasting and the duties that attend it. 2. The best of Christ's disciples pass through a state of infancy; all the trees in Christ's gardens are not of a growth, nor all his scholars in the same form; there are babes in Christ and grown men. 3. In the enjoining of religious exercises the weakness and infirmity of young Christians ought to be considered; as the food provided for them must be such as is proper for their age, (see 1 Cor. iii. 2. Heb. v. 12.) so must the work be that is cut out for them. Christ would not speak to his disciples that which they could not then bear, John xvi. 12. Young beginners in religion must not presently be put upon the hardest duties at first, lest they be discouraged. Such as was God's care of his Israel, when he brought them out of Egypt, not to lead them by the way of the Philistines, Exod. xiii. 17, 18. and such was as Jacob's care of his children and cattle, not to overdrive them, Gen. xxxiii. 13. such is Christ's care of the little ones of his family and the lambs of his flock, he gently leads them: For want of this care many times the bottles break and the wine is spilled, the profession of many miscarries and comes to nothing, through indiscretion at first. Note, There may be over-doing even in well-doing, a being righteous over-much, and such an over-doing as may prove an undoing through the subtilty of Satan.

18. ¶ While he spake these things unto them, behold, there came a certain ruler, and worshipped him, saying, My daughter is even now dead: but come and lay thy hand upon her, and she shall live. 19. And Jesus arose and followed him, and so did his disciples. 20. ¶ (And behold, a woman which was diseased with an issue of blood twelve years, came behind him, and touched of sin, the doctrine of which Christ hereby designed to put honour upon and to shew that his great errand into the world was to save his people from their sins.

The immediate cure of the sick man. Christ turned from disputing with them, and spake healing to him. The most necessary arguments must not divert us from doing the good that our hand finds to do. He saith to the sick of the palsy, Arise, take up thy bed, and go to thine house; and a healing quickening strengthening power went along with this word, ver. 7. He arose, and departed to his house. Now, 1. Christ bid him take up his bed to shew that he was perfectly cured, and that not only he had no more occasion to be carried upon his bed, but that he had strength to carry it. 2. He sent him to his house to be a blessing to his family, where he had been so long a burden; and did not take him along with him for a shew, which those would do in such a case who seek the honour that cometh from men.

6. The impression which this made upon the multitude, ver. 8. They marvelled and glorified God. Note, All our wonder should help to enlarge our hearts in glorifying God, who alone doth marvellous things. They glorified God for what he had done for this poor man. Note, Others mercies should be our praises, and we should give him thanks for them, for we are members one of another. Though few of this multitude were so convinced as to be brought to believe in Christ and to follow him, yet they admired him, not as God, or the Son of God, but as a man to whom God had given such power. Note, God must be glorified in all the power that is given to men to do good. For all power is originally his; it is in him as the fountain, in men as the cisterns.

9. ¶ And as Jesus passed forth from thence, he saw a man named Matthew, sitting at the receipt of custom: And he saith unto him, Follow me. And he arose, and followed him. 10. ¶ And it came to pass, as Jesus sat at meat in the house, behold many publicans and sinners came and sat down with him and his disciples. 11. And when the Pharisees saw it, they said unto his disciples, Why eateth your Master with publicans and sinners? 12. But when Jesus heard that, he said unto them, They that be whole need not a physician, but they that are sick. 13. But go ye and learn what that meaneth, I will have mercy, and not sacrifice: For I am not come to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance.

In these verses we have an account of the grace and favour of Christ to poor publicans, particularly to Matthew. What he did to the bodies of the people was to make way for a kind design he had upon their souls. Now observe, here,

1. The call of Matthew, the penman of this gospel. Mark and Luke call him Levi; it was ordinary for the same person to have two names; perhaps Matthew was the name he was most known by as a publican, and therefore in his humility he called himself by that name rather than by the more honourable name of Levi. Some think Christ gave him the name of Matthew, when he called him to be an apostle; as Simon, he surnamed Peter. Matthew signifies the gift of God. Ministers are God's gifts to the church, their ministry and their ability for it are God's gifts to them. Now observe,

1. The posture that Christ's call found Matthew in. He was sitting in the receipt of custom, for he was a publican, Luke v. 27. He was a custom-house officer at the port of Capernaum, or an exciseman, or collector of the land-tax. Now, 1. He was in his calling, as the rest of them whom Christ called, chap. iv. 18. Note, As Satan chooseth to come with his temptations to those that are idle, so Christ chooseth to come with his calls to those that are employed. But, 2. It was a calling of ill fame among serious people; because it was attended with so much corruption and temptation, and there was so few in that business that were honest men. Matthew doth himself own that he was before his conversion, as doth St. Paul, 1 Tim. i. 13, that the grace of Christ in calling him might be the more magnified, and to shew that God hath his remnant among all sorts of people. None can justify themselves in their unbelief by their calling in the world; for their is no sinful calling but some have been saved out of it, and no lawful calling but some have been saved in it.

2. The preventing power of this call. We find not that Matthew looked after Christ, or had any inclination to follow him, though some of his kindred were already disciples of Christ, but Christ prevented him with the blessings of his goodness. He is found of those that seek him not. Christ spoke first; we have not chosen him but he has chosen us. He said Follow me; and the same divine almighty power went along with this word to convert Matthew which went along with that word, ver. 6. Arise, and walk, to cure the man sick of the palsy. Note, A saving change is wrought in the soul by Christ as the author, and his word as the means. His gospel is the power of God unto salvation, Rom. i. 16. The call was effectual, for he came at the call; he arose and followed him immediately; neither denied nor deferred his obedience. The power of divine grace soon answers and overcomes all objections. Neither his commission for his place nor his gains by it could detain him when Christ called him. He conferred not with flesh and blood, Gal. i. 15, 16. He quitted his post, and his hopes of preferment in that way; and though we find the disciples that were fishers occasionally, fishing again afterwards, we never find Matthew at the receipt of custom again.

3. Christ's converse with publicans and sinners upon this occasion; Christ called Matthew to introduce himself into an acquaintance with the people of that profession. Jesus sat at meat in the house, ver. 10. The other evangelists tell us that Matthew made a great feast, (which the poor fishermen when they were called were not able to do). But when he comes to speak of this himself, he neither tells us that it was his own house, nor that it was a feast, but only that he sat at meat in the house; preserving the remembrance of Christ's favour to the publicans, rather than of the respect he had paid to Christ. Note, It well becomes us to speak sparingly of our own good deeds.

Now observe, 1. When Matthew invited Christ, he invited his disciples to come along with him. Note, Those that welcome Christ must welcome all that are his for his sake, and let them have a room in their hearts. 2. He invited many publicans and sinners to meet him. This was the chief thing Matthew aimed at in this treaty, that he might have an opportunity of bringing his old comrades acquainted with Christ. He knew by experience what their temptations were, and pitied them; knew by experience what the grace of Christ could do, and would not despair concerning them. Note, Those who are effectually brought to Christ themselves, cannot but be desirous that others also may be brought to him, and ambitious of contributing something towards it. True grace will not contentedly eat its morsels alone, but will invite others. When by the conversion of Matthew the gang was broke, presently his loose swarms with publicans, and it shall go hard but some of them shall follow him as he followed Christ. Thus did Andrew and Philip, John i. 41—45. —iv. 29. See Judges xiv. 9.

3. The displeasure of the Pharisees at this, ver. 11. They cavilled at it; why eateth your master with publicans and sinners? Here observe, 1. That Christ was quarrelled with. It was not the least of his sufferings that he endured the contradiction of sinners against himself. None was more quarrelled with by men, than he that came to take up the great quarrel between God and man. Thus he denied himself the honour due to an incarnate deity, which was to be justified in what he spake, and to have all he said readily subscribed to; for though he never spoke, or did any thing amiss, every thing he said and did was found fault with. Thus he taught us to expect and prepare for reproach, and bear it patiently. 2. Those that quarrelled with him were the Pharisees; a proud generation of men, conceited of themselves, and censorious of others; of the same temper with those in the prophet's time, that said, Stand by thyself, come not near me, I am holier than thou; very strict in avoiding sinners, but not in avoiding sin; none greater zealots than they for the form of godliness, nor greater enemies to the power of it. They were for keeping up the traditions of the elders to a nicety, and so propagating the same spirit that they themselves were governed by. 3. They brought their cavil, not to Christ himself, they had not the courage to face him with it, but to his disciples. The disciples were in the same company, but the quarrel is with the master: for they would not have done it, if he had not; and they thought it worse in him that was a prophet, than in them; his dignity they thought should set him at a greater distance from such company than others. Being offended at the master, they quarrel with the disciples. Note, It concerns Christians to be able to vindicate and justify Christ and his doctrines and laws, and to be ready always to give an answer to those that ask them the reason of the hope that is in them, 1 Peter iii. 15. While he is an advocate for us in heaven, let us be advocates for him on earth, and make his reproach our own. 4. The quarrel was his eating with publicans and sinners: to be intimate with wicked people is against the law of God, Psalm cxix. 115. —i. 1, and perhaps by accusing Christ of this to his disciples they hoped to tempt them from him, to put them out of conceit with him, and so to bring them over to themselves to be their disciples, who kept better company; for they compassed sea and land to make proselytes. To be intimate with publicans, was against the tradition of the elders, and therefore they looked upon it as a heinous thing. They were angry with Christ for this, 1. Because they wished ill to him and sought occasion to misrepresent him. Note, It is an easy and very common thing to put the worst constructions upon the best words and actions. 2. Because they wished no good to publicans and sinners, but envied Christ's favour to them, and were grieved to see them brought to repentance. Note, It may justly be suspected those that have not the grace of God themselves, who grudge others a share in that grace, who are not pleased with it.

4. The defence that Christ made for himself and his disciples, in justification of their converse with publicans and sinners. The disciples, it should seem, being yet weak, were to seek for an answer to the Pharisees' cavil, and therefore bring it to Christ, and he heard it, ver. 12. or perhaps overheard them whispering it to his disciples; let him alone to vindicate himself and to plead his own cause, to answer for himself and for us too. Two things he urges in his defence.

1. The necessity and exigence of the publican's case, which called aloud for his help, and therefore justified him in conversing with them for their help. It was the extreme necessity of poor lost sinners that brought Christ from the pure regions above to these impure ones, and the same was it which brought him into this company which was thought impure. Now, 1. He proves the necessity of the publican's case. They that are whole need not a physician, but they that are sick. The publicans are sick, and they need one to help and heal them, which the Pharisees think they do not. Note, Sin is the sickness of the soul; sinners are spiritually sick. Original corruptions are the diseases of the soul, actual transgressions are its wounds, or the eruptions of the disease. It is deforming, weakening, disquieting, wasting, killing, but, blessed be God, not incurable. 2. Jesus Christ is the great physician of souls. His curing of bodily diseases signified this, that he arose with healing under his wings. He is a skilful, faithful, compassionate physician, and it is his office and business to heal the sick. Wise and good men should be as physicians to all about them, Christ was so, Hunc affectum versus omnes habet sapiens, quem versus agros suos medicus. Seneca de Const. 3. Sin-sick souls have need of this physician, for this disease is dangerous, nature will not help itself, no man can help us; such need have we of Christ, that we are undone, eternally undone without him. Sensible sinners see their need, and apply themselves to him accordingly. 4. There are multitudes who conceit themselves to be sound and whole, think they have no need of Christ, but that they can shift for themselves well enough without him, as Laodicea, Rev. iii. 17. Thus the Pharisees desired not the knowledge of Christ's word and ways, not because they had no need of him, but because they thought they had none. See John ix. 40, 41.

2. He proves that their necessity did sufficiently justify his conduct in conversing familiarly with them, and he ought not to be blamed for it; for that necessity made it an act of charity, which ought always to be preferred before the formalities of a religious profession; in which beneficence and munificence are far better than magnificence, as much as substance is than show or shadow. Those duties which are of moral and natural obligation, are to take place even of those divine laws which are positive and ritual, much more of those impositions of men and traditions of the elders, which make God's law stricter than he has made it. This he proves, ver. 13, by a passage quoted out of, Hos. vi. 6. I will have mercy, and not sacrifice. That morose separation from the society of publicans, which the Pharisees enjoined, was less than sacrifice; but Christ's conversing with them was more than an act of common mercy, and therefore to be preferred before it. If to do well ourselves is better than sacrifice, as Samuel shews, 1 Sam. xv. 22, 23, much more to do good to others. Christ's conversing with sinners is here called mercy; to promote the conversion of souls is the greatest act of mercy imaginable, it is saving a soul from death, James v. 20. Observe how Christ quotes this, Go ye and learn what that meaneth. Note, It is not enough to be acquainted with the letter of the scripture, but we must learn to understand the meaning of it. And those have best learned the meaning of the scripture, that have learned how to apply it as a reproof to their own faults, and a rule to their own practice. This scripture which Christ quoted, served not only to vindicate him, but, 1. To shew wherein true religion doth consist, not in external observances, not in meats and drinks and shews of sanctity, not in little particular opinions and doubtful disputations, but in doing all the good we can to the bodies and souls of others, in righteousness and peace, in visiting the fatherless and widows. 2. To condemn the Pharisaical hypocrisy of those, who place religion in rituals more than in morals, Matt. xxiii. 23. They espouse those forms of godliness which may be made consistent with, and perhaps subservient to their pride, covetousness, ambi-

2. He urged the nature and end of his own commission. He must keep to his orders, and prosecute that for which he was appointed to be the great teacher; now, saith he, I am not come to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance, and therefore must converse with publicans. Observe, 1. What his errand was, it was to call to repentance. This was his first text, Matt. iv. 17. and it was the tendency of all his sermons. Note. The gospel call is a call to repentance, a call to us to change our mind and to change our way. 2. With whom his errand lay, not with the righteous, but with sinners. This is, 1. If the children of men had not been sinners, there had been no occasion for Christ's coming among them. He is the Saviour not of man as man, but of man as fallen. Had the first Adam continued in his original righteousness, we had not needed a second Adam. 2. Therefore his greatest business lies with the greatest sinners; the more dangerous the sick man's case is, the more occasion there is for the physician's help. Christ came into the world to save sinners, but especially the chief, 1 Tim. i. 15. to call not those so much, who, though sinners, are comparatively righteous, but the worst of sinners. 3. The more sensible any sinners are of their sinfulness, the more welcome will Christ and his gospel be to them; and every one chooseth to go where their company is desired, not to those who would rather have their room. Christ came not with an expectation of speeding among the righteous, i. e. those who conceal themselves so, and therefore will sooner be sick of their Saviour than sick of their sins, but among the convinced humble sinners, to them Christ will come, for with them he will be welcome.

14. ¶ Then came to him the disciples of John, saying, Why do we and the Pharisees fast often, but thy disciples fast not? 15. And Jesus said unto them, can the children of the bride-chamber mourn, as long as the bridegroom is with them? But the day will come, when the bridegroom shall be taken from them, and then shall they fast. 16. No man putteth a piece of new cloth unto an old garment: For that which is put in to fill it up, taketh from the garment, and the rent is made worse. 17. Neither do men put new wine into old bottles: Else the bottles break, and the wine runneth, and the bottles perish: But they put new wine into new bottles, and both are preserved.

The quarrels that were picked with Christ and his disciples gave occasion to some of the most profitable of his discourses; thus are the interests of truth often served, even by the opposition it meets with from gainsayers, and thus the wisdom of Christ brings good out of evil. This is the third instance of it in this chapter; his discourse of his power to forgive sin, and his readiness to receive sinners, were occasioned by the cavils of the Scribes and Pharisees; so here from a reflection upon the conduct of his family, arose a discourse concerning his tenderness of it. Observe,

1. The objection which the disciples of John made against Christ's disciples for not fasting so often as they did; which they are charged with as another instance of the looseness of their profession, besides that of eating with publicans and sinners, and it is therefore suggested to them that they should change that profession for another more strict. It appears by the other evangelists, Mark ii. 18. and Luke v. 33. that the disciples of the Pharisees joined with them, and we have reason to suspect, set them on, making use of John's disciples as their spokesmen, because they being more in favour with Christ, and nearer allied to his disciples, could do it more plausibly. Note, It is no new thing for bad men to set good men together by the ears; if the people of God differ in their sentiments, designing men will take that occasion to sow discord, and to incense them one against another, and alienate them one from another, and so to make an easy prey of them. If the disciples of John and of Jesus clash, we have reason to suspect the Pharisees have been at work under-hand blowing the coals. Now the complaint is, Why do we and the Pharisees fast often, but thy disciples fast not? It is pity the duties of religion, which ought to be the confirmations of holy love, should be made the occasions of strife and contention; but they often are so, as here; where we may observe,

1. How they boasted of their own fasting. We and the Pharisees fast often. Fasting has in all ages of the church been consecrated upon special occasions to the service of religion; the Pharisees were much in it, many of them kept two fast-days in a week, and yet the generality of them were hypocrites and ill men. Note, False and formal professors often excel others in outward acts of devotion, even of mortification. The disciples of John too fasted often, partly in compliance with their Master's practice, for he came neither eating nor drinking, Mat. xi. 18. And people are apt to imitate their leaders, though not always from the same inward principle; partly in compliance with their Master's doctrine of repentance. Note, The severer part of religion is often most minded by those that are yet under the discipline of the spirit, as a spirit of bondage, whereas though these are good in their place, we must pass through them to that life of delight in God and dependence on him, which these are in order to. Now they come to Christ to tell him that they fasted often, at least they thought it often. Note, Most men will proclaim every one his own goodness, Prov. xx. 6. There is a proneness in professors to brag of their own performances in religion, especially if there be any thing extraordinary in them; nay, and not only to boast of them before men, but to plead them before God, and confide in them as a righteousness.

2. How they blamed Christ's disciples for not fasting so often as they did. Thy disciples fast not. They could not but know that Christ had instructed his disciples to keep their fasts private, and to manage themselves so as that they might not appear unto men to fast; and therefore it was very uncharitable in them to conclude they did not fast, because they did not proclaim their fasts. Note, We must not judge of peoples religion by that which falls under the eye and observation of the world. But suppose it was so, that Christ's disciples did not fast so often or so long as they did; why truly they would have therefore have it thought that they had more religion in them than Christ's disciples had. Note, It is common for vain professors to make themselves a standard in religion, by which to try and measure persons and things, as if all who differed from them were so far in the wrong; as if all that did less than they did too little, and all that did more than they did too much; which is a plain evidence of their want of humility and charity.

3. How they brought this complaint to Christ. Note, If Christ's disciples either by omission or commission give offence, Christ himself will be sure to hear of it, and be reflected upon for it. O Jesus, are these thy Christians? Therefore as we tender the honour of Christ, we are concerned to carry ourselves well. Observe, The quarrel with Christ was brought to the disciples, ver. 11. the quarrel with the disciples was brought to Christ, ver. 14. this is the way of sowing discord and killing love, to set people against ministers, ministers against people, and one friend against another.

2. The apology which Christ made for his disciples in this matter. Christ might have upbraided John's disciples with the former part of their question, Why do ye fast often? Nay, you know best why you do it; but the truth is, many abound in external instances on devotion, that scarce do themselves know why and wherefore. But he only vindicates the practice of his disciples, when they had nothing to say for themselves, he had something ready to say for them. Note, As it is wisdom's honour to be justified of all her children, so it is her children's happiness to be all justified of wisdom. What we do according to the precept and pattern of Christ, he will be sure to bear us out in, and we may with confidence leave it to him to clear up our integrity.

But thou shalt answer, Lord, for me: Herbert.

Two things Christ pleads in defence of their not fasting.

1. That it was not a season proper for that duty, ver. 15. Can the children of the bride-chamber mourn as long as the bridegroom is with them? Observe, Christ's answer is so framed, as that it might sufficiently justify the practice of his own disciples, and yet not condemn the institution of John or the practice of his disciples. When the Pharisees fomented this dispute, they hoped Christ would cast blame either on his own disciples or on John's, but he did neither. Note, When at any time we are unjustly censured, our care must be only to clear ourselves, not to recriminate or throw dirt upon others; and such a variety may there be of circumstances, as may justify us in our practice, without condemning those that practise otherwise.

Now his argument is taken from the common usage of joy and rejoicing during the continuance of marriage solemnities; when all instances of melancholy and sorrow are looked upon as improper and absurd, as it was at Samson's wedding, Judges xiv. 17. Now, 1. The disciples of Christ were the children of the bride-chamber, invited to the wedding-feast and welcome there, the disciples of the Pharisees were not so, but children of the bond-woman, Gal. iv. 25—31. continuing under a dispensation of darkness and terror. Note, The faithful followers of Christ that have the Spirit of adoption have a continual feast, while they that have the Spirit of bondage and fear cannot rejoice for joy, as other people, Hos. ix. 1. 2. The disciples of Christ had the bride-groom with them, which the disciples of John had not; their master was now cast into prison, and lay there in continual danger of his life, and therefore it was reasonable for them to fast often. Such a day would come upon the disciples of Christ, when the bride-groom should be taken from them, when they should be deprived of his bodily presence, and then shall they fast. The thoughts of parting grieved them when he was going, John xvi. 6. Tribulation and affliction befel them when he was gone, and gave them occasion of mourning and praying, that is, of religious fasting. Note, 1. Jesus Christ is the bridegroom of his church, and his disciples are the children of the bride-chamber. Christ speaks of himself to John's disciples under this similitude, because it was the same that John had used, when he called himself a friend of the bridegroom, John iii. 29. And if they would by this hint call to mind what their Master then said they would answer themselves. 2. The condition of those that are the children of the bride-chamber is liable to many changes and alterations in this world, they sing of mercy and judgment. 3. It is merry or melancholy with the children of the bride-chamber, according as they have more or less of the bride-groom's presence. When he is with them, the candle of God shines upon their head, and all is well; but when he is withdrawn, though but for a small moment, they are troubled, and walk heavily; the presence and nearness of the sun makes day and summer, his absence and distance night and winter. Christ is all in all to the church's joy. 4. Every duty is to be done in its proper season: See Eccles. vii. 14. James v. 13. There is a time to mourn and a time to laugh, to each of which we should accommodate ourselves, and bring forth fruit in due season. In fasts, regard is to be had to the methods of God's grace in us, when he mourns to us, we must lament; and also in the dispensations of his providence concerning us; there are times when the Lord God calls to weeping and mourning; regard is likewise to be had to any special work before us, Matt. xvii. 21. Acts xiii. 2.

2. They had not strength sufficient for that duty. This is set forth in two similitudes, one of putting new cloth into an old garment, which doth but pull the old to pieces, ver. 16. the other of putting new wine into old bottles, which doth but burst the bottles, ver. 17. Christ's disciples were not able to bear these severe exercises so well as those of John and of the Pharisees, which the learned Dr. Whitby gives this reason for: There were among the Jews not only sects of the Pharisees and Essenes, who led an austere life, but also schools of the prophets, who frequently lived in mountains and deserts, and were many of them Nazarites; they had also private academies to train men up in a strict discipline; and possibly from these many of John's disciples might come, and many of the Pharisees; whereas Christ's disciples being taken immediately from their callings had not been used to such religious austerities, and were unfit for them, and would by them be rather disheartened for their other work. Note, 1. Some duties of religion are harder and more difficult than others, like new cloth and new wine, which require most intenseness of mind, and are most displeasing to flesh and blood; such is religious fasting and the duties that attend it. 2. The best of Christ's disciples pass through a state of infancy; all the trees in Christ's gardens are not of a growth, nor all his scholars in the same form; there are babes in Christ and grown men. 3. In the enjoining of religious exercises the weakness and infirmity of young Christians ought to be considered; as the food provided for them must be such as is proper for their age, (see 1 Cor. iii. 2. Heb. v. 12.) so must the work be that is cut out for them. Christ would not speak to his disciples that which they could not then bear, John xvi. 12. Young beginners in religion must not presently be put upon the hardest duties at first, lest they be discouraged. Such as was God's care of his Israel, when he brought them out of Egypt, not to lead them by the way of the Philistines, Exod. xiii. 17, 18. and such as was Jacob's care of his children and cattle, not to overdrive them, Gen. xxxiii. 13. such is Christ's care of the little ones of his family and the lambs of his flock, he gently leads them: For want of this care many times the bottles break and the wine is spilled, the profession of many miscarries and comes to nothing, through indiscretion at first. Note, There may be over-doing even in well-doing, a being righteous over-much, and such an over-doing as may prove an undoing through the subtilty of Satan.

18. ¶ While he spake these things unto them, behold, there came a certain ruler, and worshipped him, saying, My daughter is even now dead: but come and lay thy hand upon her, and she shall live. 19. And Jesus arose and followed him, and so did his disciples. 20. ¶ (And behold, a woman which was diseased with an issue of blood twelve years, came behind him, and touched touched the hem of his garment, 21. For she said within herself, If I may but touch his garment, I shall be whole. 22. But Jesus turned him about, and when he saw her, he said, Daughter, be of good comfort; thy faith hath made thee whole. And the woman was made whole from that hour.) 23. And when Jesus came into the ruler's house, and saw the minstrels and the people making a noise, 24. He said unto them, Give place: for the maid is not dead, but sleepeth. And they laughed him to scorn. 25. But when the people were put forth, he went in, and took her by the hand, and the maid arose. 26. And the fame hereof went abroad into all that land.

We have here two passages of story put together, that of the raising of Jairus's daughter to life, and that of the curing of the woman that had the bloody issue, by the way as he was going to Jairus's house, which comes in in a parenthesis, in the midst of the other: for Christ's miracles were thick sown and interwoven; the work of him that sent him was his daily work; He was called to do these good works from speaking those things foregoing, in answer to the cavils of the Pharisees, ver. 18. While he spake these things: And we may suppose it a pleasing interruption given to that unpleasant work of disputation, which though sometimes needful, a good man will gladly leave to go about a work of devotion or charity. Here is,

First, The ruler's address to Christ, ver. 18. A certain ruler, a ruler of the synagogue, came and worshipped him. Have any of the rulers believed on him? Yes, here was one, a church ruler, whose faith condemned the unbelief of the rest of the rulers. This ruler had a little daughter of twelve years old newly dead, and this breach made upon his family comforts was the occasion of his coming to Christ. Note, In trouble we should visit God; the death of our relations should drive us to Christ, who is our life; it is well if any thing will do it. When affliction is in our families, we must not sit down astonished, but, as Job, fall down and worship. Now observe,

1. His humility in this address to Christ. He came with his errand to Christ himself, and did not send a servant. Note, It is no disparagement to the greatest rulers personally to attend on the Lord Jesus. He worshipped him, bowed the knee to him, and gave him all imaginable respect. Note, Those that would receive mercy from Christ must give honour to Christ.

2. His faith in this address, My daughter is even now dead, and though any other physician would now come too late, nothing more absurd than post mortem medicina, yet Christ comes not too late, he is a physician after death, for he is the resurrection and the life: O come then, and lay thy hand upon her, and she shall live. This was quite above the power of nature, (a privatione ad habitum non datur regressus) yet within the power of Christ, who has life in himself, and quickeneth whom he will. Now Christ works in an ordinary way, by nature and not against it, and therefore we cannot in faith bring him such a request as this; while there is life there is hope, and room for prayer; but when our friends are dead, the case is determined; we shall go to them, but they shall not return to us: But while Christ was here upon earth working miracles, such a confidence as this was not only allowable but very commendable.

Secondly, The readiness of Christ to comply with his address, ver. 19. Jesus immediately arose, left his company, and followed him; he was not only willing to grant him what he desired, in raising his daughter to life, but to gratify him so far as to come to his house to do it. Surely he never said to the seed of Jacob, Seek ye me in vain. He denied to go along with the nobleman, who said, Sir, come down, ere my child die, John, 48, 49, 50. yet went along with the ruler of the synagogue, who said, Sir, come down, and my child shall live. The variety of methods which Christ took in working his miracles, is perhaps to be attributed to the different frame and temper of mind, which these were in that applied themselves to him, which he who searcheth the heart, perfectly knew, and accommodated himself to; He knows what is in man, and what course to take with him. And observe, when Jesus followed him, so did his disciples, whom he had chosen for his constant companions; it was not for state, or that he might come with observation that he took his attendants with him, but that they might be the witnesses of his miracles, who were hereafter to be the preachers of his doctrine.

Thirdly, The healing of the poor woman's bloody issue; I call her a poor woman, not only because her case was piteous, but because, though she had something in the world, she had spent it all upon physicians, for the cure of her distemper, and was never the better; which was a double aggravation of the misery of her condition, that she had been full, but was now empty; and that she had impoverished herself for the recovery of her health, and yet she had not her health neither. This woman was diseased with a constant issue of blood twelve years, ver. 20. A disease which was not only weakening and wasting, and under which the body must needs languish; but also it rendered her ceremonially unclean, and shut her out from the courts of the Lord's house, but did not cut her off from approaching to Christ: She applied herself to Christ, and received mercy from him by the way, as he followed the ruler, whose daughter was dead, to whom it would be a great encouragement, and would help to keep his faith in the power of Christ: So graciously doth Christ consider the frame, and consult the ease of weak believers! Observe,

1. The woman's great faith in Christ, and in his power. Her disease was of such a nature, that her modesty would not suffer her to speak openly to Christ for a cure, as others did, but by a peculiar impulse of the Spirit of faith, she believed him to have such an overflowing fullness of healing virtue, that the very touch of his garment would be her cure. This perhaps had something of fancy mixed with faith; for she had no precedent for this way of application to Christ, unless as some think, she had an eye to the raising of the dead man by the touch of Elisha's bones, 2 Kings xiii. 21. But what weakness of understanding there was in it, Christ was pleased to overlook, and accept the sincerity and strength of her faith; for he catcheth the honey-comb with the hoileij, Cant. v. 11. She believed she should be healed, if she did but touch the very hem of his garment, the outmost part of it. Note, There is virtue in every thing that belongs to Christ. The holy oil with which the high-priest was anointed, ran down to the skirts of his garments, Psalm cxxxiii. 2. Such a fullness of grace is there in Christ, that from it we may all receive, John i. 16.

2. Christ's great favour to this woman. He did not suspend (as he might have done) his healing influences, but suffered this bashful patient to steal a cure unknown to any one else, though she could not think to do it unknown to him. And now she was well content to be gone, for she had what she came for, but Christ was not willing to let her go, so he will not only have his power magnified in her cure, but his grace magnified in her comfort and commendation: The triumphs of her faith must be to her praise and honour. He turned about to see for her, ver. 22. and soon discovered her. Note, It is great encouragement to humble Christians, that those who hide themselves from men, are known to Christ, who sees in secret their application to heaven that are most private. Now here,

(1.) He puts gladness into her heart, by that word, Daughter be of good comfort. She feared being chidden for coming clandestinely, but is encouraged. 1. He calls her daughter, for he spoke to her with the tenderness of a father, as he did to the man sick of the palsy, ver. 2. whom he called son. Note, Christ has comforts ready for the Daughter of Zion, that are of a sorrowful spirit, as Hannah was, 1 Sam. i. 15. Believing women are Christ's daughters, and he will own them as such. 2. He bids her be of good comfort: She had reason to be so, if Christ own her for a daughter. Note, The saints consolation is founded in their adoption. His bidding her be comforted brought comfort with it, as his saying, be ye whole, brought health with it. Note, It is the will of Christ that his people should be comforted, and it is his prerogative to command comfort to troubled spirits. He creates the fruit of his lips, peace, Isa. lvii. 18.

(2.) He puts honour upon her faith. That grace of all other gives most honour to Christ, and therefore he puts most honour upon it: Thy faith has made thee whole. Thus by faith she obtained a good report. And as of all graces Christ puts the greatest honour upon faith, so of all believers he puts the greatest honour upon those that are most humble; as here on this woman, who had more faith than she thought she had. She had reason to be of good comfort, not only because she was made whole, but because her faith had made her whole; that is, 4. She was spiritually healed; that cure was wrought in her which is the proper fruit and effect of faith, the pardon of sin and the work of grace. Note, We may then be abundantly comforted in our temporal mercies, when they are accompanied with those spiritual blessings that resemble them; Our food and raiment comfortable, when by faith we are fed with the bread of life, and clothed with the righteousness of Jesus Christ: Our rest and sleep comfortable; when by faith we repose in God, and dwell at ease in him: Our health and prosperity comfortable, when by faith our souls prosper and are in health. See Isa. xxxviii. 16, 17. 2. Her bodily cure was the fruit of faith, of her faith, and that made it a happy comfortable cure indeed. Those out of whom the devils were cast, were helped by Christ's sovereign power, some by the faith of others, as ver. 2. but it is thy faith that has made thee whole. Note, Temporal mercies are then comforts indeed to us, when they are received by faith. If, when we are in pursuit of mercy, we prayed for it in faith, with an eye to the promise, and in dependence upon that, if we desired it for the sake of God's glory, and with a resignation to God's will, and have our hearts enlarged by it in faith, love, and obedience, we may then say, it was received by faith.

Fourthly, The posture in which he found the ruler's house, ver. 23. He saw the people, and the minstrels, or musicians, making a noise: The house was in a hurry; such work doth death make, when it comes into a family; and perhaps the necessary cares that arise at such a time, when our dead is to be decently buried out of our sight, gives some useful diversion to that grief which is apt to prevail and play the tyrant. The people in the neighbourhood came together to condole the loss, to comfort the parents, to prepare for and attend on the funeral, which the Jews were not wont to defer long. The musicians were among them, according to the custom of the Gentiles, with their doleful melancholy tunes, to increase the grief and stir up the lamentation of those that attended on this occasion; as (they say) is usual among the Irish, with their Ahone, Ahone. Thus they indulged a passion that is apt enough of itself to grow intemperate, and affected to sorrow as those that had no hopes. See how religion provides cordials, where irreligion administers corrosives: Heathenism aggravates that grief which Christianity studies to assuage. Or perhaps these musicians endeavoured on the other hand to divert the grief and exhilarate the family; but as vinegar upon nitre, so is he that sings songs to a heavy heart. Observe, The parents who were immediately touched with the affliction were silent, while the people and minstrels, whose lamentations were forced, made such a noise. Note, The loudest grief is not always the greatest; rivers are most noisy when they run shallow. Ille dolet vere, qui sine teste dolet. But notice is taken of this to shew that the girl was really dead, in the undoubted apprehension of all about her.

Fifthly, The rebuke that Christ gave to this hurry and noise, ver. 24. He said, Give place. Note, Sometimes when the sorrow of the world prevails, it is much ado for Christ and his comforts to crowd in. Those that harden themselves in sorrow, and like Rachel, refuse to be comforted, should think they hear Christ saying to their disquieting thoughts, Give place: Make room for him who is the consolation of Israel, and brings with him strong consolation, strong enough to overcome the confusion and tyranny of these worldly griefs, if he may but be admitted into the soul. He gives a good reason why they should not thus disquiet themselves and one another; The maid is not dead, but sleepeth. 1. This was eminently true of this maid, that was immediately to be raised to life; she was really dead, but not so to Christ, who knew within himself what he would do, and could do, and who had determined to make her death but as a sleep. There is little more difference between sleep and death, but in continuance; whatever other difference there is, it is but a dream. This death must be but of short continuance, and therefore is but a sleep, like one night's rest. He that quickens the dead, may well call the things which be not as though they were, Rom. iv. 17. 2. It is in a sense true of all that die, chiefly they that die in the Lord. Note, 1. Death is a sleep: All nations and languages, for the softening of that which is so dreadful, and withal so unavoidable, and the reconciling of themselves to it, have agreed to call it so. It is said, even of the wicked kings, that they slept with their fathers; and of those that shall rise to everlasting contempt, that they sleep in the dust, (Dan. xii. 2. It is not the sleep of the soul, its activity ceaseth not, but the sleep of the body, which lies down in the grave, still and silent, regardless and disregarded, wrapt up in darkness and obscurity. Sleep is a short death, and death a long sleep. But the death of the righteous is in a special manner to be looked upon as a sleep, Isa. lvii. 2. They sleep in Jesus, Thess. iv. 14. not only rest from the toils and labours of the day, but rest in hope of a joyful waking again in the morning of the resurrection, when they shall wake refreshed, wake to a new life, wake to be richly dressed and crowned, and wake to sleep no more.

2. The consideration of this should moderate our grief at the death of our dear relations; say not, they are lost; no, but are gone before; say not, they are slain; no, they are but fallen asleep; and the apostle speaks of it as an absurd thing to imagine, that they that are fallen asleep in Christ are perished, 1 Cor. xv. 18. Give place therefore to those comforts which the covenant of grace ministers, fetched from the future state, and the glory to be revealed.

Now could it be thought that such a comfortable word as this, from the mouth of our Lord Jesus, should be ridiculed as it was? They laughed him to scorn. These people lived in Capernaum, knew Christ's character, that he never spake a rash or foolish word; they knew how many mighty works he had done; so that if they did not understand what he meant by this, they might might at least have been silent in expectation of the issue. Note, The words and works of Christ which cannot be understood, yet are not therefore to be despised. We must adore the mystery of divine sayings, even when they seem to contradict what we think ourselves most confident of. Yet even this tended to the confirmation of the miracle: for it seems she was so apparently dead, that it was thought a very ridiculous thing to say otherwise.

Sixthly, The raising of the damsel to life by the power of Christ, ter. 25. The people were put forth. Note, Scorners that laugh at what they see and hear that is above their capacity, are not proper witnesses of the wonderful works of Christ, the glory of which lies not in pomp, but in power. The widow's son at Naim and Lazarus were raised from the dead openly, but this damsel privately; for Capernaum, that had slighted the lesser miracles of restoring health, was unworthy to see the greater of restoring life; these pearls were not to be cast before those that would trample them under their feet.

Christ went in and took her by the hand, as it were to awake her and to help her up, prosecuting his own metaphor of her being asleep. The high-priest, that typified Christ, was not to come near the dead, Lev. xxi. 10, 11. but Christ toucheth the dead. The Levitical priesthood leaves the dead in their uncleanness, and therefore is not shy of touching them. He took her by the hand, and the maid arose. So easily, so effectually was the miracle wrought; not by prayer, as Elijah did it, 1 Kings xvii. 21. and Elisha, 2 Kings iv. 33. but by a touch. They did it as servants, he as a Son, as a God, to whom belong the issues from death. Note, Jesus Christ is the Lord of souls, he commands them forth, and commands them back, when and as he pleaseth. Dead souls are not raised to spiritual life, unless Christ take them by the hand: It is done in the day of his power. He helps us up or we lie still.

Seventhly, The general notice that was taken of this miracle; though it was wrought privately, yet ter. 26. the fame thereof went abroad into all that land: It was the common subject of discourse. Note, Christ's works are more talked of than considered and improved. And doubtless, they that heard only the report of Christ's miracles, were accountable for that as well as they that were eye-witnesses of them. Though we at this distance have not seen Christ's miracles, yet having an authentic history of them, we are bound upon the credit of that to receive his doctrine; and blessed are they that have not seen, and yet have believed, John xx. 29.

27. ¶ And when Jesus departed thence, two blind men followed him, crying, and saying, Thou Son of David, have mercy on us. 28. And when he was come into the house, the blind men came to him: and Jesus saith unto them, Believe ye that I am able to do this? They said unto him, Yea, Lord. 29. Then touched he their eyes, saying, According to your faith be it unto you. 30. And their eyes were opened; and Jesus straitly charged them, saying, See that no man know it. 31. But they, when they were departed, spread abroad his fame in all that country. 32. ¶ As they went out, behold, they brought to him a dumb man possessed with a devil. 33. And when the devil was cast out, the dumb spake: and the multitudes marvelled, saying, It was never so seen in Israel. 34. But the Pharisees said, He casteth out devils through the prince of the devils.

In these verses we have an account of two more miracles wrought together by our Saviour.

First, The giving of sight to two blind men, ter. 27—31. Christ is the fountain of light as well as life, and as by raising the dead he shewed himself to be the same that at first breathed into man the breath of life, so by giving sight to the blind, he shewed himself to be the same that at first commanded the light to shine out of darkness. Observe,

1. The importunate address of the blind men to Christ. He was returning from the ruler's house to his own lodgings, and these blind men follow him, as beggars used to do, with their incessant cries, ter. 27. He that cured diseases so easily, so effectually, and withal so cheap, shall have patients enough: As for other things, so he is famed for an oculist.

Observe, (1.) The title which these blind men gave to Christ; Thou Son of David, have mercy upon us. The promise made to David that of his loins the Messiah should come was well known, and the Messiah was therefore commonly called the Son of David: At this time there was a general expectation of his appearing, these blind men knew and own, and proclaim it in the streets of Capernaum that he is come, and this is he; which aggravates the folly and sin of the chief priests and Pharisees that denied and opposed him; They could not see him and his miracles, but faith comes by hearing. Note, Those who by the providence of God are deprived of bodily eye-sight, may yet, by the grace of God, have the eyes of their understanding so enlightened, as to discern those great things of God which are hid from the wise and prudent.

(2.) Their petition, Have mercy on us. It was foretold that the Son of David should be merciful, Psalm lxxii. 12, 13. and in him shines the tender mercy of our God, Luke i. 78. Note, Whatever our necessities and burdens are, we need no more for supply and support than a share in the mercy of our Lord Jesus. Whether he heal us or no, if he have mercy on us, we have enough; as to the particular instances and methods of mercy we may safely and wisely refer ourselves to the wisdom of Christ. They did not each of them say for himself, Have mercy on me, but both for one another, Have mercy on us. Note, It becomes those that are under the same affliction, to concur in the same prayers for relief. Fellow-sufferers should be joint-petitioners. In Christ there is enough for all.

(3.) Their importunity in this request, they followed him crying. It seems he did not take notice of them at first, for he would try their faith, which he knew to be strong, would quicken their prayers, and make his cures more valued, when they did not always come at the first word; and would teach us to continue instant in prayer, always to pray, and not to faint; and though the answer do not come presently, yet to wait for it, and to follow providence, even in those steps and outgoings of it, which seem to neglect or contradict our prayers. Christ would not heal them publicly in the streets, for this was a cure he would have kept private, ter. 30. but when he came into the house, they followed him thither, and came to him. Note, Christ's doors are always open to believing and importunate petitioners; it seemed rude in them to thrust into the house after him, when he desired to retire: But (such is the tenderness of our Lord Jesus) they were not more bold than welcome.

2. The confession of faith which Christ drew from them upon this occasión. When they came to him for mercy, he asked them, Believe ye that I am able to do this? Note, Faith is the great condition of Christ's favour: Those who would receive the mercy of Christ, must firmly believe the power of Christ: What we would have him do for us, we must be fully assured that he is able to do it. They followed Christ, and followed him crying, but the great question is, Do ye believe? Nature may work fervency, but it is only grace that can work faith: Spiritual blessings are fetched in only by faith. They had intimated their faith in the office of Christ as Son of David, and in his mercy, but Christ demands likewise a profession of faith in his power. Believe ye that I am able? Note, Christ will have the glory of his power ascribed to him by all those that hope to have the benefit of it. Believe ye that I am able for this, to bestow this favour, to give sight to the blind, as well as to cure the palsy and raise the dead? Note, It is good to be particular in the exercise of faith, to apply the general assurances of God's power and good-will, and the general promises, to our particular exigencies. All shall work for good, and if all, then this. Believe ye that I am able, not only to prevail with God for it as a prophet, but that I am able to do it by my own power? This will amount to their belief of his being not only the Son of David, but the Son of God: for it is God's prerogative to open the eyes of the blind, Psalm cxlvi. 8. he makes the seeing eye, Exodus iv. 11. Job was eyes to the blind, Job xxiv. 15. was to them instead of eyes, but he could not give eyes to the blind. Still it is put to us, Believe we that Christ is able to do for us, by the power of his merit and intercession in heaven, of his Spirit and grace in the heart, and of his providence and dominion in the world? To believe the power of Christ, is not only to assure ourselves of it, but to commit ourselves to it and encourage ourselves in it.

To this question they give an immediate answer, without hesitation; they said, Yea, Lord. Though he had kept them in suspense a while, and had not helped them at first, they honestly imputed that to his wisdom, not to his weakness, and were still confident of his ability. Note, The treasures of mercy that are laid up in the power of Christ, are laid out and wrought for those that trust in him, Psalm xxxi. 14.

3. The cure that Christ wrought on them: He touched their eyes, ter. 29. This he did to encourage their faith, which by his delay he had tried, and to shew that he gives sight to blind souls by the operations of his grace going along with the word, anointing their eyes with eye-salve: And he put the cure upon their faith, According to your faith be it unto you. When they begged for a cure, he enquired into their faith, ter. 28. Believe ye that I am able? He did not enquire into their wealth, whether they were able to pay him for a cure? nor into their reputation, should he get credit by curing them? but into their faith; and now they had professed their faith, he referred the matter to that: I know you do believe, and the power you believe in shall be exerted for you; According to your faith be it unto you. This speaks, 1. His knowledge of the sincerity of their faith, and his acceptance and approbation of it. Note, It is a great comfort to true believers, that Jesus Christ knows their faith, and is well pleased with it. Though it be weak, though others do not discern it, though they themselves are ready to question it, it is known to him. 2. His insisting upon their faith as necessary; if you believe, take what you come for. Note, Those that apply themselves to Jesus Christ, shall be dealt with according to their faith, not according to their fancies, or according to their profession, but according to their faith; that is, unbelievers cannot expect to find any favour with God, but true believers may be sure to find all that favour which is offered in the gospel; and our comforts ebb or flow, according as our faith is stronger or weaker; we are not straitened in Christ, let us not then be straitened in ourselves.

4. The charge he gave them to keep it private, ter. 30. See that no man know it. He gave them this charge, 1. To set us an example of humility, and that lowliness of mind, which he would have us to learn of him. Note, In the good we do we must not seek our own praise, but only the glory of God: It must be more our care and endeavour to be useful, than to be known and observed to be so, Proverbs xx. 6.—xxv. 27. Thus Christ seconded the rule he had given, Let not thy left hand know what thy right hand doth. 2. Some think Christ, in keeping it private, shewed his displeasure against the people of Capernaum, who had seen so many miracles, and yet believed not. Note, The silencing of those who should proclaim the works of Christ, is a great judgment to any place or people: And it is just with Christ to deny the means of conviction to those that are obstinate in their infidelity; and to shroud the light from those, that shut their eyes against it. 3. He did it in discretion for his own preservation; because the more he was proclaimed, the more jealous would the rulers of the Jews be of his growing interest in the people. 4. Dr. Whitby gives another reason, which is very considerable, why Christ sometimes concealed his miracles, and afterwards forbid the publishing of his transfiguration; because he would not indulge that pernicious conceit which obtained among the Jews, that their Messiah should be a temporal prince, and so give occasion to the people to attempt the setting up of his kingdom by tumults and seditions as they offered to do, John vi. 15. But when after his resurrection (which was the full proof of his mission) his spiritual kingdom was set up, then that danger was over, and they must be published to all nations. And he observes, that the miracles which Christ wrought among the Gentiles and the Gadarenes, were ordered to be published, because with them there was not that danger.

But honour is like the shadow, which as it flees from those that follow it, so it follows those that flee from it, ter. 31. They spread abroad his fame. This was more an act of zeal, than of prudence and observance; and though it may be excused as honestly meant for the honour of Christ, yet it cannot be justified, being done against a particular charge. Whenever we profess to direct our intention to the glory of God, we must see to it that the action be according to the will of God.

Secondly, The healing of a dumb man, that was possessed with a devil. And here observe,

1. His case, which was very sad: He was under the power of the devil in this particular instance, that he was disabled to speak, ter. 32. See the calamitous state of this world, and how various the afflictions of the afflicted are! We have no sooner dismissed two blind men, but we meet with a dumb man. How thankful should we be to God for our sight and speech! See the malice of Satan against mankind, and how many ways he shews it! This man's dumbness was the effect of his being possessed with a devil; but it was better he should be made unable to say any thing, than be forced to say, as those demoniacs did, chap. viii. 29. What have we to do with thee? of the two, better a dumb devil than a blaspheming one. When the devil gets possession of a soul, it is made silent as to any thing that is good; dumb in prayers and praises, which the devil is a sworn enemy to. This poor creature they brought to Christ, who entertained not only those that came of themselves in their own faith, but those that were brought to him by their friends and the faith of others. Though the just shall live eternally by his faith, yet temporal mercies may be bestowed on us, with an eye to their faith that are intercessors on our behalf. They brought him in just as the blind men went out. See how unwearied Christ was in doing good; how closely closely one good work followed another! Treasures of mercy, wondrous mercy, are hid in him; which may be continually spent upon, but can never be exhausted.

2. His cure, which was very sudden, ver. 33. When the devil was cast out, the dumb spake. Note, Christ's cures strike at the root, and remove the effect by taking away the cause; open the lips by breaking Satan's power in the soul. In sanctification he heals the waters by casting salt into the spring. When Christ by his grace, casts the devil out of a soul, presently the dumb spake. When Paul was converted, behold, he prays; then the dumb spake.

3. The consequences of this cure:

(1.) The multitude marvelled, and well they might; though few believed, many wondered: The admiration of the common people is sooner roused than any other affection. It was foretold that the new song, the New Testament song, should be sung for marvellous works, Psalm xcvi. 1. They said, It was never so seen in Israel, and therefore never so seen any where; for no people experienced such wonders of mercy as Israel did. There had been those in Israel that were famous for working miracles, but Christ excelled them all. The miracles Moses wrought had reference to Israel as a people, but Christ's were brought home to particular persons.

(2.) The Pharisees blasphemed, ver. 34. When they could not gainsay the convincing evidence of these miracles, they fathered them upon the devil, as if they had been wrote by compact and collusion: He casteth out devils (say they) by the prince of the devils. A suggestion horrid beyond expression, we shall hear more of it afterwards, and Christ's answer to it, chap. xii. 14. only observe here, how evil men and seducers wax worse and worse, 2 Tim. iii. 13. and it is both their sin and their punishment. Their quarrels with Christ for taking upon him to forgive sin, ver. 3. for conversing with publicans and sinners, ver. 11. for not fasting, ver. 14. though spiteful enough, yet had some colour of piety, parity and devotion in them; but this (which they are left to; punish them for those) breathes nothing else but malice and falsehood, hellish enmity in the highest degree; it is diabolism all over, and was therefore justly pronounced unpardonable. Because the people marvelled, they must say something to diminish the miracle, and this was all they could say.

35. And Jesus went about all the cities and villages, teaching in their synagogues, and preaching the gospel of the kingdom, and healing every sickness, and every disease among the people. 36. ¶ But when he saw the multitudes, he was moved with compassion on them, because they fainted, and were scattered abroad, as sheep having no shepherd. 37. Then saith he unto his disciples, The harvest truly is plenteous, but the labourers are few. 38. Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that he will send forth labourers into his harvest.

Here is, 1. A conclusion of the foregoing account of Christ's preaching and miracles, ver. 35. He went about all the cities teaching and healing. This is the same we had before, chap. iv. 23. There it ushers in the more particular record of Christ's preaching, chap. v. vi. and vii. and of his cures, chap. viii. and ix. and here it is elegantly repeated in the close of these instances, as the quod erat demonstrandum; as if the evangelist should say, Now I hope I have made it out by an induction of particulars, that Christ preached and healed; for you have had the heads of his sermons, and some few instances of his cures, which were wrought to confirm his doctrine; and these were written, that you might believe. Some think, this was a second perambulation in Galilee like the former; he visited again those whom he had before preached to. Though the Pharisees caviled at him and opposed him, he went on with his work; he preached the gospel of the kingdom: He told them of a kingdom of grace and glory, now to be set up under the government of a Mediator: this was gospel indeed, good news, glad tidings of great joy.

Observe, How Christ in his preaching had respect,

(1.) To the private towns. He visited not only the great and wealthy cities, but the poor obscure villages; there he preached, there he healed. The souls of those that are meanest in the world are as precious to Christ, and should be to us, as the souls of those that make the greatest figure. Rich and poor met together in him, citizens and boors; His righteous acts towards the inhabitants of his villages must be rehearsed, Judges v. 11.

(2.) To the public worship. He taught in their synagogues, 1. That he might bear a testimony to solemn assemblies, even then when there were corruptions in them. We must not forsake the assembling of ourselves together, as the manner of some is. 2. That he might have an opportunity of preaching there, where people were gathered together, with an expectation to hear. Thus, even after the gospel-church was founded, and Christian meetings erected, the apostles often preached in the synagogues of the Jews. It is the wisdom of the prudent, to make the best of that which is.

2. A preface or introduction to the account in the following chapter of his sending forth his apostles. He took notice of the multitude, ver. 36. not only the crowds that followed him, but the vast numbers of people with which (as he passed along) he observed the country to be replenished; what nests of souls the towns and cities were, and how thick of inhabitants; what abundance of people there were in every synagogue, and what places of concourse the openings of the gates were: So very populous was that nation now grown, and it was the effect of God's blessing on Abraham. Seeing this,

(1.) He pitied them, and was concerned for them, ver. 36. He was moved with compassion on them, not upon a temporal account, as he pitied the blind and lame and sick; but upon a spiritual account; he was concerned to see them ignorant and careless, and ready to perish for lack of vision. Note, Jesus Christ is a very compassionate friend to precious souls: Here his bowels do in a special manner yearn. It was pity to souls that brought him from heaven to earth, and there to the cross. Misery is the object of mercy, and the miseries of sinful, self-destroying souls, are the greatest miseries: Christ pities those most that pity themselves least; so should we. The most Christian compassion is compassion to souls; it is most Christ-like.

See what moved this pity, 1. They fainted; they were destitute, vexed, wearied. They strayed, so some; were loosed one from another: The staff of bands was broken, Zech. xi. 14. They wanted help for their souls, and had none at hand that was good for any thing. The Scribes and Pharisees filled them with vain notions, burdened them with the traditions of the elders, deluded them into many mistakes, while they were not instructed in their duty, nor acquainted with the extent and spiritual nature of the divine law; therefore they fainted; for what spiritual health, and life, and vigour can there be in those souls, that are fed with husks and ashes, instead of the bread of life? Precious souls faint when duty is to be done, temptations to be resisted, afflictions to be born, being not nourished up with the word of truth, 2. They were scattered abroad as sheep having no shepherd. That expression is borrowed from 1 Kings xxii. 17. and it sets forth the sad condition of those, that are destitute of faithful guides to go before them in the things of God; No creature more apt to go astray than a sheep, and when gone astray, more helpless, shiftless and exposed, nor more unapt to find the way home again: sinful souls are as lost sheep, they need the care of shepherds to bring them back. The teachers the Jews then had, pretended to be shepherds, yet Christ saith they had no shepherds, for they were worse than none: Idle shepherds that led them away, instead of reducing them; and fleeced the flock, instead of feeding it. Such shepherds as were described, Jer. xlii. 1, &c. Ezek. xxxiv. 2, &c. Note, The case of those people is very piteous, that either have no ministers at all, or those that are as bad as none; that seek their own things, not the things of Christ and souls.

(2.) He puts his disciples on to pray for them. His pity put him upon devising means for the good of these people. It appears, Luke vi. 12, 13. that upon this occasion, before he sent out his apostles, he did himself spend a great deal of time in prayer. Note, Those we pity we should pray for. Having spoken to God for them, he turns his disciples and tells them,

1. How the case stood, ver. 37. The harvest truly is plenteous, but the labourers are few. People desired good preaching, but there were few good preachers. There was a great deal of work to be done, and a great deal of good likely to be done, but there wanted hands to do it. 1. It was an encouragement, that the harvest was so plenteous. It was not strange, that there were multitudes that needed instruction, but it was what doth not often happen, that they who needed it desired it and were forward to receive it. They that were ill taught, were desirous to be better taught; peoples expectations were raised, and there was such a moving of affections as promised well. Note, It is a blessed thing to see people in love with good preaching. The valleys are then covered over with corn, and there are hopes it may be well gathered in. That is a gale of opportunity, that calls for a double care and diligence in the improvement of; a harvest day that should be a busy day. 2. It was pity when it was so that the labourers should be so few; that the corn should shed and spoil, and rot upon the ground for want of reapers: Loiterers many, but labourers very few. Note, It is ill with the church, when good work stands still or goes slowly on, for want of good workmen; when it is so, the labourers that are, have need to be very busy.

2. What was their duty in this case, ver. 38. Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest. Note, The melancholy aspect of the times, and the deplorable state of precious souls, should much excite and quicken prayer. When things look discouraging, we should pray more, and then we would complain and fear less. And we should adapt our prayers to the present exigencies of the church; such an understanding we ought to have of the times, as to know not only what Israel ought to do, but what Israel ought to pray for. Note, 1. God is the Lord of the harvest; my Father is the husbandman, John xv. 1. It is the vineyard of the Lord of hosts, Isa. v. 7. It is for him, and to him, and to his service and honour, that the harvest is gathered in. Ye are God's husbandry, 1 Cor. iii. 9. his threshing, and the corn of his floor, Isa. xxi. 10. He orders every thing concerning the harvest as he pleaseth, when and where the labourers shall work, and how long; and it is very comfortable to those who wish well to the harvest work, that God himself presides in it, who will be sure to order all for the best. 2. Ministers are, and should be, labourers in God's harvest; the ministry is a work, and must be attended to accordingly; his harvest work, which is needful work; work that requires every thing to be done in its season, and diligence to do it thoroughly; but it is pleasant work, they reap in joy, and the joy of the preachers of the gospel is likened to the joy of harvest, Isa. ix. 2, 3. and he that reapeth receiveth wages; the hire of the labourers that reap down God's fields, shall not be kept back, as theirs was, James v. 4. 3. It is God's work to send forth labourers; Christ makes ministers, Eph. iv. 11. the office is of his appointing, the qualifications of his working, the call of his giving. Those will not be owed nor paid as labourers; that run without their errand, unqualified, uncalled. How shall they preach, except they be sent? 4. All that love Christ and souls, should shew it by their earnest prayers to God, especially when the harvest is plenteous, that he would send forth more skillful, faithful, wise, and industrious labourers into his harvest; that he will raise up such as he will own in the conversion of sinners and the edification of saints, would spirit them for the work, call them to it, and succeed them in it; that he would give them wisdom to win souls, that he would thrust forth labourers, so some; intimating unwillingness in them to go forth, because of their own weakness and the peoples badness, and opposition from men that endeavour to thrust them out of the harvest; but pray that all contradiction from within and from without may be conquered and got over. Christ puts his friends upon praying this, just before he sends apostles forth to labour in the harvest. Note, It is a good sign God is about to bestow some special mercy upon a people, when he stirs up those that have an interest at the throne of grace to pray for it, Psalm x. 17. Further observe, that Christ said this to his disciples, who were to be employed as labourers. They must pray, (1.) That God would send them forth. Here am I, send me, Isa. vi. 8. Note, Commissions given in answer to prayer are most likely to be successful; Paul is a chosen vessel, for behold he prays, Acts ix. 11—15. (2.) That he would send others forth. Note, Not the people only, but those who are themselves ministers should pray for the increase of ministers. Though self-interest makes those that seek their own things desirous to be placed alone, the fewer ministers the more preferments, yet those that seek the things of Christ, desire more workmen, that more work may be done, though they be eclipsed by it.

CHAP. X.

This chapter is an ordination sermon, which our Lord Jesus preached when he advanced his twelve disciples to the degree and dignity of apostles: In the close of the foregoing chapter, he had stirred them and others up to pray that God would send forth labourers, and here we have an immediate answer to that prayer; while they are yet speaking he hears and doth. What we pray for according to Christ's direction shall be given in. Now here we have, 1. The general commission that was given them, ver. 1. 2. The names of the persons to whom this commission was given, ver. 2—4. 3. The instructions that were given them, which are very full and particular, 1. Concerning the services they were to do, their preaching, their working miracles, to whom they must apply themselves, how they must behave themselves, and in what method they must proceed, ver. 5—15. 2. Concerning the sufferings they were to undergo. They are told what they should suffer, and from whom; counsels are given them what course to take when they were persecuted, and encouragements to bear up cheerfully under their sufferings, ver. 16—42. And these things, though primarily intended for direction to the apostles then, are of use to all Christ's ministers, with whom by his word Christ is and will be always to the end of the world.

1. And

1. AND when he had called unto him his twelve disciples, he gave them power against unclean spirits, to cast them out, and to heal all manner of sickness and all manner of disease. 2. Now the names of the twelve apostles are these; The first, Simon, who is called Peter, and Andrew his brother; James the son of Zebedee, and John his brother; 3. Philip, and Bartholomew; Thomas, and Matthew the publican; James the son of Alphaeus, and Lebbeus, whose surname was Thaddæus; 4. Simon the Canaanite, and Judas Iscariot, who also betrayed him.

Here we are told,

1. Who they were that Christ ordained to be his apostles or ambassadors; they were his disciples, ver. 1. He had called them to be disciples some time before, his immediate followers and constant attendants, and he then told them they should be made fishers of men, which promise he now performed. Note, Christ commonly confers honours and graces by degrees; the light of both, like that of the morning, shines more and more. All this while Christ had these twelve, 1. In a state of probation. Though he knows what is in man, knew from the first what was in them, John vi. 70. yet he took this method to give an example to his church. Note, The ministry being a great trust, it is fit that men should be tried for a time before they be trusted with it. Let them first be proved, 1 Tim. iii. 10. Therefore hands must not be laid suddenly on any man, but let him first be observed as a candidate and probationer, a propositant, (that is the term the French churches use), because some men's sins go before, others follow, 1 Tim. v. 22. 2. In a state of preparation. All this while he had been fitting them for this great work. Note, Those whom Christ intends for and calls to any work, he first prepares and qualifies them in some measure for it. He prepared them, 1. By taking them to be with him. Note, The best preparative for the work of the ministry, is an acquaintance and communion with Jesus Christ. Those that would serve Christ, must first be with him, John xii. 26. Paul had Christ revealed, not only to him but in him, before he went to preach him among the Gentiles, Gal. i. 16. By the lively acts of faith, and the frequent exercise of prayer and meditation, that fellowship with Christ must be maintained and kept up, which is a requisite qualification for the work of the ministry. 3. By teaching them; they were with him as scholars or pupils, and he taught them privately besides the benefit they had by his public preaching; he opened the scriptures to them, and opened their understandings to understand the scriptures; to them it was given to know the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven, and to them they were made plain. Note, Those that design to be teachers must first be learners; they must receive that they may give; they must be able to teach others, 2 Tim. ii. 2. Gospel truths must be first committed to them before they be commissioned to be gospel ministers. To give men authority to teach others that have not an ability, is but a mockery to God and the church; it is sending a message by the hand of a fool, Prov. xxvi. 6. Christ taught his disciples before he sent them forth, chap. v. 2. and afterwards, when he enlarged their commission, he gave them more ample instructions, Acts i. 3.

2. What the commission was that he gave them.

1. He called them to him, ver. 1. He had called them to come after him before, now he calls them to come to him, admits them into a greater familiarity, and will not have them to keep at such a distance as they had hitherto observed. Those that humble themselves shall thus be exalted. The priests under the law were said to draw near and approach unto God, nearer than the people; the same may be said of gospel ministers; they are called to draw near to Christ, which as it is an honour, so it should strike an awe upon them remembering that Christ will be sanctified in those that come nigh unto him. It is observable, when the disciples were to be instructed, they came unto him of their own accord, Matt. v. 1. But now they were to be ordained, he called them. Note, It well becomes the disciples of Christ to be more forward to learn than to teach. In the sense of our own ignorance we must seek opportunities to be taught; and in the same sense we must wait for a call, a clear call, ere we take upon us to teach others; for no man ought to take his honour to himself.

2. He gave them power, ἐξουσίαν, authority in his name, to command men to obedience, and for the confirmation of that authority, to command devils too into a subjection. Note, All rightful authority is derived from Jesus Christ. All power is given to him without limitation, and the subordinate powers that are ordained of him. Some of his honour he put on his ministers, as Moses put some of his on Joshua. Note, It is an undeniable proof of the fulness of power Christ used as Mediator, that he could impart his power to those he employed, and enable them to work the same miracles that he wrought in his name. He gave them power over unclean spirits, and over all manner of sickness. Note, The design of the gospel was to conquer the devil, and to cure the world. These preachers were sent out destitute of all external advantages to recommend them; they had no wealth or learning, or titles of honour, and made a very mean figure; it was therefore requisite they should have some extraordinary power to advance them above the Scribes.

1. He gave them power against unclean spirits to cast them out. Note, The power that is committed to the ministers of Christ, is directly levelled against the devil and his kingdom. The devil as an unclean spirit, is working both in doctrinal errors, Rev. xvi. 13. and in practical debauchery, 2 Pet. ii. 10. and in both these ministers have a charge against him. This here is meant of a power to cast him out of the bodies of people; but that was to signify the destruction of his spiritual kingdom, and all the works of the devil; for which purpose the Son of God was manifested.

2. He gave them power to heal all manner of sickness. He authorized them to work miracles for the confirmation of their doctrine, to prove that it was of God; and they were to work useful miracles for the illustration of it, to prove that it is not only faithful, but well worthy of all acceptance; that the design of the gospel is to heal and save. Moses's miracles were many of them for destruction; those Mahomet pretended to were for ostentation: but the miracles Christ wrought and appointed his apostles to work were all for edification, and speak him not only the great teacher and ruler, but the great redeemer of the world. Observe, What an emphasis is laid upon the extent of their power to all manner of sickness, and all manner of disease without exception, even of those that are reckoned incurable and the reproach of physicians. Note, In the grace of the gospel there is a salve for every sore, a remedy for every malady. There is no spiritual disease so malignant, so inveterate, but there is a sufficiency of power in Christ for the cure of it. Let none therefore say there is no hope, or that the breach is wide as the sea, that cannot be healed.

3. The number and names of those that were commissioned; they are made apostles, that is, messengers. An angel and an apostle both signify the same thing, one sent on an errand; an ambassador. All faithful ministers are sent of Christ, but those that were first and immediately sent by him, are eminently called apostles, the prime ministers of state in his kingdom. Yet this was but the infancy of their office; it was when Christ ascended on high that he gave some apostles, Eph. iv. 11. Christ himself is called an apostle. Heb. iii. 1. for he was sent by the Father, and so sent them, John xx. 21. The prophets were called God's messengers.

1. Their number was twelve, referring to the number of the tribes of Israel, and the sons of Jacob that were the patriarchs of those tribes. The gospel church must be the Israel of God; the Jews must be first invited into it; the apostles must be spiritual fathers to beget a seed to Christ. Israel after the flesh is to be rejected for their infidelity, these twelve therefore are appointed to be the fathers of another Israel. These twelve by their doctrines were to judge the twelve tribes of Israel, Luke xxii. 30. These were the twelve stars that made up the church's crown, Rev. xii. 1. the twelve foundations of the new Jerusalem, Rev. xxi. 12-14. typified by the twelve precious stones in Aaron's breast-plate, the twelve loaves on the table of shew-bread, the twelve wells of water at Elime. This was that famous jury (and to make it a grand jury, Paul was added to it) that was empaneled to enquire between the King of kings, and the body of mankind, and in this chapter they have their charge given them by him to whom all judgment was committed.

2. Their names are here left upon record, and it is their honour; yet in this they had more reason to rejoice, that their names were written in heaven, Luke x. 20. when the high and mighty names of the great ones of the earth are buried in the dust.

1. There are some of these twelve apostles that we know no more of from the scriptures but only their names: as Bartholomew and Simon the Canaanite, and yet they were faithful servants to Christ and his church. Note, All the good ministers of Christ are not like famous, or their actions alike celebrated.

2. They are named by couples; for at first they were sent forth two and two, because two are better than one; they would be serviceable to each other, and the more serviceable jointly to Christ and souls; what one forgot the other would remember, and out of the mouth of two witnesses every word would be established. Three couple of them were brethren; Peter and Andrew, James and John, and the other James and Lebbeus. Note, Friendship and fellowship ought to be kept up among relations, and to be made serviceable to religion. It is an excellent thing when brethren by nature are brethren by grace, and those two bonds strengthen each other.

3. Peter is named first because he was first called; or because he was the most forward man among them, and upon all occasions made himself the mouth of the rest, and he was to be the apostle of the circumcision; but that gave him no power over the rest of the apostles, nor is there the least mark of any supremacy that was given to him or ever claimed by him in this sacred college.

4. Matthew, the penman of this gospel, is here joined with Thomas, ver. 3. But in two things varying from the accounts of Mark and Luke, (Mark iii. 18. Luke vi. 16.) There Matthew is put first, in that order it was likely he was ordained before Thomas; but here in his own catalogue Thomas is put first. Note, It well becomes the disciples of Christ in honour to prefer one another. There he is only called Matthew, here Matthew the publican, the toll-gatherer or collector of the customs, who was called from that infamous employment to be an apostle. Note, It is good for those who are advanced to honour with Christ, to look unto the rock whence they were hewn; often to remember what they were before Christ called them, that thereby they may be kept humble, and divine grace may be the more glorified. Matthew the apostle was Matthew the publican.

5. Simon is called the Canaanite, or rather the Canite, from Cana of Galilee, where probably he was born; or Simon the Zealot, which some make to be the signification of Καναϊτης.

6. Judas Iscariot is always named last, and with that black brand upon his name, who also betrayed him; which intimates, that from the first Christ knew what a wretch he was, that he had a devil, and would prove a traitor; yet Christ took him among the apostles, that he might not be a surprise and discouragement to his church, if at any time the vilest scandals should break out in the best societies. Such spots there have been in our feasts of charity; tares among the wheat, wolves among the sheep; but there is a day of discovery and separation coming, when hypocrites shall be unmasked and discarded. Neither the apostleship nor the rest of the apostles were ever the worse for Judas being one of the twelve; while his wickedness was concealed and did not break out.

5. These twelve Jesus sent forth, and commanded them, saying, Go not into the way of the Gentiles, and into any city of the Samaritans enter ye not: 6. But go rather to the lost sheep of the house of Israel. 7. And as ye go, preach, saying, The kingdom of heaven is at hand. 8. Heal the sick, cleanse the lepers, raise the dead, cast out devils; freely ye have received, freely give. 9. Provide neither gold, nor silver, nor brass in your purses, 10. Nor scrip for your journey, neither two coats, neither shoes, nor yet staves: (for the workman is worthy of his meat.) 11. And into whatsoever city or town ye shall enter, enquire who in it is worthy; and there abide till ye go thence. 12. And when ye come into a house, salute it. 13. And if the house be worthy, let your peace come upon it: but if it be not worthy, let your peace return to you. 14. And whosoever shall not receive you, nor hear your words, when ye depart out of that house or city, shake off the dust off your feet. 15. Verily I say unto you, It shall be more tolerable for the land of Sodom and Gomorrah in the day of judgment, than for that city.

We have here the instructions that Christ gave his disciples, when he gave them their commission. Whether this charge was given them in a continued discourse, or the several articles of it hinted to them at several times, is not material; in this he commanded them. Jacob's blessing his sons is called his enjoining them, and with these commands Christ commanded a blessing. Observe,

First, The people to whom he sent them. These ambassadors are directed what place to go to.

1. Not to the Gentiles or the Samaritans. They must not go into the way of the Gentiles, not into any road out of the land of Israel, whatever temptations they might have. The Gentiles must not have the gospel brought them till the Jews have first refused it. As to Samaritans, who were the posterity of that mongrel people that the king of Assyria planted about Samaria, their country lay between Judea and Galilee, so that they could not avoid, going into the way of the Samaritans, but they must not enter into any of their cities. Christ had declined manifesting himself to the Gentiles or Samaritans, and therefore the apostles must not preach to them. If the gospel be hid from any place, Christ thereby hides himself from that place. This restraint was upon them only in the first mission, afterwards they were appointed to go into all the world, and teach all nations.

2. But to the lost sheep of the house of Israel. To them Christ appropriated his own ministry, Matt. xv. 24. for he was a minister of the circumcision, Rom. xv. 8. And therefore to them the apostles, who were but his attendants and agents, must be confined. The first offer of salvation must be made to the Jews, Acts iii. 26. Note, Christ had a particular and very tender concern for the house of Israel: they were beloved for the fathers' sakes, Rom. xi. 28. He looked with compassion upon them as lost sheep, whom he as a shepherd was to gather out of the by-paths of sin and error, into which they were gone astray, and in which, if not reduced, they would wander endlessly. See Jer. 1. 6. The Gentiles also had been as lost sheep, 1 Pet. ii. 25. Christ gives this description of those to whom they were sent to quicken them to diligence in the work; they were sent to the house of Israel, (of which number they themselves lately were) whom they could not but pity, and be desirous to help.

Secondly, The preaching work which he appointed them. He did not send them forth without an errand, no, As ye go, preach, ver. 7. They were to be itinerant preachers; wherever they came they must proclaim the beginning of the gospel, saying, The kingdom of heaven is at hand. Not that they must say nothing else, but this must be their text, on this subject they must enlarge: let people know that the kingdom of the Messiah, who is the Lord from heaven, is now to be set up according to the scriptures; from whence it follows, that men must repent of their sins and forsake them, that they might be admitted to the privileges of that kingdom. It is said, Mark vi. 12. they went out and preached that men should repent; which was the proper use and application of this doctrine, concerning the approach of the kingdom of heaven. They must therefore expect to hear more of this long-looked for Messiah shortly, and must be ready to receive his doctrine, to believe in him, and to submit to his yoke. The preaching of this was like the morning light, to give notice of the approach of the rising sun. How unlike was this to the preaching of Jonah, which proclaimed ruin at hand? Jonah iii. 4. This proclaims salvation at hand, nigh them that fear God; mercy and truth meet together: Psalm lxxxv. 9, 10. that is the kingdom of heaven at hand. Not so much the personal presence of the king, that must not be doted upon, but a spiritual kingdom which is to be set up, when his bodily presence is removed, in the hearts of men.

Now this was the same that John Baptist and Christ had preached before. Note, People need to have good truths pressed again and again upon them, and if they be preached and heard with new affections, they are as if they were fresh to us. Christ in the gospel is the same yesterday, to day, and for ever: Heb. xiii. 8. Afterwards indeed when the spirit was poured out and the Christian church was formed, this kingdom of heaven came, which was now spoken of as at hand; but the kingdom of heaven must still be the subjects of our preaching: Now it is come, we must tell people it is come to them, and must lay before them the precepts and privileges of it; and there is a kingdom of glory yet to come, which we must speak of as at hand, and quicken people to diligence from the consideration of that.

Thirdly, The power he gave them to work miracles for the confirmation of their doctrine, ver. 8. When he sent them to preach the same doctrine that he had preached, he empowered them to confirm it by the same divine seals, which could never be set to a lie. This needs not now the kingdom of God is come; to call for miracles now, is to lay again the foundation when the building is reared. The point being settled, and the doctrine of Christ sufficiently attested by the miracles which Christ and his apostles wrought, it is tempting God to ask for more signs. They are directed here,

1. To use their power in doing good; not go and remove mountains, or fetch fire from heaven, but heal the sick, cleanse the lepers. They are sent abroad as public blessings, to intimate to the world, that love and goodness was the spirit and genius of that gospel which they came to preach, and that kingdom which they were employed to set up. By this it would appear that they were the servants of that God who is good and doth good, and whose mercy is over all his works; and that the intention of the doctrine they preached was to heal sick souls, and to raise those that were dead in sin; and therefore perhaps that of raising the dead is mentioned; for though we read not of their raising any to life before the resurrection of Christ, yet they were instrumental to raise many to spiritual life.

2. In doing good freely; freely ye have received, freely give. Those that had power to heal all diseases, had an opportunity to enrich themselves; who would not purchase such easy certain cures at any rate? Therefore they are cautioned not to make a gain of the power they had to work miracles. They must cure gratis, further to exemplify the nature and complexion of the gospel kingdom, which is made up not only of grace, but free grace. Gratia gratis data, Rom. iii. 24. freely by his grace. Buy medicines without money and without price, Isa. lv. 1. And the reason is, because freely you have received. Their power to heal the sick cost them nothing, and therefore they must not make any secular advantages to themselves of it. Simon Magus would not have given money for the gifts of the holy Ghost, if he had not hoped to get money by them, Acts viii. 18. Note, The consideration of Christ's freeness in doing good to us should make us free in doing good to others.

Fourthly, The provision that must be made for them in this expedition; it is a thing to be considered in sending an ambassador, who must bear the charge of the embassy. As to that,

1. They must make no provisions for it themselves, ver. 9, 10. Provide neither gold nor silver. As on the one hand they shall not raise estates by their work, so on the other hand, they shall not spend what little they have of their own upon it. This was confined to the present mission, and Christ would teach them, 1. To act under the conduct of human prudence. They were now to make but a short sally out, and were soon to return to their master, and to their head-quarters again, and therefore why should they burden themselves with that which they would have no occasion for? 2. To act in dependence upon divine providence. They must be taught to live without taking thought for life, Matt. vi. 25, &c. Note, Those who go upon Christ's errand, have of all people most reason to trust him for food convenient. Doubtless he will not be wanting to those that are working for him. Those whom he employs, as they are taken under special protection, so they are intitled to special provisions. Christ's hired servants shall have bread enough and to spare, while we abide faithful to God and our duty, and are in care to do our work well, we may cast all our other care upon God; Jehovah-jireh, let the Lord provide for us and ours as he thinks fit.

2. They might expect that those they were sent to would provide for them what was necessary, ver. 10. The workman is worthy of his meat. They must not expect to be fed by miracles, as Eliah was; but they might depend upon God to incline the hearts of those they went among to be kind to them and provide for them. Though they who serve at the altar may not expect to grow rich by the altar, yet they may expect to live, and to live comfortably upon it, 1 Cor. ix. 13, 14. It is fit they should have their maintenance from their work. Ministers are and must be workmen, labourers, and those that are so are worthy of their meat, so as not to be forced to any other labour for the earning of it. Christ would have his disciples, as not to distrust their God, so not to distrust their countrymen, so far as to doubt of a comfortable subsistence among them. If you preach to them, and endeavour to do good among them, surely they will give you meat and drink enough for your necessities; and if they do, never desire dainties, God will pay you your wages hereafter, and it will be running on in the mean time.

Fifthly, The proceedings they were to make in dealing with any place, ver. 11—15. They went abroad they knew not whither, uninvited, unexpected, knowing none, and known of none; the land of their nativity was to them a strange land; what rule must they go by? what course must they take? Christ would not send them out without full instructions, and here they are.

1. They are here directed how to carry themselves towards those that were strangers to them. How to do,

1. In strange towns and cities; when you come to a town, enquire who in it is worthy. 1. It is supposed there were some such in every place who were better disposed than others to receive the gospel, and the preachers of it; though it was a time of general corruption and apostasy. Note, In the worst of times and places we may charitably hope there are some that distinguish themselves, and are better than their neighbours; some that swim against the stream, and are as wheat amongst the chaff. There were saints in Nero's household. Enquire who is worthy, i. e. who there are that have some fear of God before their eyes, and have made a good improvement of the light and knowledge they have; the best are far from meriting the favour of a gospel-offer; but some would be more likely than others to give the apostles and their message a favourable entertainment, and would not trample these pearls under their feet. Note, Previous dispositions to that which is good, are both directions and encouragements to ministers in dealing with people: There is most hope of the word being profitable to those who are already so well inclined, as that it is acceptable to them; and there is here and there one such. 2. They must enquire out such; not enquire for the best inns; public-houses were no proper places for them that neither took money with them, ver. 9. nor expected to receive any, ver. 8. But they must hearken out for accommodation in private houses, with those that would entertain them well, and expect no other recompence for it but a prophet's reward, an apostle's reward, their praying and preaching. Note, Those that entertain the gospel, must neither grudge the expence of it, nor promise themselves to get by it in this world. They must enquire, not who is rich, but who is worthy; not who is the best gentleman, but who is the best man. Note, Christ's disciples, wherever they come, should ask for the good people of the place, and be acquainted with them; when we took God for our God, we took his people for our people, and like will rejoice in its like. Paul in all his travels found out the brethren if there were any, Acts xxviii. 14. It is implied, that if they did enquire who were worthy, they might discover them. Those that were better than their neighbours would be taken notice of, and any one could tell them their lives an honest, sober, good man; for this is a character, which like the ointment of the right hand bewrays itself, and fills the house with its odours. Every body knew where the seer's house was, 1 Sam. ix. 18. 3. In the house of those they found worthy they must continue, which intimates that they were to make so short a stay at each town, that they needed not change their lodging, but whatever house providence brought them to at first, there they must continue till they left that town. Those are justly suspected, as having no good design that are often changing their quarters. Note, It becomes the disciples of Christ to make the best of that which is, to abide by it, and not to be shifting upon every dislike or inconvenience.

2. In strange houses. When they had found the house of one they thought worthy, they must at their entrance salute it. In those common civilities be beforehand with people, in token of your humility. Think it not a disparagement to invite yourselves into a house, nor stand upon the punctilio of being invited. Salute the family, 1. To draw on further discourse, and so to introduce your message. From matters of common conversation, we may insensibly pass into that communication which is good to the use of edifying. 2. To try whether you are welcome or no; you will take notice whether the salutation be received shily and coldly, or with a ready return. He that will not receive your salutation kindly, will not receive your message kindly; for he that is unskilful and unfruitful in a little will also be in much, Luke xvi. 10. 3. To insinuate yourselves into their good opinion. Salute the family, that they may see though you are serious you are not morose. Note, Religion teacheth us to be courteous and civil, and obliging to all with whom we have to do. Though the apostles went out backed with the authority of the Son of God himself, yet their instructions were, when they came into a house, not to command it, but to salute it; for love's sake rather to beseech, is the evangelical way, Philemon 8, 9. Souls are first drawn to Christ with the cords of a man, and kept to him by the bands of love, Hos. xi. 4. When Peter made the first offer of the gospel to Cornelius a Gentile, Peter was first saluted; see Acts x. 25. for the Gentiles courted that which the Jews were courted to.

When they had saluted the family after a godly sort, they must by the return judge concerning the family, and proceed accordingly. Note, The eye of God is upon us to observe what entertainment we give to good people and good ministers; if the house be worthy, let your peace come and rest upon it; if not, let it return to you, ver. 13. It seems then after they had enquired for the most worthy, ver. 11. it was possible they might light upon those that were unworthy. Note, Though it is wisdom to hearken to, yet it is folly to rely upon, common report and opinion; we ought to use a judgment of discretion, and to see with our own eyes. The wisdom of the prudent is himself to understand his own way. Now this rule is intended,

1. For satisfaction to the apostles. The common salutation was, peace be unto you; this, as they used, was turned into gospel; it was the peace of God, the peace of the kingdom of heaven that they wished: Now lest they should make a scruple of pronouncing this blessing upon all promiscuously, because many were utterly unworthy of it, this is to clear them of that scruple: Christ tells them that his gospel-prayer (forso it was now become) should be put up for all, as the gospel-proffer was made to all indefinitely, and let God alone who knows the heart, and every man's true character to determine the issue of it. If the house be worthy, it will reap the benefit of your blessing; if not there is no harm done, you will not lose the benefit of it; it shall return to you, as David's prayers for his ungrateful enemies did, Psalm xxxv. 13. Note, It becomes us to judge charitably of all, all, pray heartily for all, and carry ourselves courteously to all, for that is our part, and then leave it with God what effect it shall have upon them; for that is his part.

2. For direction to them. If upon your salutation it appear that they are indeed worthy, let them have more of your company, and so let your peace come upon them, preach the gospel to them, peace by Jesus Christ; but if otherwise, if they carry it rudely to you and shut their doors against you, let your peace, as much as in you lies, return to you. Retract what you have said, and turn your backs upon them; by slighting this they have made themselves unworthy of the rest of your favours, and cut themselves short of them. Note, Great blessings are often lost by a neglect seemingly small and inconsiderable, when men are in their probation and upon their behaviour. Thus Esau lost his birthright, Gen. xxv. 34. and Saul his kingdom, 1 Sam. xiii. 13, 14.

2. They are here directed how to carry it towards those that were refusers of them. The case is put, ver. 14. of those that would not receive them, nor hear their words. The apostles might think now they had such a doctrine to preach, and such a power to work miracles for the confirmation of it; no doubt but they should be universally entertained and bid welcome: They are therefore told before, that there would be those that would slight them, and put contempt on them and their message. Note, The best and most powerful preachers of the gospel must expect to meet with some that will not so much as give them the hearing, nor shew them any token of respect. Many turn a deaf ear even to the joyful sound, and will not hearken to the voice of the charmers, charm they never so wisely. Observe, They will not receive you, and they will not hear your words. Note, Contempt of the gospel and contempt of gospel-ministers commonly go together, and they will either of them be construed a contempt of Christ, and will be reckoned for accordingly.

Now in this case we have here,

1. The directions given to the apostles what to do. They must depart out of that house or city. Note, The gospel will not tarry long with those that put it away from them. At their departure they must shake off the dust of their feet. 1. In detestation of their wickedness; it was so abominable, that it did even pollute the ground they went upon, which must therefore be shaken off as a filthy thing. The apostles must have no fellowship or communion with them; must not so much as carry away the dust of their city with them. The work of them that turn aside shall not cleave to me, Psal. ci. 3. The prophet was not to eat or drink in Bethel, 1 Kings xiii. 9. 2. As a denunciation of wrath against them. It was to signify that they were base and vile as dust, and God would shake them off. The dust of the apostles' feet which they left behind them would witness against them, and be brought in evidence that the gospel had been preached to them, Mark vi. 11. Compare James v. 3. See this practised, Acts xiii. 51. Acts xviii. 6. Note, Those who despise God and his gospel shall be lightly esteemed.

2. The doom cast upon such wilful recusants, ver. 15. It shall be more tolerable in the day of judgment for the land of Sodom, as wicked a place as it was. Note, 1. There is a day of judgment coming, when all those that refused the gospel will certainly be called to account for it; however they now make a jest of it. Those that would not hear the doctrine that would save them, shall be made to hear the sentence that will ruin them. Their judgment is respite till that day. 2. There are different degrees of punishment in that day. All the pains of hell will be intolerable, but some will be more so than others. Some sinners sink deeper into hell than others, and are beaten with more stripes. 3. The condemnation of those that reject the gospel, will in that day be severer and heavier than that of Sodom and Gomorrah. Sodom is said to suffer the vengeance of eternal fire, Jude 7. But that vengeance will come with an aggravation upon those that despise the great salvation. Sodom and Gomorrah were exceeding wicked, Gen. xiii. 13. and that which filled up the measure of their iniquity was, that they received not the angels that were sent to them but abused them, Gen. xix. 4, 5. and hearkened not to their words, ver. 14. And yet it will be more tolerable for them, than for those who receive not Christ's ministers, and hearken not to their words. God's wrath against them will be more flaming, and their own reflections upon themselves more cutting. Son remember, will sound most dreadfully in the ears of such as had a fair offer made them, of eternal life, and chose death rather. The iniquity of Israel, when God sent them his servants the prophets, is represented as upon that account more heinous than the iniquity of Sodom, Ezek. xvi. 48, 49. much more now he sent them his Son the great prophet.

16. ¶ Behold I send you forth as sheep in the midst of wolves: be ye therefore wise as serpents, and harmless as doves. 17. But beware of men: for they will deliver you up to the councils, and they will scourge you in their synagogues; 18. And ye shall be brought before governors and kings for my sake, for a testimony against them and the Gentiles. 19. But when they deliver you up, take no thought how or what ye shall speak: for it shall be given you in that same hour what ye shall speak. 20. For it is not ye that speak, but the spirit of your Father which speaketh in you. 21. And the brother shall deliver up the brother to death, and the father the child: and the children shall rise up against their parents, and cause them to be put to death. 22. And ye shall be hated of all men for my name's sake: but he that endureth to the end, shall be saved. 23. But when they persecute you in this city, flee ye into another: for verily I say unto you, Ye shall not have gone over the cities of Israel, till the Son of man be come. 24. The disciple is not above his master, nor the servant above his lord. 25. It is enough for the disciple that he be as his master, and the servant as his lord: if they have called the master of the house of Beelzebub, how much more shall they call them of his household. 26. Fear them not therefore: for there is nothing covered, that shall not be revealed; and hid, that shall not be known. 27. What I tell you in darkness, that speak ye in light: and what ye hear in the ear, that preach ye upon the house-tops. 28. And fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul: but rather fear him which is able to destroy both soul and body in hell.

29. Are not two sparrows sold for a farthing? and one of them shall not fall on the ground without your Father. 30. But the very hairs of your head are all numbered. 31. Fear ye not therefore, ye are of more value than many sparrows. 32. Whosoever therefore shall confess me before men, him will I confess also before my Father which is in heaven. 33. But whosoever shall deny me before men, him will I also deny before my Father which is in heaven. 34. Think not that I am come to send peace on earth: I came not to send peace, but a sword. 35. For I am come to set a man at variance against his father, and the daughter against her mother, and the daughter-in-law against her mother-in-law. 36. And a man's foes shall be they of his own household. 37. He that loveth father and mother more than me, is not worthy of me: and he that loveth son or daughter more than me, is not worthy of me. 38. And he that taketh not his cross, and followeth after me, is not worthy of me. 39. He that findeth his life shall lose it: and he that loseth his life for my sake, shall find it. 40. ¶ He that receiveth you, receiveth me: and he that receiveth me, receiveth him that sent me. 41. He that receiveth a prophet in the name of a prophet, shall receive a prophet's reward; and he that receiveth a righteous man in the name of a righteous man, shall receive a righteous man's reward. 42. And whosoever shall give to drink unto one of these little ones, a cup of cold water only in the name of a disciple, verily I say unto you, he shall in no wise lose his reward.

All these verses relate to the sufferings of Christ's ministers in their work, which they are here taught to expect and prepare for, and are here directed how to bear them, and how to go on with their work in the midst of them. And this part of the sermon looks further than to their present mission; for we find not that they met with any great hardships or persecutions while Christ was with them, nor were they well able to bear them; but they are here warned of the troubles they should meet with, when after Christ's resurrection their commission should be enlarged, and the kingdom of heaven, which was at hand, should be actually set up; they dreamed of nothing then but outward pomp and power, but Christ tells them they must expect greater sufferings than they were yet called to; that they should then be made prisoners, when they expected to be made princes. It is good to be told what troubles we may hereafter meet with, that we may provide accordingly, and may not boast, as if we had put off the harness when we are yet but girding it on.

We have here intermixed, 1. Predictions of trouble. And 2. Prescriptions of counsel and comfort with reference to it.

First, We have here predictions of trouble, which the disciples should meet with in their work: Christ foresaw their sufferings as well as his own, and yet will have them go on as he went on himself; and he foretold them, not only that the troubles might not be a surprise to them, and so a shock to their faith, but that being the accomplishment of a prediction, they might be a confirmation to their faith.

He tells them what they should suffer and from whom.

1. What they should suffer, hard things to be sure; for, Behold, I will send you forth as sheep in the midst of wolves, ver. 16. And what may a flock of poor helpless unguarded sheep expect in the midst of a herd of ravenous wolves, but to be worried and torn. Note, 1. Wicked men are like wolves, in whose nature it is to devour and destroy. 2. God's people, and especially his ministers, are like sheep among them, of a contrary nature and disposition, exposed to them, and commonly hardened by them, and an easy prey to them. It looked unkind in Christ to expose those to so much danger who had left all to follow him; but he knew the glory reserved for his sheep, when in the great day they shall be set on his right hand, would be a recompence sufficient for sufferings as well as services. They are as sheep among wolves, that is frightful; but Christ sends them forth, that is comfortable; for he that sends them forth will protect them and bear them out. But that they might know the worst, he tells them particularly what they must expect.

1. They must expect to be hated, ver. 22. Ye shall be hated for my name's sake; that is the root of all the rest, and a bitter root it is. Note, Those whom Christ loves, the world hates: as whom the court blesteth, the country curseth. If the world hated Christ without cause, John xv. 25. no marvel if it hated those that bore his image and served his interests. We hate what is nauseous, and they are counted as the off-scouring of all things, 1 Cor. iv. 13. We hate what is noxious, and they are counted the troublers of the land, 1 Kings xviii. 17. and the tormentors of their neighbours, Rev. xi. 10. It is grievous to be hated, and to be the object of so much ill-will, but it is for thy name's sake; which as it speaks the true reason of the hatred, whatever is pretended, so it speaks comfort to them who are thus hated, it is for a good cause, and they have a good friend that shares with them in it, and takes it to himself.

2. They must expect to be apprehended and arraigned as malefactors. Their restless malice is resistless malice, and they will not only attempt, but will prevail to deliver you up to the councils, ver. 17-18, to the bench of aldermen or justices, that take care of the public peace. Note, A deal of mischief is often done to good men under colour of law and justice. In the place of judgment there is wickedness persecuting wickedness, Eccl. iii. 16. They must look for trouble, not only from inferior magistrates in the councils, but from governors and kings the supreme magistrates: To be brought before them, under such black representations as were commonly made of Christ's disciples, was dreadful and dangerous; for the wrath of a king is as the roaring of a lion; We find this often fulfilled in the acts of the apostles.

3. They must expect to be put to death, ver. 21. They shall deliver them to death, to death in state with pomp and solemnity, when it shews itself most as the king of terrors. The malice of the enemies rageth so high as to inflict this; it is the blood of the saints that they thirst after; the faith and patience of the saints stand so firm as to expect this; Neither count I my life dear to myself. The wisdom of Christ permits it, knowing how to make the blood of the martyrs the seed of the truth, and the seed of the church. By this noble army's not loving their lives to the death Satan has been vanquished, and the kingdom of Christ and its interests greatly advanced, Rev. xi. 11. They were put to death as criminals, so the enemies meant it, but really

4. They must expect in the midst of these sufferings to be branded with the most odious and ignominious names and characters that could be. Persecutors would be ashamed in this world, if they did not first dress up those in bear skins whom they thus bait, and represent them in such colours as may serve to justify such cruelties. The blackest of all the ill characters they give them is here instanced in; they call them Beelzebub, the name of the prince of the devils, ter. 25. They represent them as ringleaders of the interest of the kingdom of darkness, and since every one thinks he hates the devil, thus they endeavour to make them odious to all mankind. See, and be amazed to see how this world is imposed upon! 1. Satan's sworn enemies are represented as his friends: The apostles who pulled down the devil's kingdom were called devils. Thus men laid to their charge, not only things which they knew not, but things which they abhorred, and were directly contrary to, and the reverse of. 2. Satan's sworn servants would be thought to be his enemies, and they never more effectually do his work than when they pretend to be fighting against him. Many times those that themselves are nearest akin to the devil, are most apt to father others upon him; and those that paint him on others cloths, have him reigning in their own hearts. It is well there is a day coming, when (as it follows here, ter. 26.) that which is hid will be brought to light.

5. These sufferings are here represented by a sword and division, ter. 34, 35. Think not that I am come to send peace, i. e. temporal peace and outward prosperity; they thought Christ came to give all his followers wealth and power in the world; no, saith Christ, I did not come so much as to give them peace; peace in heaven they may be sure of, but not peace on earth. Christ came to give us peace with God, peace in our consciences, peace with our brethren, but in the world ye shall have tribulation. Note, Those mistake in the design of the gospel, who think their profession of it will secure them from for it, will certainly expose them to, trouble in this world. If all the world would receive Christ, there would then follow a universal peace, but while there are and will be so many that reject him, and those not only the children of this world, but the seed of the serpent, the children of God, that are called out of the world, must expect to feel the fruits of their enmity.

(1.) Look not for peace, but a sword. Christ came to give the sword of the world, with which his disciples fight against the world, and conquering work this sword hath made, Rev. vi. 2.—xix. 21. And the sword of persecution, with which the world fights against the disciples, being cut to the heart with the sword of the word, Acts vii. 54. and tormented by the testimony of Christ's witnesses, Rev. xi. 10. and cruel work this sword made. Christ sent that gospel, which gives occasion for the drawing of this sword, and so may be said to send this sword; he orders his church into a suffering state, for the trial and praise of his peoples graces, and the filling up of the measure of their enemies sins.

(2.) Look not for peace, but division, ter. 35. I am come to set men at variance. This effect of the preaching of the gospel, is not the fault of the gospel, but of those that do not receive it. When some believe the things that are spoken, and others believe them not, the faith of those that believe condemns those that believe not, and therefore they have an enmity to them that believe. Note, The most violent and implacable feuds have ever been those that have arisen from difference in religion: No enmity like that of the persecuted, no resolution like that of the persecuted. Thus Christ tells his disciples what they should suffer, and these were hard sayings; if they could bear these, they could bear any thing. Note, Christ has dealt fairly and faithfully with us in telling us the worst we can meet with in his service; and he would have us deal so with ourselves in sitting down and counting the cost.

2. They are here told from whom and by whom they should suffer these hard things. Surely hell itself must be let loose, and devils, those desperate and despairing spirits, that have no part or lot in the great salvation, must become incarnate ere such spiteful enemies could be found to a doctrine, the substance of which was good-will towards men, and the reconciling of the world to God; no, would you think it? all this mischief ariseth to the preachers of the gospel, from those whom they came to preach salvation to: Thus the blood-thirsty hate the upright, but the just seek his soul, Prov. xxix. 10. and therefore heaven is so much opposed on earth, because earth is so much under the power of hell, Eph. ii. 2.

These hard things Christ's disciples must suffer,

1. From men, ter. 17. Beware of men, you will have need to stand upon your guard, even against those that are of the same nature with you; such is the depravity and degeneracy of that nature, homo homini lupus; crafty and politic as men, but cruel and barbarous as beasts, and wholly divested of the thing called humanity. Note, Persecuting rage and enmity turns men into brutes, into devils. Paul at Ephesus fought with beasts in the shape of men, 1 Cor. xv. 32. It is a sad pass that the world is come to, when the best friends it has have need to beware of men. It aggravates the troubles of Christ's suffering servants, that they arise from those that are bone of their bone, made of the same blood. Persecutors are in this respect worse than beasts, that they prey upon those of their own kind; Servis inter se convenit ursoris. It is very grievous to have men rise up against us, Psal. cxxiv. 1. from whom we might expect protection and sympathy; men, and no more, meer men; men, and not saints; natural men, 1 Cor. ii. 14. men of this world, Psal. xvii. 14. Saints are more than men, and are redeemed from among men, and therefore are hated by them, Rev. xiv. 14. The nature of man, if he be not sanctified, is the worst nature in the world next to that of the devils. They are men, and are therefore subordinate, depending dying creatures; they are men, but they are but men, Psal. ix. 20. and who art thou, that thou shouldst be afraid of a man that shall die? Isa. li. 12. Beware of the men, so Dr. Hammond; those you wot of, the men of the Jewish Sanhedrim, which disallowed Christ, 1 Pet. ii. 4.

2. From professing men, men that have a form of godliness, and make a shew of religion. They will scourge you in their synagogues, their places of meeting for the worship of God, and for the exercise of their church discipline, so that they looked upon the scourging of Christ's ministers to be a branch of their religion. Paul was five times scourged in the synagogues, 2 Cor. xi. 24. The Jews, under colour of zeal for Moses were the most bitter persecutors of Christ and Christianity, and placed those outrages to the score of their religion. Note, Christ's disciples have suffered much from conscientious persecutors, that scourge them in their synagogues, cast them out and kill them, and think they do God good service, John xvi. 2. and say, let the Lord be glorified, Isa. lxvi. 5. Zech. xi. 4, 5. But the synagogue will be so far from consecrating the persecution, that the persecution doubtless profanes and desecrates the synagogue.

3. From great men and men in authority. The Jews did not only scourge them, which was the utmost their remaining power extended to, but when they could go no further themselves, they delivered them up to the Roman powers, as they did Christ, John xviii. 30. I shall be brought before governors and kings, ver. 18. who having more power, are in a capacity of doing the more mischief. Governors and kings receive their power from Christ, Prov. viii. 15. and should be his servants, and his church's protectors and nursing fathers, but they often use their power against him, and are rebels to Christ, and oppressors of his church. The kings of the earth set themselves against his kingdom, Psal. ii. 1, 2. Acts iv. 25, 26. Note, It has often been the lot of good men to have great men for their enemies.

4. From all men, ter. 22. Ye shall be hated of all men, i. e. of all wicked men, and these are the generality of men, for the whole world lies in wickedness: So few are there that love and own, and countenance Christ's righteous cause, that we may say, the friends of it are hated of all men; they are all gone astray; and therefore eat up my people, Psalm xiv. 3. As far as the apostasy from God goes, so far the enmity against the saints goes: sometimes it appears more general than at other times, but there is something of this poison lurking in the hearts of all the children of disobedience. The world hates you, for it wanders after the beast, Rev. xiii. 3. Every man a liar, and therefore a hater of truth.

5. From those of their own kindred. The brother shall deliver up the brother to death, ver. 21. A man shall be, upon this account, at variance with his own father; nay those of the weaker and tenderer sex too become persecutors and persecuted; the persecuting daughter will be against the believing mother, where natural affection and filial duty, one would think, should prevent or soon extinguish the quarrel; and then no marvel, if the daughter-in-law be against the mother-in-law; where too often the coldness of love seeks occasion of contention, ter. 35. In general, ter. 36. A mans foes shall be they of his own household. They that should be his friends, will be incensed against him for embracing Christianity, and especially for adhering to it when it comes to be persecuted, and will join with his persecutors against him. Note, The strongest bonds of relative love and duty, have often been broken through by an enmity to Christ and his doctrine. Such has been the power of prejudice against the true religion, and zeal for a false one, that all other regards, the most natural and sacred, the most engaging and endearing, have been sacrificed to these Molochs. Those that rage against the Lord, and his anointed ones, break even these bonds in sunder, and cast away even these cords from them, Psal. ii. 2, 3. Christ's spouse suffers hard things from the anger of her own mother's children, Cant. i. 6. Sufferings from such are more grievous, nothing cuts more than this, It was thou a man, mine equal, Psalm lv. 12, 13. and the enmity of such is commonly most implacable; a brother offended is harder to be won than a strong city, Prov. xviii. 19. The martyrologies, both ancient and modern, are full of instances of this. Upon the whole matter, it appears, that all that live godly in Christ Jesus, must suffer persecution; and through many tribulations we must expect to enter into the kingdom of God.

Secondly, With these predictions of trouble we have here prescriptions of counsels and comforts for a time of trial. He sends them out exposed to danger indeed, and expecting it, but withal well armed with instructions and encouragements, sufficient to bear them up, and bear them out in all these trials. Let us gather up what he saith,

First, By way of counsel and direction in several things.

1. Be wise as serpents, ver. 16. You may be so (so some take it, only as a permission) you may be as wary as you please, provided you be harmless as doves. But it is rather to be taken as a precept, recommending to us that wisdom of the prudent which is to understand his way, as useful at all times, but especially in suffering times. Therefore, because you are exposed as sheep among wolves; be ye wise as serpents, not wise as foxes, whose cunning is to deceive others, but as serpents, whose policy is only to defend themselves, and to shift for their own safety. The disciples of Christ are hated and persecuted as serpents, and their ruin sought, and therefore needs the serpent's wisdom. Note, It is the will of Christ that his people and ministers, being so much exposed to troubles in this world as they usually are, should not needlessly expose themselves, but use all fair and lawful means for their own preservation. Christ gave us an example of this wisdom, Matt. xxi. 24, 25—xxii. 17, 18, 19. John viii. 6, 7. besides the many escapes he made out of the hands of his enemies, till his hour was come. See an instance of St. Paul's wisdom, Acts xxiii. 8, 9. In the cause of Christ we must sit loose to life and all its comforts, but must not be prodigal of them. It is the wisdom of the serpent, to secure his head that that may not be broken, to stop his ear to the voice of the charmer, Psal. lxxviii. 4, 5. and to take shelter in the clefts of the rock; and herein we may be wise as serpents. We must be wise, not to pull trouble upon our own heads; wise to keep silence in an evil time, and not to give offence, if we can help it.

2. Be ye harmless as doves. Be mild and meek, and dispassionate; not only do no body any hurt, but bear no body any ill-will; be without gall, as doves are; this must always go along with the former. They are sent forth among wolves, therefore must be wise as serpents, but they are sent forth as sheep; therefore must be harmless as doves. We must be wise, not to wrong ourselves, but rather so than wrong any one else; must use the harmlessness of the dove to bear twenty injuries, rather than the subtilty of the serpent to offer or to return one. Note, It must be the continual care of all Christ's disciples to be innocent and inoffensive in word and deed, especially in consideration of the enemies they are in the midst of. We have need of a dove-like spirit, when we are beset with birds of prey, that we may neither provoke them, nor be provoked by them: David coveted the wings of a dove, on which to fly away and be at rest, rather than the wings of a hawk. The Spirit descended on Christ as a dove, and all believers partake of the Spirit of Christ a dove-like spirit, made for love not for war.

3. Beware of men, ver. 17. Be always upon your guard, and avoid dangerous company; take heed what you say and do, and presume not too far upon any man's fidelity: Be jealous of the most plausible pretensions; trust not in a friend, no, not in the wife of thy bosom, Micah vii. 5. Note, It becomes those that are gracious to be cautious, for we are taught to cease from man. Such a wretched world do we live in, that we know not whom to trust. Ever since our Master was betrayed with a kiss by one of his own disciples, we have need to beware of men, or false brethren.

4. Take no thought how, or what, ye shall speak, ver. 19. When ye are brought before magistrates, carry yourselves decently, but afflict not yourselves with care how you shall come off. A prudent thought there must be, but not an anxious, perplexing, disquieting thought; let this cure be cast upon God, as well as that what you shall eat, and what you shall drink. Do not study to make fine speeches, ad captandam benevolentiam; affect not quaint expressions, flourishes of wit, and laboured periods, which only serve to gild a bad cause, the gold of a good one needs it not. It argues a diffidence of your cause to be solicitous in this manner as if it were not sufficient to speak for itself. You know upon what grounds you go, and then, verbaque praevisam rem non invita sequuntur. Never any spoke better before governors and kings than those three champions, who took no thought before what they should speak: O Nebuchadnezzar, we are not careful to answer thee in this matter, Dan. iii. 16. See Psal. cxix. 46. Note, The disciples of Christ must be more thoughtful how to do well, than how to speak well; how to keep their integrity, than how to vindicate it. Non magna loquimur, sed vivimus, is the best apology.

5. When they persecute you in this city, flee to another, ver. 23. Thus reject them that reject you and your doctrine, and try whether others will not receive you and it. Thus shift for your own safety. Note, In case of imminent peril, the disciples of Christ may, and must secure themselves by flight, when God in his providence opens to them a door of escape. He that flies may fight again. It is no inglorious thing for Christ's soldiers to quit their ground, provided they do not quit their colours: They may go out of the way of danger, though they must not go out of the way of duty. Observe, Christ's care of his disciples, in providing places of retreat and shelter for them, ordering it so, that persecution rageth not in all places at the same time, but when one city is made too hot for them, another is reserved for a cooler shade, and a little sanctuary, a favour to be used and not to be slighted; yet always with this proviso, that no sinful, unlawful means be used to make the escape, for then it is not a door of God's opening. We have many examples to this rule in the history both of Christ and his apostles, in the application of all which to particular cases, wisdom and integrity are profitable to direct.

6. Fear them not, ver. 26. because they can but kill the body, ver. 28. Note, It is the duty and interest of Christ's disciples not to fear the greatest of their adversaries. Those that truly fear God, need not fear man; and those that are afraid of the least sin, need not be afraid of the greatest trouble. The fear of man brings a snare, a perplexing snare, that disturbs our peace; an entangling snare, by which we are drawn into sin; and therefore it must be carefully watched, and striven and prayed against. Be the times never so difficult, enemies never so outrageous, and events never so threatening, yet need we not fear, yet will we not fear, though the earth be removed, while we have so good a God, so good a cause, and so good a hope, through grace.

Yes, this is soon said, but when it comes to the trial, racks and tortures, dungeons and galleys, axes and gibbets, fire and faggot are terrible things, enough to make the stoutest heart to tremble, and to start back, especially when it is plain they may be avoided by a few declining steps, and therefore to fortify us against this temptation, we have here,

(1.) A good reason against this fear, taken from the limited power of the enemies; they kill the body, that is the utmost their rage can extend to; hitherto they can go, if God permit them, but no further; they are not able to kill the soul, nor do it any hurt, and the soul is the man. By this it appears that the soul doth not (as some dream) fall asleep at death, nor is deprived of thought and perception; for then the killing of the body would be the killing of the soul too. The soul is killed when it is separated from God and his love, which is its life, and is made a vessel of his wrath; now this is out of the reach of their power. Tribulation, distress, and persecution may separate us from all the world, but cannot part between us and God, cannot make us either not to love him, or not to be beloved by him, Rom. viii. 35—37. If therefore we were more concerned about our souls, as our jewels, we should be less afraid of men whose power cannot rob us of them: They can but kill the body, which would quickly die of itself, not the soul, which will enjoy itself, and its God in spite of them. They can but crush the cabinet: A heathen set the tyrant at defiance with this, Tunde capsam Anaxarchi, Anaxarchum non laedis; the pearl of price is untouched. Seneca undertakes to make it out, that you cannot hurt a wise and good man, because death itself is no real evil to him. Si maximum illud ultra quod nihil habent irata leges, aut servissimi domini minantur, in quo imperium suum fortuna consumit aequo placidoque animo accipimus, & scimus mortem malum non esse ob hoc ne injuriam quidem. Seneca de Constantia.

7. What I tell you in darkness, that speak ye in light, ver. 27. i. e. whatever hazards you run, go on with your work, publishing and proclaiming the everlasting gospel to all the world; that is your business, mind that. The design of the enemies is not merely to destroy you, but to suppress that, and therefore whatever comes of it, publish that. What I tell you, that speak ye. Note, That which the apostles have delivered to us, is the same that they received from Jesus Christ, 1 Heb. ii. 3. They spake what he told them, that, all that and nothing but that. Those ambassadors received their instructions in private, in darkness, in the ear, in corners, in parables. Many things Christ spake openly, and nothing in secret varying from what he preached in public, John xviii. 20. But the particular instructions he gave his disciples after his resurrection concerning the things pertaining to the kingdom of God, were whispered in the ear, Acts i. 3. for then he never shewed himself openly. But they must deliver their embassy publicly, in the light and upon the house-tops; for the doctrine of the gospel is what all are concerned in, Prov. i. 20, 21—viii. 2, 3. therefore he that hath ears to hear, let him hear. The first indication of the taking in of the Gentiles into the church was upon a house-top, Acts x. 9. Note, There is no part of Christ's gospel that need upon any account to be concealed; the whole counsel of God must be revealed, Acts xx. 27. In never so mixed a multitude let it be plainly and fully delivered.

Secondly, By way of comfort and encouragement. Here is very much said to that purpose and all little enough, considering the many hardships they were to grapple with throughout the course of their ministry and their present weakness, which was such, as that without some powerful support they could scarce bear even the prospect of such usage; Christ therefore shews them why they should be of good cheer.

(1.) Here is one word peculiar to their present mission and their expedition upon it, ver. 23. Ye shall not have gone over the cities of Israel, till the Son of man be come. They were to preach that the kingdom of the Son of man, i. e. the Messiah, was at hand; they were to pray, Thy kingdom come: Now they should not have gone over all the cities of Israel, thus praying and thus preaching, before that kingdom they spoke of should come, in the exaltation of Christ and the pouring out of the Spirit. It was comfort, 1. That what they said should be made good; they said the Son of man is coming, and behold, he comes. Christ will confirm the word of his messsengers, Isa. xlv. 26. 2. That it should be made good quickly. Note, It is matter of comfort to Christ's labourers, that their working time will be short and soon over; the hireling has his day; the work and warfare will in a little time be accomplished. 3. That then they should be advanced to a higher station. When the Son of man comes, they shall be endued with greater power from on high; now they were sent forth as agents and envoys, but in a little time their commission should be enlarged, and they should be sent forth as plenipotentiaries into all the world.

1. That their sufferings were for a testimony against them and the Gentiles, ver. 18. When the Jewish consistories remove you before the Roman governors, that they may have you put to death, your being hurried thus from one judgment-seat to another, will help to make your testimony the more public, and will give you an opportunity of bringing the gospel to the Gentiles as well as to the Jews: Nay, you will testify to them and against them by the very troubles you undergo. Note, God's people, and especially God's ministers, are his witnesses, Isa. xliii. 10. not only in their doing work but in their suffering work: Hence they are called Martyrs, witnesses for Christ, that his truths are of undoubted certainty and value; and being witnesses for him, they are witnesses against those that oppose him and his gospel. The sufferings of the martyrs, as they witness to the truth of the gospel they profess, so they are testimonies of the enmity of their persecutors, and both ways they are a testimony against them, and will be produced in evidence in the great day, when the saints shall judge the world; and the reason of the sentence will be, Inasmuch as you did it unto these, you did unto me. Now if their sufferings be a testimony, how cheerfully should they be borne; for the testimony is not finished till those come, Rev. xi. 7. If they be Christ's witnesses, they shall be sure to have their charges borne.

2. That upon all occasions they should have God's special presence with them, and the immediate assistance of his holy Spirit, particularly when they should be called out to bear their testimony before governors and kings, it shall be given you in the same hour what ye shall speak. Christ's disciples were chosen from among the foolish of the world, unlearned and ignorant men, and therefore might justly distrust their own abilities, especially when they were called before great men. When Moses was sent to Pharaoh he complained, I am not eloquent, Exod. iv. 10. When Jeremiah was set over the kingdoms he objected, I am but a child, Jer. i. 6—10. Now, in answer to this suggestion, 1. They are here promised, that it should be given them, not some time before, but in that same hour what they shall speak. They shall speak extempore, and yet shall speak as much to the purpose as if it had been never so well studied. Note, When God calls us out to speak for him, we may depend upon him to teach us what to say; even then, when we labour under the greatest disadvantages and discouragements. 2. They are here assured that the blessed Spirit should draw up their plea for them. It is not ye that speak, but the Spirit of your Father, which speaketh in you, ver. 20. They were not left to themselves upon such an occasion, but God undertook for them, his Spirit of wisdom spoke in them, as sometimes his providence wonderfully spoke for them, and by both together they were manifested in the consciences even of their persecutors. God gave them an ability not only to speak to the purpose, but what they did say to say it with holy zeal. The same Spirit that assisted them in the pulpit, assisted them at the bar. Those cannot but come off well, that have such an advocate; to whom God saith, as he did to Moses, Exod. iv. 12: Go, and I will be with thy mouth, and with thy heart.

3. That he that endures to the end shall be saved, ver. 22. Here it sounds very comfortable, 1. That there will be an end of these troubles; they may last long, but will not last always. Christ comforted himself with this, and so may his followers, The things concerning me have an end, Luke xxii. 37. Dabit Deus his quoque finem. Note, A believing prospect of the period of our troubles, will be of great use to support us under them. The weary will be at rest, when the wicked cease from troubling, Job iii. 17. God will give an expected end, Jer. xxix. 11. The troubles may seem tedious, like the days of a hireling, but blessed be God, they are not everlasting. 2. That while they continue they may be endured; as they are not eternal, so they are not intolerable; they may be borne, and borne to the end; and therefore the sufferings may be borne, because the sufferers shall be borne up under them in everlasting arms; The strength shall be according to the day, 1 Cor. x. 13. 3. Salvation will be the eternal recompence of all those that endure to the end. The weather stormy and the way foul, but the pleasure of home will make amends for all. A believing regard to the crown of glory has been in all ages the cordial and support of suffering saints, 2 Cor. iv. 16, 17, 18. 1 Heb. x. 34. This is not only an encouragement to us to endure, but an engagement to endure to the end. Those that endure but a while and in time of temptation fall away, have run in vain, and loose all that they have attained; but those that persevere are sure of the prize, and those only. Be faithful unto death, and then thou shalt have the crown of life.

4. That whatever hard usage the disciples of Christ meet with, it is no more than what their Master met with before, ver. 24, 25. The disciple is not above his master. We find this given them as a reason why they should not stick at the meanest duties, no, not washing one another's feet, John xiii. 16. Here it is given as a reason why they should not stumble at the hardest sufferings. They are minded of this saying, John xv. 20. It is a proverbial expression, The servant is not better than his master, and therefore let him not expect to fare better. Note, 1. Jesus Christ is our Master, our teaching Master, and we are his disciples to learn of him; our ruling Master, and we are his servants to obey him: He is Master of the house, Exod. xxi. 2, has a despotic power in the church, which is his family. 2. Jesus Christ our Lord and Master met with very hard usage from the world; they called him Beelzebub, the god of flies, the name of the chief of the devils, with whom they said he was in league. It is hard to say, which is here more to be admired, the wickedness of men that thus abused Christ, or the patience of Christ who suffered himself to be thus abused; that he who was the God of glory should be stigmatized as the god of flies; the King of Israel, as the god of Ekron; the Prince of light and life, as the prince of the powers of death and darkness: That Satan's greatest enemy and destroyer should be run down as his confederate, and yet endure such contradiction of sinners. 3. The consideration of the ill treatment Christ met with in the world, should engage us to expect and prepare for the like, and to bear it patiently. Let us not think it strange, if those that hated him hate his followers for his sake; nor think it hard, if those that are shortly to be made like him in glory, be now made like him in sufferings. Christ began in the bitter cup, let us be willing to pledge him: His bearing the cross made it easy for us.

5. That there is nothing covered that shall not be revealed, ver. 26. We understand this, 1. Of the revealing of the gospel to all the world. Do you publish it, ver. 27. for it shall be published. The truths which are now as mysteries hid from the children of men, shall all be made known to all nations in their own language, Acts ii. 11. The ends of the earth must see this salvation.

4. They must expect in the midst of these sufferings to be branded with the most odious and ignominious names and characters that could be. Persecutors would be ashamed in this world, if they did not first dress up those in bear skins whom they thus bait, and represent them in such colours as may serve to justify such cruelties. The blackest of all the ill characters they give them is here instanced in; they call them Beelzebub, the name of the prince of the devils, ver. 25. They represent them as ringleaders of the interest of the kingdom of darkness, and since every one thinks he hates the devil, thus they endeavour to make them odious to all mankind. See, and be amazed to see how this world is imposed upon! 1. Satan's sworn enemies are represented as his friends: The apostles who pulled down the devil's kingdom were called devils. Thus men laid to their charge, not only things which they knew not, but things which they abhorred, and were directly contrary to, and the reverse of. 2. Satan's sworn servants would be thought to be his enemies, and they never more effectually do his work than when they pretend to be fighting against him. Many times those that themselves are nearest akin to the devil, are most apt to father others upon him; and those that paint him on others cloths, have him reigning in their own hearts. It is well there is a day coming, when (as it follows here, ver. 26.) that which is hid will be brought to light.

5. These sufferings are here represented by a sword and division, ver. 34, 35. Think not that I am come to send peace, i. e. temporal peace and outward prosperity; they thought Christ came to give all his followers wealth and power in the world; no, saith Christ, I did not come so much as to give them peace; peace in heaven they may be sure of, but not peace on earth. Christ came to give us peace with God, peace in our consciences, peace with our brethren, but in the world ye shall have tribulation. Note, Those mistake in the design of the gospel, who think their profession of it will secure them from for it, will certainly expose them to, trouble in this world. If all the world would receive Christ, there would then follow a universal peace, but while there are and will be so many that reject him, and those not only the children of this world, but the seed of the serpent, the children of God, that are called out of the world, must expect to feel the fruits of their enmity.

(1.) Look not for peace, but a sword. Christ came to give the sword of the word, with which his disciples fight against the world, and conquering work this sword hath made, Rev. vi. 2.—xix. 21. And the sword of persecution, with which the world fights against the disciples, being cut to the heart with the sword of the word, Acts vii. 54. and tormented by the testimony of Christ's witnesses, Rev. xi. 10. and cruel work this sword made. Christ sent that gospel, which gives occasion for the drawing of this sword, and so may be said to send this sword; he orders his church into a suffering state, for the trial and praise of his peoples graces, and the filling up of the measure of their enemies sins.

(2.) Look not for peace, but division, ver. 35. I am come to set men at variance. This effect of the preaching of the gospel, is not the fault of the gospel, but of those that do not receive it. When some believe the things that are spoken, and others believe them not, the faith of those that believe condemns those that believe not, and therefore they have an enmity to them that believe. Note, The most violent and implacable feuds have ever been those that have arisen from difference in religion: No enmity like that of the persecuted, no resolution like that of the persecuted. Thus Christ tells his disciples what they should suffer, and these were hard sayings; if they could bear these, they could bear any thing. Note, Christ has dealt fairly and faithfully with us in telling us the worst we can meet with in his service; and he would have us deal so with ourselves in sitting down and counting the cost.

2. They are here told from whom and by whom they should suffer these hard things. Surely hell itself must be let loose, and devils, those desperate and despairing spirits, that have no part or lot in the great salvation, must become incarnate ere such spiteful enemies could be found to a doctrine, the substance of which was good-will towards men, and the reconciling of the world to God; no, would you think it? all this mischief ariseth to the preachers of the gospel, from those whom they came to preach salvation to: Thus the blood-thirsty hate the upright, but the just seek his soul, Prov. xxix. 10. and therefore heaven is so much opposed on earth, because earth is so much under the power of hell, Eph. ii. 2.

These hard things Christ's disciples must suffer,

1. From men, ver. 17. Beware of men, you will have need to stand upon your guard, even against those that are of the same nature with you; such is the depravity and degeneracy of that nature, homo homini lupus; crafty and politic as men, but cruel and barbarous as beasts, and wholly divested of the thing called humanity. Note, Persecuting rage and enmity turns men into brutes, into devils. Paul at Ephesus fought with beasts in the shape of men, 1 Cor. xv. 32. It is a sad pass that the world is come to, when the best friends it has have need to beware of men. It aggravates the troubles of Christ's suffering servants, that they arise from those that are bone of their bone, made of the same blood. Persecutors are in this respect worse than beasts, that they prey upon those of their own kind; Saxis inter se convenit uris. It is very grievous to have men rise up against us, Psal. cxxiv. 1. from whom we might expect protection and sympathy; men, and no more, meer men; men, and not saints; natural men. 1 Cor. ii. 14. men of this world, Psal. xvii. 14. Saints are more than men, and are redeemed from among men, and therefore are hated by them, Rev. xiv. 14. The nature of man, if he be not sanctified, is the worst nature in the world next to that of the devils. They are men, and are therefore subordinate, depending dying creatures; they are men, but they are but men, Psal. ix. 20. and who art thou, that thou shouldst be afraid of a man that shall die? Isa. li. 12. Beware of the men, so Dr. Hammond; those you wot of, the men of the Jewish Sanhedrim, which disallowed Christ, 1 Pet. ii. 4.

2. From professing men, men that have a form of godliness, and make a shew of religion. They will scourge you in their synagogues, their places of meeting for the worship of God, and for the exercise of their church discipline, so that they looked upon the scourging of Christ's ministers to be a branch of their religion. Paul was five times scourged in the synagogues, 2 Cor. xi. 24. The Jews, under colour of zeal for Moses were the most bitter persecutors of Christ and Christianity, and placed those outrages to the score of their religion. Note, Christ's disciples have suffered much from conscientious persecutors, that scourge them in their synagogues, cast them out and kill them, and think they do God good service, John xvi. 2. and say, let the Lord be glorified, Isa. lvi. 5. Zech. xi. 4, 5. But the synagogue will be so far from consecrating the persecution, that the persecution doubtless profanes and desecrates the synagogue.

3. From great men and men in authority. The Jews did not only scourge them, which was the utmost their remaining power extended to, but when they could go no further themselves, they delivered them up to the Roman powers, as they did Christ, John xviii. 30. Ye shall be brought before governors and kings, ver. 18. who having more power, are in a capacity of doing the more mischief. Governors and kings receive their power from Christ, Prov. viii. 15. and should be his servants, and his church's protectors and nursing fathers, but they often use their power against him, and are rebels to Christ, and oppressors of his church. The kings of the earth set themselves against his kingdom, Psal. ii. 1, 2. Acts iv. 25, 26. Note, It has often been the lot of good men to have great men for their enemies.

4. From all men, ver. 22. Ye shall be hated of all men, i. e. of all wicked men, and these are the generality of men, for the whole world lies in wickedness: So few are there that love and own, and countenance Christ's righteous cause, that we may say, the friends of it are hated of all men; they are all gone astray; and therefore eat up my people, Psal. xiv. 3. As far as the apostasy from God goes, so far the enmity against the saints goes; sometimes it appears more general than at other times, but there is something of this poison lurking in the hearts of all the children of disobedience. The world hates you, for it wanders after the beast, Rev. xiii. 3. Every man a liar, and therefore a hater of truth.

5. From those of their own kindred. The brother shall deliver up the brother to death, ver. 21. A man shall be, upon this account, at variance with his own father; nay those of the weaker and tenderer sex too become persecutors and persecuted; the persecuting daughter will be against the believing mother, where natural affection and filial duty, one would think, should prevent or soon extinguish the quarrel; and then no marvel, if the daughter-in-law be against the mother-in-law; where too often the coldness of love seeks occasion of contention, ver. 35. In general, ver. 36. A mans foes shall be they of his own household. They that should be his friends, will be incensed against him for embracing Christianity, and especially for adhering to it when it comes to be persecuted, and will join with his persecutors against him. Note, The strongest bonds of relative love and duty, have often been broken through by an enmity to Christ and his doctrine. Such has been the power of prejudice against the true religion, and zeal for a false one, that all other regards, the most natural and sacred, the most engaging and endearing, have been sacrificed to these Molochs. Those that rage against the Lord, and his anointed ones, break even these bonds in sunder, and cast away even these cords from them, Psal. ii. 2, 3. Christ's spouse suffers hard things from the anger of her own mother's children, Cant. i. 6. Sufferings from such are more grievous, nothing cuts more than this, It was thou a man, mine equal, Psal. lv. 12, 13. and the enmity of such is commonly most implacable; a brother offended is harder to be won than a strong city, Prov. xviii. 19. The martyrologies, both ancient and modern, are full of instances of this. Upon the whole matter, it appears, that all that live godly in Christ Jesus, must suffer persecution; and through many tribulations we must expect to enter into the kingdom of God.

Secondly, With these predictions of trouble we have here prescriptions of counsels and comforts for a time of trial. He sends them out exposed to danger indeed, and expecting it, but withal well armed with instructions and encouragements, sufficient to bear them up, and bear them out in all these trials. Let us gather up what he saith,

First, By way of counsel and direction in several things.

1. Be wise as serpents, ver. 16. You may be so (so some take it, only as a permission) you may be as wary as you please, provided you be harmless as doves. But it is rather to be taken as a precept, recommending to us that wisdom of the prudent which is to understand his way, as useful at all times, but especially in suffering times. Therefore, because you are exposed as sheep among wolves; be ye wise as serpents, not wise as foxes, whose cunning is to deceive others, but as serpents, whose policy is only to defend themselves, and to shift for their own safety. The disciples of Christ are hated and persecuted as serpents, and their ruin sought, and therefore needs the serpent's wisdom. Note, It is the will of Christ that his people and ministers, being so much exposed to troubles in this world as they usually are, should not needlessly expose themselves, but use all fair and lawful means for their own preservation. Christ gave us an example of this wisdom, Matt. xxi. 24, 25—xxii. 17, 18, 19. John viii. 6, 7. besides the many escapes he made out of the hands of his enemies, till his hour was come. See an instance of St. Paul's wisdom, Acts xxiii. 8, 9. In the cause of Christ we must sit loose to life and all its comforts, but must not be prodigal of them. It is the wisdom of the serpent, to secure his head that that may not be broken, to stop his ear to the voice of the charmer, Psal. lviii. 4, 5. and to take shelter in the clefts of the rock; and herein we may be wise as serpents. We must be wise, not to pull trouble upon our own heads; wise to keep silence in an evil time, and not to give offence, if we can help it.

2. Be ye harmless as doves. Be mild and meek, and dispassionate; not only do no body any hurt, but bear no body any ill-will; be without gall, as doves are; this must always go along with the former. They are sent forth among wolves, therefore must be wise as serpents, but they are sent forth as sheep, therefore must be harmless as doves. We must be wise, not to wrong ourselves, but rather so than wrong any one else; must use the harmlessness of the dove to bear twenty injuries, rather than the subtlety of the serpent to offer or to return one. Note, It must be the continual care of all Christ's disciples to be innocent and inoffensive in word and deed, especially in consideration of the enemies they are in the midst of. We have need of a dove-like spirit, when we are beset with birds of prey, that we may neither provoke them, nor be provoked by them: David coveted the wings of a dove, on which to fly away and be at rest, rather than the wings of a hawk. The Spirit descended on Christ as a dove, and all believers partake of the Spirit of Christ a dove-like spirit, made for love not for war.

3. Beware of men, ver. 17. Be always upon your guard, and avoid dangerous company; take heed what you say and do, and presume not too far upon any man's fidelity: Be jealous of the most plausible pretensions; trust not in a friend, no, not in the wife of thy bosom, Micah vii. 5. Note, It becomes those that are gracious to be cautious, for we are taught to cease from man. Such a wretched world do we live in, that we know not whom to trust. Ever since our Master was betrayed with a kiss by one of his own disciples, we have need to beware of men, or false brethren.

4. Take no thought how, or what, ye shall speak, ver. 19. When ye are brought before magistrates, carry yourselves decently, but afflict not yourselves with care how you shall come off. A prudent thought there must be, but not an anxious, perplexing, disquieting thought; let this care be cast upon God, as well as that what you shall eat, and what you shall drink. Do not study to make fine speeches, ad captandam benevolentiam; affect not quaint expressions, flourishes of wit, and laboured periods, which only serve to gild a bad cause, the gold of a good one needs it not. It argues a diffidence of your cause to be solicitous in this manner as if it were not sufficient to speak for itself. You know upon what grounds you go, and then, verbaque praevisam rem non invita sequuntur. Never any spoke better before governors and kings than those three champions, who took no thought before what they should speak: O Nebuchadnezzar, we are not careful to answer thee in this matter, Dan. iii. 16. See Psal. cxix. 46. Note, The disciples of Christ must be more thoughtful how to do well, than how to speak well; how to keep their integrity, than how to vindicate it. Non magna loquimur, sed vivimus, is the best apology.

5. When they persecute you in this city, flee to another, ver. 23. Thus reject them that reject you and your doctrine, and try whether others will not receive you and it. Thus shift for your own safety. Note, In case of imminent peril, the disciples of Christ may, and must secure themselves by flight, when God in his providence opens to them a door of escape. He that flies may fight again. It is no inglorious thing for Christ's soldiers to quit their ground, provided they do not quit their colours: They may go out of the way of danger, though they must not go out of the way of duty. Observe, Christ's care of his disciples, in providing places of retreat and shelter for them, ordering it so, that persecution reach not in all places at the same time, but when one city is made too hot for them, another is reserved for a cooler shade, and a little sanctuary, a favour to be used and not to be slighted; yet always with this proviso, that no sinful, unlawful means be used to make the escape, for then it is not a door of God's opening. We have many examples to this rule in the history both of Christ and his apostles, in the application of all which to particular cases, wisdom and integrity are profitable to direct.

6. Fear them not, ver. 26. because they can but kill the body, ver. 28. Note, It is the duty and interest of Christ's disciples not to fear the greatest of their adversaries. Those that truly fear God, need not fear man; and those that are afraid of the least sin, need not be afraid of the greatest trouble. The fear of man brings a snare, a perplexing snare, that disturbs our peace; an entangling snare, by which we are drawn into sin; and therefore it must be carefully watched, and striven and prayed against. Be the times never so difficult, enemies never so outrageous, and events never so threatening, yet need we not fear, yet will we not fear, though the earth be removed, while we have so good a God, so good a cause, and so good a hope, through grace.

Yes, this is soon said, but when it comes to the trial, racks and tortures, dungeons and galleys, axes and gibbets, fire and faggot are terrible things, enough to make the stoutest heart to tremble, and to start back, especially when it is plain they may be avoided by a few declining steps, and therefore to fortify us against this temptation, we have here,

(1.) A good reason against this fear, taken from the limited power of the enemies; they kill the body, that is the utmost their rage can extend to; hitherto they can go, if God permit them, but no further; they are not able to kill the soul, nor do it any hurt, and the soul is the man. By this it appears that the soul doth not (as some dream) fall asleep at death, nor is deprived of thought and perception; for then the killing of the body would be the killing of the soul too. The soul is killed when it is separated from God and his love, which is its life, and is made a vessel of his wrath; now this is out of the reach of their power. Tribulation, distress, and persecution may separate us from all the world, but cannot part between us and God, cannot make us either not to love him, or not to be beloved by him, Rom. viii. 35—37. If therefore we were more concerned about our souls, as our jewels, we should be less afraid of men whose power cannot rob us of them: They can but kill the body, which would quickly die of itself, not the soul, which will enjoy itself, and its God in spite of them. They can but crush the cabinet: A heathen set the tyrant at defiance with this, Tande capsam Anaxarchi, Anaxarchum non laelis; the pearl of price is untouched. Seneca undertakes to make it out, that you cannot hurt a wise and good man, because death itself is no real evil to him. Si maximum illud ultra quod nihil habent irate leges, aut severissimi domini minantur, in quo imperium suum fortuna consumit aequo placidoque animo accipimus, & scimus mortem malum non esse ob hoc ne injuriam quidem. Seneca de Constantia.

7. What I tell you in darkness, that speak ye in light, ver. 27. i. e. whatever hazards you run, go on with your work, publishing and proclaiming the everlasting gospel to all the world; that is your business, mind that. The design of the enemies is not merely to destroy you, but to suppress that, and therefore whatever comes of it, publish that. What I tell you, that speak ye. Note, That which the apostles have delivered to us, is the same that they received from Jesus Christ, 1 Heb. ii. 3. They spake what he told them, that, all that and nothing but that. Those ambassadors received their instructions in private, in darkness, in the ear, in corners, in parables. Many things Christ spake openly, and nothing in secret varying from what he preached in public, John xviii. 20. But the particular instructions he gave his disciples after his resurrection concerning the things pertaining to the kingdom of God, were whispered in the ear, Acts i. 3. for then he never showed himself openly. But they must deliver their embassy publicly, in the light and upon the house-tops; for the doctrine of the gospel is what all are concerned in, Prov. i. 20, 21.—viii. 2, 3. therefore he that hath ears to hear, let him hear. The first indication of the taking in of the Gentiles into the church was upon a house-top, Acts x. 9. Note, There is no part of Christ's gospel that need upon any account be concealed; the whole counsel of God must be revealed, Acts xx. 27. In never so mixed a multitude let it be plainly and fully delivered.

Secondly, By way of comfort and encouragement. Here is very much said to that purpose and all little enough, considering the many hardships they were to grapple with throughout the course of their ministry and their present weakness, which was such, as that without some powerful support they could scarce bear even the prospect of such usage; Christ therefore shews them why they should be of good cheer.

(1.) Here is one word peculiar to their present mission and their expedition upon it, ver. 23. Ye shall not have gone over the cities of Israel, till the Son of man be come. They were to preach that the kingdom of the Son of man, i. e. the Messiah, was at hand; they were to pray, Thy kingdom come: Now they should not have gone over all the cities of Israel, thus praying and thus preaching, before that kingdom they spoke of should come, in the exaltation of Christ and the pouring out of the Spirit. It was comfort, 1. That what they said should be made good; they said the Son of man is coming, and behold, he comes. Christ will confirm the word of his messengers, Isa. xlv. 26. 2. That it should be made good quickly. Note, It is matter of comfort to Christ's labourers, that their working time will be short and soon over; the hireling has his day; the work and warfare will in a little time be accomplished. 3. That then they should be advanced to a higher station. When the Son of man comes, then shall he endure with greater power from on high; now they were sent forth as agents and envoys, but in a little time their commission should be enlarged, and they should be sent forth as plenipotentiaries into all the world.

1. That their sufferings were for a testimony against them and the Gentiles, ver. 18. When the Jewish consistories remove you before the Roman governors, that they may have you put to death, your being hurried thus from one judgment-seat to another, will help to make your testimony the more public, and will give you an opportunity of bringing the gospel to the Gentiles as well as to the Jews: Nay, you will testify to them and against them by the very troubles you undergo. Note, God's people, and especially God's ministers, are his witnesses, Isa. xliii. 10. not only in their doing work but in their suffering work: Hence they are called Martyrs, witnesses for Christ, that his truths are of undoubted certainty and value; and being witnesses for him, they are witnesses against those that oppose him and his gospel. The sufferings of the martyrs, as they witness to the truth of the gospel they profess, so they are testimonies of the enmity of their persecutors, and both ways they are a testimony against them, and will be produced in evidence in the great day, when the saints shall judge the world; and the reason of the sentence will be, Inasmuch as you did it unto these, you did unto me. Now if their sufferings be a testimony, how cheerfully should they be borne; for the testimony is not finished till those come, Rev. xi. 7. If they be Christ's witnesses, they shall be sure to have their charges borne.

2. That upon all occasions they should have God's special presence with them, and the immediate assistance of his holy Spirit, particularly when they should be called out to bear their testimony before governors and kings, it shall be given you in the same hour what ye shall speak. Christ's disciples were chosen from among the foolish of the world, unlearned and ignorant men, and therefore might justly distrust their own abilities, especially when they were called before great men. When Moses was sent to Pharaoh he complained, I am not eloquent, Exod. iv. 10. When Jeremiah was set over the kingdoms he objected, I am but a child, Jer. i. 6—10. Now, in answer to this suggestion, 1. They are here promised, that it should be given them, not some time before, but in that same hour what they shall speak. They shall speak extempore, and yet shall speak as much to the purpose as if it had been never so well studied. Note, When God calls us out to speak for him, we may depend upon him to teach us what to say; even then, when we labour under the greatest disadvantages and discouragements. 2. They are here assured that the blessed Spirit should draw up their plea for them. It is not ye that speak, but the Spirit of your Father, which speaketh in you, ver. 20. They were not left to themselves upon such an occasion, but God undertook for them, his Spirit of wisdom spoke in them, as sometimes his providence wonderfully spoke for them, and by both together they were manifested in the consciences even of their persecutors. God gave them an ability not only to speak to the purpose, but what they did say to say it with holy zeal. The same Spirit that assisted them in the pulpit, assisted them at the bar. Those cannot but come off well, that have such an advocate; to whom God saith, as he did to Moses, Exod. iv. 12. Go, and I will be with thy mouth, and with thy heart.

3. That he that endures to the end shall be saved, ver. 22. Here it sounds very comfortable, 1. That there will be an end of these troubles; they may last long, but will not last always. Christ comforted himself with this, and so may his followers, The things concerning me have an end, Luke xxii. 37. Dabit Deus his quoque finem. Note, A believing prospect of the period of our troubles, will be of great use to support us under them. The weary will be at rest, when the wicked cease from troubling, Job iii. 17. God will give an expected end, Jer. xxix. 11. The troubles may seem tedious, like the days of a hireling, but blessed be God, they are not everlasting. 2. That while they continue they may be endured; as they are not eternal, so they are not intolerable; they may be borne, and borne to the end; and therefore the sufferings may be borne, because the sufferers shall be borne up under them in everlasting arms; The strength shall be according to the day, 1 Cor. x. 13. 3. Salvation will be the eternal recompence of all those that endure to the end. The weather stormy and the way foul, but the pleasure of home will make amends for all. A believing regard to the crown of glory has been in all ages the cordial and support of suffering saints, 2 Cor. iv. 16, 17, 18. 1 Heb. x. 34. This is not only an encouragement to us to endure, but an engagement to endure to the end. Those that endure but a while and in time of temptation fall away, have run in vain, and lose all that they have attained; but those that persevere are sure of the prize, and those only. Defaithful unto death, and then thou shalt have the crown of life.

4. That whatever hard usage the disciples of Christ meet with, it is no more than what their Master met with before, ver. 24, 25. The disciple is not above his master. We find this given them as a reason why they should not stick at the meanest duties, no, not washing one another's feet, John xiii. 16. Here it is given as a reason why they should not stumble at the hardest sufferings. They are minded of this saying, John xv. 20. It is a proverbial expression, The servant is not better than his master, and therefore let him not expect to fare better. Note, 1. Jesus Christ is our Master, our teaching Master, and we are his disciples to learn of him; our ruling Master, and we are his servants to obey him: He is Master of the house, exodestorns, has a despotic power in the church, which is his family. 2. Jesus Christ our Lord and Master met with very hard usage from the world; they called him Beelzebub, the god of flies, the name of the chief of the devils, with whom they said he was in league. It is hard to say, which is here more to be admired, the wickedness of men that thus abused Christ, or the patience of Christ who suffered himself to be thus abused; that he who was the God of glory should be stigmatized as the god of flies; the King of Israel, as the god of Ekron; the Prince of light and life, as the prince of the powers of death and darkness: That Satan's greatest enemy and destroyer should be run down as his confederate, and yet endure such contradiction of sinners. 3. The consideration of the ill treatment Christ met with in the world, should engage us to expect and prepare for the like, and to bear it patiently. Let us not think it strange, if those that hated him hate his followers for his sake; nor think it hard, if those that are shortly to be made like him in glory, be now made like him in sufferings. Christ began in the bitter cup, let us be willing to pledge him: His bearing the cross made it easy for us.

5. That there is nothing covered that shall not be revealed, ver. 26. We understand this, 1. Of the revealing of the gospel to all the world. Do you publish it, ver. 27. for it shall be published. The truths which are now as mysteries hid from the children of men, shall all be made known to all nations in their own language, Acts ii. 11. The ends of the earth must see this salvation.

salvation. Note, It is a great encouragement to those who are doing Christ's work, that it is a work which shall certainly be done; it is a plough which God will speed. Or, 2. Of the clearing up of the innocency of Christ's suffering servants, that are called Beelzebub; their true character is now invidiously blackened with false colours, but however their innocency and excellency is now covered, it shall be revealed: Sometimes it is in a great measure done in this world, when the righteousness of the saints is made by subsequent events to shine forth as the light: However, it will be done at the great day when their glory shall be manifested to all the world, angels and men, to whom they are now made spectacles, 1 Cor. iv. 9. All their reproach shall be rolled away, and their graces and services that are now covered shall be revealed, 1 Cor. iv. 5. Note, It is matter of comfort to the people of God under all the calumnies and censures of men, that there will be a resurrection of names as well as of bodies at the last day, when the righteous shall shine forth as the sun. Let Christ's ministers faithfully reveal his truths, and then leave it to him in due time to reveal their integrity.

6. That the providence of God is in a special manner conversant about the saints in their sufferings, ver. 29, 30, 31. It is good to have recourse to our first principles, and particularly to the doctrine of God's universal providence, extending itself to all the creatures and all their actions, even the smallest and most minute. The light of nature teacheth us this, and it is comfortable to all men, but especially to all good men, who can in faith call this God their Father, and for whom he has a tender concern. See here,

(1.) The general extent of providence to all the creatures, even the least and least considerable, to the sparrows, ver. 29. These little animals are of so small account, that one of them is not valued, there must go two to be worth a farthing, (nay you shall have five for a halfpenny, Luke xii. 6.) and yet they are not shut out of the divine care; One of them shall not fall to the ground without your Father: That is, 1. They do not light on the ground for food to pick up a grain of corn, but your heavenly Father by his providence laid it ready for them. In the parallel place, Luke xii. 6. it is thus expressed, Not one of them is forgotten before God, forgotten to be provided for; he feedeth them, Matt. vi. 26. Now he that feeds the sparrows, will not starve the saints. 2. They do not fall to the ground by death, either a natural or a violent death: Though they are so small a part of the creation, yet even their death comes within the notice of the divine providence, much more doth the death of his disciples. Observe, The birds that soar above, when they die, fall to the ground; death brings the highest to the earth. Some think Christ here alludes to the two sparrows that were used in cleansing the leper, Lev. xiv. 4, 5, 6. the two birds in the margin are called sparrows, of these one was killed, and so fell to the ground, the other was let go. Now it seemed a casual thing which of the two was killed, the persons employed two which they pleased, but God's providence designed and determined which. Now this God, who has such an eye to the sparrows because they are his creatures, much more will ye have an eye to you who are his children. If a sparrow die not without your Father, sure a man doth not, a Christian, a minister, my friend, my child. A bird falls not into the fowler's net, or by the fowler's shot, and so comes not to be sold in the market, but according to the direction of providence; your enemies like subtle fowlers, lay snares for you, and privily shoot at you, but they cannot take you, they cannot hit you, unless God give them leave. Therefore be not afraid of death, for your enemies have no power against you, but what is given them from above. God can break their bows and snares, Psalm xxxvii. 14, 15.—lxiv. 4—7. and make our souls to escape as a bird, Psalm cxxiv. 7. Fear ye not therefore, ver. 31. Note, There is enough in the doctrine of God's providence, to silence all the fears of God's people: Ye are of more value than many sparrows. All men are so, for the other creatures were made for man and put under his feet, Psalm viii. 4, 5—8. much more the disciples of Jesus Christ, who are the excellent ones of the earth, however contemned as if not worth one sparrow.

(2.) The particular cognizance which providence takes of the disciples of Christ, especially in their sufferings, ver. 30. But the very hairs of your head are all numbered. This is a proverbial expression, noting the account which God takes and keeps of all the concerns of his people, even those that are most minute and least regarded. This is not to be made a matter of curious enquiry, but of encouragement to live in a continual dependence upon God's providential care, which extends itself to all occurrences, yet without disparagement to the infinite glory, or disturbance to the infinite rest of the Eternal Mind. If God numbers their hairs, much more doth he number their heads, and take care of their lives, their comforts, their souls. It intimates, that God takes more care of them, than they do of themselves. Those that are solicitous to number their money and goods and cattle, yet were never careful to number their hairs, which fall and are lost, and they never miss them; but God numbers the hairs of his people, and not a hair of their head shall perish, Luke xxi. 18. not the least hurt shall be done them but upon a valuable consideration: So precious to God are his saints, and their lives and deaths!

7. That he will shortly in the day of triumph own those that now own him in the day of trial, when those that deny him shall be for ever disowned and rejected by him, ver. 32, 33. Note, 1. It is our duty, and if we do it, will hereafter be our unspeakable honour and happiness, to confess Christ before men. (1.) It is our duty not only to believe in Christ, but to profess that faith, in suffering for him when we are called to it, as well as in serving him. We must never be ashamed of our relation to Christ, our attendance on him and our expectations from him: Hereby the sincerity of our faith is evidenced, his name glorified, and others edified. (2.) However this may expose us to reproach and trouble now, we shall abundantly be made amends for that in the resurrection of the just, when it will be our unspeakable honour and happiness; what would we more? Him will I confess, though a poor worthless worm of the earth, Christ will say, this is one of mine, one of my friends and favourites, that loved me and was beloved of me; the purchase of my blood, the workmanship of my spirit, I will confess him before my Father, when it will do him the most service; I will speak a good word for him when he appears before my Father to receive his doom; I will present him, will represent him to my Father. Them that honour Christ he will thus honour. They honour him before men, that is a poor thing; he will honour them before his Father, that is a great thing. 2. It is a dangerous thing for any to deny and disown Christ before men; for those that do so will be disowned by him in the great day, when they have most need of him: He will not own them for his servants, that would not own him for their Master: I tell you, I know you not, Matt. vii. 23. In the first ages of Christianity, when for a man to confess Christ, was to venture all that was dear to him in this world, is more a trial of sincerity, than it was afterwards when it had secular advantages attending it.

8. That the foundation of their discipleship was laid in such a temper and disposition, as would make sufferings very light and easy to them; and it was upon the condition of a preparedness for suffering, that Christ took them to be his followers, ver. 37, 38, 39. He told them at first, they were not worthy of him, if they were not willing to part with all for him. Men stick not at those difficulties which necessarily attend their profession, and which they counted upon when they undertook that profession: And they will either cheerfully submit to those fatigues and troubles, or disclaim the privileges and advantages of their profession. Now, in the Christian profession, those are reckoned unworthy the dignity and felicity of it, that put not such a value upon their interest in Christ, as to prefer that before any other interests: They cannot expect the gains of a bargain, that will not come up to the terms of it. Now thus the terms are settled; if religion be worth any thing, it is worth every thing; and therefore all that believe the truth of it, will soon come up to the price of it; and those who make it their business and bliss, will make every thing else to truckle to it. Those that like not Christ on these terms, may leave him at their peril. Note, It is very encouraging to think that whatever we leave, or lose, or suffer for Christ, we do not make a hard bargain for ourselves. Whatever we part with for this pearl of price, we may comfort ourselves with this, that it is well worth what we gave for it. The terms are, that we must prefer Christ.

(1.) Before our nearest and dearest relations; father or mother, son or daughter. Between these relations, because there is little room left for envy, there is commonly more room for love, and therefore these are instanced in, as relations which are most likely to affect. Children must love their parents, and parents must love their children; but if they love them better than Christ, they are unworthy of him. As we must not be deterred from Christ by the hatred of our relations which he spoke of, ver. 21—35, 36. so we must not be drawn from him by their love. Christians must be as Levi, that said to his father, I have not seen him, Deut. xxxiii. 9.

(2.) Before our ease and safety. We must take up our cross and follow him, else we are not worthy of him. Here observe, 1. Those that would follow Christ must expect their cross and take it up. 2. In taking up the cross, we must follow Christ's example and bear it as he did. 3. It is a great encouragement to us when we meet with crosses, that in bearing of them we follow Christ, who hath shewed us the way, and if we follow him faithfully, will lead us through sufferings like him, to glory with him.

(3.) Before life itself, ver. 39. He that findeth his life, shall lose it, that thinks he has found it, when he hath saved it and kept it, by denying Christ, he shall lose it in an eternal death; but he that loseth his life for Christ's sake, that will part with it rather than deny Christ, he shall find it to his unspeakable advantage in an eternal life. Those are best prepared for the life to come, that sit most loose to this present life.

9. That Christ himself would so heartily espouse their cause, as to shew himself a friend to all their friends, and to repay all the kindness that should at any time be bestowed upon them, ver. 40, 41, 42. He that receiveth you, receiveth me.

1. It is here implied, that though the generality would reject them, yet they should meet with some that would receive and entertain them, would bid the message welcome into their hearts, and the messengers into their houses for the sake of it. Why was the gospel-market made, but that if some will not, others will. In the worst of times there is a remnant according to the election of grace. Christ's ministers shall not labour in vain.

2. Jesus Christ takes what is done to his faithful ministers, whether in kindness or in unkindness, as done to himself, and reckons himself treated as they are treated. He that receiveth you, receiveth me. Both honours and contempt put upon an ambassador, do reflect honour or contempt upon the prince that sends him, and ministers are ambassadors for Christ. See how Christ may still be entertained by those that would testify their respects to him; his people and ministers we have always with us, and he is with them always, even to the end of the world. Nay, the honour riseth higher, He that receiveth me, receiveth him that sent me. Not only Christ takes it as done to himself, but through Christ God doth so too. By entertaining Christ's ministers, they entertain not angels unawares, but Christ, nay and God himself, and unawares too, as appears, Matt. xxv. 37. When saw we thee an hungered?

2. That though the kindness done to Christ's disciples be never so small, yet if there be occasion for it, and ability to do no more, it shall be accepted, though it be but a cup of cold water given to one of those little ones, ver. 42. They are little ones, poor and weak, and often stand in need of refreshment, and glad of the least. The extremity may be such, that a cup of cold water may be of a great favour. Note, Kindnesses shewed to Christ's disciples are valued in Christ's books, not according to the cost of the gift, but according to the love and affection of the giver. On that score the widow's mite not only past current, but was stamped high, Luke xxi. 3, 4. Thus they that are truly rich in graces may be rich in good works, though poor in the world.

4. That kindness to Christ's disciples which he will accept, must be done with an eye to Christ, and for his sake. A prophet must be received in the name of a prophet: and a righteous man in the name of a righteous man, and one of those little ones in the name of a disciple: not because they are learned or witty, or because they are our relations or neighbours; but because they are righteous, and so bear Christ's image; they are prophets and disciples, and so are sent on Christ's errand. It is a believing regard to Christ that puts an acceptable value upon the kindnesses done to his ministers, when we entertain them for their Master's sake, whose they are, and whom they serve. Christ doth not interest himself in the matter, unless we first interest him in it. Ut tibi debeam aliquid pro eo quod præstas, debes non tantum mihi præstare, sed tanquam mihi. Seneca.

5. That kindnesses shewn to Christ's people and ministers shall not only be accepted but richly and suitably rewarded. There is a great deal to be gotten by doing good offices to Christ's disciples, if it be done to the Lord, he will repay them again with interest; for he is not unrighteous to forget any labour of love, Heb. vi. 10. 1. They shall receive a reward, and in no wise lose it. He doth not say, they deserve a reward, we cannot merit any thing as wages from the hand of God; but they shall receive a reward from the free gift of God. And they shall in no wise lose it, as good services often do among men; because those that should reward them are either false or forgetful. The reward may be deferred, the full reward will be deferred till the resurrection of the just; but it shall in no wise be lost, nor shall they be any loser by the delay. 2. This is a prophet's reward and a righteous man's. That is, either 1. The reward that God gives to prophets and righteous men; the blessings conferred upon them shall distil upon their friends. Or, 2. The reward he gives by prophets and righteous men, in answer to their prayers, Gen. xx. 7. He is a prophet, and he shall pray for thee, that is a prophet's reward. And by their ministry, when he gives the instructions and comforts of the word, to those that are kind to the preachers of the word, then he sends a prophet's reward. Prophets' rewards are spiritual blessings in heavenly things, and if we know how to value them, we shall reckon them good payment.

C H A P. XI.

In this chapter we have, (1.) The constant and unvaried diligence of our Lord Jesus in his great work of preaching the gospel, ver. 1. (2.) His discourse with the disciples of John concerning his being the Messiah, ver. 2—6. (3.) The honourable testimony that Christ bore to John Baptist, ver. 7—15. (4.) The sad account he gives of that generation in in general, and especially of some particular places; with reference to the success, both of John's ministry and of his own, ver. 16—24. (5.) His thanksgiving to his Father for the wise and gracious method he had taken in revealing the great mysteries of the gospel, ver. 25, 26. (6.) His gracious call and invitation to poor sinners to come to him, and to be ruled and taught and saved by him, ver. 27—30. No where have we more of the terror of gospel-woes for warning to us, or of the sweetness of gospel-grace, for encouragement to us than in this chapter, which sets before us life and death the blessing and the curse.

1. AND it came to pass, when Jesus had made an end of commanding his twelve disciples, he departed thence to teach and preach in their cities. 2. Now when John had heard in the prison the works of Christ, he sent two of his disciples, 3. And said unto him, Art thou he that should come, or do we look for another? 4. Jesus answered and said unto them, Go, and shew John again those things which ye do hear and see: 5. The blind receive their sight, and the lame walk, and lepers are cleansed, and the deaf hear, the dead are raised up, and the poor have the gospel preached to them. 6. And blessed is he whosoever shall not be offended in me.

The first verse of this chapter some join to the foregoing chapter, and made it (not unfitly) the close of that.

1. The ordination sermon which Christ preached to his disciples in the foregoing chapter, is here called his commanding them. Note, Christ's commissions imply commands. Their preaching of the gospel was not only permitted them, but it was enjoined them. It was not a thing they were left at their liberty at about, but necessity was laid upon them, 1 Cor. ix. 16. The promises he made them are included in these commands, for the covenant of grace is a word which he hath commanded, Psal. cv. 8. He made an end of commanding, ἐτέλειεν διατάσσων. Note, The instructions Christ gives are full instructions. He goes through with his work.

2. When Christ had said what he had to say to his disciples, he departed thence. It should seem they were very loth to scatter and go abroad from their Master, till he departed and separated himself from them; as the nurse withdraws the hand, that the child may learn to go itself. Christ would now teach them how to live, and how to work without his bodily presence. It was expedient for them, that Christ should thus go away for a while, that they might be prepared for his long departure, and that by the help of the Spirit their own hands might be sufficient for them, Deut. xxxiii. 7. and they might not be always children. We have little account of what they did now pursuant to their commission. They went abroad, no doubt, probably into Judea (for in Galilee the gospel had been mostly preached hitherto) publishing the doctrine of Christ, and working miracles in his name; but still in a more immediate dependence upon him, and not being long from him; and thus they were trained up by degrees for their great work.

3. Christ departed to teach and preach; there where he sent his disciples before him to work miracles, and, chap. x. 1—8. so to raise people's expectations, and make way for his entertainment. Thus was the way of the Lord prepared; John prepared it by bringing people to repentance, but he did no miracles. The disciples go further, they work miracles for the confirmation. Note, Repentance and faith prepare people for the blessing of the kingdom of heaven, which Christ gives. Observe, When Christ empowered them to work miracles, he employed himself in teaching and preaching, as if that were the more honourable of the two. That was but in order to do this. Healing the sick was the saving of bodies, but preaching the gospel was to the saving of souls. Christ had directed his disciples to preach, chap. x. 7. yet he did not leave off preaching himself. He set them to work, not for his own ease, but for the ease of the country, and was not the less busy for employing them. How unlike are they to Christ who yoke others only that they may themselves be idle. Note, The increase and multitude of labourers in the Lord's work should be made not an excuse for our negligence, but an encouragement to our diligence. The more busy others are, the more busy we should be, and all little enough, so much work is there to be done. Observe, He went to preach in their cities, which were populous places; he cast the net of the gospel where there was most fish to be inclosed. Wisdom cries in the cities, Prov. i. 21. at the entry of the city, Prov. viii. 3. in the cities of the Jews, even theirs who made light of him, yet had the first offer.

What he preached we are not told, but it is likely it was to the same purpose with the sermon on the mount. But here is next recorded a message which John Baptist sent to Christ, and his return to it, ver. 2—6. We heard before that Jesus heard of John's sufferings, chap. iv. 12. Now we are told that John in prison hears of Christ's doings. He heard in prison the works of Christ; and no doubt, he was glad to hear of them, for he was a true friend of the bridegroom, John iii. 29. Note, When one useful instrument is laid aside, God knows how to raise up many others in the stead of it. The work went on, though John was in prison, and it added no affliction, but a great deal of consolation to his bonds. Nothing more comfortable to God's people in distress, than to hear of the works of Christ; especially to experience them in their own souls. This turns a prison into a palace. Some way or other Christ will convey the notices of his love to those that are in trouble for conscience sake. John could not see the works of Christ, but he heard of them with pleasure. And blessed are they which have not seen, but only heard, and yet have believed.

Now John Baptist hearing of Christ's works, sent two of his disciples to him; and what passed between them and him we have here an account of. Here is,

1. The question they had to propose to him: Art thou he that should come, or do we look for another? This was a serious and important question, Art thou the Messiah promised or not? Art thou the Christ? tell us: 1. It is taken for granted that the Messiah should come. It was one of the names by which he was known of the Old Testament saints, he that cometh, or shall come, Psal. cxviii. 26. He is now come, but there is another coming of him we still expect. 2. They intimate, that if this be not he, they would look for another. Note, We must not be weary of looking for him that is to come, nor ever say, we will no more expect him till we come to enjoy him. Though he tarry, wait for him, for he that shall come will come, though not in our time. 3. They intimate likewise, that if they be convinced this is he, they will not be sceptics, they will be satisfied, and will look for no other. 4. They therefore ask, art thou he? John had said for his part, I am not the Christ, John i. 20. Now, 1. Some think John sent this question for his own satisfaction: It is true he had borne a noble testimony to Christ, he declared him to be the Son of God, John i. 34. the Lamb of God, ver. 29. and that he should baptize with the holy Ghost, ver. 33. and sent of God,

John iii. 34. which were great things. But, 1. He desired to be further and more fully assured that he was the Messiah that had been so long promised and expected. Note, In matters relating to Christ and our salvation by him, it is good to be sure. Christ appeared not in that external pomp and power that it was expected he should appear in; his own disciples stumbled at this, and perhaps John did so; Christ saw something of this at the bottom of this enquiry, when he said, blessed is he who shall not be offended in me. Note, It is hard, even for good men to bear up against vulgar errors. 2. John's doubt might arise from his own present circumstances. He was a prisoner, and might be tempted to think, if Jesus be indeed the Messiah, whence is it that I his friend and forerunner am brought into this trouble, and am left to be so long in it, and he never looks after me, visits me not, nor sends to me, enquires not after me, doth nothing either to sweeten my imprisonment or hasten my enlargement? Doubtless there was a good reason why our Lord Jesus did not go to John in prison, lest there should seem to have been a compact between them; but John construed it a neglect, and it was perhaps a shock to his faith in Christ. Note, 1. Where there is true faith, yet there may be a mixture of unbelief. The best are not always alike strong. 2. Troubles for Christ, especially when they continue long unrelieved, are such trials of faith as sometimes prove too hard to be borne up against. 3. The remaining unbelief of good men may sometimes in an hour of temptation strike at the root, and call in question the most fundamental truths which were thought to be so well settled, Will the Lord cast off for ever? But we will hope that John's faith did not fail in this matter, only he desired to have it strengthened and confirmed. Note, The best saints have need of the best helps they can get for the strengthening of their faith, and the arming of themselves against temptations to infidelity. Abraham believed, and yet desired a sign, Gen. xv. 6—8, so did Gideon, Judges vi. 36, 37. But, 3. Others think John sent his disciples to Christ with this question, not so much for his own satisfaction as for theirs. Observe, Though he was a prisoner they stuck to him, attended on him, and were ready to receive instructions from him; they loved him, and would not leave him. Now, 1. They were weak in knowledge and wavering in their faith, and need instruction and confirmation; and in this matter they were somewhat prejudiced, being jealous for their master, they were jealous of our Master; were loth to acknowledge Jesus to be the Messiah, because he eclipsed John, and are loth to believe their own master when they think he speaks against himself and them. Good men are apt to have their judgments biassed by their interest. Now John would have their mistakes rectified, and them as well satisfied as he himself was. Note, The strong ought to consider the infirmities of the weak, and do what they can to help them; and such as we cannot help ourselves, we should send to those that can. When thou art converted, strengthen thy brethren. 2. John was all along industrious to turn over his disciples to Christ, as from the grammar-school to the academy. Perhaps he foresaw his death approaching, and therefore would bring his disciples to be better acquainted with Christ, under whose guardianship he must leave them. Note, Ministers' business is to direct every body to Christ. And those who would know the certainty of the doctrine of Christ, must apply themselves to him, who is come to give an understanding. Those that would grow in grace must be inquisitive.

1. He points them to what they heard and saw, which they must tell John, that he might from thence take occasion the more fully to instruct and convince them out of their own mouths. Go and tell him what you hear and see. Note, Our senses may and ought to be appealed to in those things that are their proper objects. Therefore the popish doctrine of the real presence agrees not with the truth as it is in Jesus; for Christ refers us to the things we hear and see. Go and tell John.

1. What you see of the power of Christ's miracles; you see how by the word of Jesus the blind receive their sight, the lame walk, &c. Christ's miracles were done openly, and in the view of all; for they feared not the strongest and most impartial scrutiny. Veritas non querit angulos. They are to be considered, 1. As the acts of a divine power. None but the God of nature could thus over-rule and out-do the power of nature. It is particularly spoken of God's prerogative to open the eyes of the blind, Psal. cxlvi. 8. Miracles are therefore the broad-seal of heaven, and the doctrine they are affixed to must be of God, for his power will never contradict his truth; nor can it be imagined he should set his seal to a lie; however, lying wonders may be vouched for proof of false doctrines, true miracles, evince a divine commission; such Christ's were, and leave no room to doubt that he was sent of God, and his doctrine was his that sent him. 2. As the accomplishment of a divine prediction. It was foretold, Isa. xxxv. 5, 6, that our God should come, and that then the eyes of the blind should be opened. Now if the works of Christ agree with the words of the prophet, as it is plain they do, then, no doubt but this is our God whom we have waited for, who shall come with a recompence; this is he that is so much wanted.

2. Tell him what you hear of the preaching of his gospel, which goes along with his miracles. Faith, though confirmed by seeing, comes by hearing. Tell him, 1. That the poor preach the gospel; so some read it. It proves Christ's divine mission, that those whom he employed in sounding his kingdom were poor men, destitute of all secular advantages, and therefore could never have carried their point, if they had not been carried on by a divine power. 2. That the poor have the gospel preached to them. Christ's auditory is made up of such as the Scribes and Pharisees despised and looked upon with contempt; and the Rabbies would not instruct, because they were not able to pay them. The Old Testament prophets were sent mostly to kings and princes, but Christ preached to the congregation of the poor. It was foretold that the poor of the flock should wait upon him, Zech. xi. 11. Note, Christ's gracious condescensions and compassions to the poor, are an evidence that it was he that should bring to the world the tender mercies of our God. It was foretold that the Son of David should be the poor man's king, Psal. lxxii. 2—4—12, 13. Or we may understand it, not so much of the poor of the world, as the poor in Spirit, and so that scripture is fulfilled, Isa. lxi. 1. He hath anointed me to preach good tidings to the meek. Note, It is a proof of Christ's divine mission that his doctrine is gospel indeed; good news to those that are truly humbled in sorrow for their sins, and truly humble in the denial of self; to them it is accommodated; for whom God always declared he had mercy in store. 3. That the poor receive the gospel, and are wrought upon by it, they are evangelized, they receive and entertain the gospel, are leavened by it, and delivered into it as into a mould. Note, The wonderful efficacy of the gospel is a proof of its divine original. The poor are wrought upon by it. The prophets complained of the poor, that they knew not the way of the Lord, Jer. v. 4. They could do no good upon them; but the gospel of Christ made its way into their stupid souls.

2. He pronounceth a blessing on those that were not offended in him, ver. 6. So

6. So clear are these evidences of Christ's mission, that those who are not wilfully prejudiced against him, and scandalized in him; (so the word is) cannot but receive his doctrine, and so be blessed in him. Note, 1. There are many things in Christ which those that are ignorant and unthinking are apt to be offended at, some circumstances, for the sake of which they reject the substance of his gospel. The meanness of his appearance, his education at Nazareth, the poverty of his life, the despicableness of his followers, the slights which the great men put upon him, the strictness of his doctrine, and the contradiction it gives to flesh and blood; the sufferings that attend the profession of his name, and are likely to do so; these are things that keep many from him, who otherwise cannot but see much of God in him. Thus he is set for the fall of many, even in Israel, Luke ii. 34. a rock of offence, 1 Pet. ii. 1. 2. They are happy who get over these offences. Blessed are they. The expression intimates, that it is a difficult thing to conquer these prejudices, and a dangerous thing not to conquer them; but those, who notwithstanding this opposition do believe in Christ, their faith will be found so much the more to praise, and honour, and glory.

7. ¶ And as they departed, Jesus began to say unto the multitudes concerning John, What went ye out into the wilderness to see? A reed shaken with the wind? 8. But what went ye out for to see? A man clothed in soft raiment? Behold, they that wear soft clothing, are in kings' houses. 9. But what went ye out for to see? A prophet? yea, I say unto you, and more than a prophet. 10. For this is he, of whom it is written, Behold, I send my messenger before thy face, which shall prepare the way before thee. 11. Verily I say unto you, Among them that are born of women there hath not risen a greater than John the Baptist: notwithstanding he that is least in the kingdom of heaven is greater than he. 12. And from the days of John the Baptist until now the kingdom of heaven suffered violence, and the violent take it by force. 13. For all the prophets and the law prophesied until John. 14. And if ye will receive it, this is Elias, which was for to come. 15. He that hath ears to hear, let him hear.

We have here the high encomium which our Lord Jesus gave of John Baptist; not only to revive his honour, but to revive his work. Some of Christ's disciples might perhaps take occasion from the question John sent to reflect upon him, as weak and wavering, and inconsistent with himself, to prevent which Christ gives him this character. Note, It is our duty to consult the reputation of our brethren, and not only to remove, but to obviate and prevent jealousies and ill thoughts of them; and we must take all occasions, especially those that discover any thing of infirmity, to speak well of those that are praise-worthy, and to give them that fruit of their hands. John Baptist, when he was upon the stage, and Christ in privacy and retirement, bore testimony to Christ; and now Christ appeared publicly, and John was under a cloud, he bore testimony to John. Note, Those who have confirmed interest themselves, should improve it for the helping of the credit and reputation of others, whose character claims it, but either their temper or present circumstances put them out of the way of it. This is giving honour to whom honour is due. John had abased himself to honour Christ, John iii. 29, 30. Matt. iii. 11. had made himself nothing, that Christ might be all, and now Christ dignifies him with this character. Note, Those that humble themselves shall be exalted, and those that honour Christ he will honour; that confess him before men, he will confess, and sometimes before men too, even in this world. John had now finished his testimony, and now Christ commends him. Note, Christ reserves honour for his servants when they have done their work, John xii. 26.

Now concerning this commendation of John, observe.

1. That Christ spoke thus honourably of John, not in the hearing of John's disciples, but as they departed, just after they were gone, Luke vii. 24. He would not so much as seem to flatter John, nor have these praises of him reported to him. Note, Though we must be forward to give to all their due praise for their encouragement, yet we must avoid every thing that looks like flattery, or may be in danger of puffing them up. Those that in other things are mortified to the world, yet cannot well bear their own praise. Pride is a corrupt humour, which we must not feed either in others or in ourselves.

2. That what Christ said concerning John, was intended not only for his praise but for the people's profit, to revive the remembrance of John's ministry, which had been much slocked after; but was now (as other such things used to be) strangely forgotten; they did for a season, and but for a season, rejoice in his light, John v. 35. Now consider, what went ye out into the wilderness to see? Put this question to yourselves. 1. John preached in the wilderness, and thither people flocked in crowds to him, though in a remote place, and a very inconvenient one. If teachers be removed into corners, it is better that they should be without them. Now if his preaching was worth that much pains to hear it, sure it was worth taking some care to receive it. The more difficulties we have broke through to hear the word, the more we are concerned to profit by it. 2. They went out to him to see him; rather to feed their eyes with the unusual appearance of his person, than to feed their souls with his wholesome instructions, rather for curiosity than for conscience. Note, Many that attend on the word come rather to see and be seen, than to learn and be taught, to have something to talk of, than to be made wise to salvation. 3. Christ puts it to them, what went ye out to see? Note, Those that attend on the word will be called to an account, what their intentions and what their improvements were. We think when the sermon is done the care is over, no, then the greatest of the care begins. It will shortly be asked, what business had you such a time at such an ordinance? What brought you thither? Was it custom or company, or was it a desire to honour God and get good? What have you brought thence? What knowledge, and grace, and comfort? What went ye to see? Note, When we go to read and hear the word, we should see that we aim right in what we do.

3. Let us see what the commendation of John was. They know not what answer to make to Christ's question; well, saith Christ, I will tell you what a man John Baptist was.

1. He was a firm resolute man, and not a reed shaken with the wind; you have been so in your thoughts of him, but he was not so. He was not wavering in his principles, or uneven in his conversation; but was remarkable for his steadiness and constant consistency with himself. Those that are weak as reeds will be shaken as reeds; but John was strong in spirit, Eph. iv. 14. When the wind of popular applause on the one hand blew fresh and fair, when the storm of Herod's rage on the other hand grew fierce and blustering, John was still the same, the same in all weathers. The testimony he had borne to Christ, it was not the testimony of a reed, of a man that was of one mind to-day and of another to-morrow, it was not a weather-cock testimony; no, his constancy in it is intimated, John i. 20. he confessed, and denied not, but confessed, and he stood to it afterwards. John iii. 28. And therefore this question sent by his disciples was not to be construed as speaking any suspicion he now had of the truth of what he had formerly said. Therefore the people flocked to him, because he was not as a reed. Note, There is nothing lost at long run by an unshaken resolution to go on with our work, neither courting the smiles, nor fearing the frowns of men.

2. He was a self-denying man, and mortified to this world. Was he a man clothed in soft raiment? If so, you would not have gone into the wilderness to see him, but to the court. You went to see one that had his raiment of camel's hair, and a leathern girdle about his loins; his mien and habit shewed that he was dead to all the pomps of the world and the pleasures of sense; his clothing agreed with the wilderness he lived in, and the doctrine he preached there, that of repentance. Now you cannot think that he who was such a stranger to the pleasures of a court, should be brought to change his mind by the terrors of a prison, and now to question whether Jesus be the Messiah or no? Note, Those who have lived a life of mortification, are least likely to be driven off from their religion by persecution. He was not a man clothed in soft raiment; such there are, but they are in kings' houses. Note, It becomes people in all their appearances to comport with their character, and the place they are in, and to conform to that. Those that are preachers must not affect to look like courtiers; nor those whose lot is cast in common dwellings, be ambitious of the soft clothing which they wear that are in kings' houses. Prudence teacheth us to be of a piece. John appeared rough and unpleasant, yet they flocked after him. Note, The remembrance of our former zeal in attending on the word of God, should quicken us to and in our present work; let it not be said that we have done and suffered so many things in vain, have run in vain, and laboured in vain.

3. His greatest commendation of all was his office and ministry, which was more his honour than any personal endowments or qualifications could be; and therefore this is most enlarged upon in a full encomium.

1. He was a prophet, yea, and more than a prophet, ver. 9. so he said of him who was the great prophet, to whom all the prophets bare witness. John said of himself, he was not that prophet, that great prophet, the Messiah himself; and now Christ (a very competent judge), saith of him, that he was more than a prophet. He owned himself inferior to Christ, and Christ owned him superior to all the prophets. Observe, The forerunner of Christ was not a king, but a prophet, lest it should seem that the kingdom of the Messiah had been laid in earthly power; but his immediate forerunner was as such, a transcendent prophet, more than an Old Testament prophet: They all did virtuously, but John excelled them all; they saw Christ's day at a distance, and their vision was yet for a great while to come; but John saw the day dawn, he saw the sun rise, and told the people of the Messiah, as one that stood among them. They spake of Christ, but he pointed to him; they said, A virgin shall conceive, he said Behold the Lamb of God?

3. There was not a greater born of women than John Baptist, ver. 11. Christ knew how to value persons according to the degrees of their worth, and he prefers John before all that went before him, before all that were born of women by ordinary generation. Of all that God has raised up and called to any service in his church, John is the most eminent, even beyond Moses himself; for he began to preach the gospel doctrine of remission of sins to those that are truly penitent; and he had more signal revelations from heaven than any of them had; for he saw heaven opened, and the Holy Ghost descend. He also had great success in his ministry, almost the whole nation flocked to him: None rose on so great a design, or came on so noble an errand as John did, nor had such reason to be welcome. Many had been born of women that made a great figure in the world, but Christ prefers John before them. Note, Greatness is not to be measured by shew and appearances and outward splendor, but those are the greatest men that are the greatest saints and the greatest blessing, that are as John was, great in the sight of the Lord, Luke i. 15.

Yet this high encomium of John has a surprising limitation, notwithstanding he that is least in the kingdom of heaven is greater than he. 1. In the kingdom of glory. John was a great and good man, but he was yet in a state of infirmity and imperfection, and therefore came short of glorified saints, and the spirits of just men made perfect. Note, 1. There are degrees of glory in heaven, some that are less than others there; though every vessel is alike full, it is not alike large and capacious. 2. The least saint in heaven is greater, and knows more, and loves more, and doth more in glorifying God, and receives more from him than the greatest in this world. Saints on earth are excellent ones, Psal. xvi. 3. but those in heaven are much more excellent; the best in this world are lower than the angels, Psal. viii. 5. the least there are equal with the angels, which should make us long for that blessed state, where the weak shall be as David, Zech. xii. 8. 2. By the kingdom of heaven here, is rather to be understood the kingdom of grace, the gospel dispensation in the perfection of its power and purity, and ἐμπόρεως, he that is less in that is greater than John. Some understand it of Christ himself, who was younger than John, and in the opinion of some less than John, who always spoke diminishingly of himself; I am a worm, and no man, yet greater than John; so it agrees with what John Baptist said, John i. 15. He that cometh after me is preferred before me. But it is rather to be understood of the apostles and ministers of the New Testament, the evangelical prophets; and the comparison between them and John,

John, is not with respect to their personal sanctity, but to their office; John preached Christ coming, but they preached Christ not only come, but crucified and glorified. John came to the dawning of the gospel-day, and therein excelled the foregoing prophets, but he was taken off before the noon of that day, before the rending of the veil, before Christ's death and resurrection, and the pouring out of the Spirit; so that the least of the apostles and evangelists, having greater discoveries made to them, and being employed in a greater embassy, is greater than John. John did no miracles, the apostles wrought many. The ground of this preference is laid in the preference of the New Testament dispensation above that of the Old Testament. Ministers of the New Testament therefore excel, because their ministration doth so, 2 Cor. iii. 6, &c. John was a maximū quod sic, he went to the utmost that the dispensation he was under would allow; but minimum maximū est majus maximo minimi, a dwarf upon a mountain sees further than a giant in the valley. Note, All the true greatness of men is derived from and denominated by the gracious manifestation of Christ to them. The best men are no better than he is pleased to make them, and reflect light upon them. What reason have we to be thankful that our lot is cast in the days of the kingdom of heaven, under such advantages of light and love! And the greater the advantages, the greater will the account be, if we receive the grace of God in vain.

4. The great commendation of John Baptist was, that God owned his ministry, and made it wonderfully successful for the breaking of the ice, and the preparing of people for the kingdom of heaven. From the days of the first appearing of John Baptist, until now, (which was not much above two years) a great deal of good was done; so quick was the motion when it came near to Christ the centre: The kingdom of heaven suffereth violence, & is seized, & rim pulitur, like the violence of an army taking a city by storm, or of a crowd thrusting into a house, so the violent take it by force. The meaning of this we have in the parallel place, Luke xvi. 16. Since that time the kingdom of God is preached, and every man presseth into it. Multitudes are wrought upon by the ministry of John, and become his disciples. And it is, 1. An improbable multitude. Those strove for a place in this kingdom, that one would think had no right or title to it, and so seemed to be intruders, and to make a tortious entry, as our law calls it, a wrongful and forcible one. When the children of the kingdom are excluded out of it, and many come into it from the east and the west, then it suffers violence. Compare this with Matt. xxi. 31, 32. The publicans and harlots believed John, whom the Scribes and Pharisees rejected, and so went into the kingdom of God before them, took it over their heads, while they trilled. Note, It is no breach of good manners to go to heaven before our betters: And it is a great commendation of the gospel from the days of its infancy, that it has brought many to holiness that were very unlikely.

2. An importunate multitude. This violence notes a strength, and vigour, and earnestness of desire and endeavour, in those that followed John's ministry, else they would not have come so far to attend upon it. It shews us also, what fervency and zeal is required of all those that design to make heaven of their religion. Note, Those that would enter into the kingdom of heaven, must strive to enter; that kingdom suffers a holy violence; self must be denied, the bent and bias, the frame and temper of the mind must be altered; there are hard services to be done, and hard sufferings to be undergone, a force to be put upon the corrupt nature; we must run and wrestle, and fight and be in an agony, and all little enough to win such a prize, and to get over such opposition from without and from within. The violent take it by force. Those that will have an interest in the great salvation, are carried out towards it with a strong desire, will have it upon any terms, and not think them hard, nor quit their hold without a blessing, Gen. xxxii. 26. Those that will make their calling an election sure must give diligence. The kingdom of heaven was never intended to indulge the ease of trilllers, but to be the rest of them that labour. It is a blessed sight; O that we could see more of it, not with angry contention, thrusting others out of the kingdom of heaven, but with a holy contention, thrusting themselves into it!

3. The ministry of John was the beginning of the gospel, as it is reckoned, Mark i. 1. Acts i. 22. This is shewed here in two things:

1. In John the Old Testament dispensation began to die, ver. 13. So long that ministration continued in full force and virtue, but then it began to decline. Though the obligation of the law of Moses was not removed till Christ's death, yet the discoveries of the Old Testament began to be superseded by the more clear manifestation of the kingdom of heaven as at hand. Because the light of the gospel (as that of nature) was to precede and make way for its law; therefore the prophecies of the Old Testament came to an end (finis perficiens, not interficiens) before the precepts of it; so that when Christ saith, all the prophets and laws prophesied until John, he shews us, 1. How the light of the Old Testament was set up; it was set up in the law and the prophets, who spoke, though darkly, of Christ and his kingdom. Observe, The law is said to prophesy as well as the prophets, concerning him that was to come. Christ began at Moses, Luke xxiv. 27. Christ was foretold by the dumb signs of the Mosaic work, as well as by the more articulate voices of the prophets, and was exhibited not only in the verbal predictions, but in the personal and real types. Blessed be God that we have both the New Testament doctrine to explain the Old Testament prophecies, and the Old Testament prophecies to confirm and illustrate the New Testament doctrine, Heb. i. 1. like the two cherubims, they look at each other. The law was given by Moses long ago, and there had been no prophets for three hundred years before John, and yet they are both said to prophesy until John, because the law was still observed, and Moses and the prophets still read. Note, The scripture is teaching to this day, though the penmen of it are gone. Moses and the prophets are dead, the apostles and evangelists are dead, Zech. i. 5. but the word of the Lord endures for ever, 1 Pet. i. 25. The scripture is speaking expressly, though the writers are silent in the dust. 2. How this light was laid aside; when he saith, they prophesied until John, he intimates, that their glory was eclipsed by the glory which excelled; their predictions superseded by John's testimony, Behold the Lamb of God! Even before the sun riseth, the morning light makes candles to shine dim. Their prophecies of a Christ to come became out of date, when John said, He is come.

2. In him the New Testament day began to dawn; for, ver. 14. This is Elias, that was for to come. John was as the loop that coupled the two Testaments; as Noah was Fibula utriusque mundi, so was he utriusque Testamenti. The concluding prophecy of the Old Testament was, behold, I will send you Elijah, Mal. iv. 5, 6. Those words prophesied until John, and then being turned into a history they ceased to prophesy. 1. Christ speaks of it as a great truth, that John Baptist is the Elias of the New Testament, not Elias in propria persona, he denied that, John i. 21. Such an Elias the carnal Jews expected, but one that should come in the spirit and power of Elias, Luke i. 17. like him in temper and conversation, that should press repentance with terrors, and especially as it is in the prophecy, that should turn the hearts of the fathers to the children. 2. He speaks of it as a truth, which would not be easily apprehended by those whose expectations fastened upon the temporal kingdom of the Messiah, and introductions to it agreeable.

VOL. III. No. CLXI.

Christ suspects the welcome of it, if ye will receive it: Not but that it was true, whether they would receive it or no, but he upbraids them with their prejudices, that they were backward to receive the greatest truths that were cross to their sentiments, though never so favourable to their interests. Or, if you will receive him, or if you will receive the ministry of John as that of the promised Elias, he will be an Elias to you, to turn you and prepare you for the Lord. Note, Gospel truths are as they are received, a favour of life or death. Christ is a Saviour, and John an Elias to those who will receive the truth concerning them.

Lastly, Our Lord Jesus closed this discourse with a solemn demand of attention, ver. 15. He that has ears to hear, let him hear. Which intimates, that those things were dark and hard to be understood, and therefore needed attention, but of great concern and consequence, and therefore well deserved it. Let all people take notice of this, if John be the Elias prophesied of, then certainly here is a great revolution on foot, the Messiah's kingdom is at the door, and the world will shortly be surprised into a happy change. These are things which require your serious consideration, and therefore you are all concerned to hearken to what I say. Note, The things of God are of great and common concern; every one that has ears to hear any thing is concerned to hear this. It intimates, that God requires no more from us but the right use and improvement of the faculties he has already given us. He requires those to hear that have ears, those to use their reason that have reason. Therefore people are ignorant, not because they want power, but because they want will; therefore they do not hear, because like the deaf adder they stop their ears.

16. ¶ But whereunto shall I liken this generation? It is like unto children sitting in the markets, and calling unto their fellows, 17: And saying, We have piped unto you, and ye have not danced; we have mourned unto you, and ye have not lamented. 18: For John came neither eating nor drinking, and they say, He hath a devil. 19: The Son of man came eating and drinking, and they say, Behold a man gluttonous, and a wine-bibber, a friend of publicans and sinners. But wisdom is justified of her children. 20. ¶ Then began he to upbraid the cities wherein most of his mighty works were done, because they repented not. 21: Woe unto thee Chorazin! woe unto thee Bethsaida! for if the mighty works, which were done in you, had been done in Tyre and Sidon, they would have repented long ago in sackcloth and ashes. 22: But I say unto you, it shall be more tolerable for Tyre and Sidon at the day of judgment, than for you. 23: And thou Capernaum, which art exalted unto heaven, shalt be brought down to hell: for if the mighty works, which have been done in thee, had been done in Sodom, it would have remained until this day. 24: But I say unto you, That it shall be more tolerable for the land of Sodom in the day of judgment, than for thee.

Christ was going on in the praise of John Baptist and his ministry, but here stops on a sudden, and turns that to the reproach of those who enjoyed both that, and the ministry of Christ, and his apostles too, in vain. As to that generation, we may observe who he compares them to, ver. 16—19. And as to the particular places he instanceth in, we may observe who he compares them with, ver. 20—24.

First, As to that generation, the body of the Jewish people at that time. There were many indeed that pressed into the kingdom of heaven; but the generality continued in unbelief and obstinacy. John was a great and good man, but the generation into which his lot was cast was as barren and unprofitable as could be, and unworthy of him. Note, The badness of the places where good ministers live serves for a foil to their beauty. It was Noah's praise that he was righteous in his generation. Having commended John, he condemns those that had him among them and did not profit by his ministry. Note, The more praise-worthy the minister is, the more blame-worthy the people are if they slight him, and so it will be found in the day of account.

This our Lord Jesus here sets forth in a parable, yet speaks as if he were at a loss to find out a similitude proper to represent this, Whereunto shall I liken this generation? Note, There is not to be a greater absurdity than that found which they are guilty of that have good preaching among them, and are never the better for it. It is hard to say what they are like. The similitude is taken from some common custom among the Jewish children at their play, who as is usual with children, imitated the fashions of grown people at their marriages and funerals, rejoicing and lamenting; but being all a jest it made no impression; no more did the ministry either of John Baptist or of Christ upon that generation. He especially reflects on the Scribes and Pharisees, who had a proud conceit of themselves, therefore to humble them he compares them to children, and their carriage to children's play.

The parable will be best explained by opening it and the reddition of it together in these five observations.

Note, 1. The God of heaven useth variety of proper means and methods for the conversion and salvation of poor souls; he would have all men to be saved, and therefore leaves no stone unturned in order to it. The great thing he aims at, is the melting of our wills into a compliance with the will of God; and in order to this the affecting us with the discoveries he has made of himself. Having various affections to be wrought upon, he useth various ways of working upon them, which though differing one from another, all tend to the same thing, and God is in them all driving on the same design. In the parable this is called his piping to us, and his mourning to us; he hath piped to us in the precious promises of the gospel, proper to work upon hope, and mourned to us in the dreadful threatenings of the law, proper to work upon fear, that he might frighten us out of our sins and allure us to himself. He hath piped to us in gracious and merciful providences, mourned to us in calamitous afflicting providences, and hath set the one over-against the other. He hath taught his ministers to change their voice, Psalm iv. 20. Sometimes to speak in thunder from mount Sinai; sometimes in a still voice from mount Sinai.

In the reddition of the parable is set forth the different temper of John's ministry and of Christ's, who were the two great lights of that generation.

(1.) On the one hand, John came mourning to them, neither eating nor drinking;

in general, and especially of some particular places; with reference to the success, both of John's ministry and of his own, ver. 16—24. (5.) His thanksgiving to his Father for the wise and gracious method he had taken in revealing the great mysteries of the gospel, ver. 25, 26. (6.) His gracious call and invitation to poor sinners to come to him, and to be ruled and taught and saved by him, ver. 27—30. No where have we more of the terror of gospel-woes for warning to us, or of the sweetness of gospel-grace, for encouragement to us than in this chapter, which sets before us life and death the blessing and the curse.

1. AND it came to pass, when Jesus had made an end of commanding his twelve disciples, he departed thence to teach and preach in their cities. 2. Now when John had heard in the prison the works of Christ, he sent two of his disciples, 3. And said unto him, Art thou he that should come, or do we look for another? 4. Jesus answered and said unto them, Go, and shew John again those things which ye do hear and see: 5. The blind receive their sight, and the lame walk, and lepers are cleansed, and the deaf hear, the dead are raised up, and the poor have the gospel preached to them. 6. And blessed is he whosoever shall not be offended in me.

The first verse of this chapter some join to the foregoing chapter, and make it (not unfitly) the close of that.

1. The ordination sermon which Christ preached to his disciples in the foregoing chapter, is here called his commanding them. Note, Christ's commissions imply commands. Their preaching of the gospel was not only permitted them, but it was enjoined them. It was not a thing they were left at their liberty at about, but necessity was laid upon them, 1 Cor. ix. 16. The promises he made them are included in these commands, for the covenant of grace is a word which he hath commanded, Psal. cv. 8. He made an end of commanding, ἐτέλειεν διατάσσων. Note, The instructions Christ gives are full instructions. He goes through with his work.

2. When Christ had said what he had to say to his disciples, he departed thence. It should seem they were very loth to scatter and go abroad from their Master, till he departed and separated himself from them; as the nurse withdraws the hand, that the child may learn to go itself. Christ would now teach them how to live, and how to work without his bodily presence. It was expedient for them, that Christ should thus go away for a while, that they might be prepared for his long departure, and that by the help of the Spirit their own hands might be sufficient for them, Deut. xxxiii. 7. and they might not be always children. We have little account of what they did now pursuant to their commission. They went abroad, no doubt, probably into Judea (for in Galilee the gospel had been mostly preached hitherto) publishing the doctrine of Christ, and working miracles in his name; but still in a more immediate dependence upon him, and not being long from him; and thus they were trained up by degrees for their great work.

3. Christ departed to teach and preach; there where he sent his disciples before him to work miracles, and, chap. x. 1—8. so to raise people's expectations, and make way for his entertainment. Thus was the way of the Lord prepared; John prepared it by bringing people to repentance, but he did no miracles. The disciples go further, they work miracles for the confirmation. Note, Repentance and faith prepare people for the blessing of the kingdom of heaven, which Christ gives. Observe, When Christ empowered them to work miracles, he employed himself in teaching and preaching, as if that were the more honourable of the two. That was but in order to do this. Healing the sick was the saving of bodies, but preaching the gospel was to the saving of souls. Christ had directed his disciples to preach, chap. x. 7. yet he did not leave off preaching himself. He set them to work, not for his own ease, but for the ease of the country, and was not the less busy for employing them. How unlike are they to Christ who yoke others only that they may themselves be idle. Note, The increase and multitude of labourers in the Lord's work should be made not an excuse for our negligence, but an encouragement to our diligence. The more busy others are, the more busy we should be, and all little enough, so much work is there to be done. Observe, He went to preach in their cities, which were populous places; he cast the net of the gospel where there was most fish to be inclosed. Wisdom cries in the cities, Prov. i. 21. at the entry of the city, Prov. viii. 3. in the cities of the Jews, even theirs who made light of him, yet had the first offer.

What he preached we are not told, but it is likely it was to the same purpose with the sermon on the mount. But here is next recorded a message which John Baptist sent to Christ, and his return to it, ver. 2—6. We heard before that Jesus heard of John's sufferings, chap. iv. 12. Now we are told that John in prison hears of Christ's doings. He heard in prison the works of Christ; and no doubt, he was glad to hear of them, for he was a true friend of the bridegroom, John iii. 29. Note, When one useful instrument is laid aside, God knows how to raise up many others in the stead of it. The work went on, though John was in prison, and it added no affliction, but a great deal of consolation to his bonds. Nothing more comfortable to God's people in distress, than to hear of the works of Christ; especially to experience them in their own souls. This turns a prison into a palace. Some way or other Christ will convey the notices of his love to those that are in trouble for conscience sake. John could not see the works of Christ, but he heard of them with pleasure. And blessed are they which have not seen, but only heard, and yet have believed.

Now John Baptist hearing of Christ's works, sent two of his disciples to him; and what passed between them and him we have here an account of. Here is,

John iii. 34. which were great things. But, 1. He desired to be further and more fully assured that he was the Messiah that had been so long promised and expected. Note, In matters relating to Christ and our salvation by him, it is good to be sure. Christ appeared not in that external pomp and power that it was expected he should appear in; his own disciples stumbled at this, and perhaps John did so; Christ saw something of this at the bottom of this enquiry, when he said, blessed is he who shall not be offended in me. Note, It is hard, even for good men to bear up against vulgar errors. 2. John's doubt might arise from his own present circumstances. He was a prisoner, and might be tempted to think, if Jesus be indeed the Messiah, whence is it that I his friend and forerunner am brought into this trouble, and am left to be so long in it, and he never looks after me, visits me not, nor sends to me, enquires not after me, doth nothing either to sweeten my imprisonment or hasten my enlargement? Doubtless there was a good reason why our Lord Jesus did not go to John in prison, lest there should seem to have been a compact between them; but John construed it a neglect, and it was perhaps a shock to his faith in Christ. Note, 1. Where there is true faith, yet there may be a mixture of unbelief. The best are not always alike strong. 2. Troubles for Christ, especially when they continue long unrelieved, are such trials of faith as sometimes prove too hard to be borne up against. 3. The remaining unbelief of good men may sometimes in an hour of temptation strike at the root, and call in question the most fundamental truths which were thought to be so well settled, Will the Lord cast off for ever? But we will hope that John's faith did not fail in this matter, only he desired to have it strengthened and confirmed. Note, The best saints have need of the best helps they can get for the strengthening of their faith, and the arming of themselves against temptations to infidelity. Abraham believed, and yet desired a sign, Gen. xv. 6—8. so did Gideon, Judges vi. 36, 37. But, 3. Others think John sent his disciples to Christ with this question, not so much for his own satisfaction as for theirs. Observe, Though he was a prisoner they stuck to him, attended on him, and were ready to receive instructions from him; they loved him, and would not leave him. Now, 1. They were weak in knowledge and wavering in their faith, and need instruction and confirmation; and in this matter they were somewhat prejudiced, being jealous for their master, they were jealous of our Master; were loth to acknowledge Jesus to be the Messiah, because he eclipsed John, and are loth to believe their own master when they think he speaks against himself and them. Good men are apt to have their judgments biased by their interest. Now John would have their mistakes rectified, and them as well satisfied as he himself was. Note, The strong ought to consider the infirmities of the weak, and do what they can to help them; and such as we cannot help ourselves, we should send to those that can. When thou art converted, strengthen thy brethren. 2. John was all along industrious to turn over his disciples to Christ, as from the grammar-school to the academy. Perhaps he foresaw his death approaching, and therefore would bring his disciples to be better acquainted with Christ, under whose guardianship he must leave them. Note, Ministers' business is to direct every body to Christ. And those who would know the certainty of the doctrine of Christ, must apply themselves to him, who is come to give an understanding. Those that would grow in grace must be inquisitive.

1. He points them to what they heard and saw, which they must tell John, that he might from thence take occasion the more fully to instruct and convince them out of their own mouths. Go and tell him what you hear and see. Note, Our senses may and ought to be appealed to in those things that are their proper objects. Therefore the popish doctrine of the real presence agrees not with the truth as it is in Jesus; for Christ refers us to the things we hear and see. Go and tell John.

1. What you see of the power of Christ's miracles; you see how by the word of Jesus the blind receive their sight, the lame walk, &c. Christ's miracles were done openly, and in the view of all; for they feared not the strongest and most impartial scrutiny. Veritas non querit angulos. They are to be considered, 1. As the acts of a divine power. None but the God of nature could thus over-rule and out-do the power of nature. It is particularly spoken of God's prerogative to open the eyes of the blind. Psal. cxlvi. 8. Miracles are therefore the broad-seal of heaven, and the doctrine they are affixed to must be of God, for his power will never contradict his truth; nor can it be imagined he should set his seal to a lie; however, lying wonders may be vouched for proof of false doctrines, true miracles, evince a divine commission; such Christ's were, and leave no room to doubt that he was sent of God, and his doctrine was his that sent him. 2. As the accomplishment of a divine prediction. It was foretold, Isa. xxxv. 5, 6, that our God should come, and that then the eyes of the blind should be opened. Now if the works of Christ agree with the words of the prophet, as it is plain they do, then, no doubt but this is our God whom we have waited for, who shall come with a recompence; this is he that is so much wanted.

2. Tell him what you hear of the preaching of his gospel, which goes along with his miracles. Faith, though confirmed by seeing, comes by hearing. Tell him, 1. That the poor preach the gospel; so some read it. It proves Christ's divine mission, that those whom he employed in sounding his kingdom were poor men, destitute of all secular advantages, and therefore could never have carried their point, if they had not been carried on by a divine power. 2. That the poor have the gospel preached to them. Christ's auditory is made up of such as the Scribes and Pharisees despised and looked upon with contempt; and the Rabbinists would not instruct, because they were not able to pay them. The Old Testament prophets were sent mostly to kings and princes, but Christ preached to the congregation of the poor. It was foretold that the poor of the flock should wait upon him, Zech. xi. 11. Note, Christ's gracious condescensions and compassions to the poor, are an evidence that it was he that should bring to the world the tender mercies of our God. It was foretold that the Son of David should be the poor man's king, Psal. lxxii. 2—4—12, 13. Or we may understand it, not so much of the poor of the world, as the poor in Spirit, and so that scripture is fulfilled, Isa. lxi. 1. He hath anointed me to preach good tidings to the meek. Note, It is a proof of Christ's divine mission that his doctrine is gospel indeed; good news to those that are truly humbled in sorrow for their sins, and truly humble in the denial of self; to them it is accommodated, for whom God always declared he had mercy in store. 3. That the poor receive the gospel, and are wrought upon by it, they are evangelized, they receive and entertain the gospel, are leavened by it, and delivered into it as into a mould. Note, The wonderful efficacy of the gospel is a proof of its divine original. The poor are wrought upon by it. The prophets complained of the poor, that they knew not the way of the Lord, Jer. v. 4. They could do no good upon them; but the gospel of Christ made its way into their stupid souls.

2. He pronounceth a blessing on those that were not offended in him, ver. 6. So

6. So clear are these evidences of Christ's mission, that those who are not wilfully prejudiced against him, and scandalized in him; (so the word is) cannot but receive his doctrine, and so be blessed in him. Note, 1. There are many things in Christ which those that are ignorant and unthinking are apt to be offended at, some circumstances, for the sake of which they reject the substance of his gospel. The meanness of his appearance, his education at Nazareth, the poverty of his life, the despicableness of his followers, the slights which the great men put upon him, the strictness of his doctrine, and the contradiction it gives to flesh and blood; the sufferings that attend the profession of his name, and are likely to do so; these are things that keep many from him, who otherwise cannot but see much of God in him. Thus he is set for the fall of many, even in Israel, Luke ii. 34. a rock of offence, 1 Pet. ii. 1. 2. They are happy who get over these offences. Blessed are they. The expression intimates, that it is a difficult thing to conquer these prejudices, and a dangerous thing not to conquer them; but those, who notwithstanding this opposition do believe in Christ, their faith will be found so much the more to praise, and honour, and glory.

7. ¶ And as they departed, Jesus began to say unto the multitudes concerning John, What went ye out into the wilderness to see? A reed shaken with the wind? 8. But what went ye out for to see? A man clothed in soft raiment? Behold, they that wear soft clothing, are in kings' houses. 9. But what went ye out for to see? A prophet? yea, I say unto you, and more than a prophet. 10. For this is he, of whom it is written, Behold, I send my messenger before thy face, which shall prepare the way before thee. 11. Verily I say unto you, Among them that are born of women there hath not risen a greater than John the Baptist: notwithstanding he that is least in the kingdom of heaven is greater than he. 12. And from the days of John the Baptist until now the kingdom of heaven suffered violence, and the violent take it by force. 13. For all the prophets and the law prophesied until John. 14. And if ye will receive it, this is Elias, which was for to come. 15. He that hath ears to hear, let him hear.

We have here the high encomium which our Lord Jesus gave of John Baptist; not only to revive his honour, but to revive his work. Some of Christ's disciples might perhaps take occasion from the question John sent to reflect upon him, as weak and wavering, and inconsistent with himself, to prevent which Christ gives him this character. Note, It is our duty to consult the reputation of our brethren, and not only to remove, but to obviate and prevent jealousies and ill thoughts of them; and we must take all occasions, especially those that discover any thing of infirmity, to speak well of those that are praise-worthy, and to give them that fruit of their hands. John Baptist, when he was upon the stage, and Christ in privacy and retirement, bore testimony to Christ; and now Christ appeared publicly, and John was under a cloud, he bore testimony to John. Note, Those who have confirmed interest themselves, should improve it for the helping of the credit and reputation of others, whose character claims it, but either their temper or present circumstances put them out of the way of it. This is giving honour to whom honour is due. John had abased himself to honour Christ, John iii. 29, 30. Matt. iii. 11. had made himself nothing, that Christ might be all, and now Christ dignifies him with this character. Note, Those that humble themselves shall be exalted, and those that honour Christ he will honour; that confess him before men, he will confess, and sometimes before men too, even in this world. John had now finished his testimony, and now Christ commends him. Note, Christ reserves honour for his servants when they have done their work, John xii. 26.

Now concerning this commendation of John, observe.

1. That Christ spoke thus honourably of John, not in the hearing of John's disciples, but as they departed, just after they were gone, Luke vii. 24. He would not so much as seem to flatter John, nor have these praises of him reported to him. Note, Though we must be forward to give to all their due praise for their encouragement, yet we must avoid every thing that looks like flattery, or may be in danger of puffing them up. Those that in other things are mortified to the world, yet cannot well bear their own praise. Pride is a corrupt humour, which we must not feed either in others or in ourselves.

2. That what Christ said concerning John, was intended not only for his praise but for the people's profit, to revive the remembrance of John's ministry, which had been much flocked after; but was now (as other such things used to be) strangely forgotten; they did for a season, and but for a season, rejoice in his light, John v. 35. Now consider, what went ye out into the wilderness to see? Put this question to yourselves. 1. John preached in the wilderness, and thither people flocked in crowds to him, though in a remote place, and a convenient one. If teachers be removed into corners, it is better to have them there than be without them. Now if his preaching was worth the pains to hear it, sure it was worth taking some care to recover it. The more difficulties we have broke through to hear the word, the more we are concerned to profit by it. 2. They went out to him to see him; rather to feed their eyes with the unusual appearance of his person, than to feed their souls with his wholesome instructions, rather for curiosity than for conscience. Note, Many that attend on the word come rather to see and be seen, than to learn and be taught, to have something to talk of, than to be made wise to salvation. 3. Christ puts it to them, what went ye out to see? Note, Those that attend on the word will be called to an account, what their intentions and what their improvements were. We think when the sermon is done the care is over, no, then the greatest of the care begins. It will shortly be asked, what business had you such a time at such an ordinance? What brought you thither? Was it custom or company, or was it a desire to honour God and get good? What have you brought thence? What knowledge, and grace, and comfort? What went ye to see? Note, When we go to read and hear the word, we should see that we aim right in what we do.

3. Let us see what the commendation of John was. They know not what answer to make to Christ's question; well, saith Christ, I will tell you what a man, John Baptist was.

1. He was a firm resolute man, and not a reed shaken with the wind; you have been so in your thoughts of him, but he was not so. He was not wavering in his principles, or uneven in his conversation; but was remarkable for his steadiness and constant consistency with himself. Those that are weak as reeds will be shaken as reeds; but John was strong in spirit, Eph. iv. 14. When the wind of popular applause on the one hand blew fresh and fair, when the storm of Herod's rage on the other hand grew fierce and blustering, John was still the same, the same in all weathers. The testimony he had borne to Christ, it was not the testimony of a reed, of a man that was of one mind to-day and of another to-morrow, it was not a weather-cock testimony; no, his constancy in it is intimated, John i. 20, he confessed, and denied not, but confessed, and he stood to it afterwards. John iii. 28. And therefore this question sent by his disciples was not to be construed as speaking any suspicion he now had of the truth of what he had formerly said. Therefore the people flocked to him, because he was not as a reed. Note, There is nothing lost at long run by an unshaken resolution to go on with our work, neither courting the smiles, nor fearing the frowns of men.

2. He was a self-denying man, and mortified to this world. Was he a man clothed in soft raiment? If so, you would not have gone into the wilderness to see him, but to the court. You went to see one that had his raiment of camel's hair, and a leathern girdle about his loins; his mien and habit shewed that he was dead to all the pomps of the world and the pleasures of sense; his clothing agreed with the wilderness he lived in, and the doctrine he preached there, that of repentance. Now you cannot think that he who was such a stranger to the pleasures of a court, should be brought to change his mind by the terrors of a prison, and now to question whether Jesus be the Messiah or no? Note, Those who have lived a life of mortification, are least likely to be driven off from their religion by persecution. He was not a man clothed in soft raiment; such there are, but they are in kings' houses. Note, It becomes people in all their appearances to comport with their character, and the place they are in, and to conform to that. Those that are preachers must not affect to look like courtiers; nor those whose lot is cast in common dwellings, be ambitious of the soft clothing which they wear that are in kings' houses. Prudence teacheth us to be of a piece. John appeared rough and unpleasant, yet they flocked after him. Note, The remembrance of our former zeal in attending on the word of God, should quicken us to and in our present work; let it not be said that we have done and suffered so many things in vain, have run in vain, and laboured in vain.

3. His greatest commendation of all was his office and ministry, which was more his honour than any personal endowments or qualifications could be; and therefore this is most enlarged upon in a full encomium.

1. He was a prophet, yea, and more than a prophet, ver. 9. so he said of him who was the great prophet, to whom all the prophets bore witness. John said of himself, he was not that prophet, that great prophet, the Messiah himself; and now Christ (a very competent judge), saith of him, that he was more than a prophet. He owned himself inferior to Christ, and Christ owned him superior to all the prophets. Observe, The forerunner of Christ was not a king, but a prophet, lest it should seem that the kingdom of the Messiah had been laid in earthly power; but his immediate forerunner was as such, a transcendent prophet, more than an Old Testament prophet: They all did virtuously, but John excelled them all; they saw Christ's day at a distance, and their vision was yet for a great while to come; but John saw the day dawn, he saw the sun rise, and told the people of the Messiah, as one that stood among them. They spake of Christ, but he pointed to him; they said, A virgin shall conceive, he said Behold the Lamb of God?

3. There was not a greater born of women than John Baptist, ver. 11. Christ knew how to value persons according to the degrees of their worth, and he prefers John before all that went before him, before all that were born of women by ordinary generation. Of all that God has raised up and called to any service in his church, John is the most eminent, even beyond Moses himself; for he began to preach the gospel doctrine of remission of sins to those that are truly penitent; and he had more signal revelations from heaven than any of them had; for he saw heaven opened, and the Holy Ghost descend. He also had great success in his ministry, almost the whole nation flocked to him: None rose on so great a design, or came on so noble an errand as John did, nor had such reason to be welcome. Many had been born of women that made a great figure in the world, but Christ prefers John before them. Note, Greatness is not to be measured by shew and appearances and outward splendor, but those are the greatest men that are the greatest saints and the greatest blessing, that are as John was, great in the sight of the Lord, Luke i. 15.

Yet this high encomium of John has a surprising limitation, notwithstanding he that is least in the kingdom of heaven is greater than he. 1. In the kingdom of glory. John was a great and good man, but he was yet in a state of infirmity and imperfection, and therefore came short of glorified saints, and the spirits of just men made perfect. Note, 1. There are degrees of glory in heaven, some that are less than others there; though every vessel is alike full, it is not alike large and capacious. 2. The least saint in heaven is greater, and knows more, and loves more, and doth more in glorifying God, and receives more from him than the greatest in this world. Saints on earth are excellent ones, Psalm xvi. 3. but those in heaven are much more excellent; the best in this world are lower than the angels, Psalm viii. 5. the least there are equal with the angels, which should make us long for that blessed state, where the weak shall be as David, Zech. xii. 8. 2. By the kingdom of heaven here, is rather to be understood the kingdom of grace, the gospel dispensation in the perfection of its power and purity, and ἐμπόρεως, he that is less in that is greater than John. Some understand it of Christ himself, who was younger than John, and in the opinion of some less than John, who always spoke diminishingly of himself; I am a worm, and no man, yet greater than John; so it agrees with what John Baptist said, John i. 15. He that cometh after me is preferred before me. But it is rather to be understood of the apostles and ministers of the New Testament, the evangelical prophets; and the comparison between them and John,

John, is not with respect to their personal sanctity, but to their office; John preached Christ coming, but they preached Christ not only come, but crucified and glorified. John came to the dawning of the gospel-day, and therein excelled the foregoing prophets, but he was taken off before the noon of that day, before the rending of the veil, before Christ's death and resurrection, and the pouring out of the Spirit; so that the least of the apostles and evangelists, having greater discoveries made to them, and being employed in a greater embassy, is greater than John. John did no miracles, the apostles wrought many. The ground of this preference is laid in the preference of the New Testament dispensation above that of the Old Testament. Ministers of the New Testament therefore excel, because their ministrations doth so, 2 Cor. iii. 6, &c. John was a maximum quod sic, he went to the utmost that the dispensation he was under would allow; but minimum marimi est majus maximo minimi, a dwarf upon a mountain sees further than a giant in the valley. Note, All the true greatness of men is derived from and denominated by the gracious manifestation of Christ to them. The best men are no better than he is pleased to make them, and reflect light upon them. What reason have we to be thankful that our lot is cast in the days of the kingdom of heaven, under such advantages of light and love! And the greater advantages, the greater will the account be, if we receive the grace of God in vain.

4. The great commendation of John Baptist was, that God owned his ministry, and made it wonderfully successful for the breaking of the ice, and the preparing of people for the kingdom of heaven. From the days of the first appearing of John Baptist, until now, (which was not much above two years) a great deal of good was done; so quick was the motion when it came near to Christ the centre: The kingdom of heaven suffereth violence, & is seized, & every man presseth into it. Like the violence of an army taking a city by storm, or of a crowd thrusting into a house, so the violent take it by force. The meaning of this we have in the parallel place, Luke xvi. 16. Since that time the kingdom of God is preached, and every man presseth into it. Multitudes are wrought upon by the ministry of John, and become his disciples. And it is, 1. An improbable multitude. Those strove for a place in this kingdom, that one would think had no right or title to it, and so seemed to be intruders, and to make a tortuous entry, as our law calls it, a wrongful and forcible one. When the children of the kingdom are excluded out of it, and many come into it from the east and the west, then it suffers violence. Compare this with Matt. xxi. 31, 32. The publicans and harlots believed John, whom the Scribes and Pharisees rejected, and so went into the kingdom of God before them, took it over their heads, while they trifled. Note, It is no breach of good manners to go to heaven before our betters: And it is a great commendation of the gospel from the days of its infancy, that it has brought many to holiness that were very unlikely.

2. An importunate multitude. This violence notes a strength, and vigour, and earnestness of desire and endeavour, in those that followed John's ministry, else they would not have come so far to attend upon it. It shews us also, what fervency and zeal is required of all those that design to make heaven of their religion. Note, Those that would enter into the kingdom of heaven, must strive to enter; that kingdom suffers a holy violence; self must be denied, the bent and bias, the frame and temper of the mind must be altered; there are hard services to be done, and hard sufferings to be undergone, a force to be put upon the corrupt nature; we must run and wrestle, and fight and be in an agony, and all little enough to win such a prize, and to get over such opposition from without and from within. The violent take it by force. Those that will have an interest in the great salvation, are carried out towards it with a strong desire, will have it upon any terms, and not think them hard, nor quit their hold without a blessing, Gen. xxxii. 26. Those that will make their calling and election sure must give diligence. The kingdom of heaven was never intended to indulge the ease of triflers, but to be the rest of them that labour. It is a blessed fight; O that we could see more of it, not with angry contention, thrusting others out of the kingdom of heaven, but with a holy contention, thrusting ourselves into it!

1. In John the Old Testament dispensation began to die, ver. 13. So long that ministration continued in full force and virtue, but then it began to decline. Though the obligation of the law of Moses was not removed till Christ's death, yet the discoveries of the Old Testament began to be superseded by the more clear manifestation of the kingdom of heaven as at hand. Because the light of the gospel (as that of nature) was to precede and make way for its law; therefore the prophecies of the Old Testament came to an end (finis perficiens, not interficiens) before the precepts of it; so that when Christ saith, all the prophets and law prophesied until John, he shews us, 1. How the light of the Old Testament was set up; it was set up in the law and the prophets, who spoke, though darkly, of Christ and his kingdom. Observe, The law is said to prophesy as well as the prophets, concerning him that was to come. Christ began at Moses, Luke xxiv. 27. Christ was foretold by the dumb signs of the Mosaic work, as well as by the more articulate voices of the prophets, and was exhibited not only in the verbal predictions, but in the personal and real types. Blessed be God that we have both the New Testament doctrine to explain the Old Testament prophecies, and the Old Testament prophecies to confirm and illustrate the New Testament doctrine, Heb. i. 1. like the two cherubims, they look at each other. The law was given by Moses long ago, and there had been no prophets for three hundred years before John, and yet they are both said to prophesy until John, because the law was still observed, and Moses and the prophets still read. Note, The scripture is teaching to this day, though the penmen of it are gone. Moses and the prophets are dead, the apostles and evangelists are dead, Zech. i. 5. but the word of the Lord endures for ever, 1 Pet. i. 25. The scripture is speaking expressly, though the writers are silent in the dust. 2. How this light was laid aside; when he saith, they prophesied until John, he intimates, that their glory was eclipsed by the glory which excelled; their predictions superseded by John's testimony, Behold the Lamb of God! Even before the sun riseth, the morning light makes candles to shine dim. Their prophecies of a Christ to come became out of date, when John said, He is come.

2. In him the New Testament day began to dawn; for, ver. 14. This is Elias, that was for to come. John was as the loop that coupled the two Testaments; as Noah was Fibula utriusque mundi, so was he utrinque Testamenti. The concluding prophecy of the Old Testament was, behold, I will send you Elijah, Mal. iv. 5, 6. Those words prophesied until John, and then being turned into a history they ceased to prophesy. 1. Christ speaks of it as a great truth, that John Baptist is the Elias of the New Testament, not Elias in propria persona, he denied that, John i. 21. Such an Elias the carnal Jews expected; but one that should come in the spirit and power of Elias, Luke i. 17. like him in temper and conversation, that should press repentance with terrors, and especially as it is in the prophecy, that should turn the hearts of the fathers to the children. 2. He speaks of it as a truth, which would not be easily apprehended by those whose expectations fastened upon the temporal kingdom of the Messiah, and introductions to it agreeable.

Vol. III. No. CLXI.

Christ suspects the welcome of it, if ye will receive it: Not but that it was true, whether they would receive it or no, but he upbraids them with their prejudices, that they were backward to receive the greatest truths that were crosses to their sentiments, though never so favourable to their interests. Or, if you will receive him, or if you will receive the ministry of John as that of the promised Elias, he will be an Elias to you, to turn you and prepare you for the Lord. Note, Gospel truths are as they are received, a favour of life or death. Christ is a Saviour, and John an Elias to those who will receive the truth concerning them.

Lastly, Our Lord Jesus closed this discourse with a solemn demand of attention, ver. 15. He that has ears to hear, let him hear. Which intimates, that those things were dark and hard to be understood, and therefore needed attention, but of great concern and consequence, and therefore well deserved it. Let all people take notice of this, if John be the Elias prophesied of, then certainly here is a great revolution on foot, the Messiah's kingdom is at the door, and the world will shortly be surprised into a happy change. These are things which require your serious consideration, and therefore you are all concerned to hearken to what I say. Note, The things of God are of great and common concern; every one that has ears to hear any thing is concerned to hear this. It intimates, that God requires no more from us but the right use and improvement of the faculties he has already given us. He requires those to hear that have ears, those to use their reason that have reason. Therefore people are ignorant, not because they want power; but because they want will; therefore they do not hear, because like the deaf adder they stop their ears.

16. ¶ But whereunto shall I liken this generation? It is like unto children sitting in the markets, and calling unto their fellows, 17. And saying, We have piped unto you, and ye have not danced; we have mourned unto you, and ye have not lamented. 18. For John came neither eating nor drinking, and they say, He hath a devil. 19. The Son of man came eating and drinking, and they say, Behold a man gluttonous, and a wine-bibber, a friend of publicans and sinners. But wisdom is justified of her children. 20. ¶ Then began he to upbraid the cities wherein most of his mighty works were done, because they repented not. 21. Woe unto thee Chorazin! woe unto thee Bethsaida! for if the mighty works, which were done in you, had been done in Tyre and Sidon, they would have repented long ago in sackcloth and ashes. 22. But I say unto you, it shall be more tolerable for Tyre and Sidon at the day of judgment, than for you. 23. And thou Capernaum, which art exalted unto heaven, shalt be brought down to hell: for if the mighty works, which have been done in thee, had been done in Sodom, it would have remained until this day. 24. But I say unto you, That it shall be more tolerable for the land of Sodom in the day of judgment, than for thee.

Christ was going on in the praise of John Baptist and his ministry, but here stops on a sudden, and turns that to the reproach of those who enjoyed both that, and the ministry of Christ, and his apostles too, in vain. As to that generation, we may observe who he compares them to, ver. 16—19. And as to the particular places he instanceth in, we may observe who he compares them with, ver. 20—24.

First, As to that generation, the body of the Jewish people at that time. There were many indeed that pressed into the kingdom of heaven; but the generality continued in unbelief and obstinacy. John was a great and good man, but the generation into which his lot was cast was as barren and unprofitable as could be, and unworthy of him. Note, The badness of the places where good ministers live serves for a foil to their beauty. It was Noah's praise that he was righteous in his generation. Having commended John, he condemns those that had him among them and did not profit by his ministry. Note, The more praise-worthy the minister is, the more blame-worthy the people are if they slight him, and so it will be found in the day of account.

This our Lord Jesus here sets forth in a parable, yet speaks as if he were at a loss to find out a similitude proper to represent this, Whereunto shall I liken this generation? Note, There is not to be a greater absurdity than that found which they are guilty of that have good preaching among them, and are never the better for it. It is hard to say what they are like. The similitude is taken from some common custom among the Jewish children at their play, who as is usual with children, imitated the fashions of grown people at their marriages and funerals, rejoicing and lamenting; but being all a jest it made no impression; no more did the ministry either of John Baptist or of Christ upon that generation. He especially reflects on the Scribes and Pharisees, who had a proud conceit of themselves, therefore to humble them he compares them to children, and their carriage to children's play.

The parable will be best explained by opening it and the reddition of it together in these five observations.

Note, 1. The God of heaven useth variety of proper means and methods for the conversion and salvation of poor souls; he would have all men to be saved, and therefore leaves no stone unturned in order to it. The great thing he aims at, is the melting of our wills into a compliance with the will of God; and in order to this the affecting us with the discoveries he has made of himself. Having various affections to be wrought upon, he useth various ways of working upon them, which though differing one from another, all tend to the same thing, and God is in them all driving on the same design. In the parable this is called his piping to us, and his mourning to us; he hath piped to us in the precious promises of the gospel, proper to work upon hope, and mourned to us in the dreadful threatenings of the law, proper to work upon fear, that he might frighten us out of our sins and allure us to himself. He hath piped to us in gracious and merciful providences, mourned to us in calamitous afflicting providences, and hath set the one over-against the other. He hath taught his ministers to change their voice, Psalm iv. 20. Sometimes to speak in thunder from mount Sinai; sometimes in a still voice from mount Sinai.

In the reddition of the parable is set forth the different temper of John's ministry and of Christ's, who were the two great lights of that generation.

(1.) On the one hand, John came mourning to them, neither eating nor drinking; drinking; not conversing familiarly with people, nor ordinarily eating in company, but alone in his cell in the wilderness, where his meat was locusts and wild honey. Now this one would think should work upon men; for such an austere mortified life as this, was very agreeable to the doctrine he preached; and that minister is most likely to do good whose conversation is according to his doctrine, and yet the preaching even of such a minister is not always effectual.

(2.) On the other hand, the Son of man came eating and drinking, and so he peopled unto them. Christ conversed familiarly with all sorts of people, not affecting any peculiar strictness or austerity; he was affable and easy of access, not shy of any company, was often at feasts, both with Pharisees and publicans, to try if this would win upon those that were not wrought upon by John's reservedness: Those that were not awed by John's frowns, would be allured by Christ's smiles; from whom St. Paul learned to become all things to all men, 1 Cor. ix. 22. Now our Lord Jesus, by this freedom he took, did not at all condemn John, no more than John did condemn him, though their carriage was so very different. Note, Though we are never so clear in the goodness of our own practice, yet we must not judge of others by it. There may be a great diversity of operations, where it is the same God that worketh all in all, 1 Cor. xii. 6. and this various manifestation of the Spirit is given to every man to profit withal, ver. 7. Observe especially that God's ministers are variously gifted: The ability and genius of some lies one way, of others another way: Some are Boanerges's sons, of thunder; others Barnabas's sons of consolation; yet all these worketh that one and the self-same Spirit, 1 Cor. xii. 11. and therefore we ought not to condemn either, but praise both, and thank God for both, who thus tries various ways of dealing with persons of various tempers, that sinners may be either made pliable or left inexcusable, so that whatever the issue is God will be glorified.

Note, 2. The various methods which God takes for the conversion of sinners, are with many fruitless and ineffectual, Ye have not danced, ye have not lamented, i. e. you have not been suitably affected either with the one or with the other; particular means have, as in medicine, their particular intentions, which must be answered, particular impressions, which must be submitted to, in order to the success of the great and general design; now if people will be neither bound by laws, nor invited by promises, nor frightened by threatenings, will neither be awakened by the greatest things, nor allured by the sweetest things, nor startled by the most terrible things, nor be made sensible by the plainest things; if they will hearken to the voice neither of scripture, nor reason, nor experience, nor providence, nor conscience, nor interest, what more can be done? The bellows are burnt, the lead is consumed, the founder melteth in vain; reprobate silver shall men call them, Jer. vi. 29. Ministers' labour is belovved in vain, Isa. xlv. 4. and which is a much greater loss, the grace of God received in vain, 2 Cor. vi. 1. Note, It is some comfort to faithful ministers when they see little success of their labours, that it is no new thing for the best preachers and the best preaching in the world to come short of the desired end. Who has believed our report? If from the blood of the just, from the gut of the mighty, the law of those great commanders, Christ and John, returned to our empty, (2 Sam. i. 22.) no marvel if ours do so, and we prophesy to to little purple upon dry bones.

Note, 3. That commonly those people that do not profit by the means of grace are perverse, and reflect upon the ministers by whom they enjoy those means; and because they do not get good themselves, they do all the hurt they can to others, by raising and propagating prejudices against the word and the faithful preachers of it. Those that will not comply with God and walk after him, confront him and walk contrary to him. So this generation did; because they were resolved not to believe Christ and John, and to own them as they ought to have done for the best of men, they set themselves to abuse them, and to represent them as the worst. 1. As for John Baptist they say, He has a devil. They imputed his strictness and reservedness to melancholy, and some kind or degree of a possession of Satan. Why should we heed him? he is a poor hypochondriacal man, full of fancies, and under the power of a crazed imagination. 2. As for Jesus Christ, they imputed his free and obliging conversation to the more vicious habit of luxury and flesh-pleasing: Behold a gluttonous man and a wine-bibber. No reflection could be more foul and invincible; it is the charge against the rebellious son, Deut. xxi. 20. He is a glutton and a drunkard; yet none could be more false and unjust; for Christ pleased not himself, Rom. xv. 3. nor did ever any man live such a life of self-denial, mortification and contempt of the world, as Christ lived; he that was undefiled and separate from sinners, is here represented as in league with them, and polluted by them. Note, The most unspotted innocence and the most unparalleled excellency, will not always be a fence against the reproach of tongues. Nay, a man's best gifts and best actions, which are both well intended and well calculated for edification, may be made the matter of his reproach. The best of our actions may become the worst of our accusations, as David's fasting, Psal. xli. 10. It was true in some sense that Christ was a friend to publicans and sinners, the best friend they ever had, for he came into the world to save sinners, great sinners, even the chief, to he said very feelingly, who had been himself, not a publican and sinner, but a Pharisee and sinner; but this is and will be to eternity Christ's praise; and they forfeited the benefit of it who thus turned it to his reproach.

Note, 4. That the cause of this great unfruitfulness and perverseness of people under the means of grace, is because they are like children sitting in the markets; they are foolish as children, forward as children, mindless and playful as children; would they but show themselves men in understanding, there would be some hopes of them. The market-place they sit in, is to some a place of idleness, Matt. ix. 3. to others a place of worldly business, James iv. 13. to all a place of noise or diversion; so that if you ask the reason why people get so little good by the means of grace, you will find it is because they are slothful and trifling, and do not love to take pains; or because their heads and hands and hearts are full of the world, the cares of which choke the word, and choke their souls at last, Ezek. xxxiii. 31. Amos vii. 5. and they study to divert their own thoughts from every thing that is serious. Thus in the markets they are, and there they sit; in these things their hearts rest, and by them they resolve to abide.

Note, 5. Though the means of grace be thus slighted and abused by many, by the most, yet there is a remnant that through grace do improve them, and answer the designs of them, to the glory of God and the good of their own souls. But wisdom is justified of her children. Christ is wisdom, in him we hid treasures of wisdom; the saints are the children God has given him, Heb. ii. 13. The gospel is wisdom, it is the wisdom from above: True believers are begotten again by it, and born from above too: They are wise children, wise for themselves and their true interests; not like the foolish children that sit in the markets: These children of wisdom justify wisdom, they comply with the designs of Christ's grace, answer the intentions of it, and are suitably affected with and impressed by the various methods it takes, and so evidence the wisdom of Christ in taking these methods. This is explained, Luke vii. 29. The publicans justified God, being baptized with the baptism of John, and afterwards embracing the gospel of Christ. Note, The success of the means of grace, justifies the wisdom of God in the choice of these means against those who charge him with folly therein. The cure of every patient, that observes the physician's orders, justifies the wisdom of the physician: and therefore Paul is not ashamed of the gospel of Christ, because whatever it is to others, to them that believe it is the power of God unto salvation, Rom. i. 16. When the cross of Christ, which to others is foolishness and a stumbling-block is to them that are called the wisdom of God, and the power of God, 1 Cor. i. 23, 24. so that they make the knowledge of that the top of their ambition, 1 Cor. ii. 2. and the efficacy of that the crown of their glorying, Gal. vi. 14. here is wisdom justified of her children: Wisdom's children are wisdom's witnesses in the world, Isa. xliii. 10. and shall be produced as witnesses in that day when wisdom, that is now justified by the saints, shall be glorified in the saints, and admired in all them that believe, 2 Thess. i. 10. If the unbelief of some reproach Christ by giving him the lie, the faith of others shall honour him by setting to its seal that he is true, and that he also is wise, 1 Cor. i. 25. Whether we do it or no, it will be done; not only God's equity, but his wisdom will be justified when he speaks, when he judges.

Well, this is the account Christ gives of that generation, and that generation is not passed away, but remains in a succession of the like; for as it was then, it has been since and is still, some believe the things which are spoken, and some believe not, Acts xxviii. 24.

Secondly, As to the particular places in which Christ was most conversant. What he said in general of that generation, he applied in particular to those places to affect them. Then began he to upbraid them, ver. 20. He began to preach to them long before, chap. iv. 17. but he did not begin to upbraid till now. Note; Rough and unpleasing methods must not be taken till gentler means have first been used. Christ is not apt to upbraid, he gives liberally, and upbraideth not, till sinners by their obduracy extort it from him. Wisdom first invites, but when her invitations are slighted, then she upbraids, Prov. i. 20—24. Those do not go in Christ's method, who begin with upbraidings. Now observe,

1. The sin charged upon them, not any against the moral law, then an appeal would have lain to the gospel, which would have relieved, but a sin against the gospel the remedial law, and that is impenitency: This was it he upbraideth with or reproacheth them for, as the most shameful ungrateful thing that could be, that they repented not. Note, Willful impenitency is the great damning sin of multitudes that enjoy the gospel, and which (more than any other) sinners will be upbraided with to eternity. The great doctrine that both John Baptist and Christ and the apostles preached, was repentance; the great thing designed, both in the psalm and in the morning, was to prevail with people to change their minds and ways, to leave their sins and turn to God; and this they would not be brought to: He doth not say, because they believed not: for some kind of faith many of them had, that Christ was a teacher come from God; but because they repented not; their faith did not prevail to the transforming of their hearts, and the reforming of their lives. Christ reproved them for their other sins, that he might lead them to repentance; but when they repented not he upbraided them with that, as their refusal to be healed: He upbraided them with it that they might upbraid themselves, and might at length see the folly of it, as that which alone makes the sad case a desperate one, and the wound incurable.

2. The aggravation of the sin; they were the cities in which most of his mighty works were done; for thereabouts his principal residence had been for some time. Note, Some places enjoy the means of grace in greater plenty, power and purity than other places. God is a free agent, and acts so in all his disposals, both as the God of nature and as the God of grace, common and distinguishing grace. By Christ's mighty works, they should have been prevailed with, not only to receive his doctrine but to obey his law; the curing of bodily diseases should have been the healing of their souls, but it had not that effect. Note, The stronger inducements we have to repent, the more heinous is the impenitency, and the severer will the reckoning be; for Christ keeps account of the mighty works done among us, and of the gracious works done for us too, by which also we should be led to repentance, Rom. ii. 4.

(1. Chorazin and Bethsaida are here instanced in, ver. 21, 22. they have each of them their woe: Woe unto thee Chorazin, woe unto thee Bethsaida. Christ came into the world to bless us, but if that blessing be slighted, he has woes in reserve, and his woes are of all other the most terrible. These two cities were situate upon the sea of Galilee, the former on the east side, and the latter on the west, rich and populous places; Bethsaida was lately advanced to a city by Philip the tetrarch, out of it Christ took at least three of his apostles: Thus highly were these places favoured! yet because they knew not the day of their visitation, they fell under these woes, which stuck to close to them, that soon after this they decayed and dwindled into mean obscure villages. So fatally doth sin ruin cities, and so certainly doth the word of Christ take place!

Now Chorazin and Bethsaida are here compared with Tyre and Sidon, two maritime cities we read much of in the Old Testament, that had been brought to ruin, but began to flourish again; these cities bordered upon Galilee, but were in a very ill name among the Jews for idolatry and other wickedness. Christ sometimes went into the coasts of Tyre and Sidon, Matt. xv. 21. but never thither; the Jews would have taken it very heinously if he had; therefore Christ to convince and humble them, here shews,

1. That Tyre and Sidon would not have been so bad as Chorazin and Bethsaida. If they had had the same word preached, and the same miracles wrought among them, they would have repented, and that long ago, as Nineveh did, in sackcloth and ashes. Christ who knows the hearts of all, knew that if he had gone and lived among them, and preached among them, he should have done more good there than where he was; yet he continued where he was for some time, to encourage his ministers to do so, though they see not the success they desire. Note, Among the children of disobedience, some are more easily wrought upon than others: And it is a great aggravation of the impenitency of those that plentifully enjoy the means of grace, not only that there are many who sit under the same means that are wrought upon, but there are many more that would have been wrought upon, if they had enjoyed the same means. See Ezek. iii. 6, 7. Our repentance is slow and delayed, but theirs would have been speedy, they would have repented long ago. Ours has been slight and superficial, theirs would have been deep and serious, in sackcloth and ashes. Yet we must observe with an awful adoration of the divine sovereignty, that the Tyrians and Sidonians will justly perish in their sin, though if they had had the means of grace they would have repented; for God is a debtor to no man.

2. That therefore Tyre and Sidon shall not be so miserable as Chorazin and Bethsaida, but it shall be more tolerable for them in the day of judgment, ver. 22. Note, 1. At the day of judgment the everlasting state of the children of men will by an unerring and unalterable doom be determined; happiness or misery, and the several degrees of each. Therefore it is called the eternal judgment, Heb. vi. 2. because decisive of the eternal state. 2. In that judgment all the means of grace that were enjoyed in the state of probation will certainly come into the account, and it will be inquired, not only how bad we were, but how much better we might have been had it not been our own fault, Isa. v. 3, 4. 3. Though the damnation of all that perish perish will be intolerable, yet the damnation of those that had the fullest and clearest discoveries made them of the power and grace of Christ, and yet repented not, will be of all other the most intolerable. The gospel-light and sound open the faculties, and enlarge the capacities of all that see and hear it, either to receive the riches of divine grace, or (if that grace be slighted) to take in the more plentiful effusions of divine wrath. If self-reproach be the torture of hell, it must needs be hell indeed to those that had such a fair opportunity of getting to heaven. Son, remember that.

(2.) Capernaum is here condemned with an emphasis, ver. 23. And thou Capernaum, hold up thy hand and hear thy doom. Capernaum above all the cities of Israel was dignified with Christ's most usual residence, it was like Shiloh of old, the place which he chose to put his name there, and it fared with it as with Shiloh, Jer. vii. 12—14. Christ's miracles here were daily bread, and therefore, as the manna of old, were despised and called light bread. Many a sweet and comfortable lecture of grace Christ had read them to little purpose, and therefore here he reads them a dreadful lecture of wrath: Those who will not hear the former, shall be made to feel the latter.

We have here Capernaum's doom,

1. Put absolutely: Thou which art exalted to heaven, shall be brought down to hell. Note, 1. Those that enjoy the gospel in power and purity, are thereby exalted to heaven; they have therein a great honour for the present, and a great advantage for eternity; they are lifted up towards heaven, but if, notwithstanding, they still cleave to the earth, they may thank themselves that they are not lifted up into heaven. 2. Gospel advantages and advancements abused, will sink sinners so much the lower into hell. Our external privileges will be so far from saving us, that if our hearts and lives be not agreeable to them, they will but inflame the reckoning: The higher the precipice is, the more fatal is the fall from it: Let us not therefore be high-minded, but fear; not slothful, but diligent. See Job xx. 6, 7. —xxiv. 29.

2. We have it here put in comparison with the doom of Sodom: A place more remarkable both for sin and ruin, than perhaps any other; and yet Christ here tells us,

(1.) That Capernaum's means would have saved Sodom. If these miracles had been done among the Sodomites, as bad as they were, they would have repented, and their city would have remained unto this day a monument of sparing mercy, as now it is of destroying justice, Jude 7. Note, Upon true repentance through Christ, even the greatest sin shall be pardoned and the greatest ruin prevented, that of Sodom not excepted. Angels were sent to Sodom, and yet it remained not; but if Christ had been sent thither, it would have remained: How well is it for us then that the world to come is put in subjection to Christ, and not to angels! Heb. ii. 5. Lot would not have seemed as one that mocked, if he had wrought miracles.

(2.) That Sodom's ruin will therefore be less at the great day than Capernaum's. Sodom will have many sins to answer for, but not the sin of neglecting Christ, as Capernaum will. If the gospel prove a sausage of death, a killing savour, it is doubly so, it is of death unto death, so great a death, 2 Cor. ii. 16. Christ had said the same of all other places that receive not his ministers nor bid his gospel welcome, Matt. x. 15. It shall be more tolerable for the land of Sodom, than for that city. We that have now the written word in our hands, the gospel preached and gospel ordinances administered to us, and live under the dispensation of the Spirit, have advantages not inferior to those of Chorazin and Bethsaida and Capernaum, and the account in the great day will be accordingly. It has therefore been justly said, that the professors of this age, whether they go to heaven or hell, will be the greatest debtors in either of these places; if to heaven, the greatest debtors to divine mercy for those rich means that brought them thither; if to hell, the greatest debtors to divine justice for those rich means that would have kept them thence.

25. ¶ At that time Jesus answered and said, I thank thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, because thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them unto babes. 26. Even so, Father, for so it seemed good in thy sight. 27. All things are delivered unto me of my Father: and no man knoweth the Son but the Father: neither knoweth any man the Father, save the Son, and he to whomsoever the Son will reveal him. 28. ¶ Come unto me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. 29. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart: and ye shall find rest unto your souls. 30. For my yoke is easy, and my burden is light.

In these verses we have Christ looking up to heaven, with thanksgiving to his father, for the sovereignty and security of the covenant of redemption; and looking around him upon this earth, with an offer to all the children of men, to whom these presents shall come, of the privileges and benefits of the covenant of grace.

First, Christ here returns thanks to God for his favour to those babes, who had the mysteries of the gospel revealed to them, ver. 25, 26. Jesus answered and said. It is called an answer, though no other words are before recorded but his own, because it is so comfortable a reply to the melancholy considerations preceding, and is aptly set in the balance against them. The sin and ruin of those woeful cities, no doubt was a grief to the Lord Jesus, he could not but weep over them, as he did over Jerusalem, Luke xix. 41. with this thought therefore he refresheth himself, and to make it the more refreshing, he puts it into a thanksgiving; that for all this, there is a remnant, though but babes, to whom the things of the gospel are revealed: Though Israel be not gathered, yet shall he be glorious. Note, We may take great encouragement in looking upwards to God, when round about us we see nothing but what is discouraging. It is sad to see how regardless the most of men are of their own happiness, but it is comfortable to think that the wise and faithful God will however effectually secure the interests of his own glory. Jesus answered and said, I thank thee. Note, Thanksgiving is a proper answer to dark and disquieting thoughts, and may be an effectual means to silence them. Songs of praise are sovereign cordials to drooping souls, and will help to cure melancholy. When we have no other answer ready to the suggestions of grief and fear, we may have recourse to this, I thank thee, O Father: let us bless God that it is not worse with us than it is.

Now in this thanksgiving of Christ, we may observe,

(1.) The title he gives to God; O Father, Lord of heaven and earth. Note, 1. In all our approaches to God, by praise as well as by prayer, it is good for us to eye him as a Father, and to fasten on that relation not only when we ask for the mercies we want, but when we give thanks for the mercies we have received: Mercies are then doubly sweet and powerful to enlarge the heart in praise, when they are received as tokens of a father's love and gifts of a father's hand. Giving thanks to the Father, Col. i. 12. It becomes children to be grateful, and to say, Thank you, Father, as readily as, Pray, father. 2. When we come to God, as a Father, we must withal remember that he is Lord of heaven and earth; which obligeth us to come to him with reverence, as to the sovereign Lord of all, and yet with confidence, as one able to do for us whatever we need or can desire; to defend us from all evil and to supply us with all good. Christ in Melchizedek, had long since blessed God as the Possessor or Lord of heaven and earth; and in all our thanksgivings for mercies in the stream, we must give him the glory of the all-sufficiency that is in the fountain.

(2.) The thing he gives thanks for: Because thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent, and yet revealed them to babes. These things, he doth not say what things, but means the great things of the gospel, the things that belong to our peace, Luke xix. 42. He speaks thus emphatically of them, these things, because they were things that filled him and should fill us: All other things are as nothing to these things.

Note, 1. The great things of the everlasting gospel have been and are hid from many that were wise and prudent, that were eminent for learning and worldly policy; some of the greatest scholars and the greatest statesmen have been the greatest strangers to gospel mysteries: The world by wisdom knew not God, 1 Cor. i. 21. Nay, there is an opposition given to the gospel, by a science falsely so called, 1 Tim. vi. 20. Those that are most expert in things sensible and secular, are commonly least experienced in spiritual things. Men may dive deep into the mysteries of nature and the mysteries of state, and yet be ignorant of and mistake about the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven, for want of an experience of the power of them.

2. While the wise and prudent men of the world are in the dark about gospel mysteries, even the babes in Christ have the sanctifying saving knowledge of them: Thou hast revealed them unto babes: Such the disciples of Christ were, men of mean birth and education, no scholars, no artists, no politicians, unlearned and ignorant men, Acts iv. 13. Thus are the secrets of wisdom which are double to that which is, John xi. 6. made known to babes and sucklings, that out of their mouth strength might be ordained, Psalm viii. 2. and God's praise thereby perfected. The learned men of the world were not made choice of to be the preachers of the gospel, but the foolish things of the world, 1 Cor. ii. 6—8—10.

3. This difference between the prudent and the babes is of God's own making. 1. It is he that has hid these things from the wise and prudent; he gave them parts and learning and much of human understanding above others, and they were proud of that, and rested in it and looked no further; and therefore God justly denies them the Spirit of wisdom and revelation, and then though they hear the sound of the gospel tidings, they are to them as a strange thing. God is not the author of their ignorance and error, but he leaves them to themselves, and their sin becomes their punishment, and the Lord is righteous in it. See John xii. 39, 40. Rom. xi. 7, 8. Acts xxviii. 26, 27. Had they honoured God with the wisdom and prudence they had, he would have given them the knowledge of these better things, but because they served their lusts with them, he has hid their hearts from this understanding. 2. It is he that has revealed them unto babes. Things revealed belong to our children, Deut. xxix. 29. and to them he gives an understanding to receive these things and the impressions of them. Thus he rejects the proud, and gives grace to the humble, James iv. 6.

4. This dispensation must be resolved into the divine sovereignty, Christ himself referred to that; Even so, Father, because it seemed good in thy sight. Christ here subscribes to the will of his Father in this matter; Even so. Let God take what way he pleaseth to glorify himself, and make use of what instruments he pleaseth for the carrying on of his own work; his grace is his own, and he may give or withhold it as he pleaseth: We can give no reason, why Peter a fisherman should be made an apostle, and not Nicodemus a Pharisee and a ruler of the Jews, though he also believed in Christ; but so it seemed good in God's sight. Christ said this in the hearing of his disciples, to shew them, that it was not for any merit of their own, that they were thus dignified and distinguished, but purely from God's good pleasure: He made them to differ.

5. This way of dispensing divine grace is to be acknowledged by us, as it was by our Lord Jesus, with all thankfulness. We must thank God, 1. That these things are revealed; the mystery hid from ages and generations is manifested; that they are revealed, not to a few, but to be published to all the world. 2. That they are revealed to babes, that the meek and humble are beautified with this salvation; and this honour put upon those whom the world pours contempt upon. 3. It magnifies the mercy to them, that these things are hid from the wise and prudent: Distinguishing favours are most obliging. As Job adored the name of the Lord in taking away as well as in giving, so may we in hiding these things from the wise and prudent, as well as in revealing them unto babes; not as it is their misery, but as it is a method by which self is abased, proud thoughts brought down, all flesh silenced, and divine power and wisdom is made to shine the more bright. See 1 Cor. i. 27—31.

Secondly, Christ here makes a gracious offer of the benefits of the gospel to all, and these are the things which are revealed to babes, ver. 27, &c. Observe here,

1. The solemn preface which ushers in this call or invitation, both to command our attention to it, and to encourage our compliance with it. That we might have strong consolation, in flying for refuge to this hope set before us, Christ prefixeth his authority, produceth his credentials; we shall see he is empowered to make this offer.

Two things he here lays before us, ver. 27.

(1.) His commission from the Father: All things are delivered unto me of my Father. Christ, as God; is equal in power and glory with the Father, but as Mediator, he receives his power and glory from the Father; hath all judgment committed to him: He is authorized to settle a new covenant between God and man, and to offer peace and happiness to the apostate world, upon such terms as he should think fit: He was sanctified and sealed to be the sole plenipotentiary to concert and establish this great affair: In order to this, he has all power both in heaven and in earth, Matt. xxviii. 18. power over all flesh, John xvii. 2. authority to execute judgment, John v. 22—27. This encourageth us to come to Christ, that he is commissioned to receive us, and to give us what we come for, and has all things delivered to him for that purpose, by him who is Lord of all. All powers, all treasures are in his hand. Observe, The Father has delivered his all into the hands of the Lord Jesus, let us but deliver our all into his hand, and the work is done: God has made him the great referee, the blessed days-man, to lay his hand upon us both: That which we have to do is to agree to the reference, to submit to the arbitration of the Lord Jesus, for the taking up of this unhappy controversy, and enter into bonds to stand to his award.

(2.) His intimacy with the Father: No man knoweth the Son but the Father, neither knoweth any man the Father save the Son. This gives us a further satisfaction, and an abundant one. Ambassadors use to have not only their their commissions which they produce, but their instructions which they reserve to themselves, to be made use of as there is occasion in their negotiations: Our Lord Jesus had both, not only authority but ability for his undertaking. In transacting the great business of our redemption, the Father and the Son are the parties principally concerned; the counsel of peace is between them, Zech. vi. 13. It must therefore be a great encouragement to us to be assured, that they understood one another very well in this affair; that the Father knew the Son, and the Son knew the Father, and both perfectly, (a mutual consciousness we may call it, between the Father and the Son) so that there could be no mistake in the settling of this matter; as often there is among men to the overthrow of contracts, and the breaking of the measures taken, through their misunderstanding one of another. The Son had lain in the bosom of the Father from eternity, he was a secretoribus, of the cabinet council, John i. 18. He was by him as one brought up with him, Prov. viii. 30. so that none knows the Father save the Son, he adds, and he to whom the Son will reveal him. Note, 1. The happiness of men lies in an acquaintance with God; it is life eternal, it is the perfection of rational beings. 2. Those that would have an acquaintance with God, must apply themselves to Jesus Christ; for the light of the knowledge of the glory of God shines in the face of Christ, 2 Cor. iv. 6. We are obliged to Christ for all the revelation we have of God the Father's will and love ever since Adam sinned: There is no comfortable intercourse between a holy God and sinful man, but in and by a Mediator, John xiv. 6.

2. Here is the offer itself that is made to us, and an invitation to accept of it. After so solemn a preface we may well expect something very great; and it is so, a faithful saying, and well worthy of all acceptance; words whereby we may be saved. We are here invited to Christ, as our Priest, Prince, and Prophet, to be saved, and in order to that, to be ruled and taught by him.

(1.) We must come to Jesus Christ as our rest, and repose ourselves in him, ver. 28. Come unto me, all ye that labour. Observe, 1. The character of the persons invited; all that labour and are heavy laden. This is a word in season to him that is weary, Isa. xlii. 4. Those that complain of the burden of the ceremonial law, which was an intolerable yoke, and was made much more so by the traditions of the elders, Luke xi. 46. let them come to Christ, and they shall be made easy; he came to free his church from this yoke, to cancel the imposition of those carnal ordinances, and to introduce a purer and more spiritual way of worship: But it is rather to be understood of the burden of sin, both the guilt and the power of it. Note, All those, and those only are invited to rest in Christ, that are sensible of sin as a burden, and groan under it; that are not only convinced of the evil of sin, of their own sin, but are contrite in soul for it; that are really sick of their sins, weary of the service of the world and of the flesh; that see their state sad and dangerous by reason of sin, and are in pain and fear about it, as Ephraim, Jer. xxii. 18, 19, 20. the prodigal, Luke xv. 17. the publican, Luke xviii. 13. Peter's hearers, Acts ii. 37. Paul, Acts ix. 4—6—9. the jailer, Acts xvi. 29, 30. This is a necessary preparative for pardon and peace. The comforter must first convince, John xvi. 8. I have torn, and then will heal.

(2.) The invitation itself: Come unto me. That glorious display of Christ's greatness which we had, ver. 27. as Lord of all, might frighten us from him, but see here how he holds out the golden sceptre, that we may touch the top of it and may live. Note, It is the duty and interest of weary and heavy laden sinners to come to Jesus Christ. Renouncing all those things which stand in opposition to him, or in competition with him, we must accept of him as our physician and advocate, and give up ourselves to his conduct and government, freely willing to be saved by him, in his own way, and upon his own terms. Come, and cast that burden upon him, under which thou art heavy laden. This is the gospel call, The Spirit saith, Come; and the bride saith, Come; Let him that is athirst come: Whoever will, let him come.

(3.) The blessing promised to those that do come: I will give you rest. Christ is our Noah, whose name signifies rest, for this same shall give us rest, Gen. v. 29—iii. 9. Truly rest is good, Gen. xlix. 15. especially to those that labour, and are heavy laden, Eccl. v. 12. Note, Jesus Christ will give assured rest to those weary souls, that by a lively faith come to him for it; rest from the terror of sin, in a well-grounded peace of conscience; rest from the power of sin, in a regular order of the soul, and its due government of itself; a rest in God, and a complacency of soul in his love, Psalm xi. 6, 7. This is that rest which remains for the people of God, Heb. iv. 9. begun in grace and perfected in glory.

2. We must come to Jesus Christ as our ruler, and submit ourselves to him, ver. 29. Take my yoke upon you. This must go along with the former, for Christ is exalted to be both a Prince and Saviour, a Priest upon his throne. The rest he promised is a release from the drudgery of sin, not from the service of God, but an obligation to the duty we owe to him. Note, Christ hath a yoke for our necks, as well as a crown for our heads, and this yoke he expects we should take upon us and draw in. To call those that are weary and heavy laden, to take a yoke upon them, looks like adding affliction to the afflicted; but the pertinency of it lies in the word my: You are under a yoke which makes you weary, shake that off and try mine, which will make you easy. Servants are said to be under the yoke, 1 Tim. vi. 1. and subjects, 1 Kings xi. 10. To take Christ's yoke upon us, is to put ourselves into the relation of servants and subjects to him, and then to carry ourselves accordingly, in a conscientious obedience to all his commands, and a cheerful submission to all his disposals: It is to obey the gospel of Christ, to yield ourselves to the Lord: It is Christ's yoke, the yoke he has appointed, a yoke he has himself drawn in before us, for he learned obedience, and which he doth by his Spirit draw in with us, for he helpeth our infirmities, Rom. viii. 26. A yoke speaks some hardship, but if the beast must draw the yoke helps him: Christ's commands are all in our favour: We must take this yoke upon us to draw in it; we are yoked to work, and therefore must be diligent; we are yoked to submit, and therefore must be humble and patient: We are yoked together with our fellow-servants, and therefore must keep up the communion of saints: And the words of the wife are as goods, to those that are thus yoked.

Now this is the hardest part of our lesson, and therefore it is qualified, ver. 30. My yoke is easy, and my burden is light; you need not be afraid of it.

(1.) The yoke of Christ's commands is an easy yoke, it is χρῆστος, not only easy, but gracious, so the word signifies; it is sweet and pleasant; there is nothing in it to gail the yielding neck, nothing to hurt us, but on the contrary, much to refresh us. It is a yoke that is lined with love. Such is the nature of all Christ's commands, so reasonable in themselves, so profitable to us, and all summed up in one word, and that a sweet word, love. So powerful are the assistances he gives us, so suitable the encouragements, and so strong the consolations that are to be found in the way of duty, that we may truly say, it is a yoke of pleasantness. It is easy to the new nature, very easy to him that understandeth, Prov. xiv. 6. It may be a little hard at first, but it is easy afterwards; the love of God and the hope of heaven will make it easy.

(2.) The burden of Christ's cross is a light burden, very light. Afflictions from Christ, which befall us as men; afflictions for Christ, which befall us as Christians; the latter are especially meant. This burden in itself is not joyous; but gracious; yet as it is Christ's, it is light. Paul knew as much of it as any man, and he calls it a light affliction, 2 Cor. iv. 17. God's presence; Isa. xlii. 2. Christ's sympathy, Isa. xlii. 9. Dan. iii. 25, and especially the Spirit's aids and comforts, 2 Cor. i. 5. make suffering for Christ light and easy. As afflictions abound and are prolonged, consolations abound and are prolonged too. Let this therefore reconcile us to the difficulties, and help us over the discouragements we may meet with, both in doing-work and suffering-work; though we may lose for Christ, we shall not lose by him.

3. We must come to Jesus Christ as our teacher, and set ourselves to learn of him, ver. 29. Christ hath erected a great school, and has invited us to be his scholars: We must enter ourselves; associate with his scholars, and daily attend the instructions he gives by his word and Spirit. We must converse much with what he said, and have it ready to us to use upon all occasions; we must conform to what he did, and follow his steps, 1 Pet. ii. 21. Some make the following words, for I am meek and lowly in heart, to be the particular lesson we are required to learn from the example of Christ. We must learn of him to be meek and lowly, and must mortify our pride and passion, which render us so unlike to him. We must learn of Christ, as to learn Christ, Eph. iv. 20. for he is both teacher and lesson, guide and way, and all in all.

Two reasons are given why we must learn of Christ.

1. I am meek and lowly in heart, and therefore fit to teach you.

1. He is meek, and can have compassion on the ignorant, whom others would be in a passion with. Many able teachers are hot and hasty, which is a great discouragement to those that are dull and slow; but Christ knows how to bear with such, and to open their understandings. His carriage towards his twelve disciples was a specimen of this; he was mild and gentle with them, and made the best of them; though they were heedless and forgetful, he was not extreme to mark their follies. 2. He is lowly in heart. He condescends to teach poor scholars, to teach petties, he chose disciples not from the court of the schools, but from the sea-side. He teacheth the first principles, such things as are milk for babes; he stoops to the meanest capacities; he taught Ephraim to go, Hos. xi. 3. Who teacheth like him? It is an encouragement to us to put ourselves to school to such a teacher. This humility and meekness, as it qualifies him to be a teacher, so it will be the best qualification of those that are to be taught by him; for the meek will he guide in judgment, Psalm xxv. 9.

2. You shall find rest to your souls. This promise is borrowed from Jer. vi. 16. for Christ delighted to express himself in the language of the prophets, to shew the harmony between the two Testaments. Note, 1. Rest for the soul is the most desirable rest; to have the soul to dwell at ease. 2. The only way, and a sure way to find rest for our souls is, to sit at Christ's feet and hear his word. The way of duty is the way of rest. The understanding finds rest in the knowledge of God and Jesus Christ, and is there abundantly satisfied, finding that wisdom in the gospel which has been sought for in vain throughout the whole creation, Job xxviii. 12. The truths Christ teacheth are such as we may venture our souls upon. The affections find rest in the love of God and Jesus Christ, and meet with that in them which gives them an abundant satisfaction; quietness and assurance for ever. And those satisfactions will be perfected and perpetuated in heaven, where we shall see and enjoy God immediately, shall see him as he is, and enjoy him as he is ours. This rest is to be had with Christ for all those that learn of him.

Well, this is the sum and substance of the gospel call and offer: We are here told in a few words what the Lord Jesus requires of us, and it agrees with what God said of him once and again, This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased; hear ye him.

C H A P. XII.

In this chapter we have, (1.) Christ's clearing of the law of the fourth commandment concerning the sabbath-day, and vindicating it from some superstitious notions advanced by the Jewish teachers; shewing that works of necessity and mercy are to be done on that day, ver. 1—13. 2. The prudence, humility, and self-denial of our Lord Jesus in working his miracles, ver. 14—22. (3.) Christ's answer to the blasphemous cavils and calumnies of the Scribes and Pharisees, who imputed his casting out devils to a compact with the devil, ver. 22—38. (4.) Christ's reply to a tempting demand of the Scribes and Pharisees, challenging him to shew them a sign from heaven, ver. 38—45. (5.) Christ's judgment about his kindred and relations, ver. 46. ad finem.

1. AT that time JESUS went on the sabbath-day through the corn; and his disciples were an hungered, and began to pluck the ears of corn, and to eat. 2. But when the Pharisees saw it, they said unto him, Behold, thy disciples do that which is not lawful to do upon the sabbath-day. 3. But he said unto them, Have ye not read what David did, when he was an hungered, and they that were with him; 4. How he entered into the house of God, and did eat the shewbread, which was not lawful for him to eat, neither for them which were with him, but only for the priests? 5. Or have ye not read in the law, how that on the sabbath-day the priests in the temple profane the sabbath, and are blameless? 6. But I say unto you, That in this place is one greater than the temple. 7. But if ye had known what this meaneth, I will have mercy, and not sacrifice, ye would not have condemned the guiltless. 8. For the Son of man is Lord even of the sabbath-day. 9. And when he was departed thence, he went into their synagogue: 10. ¶ And, behold, there was a man which had his hand withered. And they asked him, saying, Is it lawful to heal on the sabbath-day? that they might accuse him. 11. And he said unto them, What man shall there be among you, that shall have one sheep, and if it fall into a pit on the sabbath-day, will he not lay hold on it, and lift it out? 12. How much then is a man man better than a sheep? Wherefore it is lawful to do well on the sabbath-days. 13. Then saith he to the man, Stretch forth thine hand. And he stretched it forth; and it was restored whole, like as the other.

The Jewish teachers had corrupted many of the commandments, by interpreting them more loosely than they were intended, a mistake which Christ discovered and rectified, chap. v. in his sermon on the mount; but concerning the fourth commandment they had erred in the other extreme, and interpreted it too strictly. Note, It is common for men of corrupt minds by their zeal in rituals, and the external services of religion, to think to atone for the looseness of their morals. But they are cursed who add to, as well as they who take from, the words of this book, Rev. xxii. 18—19. Prov. xxx. 6.

Now that which our Lord Jesus here lays down is, that the works of necessity and mercy are lawful on the sabbath-day, which the Jews in many instances were taught to make a scruple of. Christ's industrious explaining the fourth commandment, intimates its perpetual obligation to the religious observation of one day in seven, as a holy sabbath. He would not expound a law that was immediately to expire, but doubtless intended hereby to settle a point which would be of use to his church in all ages; and so it is, to teach us that our Christian sabbath, though under the direction of the fourth commandment, is not under the injunctions of the Jewish elders.

It is usual to settle the meaning of a law by judgment given upon cases that happen in fact, and in like manner is the meaning of this law settled: Here are two passages of story put together for this purpose, happening at some distance of time from each other, and of a different nature, but both answering this intention.

First, Christ by justifying his disciples plucking the ears of corn on the sabbath-day, shews that works of necessity are lawful on that day. Now here observe,

1. What it was that the disciples did. They were following their Master one sabbath-day through a corn field, it is likely going to the synagogue, ver. 9. for it becomes not Christ's disciples to take idle walks on that day, and they were hungry: Let it be no disparagement to our Master's house-keeping. But we will suppose they were to intent upon the sabbath work, that they forgot to eat bread; had spent so much time in their morning worship, that they had no time for their evening meal, but came out fasting, because they would not come late to the synagogue. Providence ordered it that they went through the corn, and there they were supplied. Note, God has many ways of bringing suitable provision to his people when they need it, and will take particular care of them when they are going to the synagogue, as of old for them that went up to Jerusalem to worship, (Psal. lxxxiv. 6, 7.) for whose use the rain filled the pools: while we are in the way of duty, Jehovah-jireh, let God alone to provide for us. Being in the corn fields, they began to pluck the ears of corn, the law of God allowed this, Deut. xxiii. 25. to teach people to be neighbourly, and not to insist upon property in a small matter, whereby another may be benefited. This was but slender provision for Christ and his disciples, but it was the best they had, and they were content with it. The famous Mr. Ball, of Whitmore used to say he had two dishes of meat to his sabbath dinner, a dish of hot milk, and a dish of cold, and he had enough and enough.

2. What was the offence that the Pharisees took at this; it was but a dry breakfast, yet the Pharisees would not let them eat that in quietness. They did not quarrel with them for taking another man's corn, they were no great zealots for justice, but for doing it on the sabbath-day, for plucking and rubbing the ears of corn on that day, was expressly forbidden by the tradition of the elders, for this reason, because it was a kind of reaping. Note, It is no new thing for the most harmless and innocent actions of Christ's disciples to be evil spoken of and reflected upon as unlawful, especially by those who are zealots for their own inventions and impositions. The Pharisees complained of them to their Master for doing that which it was not lawful to do. Note, Those are no friends to Christ and his disciples, who make that to be unlawful which God has not made to be so.

3. What was Christ's answer to this cavil of the Pharisees. The disciples could say little for themselves, especially because those that quarrel with them seemed to have the strictness of the sabbath sanctification on their side, and it is safest to err on that hand; but Christ came to free his followers, not only from the corruption of the Pharisees, but from their unscriptural impositions, and therefore has something to say for them, and justifies what they did, though it was a transgression of the canon.

1. He justifies them by precedents, which were allowed to be good by the Pharisees themselves.

1. He urgeth an ancient instance of David, who in a case of necessity did that which otherwise he ought not to have done, ver. 3, 4. Have ye not read the story, 1 Sam. xxi. 6. of David's eating the shew-bread, which by the law was appropriated to the priest, Lev. xxiv. 5—9. it is most holy to Aaron and his sons; and Exod. xxix. 33. a stranger shall not eat of it; yet the priest gave it to David and his men; for though the exception of a case of necessity was not expressed, yet it was implied in that and all other ritual institutions. That which bore out David in eating the shew-bread was not his dignity; Uzziah that invaded the priest's office in the pride of his heart, though a king, was struck with a leprosy for it, 2 Chron. xxvi. 16, &c. but it was his hunger. The greatest shall not have their lust indulged, but the meanest shall have their wants considered. Hunger is a natural desire which cannot be mortified, but must be gratified, and cannot be put off with any thing but meat; therefore we say, It will break through stone walls: Now the Lord is for the body, and allowed his own appointment to be dispensed with in a case of distress, much more might the tradition of the elders be dispensed with. Note, That may be done in a case of necessity, which may not be done at another time; there are laws which necessity has not, but it is a law to itself. Men do not despise, but pity a thief that steals to satisfy his soul when he is hungry, Prov. vi. 30.

2. He urgeth a daily instance of the priests, which they likewise read in the law, and according to which was the constant usage, ver. 15. The priests in the temple did a great deal of servile work on the sabbath-day; killing, slaying, burning the sacrificed beasts, which in a common case would have been profaning the sabbath; and yet it was never reckoned any transgression of the fourth commandment, because the temple service required and justified it. This intimates that those labours are lawful on the sabbath-day which are necessary, not only to the support of life but to the service of the day; as tolling a bell to call the congregation together, travelling to church, and the like. Sabbath-rest is to promote, not to hinder sabbath-worship.

2. He justifies them by arguments, three cogent ones.

1. In this place is one greater than the temple, ver. 6. If the temple-service would justify what the priests did in their ministrations, the service of Christ would much more justify the disciples in what they did in their attendance upon him. The Jews had an extreme veneration for the temple, it sanctified the gold; Stephen was accused for blaspheming that holy place, Acts vi. 13. But Christ in a corn field was greater than the temple, for in him dwelt not the presence of God symbolically, but all the fulness of the Godhead bodily. Note, If whatever we do, we do it in the name of Christ, and as unto him, it shall be graciously accepted of God, however it may be censured and cavilled at by men.

2. God will have mercy and not sacrifice, ver. 7. Ceremonial duties must give way to moral, and the natural royal law of love and self-preservation must take place of ritual observances. This is quoted from Hos. vi. 6. It was used before, Matt. ix. 9. in vindication of mercy to the souls of men, here of mercy to their bodies. The rest of the sabbath was ordained for man's good in favour of the body, Deut. v. 14. Now no law must be construed so as to contradict its own end. If you had known what this meant, had known what it is to be of a merciful disposition, you would have been sorry that they were forced to do this to satisfy their hunger, and would not have condemned the guiltless. Note, 1. Ignorance is the cause of our rash and uncharitable censures of our brethren. 2. It is not enough for us to know the scriptures, but we must labour to know the meaning of them. Let him that readeth understand. 3. Ignorance of the meaning of the scripture is especially shameful in those who take upon them to teach others.

3. The Son of man is Lord even of the sabbath-day, ver. 8. That law, as all the rest, is put into the hand of Christ, to be altered, enforced, or dispensed with as he sees good. It was by the Son that God made the world, and by him he instituted the sabbath in innocency; by him he gave the ten commandments at mount Sinai, and as mediator he is intrusted with the institution of ordinances, and to make what changes he thought fit, and particularly, as being Lord of the sabbath, he was authorized to make such an alteration of that day as that it should become the Lord's-day, the Lord Christ's day. And if Christ be the Lord of the sabbath, it is fit the day and all the work of it should be dedicated to him. By virtue of this power, Christ here enacts that works of necessity, if they be really such, and not pretended and a self-created necessity, are lawful on the sabbath-day: And this explication of the law plainly shews it was to be perpetual. Exceptio firmat regulam.

Christ having thus silenced the Pharisees and got clear of them: it is said, ver. 9. he departed, and went into their synagogue, the synagogue of these Pharisees, in which they presided, and when he was going towards when they picked this quarrel with him. Note, 1. We must take heed lest any thing that occurs in our way to holy ordinances distract us, or divert us from our due attendance on them. Let us proceed in the way of our duty notwithstanding the artifices of Satan, who endeavours by the perverse disputing of men of corrupt minds, and many other ways, to rattle and discompose us. We must not for the sake of private feuds and personal piques draw back from public worship. Though the Pharisees had thus maliciously cavilled at Christ, yet he went into their synagogue. Satan gains his point, if by sowing discord among brethren, he prevails to drive them, or any of them from the synagogue, and the communion of the faithful.

Secondly, Christ by healing the man that had the withered hand on the sabbath-day, shews that works of mercy are lawful and proper to be done on that day. The work of necessity was done by the disciples and justified by him; the work of mercy was done by himself, the works of mercy were his works of necessity: it was his meat and his drink to do good. I must preach, saith he, Luke iv. 13. This cure is recorded for the sake of the time when it was wrought, on the sabbath-day.

Here is, 1. The affliction that this poor man was in; his hand was withered, so that he was utterly disabled to get his living by working with his hands. St. Jerome saith, that the gospel of Matthew in Hebrew, used by the Nazarenes and Ebionites, adds this circumstance to this story of the man with the withered hand, that he was Clementinus, a bricklayer, and applied himself to Christ thus; Lord, I am a bricklayer, and have got my living by my labour, (manibus vicium querens) I beseech thee, O Jesus, restore me the use of my hand, that I may not be obliged to beg my bread; ne turpiter mendicem cibos. Hieronymus in locum. This poor man was in the synagogue. Note, Those that can do but little, or have but little to do for the world, must do so much the more for their souls. As the rich, the aged, and the infirm.

2. A spiteful question which the Pharisees put to Christ upon the sight of this man. They asked him, saying, is it lawful to heal? We read not here of any address this poor man made to Christ for a cure, but they observed Christ began to take notice of him, and knew it was usual for him to be found of those that sought him not, and therefore with their badness they prevented his goodness, and started this case as a stumbling-block in the way of doing good; Is it lawful to heal on the sabbath-day? Whether it was lawful for physicians to heal on that day or no, which was the thing disputed in their books, one would think it past dispute that it is lawful for prophets to heal, for him to heal who discovered a divine power and goodness in all he did of this kind, and manifested himself to be sent of God. Did ever any ask whether it is lawful for God to heal, to send his word and heal? It is true, Christ was now made under the law by a voluntary submission to it, but he was never made under the precepts of the elders. Is it lawful to heal? To enquire into the lawfulness and unlawfulness of actions is very good, and we cannot apply ourselves to any with such enquiries more fitly than to Christ; but they asked here, not that they might be instructed by him, but that they might accuse him. If he should say it was lawful to heal on the sabbath-day, they would accuse him of a contradiction to the fourth commandment; to so great a degree of superstition had the Pharisees brought the sabbath-rest, that unless in peril of life they allowed not any medicinal operations on the sabbath-day; if he should say it was not lawful, they would accuse him of partiality, having lately justified his disciples plucking the ears of corn on that day.

3. Christ's answer to this question, by way of appeal to themselves, and their own opinion and practice, ver. 11, 12. In case a sheep, (though but one, of which the loss would not be very great), should fall into a pit on the sabbath-day, would they not lift it out? No doubt they might do it, the fourth commandment allows it; they must do it, for a merciful man regardeth the life of his beast, and for their parts they would do it rather than lose a sheep; doth Christ take care for sheep? Yes, he doth, he preserves and provides for both man and beast. But here he saith it is for our sakes, 1 Cor. ix. 9, 10. And hence argues, how much then is a man better than a sheep? Sheep are not only harmless, but useful creatures, and are prized and tended accordingly, yet a man is here preferred far before them. Note, Man in respect of his being is a great deal better, and more valuable than the best of the brute creatures; man is a reasonable creature, capable of knowing, loving, and glorifying God, and therefore is better than a sheep. The sacrifice of a sheep could therefore not atone for the sin of a soul. They do not consider this, who are more solicitous for the education, preservation, and supply of their horses and dogs than of God's poor, or perhaps their own household.

Hence Christ infers a truth which even at first sight appears very reasonable and good natured; that it is lawful to do well on the sabbath-day; they had asked, Is it lawful to heal? Christ proves it is lawful to do well, and let any one judge whether healing, as Christ healed, was not doing well. Note, There are more ways of doing well upon sabbath-days, than by the duties of God's immediate worship; attending the sick, relieving the poor, helping those that are fallen into sudden distress and call for speedy relief; this is doing good: and this must be done from a principle of love and charity, with humility and self-denial, and a heavenly frame of spirit, and this is doing well, and it shall be accepted, Gen. iv. 7.

1. Christ's curing of a man, notwithstanding the offence which he fore-saw the Pharisees would take at it, ver. 13. Though they could not answer Christ's arguments, they were resolved to persist in their prejudice and enmity; but Christ went on with his work however. Note, Duty is not to be left undone, nor opportunities of doing good neglected or let slip for fear of giving offence. Now the manner of the cure is observable, he said to the man, Stretch forth thy hand, exert thyself as well as thou canst; and he did so, and it was restored whole. This, as the other cures Christ wrought, had a spiritual significance. 1. By nature our hands are withered; we are utterly unable of ourselves to do any thing that is good. 2. It is Christ only by the power of his grace that cures us; he heals the withered hand by putting life into the dead soul, works in us both to will and to do. 3. In order to our cure, he commands us to stretch forth our hands, to improve our natural powers, and do as well as we can; stretch them out in prayer, to God, stretch them out to lay hold on Christ by faith, stretch them out in holy endeavours. Now this man could not stretch forth his withered hand of himself, no more than the impotent man could arise and carry his bed, or Lazarus come forth out of the grave; yet Christ bid him do it. God's commands to us to do the duty which of ourselves we are not able to do, are no more absurd or unjust than this command to the man with the withered hand to stretch it forth; for with the command there is a promise of grace which is given by the word. Turn ye at my reproof, and I will pour out my Spirit, Prov. i. 23. And those that perish are as inexcusable as this man would have been, if he had not attempted to stretch forth his hand, and so had not been healed. But those that are saved have no more to boast of than this man had of contributing to his own cure, by stretching forth his hand, but are as much indebted to the power and grace of Christ as he was.

14. ¶ Then the Pharisees went out, and held a council against him, how they might destroy him. 15. But when Jesus knew it, he withdrew himself from thence: and great multitudes followed him, and he healed them all; 16. And charged them that they should not make him known: 17. That it might be fulfilled which was spoken by Esaias the prophet, saying, 18. Behold my servant whom I have chosen, my beloved in whom my soul is well pleased: I will put my spirit upon him, and he shall shew judgment to the Gentiles. 19. He shall not strive, nor cry; neither shall any man hear his voice in the streets. 20. A bruised reed shall he not break, and smoking flax shall he not quench, till he send forth judgment unto victory. 21. And in his name shall the Gentiles trust.

As in the midst of Christ's greatest humiliations there were proofs of his dignity, so in the midst of his greatest honours he gave proofs of his humility; and when the mighty works he did gave him an opportunity of making a figure, yet he made it appear that he emptied himself, and had made himself of no reputation. Here we have,

1. The curled malice of the Pharisees against Christ, ver. 14. being enraged at the convincing evidence of his miracles, they went out and held a council against him, how they might destroy him. That which vexed them was, not only that by his miracles his honour eclipsed theirs, but that the doctrine he preached was directly opposite to their pride and hypocrisy and worldly interest, but they pretended to be displeased at his breaking the sabbath-day, which was by the law a capital crime, Exod. xxxv. 2. Note, It is no new thing to see the vilest practices cloaked with the most specious pretences. Observe their policy; they took counsel about it, considered with themselves which way to do it effectually; they took counsel together in a close cabal about it, that they might both animate and assist one another. Observe their cruelty; they took counsel, not to imprison or banish him, but to destroy him, to be the death of him who came that we might have life. What an indignity was hereby put upon our Lord Jesus, to run him down as an out-law (qui caput gerit lupinum) and the plague of his country, who was the greatest blessing of it, the glory of his people Israel!

2. Christ's abdicating upon this occasion, and the privacy he chose, to decline not his work but his danger, because his hour was not yet come, ver. 15. he withdrew himself from thence. He could have secured himself by miracle, but chose to do it in the ordinary way of flight and retirement; because in this as in other things he would submit to the sinless infirmities of our nature. Herein he humbled himself, that he was driven to the common shift of those that are most helpless; thus also he would give an example of his own rule, When they persecute you in one city, flee to another. Christ had said and done enough to convince those Pharisees, if reason or miracles would have done it; but instead of yielding to the conviction, they were hardened and enraged, and therefore he left them as incurable, Jer. li. 9.

Christ did not retire for his own ease, nor seek an excuse to leave off his work, no, his retirements were filled up with business, and he was even then doing good, when he was forced to flee for the same. Thus he gave an example to his ministers to do what they can, when they cannot do what they would, and to continue teaching, even when they are removed into corners. When the Pharisees, the great dons and doctors of the nation, drove Christ from them, and forced him to withdraw himself, yet the common people crowded after him, great multitudes followed him and found him out. This some would turn to his reproach, and call him the ring-leader of the mob; but it was really his honour, that all that were unbiassed and unprejudiced, and not blinded by the pomp of the world, were so hearty, so zealous for him, that they would follow him whithersoever he went, and whatever hazards they ran with him; as it was also the honour of his grace that the poor were evangelized, that when they received him, he received them and healed them all. Christ came into the world to be a physician general, as the sun to the lower world, with healing under his wings. Though the Pharisees persecuted Christ for doing good, yet he went on in it, and did not let the people fare the worse for the wickedness of their rulers. Note, Though some are unkind to us, we must not therefore be unkind to others.

Yet Christ studied to reconcile usefulness and privacy, he healed them all; and yet, ver. 16. charged them that they should not make them known; which may be looked upon, 1. As an act of prudence; it was not so much the miracles themselves, as the public discourse concerning them that enraged the Pharisees, ver. 23, 24. Therefore Christ, though he would not omit doing good, yet would do it with as little noise as possible, to avoid offence to them and peril to himself. Note, Wise and good men, though they covet to do good, yet are far from coveting to have it talked of when it is done; because it is God's acceptance not men's applause that they aim at. And in suffering times, though we must boldly go on in the way of duty, yet we must contrive the circumstances of it so as not to exasperate, more than needs, those that seek occasion against us. Be ye wise as serpents, Matt. x. 16. 2. It may be looked upon as an act of righteous judgment upon the Pharisees, who were unworthy to hear of any more of his miracles, having made so light of those they had seen. By shutting their eyes against the light, they had forfeited the benefit of it. 3. As an act of humility and self-denial. Though Christ's intention in his miracles was to prove himself the Messiah, and so bring men to believe on him, in order to which it was requisite they should be known, yet sometimes he charged people to conceal them, to set us an example of humility, and to teach us not to proclaim our own goodness or usefulness, or to desire to have it proclaimed. Christ would have his disciples to be the reverse of those who did all their works to be seen of men.

3. The fulfilling of the scriptures in all this, ver. 17. Christ retired into privacy and obscurity, that though he was eclipsed the word of God might be fulfilled, and so illustrated and glorified, which was the thing his heart was upon. The scripture here said to be fulfilled is, Isa. xlii. 1, 2, 4, which is quoted at large, ver. 18, 19, 20, 21. The scope of it is to shew how mild and quiet; and yet how successful our Lord Jesus should be in his undertaking; instances of both which we have in the foregoing passages. Observe here,

First, The pleasedness of the Father in Christ, ver. 18. Behold, my servant whom I have chosen, my beloved in whom my soul is well pleased. Hence we may learn,

1. That our Saviour was God's servant in the great work of our redemption. He therein submitted himself to the Father's will, Heb. x. 7. and let himself to serve the designs of his grace and the interests of his glory, in repairing the breaches that had been made by man's apostasy. As a servant, he had a great work appointed him and a great trust reposed in him. This was a part of his humiliation, that though he thought it not robbery to be equal with God, yet in the work of our salvation he took upon him the form of a servant, received a law, and came into bonds. Though he were a son yet learned he this obedience, Heb. v. 8. The motto of this prince is ICH DIEN, I serve.

3. That Jesus Christ was chosen of God, as the only fit and proper person for the management of the great work of our redemption. He is my servant whom I have chosen as pur negotio. None but he was able to do the Redeemer's work, or fit to wear the Redeemer's crown. He was one chosen out of the people, Psal. lxxxix. 19. chosen by infinite wisdom to that post of service and honour which neither man nor angel was qualified for; none but Christ, that he might in all things have the pre-eminence. Christ did not thrust himself upon this work, but was duly chosen into it; Christ was so God's chosen as to be the head of election, and of all other the elect, for we are chosen in him, Eph. i. 4.

3. That Jesus Christ is God's beloved, his beloved Son; as God he lay from eternity in his bosom, John i. 18. He was daily his delight, Prov. viii. 30. Between the Father and the Son there was before all time an eternal and inconceivable intercourse and interchanging of love, and thus the Lord possessed him in the beginning of his way, Prov. viii. 22. As Mediator the Father loved him; then when it pleased the Lord to bruise him, and he submitted to it; therefore did the Father love him, John x. 17.

4. That Jesus Christ is one in whom the Father is well pleased, in whom his soul is pleased; which notes the highest complacency imaginable. God declared by a voice from heaven, that he is his beloved Son in whom he is well pleased; well pleased in him, because he was ready and cheerful undertaker of that work of wonder which God's heart was so much upon, and he is well pleased with us in him: for he hath made us accepted in the beloved, Eph. i. 6. All the interest which fallen man hath or can have in God, is grounded upon and owing to God's well-pleasedness in Jesus Christ; for there is no coming to the Father but by him, John xiv. 6.

Secondly, The promise of the Father to him in two things.

1. That he should be every way well qualified for his undertaking; I will put my Spirit upon him, as a Spirit of wisdom and counsel, Isa. xi. 2, 3. Those whom God calls to any service, he will be sure to fit and qualify them for it; and by that it will appear that he called them to it, as Moses, Exod. iv. 12. Christ as God was equal in power and glory with the Father, as Mediator he received from the Father power and glory, and received that he might give; and all that the Father gave him to qualify him for his undertaking was summed up in this, he put his Spirit upon him; this was that oil of gladness with which he was anointed above his fellows, Heb. i. 9. He received the Spirit not by measure, but without measure, John iii. 34. Note, Whoever they be that God hath chosen, and in whom he is well pleased, he will be sure to put his Spirit upon them. Wherever he confers his love he confers somewhat of his likeness.

2. That he should be abundantly successful in his undertaking. Those whom God sends he will certainly own. It was long since secured by promise to our Lord Jesus, that the good pleasure of the Lord should prosper in his hand, Isa. liii. 10. And here we have an account of that prospering good pleasure.

1. He shall shew judgment to the Gentiles. Christ in his own person preached to those that bordered upon the heathen nations, see Mark iii. 6, 7. and by his apostles shewed his gospel, called here his judgment, to the Gentile world. The way and method of salvation, the judgment which is committed to the Son, is not only wrought out by him as our great high-priest, but shewed and published by him as our great prophet. The gospel, as it is a rule of practice and conversation, which has a direct tendency to the reforming and bettering men's hearts and lives, shall be shewed to the Gentiles. God's judgments had been the Jews peculiar, Psal. cxlvii. 19. But it was often foretold by the Old Testament prophets that they should be shewed to the Gentiles, which therefore ought not to have been such a surprise as it was to the unbelieving Jews, much less a vexation.

2. In his name shall the Gentiles trust, ver. 21. He shall shew judgment to them, that they shall heed and observe what he shews them, and be influenced by it to depend upon him, to devote themselves to him and conform to that judgment. Note, The great design of the gospel is to bring people to trust in the name of Jesus Christ; his name Jesus, a Saviour, that precious name whereby he is called, and which is as ointment poured forth, The Lord our righteousness. The evangelist here follows the Septuagint, (or perhaps the later editions of the Septuagint follow the evangelist;) the Hebrew (Isa. xlii. 4) is, The isles shall wait for his law. The isles of the Gentiles are spoken of, Gen. xi. 5. peopled by the sons of Japhet, of whom it was said, Gen. ix. 27. God shall persuade Japhet to dwell in the tents of Shem; which was now to be fulfilled when the isles (saith the prophet), the Gentiles (saith the evangelist), shall wait for his law, and trust in his name; compare these together, and observe, that they and they only can with confidence dence trust in Christ's name that wait for his law with a resolution to be ruled by it. Observe also, that the law we wait for is the law of faith, the law of trusting in his name. This is now his great commandment, that we believe in Christ, 1 John iii. 23.

Thirdly, The prediction concerning him, and his mild and quiet management of his undertaking, ver. 19, 20. It is chiefly for the sake of this that it is here quoted, upon occasion of Christ's affected privacy and concealment.

1. That he should carry on his undertaking without noise or ostentation. He shall not strive, or make an outcry. Christ and his kingdom come not with observation, Luke xvii. 20, 21. When the First-begotten was brought into the world, it was not with state and ceremony, he made no public entry, had no harbingers to proclaim him king. He was in the world, and the world knew him not: Those were mistaken that fed themselves with hopes of a pompous Saviour. His voice was not heard in the streets; lo, here is Christ, or so, he is there: he spoke in a still small voice, which was alluring to all, but terrifying to none; he did not affect to make a noise, but came down silently like the dew. What he spoke and did was with the greatest humility and self-denial possible. His kingdom was spiritual, and therefore not to be advanced by force or violence or by talking big. No, the kingdom of God is not in word, but in power.

2. That he should carry on his undertaking without severity and rigour, ver. 20. A bruised reed he shall not break. Some understand this of his patience in bearing with the wicked; he could as easily have broke these Pharisees as a bruised reed, and have quenched them as soon as smoking flax, but he will not do it till the judgment-day, when all his enemies shall be made his footstool. Others rather understand it of his power and grace in bearing up the weak. In general the design of his gospel is to establish such a method of salvation as encourageth sincerity, though there be much infirmity; doth not insist upon a sinless obedience, but accepts an upright willing mind. As to particular persons, that follow Christ in meekness and in fear and in much trembling, observe, 1. How their case is here described, they are like a bruised reed and smoking flax. Young beginners in religion are weak, as a bruised reed, and their weakness offensive like smoking flax; some little life they have, but it is like that of a bruised reed; some little heat, but like that of smoking flax. Christ's disciples were as yet but weak, and many are so that have a place in his family. The grace and goodness in them is as a bruised reed, the corruption and badness in them is as smoking flax, as the wick of a candle when it is put out and is yet smoking. 2. What is the compassion of our Lord Jesus towards them. He will not discourage them, much less reject them or cast them off: the reed that is bruised shall not be broken and trodden down, but shall be supported, and made as a strong cedar or flourishing palm-tree. The candle newly lighted, though it only smokes and doth not flame, shall not be blown out, but blown up. The day of small things is the day of precious things, and therefore he will not despise it, but make it the day of great things, Zech. iv. 10. Note, Our Lord Jesus deals very tenderly with those that have true grace, though they be weak in it, 1st. xli. 11. Heb. v. 2. He remembers not only that we are dust, but that we are flesh. 3. The good issue and success of this, intimated in that, till he send forth judgment unto victory. That judgment which he shewed to the Gentiles shall be victorious, he will go on conquering and to conquer, Rev. vi. 2. Both the preaching of the gospel in the world, and the power of the gospel in the heart shall prevail. Grace shall get the upper hand of corruption and shall at length be perfected in glory. Christ's judgment will be brought forth to victory, for when he judgeth he will overcome. He shall bring forth judgment unto truth; so it is 1st. xlii. 3. Truth and victory are much the same, for great is the truth and will prevail.

22. ¶ Then was brought unto him one possessed with a devil, blind and dumb: and he healed him, inasmuch that the blind and dumb both spake and saw. 23. And all the people were amazed, and said, Is not this the son of David? 24. But when the Pharisees heard it, they said, This fellow doth not cast out devils, but by Beelzebub the prince of the devils. 25. And Jesus knew their thoughts, and said unto them, Every kingdom divided against itself, is brought to desolation: and every city or house divided against itself, shall not stand. 26. And if Satan cast out Satan, he is divided against himself; how shall then his kingdom stand? 27. And if I by Beelzebub cast out devils, by whom do your children cast them out? therefore they shall be your judges. 28. But if I cast out devils by the spirit of God, then the kingdom of God is come unto you. 29. Or else how can one enter into a strong man's house and spoil his goods, except he first bind the strong man? and then he will spoil his house. 30. He that is not with me, is against me: and he that gathereth not with me scattereth abroad. 31. ¶ Wherefore I say unto you, All manner of sin and blasphemy shall be forgiven unto men: but the blasphemy against the Holy Ghost shall not be forgiven unto men. 32. And whosoever speaketh a word against the Son of man, it shall be forgiven him: but whosoever speaketh against the Holy Ghost, it shall not be forgiven him, neither in this world, neither in the world to come. 33. Either make the tree good, and his fruit good; or else make the tree corrupt, and his fruit corrupt: for the tree is known by his fruit. 34. O generation of vipers, how can ye, being evil, speak good things? for out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh. 35. A good man out of the good treasure of the heart bringeth forth good things: and an evil man out of the evil treasure, bringeth forth evil things. 36. But I say unto you, that every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give account thereof in the day of judgment. 37. For by thy words thou shalt be justified, and by thy words thou shalt be condemned.

In these verses we have,

First, Christ's glorious conquest of Satan in the gracious cure of one that, by the divine permission, was under his power, and in his possession, ver. 22. Here observe,

1. The man's case was very sad; he was possessed with a devil: There were more cases of this kind occurred in Christ's time than usual, that Christ's power might be the more magnified, and his purpose the more manifested in opposing and dispossessing Satan; and it might the more evidently appear that he came to destroy the works of the devil. This poor man that was possessed was blind and dumb; a miserable case, he could neither see to help himself, nor speak to others to help him. A soul under Satan's power, and led captive by him, is blind in the things of God, and dumb at the throne of grace; sees nothing and says nothing to the purpose: Satan blinds the eye of faith, and seals up the lips of prayer.

2. His cure was very strange, and the more so because sudden, he healed him. Note, The conquering and dispossessing of Satan is the healing of souls. And the cause being removed immediately the effect ceased; the blind and dumb both spake and saw. Note, Christ's mercy is directly opposite to Satan's malice; his favours to the devil's mischiefs. When Satan's power is broke in the soul, the eyes are opened to see God's glory, and the lips opened to speak his praise.

Secondly, The conviction which this gave to the people, to all the people, they were amazed. Christ had wrought divers miracles of this kind before; but his works are not the less wonderful, nor the less to be wondered at for their being often repeated. They inferred from it, Is not this the Son of David? the Messiah promised, that was to spring from the loins of David? Is not this he that should come? We may take this,

1. As an inquiring question; they asked, Is not this the Son of David? But did not stay for an answer; the impressions were cogent, but they were transient. It was a good question they started, but it should seem it was soon lost and was not prosecuted. Such convictions as these should be brought to a head, and then they are likely to be brought to the heart. Or, 2. As an affirming question; Is not this the Son of David? Yes, certainly it is, it can be no other: Such miracles as these plainly evince that the kingdom of the Messiah is now in the setting up. And they were the people, the vulgar sort of the spectators, that drew this inference from Christ's miracles. Atheists will say, that was because they were less prying than the Pharisees; no, the matter of fact was obvious and required not much search; but it was because they were less prejudiced and biased by worldly interest. So plain and easy was the way made to this great truth of Christ's being the Messiah and Saviour of the world, that the common people could not miss it; the way-faring men, though fools, could not err therein. See 1st. xxxv. 8. It was found of them that sought it. And it is an instance of the condescensions of the divine grace, that the things that were hid from the wise and prudent were revealed unto babes. The world by wisdom knew not God, and by the foolish things the wise were confounded.

Thirdly, The blasphemous cavils of the Pharisees, ver. 24. The Pharisees were a sort of men that pretended to more knowledge in and zeal for the divine law than other people, yet they were the most inveterate enemies to Christ and his doctrine. They were proud of the reputation they had among the people, that fed their pride, supported their power, and filled their purses; and when they heard the people say, Is not this the Son of David? they were extremely nettled, more at that than at the miracle itself; this made them jealous of our Lord Jesus, and apprehensive that as his interest in the people's esteem increased, theirs must of course be eclipsed and diminished: therefore they envied him, as Saul did his son David, because of what the women sang of him, 1 Sam. xviii. 7, 8. Note, Those that bind up their happiness in the praise and applause of men, expose themselves to a perpetual uneasiness upon every favourable word that they hear said of any other. The shadow of honour followed Christ that fled from it, and fled from the Pharisees that were eager in the pursuit of it. They said, This fellow doth not cast out devils but by Beelzebub the prince of the devils, and therefore is not the Son of David. Observe,

1. How scornfully they speak of Christ, this fellow: as if that precious name of his, which is as ointment poured forth, were not worthy to be taken into their lips. It is an instance of their pride and superciliousness and their diabolical envy, that the more people magnified Christ the more industrious were they to vilify him. It is an ill thing to speak of good men with disdain because they are poor.

2. How blasphemously they speak of his miracles: they could not deny the matter of fact, it was as plain as the Sun that devils were cast out by the word of Christ; nor could they deny but that it was an extraordinary thing and supernatural; and being thus forced to grant the premises, they had no other way to avoid the conclusion, that this is the Son of David, but by suggesting that Christ cast out devils by Beelzebub: that there was a compact between Christ and the devil: pursuant to that the devil was not cast out but did voluntarily retire, and give back by consent and with design: Or as if, by an agreement with the ruling devil, he had power to cast out the inferior devils. No surmise could be more palpably false and vile than this; that he, who is truth itself, should be in combination with the father of lies to cheat the world. This was the last refuge, or subterfuge rather, of an obstinate infidelity, that was resolved to stand it out against the clearest conviction. Observe, Among the devils there is a prince, the ringleader of the apostacy from God and rebellion against him; but this prince is Beelzebub, the god of a fly, or a dunghill-god. How art thou fallen, O Lucifer! from an angel of light to be a lord of flies; Yet this is the prince of the devils too, the chief of the gang of infernal spirits.

Fourthly, Christ reply to this base insinuation, ver. 25—30. Jesus knew their thoughts. Note, Jesus Christ knows what we are thinking at any time, knows what is in man; he understandeth our thoughts as if we said. It should seem, the Pharisees could not for shame speak it out, but kept it in their minds; they could not expect to satisfy the people with it, they therefore reserved it for the silencing of the convictions of their own consciences. Note, Many are kept off from their duty by that which they are ashamed to own, but which they cannot hide from Jesus Christ: yet it is probable the Pharisees had whispered what they thought amongst themselves, to help to harden one another; but Christ's reply is said to be to their thoughts, because he knew with what mind and from what principle they said it; that they did not say it in their haste, but it was the product of a rooted malignity.

Christ's reply to this imputation is copious and cogent, that every mouth may be stopped with sense and reason before it be stopped with fire and brimstone. Here are three arguments by which he demonstrates the unreasonableness of this suggestion.

1. It would be very strange and highly improbable that Satan should be cast out by such a compact, because then Satan's kingdom would be divided against itself; which, considering his subtilty, is not a thing to be imagined, ver. 25, 26.

(1.) Here is a known rule laid down, that in all societies a common ruin is the consequence of mutual quarrels; Every kingdom divided against itself is brought to desolation; and every family too, Quia enim domus hominis stabilis est, quæ tam firma civitas, quæ non odii atque discordiæ funditus cuncti possit? Cic. Lael. 7. Divisions commonly end in detestations; if we clash we break; if we divide one from another, we become an easy prey to a common enemy; much more if we hate and devour one another, shall we be consumed one of another, Gal. v. 15. Churches and nations have known this by sad experience.

(2.) The application of it to the case in hand, ver. 26. If Satan cast out Satan; if the prince of the devils should be at variance with the inferior devils, the whole kingdom and interest would soon be broken; nay, if Satan should come into a compact with Christ, it must be to his own ruin; for the manifest design and tendency of Christ's preaching and miracles was to overthrow the kingdom of Satan, as a kingdom of darkness, wickedness and enmity to God; and to set up upon the ruins of it a kingdom of light, holiness and love. The works of the devil, as a rebel against God and a tyrant over the souls of men, were destroyed by Christ; and therefore it was the most absurd thing imaginable to think that Beelzebub should at all countenance such a design or come into it; if he should fall in with Christ, how should then his kingdom stand? he would himself contribute to the overthrow of it. Note, The devil has a kingdom, a common interest, in opposition to God and Christ, which, to the utmost of his power, he will make to stand, and he will never come into Christ's interests; he must be conquered and broken by Christ, and therefore cannot submit and bend to him. What concord or communion can there be between light and darkness, Christ and Belial, Christ and Beelzebub? Christ will destroy the devil's kingdom, but he needs not do it by any such little arts and projects as this of a secret compact with Beelzebub; no, this victory must be obtained by nobler methods. Let the prince of the devils muster up all his forces, let him make use of all his powers and politics, and keep his interests in the closest confederacy, yet Christ will be too hard for his united force, and his kingdom shall not stand.

2. It was not at all strange or improbable that devils should be cast out by the Spirit of God; for,

(1.) How otherwise do your children cast them out? There were those among the Jews who, by invocation of the name of the most high God, or the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, did sometimes cast out devils. Josephus speaks of some in his time that did it; we read of Jewish exorcists, Acts xix. 9. and of some that in Christ's name cast out devils, though they did not follow him, Mark ix. 38. or were not faithful to him, Matt. vii. 22. These the Pharisees condemned not, but imputed what they did to the Spirit of God, and valued themselves and their nation upon it: It was therefore merely from spite and envy to Christ, that they would own that others call out devils by the Spirit of God, but suggest that he did it by compact with Beelzebub. Note, It is the way of malicious people, especially the malicious persecutors of Christ and Christianity, to condemn the same thing in those they hate, which they approve of and applaud in those they have a kindness for: The judgments of envy are made not by things but persons; not by reason but prejudice; But those were very unfit to sit in Moses's seat, who knew faces and knew nothing else in judgment; therefore they shall be your judges, i. e. this contradicting of yourselves will rise up in judgment against you at the great day, and will condemn you. Note, In the last judgment not only every sin, but every aggravation of it, will be brought into the account, and some of our nations that were right and good, will be brought in evidence against us, and convict us of partiality.

(2.) This casting out of devils was a certain token and indication of the approach and appearance of the kingdom of God, ver. 28. But if it be indeed that I cast out devils by the Spirit of God, as certainly I do, then you must conclude that though you are unwilling to receive it, yet the kingdom of the Messiah is now about to be set up among you: other miracles that Christ wrought proved him sent of God, but this proved him sent of God to destroy the devil's kingdom and his works. Now that great promise was evidently fulfilled, that the seed of the woman should break the serpent's head, Gen. iii. 15. Therefore that glorious dispensation of the kingdom of God, which has been long expected, is now commenced; slight it at your peril. Note, 1. The destruction of the devil's power is wrought by the Spirit of God; that Spirit who works to the obedience of faith, overthrows the interest of that spirit who works in the children of unbelief and disobedience. 2. The casting out of devils is a certain introduction to the kingdom of God. If the devil's interest in a soul be not only checked by custom or external restraints, but sunk and broken by the Spirit of God, as a sanctifier, no doubt but the kingdom of God is come to that soul, the kingdom of grace, a blessed earnest of the kingdom of glory.

3. The comparing of Christ's miracles, particularly this of casting out devils, with his doctrine, and the design and tendency of his holy religion, did evidence that he was so far from being in league with Satan, that he was at open enmity and hostility against him, ver. 29. How can one enter into a strong man's house, and plunder his goods and carry them away, except he first bind the strong man, and then he may do what he pleaseth with his goods? The world that sat in darkness and lay in wickedness, was in Satan's possession and under his power, as a house in the possession and under the power of a strong man; so is every unregenerate soul; there Satan resides, there he rules. Now, 1. The design of Christ's gospel was to spoil the devil's house, which, as a strong man he kept in the world; to turn the people from darkness to light, from sin to holiness, from this world to a better, from the power of Satan unto God, Acts xvi. 18. to alter the property of souls. 2. Pursuant to his design he bound the strong man, when he cast out unclean spirits by his word: Thus he wrested the sword out of the devil's hand, that he might wrest the sceptre out of it. The doctrine of Christ teacheth us how to continue his miracles, and when he shewed how easily and effectually he could cast the devil out of people's bodies, he encouraged all believers to hope, that, whatever power Satan might usurp and exercise in the souls of men, Christ by his grace would break it, he will spoil him; for it appears he can bind him. When nations were turned from the service of idols to serve the living God, when some of the worst of sinners were sanctified and justified, and became the best of saints, then Christ spoiled the devil's house, and will spoil it more and more.

Lastly, It is here intimated, that this holy war which Christ was carrying on with vigour against the devil and his kingdom, was such as would not admit of a neutrality, ver. 30. He that is not with me, is against me. In the little differences that may arise between the disciples of Christ among themselves, we are taught to lessen the matters in variance, and to seek peace, by accounting those that are not against us to be with us, Luke ix. 50. but in the great quarrel between Christ and the devil, no peace is to be sought, nor any such favourable construction to be made of an indifferency in the matter; he that is not hearty for Christ, will be reckoned with us really against him: he that is cold in the cause is looked upon as an enemy. When the dispute is between God and Baal, there is no halting between two, 1 Kings xviii. 21. there is no trimming between Christ and Belial; for the kingdom of Christ, as it is eternally opposite to, so it will be eternally victorious over the devil's kingdom; and therefore in this cause there is no sitting still with Gilead beyond Jordan, or Asker on the sea shore, Judges v. 16, 17. we must be entirely, faithfully and immovably on Christ's side; it is the right side, and will at last be the rising side: See Exod. xxxii. 26.

The latter clause is to the same purpose; He that gathereth not with me, scattereth. Note, 1. Christ's errand into the world was to gather, to gather in his harvest, to gather in those that the Father had given him, John xi. 52. Eph. i. 10. 2. Christ expects and requires from those that are with him, that they gather with him; that they not only gather to him themselves, but do all they can, in their places, to gather others to him, and so to strengthen his interest. 3. Those who will not appear and act as furtherers of Christ's kingdom, will be looked upon and dealt with as hinderers of it: if we gather not with Christ, we scatter: it is not enough not to do hurt, but we must do good. Thus is the breach widened between Christ and Satan, to shew there was no such compact between them as the Pharisees whispered.

Fifthly, Here is a discourse of Christ's upon this occasion, concerning tongue-sins: Wherefore I say unto you. He seems to turn from the Pharisees to the people, from disputing to instructing, and from the sin of the Pharisees he warns the people concerning three sorts of tongue-sins; for others harms are admonitions to us.

(1.) Blasphemous words against the Holy Ghost, the worst kind of tongue-sins, and unpardonable, ver. 31, 32. (1.) Here is a gracious assurance of the pardon of all sin upon gospel-terms: this Christ saith unto us, and it is a comfortable saying, that the greatness of sin shall be no bar to our acceptance with God, if we truly repent and believe the gospel: All manner of sin and blasphemy shall be forgiven unto men. Though the sin has been as scarlet and crimson, Isa. i. 18. though never so heinous in its nature, never so much aggravated by its circumstances, and never so often repeated, though it reach up to the heavens; yet with the Lord there is mercy, that reacheth beyond the heavens. Even blasphemy, a sin immediately touching God's name and honour. Paul obtained mercy, who had been a blasphemer. 1 Tim. i. 13. Well may we say, Who is a God like unto thee, pardoning iniquity? Micah vii. 18. Even words spoken against the Son of man shall be forgiven, as theirs were who reviled him at his death; many of whom repented and found mercy. Christ herein hath set an example to all other the sons of men, to be ready to forgive words spoken against them. 1, as a day man, heard not. Observe, They shall be forgiven unto men, not to devils; this is love to the whole world of mankind, above the world of fallen angels, that all sin is pardonable to them.

1. What this sin is; it is speaking against the Holy Ghost. See what malignity there is in tongue-sins, when the only unpardonable sin is so. But Jesus knew their thoughts, ver. 25. It is not all speaking against the person or essence of the Holy Ghost, or some of his more private operations, or merely the resisting or his internal working in the sinner himself, that is here meant; for who then should be saved? It is adjudged in our law, that an act of indemnity shall always be construed in favour of that grace and clemency which is the intentment of the act; and therefore the exceptions in the act are not to be extended further than needs must. The gospel is an act of indemnity, none are excepted by name, nor any by description, but those only that blaspheme the Holy Ghost; which therefore must be construed in the narrowest sense: all presuming sinners are effectually cut off by the conditions of the indemnity, faith and repentance; and therefore the other exceptions must not be stretched far; and this blasphemy is excepted, not for any defect of mercy in God or merit in Christ, but because it inevitably leaves the sinner in infidelity and impenitency. We have reason to think that none are guilty of this sin, who believe that Christ is the Son of God, and sincerely desire to have part in his merit and mercy: And those who fear they have committed this sin, it is a good sign they have not. The learned Dr. Whitby very well observes, that Christ speaks not of what was now said or done, but of what should be, Mark iii. 28. Luke xii. 10. Whoever shall blaspheme. As for those who blasphemed Christ when he was here upon earth, and called him a wine-bibber, a deceiver, a blasphemer, and the like, they had some colour of excuse, because of the meanness of his appearance and the prejudices of the nation against him; and the proof of his divine mission was not perfected till after his ascension; and therefore, upon their repentance, they shall be pardoned: and it is hoped, they may be convinced by the pouring out of the Spirit, as many of them were, who had been his betrayers and murderers: But if, when the Holy Ghost is given, in his inward gifts of revelation, speaking with tongues, and the like, such as were the distributions of the Spirit among the apostles, if they continue to blaspheme the Spirit likewise as an evil Spirit, there is no hope of them that they will ever be brought to believe in Christ: for, 1. Those gifts of the Holy Ghost in the apostles were the last proof that God designed to make use of for the confirming of the gospel, and were still kept in reserve when other methods preceded. 2. This was the most powerful evidence, and more apt to convince than miracles themselves. Those therefore that blaspheme this dispensation of the Spirit, cannot possibly be brought to believe in Christ: those who shall impute them to a collusion with Satan, as the Pharisees did the miracles, what can convince them? This is such a strong-hold of infidelity as a man can never be beaten out of, and is therefore unpardonable, because hereby repentance is hid from the sinner's eyes.

2. What the sentence is that is passed upon it: It shall not be forgiven, neither in this world, nor in the world to come. As in the then present state of the Jewish church there was no sacrifice of expiation for the soul that sinned presumptuously, so neither under the dispensation of gospel grace, which is often in scripture called the world to come, shall there be any pardon to such as tread under foot the blood of the covenant, and do despite to the Spirit of grace: there is no cure for a sin so directly against the remedy. It was a rule in our old law, No sanctuary for sacrilege. Or, It shall be forgiven, neither now, in the sinner's own conscience, nor in the great day, when the pardon shall be published. Or this is a sin that exposeth the sinner both to temporal and eternal punishment, both to present wrath and the wrath to come.

2. Christ speaks here concerning other wicked words, the products of corruption reigning in the heart and breaking out thence, ver. 33, 34, 35. It was said, ver. 25. that Jesus knew their thoughts, and here he spoke with an eye to them, shewing, that it was not strange they should speak so ill when their hearts were so full of enmity and malice; which yet they often endeavoured to cloke and cover by feigning themselves just men. Our Lord Jesus therefore points to the springs, and heals them; let the heart be sanctified and it will appear in our words.

1. The heart is the root, the language is the fruit, ver. 33. If the nature of the tree be good, it will bring forth fruit accordingly. Where grace is the reigning principle in the heart, the language will be the language of Canaan; and on the contrary, whatever lusts reign in the heart, it will break out; rotten lungs make a stinking breath: men's language discovers what country they are of, so likewise what manner of spirit they are of. Either make the tree good, and then the fruit will be good; get pure hearts, and then you will have pure lips and pure lives; or else the tree will be corrupt, and the fruit accordingly. You may make a crab-flock to become a good tree, by grafting into it an imp from a good tree, and then the fruit will be good; but if the tree be still the same, plant it where you will, and water it with what you will, the fruit will be still corrupt. Note, Unless the heart be transformed, the life will never be thoroughly reformed. These Pharisees were shy of speaking out their wicked thoughts of Jesus Christ; but Christ here intimates how vain it was for them to seek to hide that root of bitterness in them, that bore this gall and wormwood, when they never sought to mortify it. Note, It should be more our care to be good really, than to seem good outwardly.

2. The heart is the fountain, the words are the streams, ver. 34. Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaks, as the streams are the overflowings of the spring. A wicked heart is said to send forth wickedness, as a fountain casteth forth her waters, Jer. vi. 7. A troubled fountain, and a corrupt spring, such as Solomon speaks of, Prov. xxv. 26. must needs send forth muddy and unpleasant streams. Evil words are the natural genuine product of an evil heart. Nothing but the salt of grace cast into the spring will heal the waters, season the speech, and purify the corrupt communication. This they wanted; they were evil; and how can ye, being evil, speak good things? They were a generation of vipers. John Baptist had called them so, chap. iii. 7. and they were still the same; for can the Ethiopian change his skin? The people looked upon the Pharisees as a generation of saints, but Christ calls them a generation of vipers, the seed of the serpent, that had an enmity to Christ and his gospel. Note, what could be expected from a generation of vipers, but that which is poisonous and malignant? Can the viper be other-wise than venomous? Note, Ill things may be expected from ill people, as said the proverb of the ancients, Wickedness proceedeth from the wicked, 1 Sam. xxiv. 13. The vile person will speak villany, Isa. xxxii. 6. Those that are themselves evil have neither skill nor will to speak good things, as they should be spoken of. Christ would have his disciples know what sort of men they were to live among, that they might know what to look for. They are as Ezekiel among scorpions, Ezek. ii. 6. and must not think it strange if they be stung and bitten.

3. The heart is the treasury, the words are the things brought out of that treasury, ver. 35. and from hence mens' characters may be drawn and they may be judged of.

(1.) It is the character of a good man, that he has a good treasure in his heart, and from thence brings forth good things, as there is occasion. Graces, comforts, experiences, good knowledge, good affections, good resolutions, these are a good treasure in the heart; the word of God hidden there, the law of God written there, divine truth dwelling and ruling there, are a treasure there, valuable and suitable, kept safe and kept secret, as the stores of the good householder, but ready for use upon all occasions. A good man, thus furnished, will bring forth, as Joseph out of his stores, will be speaking and doing that which is good, for God's glory and the edification of others. See Prov. x. 11—13; 14, 20, 21—31; 32. This is bringing forth good things. Some pretend to good expences that have not a good treasure, such will soon be bankrupts; some pretend to have a good treasure within, but give no proof of it; they hope they have it in them, and thank God, whatever their words and actions are, they have good hearts; but faith without works is dead; and some have a good treasure of wisdom and knowledge but they are not communicative, they do not bring forth out of it; they have a talent but know not how to trade with it. The complete Christian in this bears the image of God, that he both is good, and doth good.

(2.) It is the character of an evil man, that he has an evil treasure in his heart, and out of it bringeth forth evil things. Lusts and corruptions dwelling and reigning in the heart, are an evil treasure, out of which the sinner brings forth ill words and actions, to the dishonour of God, and the hurt of others. See Gen. vi. 5—12. Matt. xv. 18, 19, 20. 1 John i. 15. But treasures of wickedness, Prov. x. 2. will be treasures of wrath.

(3.) Christ speaks here concerning idle words, and shews what evil there is in them, ver. 36, 37. much more is there in such wicked words, as the Pharisees spoke. It concerns us to think much of the day of judgment, that that may be a check upon our tongues; and let us consider,

1. How particular the account will be of tongue-sins in that day: Even for every idle word, or discourse, that men speak, they shall give an account. This intimates, 1. That God takes notice of every word we say, even that which we ourselves do not take notice of. See Psal. cxxxix. 4. Not a word in my tongue but thou knowest it, though spoken without a regard or design, God takes cognizance of it. 2. That vain, idle, impertinent talk is displeasing to God, which tends not to any good purpose, is not good to any use of edifying; it is the product of a vain and trifling heart. These idle words are the same with that foolish talking and jesting which is forbidden, Ephes. v. 4. This is that sin which is seldom wanting in the multitude of words, unprofitable talk, Job xv. 3. 3. We must shortly account for these idle words, they will be produced in evidence against us to prove us unprofitable servants, that have not improved the faculties of reason and speech, which are part of the talents we are intrusted with. If we repent not of our idle words, and our account for them be not balanced by the blood of Christ, we are undone.

2. How strict the judgment will be upon that account, ver. 37. By thy words thou shalt be justified, or condemned; a common rule in men's judgments, and here applied to God's. Note, The constant tenor of our discourse, according as it is gracious or not gracious, will be an evidence for us or against us at the great day. Those that seemed to be religious, but bridled not their tongue, will then be found to have put a cheat upon themselves with a vain religion, James i. 26. Some think Christ here refers to that of Eliphaz, Job xv. 6. Thine own mouth condemneth thee, and not I; or rather to that of Solomon, Prov. xviii. 21. Death and life are in the power of the tongue.

38. ¶ Then certain of the Scribes and of the Pharisees answered, saying, Master, we would see a sign from thee. 39. But he answered and said unto them, An evil and adulterous generation seeketh after a sign; and there shall no sign be given to it, but the sign of the prophet Jonas: 40. For as Jonas was three days and three nights in the whale's belly: so shall the Son of man be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth. 41. The men of Nineveh shall rise in judgment with this generation, and shall condemn it: because they repented at the preaching of Jonas; and, behold, a greater than Jonas is here. 42. The queen of the south shall rise up in the judgment with this generation, and shall condemn it: for she came from the uttermost parts of the earth to hear the wisdom of Solomon; and, behold, a greater than Solomon is here. 43. When the unclean spirit is gone out of a man, he walketh through dry places, seeking rest, and findeth none. 44. Then he saith, I will return into my house from whence I came out; and when he is come, he findeth it empty, swept, and garnished. 45. Then goeth he, and taketh with himself seven other spirits more wicked than himself, and they enter in and dwell there: and the last state of that man is worse than the first. Even so shall it be also unto this wicked generation.

It is probable, these Pharisees that Christ is here in discourse with, were not the same that cavilled at him, ver. 21. and would not credit the signs he gave; but another set of them, that saw there was no reason to discredit them; but would not content themselves with the signs he gave, nor admit the evidence of them, unless he would give them such further proof as they should demand.

Here is, 1. Their address to him, ver. 38. They compliment him with the title of Master, pretending respect for him, when they intended to abuse him; all are not indeed Christ's servants, who call him Master. Their request is, We would see a sign from thee. It was highly reasonable they should see a sign, that he should by miracles prove his divine mission: See Exod. iv. 8, 9. He came to take down a model of religion that was set up by miracles; and therefore it was requisite he should produce the same credentials: but it was highly unreasonable to demand a sign now, when he had given so many signs already, that did abundantly prove him sent of God. Note, It is natural to proud men to prescribe to God, and then make that an excuse for not subscribing to him; but a man's offence will never be his defence.

2. His answer to this address, this insolent demand.

First, He condemns the demand, as the language of an evil and adulterous generation, ver. 39. He fastens the charge not only on the Scribes and Pharisees, but the whole nation of the Jews, they were all like their leaders, a seed and succession of evil-doers: they were an evil generation indeed, that not only hardened themselves against the conviction of Christ's miracles, but set themselves to abuse him, and put contempt on his miracles: they were an adulterous generation, 1. As an adulterous brood; so miserably degenerated from the faith and obedience of their ancestors, that Abraham and Israel acknowledged them not. See Isa. lvii. 3. Or, 2. As an adulterous wife; they departed from that God, to whom by covenant they had been espoused: they were not guilty of the whoredom of idolatry, as they had been before the captivity, but they were guilty of infidelity, and all iniquity, and that is whoredom too: they did not look after gods of their own making, but they looked for signs of their own devising; and that was adultery.

Secondly, He denies to give them any other sign more than he has already given them, but that of the prophet Jonas. Note, Though Christ is always ready to hear and answer holy desires and prayers, yet he will not gratify corrupt lusts and humours. Those that ask amiss, ask, and have not. Signs were granted to those who desired them for the confirmation of their faith, as to Abraham and Gideon; but were denied to those that demanded them for the excuse of their unbelief.

Justly might Christ have said, they shall never see another miracle: but see his wonderful goodness: 1. They shall have the same signs still repeated, for their further benefit and more abundant conviction. 2. They shall have one sign of a different kind from all these, and that is the resurrection of Christ from the dead by his own power, called here the sign of the prophet Jonas; this was yet reserved for their conviction, and was intended to be the great proof of Christ's being the Messiah; for by that he was declared to be the Son of God with power, Rom. i. 4. That was such a sign as surpassed all the rest, completed and crowned them. If they will not believe the former signs they will believe this, Exod. iv. 9. and if this will not convince them, nothing will. And yet the unbelief of the Jews found out an evasion to shift off that too, by saying, His disciples came and stole him away: for none are so incurably blind as those that are resolved they will not see.

Now this sign of the prophet Jonas he further explains here, ver. 40. As Jonas was three days and three nights in the whale's belly, and then came out again safe and well, thus Christ shall be so long in the grave and then shall rise again. 1. The grave was to Christ as the belly of the fish was to Jonah, thither he was thrown, as a ransom for lives ready to be lost in a storm; there he lay, as in the belly of hell, Jonah ii. 2. and seemed to be cast out of God's sight. 2. He continued in the grave just as long as Jonah continued in the fish's belly, three days and three nights; not three whole days and nights; it is probable, Jonah did not lie so long in the whale's belly, but part of three natural days (νύκτες, the Greeks called them) he was buried in the afternoon of the sixth day of the week, and rose again in the morning of the first day; it is a manner of speech very usual; see 1 Kings xx. 29. Eph. iv. 26. v. 1. Luke ii. 21. so long Jonah was a prisoner for his own sins, so long Christ was a prisoner for ours. 3. As Jonah in the whale's belly comforted himself with an assurance, that yet he should look again towards God's holy temple, Jonah ii. 4. so Christ when he lay in the grave is expressly said to rest in hope, as one assured he should not see corruption, Acts ii. 26, 27. 4. As Jonah on the third day was discharged from his prison, and came to the land of the living again, from the congregation of the dead (for dead things are said to be formed from under the water, Job xxvi. 5.) so Christ on the third day should return to life, and rise out of his grave, to send abroad his gospel to the Gentiles.

Thirdly, Christ takes this occasion to represent the sad character and condition of that generation in which he lived, a generation that would not be reformed, and therefore could not but be ruined; and he gives them their character, as it would stand in the day of judgment, under the full discoveries and final sentences of that day: persons and things now appear under false colours, characters and conditions are here changeable. If therefore we would make a right estimate, we must take our measures from the last judgment; things are really what they are eternally.

Now Christ represents the people of the Jews,

1. As a generation that would be condemned by the men of Nineveh, whose repenting at the preaching of Jonas, would rise up in judgment against them, ver. 41. Christ's resurrection will be the sign of the prophet Jonas to them; but it will not have so happy an effect upon them as that of Jonas had upon the Ninevites, for they were by it brought to such a repentance as prevented their ruin: but the Jews will be hardened in an unbelief that shall hasten their ruin: And in the day of judgment the repentance of the Ninevites will be mentioned as an aggravation of the sin, and consequently the condemnation of those to whom Christ preached then, and of those to whom Christ is preached now; for this reason, because Christ is greater than Jonah. 1. Jonah was but a man, subject to like passions, to like sinful et, qua tam firma ciuitas, quæ non adus, atque dirigitur funditus: certo possit Cic. Lael. 7. Demons commonly end in delusions; if we dash we break it; it is broken more than another, we become an easy prey to a common enemy; when more than one is united in a common cause, all are more firmly bound together, Gal. v. 18. Churches and nations have known this by sad experience.

(2.) The application of it to the case in hand, ver. 28. It Satan cast out Satan, if the prince of the devils should be at variance with the inferior devils, the whole kingdom and in effect would soon be broken; say, if Satan should conclude a compact with Christ, a man be to his own ruin; for the manifest design and tendency of Christ's preaching and miracles was to overthrow the kingdom of Satan, as a kingdom of darkness, wickedness and enmity to God; and to set up upon the ruins of it a kingdom of light, holiness and love. The works of the world, as a rebel against God and a tyrant over the souls of men, were it proved by Christ; and therefore it was the most absurd thing imaginable to think that Beelzebub should at all counteract such a design or come into it; if he should fall in with Christ, how should the kingdom stand? he would himself contribute to the overthrow of it. Note, The devil has a kingdom, a common interest, no opposition to God and Christ, which, to the utmost of his power, he will make to stand, and he will never come into Christ's interests; he must be conquered and broken by Christ, and therefore cannot submit and bend to him. What concord or communion can there be between light and darkness, Christ and Beelzebub, Christ and Beelzebub? Christ will destroy the devil's kingdom, but he needs not do it by any such little arts and projects as this of a secret compact with Beelzebub; no, this victory must be obtained by nobler methods. Let the prince of the devils muster up all his forces, let him make use of all his powers and politics, and keep his interests in the closest confederacy, yet Christ will be too hard for his united force, and his kingdom shall not stand.

2. It was not at all strange or improbable that devils should be cast out by the Spirit of God; for,

(1.) How otherwise do your children cast them out? There were those among the Jews who, by invocation of the name of the most high God, or the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, did sometimes cast out devils. Josephus speaks of some in his time that did it; we read of Jewish sorcerers, Acts xix. 19. and of some that in Christ's name cast out devils, though they did not follow him, Mark ix. 38, or were not faithful to him, Matt. vii. 22. These the Pharisees condemned ver. 9, but inquired what they did to the Spirit of God, and valued their selves and their nation upon it. It was therefore merely from spite and envy to Christ, that they would own that others cast out devils by the Spirit of God, but suggest that he did it by compact with Beelzebub. Note, It is the way of malicious people, especially the malicious persecutors of Christ and Christians, to condemn the same thing in those they hate, which they approve of and applaud in those they have a kindness for: The judgments of envy are made not by things but persons; not by reason but prejudice: But those were very unfit to sit in Moses's seat, who knew faces and knew nothing else in judgment; therefore they shall be your judges, i. e. this contradicting of yourselves will rise up in judgment against you at the great day, and will condemn you. Note, In the last judgment, not only every sin, but every aggravation of it, will be brought into the account, and some of our sins as that were right and good, will be brought in evidence against us, and convict us of partiality.

(2.) This casting out of devils was a certain token and indication of the approach and appearance of the kingdom of God, ver. 23. But if it be indeed that I cast out devils by the Spirit of God, as certainly I do, then you must conclude that though you are unwilling to receive it, yet the kingdom of the Messiah is now about to be set up among you: other miracles that Christ wrought proved him sent of God, but this proved him sent of God to destroy the devil's kingdom and his works. Now that great promise was evidently fulfilled, that the seed of the woman should break the serpent's head, Gen. iii. 15. Therefore that glorious dispensation of the kingdom of God, which has been long expected, is now commenced; slight it at your peril. Note, 1. The destruction of the devil's power is wrought by the Spirit of God; that Spirit who works to the obedience of faith, overthrows the interest of that spirit who works in the children of unbelief and disobedience. 2. The casting out of devils is a certain introduction to the kingdom of God. If the devil's interest in a soul be not only checked by custom or external restraints, but tank and broken by the Spirit of God, as a sanctifier, no doubt but the kingdom of God is come to that soul, the kingdom of grace, a blessed earnest of the kingdom of glory.

3. The comparing of Christ's miracles, particularly this of casting out devils, with his doctrine, and the design and tendency of his holy religion, did evidence that he was so far from being in league with Satan, that he was at open enmity and hostility against him, ver. 29. How can one enter into a house and plunder his goods and carry them away, except he first bind the strong man, and then he may do what he pleaseth with his goods? The world that sat in darkness and lay in wickedness, was in Satan's possession and under his power, as a house in the possession and under the power of a strong man; so is every unregenerate soul; there Satan resides, and he rules. Now, 1. The design of Christ's gospel was to spoil the devil's house, which, as a strong man he kept in the world; to turn the people from darkness to light, from iniquities, from this world to a better, ver. 28. The power of Satan into God, Acts xxvi. 18. to alter the property of souls. 2. Pursuant to this design he bound the strong man, when he cast out unclean spirits by his word. Thus he wrested the sword out of the devil's hand, that he might wrest the people out of it. The doctrine of Christ teacheth us how to subvert his empire; and when he shewed how enmity and hostility he could cast out of people's bodies, he encountered all his powers to hope, that whatever power Satan might usurp and exercise in the souls of men, Christ by his grace would break it, he will spoil him; for it appears as can bind him. When nations were turned from the service of idols to serve the living God, when some of the worst of sinners were sanctified and justified, and became the best of saints, then Christ spoiled the devil's house, and will spoil it more and more.

Lastly, It is here intimated, that this holy war which Christ was carrying on with vigour against the devil and his kingdom, was such as would not admit of a neutrality, ver. 30. He that is not with me, is against me. In the little differences that may arise between the disciples of Christ among themselves, we are taught to listen the matters in variance, and to seek peace, by accounting those that are not against us to be with us, Luke ix. 50. but in the great quarrel between Christ and the devil, no peace is to be sought, nor any such lax and idle contention to be made of an indifference in the matter; he that is not a party for Christ, will be reckoned with as really against him; he that is cool in the cause is looked upon as an enemy. When the dispute is between God and Baal, there is no halting between two, 1 Kings xviii. 21. there is no standing between Christ and Belial; for the kingdom of Christ, as it is eternally opposite to, so it will be eternally victorious over the devil's kingdom; and therefore in this cause there is no standing still with Caleb beyond Jordan, or Isaiah on the sea shore, Judges i. 16, 17. we must be entirely, faithfully and immovably on Christ's side; it is the right side, and will at last be the rising side: See Isa. xxxv. 26.

The latter clause is to the same purpose; He that gathereth not with me, scattereth. Note, 1. Christ's errand into the world was to gather, to gather in his harvest, to gather in those that the Father had given him, John vi. 37. 1 Eph. i. 10. 2. Christ expects and requires from those that are with him, that they gather with him; that they not only gather to him themselves, but do all they can, in their places, to gather others to him, and so to strengthen his interest. 3. Those who will not appear and act as gatherers of Christ's kingdom, will be looked upon and dealt with as scatterers of it: if we gather not with Christ, we scatter: it is not enough not to do hurt, but we must do good. Thus is the breach widened between Christ and Satan, to shew there was no such compact between them as the Pharisees whispered.

Fifthly, Here is a discourse of Christ's upon this occasion, concerning tongue-sins: Wherefore I say unto you. He seems to turn from the Pharisees to the people, from disputing to instructing, and from the sin of the Pharisees he warns the people concerning three sorts of tongue-sins; for others harms are admonitions to us.

(1.) Blasphemous words against the Holy Ghost, the worst kind of tongue-sins, and unpardonable, ver. 31, 32. (1) Here is a gracious assurance of the pardon of all sin upon gospel-terms: this Christ saith unto us, and it is a comfortable saying, that the greatness of sin shall be no bar to our acceptance with God, if we truly repent and believe the gospel: All manner of sin and blasphemy shall be forgiven unto men. Though the sin has been as scarlet and crimson, Isa. i. 18. though never so heinous in its nature, never so much aggravated by its circumstances, and never so often repeated, though it reach up to the heavens; yet with the Lord there is mercy, that reacheth beyond the heavens. Even blasphemy, a sin immediately touching God's name and honour. Paul obtained mercy, who had been a blasphemer, 1 Tim. i. 13. Well may we say, Who is a God like unto thee, pardoning iniquity? Micah vii. 18. Even words spoken against the Son of man shall be forgiven, as theirs were who reviled him at his death; many of whom repented and found mercy. Christ herein hath set an example to all other the sons of men, to be ready to forgive words spoken against them. 1, as a day man, heard not. Observe, They shall be forgiven unto men, not to devils; this is love to the whole world of mankind, above the world of fallen angels, that all sin is pardonable to them.

1. What this sin is; it is speaking against the Holy Ghost. See what malignity there is in tongue-sins, when the only unpardonable sin is so. But Jesus knew their thoughts, ver. 25. It is not all speaking against the person or essence of the Holy Ghost, or some of his more private operations, or merely the resisting of his internal working in the sinner himself, that is here meant; for who then should be saved? It is adjudged in our law, that an act of indemnity shall always be conferred in favour of that grace and clemency which is the intentment of the act; and therefore the exceptions in the act are not to be extended further than needs must. The gospel is an act of indemnity, none are excepted by name, nor any by description, but those only that blaspheme the Holy Ghost; which therefore must be construed in the narrowest sense: all presuming sinners are effectually cut off by the condition of the indemnity, faith and repentance; and therefore the other exceptions must not be stretched far; and this blasphemy is excepted, not for any defect of mercy in God or merit in Christ, but because it inevitably leaves the sinner in infidelity and impenitency. We have reason to think that none are guilty of this sin, who believe that Christ is the Son of God, and sincerely desire to have part in his merit and mercy: And those who fear they have committed this sin, it is a good sign they have not. The learned Dr. Whitby very well observes, that Christ speaks not of what was now said or done, but of what should be, Mark iii. 28. Luke xii. 10. Whoever shall blaspheme. As for those who blasphemed Christ when he was here upon earth, and called him a wine-bibber, a deceiver, a blasphemer, and the like, they had some colour of excuse, because of the meanness of his appearance and the prejudices of the nation against him; and the proof of his divine mission was not perfected till after his ascension; and therefore, upon their repentance, they shall be pardoned: and it is hoped, they may be convinced by the pouring out of the Spirit, as many of them were, who had been his betrayers and murderers: But if, when the Holy Ghost is given, in his inward gifts of revelation, speaking with tongues, and the like, such as were the distributions of the Spirit among the apostles, if they continue to blaspheme the Spirit likewise as an evil Spirit, there is no hope of them that they will ever be brought to believe in Christ: for, 1. Those gifts of the Holy Ghost in the apostles were the last proof that God designed to make use of for the confirming of the gospel, and were still kept in reserve when other methods preceded. 2. This was the most powerful evidence, and more apt to convince than miracles themselves. Those therefore that blaspheme this dispensation of the Spirit, cannot possibly be brought to believe in Christ: those who shall impute them to a collusion with Satan, as the Pharisees did the miracles, what can convince them? This is such a strong-hold of infidelity as a man can never be beaten out of, and is therefore unpardonable, because hereby repentance is hid from the sinner's eyes.

2. What the sentence is that is passed upon it: It shall not be forgiven, neither in this world, nor in the world to come. As in the then present state of the Jewish church there was no sacrifice of expiation for the sin that sinned presumptuously, so neither under the dispensation of gospel grace, which is often in scripture called the world to come, shall there be any pardon to such as tread under foot the blood of the covenant, and do despite to the Spirit of grace. There is no cure for a sin so directly against the remedy. It was a rule in our old law, No sanctuary for sacrilege. Or, It shall be forgiven, neither now, in the sinner's own conscience, nor in the great day, when the pardon shall be published. Or this is a sin that exposeth the sinner both to temporal and eternal punishment, both to present wrath and the wrath to come.

2. Christ speaks here concerning other wicked words, the products of corruption reigning in the heart and breaking out thence, ver. 33, 34, 35. It was said, ver. 25. that Jesus knew their thoughts, and here he spoke with an eye to them, shewing, that it was not strange they should speak to ill when their hearts were so full of enmity and malice; which yet they often endeavoured to cloke and cover by feigning themselves just men. Our Lord Jesus therefore points to the springs, and heals them; let the heart be sanctified and it will appear in our words.

1. The heart is the root, the language is the fruit, ver. 33. If the nature of the tree be good, it will bring forth fruit accordingly. Where grace is the reigning principle in the heart, the language will be the language of Canaan; and on the contrary, whatever lusts reign in the heart, it will break out; rotten lungs make a stinking breath: men's language discovers what country they are of, so likewise what manner of spirit they are of: Either make the tree good, and then the fruit will be good; get pure hearts, and then you will have pure lips and pure lives; or else the tree will be corrupt, and the the fruit accordingly. You may make a crab-stock to become a good tree, by grafting into it an imp from a good tree, and then the fruit will be good; but if the tree be still the same, plant it where you will, and water it with what you will, the fruit will be still corrupt. Note, Unless the heart be transformed, the life will never be thoroughly reformed. These Pharisees were shy of speaking out their wicked thoughts of Jesus Christ; but Christ here intimates how vain it was for them to seek to hide that root of bitterness in them, that bore this gall and wormwood, when they never sought to mortify it. Note, It should be more our care to be good really, than to seem good outwardly.

2. The heart is the fountain, the words are the streams, ver. 34. Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaks; as the streams are the overflowings of the spring. A wicked heart is said to send forth wickedness, as a fountain casteth forth her waters, Jer. vi. 7. A troubled fountain, and a corrupt spring, such as Solomon speaks of, Prov. xxv. 26. must needs send forth muddy and unpleasant streams. Evil words are the natural genuine product of an evil heart. Nothing but the salt of grace cast into the spring will heal the waters, season the speech, and purify the corrupt communication. This they wanted; they were evil; and how can ye, being evil, speak good things? They were a generation of vipers. John Baptist had called them so, chap. iii. 7. and they were still the same; for can the Ethiopian change his skin? The people looked upon the Pharisees as a generation of saints, but Christ calls them a generation of vipers, the seed of the serpent, that had an enmity to Christ and his gospel. Note, what could be expected from a generation of vipers, but that which is poisonous and malignant? Can the viper be otherwise than venomous? Note, Ill things may be expected from ill people, as said the proverb of the ancients, Wickedness proceedeth from the wicked, 1 Sam. xxiv. 13. The vile person will speak villany, Isa. xxxii. 6. Those that are themselves evil have neither skill nor will to speak good things, as they should be spoken of. Christ would have his disciples know what sort of men they were to live among, that they might know what to look for. They are as Ezekiel among scorpions, Ezek. ii. 6. and must not think it strange if they be stung and bitten.

(1.) It is the character of a good man, that he has a good treasure in his heart, and from thence brings forth good things, as there is occasion. Graces, comforts, experiences, good knowledge, good affections, good resolutions, these are a good treasure in the heart; the word of God hidden there, the law of God written there, divine truth dwelling and ruling there, are a treasure there, valuable and suitable, kept safe and kept secret, as the stores of the good householder, but ready for use upon all occasions. A good man, thus furnished, will bring forth, as Joseph out of his stores, will be speaking and doing that which is good, for God's glory and the edification of others. See Prov. x. 11—13, 14, 20, 21—31, 32. This is bringing forth good things. Some pretend to good expences that have not a good treasure, such will soon be bankrupts; some pretend to have a good treasure within, but give no proof of it; they hope they have it in them, and thank God, whatever their words and actions are, they have good hearts; but faith without works is dead: and some have a good treasure of wisdom and knowledge but they are not communicative, they do not bring forth out of it; they have a talent but know not how to trade with it. The complete Christian in this bears the image of God, that he both is good, and doth good.

(2.) It is the character of an evil man, that he has an evil treasure in his heart, and out of it bringeth forth evil things. Lusts and corruptions dwelling and reigning in the heart, are an evil treasure, out of which the sinner brings forth ill words and actions, to the dishonour of God, and the hurt of others. See Gen. vi. 5—12. Matt. xv. 18, 19, 20. 1. Tim. i. 15. But treasures of wickedness, Prov. x. 2. will be treasures of wrath.

(3.) Christ speaks here concerning idle words, and shows what evil there is in them, ver. 36, 37. much more is there in such wicked words, as the Pharisees spoke. It concerns us to think much of the day of judgment, that that may be a check upon our tongues; and let us consider,

1. How particular the account will be of tongue-sins in that day: Even for every idle word, or discourse, that men speak, they shall give an account. This intimates, 1. That God takes notice of every word we say, even that which we ourselves do not take notice of. See Psalm cxxxix. 4. Not a word in my tongue but thou knowest it, though spoken without a regard or design, God takes cognizance of it. 2. That vain, idle, impertinent talk is displeasing to God, which tends not to any good purpose, is not good to any use of edifying; it is the product of a vain and trifling heart. These idle words are the same with that foolish talking and jesting which is forbidden, Ephes. v. 4. This is that sin which is seldom wanting in the multitude of words, unprofitable talk, Job xv. 3. 3. We must shortly account for these idle words, they will be produced in evidence against us to prove us unprofitable servants, that have not improved the faculties of reason and speech, which are part of the talents we are intrusted with. If we repent not of our idle words, and our account for them be not balanced by the blood of Christ, we are undone.

2. How strict the judgment will be upon that account, ver. 37. By thy words thou shalt be justified, or condemned; a common rule in men's judgments, and here applied to God's. Note, The constant tenor of our discourse, according as it is gracious or not gracious, will be an evidence for us or against us at the great day. Those that seemed to be religious, but bridled not their tongue, will then be found to have put a cheat upon themselves with a vain religion, James i. 26. Some think Christ here refers to that of Eliphaz, Job xv. 6. Thine own mouth condemneth thee, and not I; or rather to that of Solomon, Prov. xviii. 21. Death and life are in the power of the tongue.

38. ¶ Then certain of the Scribes and of the Pharisees answered, saying, Master, we would see a sign from thee. 39. But he answered and said unto them, An evil and adulterous generation seeketh after a sign; and there shall no sign be given to it, but the sign of the prophet Jonas: 40. For as Jonas was three days and three nights in the whale's belly: so shall the Son of man be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth. 41. The men of Nineveh shall rise in judgment with this generation, and shall condemn it: because they repented at the preaching of Jonas; and, behold, a greater than Jonas is here. 42. The queen of the south shall rise up in the judgment with this generation, and shall condemn it: for she came from the uttermost parts of the earth to hear the wisdom of

VOL. III. NO. CLXI.

Solomon; and, behold, a greater than Solomon is here. 43. When the unclean spirit is gone out of a man, he walketh through dry places, seeking rest, and findeth none. 44. Then he saith, I will return into my house from whence I came out; and when he is come, he findeth it empty, swept, and garnished. 45. Then goeth he, and taketh with himself seven other spirits more wicked than himself, and they enter in and dwell there: and the last state of that man is worse than the first. Even so shall it be also unto this wicked generation.

It is probable, these Pharisees that Christ is here in discourse with, were not the same that cavilled at him, ver. 24. and would not credit the signs he gave; but another set of them, that saw there was no reason to discredit them; but would not content themselves with the signs he gave, nor admit the evidence of them, unless he would give them such further proof as they should demand.

Here is, 1. Their address to him, ver. 38. They compliment him with the title of Master, pretending respect for him, when they intended to abuse him; all are not indeed Christ's servants, who call him Master. Their request is, We would see a sign from thee. It was highly reasonable they should see a sign, that he should by miracles prove his divine mission: See Exod. iv. 8, 9. He came to take down a model of religion that was set up by miracles; and therefore it was requisite he should produce the same credentials; but it was highly unreasonable to demand a sign now, when he had given so many signs already, that did abundantly prove him sent of God. Note, It is natural to proud men to prescribe to God, and then make that an excuse for not subscribing to him; but a man's offence will never be his defence.

2. His answer to this address, this insolent demand.

First, He condemns the demand, as the language of an evil and adulterous generation, ver. 39. He fastens the charge not only on the Scribes and Pharisees, but the whole nation of the Jews, they were all like their leaders, a seed and succession of evil-doers: they were an evil generation indeed, that not only hardened themselves against the conviction of Christ's miracles, but set themselves to abuse him, and put contempt on his miracles: they were an adulterous generation, 1. As an adulterous brood; so miserably degenerated from the faith and obedience of their ancestors, that Abraham and Israel acknowledged them not. See Isa. lvii. 3. Or, 2. As an adulterous wife; they departed from that God, to whom by covenant they had been espoused: they were not guilty of the whoredom of idolatry, as they had been before the captivity, but they were guilty of infidelity, and all iniquity, and that is whoredom too: they did not look after gods of their own making, but they looked for signs of their own devising; and that was adultery.

Secondly, He denies to give them any other sign more than he has already given them, but that of the prophet Jonas. Note, Though Christ is always ready to hear and answer holy desires and prayers, yet he will not gratify corrupt lusts and humours. Those that ask amiss, ask, and have not. Signs were granted to those who desired them for the confirmation of their faith, as to Abraham and Gideon; but were denied to those that demanded them for the excuse of their unbelief.

Justly might Christ have said, they shall never see another miracle: but see his wonderful goodness: 1. They shall have the same signs still repeated, for their further benefit and more abundant conviction. 2. They shall have one sign of a different kind from all these, and that is the resurrection of Christ from the dead by his own power, called here the sign of the prophet Jonas; this was yet reserved for their conviction, and was intended to be the great proof of Christ's being the Messiah; for by that he was declared to be the Son of God with power, Rom. i. 4. That was such a sign as surpassed all the rest, completed and crowned them. If they will not believe the former signs they will believe this, Exod. iv. 9. and if this will not convince them, nothing will. And yet the unbelief of the Jews found out an evasion to shift off that too, by saying, His disciples came and stole him away: for none are so incurably blind as those that are resolved they will not see.

Now this sign of the prophet Jonas he further explains here, ver. 40. As Jonas was three days and three nights in the whale's belly, and then came out again safe and well, thus Christ shall be so long in the grave and then shall rise again. 1. The grave was to Christ as the belly of the fish was to Jonah, thither he was thrown, as a ransom for lives ready to be lost in a storm; there he lay, as in the belly of hell, Jonah ii. 2. and seemed to be cast out of God's sight. 2. He continued in the grave just as long as Jonah continued in the fish's belly, three days and three nights; not three whole days and nights; it is probable, Jonah did not lie so long in the whale's belly, but part of three natural days (πρὸς τρεῖς, the Greeks called them) he was buried in the afternoon of the sixth day of the week, and rose again in the morning of the first day; it is a manner of speech very usual; see 1 Kings xx. 29. Ezra. iv. 26. v. 1. Luke ii. 21. so long Jonah was a prisoner for his own sins, so long Christ was a prisoner for ours. 3. As Jonah in the whale's belly comforted himself with an assurance, that yet he should look again towards God's holy temple, Jonah ii. 4. so Christ when he lay in the grave is expressly said to rest in hope, as one assured he should not see corruption, Acts ii. 26, 27. 4. As Jonah on the third day was discharged from his prison, and came to the land of the living again, from the congregation of the dead (for dead things are said to be formed from under the water, Job xxvi. 5.) so Christ on the third day should return to life, and rise out of his grave, to send abroad his gospel to the Gentiles.

Thirdly, Christ takes this occasion to represent the sad character and condition of that generation in which he lived, a generation that would not be reformed, and therefore could not but be ruined; and he gives them their character, as it would stand in the day of judgment, under the full discoveries and final sentences of that day: persons and things now appear under false colours, characters and conditions are here changeable. If therefore we would make a right estimate, we must take our measures from the last judgment; things are really what they are eternally.

Now Christ represents the people of the Jews,

1. As a generation that would be condemned by the men of Nineveh, whose repenting at the preaching of Jonas, would rise up in judgment against them, ver. 41. Christ's resurrection will be the sign of the prophet Jonas to them; but it will not have so happy an effect upon them as that of Jonas had upon the Ninevites, for they were by it brought to such a repentance as prevented their ruin: but the Jews will be hardened in an unbelief that shall hasten their ruin: And in the day of judgment the repentance of the Ninevites will be mentioned as an aggravation of the sin, and consequently the condemnation of those to whom Christ preached then, and of those to whom Christ is preached now; for this reason, because Christ is greater than Jonas. 1. Jonah was but a man, subject to like passions, to like sinful passions, passions, as we are; but Christ is the Son of God. 2. Jonah was a stranger in Nineveh, he came among strangers that were prejudiced against his country, but Christ came to his own, when he preached to the Jews, and much more when he is preached among professing Christians, that are called by his name. 3. Jonah preached but one short sermon, and that with no great solemnity, but as he passed along the streets; Christ renews his call, sat and taught, taught in the synagogue. 4. Jonah preached nothing but wrath and ruin within forty days, gave no instructions, directions or encouragements to repent; but Christ, besides the warning given us of our dangers, hath shewed wherein we must repent, and assured us of acceptance upon our repentance, because the kingdom of heaven is at hand. 5. Jonah wrought no miracle to confirm his doctrine, shewed no good-will to the Ninevites; but Christ wrought abundance of miracles, and all miracles of mercy; and yet the Ninevites repented at the preaching of Jonah, but the Jews were not wrought upon by Christ's preaching. Note, The goodness of some, who have less helps and advantages for their souls, will aggravate the badness of those that have much greater. Those that by the twilight discover the things that belong to their peace, will shame those that grope at noon-day.

2. As a generation that would be condemned by the queen of the south, the queen of Sheba, ver. 42. The Ninevites would shame them for not repenting, the queen of Sheba for not believing in Christ. She came from a far country to hear the wisdom of Solomon, yet people will not be persuaded to come and hear the wisdom of Christ, though he is in every thing greater than Solomon. 1. The queen of Sheba had no invitation to come to Solomon, nor any promise of being welcome; but we are invited to Christ, to sit at his feet and hear his word. 2. Solomon was but a wise man, but Christ is wisdom itself, in whom are hid all the treasures of wisdom. 3. The queen of Sheba had many difficulties to break through, she was a woman, unfit for travel, the journey long and perilous; she was a queen, and what would become of her own country in her absence? We have no such cares to hinder us. 4. She could not be sure that it would be worth her while to go so far on this errand; same us to flatter men, and perhaps she might have in her own country or court wise men sufficient to instruct her; yet, having heard of Solomon's fame, she would see him; but we come not to Christ upon such uncertainties. 5. She came from the uttermost parts of the earth, but we have Christ among us, and his word nigh us: Behold, he stands at the door, and knocks. 6. It should seem, the wisdom the queen of Sheba came for, was only philosophy and politics; but the wisdom that is to be had with Christ, is wisdom to salvation. 7. She could only hear Solomon's wisdom, he could not give her wisdom; but Christ will give wisdom to those that come to him; nay, he will himself be made of God to them wisdom; so that, upon all these accounts, if we do not hear the wisdom of Christ, the forwardness of the queen of Sheba to come and hear the wisdom of Solomon, will rise up in judgment against us and condemn us; for Jesus Christ is greater than Solomon.

3. As a generation that were resolved to continue in the possession, and under the power of Satan, notwithstanding all the methods that were used to dispossess him and rescue them. They are compared to one out of whom the devil is gone out, but returns with double force, ver. 43, 44, 45. The devil is here called the unclean spirit, for he has lost all his purity, and delights in and promotes all manner of impurity among men. Now,

(1.) The parable represents his possessing men's bodies: Christ having lately cast out a devil, and they having said, He had a devil, gave occasion to them how much they were under the power of Satan. This is a further proof that Christ did not cast out devils by compact with the devil, for then he would soon have returned again; but Christ's ejectment of him was final, and such as barred a re-entry; we find him charging the evil spirit to go out, and enter no more, Mark ix. 17. Probably the devil was wont sometimes thus to sport with those he had possession of, he would go out, and then return again with more fury; hence the lucid intervals of those in that condition were commonly followed with the more violent fits. When the devil is gone out he is uneasy, for he sleeps not except he have done mischief, Prov. iv. 16. He walks in dry places, like one that is very melancholy, he seeks rest but finds none, till he returns again. When Christ cast the legion out of the man, they begged leave to enter into the swine, where they went not long in dry places, but into the lake presently.

(2.) The application of the parable makes it to represent the case of the body of the Jewish church and nation: So shall it be with this wicked generation, that now resist, and will finally reject the gospel of Christ. The devil, who by the labours of Christ and his disciples had been cast out of many of the Jews, fought for rest among the heathen, from whose persons and temples the Christians would every where expel him; so Dr. Whitby: or, finding no where else in the heathen world such pleasant, desirable habitation: to his satisfaction, as here in the hearts of the Jews; so Dr. Hammond: he shall therefore enter again into them, for Christ had not found admission among them, and they, by their prodigious wickedness and obstinate unbelief, were still more ready than ever to receive him; and then he shall take a durable possession here, and the state of this people is likely to be more desperately damnable (so Dr. Hammond) than it was before Christ came among them, or would have been if Satan had never been cast out.

The body of that nation is here represented, 1. As an apostate people. After the captivity in Babylon they began to reform, left their idols, appeared with some face of religion, but they soon corrupted themselves again: though they never relapsed into idolatry, they fell into all manner of impiety and profaneness, went worse and worse, and added to all the rest of their wickedness a wilful contempt of and opposition to Christ and his gospel. 2. As people marked for ruin. A new commission was passing the seas against that hypocritical nation, the people of God's wrath, like that Isa. x. 6. and their destruction by the Romans was likely to be greater than any other, as their sins had been more flagrant: Then it was that wrath came upon them to the uttermost, 1 Thess. ii. 15, 16. Let this be a warning to all nations and churches to take heed of leaving their first love, of letting fall a good work of reformation begun among them, and returning to that wickedness which they seemed to have forsaken, for the last state of such will be worse than the first.

46. ¶ While yet he talked to the people, behold, his mother and his brethren stood without, desiring to speak with him. 47. Then one said unto him, Behold, thy mother and thy brethren stand without, desiring to speak with thee. 48. But he answered and said unto him that told him, Who is my mother? and who are my brethren? 49. And he stretched forth his hand toward his disciples, and said, Behold my mother and my brethren! 50. For whosoever shall do the will of my Father which is in heaven, the same is my brother, and sister, and mother.

Many excellent useful sayings came from the mouth of our Lord Jesus upon particular occasions; even his digressions are instructive as well as his set discourses: As here, Observe, 1. How Christ was interrupted in his preaching by his mother and his brethren; that stood without desiring to speak with him, ver. 46, 47. which desire of theirs was handed to him through the crowd. It is needless to inquire which of his brethren they were that came along with his mother; perhaps they were those that did not believe in him, John vii. 5. or what their business was; perhaps it was only designed to oblige him to break off, for fear he should over-spend himself, or to caution him to take care of giving offence by his discourse to the Pharisees, and running himself into a premature, as if they could teach him wisdom.

(1.) He was as yet talking to the people. Note, Christ's preaching was talking; it was plain, easy, and familiar, and suited to their capacity and case. What Christ had delivered had been cavilled at, and yet he went on. Note, The opposition we meet with in our work, must not drive us from it. He left off talking with the Pharisees; for he saw he could do no good with them, but continued to talk to the common people, who having not such a conceit of their knowledge as the Pharisees had were willing to learn.

(2.) His mother and brethren stood without, desiring to speak with him, when they should have been standing within desiring to hear him. They had the advantage of his daily converse in private, and therefore were less mindful to attend upon his public preaching. Note, Many times those that are nearest akin to the means of knowledge and grace are most negligent. Familiarity and easiness of access breeds some degree of contempt. We are apt to neglect that this day, which we think we may have any day; forgetting that it is only the present time we can be sure of; to-morrow is none of ours. There is too much truth in that common proverb, "The nearer the church the further from God;" it is pity it should be so.

(3.) They not only would not hear him themselves, but they interrupted others that heard him gladly. The devil was a sworn enemy to our Saviour's preaching. He had sought to baffle his discourse by the unreasonable cavils of the Scribes and Pharisees, and when he could not gain his point that way, he endeavoured to break it off by the unreasonable visits of relations. Note, We often meet with hindrances and obstructions in our work by our friends that are about us, and are taken off by civil respects from our spiritual concerns. Those that really wish well to us and our work, may sometimes by their indiscretion prove our back-friends, and impede us in our duty; as Peter was offensive to Christ, with his Master, spare thyself, when he thought himself very officious. The mother of our Lord desired to speak with him; it seems she had not then learned to command her Son, as the iniquity and idolatry of the church of Rome hath since pretended to teach her: nor was she so free from fault and folly as they would make her. It was Christ's prerogative, and not his mother's, to do every thing wisely and well and in its season. Christ once said to his mother, How is it that ye sought me? Wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business? And it was then said, she laid up that saying in her heart, Luke ii. 49. but if she had remembered it now, she would not have given him this diversion when he was about his Father's business. Note, There is many a good truth, that we thought was well laid up when we heard it, which yet is out of the way when we have occasion to use it.

2. How he resented this interruption, ver. 48, 49, 50.

1. He would not hearken to it; was so intent upon his work that no natural or civil respects should take him off from it. Who is my mother, and who are my brethren? Not that natural affection is to be put off, or that under pretence of religion we may be disrespectful to parents, or unkind to other relations; but every thing is beautiful in its season, and the lesser duty must stand while the greater is done. When our regard to our relations comes in competition with the service of God and the improving of an opportunity to do good, in such a case we must say to our father, I have not seen him, as Levi did, Deut. xxxiii. 9. The nearest relations must be comparatively hated, that is, we must love them less than Christ, Luke xiv. 26. and our duty to God must have the preference. This Christ has here given us an example of, the zeal of God's house did so far cut him up, that it made him not only forget himself but forget his dearest relations. And we must not take it ill of our friends, nor put it upon the score of their wickedness, if they prefer the pleasing of God before the pleasing of us; but must readily forgive those neglects, which may easily be imputed to a pious zeal for God's glory and others good. Nay, we must deny ourselves and our own satisfaction, rather than do that which may any way divert our friends from or distract them in their duty to God.

2. He took that occasion to prefer his disciples, who were his spiritual kindred, before his natural relations as such; which was a good reason why he would not leave preaching to speak with his brethren. He would rather be profiting his disciples, than pleasing his relations. Observe,

1. The description of Christ's disciples. They are such as do the will of his Father; not only hear it, and know it, and talk of it, but do it; for doing the will of God is the best preparative for discipleship, John vii. 17. and the best proof of it, Matt. vii. 21. that denominates us his disciples indeed. Christ doth not say, Whosoever shall do my will, for he came not to seek or do his own will distinct from his Father's, his will and his Father's are the same, but he refers us to his Father's will, because now in his present state and work he referred himself to it, John vi. 38.

2. The dignity of Christ's disciples: The same is my brother, and sister, and mother. His disciples that had left all to follow him, and embraced his doctrine, were dearer to him than any that were akin to him according to the flesh. They had preferred Christ before their relations, they left their father, Matt. iv. 22. x. 37. and now to make them amends, and to shew that there was no love lost, he preferred them before his relations; did not they thereby receive in point of honour an hundred fold? Matt. xix. 29. It was very endearing and very encouraging for Christ to say, Behold my mother, and my brethren; yet it was not their privilege alone, this honour have all the saints. Note, All obedient believers are near akin to Jesus Christ. They wear his name, bear his image, have his nature, are of his family. He loves them, converses freely with them as his relations. He bids them welcome to his table, takes care of them, provides for them, sees that they want nothing that is fit for them; when he died he left them rich legacies, now he is in heaven he keeps up a correspondence with them, and will have them all with him at last, and will in nothing fail to do the king-man's part, Ruth iii. 13. nor will ever be ashamed of his poor relations, but will confess them before men, before the angels, and before his Father.

C H A P. XIII.

In this chapter we have, 1. The favour which Christ did to his countrymen in preaching the kingdom of heaven to them, ver. 1, 2. He preached to them in parables, and here gives the reason why he chose that way of instructing, ver. 10-17. And the evangelist gives another reason, ver. 34, 35. Here are eight parables recorded in this chapter, chapter, which are designed to represent the kingdom of heaven, the method of planting the gospel-kingdom in the world, and of its growth and success. The great truths and laws of that kingdom are in other scriptures laid down plainly, and without parables; but some circumstances of its beginning, and progress are here laid open in parables. (1.) Here is one parable to shew what are the great hindrances of people's profiting by the word of the gospel, and in how many it comes short of its end through their own folly; and that is the parable of the four sorts of grounds, delivered, ver. 3—9. and expounded, ver. 18—23. (2.) Here are two parables intended to shew that there would be a mixture of good and bad in the gospel church, which would continue till the great separation between them in the judgment-day. The parables of the tares put forth, ver. 24—30. and expounded at the request of the disciples, ver. 36—43. And that of the net cast into the sea, ver. 47—50. (3.) Here are two parables intended to shew that the gospel church should be very small at first, but in process of time it should become a considerable body. That the grain of mustard-seed, ver. 31, 32. and that of the leaven, ver. 33. (4.) Here are two parables intended to shew that those who expect salvation by the gospel must be willing to venture all and quit all the prospect of it, and they shall be no losers by the bargain. That of the treasure hid in the field, ver. 43. And that of the pearl of great price, ver. 45, 46. (5.) Here is one parable intended for direction to the disciples, to make use of the instructions he had given them for the benefit of others. And that is the parable of the good householder, ver. 51, 52. 2. The contempt which his countrymen put upon him for the sake of the meanness of his parentage, ver. 53—58.

1. THE same day went Jesus out of the house, and sat by the sea side. 2. And great multitudes were gathered together unto him, so that he went into a ship, and sat, and the whole multitude stood on the shore. 3. And he spake many things unto them in parables, saying, Behold, a sower went forth to sow. 4. And when he sowed, some seeds fell by the way-side, and the fowls came and devoured them up: 5. Some fell upon stony places, where they had not much earth: and forthwith they sprung up, because they had no deepness of earth: 6. And when the sun was up, they were scorched; and because they had no root, they withered away. 7. And some fell among thorns; and the thorns sprung up, and choked them: 8. But other fell into good ground, and brought forth fruit, some an hundred-fold, some sixty-fold, some thirty-fold. 9. Who hath ears to hear, let him hear. 10. And the disciples came, and said unto him, Why speakest thou unto them in parables? 11. He answered and said unto them, Because it is given unto you to know the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven, but to them it is not given. 12. For whosoever hath, to him shall be given, and he shall have more abundance: but whosoever hath not, from him shall be taken away even that he hath. 13. Therefore speak I to them in parables: because they seeing see not; and hearing they hear not, neither do they understand. 14. And in them is fulfilled the prophecy of Isaiah, which saith, By hearing ye shall hear, and shall not understand: and seeing ye shall see, and shall not perceive: 15. For this people's heart is waxed gross, and their ears are dull of hearing, and their eyes they have closed: lest at any time they should see with their eyes, and hear with their ears, and should understand with their heart, and should be converted, and I should heal them. 16. But blessed are your eyes, for they see: and your ears, for they hear. 17. For verily I say unto you, That many prophets and righteous men have desired to see those things which ye see, and have not seen them; and to hear those things which ye hear, and have not heard them. 18. Hear ye therefore the parable of the sower. 19. When any one heareth the word of the kingdom, and understandeth it not, then cometh the wicked one, and catcheth away that which was sown in his heart. This is he which received seed by the way side. 20. But he that received the seed into stony places, the same is he that heareth the word, and anon with joy receiveth it; 21. Yet hath he not root in himself, but dureth for a while: for when tribulation or persecution ariseth because of the word, by and by he is offended. 22. He also that received seed among the thorns is he that heareth the word; and the care of this world, and the deceitfulness of riches choke the word, and he becometh unfruitful. 23. But he that received seed into the good ground is he that heareth the word, and understandeth it; which also beareth fruit, and bringeth forth, some an hundred-fold, some sixty, some thirty.

We have here Christ preaching, and may observe,

1. When Christ preached this sermon; it was the same day that he preached the sermon in the foregoing chapter; so unwearied was he in doing good, and working the works of him that sent him. Note, Christ was for preaching both ends of the day, and has by his example recommended that practice to his church: we must in the morning sow our seed, and in the evening not withhold our hand. See Eccl. xi. 6. An afternoon sermon well heard, will be so far from driving out the morning sermon, that it will rather cleave it, and fasten the nail in a sure place. Though Christ had been in the morning opposed and cavilled at by his enemies, is disturbed and interrupted by his friends, yet he went on with his work; and in the latter part of the day we do not find that he met with such discouragements. Those who with courage and zeal break through difficulties in God's service, will perhaps find them not so apt to recur as they fear. Resist them, and they will flee.

2. To whom he preached; there were great multitudes gathered together to him, and they were auditors; we do not find that any of the Scribes or Pharisees were present. They were willing to hear him when he preached in the synagogue, chap. xii. 9—14. but they thought it below them to hear a sermon by the sea-side, though Christ himself was the preacher; and truly he had better have their room than their company, for now they were absent he went on quietly and without contradiction. Note, Sometimes there is most of the power of religion there where there is less of the pomp of it: The poor receive the gospel. When Christ went to the sea-side, multitudes were presently gathered together to him. Where the king is there is the court; where Christ is there is the church, though it be by the sea-side. Note, Those that would get good by the word, must be willing to follow it in all its removes; when the ark shifts, shift after it. The Pharisees had been labouring by base calumnies and suggestions to drive the people off from following Christ, but they still flocked after him as much as ever. Note, Christ will be glorified in spite of all opposition; he will be followed.

3. Where he preached this sermon.

1. His meeting-place was the sea-side. He went out of the house (because there was no room for the auditory) into the open air. It was pity but such a preacher should have had the most spacious, sumptuous, and convenient place to preach in that could be devised, like one of the Roman theatres; but he was now in his state of humiliation, and in this as in other things denied himself the honours due to him; that as he had not a house of his own to live in, so he had not a chapel of his own to preach in. By this he teacheth us, in the external circumstances of worship not to covet that which is stately, but to make the best of the conveniences which God in his providence allots to us. When Christ was born he was crowded into the stable, and now to the sea-side, upon the strand, where all persons might come to him with freedom. He that was truth itself sought no corners, no adyta, as the pagan mysteries did. Wisdom cries without, Prov. i. 20. John xviii. 20.

2. His pulpit was a ship; not like Ezra's pulpit that was made for the purpose, Neh. viii. 4. but converted to this use for want of a better. No place amiss for such a preacher, whose presence dignified and consecrated any place: Let not those who preach Christ be ashamed, though they have mean and inconvenient places to preach in. Some observe, that the people stand upon dry ground and firm ground, while the preacher was upon the water in more hazard. Ministers are most exposed to trouble. Here was a true rostrum, a ship-pulpit.

4. What and how he preached. 1. He spake many things unto them. Many more it is likely than are here recorded, but all excellent and necessary things, things that belong to our peace, things pertaining to the kingdom of heaven; they were not trifles but things of everlasting consequence that Christ spoke of. It concerns us to give a more earnest heed, when Christ hath so many things to say to us, that we miss not any of them. 2. What he spake was in parables; a parable sometimes signifies any wise weighty saying that is instructive; but here in the gospels it generally signifies a continued similitude or comparison, by which spiritual and heavenly things were described in language borrowed from the things of this life. It was a way of teaching used very much, not only by the Jewish Rabbins, but by the Arabians and other wise men of the east; and it was found very profitable, and the more so for its being pleasant. Our Saviour used it much, and in it condescended to the capacities of people, and listened to them in their own language. God had long used similitudes by his servants the prophets, Hos. xii. 10. and to little purpose; now he useth similitudes by his Son; surely they will reverence him who speaks from heaven and of heavenly things, and yet clothes them with expressions borrowed from things earthly. See John iii. 12. So descending in a cloud.

Now, first, we have here the general reason why Christ taught in parables. The disciples were a little surprized at it, for hitherto in his preaching he had not much used it, and therefore they ask, Why speakest thou to them in parables? Because they were truly desirous that the people might hear with understanding. They do not say, Why speakest thou to us? they knew how to get the parables explained, but to them. Note, We ought to be concerned for the edification of others, as well as for our own, by the word preached, and if ourselves be strong, yet to bear the infirmities of the weak.

To this question Christ answers largely, ver. 11—17. where he tells them, that therefore he preached by parables, because thereby the things of God were made more plain and easy to them that were willing to be taught, and at the same time more difficult and obscure to those that were willingly ignorant; and thus the gospel would be a saviour of life to some, and of death to others. A parable, like the pillar of cloud and fire, turns a dark side towards Egyptians which confounds them, but a light side towards Israelites which comforts them, and so answers a double intention. The same light directs the eyes of some, but dazzles the eyes of others. Now,

1. This reason is laid down, ver. 11. Because it is given to you to know the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven, but to them it is not given. That is, 1. The disciples had knowledge, but the people had not. You know already something of these mysteries, and need not in this familiar way to be instructed; but the people are ignorant, are yet but babes, and must be taught as such by plain similitudes, being yet incapable of receiving instruction in any other way: for though they have eyes they know not how to use them; so some. Or, 2. The disciples were well inclined to the knowledge of gospel-mysteries, and would search into the parables, and by them would be led into a more intimate acquaintance with those mysteries; but the carnal hearers that rested in bare hearing, and would not be at the pains to look further nor ask the meaning of the parables, would be never the wiser, and so would justly suffer for their remissness. A parable is a shell that keeps good fruit for the diligent, but keeps it from the slothful. Note, 1. There are mysteries in the kingdom of heaven, and without controversy, great is the mystery of godliness: Christ's incarnation, satisfaction, intercession, our justification, and sanctification by union with Christ, and indeed the whole work of redemption from first to last are mysteries, could never have been discovered but by divine revelation; 1 Cor. xv. 51. were at this time discovered but in part to the disciples, and will never be fully discovered till the vail shall be rent; but the mysteriousness of gospel-truth should not discourage us from, but quicken us in our inquiries after it and searches into it. 2. It is graciously given to the disciples of Christ to be acquainted with these mysteries. Knowledge is the first gift of God, and it is a distinguishing gift; Prov. ii. 6. It was given to the apostles because they were Christ's constant followers and attendants. Note, The nearer we draw to Christ, and the more we converse with him, the better acquainted we shall be with gospel mysteries. 2. It is given to all true believers, who have an experimental knowledge of the gospel-mysteries, and that is without doubt doubt the best knowledge: A principle of grace in the heart is that which makes men of quick understanding in the fear of the Lord, and in the faith of Christ, and so in the meaning of parables; and for want of that Nicodemus, a master in Israel, talked of a new birth as a blind man of colours. 3. That there are those to whom this knowledge is not given, and a man can receive nothing unless it be given him from above, John iii. 27. and be it remembered, that God is debtor to no man; his grace is his own, he gives or withholds it at pleasure, Rom. xi. 35. the difference must be resolved into God's sovereignty, as before, Matt. xi. 25, 26.

2. This reason is further illustrated by the rule God observes in dispensing his gift; he bestows them on those that improve them, but takes them away from those that bury them. It is a rule among men, they will rather intrust their money with those that have increased their estates by their industry, than with those who have diminished them by their slothfulness.

1. Here is a promise to him that hath, that hath true grace, pursuant to the election of grace, that hath and useth what he hath, he shall have more abundance: God's favours are earnest of further favours: where he lays the foundation he will build upon it. Christ's disciples used the knowledge they now had, and they had more abundance at the pouring out of the Spirit, Acts ii. They that have the truth of grace, shall have the increase of grace; even to an abundance in glory, Prov. iv. 18. Joseph, he will add, Gen. xxx. 24.

2. Here is a threatening to him that hath not, that has no desire of grace, that makes no right use of the gifts and graces he has, has no root, no solid principle; that hath, but useth not what he has, from him shall be taken away that which he has or seems to have: His leaves shall wither, his gifts decay, the means of grace he has, and makes no use of, shall be taken from him; God will call in his talents out of their hands, that are likely to become bankrupts quickly.

3. This reason is particularly explained, with reference to the two sorts of people Christ had to do with.

1. Some were willingly ignorant, and such were amused by the parables, ver. 13. because they seeing, see not. They had shut their eyes against the clear light of Christ's plainer preaching, and therefore were now left in the dark. Seeing Christ's person, they see not his glory, see no difference between him and another man; seeing his miracles, and hearing his preaching, they see not, they hear not with any concern or application, they understand neither. Note, 1. There are many that see the gospel-light, and hear the gospel sound, but it never reacheth their hearts, nor has it any place in them. 2. It is just with God to take away the light from those that shut their eyes against it; that such as will be ignorant may be so. And God's dealing thus with them magnifies his distinguishing grace to his disciples.

Now in this the scriptures would be fulfilled, ver. 14, 15. It is quoted from Isa. vi. 9, 10. The evangelical prophet that spoke most plainly of gospel grace, foretold the contempt of it, and the consequences of that contempt. It is referred to no less than six times in the New Testament, which intimates, that in gospel times spiritual judgments would be most common, which makes least noise, but are most dreadful. That which was spoken of the sinners in Isaiah's time, was fulfilled in those in Christ's time; and it is still in the fulfilling every day; for while the wicked heart of man keeps up the same sin, the righteous hand of God inflicts the same punishment. Here is,

1. A description of sinners wilful blindness and hardness which is their sin. This people's hearts is waxed gross, it is fatened, so the word is; which notes both sensuality and senselessness, Psalm cxix. 70. secure under the word and rod of God, and scornful as Jeroboam, that waxed fat and kicked, Deut. xxxii. 15. And when the heart is thus heavy, no wonder that the ears are dull of hearing; the whispers of the Spirit they hear not at all, the loud calls of the word, though the word be nigh them, they regard not, nor are at all affected with it: They stop their ears, Psalm lviii. 4, 5. And because they are resolved to be ignorant they shut both the learning senses, for their eyes also they have closed, resolved they would not see light come into the world when the sun of righteousness arose, but they shut their windows, because they loved darkness rather than light, John iii. 19. 2 Pet. iii. 5.

2. A description of that judicial blindness, which is the just punishment of this. By hearing, ye shall hear, and shall not understand, i. e. what means of grace you have shall be to no purpose to you; though in mercy to others they are continued, yet in judgment to you the blessing upon them is denied. The saddest condition a man can be in on this side hell, is to sit under the most lively ordinances with a dead, stupid, untouched heart. To hear God's word, and see his providences, and yet not to understand and perceive his will, either in the one or in the other, is the greatest sin and the greatest judgments that can be. Observe, It is God's work to give an understanding heart, and he often in a way of righteous judgments denies it to those to whom he hath given the hearing ear, and the seeing eye in vain. Thus doth God choose sinners delusions, Isa. lxvi. 4. and bind them over to the greatest ruin, by giving them up to their own hearts lusts, Psalm lxxxi. 11, 12. Let them alone, Hosea iv. 17. My Spirit shall not always strive, Gen. vi. 3.

3. The woeful effect and consequence of this; lest at any time they should see. They will not see because they will not turn; and God saith, they shall not see, because they shall not turn; lest they should be converted, and I should heal them.

Note, 1. That seeing, hearing and understanding are necessary to conversion; for God in working grace deals with men as men, as rational agents; he draws with the cords of a man, changeth the heart by opening the eyes, and turns first from the power of Satan unto God; by turning first from darkness to light, Acts xxvi. 18. 2. All those that are truly converted to God, shall certainly be healed by him. If they be converted, I shall heal them, I shall save them: so that if sinners perish, it is not long of God but of themselves; they foolishly expected to be healed, without being converted. 3. It is just with God to deny his grace to those that have long and often refused the proposals of it and resisted the power of it. Pharaoh for a good while hardened his own heart, Exod. viii. 15—32. and afterwards God hardened it, chap. ix. 12—x. 20. Let us therefore fear, lest by sinning against the divine grace we sin it away.

2. Others were effectually called to be the disciples of Christ, and were truly desirous to be taught of him; and they were instructed and made to improve greatly in knowledge by these parables, especially when they were expounded; and by them the things of God were made more plain and easy, more intelligible and familiar, and more apt to be remembered, ver. 16, 17. Your eyes see, your ears hear. They saw the glory of God in Christ's person, they heard the mind of God in Christ's doctrine; they saw much, and were desirous to see more, and thereby were prepared to receive farther instruction; they had opportunity for it, by being constant attendants on Christ, and they should have it from day to day, and grace with it. Now this Christ speaks of,

1. As a blessing: Blessed are your eyes, they see, and your ears for they hear, i. e. it is your happiness, and it is a privilege for which you are indebted to the peculiar favour and blessing of God: it is a promised blessing, that in the days of the Messiah, the eyes of them that see shall not be dim, Isa. xxxii.

3. The eyes of the meanest believer that knows experimentally the grace of Christ, are more blessed than those of the greatest scholars, the greatest masters in experimental philosophy, that are strangers to God, who, like the other gods they serve, have eyes, and see not. Blessed are your eyes. Note, True blessedness is entailed upon the right understanding and due improvement of the mysteries of the kingdom of God. The hearing ear and the seeing eye are God's work in those that are sanctified, they are the work of his grace, Prov. xx. 12. and they are a blessed work, which shall be fulfilled with power, when those that now see through a glass darkly, shall see face to face. It was to illustrate this blessedness that Christ said so much of the misery of those that are left in ignorance, they have eyes, and see not; but blessed are your eyes. Note, The knowledge of Christ is a distinguishing favour to those that have it, and upon that account the more obliging: See John xiv. 22. The apostles were to teach others, and therefore were themselves blessed with the clearest discoveries of divine truth: The watchmen shall see eye to eye, Isa. lii. 8.

2. As a transcendent blessing, desired by but not granted to many prophets and righteous men, ver. 17. The Old Testament saints that had some glimpses, some glimmerings of gospel light, coveted earnestly further discoveries. They had the types, shadows and prophecies of these things, but longed to see the substance, that glorious end of those things which they could not steadfastly look unto; that glorious inside of those things which they could not look into. They desired to see the great salvation, the consolation of Israel, but did not see it, because the fulness of time was not yet come. Note, 1. Those that know something of Christ cannot but covet to know more. 2. The discoveries of divine grace are made, even to prophets and righteous men, but according to the dispensation they are under. Though they were the favourites of heaven, with whom God's secret was, yet they have not seen the things which they desired to see, because God had determined not to bring them to light yet; and his favours shall not anticipate his counsels. There was then, as there is still, a glory to be revealed; something in reserve, that they without us should not be made perfect, Heb. xi. 40. 3. For the exciting of our thankfulness, and the quickening of our diligence, it is good for us to consider what means we enjoy, and what discoveries are made to us now under the gospel, above what they had and enjoyed that lived under the Old Testament dispensation, especially in the revelation of the atonement for sin; see what are the advantages of the New Testament above the Old, 2 Cor. iii. 7, &c. Heb. xii. 18. And see that our improvements be proportionable to our advantages.

Secondly, We have here in these verses one of the parables which our Saviour put forth; it is that of the sower and the seed: both the parable itself, and the reddition of it. Christ's parables are borrowed from common ordinary things, not from any philosophical notions or speculations, or the unusual phenomena of nature, though applicable enough to the matter in hand, but from the most obvious things that are of every day's observation, and come within reach of the meanest capacity; many of them are fetched from the husbandman's calling, as this of the sower and that of the tares. Christ chose to do thus, 1. That spiritual things might hereby be made more plain, and by familiar similitudes might be made the more easy to slide into our understandings. 2. That common actions might hereby be spiritualized, and we might take occasion from those things which fall so often under our view, to meditate with delight on the things of God; and thus when our hands are busied about the world, we may not only notwithstanding that, but even with the help of that, be led to have our hearts in heaven. Thus the word of God shall talk with us, talk familiarly with us, Prov. vi. 22.

The parable of the sower is plain enough, ver. 3—9. The exposition of it we have from Christ himself, who knew best what was his own meaning. The disciples, when they asked, Why speakest thou to them in parables? ver. 10. intimated a desire to have the parable explained for the sake of the people; nor was it any disparagement to their own knowledge to desire it for themselves. Our Lord Jesus kindly took the hint, and gave the sense, and caused them to understand the parable, directing his discourse to his disciples, but in the hearing of the multitude, for he did not dismiss them till ver. 36. Hear ye therefore the parable of the sower, ver. 18. you have heard it, but let us go over it again. Note, It is of good use, and would contribute much to our understanding of the word and profiting by it, to hear over again what we have heard, Phil. iii. 18. you have heard it, but hear the interpretation of it. Note, Then only we hear the word aright and to good purpose, when we understand what we hear; it is no hearing at all if it be not with understanding, Neh. viii. 2. It is God's grace indeed that gives the understanding, but it is our duty to give our minds to understand.

Let us therefore compare the parable and the exposition.

1. The seed sown is the word of God, here called the word of the kingdom, ver. 19. i. e. the kingdom of heaven, that is the kingdom; the kingdoms of this world compared with that are not to be called kingdoms. The gospel comes from that kingdom, and conducts to that kingdom; the word of the gospel is the word of the kingdom; it is the word of the King, and where that is there is power; it is a law, by which we must be ruled and governed. This word is the seed sown, which seems a dead dry thing; but all the product is virtually in it. It is incorruptible seed, 1 Pet. i. 23. it is the gospel that brings forth fruit in souls, Col. i. 5, 6.

2. The sower that scatters the seed is our Lord Jesus Christ, either by himself or by his ministers; see ver. 37. The people are God's husbandry, his tillage, so the word is; and ministers are labourers together with God, 1 Cor. iii. 9. Preaching to a multitude is sowing the corn, we know no where it must light; only see that it be good, that it be clean, and be sure to give it seed enough. The sowing of the word is the sowing of a people for God's field, the corn of his flour, Isa. xxi. 10.

3. The ground in which this seed is sown is the hearts of the children of men, which are differently qualified and disposed, and accordingly the success of the word is different. Note, Man's heart is like soil; capable of improvement, of bearing good fruit; it is a pity it should lie fallow or be like the field of the slothful, Prov. xxiv. 30. The soul is the proper place for the word of God to dwell and work and rule in; its operation is upon conscience, it is to light that candle of the Lord. Now according as we are so the word is to us; Recipitur ad modum recipientis. As it is with the earth; some sort of ground, take never so much pains with it, and throw never so good seed into it, yet it brings forth no fruit to any purpose; while the good soil brings forth plentifully. So it is with the hearts of men, whose different characters are here represented by four sorts of ground, of which three are bad, and but one good. Note, The number of fruitless hearers is very great; even of those that heard Christ himself preach. Who has believed our report? It is a melancholy prospect which this parable gives us of the congregations of those that hear the gospel preached, that scarce one in four brings forth fruit to perfection. Many are called with the common call, but in few is the eternal choice evidenced by the efficacy of that call, Matt. xx. 16.

Now observe the characters of these four sorts of ground.

1. The highway ground, ver. 4—19. They had path-ways through their corn corn-fields, Matt. xii. 1. and the seed that fell on them never entered, and so the birds picked it up. The place where Christ's hearers now stood, represented the characters of most of them, the sand on the sea-shore, which was to the seed like the highway ground.

Observe, 1. What kind of hearers are compared to the highway ground, such as hear the word, and understand it not; and it is their own fault that they do not. They take no heed to it, take no hold of it: they do not come with any design to get good, as the highway was never intended to be sown. They come before God as his people come, and sit before him as his people sit; but it is merely for fashion-sake, to see and be seen; they mind not what is said, it comes in at one ear and goes out at the other, and makes no impression.

How they come to be unprofitable hearers. The wicked one, that is the devil, cometh and catcheth away that which was sown. Such mindless, careless, trifling hearers are an easy prey to Satan; who, as he is the great murderer of souls, so he is the great thief of sermons, and will be sure to rob us of the word if we take not care to keep it; as the birds pick up the seed that falls on the ground, that is neither ploughed before nor harrowed after. If we break not up the fallow ground by preparing our hearts for the word, and humbling them to it, and engaging our own attention; and if we cover not the seed afterwards by meditation and prayer, if we give not a more earnest heed to the things which we have heard, we are as the highway ground. Note, The devil is a sworn enemy to our profiting by the word of God; and none do more befriended his design than heedless hearers, who are thinking of something else when they should be thinking of the things that belong to their peace.

2. The stony ground. Some fell upon stony places, ver. 6, 7. which represents the case of hearers that go further than the former, who receive some good impressions of the word, but they are not lasting, ver. 20, 21. Note, It is possible we may be a great deal better than some others, and yet not be so good as we should be; may go beyond our neighbours, and yet come short of heaven. Now observe concerning these hearers that are represented by the stony ground.

1. How far they went. 1. They hear the word; they turn neither their backs upon it nor a deaf ear to it. Note, Hearing the word, though never so frequently, never so gravely, if we rest in that, will never bring us to heaven. 2. They are quick in hearing, swift to hear, he anon receiveth it, in due, he is ready to receive it, forthwith it sprung up, ver. 5. is sooner appeared above ground than that which was sown in the good soil. Note, Hypocrites often get the start of true Christians in the shews of profession, and are often too hot to hold. He receiveth it straightway, without trying it; swallows it without chewing, and then there can never be a good digestion. Those are most likely to hold fast that which is good, that prove all things, 1 Thess. v. 21. 3. They receive it with joy. Note, There are many that are very glad to hear a good sermon, that yet do not profit by it; many may be pleased with the word, and yet not changed and ruled by it; the heart may melt under the word, and yet not be melted down by the word, much less into it, as into a mould. Many taste the good word of God, Heb. vi. 5. And say they find sweetness in it, but some beloved lust is rolled under the tongue which it would not agree with, and so they spit it out again. 4. They endure for a while, like a violent motion which continues as long as the impression of the force remains, but ceaseth when that hath spent itself. Note, Many endure for a while, that do not endure to the end, and so come short of the happiness which is promised to them only that persevere, Matt. x. 22. they did run well, but something hindered them, Gal. v. 7.

2. How they fell away, so that no fruit was brought to perfection; no more than the corn that having no depth of earth from which to draw moisture, is scorched and withered by the heat of the sun. And the reason is,

1. They have no root in themselves, no settled fixed principles in their judgments. No firm resolution in their wills, nor any rooted habits in their affections; nothing firm that will be either the sap or the strength of their profession. Note, 1. It is possible there may be the green blade of a profession, where yet there is not the root of grace; hardness prevails in the heart, and what there is of soil and softness is only in the surface, inwardly they are no more affected than a stone; they have no root, i. e. they are not by faith united to Christ who is our root; they derive not from him, they depend not on him. 2. Where there is not a principle, though there be a profession, we cannot expect perseverance. Those that have no root will endure but a while. A ship without ballast, though she may at first outsail the laden vessel, yet will certainly fail in stress of weather, and never make her port.

2. Times of trial come, and then they come to nothing. When tribulation and persecution arise because of the word, he is offended: it is a stumblingblock in his way which he cannot get over, and so he flies off, and this is all that his profession comes to. Note, 1. After a fair gale of opportunity usually follows a storm of persecution, to try who have received the word in sincerity, and who have not. When the word of Christ's kingdom comes to be the word of Christ's patience, Rev. iii. 10. then is the trial who keeps it and who doth not, Rev. i. 9. It is wisdom to prepare for such a day. 2. When trying times come, those that have no root are soon offended; they quarrel with their profession, and then quit it; first find fault with it and then throw it off. Hence we read of the offence of the cross, Gal. v. 11. Observe, Persecution is represented in the parable by the scorching sun, ver. 6. the same sun which warms and cherishes that which was well rooted, withers and burns up that which wanted root. As the word of Christ, so the cross of Christ, is to some a favour of life unto life, to others a favour of death unto death: The same tribulation, which drives some to apostasy and ruin, works for others a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory. Trials which shake some, confirm others, Phil. i. 12. Observe, how soon they fall away, by and by, as soon rotten as they were ripe; a profession taken up without consideration is commonly let fall without it: "Light come, light go."

3. The thorny ground. Some fell among thorns, which are a good guard to the corn when they are in the hedges, but a bad inmate when they are in the field, and the thorns sprung up; which intimates, that they did not appear or but little when the corn was sown, but afterwards they proved choking to it, ver. 7. This went further than the former, for it had root; and it represents the condition of those that do not quite cast off their profession, and yet come short of any saving benefit by it; the good they gain by the word, being insensibly overcome and overborne by the things of this world. Prosperity destroys the word in the heart, as much as persecution doth, and more dangerously because more silently: The stones spoiled the root, the thorns spoil the fruit.

Now what are these choking thorns?

(1.) The cares of this world. Care for another world would quicken the springing of this seed, but care for this world chokes it. Worldly cares are fitly compared to thorns, for they came in with sin and are fruit of the curse; they are good in their place to stop a gap, but a man must be well armed that deals too much in them, 2 Sam. xxiii. 6, 7. they are intangling, vexing, scratching, and their end is to be burned, Heb. vi. 8. These thorns choke the good seed. Note, Worldly cares are great hindrances to our profiting by the word of God, and our proficiency in religion. They eat up that vigour of soul which should be spent in divine things; divert us from duty, distract us in duty, and do us most mischief of all afterwards; quenching the sparks of good affections, and bursting the cords of good resolutions: those that are careful and cumbered about many things, commonly neglect the one thing needful.

(2.) The deceitfulness of riches. Those that by their care and industry have raised estates, and so the danger that ariseth from care seems to be over, and they continue hearers of the word, yet are still in a snare, Ser. v. 4, 5. It is hard for them to enter into the kingdom of heaven; they are apt to promise themselves that in riches that is not in them, to rely upon them, and to take an inordinate complacency in them; and this chokes the word as much as care did. Observe, It is not so much riches, as the deceitfulness of riches, that doth the mischief: now they cannot be said to be deceitful to us unless we put our confidence in them, and raise our expectations from them, and then it is that they choke the good seed.

4. The good ground, ver. 18. Others fell into good ground, and it is pity but that good seed should always meet with good soil, and then there is no loss; such are good hearers of the word, ver. 23. Note, though there are many that receive the grace of God, and the word of his grace in vain, yet God hath a remnant by whom it is received to good purpose; for God's word shall not return empty, Isa. lv. 10, 11.

Now that which differentiated this good ground from the rest was, in one word, fruitfulness. By this true Christians are distinguished from hypocrites, that they bring forth the fruits of righteousness; so shall ye be my disciples, John xv. 8. He doth not say, that this good ground has no stones in it or no thorns; but there were none that prevailed to hinder its fruitfulness: Saints in this world are not perfectly free from the remains of sin, but happily freed from the reign of it.

The hearers represented by the good ground are,

1. Intelligent hearers; they hear the word and understand it; they understand not only the sense and meaning of the words, but their own concern in them; they understand it as a man of business understands his business. God in his word deals with men as men, in a rational way and gains possession of the will and affections by opening the understanding; whereas Satan, who is a thief and a robber, comes not in by that door, but climbeth up another way.

2. Fruitful hearers, which is an evidence of their good understanding, which also beareth fruit. Fruit is to every seed its own body a substantial product in the heart and life, agreeable to the seed of the word received. We then bear fruit when we practise according to the word; when the temper of our minds and the tenor of our lives, are conformable to the gospel we have received, and we do as we are taught.

3. Not all alike fruitful; some an hundred-fold, some sixty, some thirty. Note, Among fruitful Christians, some are more fruitful than others: where there is true grace, yet there are degrees of it; some are of greater attainments in knowledge and holiness than others; all Christ's scholars are not in the same form. We should aim at the highest degree to bring forth an hundred-fold, as Isaac's ground did, Gen. xxvi. 13. abounding in the work of the Lord, John xv. 8. but if the ground be good, and the fruit right, the heart honest, and the life of a piece with it, those that bring forth but thirty-fold shall be graciously accepted of God, and it will be fruit abounding to their account, for we are under grace, and not under the law.

Lastly, He closed the parable with a solemn call to attention, ver. 9. Who hath ears to hear, let him hear. Note, The sense of hearing cannot be better employed than in hearing the word of God. Some are for hearing sweet melody, their ears are only the daughters of music, Ecc. xii. 4. there is no melody like that of the word of God. Others are for hearing new things, Acts vii. 21. no news like that.

24. ¶ Another parable put he forth unto them, saying, The kingdom of heaven is likened unto a man which sowed good seed in his field: 25. But while men slept, his enemy came and sowed tares among the wheat, and went his way. 26. But when the blade was sprung up and brought forth fruit, then appeared the tares also. 27. So the servants of the householder came and said unto him, Sir, Didst not thou sow good seed in thy field? from whence then hath it tares? 28. He said unto them, An enemy hath done this. The servants said unto him, Wilt thou then that we go, and gather them up? 29. But he said, Nay; lest while ye gather up the tares, ye root up also the wheat with them. 30. Let both grow together until the harvest: and in the time of harvest I will say to the reapers, Gather ye together first the tares, and bind them in bundles to burn them: but gather the wheat into my barn. 31. ¶ Another parable put he forth unto them, saying, The kingdom of heaven is like to a grain of mustard seed, which a man took and sowed in his field. 32. Which indeed is the least of all seeds: but when it is grown, it is the greatest among herbs, and becometh a tree: so that the birds of the air come and lodge in the branches thereof. 33. ¶ Another parable spake he unto them, The kingdom of heaven is like unto leaven, which a woman took and hid in three measures of meal, till the whole was leavened. 34. All these things spake Jesus unto the multitude in parables, and without a parable spake he not unto them: 25. That it might be fulfilled which was spoken by the prophet, saying, I will open my mouth in parables, I will utter things which have been kept secret from the foundation of the world. 36. Then Jesus sent the multitude away, and went into the house: and his disciples came unto him, saying, Declare unto us the parable of the tares of the field. 37. He answered and said unto them, He that soweth the good seed, is the Son of man: 38. The field is the world: the good seed are the children of the kingdom: but the tares are the children of the wicked one: 39. The enemy that sowed them is the devil: the harvest is the end of the world: and the reapers doubt the best knowledge: A principle of grace in the heart is that which makes men of quick understanding in the fear of the Lord, and in the faith of Christ, and so in the meaning of parables; and for want of that Nicodemus, a master in Israel, talked of a new birth as a blind man of colours.

3. That there are those to whom this knowledge is not given, and a man can receive nothing unless it be given him from above, John iii. 27. and be it remembered, that God is debtor to no man; his grace is his own, he gives or withholds it at pleasure, Rom. xi. 35. the difference must be resolved into God's sovereignty, as before, Matt. xi. 25, 26.

2. This reason is further illustrated by the rule God observes in dispensing his gift; he bestows them on those that improve them, but takes them away from those that bury them. It is a rule among men, they will rather intrust their money with those that have increased their estates by their industry, than with those who have diminished them by their slothfulness.

1. Here is a promise to him that hath, that hath true grace, pursuant to the election of grace, that hath and useth what he hath, he shall have more abundance: God's favours are earnest of further favours: where he lays the foundation he will build upon it. Christ's disciples used the knowledge they now had, and they had more abundance at the pouring out of the Spirit, Acts ii. They that have the truth of grace, shall have the increase of grace, even to an abundance in glory, Prov. iv. 18. Joseph, he will add, Gen. xxx. 24.

2. Here is a threatening to him that hath not, that has no desire of grace, that makes no right use of the gifts and graces he has, has no root, no solid principle; that hath, but useth not what he has, from him shall be taken away that which he has or seems to have: His leaves shall wither, his gifts decay, the means of grace he has, and makes no use of, shall be taken from him; God will call in his talents out of their hands, that are likely to become bankrupts quickly.

3. This reason is particularly explained, with reference to the two sorts of people Christ had to do with.

1. Some were willingly ignorant, and such were amused by the parables, ver. 13. because they seeing, see not. They had shut their eyes against the clear light of Christ's plainer preaching, and therefore were now left in the dark. Seeing Christ's person, they see not his glory, see no difference between him and another man; seeing his miracles, and hearing his preaching, they see not, they hear not with any concern or application, they understand neither. Note, 1. There are many that see the gospel-light, and hear the gospel sound, but it never reacheth their hearts, nor has it any place in them. 2. It is just with God to take away the light from those that shut their eyes against it; that such as will be ignorant may be so. And God's dealing thus with them magnifies his distinguishing grace to his disciples.

Now in this the scriptures would be fulfilled, ver. 14, 15. It is quoted from Isa. vi. 9, 10. The evangelical prophet that spoke most plainly of gospel grace, foretold the contempt of it, and the consequences of that contempt. It is referred to no less than six times in the New Testament, which intimates, that in gospel times spiritual judgments would be most common, which makes least noise, but are most dreadful. That which was spoken of the sinners in Isaiah's time, was fulfilled in those in Christ's time; and it is still in the fulfilling every day; for while the wicked heart of man keeps up the same sin, the righteous hand of God inflicts the same punishment. Here is,

1. A description of sinners wilful blindness and hardness which is their sin. This people's hearts is waxed gross, it is fatened, so the word is; which notes both sensuality and senselessness, Psalm cxix. 70. secure under the word and rod of God, and scornful as Jesurun, that waxed fat and kicked, Deut. xxxii. 15. And when the heart is thus heavy, no wonder that the ears are dull of hearing; the whispers of the Spirit they hear not at all, the loud calls of the word, though the word be nigh them, they regard not, nor are at all affected with it: They stop their ears, Psalm lviii. 4, 5. And because they are resolved to be ignorant they shut both the learning senses, for their eyes also they have closed, resolved they would not see light come into the world when the sun of righteousness arose, but they shut their windows, because they loved darkness rather than light, John iii. 19. 2 Pet. iii. 5.

2. A description of that judicial blindness, which is the just punishment of this. By hearing, ye shall hear, and shall not understand, i. e. what means of grace you have shall be to no purpose to you; though in mercy to others they are continued, yet in judgment to you the blessing upon them is denied. The saddest condition a man can be in on this side hell, is to sit under the most lively ordinances with a dead, stupid, untouched heart. To hear God's word, and see his providences, and yet not to understand and perceive his will, either in the one or in the other, is the greatest sin and the greatest judgments that can be. Observe, It is God's work to give an understanding heart, and he often in a way of righteous judgments denies it to those to whom he hath given the hearing ear, and the seeing eye in vain. Thus doth God choose sinners delusions, Isa. lxvi. 4. and bind them over to the greatest ruin, by giving them up to their own hearts lusts, Psalm lxxxi. 11, 12. Let them alone, Hosea iv. 17. My Spirit shall not always strive, Gen. vi. 3.

3. The woeful effect and consequence of this; lest at any time they should see. They will not see because they will not turn; and God saith, they shall not see, because they shall not turn; lest they should be converted, and I should heal them.

Note, 1. That seeing, hearing and understanding are necessary to conversion; for God in working grace deals with men as men, as rational agents; he draws with the cords of a man, changeth the heart by opening the eyes, and turns first from the power of Satan unto God; by turning first from darkness to light, Acts xxvi. 18. 2. All those that are truly converted to God, shall certainly be healed by him. If they be converted, I shall heal them, I shall save them: so that if sinners perish, it is not long of God but of themselves; they foolishly expected to be healed, without being converted. 3. It is just with God to deny his grace to those that have long and often refused the proposals of it and resisted the power of it. Pharaoh for a good while hardened his own heart, Exod. viii. 15—32. and afterwards God hardened it, chap. ix. 12—x. 20. Let us therefore fear, lest by sinning against the divine grace we sin it away.

2. Others were effectually called to be the disciples of Christ, and were truly desirous to be taught of him; and they were instructed and made to improve greatly in knowledge by these parables, especially when they were expounded; and by them the things of God were made more plain and easy, more intelligible and familiar, and more apt to be remembered, ver. 16, 17. Your eyes see, your ears hear. They saw the glory of God in Christ's person, they heard the mind of God in Christ's doctrine; they saw much, and were desirous to see more, and thereby were prepared to receive further instruction; they had opportunity for it, by being constant attendants on Christ, and they should have it from day to day, and grace with it. Now this Christ speaks of,

1. As a blessing: Blessed are your eyes, they see, and your ears for they hear, i. e. it is your happiness; and it is a happiness for which you are indebted to the peculiar favour and blessing of God: it is a promised blessing, that in the days of the Messiah, the eyes of them that see shall not be dim, Isa. xxxii.

3. The eyes of the meanest believer that knows experimentally the grace of Christ, are more blessed than those of the greatest scholars, the greatest masters in experimental philosophy, that are strangers to God, who, like the other gods they serve, have eyes, and see not. Blessed are your eyes. Note, True blessedness is entailed upon the right understanding and due improvement of the mysteries of the kingdom of God. The hearing ear and the seeing eye are God's work in those that are sanctified, they are the work of his grace, Prov. xx. 12. and they are a blessed work, which shall be fulfilled with power, when those that now see through a glass darkly, shall see face to face. It was to illustrate this blessedness that Christ said so much of the misery of those that are left in ignorance, they have eyes, and see not; but blessed are your eyes. Note, The knowledge of Christ is a distinguishing favour to those that have it, and upon that account the more obliging: See John xiv. 22. The apostles were to teach others, and therefore were themselves blessed with the clearest discoveries of divine truth: The watchmen shall see eye to eye, Isa. lii. 8.

2. As a transcendent blessing, desired by but not granted to many prophets and righteous men, ver. 17. The Old Testament saints that had some glimpses, some glimmerings of gospel light, coveted earnestly further discoveries. They had the types, shadows and prophecies of these things, but longed to see the substance, that glorious end of those things which they could not steadfastly look unto; that glorious inside of those things which they could not look into. They desired to see the great salvation, the consolation of Israel, but did not see it, because the fulness of time was not yet come. Note, 1. Those that know something of Christ cannot but covet to know more. 2. The discoveries of divine grace are made, even to prophets and righteous men, but according to the dispensation they are under. Though they were the favourites of heaven, with whom God's secret was, yet they have not seen the things which they desired to see, because God had determined not to bring them to light yet; and his favours shall not anticipate his counsels. There was then, as there is still, a glory to be revealed; something in reserve, that they without us should not be made perfect, Heb. xi. 40. 3. For the exciting of our thankfulness, and the quickening of our diligence, it is good for us to consider what means we enjoy, and what discoveries are made to us now under the gospel, above what they had and enjoyed that lived under the Old Testament dispensation, especially in the revelation of the atonement for sin; see what are the advantages of the New Testament above the Old, 2 Cor. iii. 7, &c. Heb. xii. 18. And see that our improvements be proportionable to our advantages.

Secondly, We have here in these verses one of the parables which our Saviour put forth; it is that of the sower and the seed: both the parable itself, and the reddition of it. Christ's parables are borrowed from common ordinary things, not from any philosophical notions or speculations, or the unusual phenomena of nature, though applicable enough to the matter in hand, but from the most obvious things that are of every day's observation, and come within reach of the meanest capacity; many of them are fetched from the husbandman's calling, as this of the sower and that of the tares. Christ chose to do thus, 1. That spiritual things might hereby be made more plain, and by familiar similitudes might be made the more easy to slide into our understandings. 2. That common actions might hereby be spiritualized, and we might take occasion from those things which fall so often under our view, to meditate with delight on the things of God; and thus when our hands are busiest about the world, we may not only notwithstanding that, but even with the help of that, be led to have our hearts in heaven. Thus the word of God shall talk with us, talk familiarly with us, Prov. vi. 22.

The parable of the sower is plain enough, ver. 3—9. The exposition of it we have from Christ himself, who knew best what was his own meaning. The disciples, when they asked, Why speakest thou to them in parables? ver. 10. intimated a desire to have the parable explained for the sake of the people; nor was it any disparagement to their own knowledge to desire it for themselves. Our Lord Jesus kindly took the hint, and gave the sense, and caused them to understand the parable, directing his discourse to his disciples, but in the hearing of the multitude, for he did not dismiss them till ver. 36: Hear ye therefore the parable of the sower, ver. 18. you have heard it, but let us go over it again. Note, It is of good use, and would contribute much to our understanding of the word and profiting by it, to hear over again what we have heard, Phil. iii. 18. you have heard it, but hear the interpretation of it. Note, Then only we hear the word aright and to good purpose, when we understand what we hear; it is no hearing at all if it be not with understanding, Neh. viii. 2. It is God's grace indeed that gives the understanding, but it is our duty to give our minds to understand.

Let us therefore compare the parable and the exposition.

1. The seed sown is the word of God, here called the word of the kingdom, ver. 19. i. e. the kingdom of heaven, that is the kingdom; the kingdoms of the world compared with that are not to be called kingdoms. The gospel comes from that kingdom, and conduces to that kingdom; the word of the gospel is the word of the kingdom; it is the word of the King, and where that is there is power; it is a law, by which we must be ruled and governed. This word is the seed sown, which seems a dead dry thing, but all the product is virtually in it. It is incorruptible seed, 1 Pet. i. 23. it is the gospel that brings forth fruit in souls, Col. i. 5, 6.

2. The sower that scatters the seed is our Lord Jesus Christ; either by himself or by his ministers; see ver. 37. The people are God's husbandry, his tillage, so the word is; and ministers are labourers together with God, 1 Cor. iii. 9. Preaching to a multitude is sowing the corn, we know no where it must light; only see that it be good, that it be clean, and be sure to give it seed enough. The sowing of the word is the sowing of a people for God's field, the corn of his floor, Isa. xxi. 10.

3. The ground in which this seed is sown is the hearts of the children of men, which are differently qualified and disposed; and accordingly the success of the word is different. Note, Man's heart is like soil, capable of improvement, of bearing good fruit; it is a pity it should lie fallow or be like the field of the slothful, Prov. xxiv. 30. The soul is the proper place for the word of God to dwell and work and rule in; its operation is upon conscience, it is to light that candle of the Lord. Now according as we are so the word is to us; Recipitur ut modum recipientis. As it is with the earth; some sort of ground, take never so much pains with it, and throw never so good seed into it, yet it brings forth no fruit to any purpose; while the good soil brings forth plentifully: So it is with the hearts of men, whose different characters are here represented by four sorts of ground, of which three are bad, and but one good. Note, The number of fruitless hearers is very great, even of those that heard Christ himself preach. If no has believed our report? It is a melancholy prospect which this parable gives us of the congregations of those that hear the gospel preached, that scarce one in four brings forth fruit to perfection. Many are called with the common call, but in few is the eternal choice evidenced by the efficacy of that call, Matt. xx. 16.

Now observe the characters of these four sorts of ground.

1. The highway ground, ver. 4—19. They had paths through their corn corn-fields, Matt. xii. 1. and the seed that fell on them never entered, and so the birds picked it up. The place where Christ's hearers now stood, represented the characters of most of them, the sand on the sea-shore, which was to the seed like the highway ground.

Observe, 1. What kind of hearers are compared to the highway ground, such as hear the word, and understand it not; and it is their own fault that they do not. They take no heed to it, take no hold of it: they do not come with any design to get good, as the highway was never intended to be sown. They come before God as his people come, and sit before him as his people sit; but it is merely for fashion-sake, to see and be seen; they mind not what is said, it comes in at one ear and goes out at the other, and makes no impression.

How they come to be unprofitable hearers. The wicked one, that is the devil, cometh and catcheth away that which was sown. Such mindless, careless, trifling hearers are an easy prey to Satan; who, as he is the great murderer of souls, so he is the great thief of sermons, and will be sure to rob us of the word if we take not care to keep it; as the birds pick up the seed that falls on the ground, that is neither ploughed before nor harrowed after. If we break not up the fallow ground by preparing our hearts for the word, and humbling them to it, and engaging our own attention; and if we cover not the seed afterwards by meditation and prayer, if we give not a more earnest heed to the things which we have heard, we are as the highway ground. Note, The devil is a sworn enemy to our profiting by the word of God; and none do more befriended his design than heedless hearers, who are thinking of something else when they should be thinking of the things that belong to their peace.

2. The stony ground. Some fell upon stony places, ver. 16, 7. which represents the case of hearers that go further than the former, who receive some good impressions of the word, but they are not lasting, ver. 20, 21. Note, It is possible we may be a great deal better than some others, and yet not be so good as we should be; may go beyond our neighbours, and yet come short of heaven. Now observe concerning these hearers that are represented by the stony ground.

1. How far they went. 1. They hear the word; they turn neither their backs upon it nor a deaf ear to it. Note, Hearing the word, though never so frequently, never so gravely, if we rest in that, will never bring us to heaven. 2. They are quick in hearing, swift to hear, he anon receiveth it, ἐνδυσ, he is ready to receive it, forthwith it sprung up, ver. 5. is sooner appeared above ground than that which was sown in the good soil. Note, Hypocrites often get the start of true Christians in the shews of profession, and are often too hot to hold. He receiveth it straightway, without trying it; swallows it without chewing, and then there can never be a good digestion. Those are most likely to hold fast that which is good, that prove all things, 1 Thess. v. 21. 3. They receive it with joy. Note, There are many that are very glad to hear a good sermon, that yet do not profit by it; many may be pleased with the word, and yet not changed and ruled by it; the heart may melt under the word, and yet not be melted down by the word, much less into it, as into a mould. Many taste the good word of God, Heb. vi. 5. And say they find sweetness in it, but some beloved lust is rolled under the tongue which it would not agree with, and so they spit it out again. 4. They endure for a while, like a violent motion which continues as long as the impression of the force remains, but ceaseth when that hath spent itself. Note, Many endure for a while, that do not endure to the end, and so come short of the happiness which is promised to them only that persevere, Matt. x. 22. they did run well, but something hindered them, Gal. v. 7.

2. How they fell away, so that no fruit was brought to perfection; no more than the corn that having no depth of earth from which to draw moisture, is scorched and withered by the heat of the sun. And the reason is,

1. They have no root in themselves, no settled fixed principles in their judgments. No firm resolution in their wills, nor any rooted habits in their affections; nothing firm that will be either the sap or the strength of their profession. Note, 1. It is possible there may be the green blade of a profession, where yet there is not the root of grace; hardness prevails in the heart, and what there is of soil and softness is only in the surface, inwardly they are no more affected than a stone; they have no root, i. e. they are not by faith united to Christ who is our root; they derive not from him, they depend not on him. 2. Where there is not a principle, though there be a profession, we cannot expect perseverance. Those that have no root will endure but a while. A ship without ballast, though she may at first outvail the laden vessel, yet will certainly fail in stress of weather, and never make her port.

2. Times of trial come, and then they come to nothing. When tribulation and persecution arise because of the word, he is offended: it is a stumblingblock in his way which he cannot get over, and so he flies off, and this is all that his profession comes to. Note, 1. After a fair gale of opportunity usually follows a storm of persecution, to try who have received the word in sincerity, and who have not. When the word of Christ's kingdom comes to be the word of Christ's patience, Rev. iii. 10. then is the trial who keeps it and who doth not, Rev. i. 9. It is wisdom to prepare for such a day. 2. When trying times come, those that have no root are soon offended; they quarrel with their profession, and then quit it; first find fault with it and then throw it off. Hence we read of the offence of the cross, Gal. v. 11. Observe, Persecution is represented in the parable by the scorching sun, ver. 6. the same sun which warms and cherishes that which was well rooted, withers and burns up that which wanted root. As the word of Christ, so the cross of Christ, is to some a favour of life unto life, to others a favour of death unto death: The same tribulation, which drives some to apostasy and ruin, works for others a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory. Trials which shake some, confirm others, Phil. i. 12. Observe, how soon they fall away, by and by, as soon rotten as they were ripe; a profession taken up without consideration is commonly let fall without it: "Light come, light go."

3. The thorny ground. Some fell among thorns, which are a good guard to the corn when they are in the hedges, but a bad inmate when they are in the field, and the thorns sprung up; which intimates, that they did not appear or but little when the corn was sown, but afterwards they proved choking to it, ver. 7. This went further than the former, for it had root; and it represents the condition of those that do not quite cast off their profession, and yet come short of any saving benefit by it; the good they gain by the word, being insensibly overcome and overborne by the things of this world. Prosperity destroys the word in the heart, as much as persecution doth, and more dangerously because more silently: The stones spoiled the root, the thorns spoil the fruit.

Now what are these choking thorns?

(1.) The cares of this world. Care for another world would quicken the springing of this seed, but care for this world chokes it. Worldly cares are fitly compared to thorns, for they came in with sin and are fruit of the curse; they are good in their place to stop a gap, but a man must be well armed that deals too much in them, 2 Sam. xxiii. 6, 7. they are intangling, vexing, scratching, and their end is to be burned, Heb. vi. 8. These thorns

choke the good seed. Note, Worldly cares are great hindrances to our profiting by the word of God, and our proficiency in religion. They eat up that rigour of soul which should be spent in divine things; divert us from duty, distract us in duty, and do us most mischief of all afterwards; quenching the sparks of good affections, and bursting the cords of good resolutions: those that are careful and cumbered about many things, commonly neglect the one thing needful.

(2.) The deceitfulness of riches. Those that by their care and industry have raised estates, and so the danger that ariseth from care seems to be over, and they continue hearers of the word, yet are still in a snare, Jer. v. 4, 5. It is hard for them to enter into the kingdom of heaven; they are apt to promise themselves that in riches that is not in them, to rely upon them, and to take an inordinate complacency in them; and this chokes the word as much as care did. Observe, It is not so much riches, as the deceitfulness of riches, that doth the mischief: now they cannot be said to be deceitful to us unless we put our confidence in them, and raise our expectations from them, and then it is that they choke the good seed.

4. The good ground, ver. 18. Others fell into good ground, and it is pity but that good seed should always meet with good soil, and then there is no loss; such are good hearers of the word, ver. 23. Note, though there are many that receive the grace of God, and the word of his grace in vain, yet God hath a remnant by whom it is received to good purpose; for God's word shall not return empty, Isa. l. 10, 11.

Now that which differed this good ground from the rest was, in one word, fruitfulness. By this true Christians are distinguished from hypocrites, that they bring forth the fruits of righteousness; so shall ye be my disciples, John xv. 8. He doth not say, that this good ground has no stones in it or no thorns; but there were none that prevailed to hinder its fruitfulness: Saints in this world are not perfectly free from the remains of sin, but happily freed from the reign of it.

The hearers represented by the good ground are,

1. Intelligent hearers; they hear the word and understand it; they understand not only the sense and meaning of the words, but their own concern in them; they understand it as a man of business understands his business. God in his word deals with men as men, in a rational way and gains possession of the will and affections by opening the understanding; whereas Satan, who is a thief and a robber, comes not in by that door, but climbeth up another way.

2. Fruitful hearers, which is an evidence of their good understanding, which also beareth fruit. Fruit is to every seed its own body a substantial product in the heart and life, agreeable to the seed of the word received. We then bear fruit when we practise according to the word; when the temper of our minds and the tenor of our lives, are conformable to the gospel we have received, and we do as we are taught.

3. Not all alike fruitful; some an hundred-fold, some sixty, some thirty. Note, Among fruitful Christians, some are more fruitful than others: where there is true grace, yet there are degrees of it; some are of greater attainments in knowledge and holiness than others; all Christ's scholars are not in the same form. We should aim at the highest degree to bring forth an hundred-fold, as Isaac's ground did, Gen. xxvi. 13. abounding in the work of the Lord, John xv. 8. but if the ground be good, and the fruit right, the heart honest, and the life of apiece with it, those that bring forth but thirty-fold shall be graciously accepted of God, and it will be fruit abounding to their account, for we are under grace, and not under the law.

Lastly, He closed the parable with a solemn call to attention, ver. 9. Who hath ears to hear, let him hear. Note, The sense of hearing cannot be better employed than in hearing the word of God. Some are for hearing sweet melody, their ears are only the daughters of music, Ecc. xii. 4. there is no melody like that of the word of God. Others are for hearing new things, Acts vii. 21. no news like that.

24. ¶ Another parable put he forth unto them, saying, The kingdom of heaven is likened unto a man which sowed good seed in his field: 25. But while men slept, his enemy came and sowed tares among the wheat, and went his way. 26. But when the blade was sprung up and brought forth fruit, then appeared the tares also. 27. So the servants of the householder came and said unto him, Sir, Didst not thou sow good seed in thy field? from whence then hath it tares? 28. He said unto them, An enemy hath done this. The servants said unto him, Wilt thou then that we go, and gather them up? 29. But he said, Nay; lest while ye gather up the tares, ye root up also the wheat with them. 30. Let both grow together until the harvest: and in the time of harvest I will say to the reapers, Gather ye together first the tares, and bind them in bundles to burn them: but gather the wheat into my barn. 31. ¶ Another parable put he forth unto them, saying, The kingdom of heaven is like to a grain of mustard seed, which a man took and sowed in his field. 32. Which indeed is the least of all seeds: but when it is grown, it is the greatest among herbs, and becometh a tree: so that the birds of the air come and lodge in the branches thereof. 33. ¶ Another parable spake he unto them, The kingdom of heaven is like unto leaven, which a woman took and hid in three measures of meal, till the whole was leavened. 34. All these things spake Jesus unto the multitude in parables, and without a parable spake he not unto them: 25. That it might be fulfilled which was spoken by the prophet, saying, I will open my mouth in parables, I will utter things which have been kept secret from the foundation of the world. 36. Then Jesus sent the multitude away, and went into the house: and his disciples came unto him, saying, Declare unto us the parable of the tares of the field. 37. He answered and said unto them, He that soweth the good seed, is the Son of man: 38. The field is the world: the good seed are the children of the kingdom: but the tares are the children of the wicked one: 39. The enemy that sowed them is the devil: the harvest is the end of the world: and the reapers reapers are the angels. 40. As therefore the tares are gathered and burnt in the fire; so shall it be in the end of this world. 41. The Son of man shall send forth his angels, and they shall gather out of his kingdom all things that offend, and them which do iniquity; 42. And shall cast them into a furnace of fire: there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth. 43. Then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father. Who hath ears to hear, let him hear.

In these verses we have,

1. Another reason given why Christ preached by parables, ver. 34, 35. All these things he spoke in parables, because the time was not yet come for the more clear and plain discoveries of the mysteries of the kingdom. Christ, to keep the people attending and expecting, preached in parables, and without a parable spake he not unto them, viz. at this time and in this sermon. Note, Christ tries all ways and methods to do good to the souls of men, and to make impressions upon them; if men will not be instructed and influenced by plain preaching, he will try them with parables; and the reason here given is, that the scripture might be fulfilled. The passage here quoted for it, is part of the preface to that historical psalm, Psal. lxxviii. 2. I will open my mouth in a parable. What the Psalmist David or Asaph, smith there of his narrative, is accommodated to Christ's sermons; and that great precedent would serve to vindicate this way of preaching from the offence which some took at it. Here is, 1. The matter of Christ's preaching; he preached things which had been kept secret from the foundation of the world. The mystery of the gospel had been hid in God, i. e. in his counsels and decrees, from the beginning of the world, Eph. iii. 9. compare Rom. xvi. 25. 1 Cor. ii. 7. Coloss. i. 26. If we delight in the records of ancient things, and in the revelation of secret things, how welcome should the gospel be to us, which hath in it such antiquity and such mystery! It was from the foundation of the world wrapt up in types and shadows, which are now done away; and those secret things are now become such things revealed as belong to us and to our children, Deut. xxix. 29. 2. The manner of Christ's preaching; he preached by parables, wise sayings, but figurative, and which help to engage attention and diligent search. Solomon's sententious oracles, which are full of similitudes, are called Proverbs or parables, it is the same word; but in this, as in other things, Behold, a greater than Solomon is here, in whom are hid treasures of wisdom.

2. The parable of the tares, and the exposition of it; they must be taken together, for the exposition explains the parable, and the parable illustrates the exposition.

Observe, 1. The disciples request to their Master to have this parable expounded to them, ver. 36. Jesus sent the multitude away, and it is to be feared many of them went away no wiser than they came, they had heard a sound of words and that was all. It is sad to think how many go away from sermons with the word of grace in their ears, but not the work of grace in their hearts. Christ went into the house, not so much for his own repose, as for particular converse with his disciples, whose instruction he chiefly intended in all his preaching. He was ready to do good in all places, the disciples laid hold on the opportunity, and they came to him. Note, Those that would be wise for every thing else, must be wise to discern and improve their opportunities, especially of converse with Christ, of converse with him alone, in secret meditation and prayer. It is very good when we return from the solemn assembly, to talk over what we have heard there, and by familiar discourse to help one another to understand and remember it, and to be affected with it; for we lose the benefit of many a sermon by vain and unprofitable discourse after it. See Luke xxiv. 32. Deut. vi. 6, 7. It is especially good, if it may be, to ask the ministers of the word, for their lips should keep knowledge, Mal. ii. 7. Private conference would contribute much to our profiting by public preaching. Nathan's Thou art the man, was it that touched David to the heart.

The disciples request to their Master was, Declare unto us the parable of the tares. This implied an acknowledgment of their ignorance, which they were not ashamed to make. It is probable they did apprehend the general scope of the parable, but they desired to understand it more particularly and to be assured that they took it right. Note, Those are rightly disposed for Christ's teaching, that are sensible of their ignorance, and sincerely desirous to be taught. He will teach the humble, Psal. cxv. 8, 9. but will for this be inquired of. If any man lack instruction, let him ask it of God. Christ had expounded the foregoing parable unasked, but for the exposition of this they ask him. Note, The mercies we have received must be improved, both for direction what to pray for, and for our encouragement in prayer. The first light and the first grace, are given in a preventing way, further degrees of both which must be daily prayed for.

2. The exposition Christ gave of the parable, in answer to their request; so ready is Christ to answer such desires of his disciples. Now the drift of the parable is, to represent to us the present and future state of the kingdom of heaven, the gospel church; Christ's care of it, the devil's enmity against it, the mixture that there is in it of good and bad in this world, and the separation between them in the other world. Note, The visible church is the kingdom of heaven; though there be many hypocrites in it, Christ rules in it as a king; and there is a remnant in it, that are the subjects and heirs of heaven, from whom, as the better part, it is denominated: The church is the kingdom of heaven upon earth.

Let us go over the particulars of the reddition of the parable.

First, He that soweth the good seed is the Son of Man. Jesus Christ is the Lord of the field, the Lord of the harvest, the sower of good seed. When he ascended on high, he gave gifts to the world, not only good ministers but other good men. Note, Whatever good seed there is in the world, it all comes from the hand of Christ, and is of his sowing: Truths preached, graces planted, souls sanctified, are good seed, and all owing to Christ. Ministers are instruments in Christ's hand to sow good seed; are employed by him and under him, and the success of their labours depends purely upon his blessing; so that it may well be said, it is Christ and no other that sows the good seed; he is the Son of Man, one of us, that his terror might not make us afraid; the Son of Man, i. e. the Mediator, and that has authority.

Secondly, The field is the world; the world of mankind, a large field, capable of bringing forth good fruit, the more is it to be lamented that it brings forth so much bad fruit: The world here is the visible church; scattered all the world over, not confined to one nation. Observe, In the parable it is called his field; the world is Christ's field, for all things are delivered unto him of the Father; whatever power and interest the devil has in the world, it is usurped and unjust; when Christ comes to take possession he comes whose right it is; it is his field, and because it is his, he took care to sow it with good seed;

Thirdly, The good seed are the children of the kingdom, i. e. true saints. They are, 1. The children of the kingdom, not in profession only, as the Jews were, Matt. viii. 12. but in sincerity; Jews inwardly, Israelites indeed, incorporated in faith and obedience to Jesus Christ, the great King of the church. 2. They are the good seed, precious as seed, (Psal. cxxvi. 6.) The seed is the substance of the field; so the holy seed, Isa. vi. 13. The seed is scattered, so are the saints dispersed, here one and there another, though in some places thicker sown than in others. The seed is that from which fruit is expected, what fruit of honour and service God has from this world he has it from the saints; whom he hath sowed unto himself in the earth, Hos. ii. 23.

Fourthly, The tares are the children of the wicked one. Here is the character of sinners, hypocrites, and all profane and wicked people. They are the children of the devil, as a wicked one. Though they do not own his name, yet they bear his image, do his lusts, and from him they have their education; he rules over them, he works in them, Eph. ii. 2. John viii. 44. 2. They are tares in the field of this world; they do no good, they do no hurt; unprofitable in themselves, and hurtful to the good seed, both by temptation and persecution: they are weeds in the garden, have the same rain and sunshine and soil with the good plants, but are good for nothing; the tares are among the wheat. Note, God had so ordered it, that good and bad should be mixed together in this world that the good may be exercised, the bad left inexcusable, and a difference made between earth and heaven.

Fifthly, The enemy that sowed the tares is the devil; a sworn enemy to Christ and all that is good, to the glory of the good God, and the comfort and happiness of all good men. He is an enemy to the field of the world; which he endeavours to make his own, by sowing his tares in it. Ever since he became a wicked Spirit himself he has been industrious to promote wickedness, and has made it his business, and therein to counterwork Christ.

Now concerning the sowing of the tares, observe in the parable,

1. That they were sown while men slept. Magistrates slept, that by their power, ministers slept, that by their preaching, should have prevented this mischief. Note, Satan watched all opportunities, and lays hold on all advantages to propagate vice and profaneness. The prejudice he doth to particular persons is when reason and conscience sleep, when they are off their guard; we have therefore need to be sober and vigilant. It was in the night, for that is the sleeping time. Note, Satan rules in the darkness of this world, that gives him an opportunity to sow tares, Psa. civ. 20. It was while men slept; and there is no remedy but men must have some sleeping time. Note, It is as impossible for us to prevent hypocrites being in the church, as it is for the husbandman when he is asleep to hinder an enemy from spoiling his field.

2. The enemy, when he had sown the tares went his way, ver. 25. that it might not be known who did it. Note, When Satan is doing the greatest mischief he studies most to conceal himself; for his design is in danger of being spoiled if he be seen in it; and therefore when he comes to sow tares, he transforms himself into an angel of light, 2 Cor. xi. 13, 14. He went his way, as if he had done no harm; such is the way of the adulterous woman, Prov. xxx. 20. Observe, Such is the proneness of fallen man to sin, that if the enemy sow the tares, he may even go his way, they will spring up of themselves and do hurt; whereas, when good seed is sown it must be tended; watered and fenced, or it will come to nothing.

3. The tares appeared not till the blade sprung up and brought forth fruit, ver. 26. There is a great deal of secret wickedness in the hearts of men, which is long hid under the cloak of a plausible profession, but breaks out at last. As the good seed, so the tares lie a great while under the clods, and at first springing up it is hard to distinguish them; but when a trying time comes, when fruit is to be brought forth, when good is to be done that has difficulty and hazard attending it, then you will return and discern between the sincere and the hypocrite; then you may say, this is wheat, and that is tares.

The servants, when they were aware of it, complained to their Master, ver. 27. Sir, didst not thou sow good seed in thy field? No doubt he did; whatever is amiss in the church, we are sure it is not long of Christ: considering the seed which Christ sows, we may well ask, with wonder, Whence should these tares come? Note, The rise of errors, the breaking out of scandals, and the growth of profaneness, are matter of great grief to all the servants of Christ; especially to his faithful ministers, who are directed to complain of it to him whose the field is. It is sad to see such tares, such weeds in the garden of the Lord; to see the good soil wasted, the good seed choked, and such a reflection cast on the name and honour of Christ, as if his field were no better than the field of the slothful, all grown over with thorns.

5. The master was soon aware whence it was, ver. 28. An enemy has done this. He doth not lay the blame upon the servants; they could not help it, but had done what was in their power to prevent it. Note, The ministers of Christ, that are faithful and diligent, shall not be judged of Christ, and therefore should not be reproached by men for the mixture of bad with good, hypocrites with the sincere, in the field of the church. It must needs be that such offences will come, and they shall not be laid to our charge if we do our duty, though it have not the desired success. Though they sleep, if they do not love sleep, though tares be sown, if they do not sow them nor water them, nor allow of them, the blame shall not lie at their door.

6. The servants were very forward to have these tares rooted up, Wilt thou that we go and do it presently. Note, The over-hasty, and inconsistent zeal of Christ's servants, before they have consulted with their master, is sometimes ready, with the hazard of the church, to root out all that they presume to be tares: Lord, wilt thou that we call for fire from heaven?

7. The master very wisely prevented this, ver. 29. Nay, lest while ye gather up the tares, ye root up also the wheat with them. Note, It is not possible for any man infallibly to distinguish between tares and wheat, but he may be mistaken; and therefore such is the wisdom and grace of Christ, that he will rather permit the tares, than any way endanger the wheat. It is certain, scandalous offenders are to be censured, and we are to withdraw from them; those that are openly the children of the wicked one are not to be admitted to special ordinances; yet, it is possible, there may be a discipline, either so mistaken in its rules, or so over-nice in the application of them, as may prove vexatious to many that are truly godly and conscientious. Great caution and moderation must be used in inflicting and continuing church censures, lest the wheat be trodden down, if not plucked up. The wisdom from above, as it is pure, so it is peaceable, and those that oppose themselves must not be cut off, but instructed, and with meekness, 2 Tim. ii. 25. The tares, if continued under the means of grace, may become good corn, therefore have patience with them.

Sixthly, The harvest is the end of the world, ver. 39. This world will have an end; though it continue long, it will not continue always; time will shortly be swallowed up in eternity. At the end of the world, there will be a great harvest day, a day of judgment; at harvest all is ripe and ready.

ready to be cut down, both good and bad are ripe at the great day, Rev. vi. 11. It is the harvest of the earth, Rev. xiv. 15. At harvest the reapers cut down all before them, not a field, not a corner left behind; so at the great day all must be judged, Rev. xx. 12, 13. God hath set a harvest, Ilos. vi. 11. and it shall not fail, Gen. viii. 22. At harvest every man reaps as he sowed, every man's ground, and seed, and skill, and industry, will be manifested: see Gal. vi. 7, 8. Then they who sowed precious seed, will come again with rejoicing, Psalm cxxvi. 5, 6. with the joy of the harvest, Isa. ix. 3. When the sluggard, who would not plough by reason of cold, shall beg and have nothing, Prov. xx. 4. shall cry, Lord, Lord, but in vain; when the harvest of those that sowed to the flesh, shall be a day of grief, and desperate sorrow, Isa. xvii. 11.

Seventhly, The reapers are the angels; they shall be employed in the great day in executing Christ's righteous sentences, both of approbation and condemnation, as ministers of his justice, Matt. xxv. 31. The angels are skilful, strong and swift, obedient servants to Christ; holy enemies to the wicked, and faithful friends to all the saints, and therefore fit to be thus employed: He that reapeth receiveth wages, and the angels will not be unpaid for their attendance; for he that soweth and he that reapeth, shall rejoice together, John. iv. 36. That is joy in heaven in the presence of the angels of God.

Eighthly, Hell-torments are the fire into which the tares shall then be cast, and in which they shall be burned. At the great day a distinction will be made, and with a vast difference; it will be a notable day indeed.

1. The tares will then be gathered out: The reapers (whose primary work it is to gather in the corn) shall be charged first to gather out the tares. Note, Though good and bad are together in this world undistinguished, yet at the great day they shall be parted; no tares shall then be among the wheat; no sinners among the saints: then you shall plainly discern between the righteous and the wicked, which here sometimes it is hard to do, Mal. iii. 18.—iv. 1. Christ will not bear always, Psalm l. 1. &c. They shall gather out of his kingdom all wicked things that offend, and all wicked persons that do iniquity: When he begins, he will make a full end. All those corrupt doctrines, worships, and practices which have offended, have been scandals to the church and stumbling blocks to men's consciences, shall be condemned by the righteous judge in that day, and consumed by the brightness of his coming; all the wood, hay, and stubble, 1 Cor. iii. 12. and then woe to them that do iniquity, that make a trade of it, and persist in it; not only those in the last age of Christ's kingdom upon earth, but those in every age. Perhaps here is an allusion to Zeph. i. 3. I will consume the stumbling-blocks with the wicked.

2. They will then be bound in bundles, ver. 30. Sinners of the same sort will be bundled together in the great day: A bundle of atheists, a bundle of epicures, a bundle of persecutors, and a great bundle of hypocrites. Those that have been associates in sin, will be so in shame and sorrow; and it will be an aggravation of their misery, as the society of glorified saints will add to their bliss. Let us pray as David, Lord, gather not my soul with sinners, Psalm xxvi. 9. but let it be bound in the bundle of life with the Lord our God, 1 Sam. xxv. 29.

3. They will be cast into a furnace of fire; such will be the end of wicked mischievous people, that are in the church as tares in the field, they are fit for nothing but fire; to it they shall go, it is the fittest place for them. Note, Hell is a furnace of fire, kindled by the wrath of God, and kept burning by the bundles of tares cast into it, who will be ever in the consuming, but never consumed. But he slides out of the metaphor into a description of those torments that are designed to be set forth by it: there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth; comfortless sorrow, and an incurable indignation at God, themselves and one another, will be the endless torture of damned souls. Let us therefore, knowing these terrors of the Lord, be persuaded not to do iniquity.

Ninthly, Heaven is the barn into which all God's wheat shall be gathered in that harvest day. But gather the wheat into my barn. So it is in the parable, ver. 30. Note, 1. In the field of this world, good people are the wheat, the most precious grain, and the valuable part of the field. 2. This wheat shall shortly be gathered, gathered from among the tares and weeds; all gathered together in a general assembly, all the Old Testament saints, all the New Testament saints, not one missing: Gather my saints together to me, Psalm l. 5. 3. All God's wheat shall be lodged together in God's barn: Particular souls are housed at death as a shock of corn, Joh. v. 26. but the general in-gathering shall be at the end of time: God's wheat will then be put together, and no longer scattered; there will be sheaves of corn, as well as bundles of tares: they will then be secured, and no longer exposed to wind and weather, sin and sorrow: no longer afar off, and at a distance in the field, but near in the barn. Nay, heaven is a garner, Matt. iii. 12. in which the wheat will not only be separated from the tares of ill companions, but sited from the chaff of their own corruptions.

In the reddition of the parable this is gloriously represented, ver. 43. Then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their father. 1. It is their present honour that God is their Father. Now are we the sons of God, 1 John iii. 2. Our Father in heaven is King there. Christ, when he went to heaven, went to his Father, and our Father, John xx. 17. It is our Father's house, nay, it is our Father's palace, his throne, Rev. iii. 21. 2. The honour in reserve for them is that they shall shine forth as the sun in that kingdom. Here they are obscure and hidden, Col. iii. 3. their beauty is eclipsed by their poverty, and the meanness of their outward condition: their own weaknesses and infirmities, and the reproach and disgrace cast upon them, cloud them; but then they shall shine forth as the sun from behind a dark cloud; at death they shall shine forth to themselves, at the great day they will shine forth publicly before all the world, their bodies will be made like Christ's glorious body; they shall shine by reflection, with a light borrowed from the fountain of light: their sanctification will be perfected, and their justification published; God will own them for his children, and will produce the record of all their services and sufferings for his name: They shall shine as the sun, the most glorious of all visible beings. The glory of the saints is in the Old Testament compared to that of the firmament and the stars, but here to that of the sun; for life and immortality are brought to a much clearer light by the gospel, than under the law. Those that shine as lights in this world, that God may be glorified, shall shine as the sun in the other world, that they may be glorified. Our Saviour concludes, as before, with a demand of attention; Who hath ears to hear, let him hear. These are things which it is our happiness to hear of, and our duty to hearken to.

3. Here is a parable of the grain of mustard-seed, ver. 31, 32. The scope of this parable is to shew, that the beginnings of the gospel would be small, but its latter end would greatly increase. In this way the gospel church, the kingdom of God among us, would be set up in the world; in this way the work of grace in the heart, the kingdom of God within us, would be carried on in particular persons.

Now concerning the work of the gospel; observe,

(1.) That it is commonly very weak and small at first, like a grain of mustard-seed, which is one of the least of all seeds. The kingdom of the Messiah, which was now in the setting up, made but a small figure; Christ, and the apostles, compared with the grandees of the world, appeared like a grain of mustard-seed, the weak things of the world. In particular places, the first breaking out of the gospel light is but as the dawning of the day, and, in particular souls it is at first the day of small things, like a bruised reed. Young converts are like lambs that must be carried in arms, Isa. xl. 11. There is a little faith, but there is much lacking in it, 1 Thess. i. 10. and the groanings such as cannot be uttered, they are so small: a principle of spiritual life and some motion, but scarce discernible.

(2.) That yet it is growing and coming on. Christ's kingdom strangely got ground, great accessions were made to it; nations were born at once, in spite of all the opposition it met with from hell and earth. In the soul where grace is true it will grow rarely, though perhaps insensibly. A grain of mustard-seed is small, but however it is seed, and has in it a disposition to grow. Grace will be getting ground, shining more and more, Prov. iv. 18. Gracious habits confirmed, actions quickened, and knowledge more clear, faith more confirmed, love more inflamed; here is the seed growing.

(3.) That it will at last come to a great degree of strength and usefulness; when it is grown to some maturity, it becomes a tree, much larger in those countries than in ours. The church, like the vine brought out of Egypt, has taken root, and filled the earth, Psalm lxxx. 9, 10, 11. The church is like a great tree, in which the fowls of the air do lodge; God's people have recourse to it for food and rest, shade and shelter. In particular persons, the principle of grace, if true, will persevere and be perfected at last: growing grace will be strong grace, and will bring much to pass. Grown Christians must covet to be useful to others, as the mustard seed when grown is to the birds; that those that dwell near or under their shadow, may be the better for them, Hos. xiv. 7.

4. Here is the parable of the leaven, ver. 33. The scope of this is much the same with that of the foregoing parable, to shew, that the gospel should prevail and be successful by degrees, but silently and insensibly: The preaching of the gospel is like leaven, and works like leaven in the hearts of those that do receive it.

(1.) A woman took this leaven, it was her work. Ministers are employed in leavening places, in leavening souls with the gospel. The woman is the weaker vessel, and we have this treasure in such vessels.

(2.) The leaven was hid in three measures of meal. The heart is, as the meal, soft and pliable; it is the tender heart that is likely to profit by the word: leaven among corn unground doth not work, nor doth the gospel in souls unhumiliated and unbroken for sin, the law grinds the heart, and the gospel leavens it. It is three measures of meal, i. e. a great quantity, for a little leaven leaveneth the whole lump. The meal must be kneaded before it receives the leaven; our hearts, as they must be broken, so they must be moistened, and pains taken with them to prepare them for the word, that they may receive the impressions of it: This leaven must be hid in the heart, Psalm cxix. 11. not so much for secrecy (for it will shew itself) as for safety: our inward thoughts must be upon it, we must lay it up, as Mary laid up the sayings of Christ, Luke ii. 51. When the woman hides the leaven in the meal, it is with an intention that it should communicate its taste and relish to it; so we must treasure up the word in our souls, that we may be sanctified by it, John xvii. 17.

(3.) The leaven thus hid in the dough works there, it ferments; the word is quick and powerful, Heb. iv. 12. The leaven works speedily, so doth the word, and yet gradually. What a sudden change did Elijah's mantle make upon Elisha! 1 Kings xix. 20. It works silently and insensibly, Mark iv. 26. yet strongly and irresistibly: It doth its work without noise, for so is the way of the Spirit, but doth it without fail. Hide but the leaven in the dough, and all the world cannot hinder it from communicating its taste and relish to it, and yet none sees how it is done, but by degrees the whole is leavened.

1. Thus it was in the world. The apostles by their preaching hid a handful of leaven in the great mass of mankind, and it had a strange effect; it put the world into a ferment, and in a sense turned it upside down, Acts xvii. 6. and by degrees made a wonderful change in the taste and relish of it: the savour of the gospel was manifested in every place, 2 Cor. ii. 14. Rom. xv. 19. It was thus effectual, not by outward force, and therefore not by any such force irresistible and conquerable, but by the Spirit of the Lord of hosts, who works, and none can hinder.

2. Thus it is in the heart. When the gospel comes into the soul, 1. It works a change, not in the substance, the dough is the same, but in the quality: it makes us to savour otherwise than we have done, and other things to savour with us otherwise than they used to do, Rom. viii. 5. 2. It works an universal change, it diffuses itself into all the powers and faculties of the soul, and alters the property even of the members of the body, Rom. vi. 13. 3. This change is, such as makes the soul to partake of the nature of the word, as the dough doth of the leaven. We are delivered into it as into a mould, Rom. vi. 7. changed into the same image, 2 Cor. ii. 18. like the impression of the seal upon the wax. The gospel savours of God and Christ, and free grace and another world, and these things now relish with the soul. It is a word of faith and repentance, holiness and love, and these are wrought in the soul by it. This savour is communicated insensibly, for our life is hid, but inseparably, for grace is a good part that shall never be taken away from those that have it. When the dough is leavened, then to the oven with it; trials and afflictions commonly attend this change; but thus saints are fitted to be bread for our Master's table.

44. ¶ Again, the kingdom of heaven is like unto treasure hid in a field; the which when a man hath found, he hideth, and for joy thereof goeth and selleth all that he hath, and buyeth that field. 45. ¶ Again, the kingdom of heaven is like unto a merchant-man, seeking goodly pearls: 46. Who when he hath found one pearl of great price, went and sold all that he had, and bought it. 47. ¶ Again, the kingdom of heaven is like unto a net that was cast into the sea, and gathered of every kind: 48. Which, when it was full, they drew to shore, and sat down, and gathered the good into vessels, but cast the bad away. 49. So shall it be at the end of the world: the angels shall come forth, and sever the wicked from among the just. 50. And shall cast them into the furnace of fire: there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth. 51. Jesus saith unto them, Have ye understood all these things? They say unto him, Yea, Lord. 52. Then said he unto them, them, Therefore every scribe which is instructed unto the kingdom of heaven is like unto a man that is an householder, which bringeth forth out of his treasure things new and old.

We have four parables in these verses:

First, That of the treasure hid in the field. Hitherto he had compared the kingdom of heaven to small things, because its beginning was small, but lest any should thence take occasion to think meanly of it, in this parable and the next he represents it as of great value in itself, and of great advantage to those that embrace it, and are willing to come up to its terms; it is here likened to a treasure hid in the field, which, if we will, we may make our own.

1. Jesus Christ is the true treasure; in him there is an abundance of all that which is rich and useful, and will be a portion for us; allfulness, Col. i. 19. John i. 16. treasures of wisdom and knowledge, (Col. ii. 3.) of righteousness, grace and peace; these are laid up for us in Christ, and, if we have an interest in him, it is all our own.

2. The gospel is the field in which this treasure is hid; it is hid in the word of the gospel, both the Old Testament and the New Testament gospel. In gospel ordinances he is hid as the milk in the breast, the marrow in the bones, the manna in the dew; as the water in the well, Isa. xii. 3. as the honey in the honey-comb. It is hid, not in a garden inclosed, or a spring shut up, but in a field, an open field; whoever will let him come, and search the scriptures; let him dig in this field, Prov. ii. 4. and whatever royal mines we find, they are all our own, if we take the right course.

3. It is a great thing to discover the treasure hid in this field, and the unspeakable value of it: The reason why so many slight the gospel, and will not be at the expence and run the hazard of entertaining it, is because they look only upon the surface of the field, and judge by that, and so see no excellency in the Christian institutes above those of the philosophers; nay, the richest mines are often in grounds that appear most barren; and therefore will not so much as bid for the field, much less come up to the price. What is thy beloved more than another beloved? what is the Bible more than any other good books? the gospel of Christ more than Plato's philosophy, or Confucius's morals? But those that have searched the scriptures, so as in them to find Christ and eternal life, John v. 39. have discovered such a treasure in this field as makes it infinitely more valuable.

4. Those that discern this treasure in the field, and value it aright, will never be easy till they have made it their own upon any terms. He that has found this treasure hides it; which notes a holy jealousy, lest we come short, Heb. iv. 1. looking diligently, Heb. xii. 15. lest Satan come between us and it. He rejoiceth in it, though as yet the bargain be not made; he is glad there is such a bargain to be had, and that he is in a fair way to have an interest in Christ; that the matter is in treaty; their hearts may rejoice, who are yet but seeking the Lord, Psal. cv. 3. He resolves to buy this field: Those that embrace gospel-offers upon gospel-terms buy this field, they make it their own for the sake of the unseen treasure in it. It is Christ in the gospel that we are to have an eye to; we need not go up to heaven, but Christ in the word is nigh us. And so intent he is upon it, that he sells all to buy that field: Those that would have saving benefit by Christ, must be willing to part with all that they may make it sure to themselves; must count every thing but loss, that they may win Christ, and be found in him.

Secondly, That of the pearl of price, ver. 45, 46. which is to the same purpose with the former of the treasure. The dream is thus doubled, for the thing is certain.

Note, 1. All the children of men are busy, seeking godly pearls: One would be rich, another would be honourable, another would be learned; but the most are imposed upon, and take up with counterfeits for pearls.

2. Jesus Christ is a pearl of great price, a jewel of inestimable value, which will make those that have it rich, truly rich, rich towards God: in having him we have enough to make us happy here and for ever.

3. A true Christian is a spiritual merchant, that seeks and finds this pearl of price; that doth not take up with any thing short of an interest in Christ, and, as one that is resolved to be spiritually rich, trades high: He went and bought that pearl, did not only bid for it but purchase it. What will it avail us to know Christ, if we do not know him as ours, made to us wisdom? 1 Cor. i. 30.

4. Those that would have a saving interest in Christ, must be willing to part with all for him, leave all to follow him. Whatever stands in opposition to Christ, or in competition with him for our love and service, we must cheerfully quit it, though never so dear to us. A man may buy gold too dear, but not this pearl of price.

Thirdly, That of the net cast into the sea, ver. 47, 48, 49.

1. Here is the parable itself. Where note, 1. The world is a vast sea, and the children of men are things creeping innumerable, both small and great in that sea, Psal. civ. 25. Men in their natural state are like the fishes of the sea, that have no ruler over them, Job. i. 14. 2. The preaching of the gospel is the casting of a net into this sea, to catch something out of it for his glory, who hath the sovereignty of this sea. Ministers are fishers of men, employed in casting and drawing this net, and then they speed when at Christ's word they let down the net, otherwise they toil and catch nothing.

3. This net gathers of every kind, as large drag-nets use to do. In the visible church there is a deal of trash and rubbish, dirt and weeds and vermin, as well as fish. 4. There is a time coming when this net will be full and drawn to shore; a set time, when the gospel shall have fulfilled that for which it was sent, and we are sure it shall not return void, Isa. lv. 10, 11. The net is now in the filling, some times it fills faster than at other times, but still it fills, and will be drawn to shore, when the mystery of God shall be finished. 5. When the net is full and drawn to shore, there shall be a separation between the good and bad that were gathered in it. Hypocrites and true Christians shall then be parted; the good shall be gathered into vessels, as valuable, and therefore to be carefully kept, but the bad shall be cast away, as vile and unprofitable; and miserable is the condition of those who are cast-away in that day. While the net is in the sea it is not known what is in it, the fishermen themselves cannot distinguish; but they carefully draw it, and all that is in it, to shore, for the sake of the good that is in it. Such is God's care for the visible church, and such should ministers' concern be for those under their charge, though they are mixed.

2. Here is the reddition of the latter part of the parable, the former is present and plain enough: we see gathered into the visible church, some of every kind; but the latter part refers to that which is yet to come, and is therefore more particularly explained, ver. 49, 50. So shall it be at the end of the world; then and not till then will the dividing, discovering day be. We must not look for the net full of all good fish, the vessels will be so, but in the net they are mixed. See here, 1. The distinguishing of the wicked from the righteous. The angels of heaven shall come forth to do that which the angels of the churches could never do, they shall sever the wicked from amongst the just; and we need not ask how they will distinguish them when they have both their commission and their instructions from him that knows all men, and particularly knows them that are his, and them that are not, and we may be sure there shall be no mistake or blunder either way. 2. The doom of the wicked when they are thus severed. They shall be cast into the furnace. Note, Everlasting misery and sorrow will certainly be the portion of those that live among sanctified ones, but themselves die unsanctified. This is the same with what we had before, ver. 42. Note, Christ himself preached often of hell-torments, as the everlasting punishment of hypocrites; and it is good for us to be often minded of this awakening, quickening truth.

Fourthly, Here is the parable of the good householder, which is intended to rivet all the rest.

1. The occasion of it was the good proficiency which the disciples had made in learning, and their profiting by this sermon in particular. 1. He asked them, Have ye understood all these things? intimating, that if they had not, he was ready to explain what they did not understand. Note, It is the will of Christ, that all those who read and hear the word should understand it; for otherwise, how should they get good by it? It is therefore good for us when we have read or heard the word, to examine ourselves, or to be examined, whether we have understood it or no. It is no disparagement to the disciples of Christ to be catechised. Christ invites us to seek to him for instruction, and ministers should proffer their service to those who have any good question to ask concerning what they have heard. 2. They answered him, Yea, Lord. And we have reason to believe they said true, because when they did not understand they asked for an explanation, ver. 39. And the exposition of that parable was a key to the rest. Note, The right understanding of one good sermon, will very much help us to understand another; for good truths naturally explain and illustrate one another; and knowledge is easy to him that understandeth.

2. The scope of the parable itself was to give his approbation and commendation of their proficiency. Note, Christ is ready to encourage willing learners in his school, though they are but weak, and to say, Well done, well said.

1. He commends them as scribes instructed unto the kingdom of heaven. They were now learning that they might teach, and the teachers among the Jews were the Scribes. Ezra that prepared his heart to teach in Israel, is called a ready Scribe, Ezra vii. 6-10. Now a skillful, faithful minister of the gospel is a scribe too, but for distinction he is called a scribe instructed unto the kingdom of heaven, well versed in the things of the gospel, and well able to teach those things. Note, 1. Those that are to instruct others, have need to be well instructed themselves. If the priest's lips must keep knowledge, his head must first have knowledge. 2. The instruction of a gospel minister must be in the kingdom of heaven, that it is about which his business lies. A man may be a great philosopher and politician, and yet if not instructed to the kingdom of heaven, he will make but a bad minister.

2. He compares them to a good householder, that brings forth out of his treasure things new and old; fruits of last year's growth and this year's gathering, abundance and variety, for the entertainment of his friends. See Cant. vii. 13. See here, 1. What should be a minister's furniture, a treasure of things new and old. Those that have so many and various occasions, need to stock themselves well in their gathering days with truths new and old, out of the Old Testament and out of the New: with ancient and modern improvement, that the man of God may be thoroughly well furnished, 2 Tim. iii. 16, 17. Old experiences and new observations each have their use; and we must not content ourselves with old discoveries, but must be adding new. Live and learn. 2. What use he should make of this furniture. He should bring forth, laying up is in order to lay out, for the benefit of others. Sic vos non tobis. Many are full, but they have no vent, Job xxxii. 19. have a talent, but they bury it; such are unprofitable servants: Christ himself received that he might give; so must we, and we shall have more. In bringing forth things, new and old do best together; old truths, but new methods and expressions, especially new affections.

53. ¶ And it came to pass, that when Jesus had finished these parables, he departed thence. 54. And when he was come into his own country, he taught them in their synagogue, insomuch that they were astonished, and said, Whence has this man this wisdom, and these mighty works? 55. Is not this the carpenter's son? Is not his mother called Mary? and his brethren, James, and Joses, and Simon, and Judas? 56. And his sisters, are they not all with us? Whence then hath this man all these things? 57. And they were offended in him. But Jesus said unto them, A prophet is not without honour, save in his own country, and in his own house. 58. And he did not many mighty works there because of their unbelief.

We have here Christ in his own country. He went about doing good, yet left not any place till he had finished his testimony there at that time. His own countrymen had rejected him once, yet he came to them again. Note, Christ doth not take refusals at their first word, but repeats his offers to those that have often repulsed them. In this, as in other things, Christ was like his brethren, that he had a natural affection to his own country, patriam quisque amat, non quia pulchram, sed quia suam. Seneca. His treatment at this time was much the same as before, scornful and spiteful.

Observe, 1. How they expressed their contempt of him. When he taught them in their synagogue they were astonished; not that they were taken with his preaching, or admired his doctrine in itself, but only that it should be his; looking upon him as unlikely to be such an undertaker. Two things they upbraided him with:

1. His want of academical education. They owned that he had wisdom, and did mighty works; but the question was whence he had them; for they knew he was not brought up at the feet of their rabbins: He had never been at the university, nor took his degree or was called of men, Rabbi, Rabbi. Note, Mean and prejudiced spirits are apt to judge of men by their education, and to inquire more into their rise than into their reasons. Whence has this man these mighty works? Did he come honestly by them? Has he not been studying the black art? Thus they turned that against him which was really for him; for if they had not been wilfully blind, they must have concluded him to be divinely assisted and commissioned, who without the help of education gave such proofs of extraordinary wisdom and power.

2. The meanness and poverty of his relations, 55, 56.

1. They upbraided him with his father. Is not this the carpenter's son? Yes.

Yes, it is true, he was reputed so; and what harm in that? No disparagement to him to be the son of an honest tradesman. They remember not, (though they might have known it) that this carpenter was of the house of David, Luke i. 27. a son of David, Matt. i. 20. therefore, though a carpenter, yet a person of honour. Those that are willing to pick quarrels will overlook that which is worthy and deserving, and fasten upon that only which seems mean. Some sordid spirits regard no branch, no not a branch from the stem of Jesse, (Isa. xi. 1.) if it be not a top branch.

2. They upbraid him with his mother, and what quarrels have they with her? Why truly, his mother is called Mary, and that was a very common name, and they all knew her, and knew her to be an ordinary person; she was called Mary, not Queen Mary, or Lady Mary, or so much as Mistress Mary, but plain Mary: and this is turned to his reproach; as if men had nothing to be valued by but foreign extraction, noble birth or splendid title: poor things to measure worth by.

3. They upbraid him with his brethren, whose names they knew, and had them ready enough to serve this turn; James, and Josés, and Simon, and Judas, good men but poor men, and therefore despised, and Christ for their sakes. These brethren, it is probable, were Joseph's children by a former wife; or whatever their relation was to him, they seem to have been brought up with him in the same family. And therefore of the calling of three of these who were of the twelve, to that honour, James, Simon, and Jude, the same with Thaddeus we read not particularly, because they needed not such an express call into acquaintance with Christ, who had been the companions of his youth.

4. His sisters too are all with us; they should therefore have loved him, and respected him the more, because he was one of themselves, but therefore they despised him. They were offended in him: they stumbled at these stumbling-stones, for he was set for a sign that should be spoken against, Luke ii. 34. Isa. viii. 14.

See how he resented this contempt, ver. 57, 58.

1. It did not trouble his heart. It appears he was not much concerned at it, he despised the shame, Heb. xii. 2. Instead of aggravating the affront, or expressing an offence at it, or returning such an answer to their foolish suggestions as they deserved, he mildly imputes it to the common humour of the children of men, to undervalue excellencies that are cheap and common and home-bred. It is usually so. A prophet is not without honour, save in his own country. Note, 1. Prophets should have honour paid them, and commonly have; men of God are great men; and men of honour, and challenge respect. It is strange indeed if prophets have not honour. 2. Notwithstanding this, they are commonly least regarded and revered in their own country, nay, and sometimes are most envied. Familiarity breeds contempt.

2. It did for the present (to speak with reverence) in effect tie his hands. He did not many mighty works there because of their unbelief. Note, Unbelief is the great obstruction to Christ's favours. All things are in general possible to God, Matt. xix. 26. but then it is to him that believes as to the particulars, Mark iv. 23. The gospel is the power of God unto salvation, but then it is to every one that believes, Rom. i. 16. So that if mighty works be not wrought in us, it is not for want of power or grace in Christ, but for want of faith in us. By grace ye are saved; and that is a mighty work, but it is through faith, Eph. ii. 8.

CHAP. XIV.

John Baptist had said concerning Christ, He must increase, but I must decrease, John iii. 30. The morning-star is here disappearing, and the sun of righteousness rising to his meridian lustre. Here is, (1.) The martyrdom of John, his imprisonment for his faithfulness to Herod, ver. 1—5. And the beheading of him to please Herodias, ver. 6—12. (2.) His feeding five thousand men that came to him to be taught with five loaves and two fishes, ver. 13—24. (3.) Christ's walking on the water to his disciples in a storm, ver. 22—33. (4.) His healing the sick with the touch of the hem of his garment, ver. 34—36. Thus he went forth, thus he went on, conquering and to conquer, or rather, curing and to cure.

1. AT that time Herod the Tetrarch heard of the fame of Jesus, 2. And said unto his servants, This is John the Baptist, he is risen from the dead, and therefore mighty works do shew forth themselves in him. 3. ¶ For Herod had laid hold on John, and bound him; and put him in prison for Herodias's sake, his brother Philip's wife, 4. For John said unto him, it is not lawful for thee to have her. 5. And when he would have put him to death, he feared the multitude, because they counted him as a prophet. 6. But when Herod's birth-day was kept, the daughter of Herodias danced before them, and pleased Herod. 7. Whereupon he promised with an oath to give her whatsoever she would ask. 8. And she, being before instructed of her mother, said, Give me here John Baptist's head in a charger. 9. And the king was sorry: nevertheless for the oath's sake, and them which sat with him at meat, he commanded it to be given her. 10. And he sent and beheaded John in the prison. 11. And his head was brought in a charger, and given to the damsel: and she brought it to her mother. 12. And his disciples came, and took up the body and buried it, and went and told Jesus.

We have here the story of John's martyrdom. Observe,

1. The occasion of relating this story here, ver. 1, 2. Here is, 1. The account brought to Herod of the miracles which Christ wrought. Herod, the tetrarch or chief governor of Galilee, heard of the fame of Jesus. At that time when his countrymen slighted him, upon the account of his meanness and obscurity, he began to be famous at court. Note, God will honour those that are despised for his sake. And the gospel, like the sea, gets in one place what it loses in another. Christ had now been preaching and working miracles above two years, yet it should seem Herod had not heard of him till now, and now only heard the fame of him. Note, It is the unhappiness of the great ones of the world, that they are most out of the way of hearing the best things, 1 Cor. ii. 8. which none of the princes of VOL. III. No. CLXH.

this world knew, 1 Cor. i. 26. Christ's disciples were now sent abroad to preach, and to work miracles in his name, and this spread the fame of him more than ever; which was an indication of the spreading of the gospel by their means after his ascension.

2. The construction he puts upon this, ver. 2. He said to his servants that told him of the fame of Jesus, as sure as we are here this is John the Baptist, he is risen from the dead: Either the heaven of Herod was not Sadducism, for the Sadducees say there is no resurrection, Acts xxiii. 8. or else Herod's guilty conscience (as is usual with atheists) did at this time get the mastery of his opinion, and now he concludes, whether there be a general resurrection or no, for certain John baptist is risen, and therefore mighty works do shew forth themselves in him. John while he lived did no miracles, John x. 41. but Herod concludes, that being risen from the dead, he is clothed with a greater power than he had while he was living. And he very well calls the miracles he supposed him to work, not his mighty works, but mighty works shewing forth themselves in him. Observe here concerning Herod,

1. How he was disappointed in what he intended by beheading John. He thought if he could get that troublesome fellow out of his way, he might go on in his sins undisturbed and uncontrouled; yet no sooner is that effected, but he hears of Jesus and his disciples preaching the same pure doctrine that John preached; and which is more, even the disciples confirming it by miracles in their Master's name. Note, Ministers may be silenced, and imprisoned, and banished, and slain, but the word of God cannot be run down. The prophets live not for ever, but the word takes hold, Zech. i. 5, 6. See 2 Tim. ii. 9. Sometimes God raiseth up many faithful ministers out of the ashes of one. This hope there is of God's trees, though they be cut down; alluding to Job xiv. 7, 8, 9.

2. How he was filled with causeless fears, merely from the guilt of his own conscience. Thus blood cries, not only from the earth on which it was shed, but from the heart of him that shed it, and makes him Magor-misabib, a terror round about, a terror to himself. A guilty conscience suggests every thing that is frightful, and like a whirlpool gathers all to itself that comes near it. Thus the wicked flee when none pursue, Prov. xxi. 1. are in great fears, where no fear is, Psalm xiv. 5. Herod by a little inquiry might have found out that this Jesus was in being long before John Baptist's death, and therefore could not be Johannes redivivus, and so have undeceived himself; but God justly left him to this infatuation.

3. How notwithstanding this he was hardened in his wickedness; for though he was convinced that John was a prophet, and one owned of God, yet he doth not express the least remorse or sorrow for his sin in putting him to death. The devils believe and tremble, but they never believe and repent. Note, There may be the terror of strong convictions, where there is not the truth of a saving conversion.

2. The story itself of the imprisonment and martyrdom of John. And these extraordinary sufferings of him who was the first preacher of the gospel, plainly shew that bonds and afflictions will abide the professors of it. As the first Old Testament saint, so the first New Testament minister died a martyr. And if Christ's messenger was thus treated, let not his followers expect to be caressed by the world. Observe here,

First, John's faithfulness in reproving Herod, ver. 3, 4. Herod was one of John's hearers, Mark vi. 20. and therefore John might be the more bold with him. Note, Ministers, who are reprovers by office, are especially obliged to reprove those that are under their charge, and not to suffer sin upon them; they have the fairest opportunity of dealing with them, and with them may expect the most favourable acceptance.

The particular sin he reproved him for was marrying his brother Philip's wife, not his widow, that had not been so criminal, but his wife; Philip was now living, and Herod inveigled his wife from him, and kept her for his own: Here was a complication of wickedness, adultery, incest, besides the wrong done to Philip, who had had a child by this woman; and it was an aggravation of the wrong that he was his brother, his half brother by father but not by mother. See Psalm l. 20. For this sin John reproved him; not by tacit and oblique terms, but in plain terms, It is not lawful for thee to have her. He charged it upon him as a sin, not as a crime, not as a fault, or it is not safe, but it is not lawful; the singleness of sin, as it is the transgression of the law, is the worst thing in it. This was Herod's own iniquity, his beloved sin, and therefore this John Baptist tells him of particularly. Note, 1. That which by the law of God is unlawful to other people, is by the same law unlawful to princes and the greatest of men. They that rule over men must not forget that they are themselves but men, and subjects to God. It is not lawful for thee, no more than for the meanest subject thou hast, to abuse another man's wife. There is no prerogative, no, not for the greatest and most arbitrary kings, to break the laws of God. 2. If princes and great men break the law of God, it is very fit they should be told of it by proper persons and in a proper manner. As they are not above the commands of God's word, so they are not above the reproofs of his ministers. It is not fit for thee to say to a king, Thou art Belial, (Job xxxiv. 18.) no more than to call a brother Acara, or Thou fool: It is not fit while they kept within the sphere of their own authority to arraign them. But it is fit that by those whose office it is they should be told what is unlawful, and told with application, Thou art the man; for it follows there, ver. 19. that God (whose agents and ambassadors faithful ministers are) accepteth not the persons of princes, nor regardeth the rich more than the poor.

Secondly, The imprisonment of John for his faithfulness, ver. 3. Herod laid hold on John when he was going on to preach and baptize, put an end to his work, bound him, and put him in prison; partly to gratify his own revenge, and partly to please Herodias, who of the two seemed to be most incensed against him; it was for her sake that he did it. Note, 1. Faithful reproofs, if they do not profit, usually provoke; if they do not do good they are resented as affronts, and they that will not bow to the reproof, will fly in the face of the reprover and hate him, as Ahab hated Micaiah, 1 Kings xxii. 8. See Prov. ix. 8.—xv. 10—12. Veritas odium parit. 2. It is no new thing for God's ministers to suffer ill for doing well. Troubles abide those most that are most diligent and faithful in doing their duty, Acts xx. 20—23. It was so with the Old Testament prophets, see 2 Chron. xvi. 10.—xxiv. 20, 21. Perhaps some of John's friends would blame him as indiscreet in reproving Herod, and tell him, he had better been silent than provoke Herod, whose character he knew very well; thus to deprive him of his liberty; but away with that discretion that would hinder men from doing their duty as magistrates, ministers and Christian friends; I believe John's own heart did not reproach him for it, but his testimony of his conscience for him made his bonds easy, that he suffered for well doing, and not as a busy-body in other men's matters, 1 Pet. iv. 15.

Thirdly, The restraint that Herod lay under from further venting of his rage against John, ver. 5.

1. He would have put him to death. Perhaps that was not intended at first when he imprisoned him, but his revenge by degrees boiled up to that height. Note, The way of sin, especially the sin of persecution, is down hill; and when once a respect to Christ's ministers is cast out and broken through through in one instance, that is at length done, which the man would sooner have thought himself a dog than to have been guilty of, 2 Kings viii. 13.

2. That which hindered him was his fear of the multitude, because they counted John as a prophet. It was not because he feared God (if the fear of God had been before his eyes he would not have imprisoned him) nor because he feared John, though formerly he had had a reverence for him, his lusts had overcome that, but because he feared the people, i. e. he was afraid for himself, his own safety, and the safety of his government; his abuse of which he knew had already rendered him odious to the people; whose resentments being so far heated already, would be apt upon such a provocation, as the putting of a prophet to death, to break out into a flame. Note, 1. Tyrants have their fears. Those that are, and affect to be the terror of the mighty, are many times the greatest terrors of all to themselves; and when they are most ambitious to be feared by the people, are most afraid of them. 2. Wicked men are restrained from the most wicked practices, merely for their secular interest, and not any regard to God. A concern for their ease, credit, wealth, and safety, bring their reigning principle, as it keeps them from many duties, so it keeps them from many sins, which otherwise they would not be restrained from; and this is one means by which sinners are kept from being overmuch wicked, Eccles. vii. 17. The danger of sin that appears to sense, or to fancy only, influenceth men more than that which appears to faith. Herod feared that the putting of John to death might raise a mutiny among the people, which it did not; but he never feared it might raise a mutiny in his own conscience, which it did, ver. 2. Men fear being hanged for that which they do not fear being damned for.

Fourthly, The contrivance of bringing John to his death. Long he lay in prison, and against the liberty of the subject, (which, blessed be God, is secured to us of this nation by law) might neither be tried nor bailed: It is computed that he lay a year and half a close prisoner, which was about as much time as he had spent in his public ministry, from his first entrance into it. Now here we have an account of his release, not by any other discharge than death, the period of all a good man's troubles, that brings the prisoners to rest together, so that they hear not the voice of the oppressor, Job. iii. 15.

Herodias had the plot, her implacable revenge thirsted after John's blood, and would be satisfied with nothing less; cross the carnal appetites, and they turn into the most barbarous passions; it was a woman, a whore, and the mother of harlots, that was drunk with the blood of the saints, Rev. xxi. 5, 6. Herodias contrived how to bring about the murder of John so artfully as to save Herod's credit, and so to pacify the people. A sorry excuse is better than none. But I am apt to think, that if the truth were known, Herod was himself in the plot: and for all his pretences of surprise and sorrow, was privy to the contrivance, and knew before what would be asked. And his pretending his oath, and respect to his guests, was all but sham and grimace. But if he were trapped into it ere he was aware, yet because it was the thing he would not, and might have prevented, he is justly found guilty of the whole contrivance. Though Jezebel bring Naboth to his end, yet if Ahab take possession, he hath killed. So though Herodias contrive the beheading of John, yet if Herod consent to it and take pleasure in it, he is not only an accessory, but a principle murderer. Well, the scene being laid behind the curtain, let us see how it was acted upon the stage, and in what method. Here we have,

1. The honouring of Herod by the damsel's dancing upon his birth-day. It seems Herod's birth-day was kept with some solemnity; in honour of the day, there must needs be, as usual, a ball at court, and to grace the solemnity the daughter of Herodias danced before them; who being the queen's daughter, it was more than she ordinarily condescended to do. Note, Times of carnal mirth and jollity are convenient times for carrying on ill designs against God's people. When the king was made sick with bottles of wine, he stretched out his hand with scorners, Hos. vii. 5. for it is part of the sport of a fool to do mischief, Prov. v. 23. The Philistines, when their heart was merry, called for Sampson to abuse him. The Parisian massacre was at a wedding. This young lady's dancing pleased Herod. We are not told who danced with her, but none pleased Herod like her dancing. Note, A vain and graceless heart is apt to be hugely in love with the lusts of the flesh and of the eye, and when it is so, it is entering into further temptation; for by that Satan gets and keeps possession. See Prov. xxiii. 31—33. Herod was now upon the merry pin, and nothing was more agreeable to him than that which fed his vanity.

2. The rash and foolish promise which Herod made to this wanton girl, to give her whatsoever she would ask, and this promise confirmed with an oath, ver. 7. It was a very extravagant obligation which Herod here entered into, and no way becoming a prudent man that is afraid of being snared into the words of his mouth, Prov. vi. 2. much less a good man that fears an oath, Eccles. ix. 2. To put this blank into her hand, and enable her to draw upon him at pleasure, was too great a recompence for such a sorry piece of merit; and I am apt to think Herod would not have been guilty of such an absurdity, if he had not been instructed of Herodias, as well as the damsel. Note, Promissory oaths are ensnaring things, and when made rashly, are the products of inward corruption and the occasions of many temptations. Therefore swear not at all, lest thou have occasion to say, it was an error, Eccles. v. 6.

3. The bloody demand the young lady made of John Baptist's head, ver. 8. She was before instructed of her mother. Note, The case of those children is very sad, whose parents are their counsellors to do wickedly, as Ahaziah's 2 Chron. xxii. 3. who instruct them and encourage them in sin, and set them ill examples; for the corrupt nature will sooner be quickened by bad instructions, than restrained and mortified by good ones. Children ought not to obey their parents against the Lord, but if they command them to sin, must say as Levi did to father and mother, they have not seen them.

Herod having given her her commission, and Herodias her instructions, she requires John Baptist's head in a charger. Perhaps Herodias feared lest Herod should grow weary of her (as lust useth to nauseate and be cloyed) and then would make John Baptist's reproof a pretence to dismiss her; to prevent which she contrives to harden Herod in it, by engaging him in the murder of John. John must be beheaded then, that is the death by which he must glorify God; and because it was his who died first after the beginning of the gospel, though the martyrs died various kinds of deaths, and not so easy and honourable as this, yet this is put for all the rest, Ret. xx. 4. where we read of those that were beheaded for the witness of Jesus. Yet this is not enough, the thing must be humoured too, and not only a revenge but a fancy must be gratified; it must be given her here in a charger, served up in blood, as a dish of meat at the feast, or sauce to all the other dishes; it is reserved for the third course, to come up with the rarities. He must have no trial, no public hearing, no forms of law or justice must add solemnity to his death; but he is tried, condemned, and executed in a breath. It was well for him he was so mortified to the world that death could be no surprise to him, though never so sudden. It must be given her, and she will reckon it a recompence for her dancing, and desire no more.

4. Herod's grant of this demand, ver. 9. The king was sorry, at least took on him to be so, but for the oath's sake he commanded it to be given her. Here is,

1. A pretended concern for John. The king was sorry. Note, Many men sin with regret, that never has a true regret for his sin, is sorry to sin, yet is utterly a stranger to godly sorrow; sins with reluctance, and yet goes on to sin. Dr. Hammond suggests, that one reason of Herod's sorrow was, because it was his birth-day festival, and it would be an ill omen to shed blood on that day, which, as other days of joy, used to be graced with acts of clemency; Natalem colimus, tacete lites.

2. Here is a pretended conscience of his oath, with a specious shew of honour and honesty, he must needs do something for the oath's sake. Note, It is a great mistake, to think that a wicked oath will justify a wicked action. It was implied so necessarily, that it needed not to be expressed, that he would do any thing for her that was lawful and honest; and when she demanded what was otherwise, he ought to have declared, that he might have done it honourably, that the oath was null and void, and the obligation of it ceased. No man can oblige himself to sin, because God hath already so strongly obliged every man against sin.

3. Here is a real baseness in compliance with wicked companions. Herod yielding, not so much for the sake of the oath, but because it was public, and in compliment to them that sat at meat with him; he granted the demand, that he might not seem before them to have broke his engagement. Note, A point of honour goes much farther with many than a point of conscience. Those that sat at meat with him, probably, were as well pleased with the damsel's dancing as he, and therefore would have her by all means to be gratified in a frolic, and perhaps were as willing as she to see John Baptist's head off. However, none of them had the honesty to interpose, as they ought to have done, for the preventing of it, as Jehoiakim's princes did, Jer. xxxvi. 25. If some of the common people had been there, they would have rescued this Jonathan, 1 Sam. xiv. 45.

4. Here is a real malice to John at the bottom of this concession, or else he might have found out evasions enough to have gotten clear of his promise. Note, Though a wicked mind never wants an excuse, yet the truth of the matter is, that every man is tempted when he is drawn aside of his own lusts, and enticed, James i. 14. Perhaps Herod presently reflecting on the extravagance of his promise, on which she might ground a demand of some vast sum of money, which he loved a great deal better than John Baptist, was glad to get clear of it so easily; and therefore immediately issues out a warrant for the beheading of John Baptist, it should seem not in writing, but only by word of mouth; so little account is made of that precious life; he commanded it to be given her.

5. The execution of John pursuant to this grant, ver. 10. He sent and beheaded John in the prison. It is probable the prison was very near, at the gate of the palace, and thither an officer was sent to cut off the head of this great man. He must be beheaded with expedition to gratify Herodias, who was in a longing condition till it was done. It was done in the night, for it was at supper-time, after supper it is likely. It was done in the prison, not at the usual place of execution, for fear of an uproar. A great deal of innocent blood, of martyrs blood, has thus been huddled up in corners, which, when God comes to make inquisition for blood, the earth shall disclose and shall no more cover, Isa. xxvi. 21. Psalm. ix. 12.

Thus was that voice silenced, that burning and shining light extinguished; thus did that prophet, that Elias of the New Testament, fall a sacrifice to the resentments of an imperious whorish woman. Thus did he, who was great in the sight of the Lord, die as a fool dieth, his hands were bound, and his feet put into fetters; and as a man falleth before wicked men, so he felt, a true martyr to all intents and purposes; dying, though not for the profession of his faith, yet for the performance of his duty. However, though his work was soon done, it was done, and his testimony finished, for till then none of God's witnesses are slain. And God brought this good out of it, that hereby his disciples, who while he lived, though in prison, kept close to him, now after his death heartily closed with Jesus Christ.

Fifthly, The disposal of the poor remains of this blessed saint and martyr. The head and body being separated,

1. The damsel brought the head in triumph to her mother, as a trophy of the victories of her malice and revenge, ver. 11. Jerom and Rufin relates, that when Herodias had John Baptist's head brought her, she gave herself the barbarous diversion of pricking the tongue with a needle, as Fulvia did Tully's. Note, Bloody minds are pleased with bloody sights, which those of tender spirits shrink and tremble at. Sometimes the insatiable rage of bloody persecutors has fallen upon the dead bodies of the saints, and made sport with them, Psal. lxxix. 2. When the witnesses are slain, they that dwell on the earth rejoice over them, and make merry, Rev. xi. 10. Psalm. xiv. 4, 5.

2. The disciples buried the body, and brought the news in tears to our Lord Jesus. The disciples of John had fasted often while their master was in prison, their bridegroom was taken away from them, and they prayed earnestly for his deliverance, as the church did for Peter's, Acts xii. 5. They had free access to him in prison, which was a comfort to them, but they wished to see him at liberty, that he might preach to others; but now on a sudden all their hopes are dashed. Disciples weep and lament, when the world rejoiceth. Let us see what they did,

1. They buried the body. Note, There is a respect owing to the servants of Christ, not only while they live, but in their bodies and memories when they are dead. Concerning the two first New Testament martyrs, it is particularly taken notice of that they were decently buried, John Baptist by his disciples, and Stephen by devout men, Acts viii. 2. yet there was no enshrining of their bones or other relics, a piece of superstition which sprung up long after, when the enemy had sowed tares. That over-doing in respect to the bodies of the saints is undoing; though they are not to be vilified, yet they are not to be deified.

2. They went and told Jesus; not so much that he might shift for his own safety, no doubt he heard it from others, the country rang of it, as that they might receive comfort from him, and be taken in among his disciples. Note, 1. When any thing ails us at any time, it is our duty and privilege to make Christ acquainted with it. It will be a relief to our burdened spirits to unbosom ourselves to a friend we may be free with. Such a relation dead or unkind, such a comfort lost or imbittered, go and tell Jesus, who knows already, but will know from us the trouble of our souls in adversity. 2. We must take heed, lest our religion and the profession of it die with our ministers; when John was dead they did not return every man to his own, but resolved to abide by it still. When the shepherds are smitten, the sheep need not be scattered while they have the great Shepherd of the sheep to go to, who is still the same, Heb. xiii. 20. The removal of ministers should bring us nearer to Christ, into a more immediate communion with him. 3. Comforts, otherwise highly valuable, are sometimes therefore taken from us, because they come between us and Christ, and are apt to carry away that love and esteem which is due to him only: John had long since directed his disciples to Christ, and turned them over to him, but they could not leave their old master while he lived; therefore he is removed that they they may go to Jesus, whom they had sometimes emulated and envied for John's sake. It is better to be drawn to Christ by want and loss, than not come to him at all. If our Masters be taken from our head, this is our comfort, we have a Master in heaven, who himself is our head.

Josephus mentions this story of the death of John Baptist, Antiquit. lib. 18. cap. 7. and adds, that a fatal destruction of Herod's army in his wars with Aretas, king of Petrea, (whose daughter was Herod's wife, whom he put away to make room for Herodias) was generally looked upon by the Jews to be a just judgment upon him for putting John Baptist to death. Herod having at the instigation of Herodias disobliterated the emperor, he was deprived of his government, and they were both banished to Lions in France; which saith Josephus was his just punishment for hearkening to her solicitations. And lastly, it is storied of this daughter of Herodias, that going over the ice in winter, the ice broke, and she slipt in up to her neck, which was cut through by the sharpness of the ice. God requiring her head (saith Dr. Whitby) for that of the Baptist; which, if true, was a remarkable providence.

13. ¶ When Jesus heard of it, he departed thence by a ship into a desert place apart: and when the people had heard thereof, they followed him on foot out of the cities. 14. And Jesus went forth, and saw a great multitude, and was moved with compassion toward them, and he healed their sick. 15. and when it was evening his disciples came to him, saying, This is a desert place, and the time is now past; send the multitude away that they may go into the villages, and buy themselves victuals. 16. But Jesus said unto them, They need not depart; give ye them to eat. 17. And they say unto him, We have here but five loaves, and two fishes. 18. He said, Bring them hither to me. 19. And he commanded the multitude to sit down on the grass, and took the five loaves, and the two fishes, and looking up to heaven, he blessed, and brake, and gave the loaves to his disciples, and the disciples to the multitude. 20. And they did all eat, and were filled: and they took up of the fragments that remained twelve baskets full. 21. And they that had eaten were about five thousand men, beside women and children.

This passage of story concerning Christ's feeding five thousand men with five loaves and two fishes, is recorded by all the four evangelists, which very few, if any, of Christ's miracles are; this intimates, there is something in it worthy of special remark. Observe,

First, The great resort of people to Christ, when he was retired into a desert place, ver. 13. He withdrew into privacy when he heard, not of John's death, but of the thoughts Herod had concerning him, that he was John Baptist risen from the dead, and therefore so feared by Herod as to be hated; he departed further off, to get out of Herod's jurisdiction. Note, In times of peril, when God opens a door of escape, it is lawful to flee for our own preservation, unless we have some special call to expose ourselves. Christ's hour was not yet come, and therefore he would not thrust himself upon suffering: He could have secured himself by divine power, but because his life was intended for an example he did it by human prudence; he departed by ship. But a city on a hill cannot be hid; when the people heard it, they followed him on foot from all parts. Such an interest Christ had in the affections of the multitude that his withdrawing from them did but draw them after him with so much the more eagerness. Here, as often, the scripture was fulfilled, that unto him shall the gathering of the people be. It should seem, there was more crowding to Christ after John's martyrdom than before. Sometimes the sufferings of the saints are made to further the gospel, Phil. i. 12. and "the blood of the martyrs is the seed of the church." Now John's testimony was finished, it was recollected, and more improved than ever. Note, 1. When Christ and his word withdraw from us, it is best for us (whatever flesh and blood may object to the contrary) to follow it, preferring opportunities for our souls before any secular advantages whatsoever. When the ark removes, ye shall remove, and go after it, Joshua iii. 3. 2. Those that truly desire the sincere milk of the word, will not stick at the difficulties they may meet within their attendance on it. The presence of Christ and his gospel, makes a desert place not only tolerable but desirable; it makes the wilderness an Eden, Isa. li. 3—xli. 19, 20.

Secondly, The tender compassion of our Lord Jesus towards those that thus followed him, ver. 14. 1. He went forth, and appeared publicly among them. Though he retired for his own security, and his own repose, yet he went forth from his retirement when he saw people desirous to hear him, as one willing both to toil himself and to expose himself for the good of souls; for even Christ pleased not himself. 2. When he saw the multitude, he had compassion on them. Note, The sight of a great multitude may justly move compassion. "To see a great multitude, and to think how many precious immortal souls here are, the greatest part of which, we have reason to fear, are neglected and ready to perish, would grieve one to the heart. None like Christ for pity to souls, his compassions fail not." 3. He did not only pity them, but he helped them: many of them were sick, and he, in compassion to them, healed them; for he came into the world to be the great healer. After a while they were all hungry, and he, in compassion to them, fed them. Note, In all the favours Christ shews to us he is moved with compassion, Isa. lxiii. 9.

Thirdly, The motion which the disciples made for the dismissing of the congregation, and Christ's sitting aside the motion. 1. The evening drawing on, the disciples moved it to Christ to send the multitude away; they thought there was a good day's work done, and it was time to disperse. Note, Christ's disciples are often more careful to shew their discretion than to shew their zeal; and their abundant consideration rather than their abundant affection in the things of God. 2. Christ would not dismiss them hungry as they were, nor detain them longer without meat, nor put them upon the trouble and charge of buying meat for themselves, but orders his disciples to provide for them. Christ all along expressed more tenderness towards the people than his disciples did; for what are the compassions of the most merciful men, compared with the tender mercies of God in Christ? See how loth Christ is to part with those that are resolved to cleave to him! They need not depart. Note, Those that have Christ have enough, and need not depart to seek a happiness and livelihood in the creature: They that have made sure of the one thing needful, need not be cumbered about much servicing. Nor will Christ put his willing followers upon a needless expence, but will make their attendance cheap to them.

But if they be hungry they have need to depart, for that is a necessity which has no law, therefore give you them to eat. Note, The Lord is for the body, it is the work of his hands, it is part of his purchase; he was himself clothed with a body, that he might encourage us to depend upon him for the supply of our bodily wants. But he takes a particular care of the body, when it was employed to serve the soul in his more immediate service. If we seek first the kingdom of God, and make that our chief care, we may depend upon God to add other things to us, as far as he sees fit, and may cast all our care of them upon him. These followed Christ but for a push, in a present pang of zeal, yet Christ took this care of them, much more will he provide for those that follow him fully.

Fourthly, The slender provision that was made for this great multitude; and here we must compare the number of invited guests with the bill of fare.

1. The number of the guest was five thousand men, besides women and children; and it is probable the women and children might be as many as the men, if not more. This was a vast auditory that Christ preached to, and we have reason to think an attentive auditory; yet it should seem far the greater part, notwithstanding all this seeming zeal and forwardness, came to nothing; went off and followed him no more; for many are called, but few chosen. We would rather perceive the acceptableness of the word by the conversations than by the crowds of its hearers: though that also is a good sight and a good sign.

2. The bill of fare was very disproportionable to the number of the guests, but five loaves, and two fishes. This provision the disciples carried about with them for the use of the family, now they were retired into the desert. Christ could have fed them by miracle, but to set us an example of providing for those of our own household, he will have their own camp victualled in an ordinary way. Here is neither plenty, nor variety, nor dainty; a dish of fish was no rarity to them that were fishermen, but it was food convenient for the twelve; two fishes for their supper, and bread to serve them perhaps for a day or two: Here was no wine or strong drink; fair water from the rivers in the desert was the best they had to drink with their meat; and yet out of this Christ will have the multitude fed. Note, Those that have but a little, yet when the necessity is urgent, must relieve others out of that little, and that is the way to make it more. Can God furnish a table in the wilderness? yes he can, when he pleaseth, a plentiful table.

Fifthly, The liberal distribution of this provision among the multitude, ver. 18, 9. Bring them hither to me. Note, The way to have our creature-comforts, comforts indeed to us, is to bring them to Christ; for every thing is sanctified by his word and by prayer to him: That is likely to prosper and do well with us, which we put into the hands of our Lord Jesus, that he may dispose of it as he pleaseth, and that we may take it back from his hand, and then it will be doubly sweet to us. What we give in charity we should bring to Christ first, that he may graciously accept it from us, and graciously bless it to those to whom it is given; this is doing it as unto the Lord.

Now at this miraculous meal we may observe,

1. The seating of the guests, ver. 19. He commanded them to sit down; which intimates, that while he was preaching to them they were standing, which is a posture of reverence and readiness for motion. But what shall we do for chairs for them all? Let them sit down on the grass. When Absuerus would shew the riches of his glorious kingdom, and the honour of his excellent majesty in a royal feast for the great men of all his provinces, the beds or couches they sat on were of gold and silver, upon a pavement of red and blue and white and black marble, Esther i. 4. Our Lord Jesus did now shew in a divine feast the riches of a more glorious kingdom than that, and the honour of a more excellent majesty, even a dominion over nature itself; but here is not so much as a cloth spread, no plates or napkins laid, no knives or forks, not so much as a bench to sit down on; but, as if Christ intended indeed to reduce the world to the plainness and simplicity, and so to the innocency and happiness of Adam in paradise, he commanded them to sit down on the grass. But doing every thing thus, without any pomp or splendor, he plainly shewed that his kingdom was not of this world, nor cometh with observation.

2. The craving of a blessing. He did not appoint one of his disciples to be his chaplain, but he himself looked up to heaven, and blessed, and gave thanks; he praised God for the provision they had, and prayed to God to bless it to them. His craving a blessing was commanding a blessing; for as he preached, so he prayed like one having authority; and this prayer and thanksgiving, we may suppose, he had special reference to the multiplying of this food; but herein he has taught us that good duty of craving a blessing and giving thanks at our meals: God's good creatures must be received with thanksgiving, 1 Tim. iv. 4. Samuel blessed the feast, Sam. ix. 31. Acts ii. 46, 47.—xxvii. 34, 35. This is eating and drinking to the glory of God, 1 Cor. x. 31. giving God thanks, Rom. xiv. 6. eating before God, as Moses and his father-in-law, Exod. xviii. 12—15. When Christ blessed, he looked up to heaven, to teach us in prayer to eye God as a Father in heaven; and when we receive our creature-comforts to look thitherward, as taking them from God's hand, and depending on him for a blessing.

3. The carving of the meat. The master of the feast was himself head-carver, for he brake, and gave the loaves to his disciples, and the disciples to the multitude. Christ intended hereby to put honour upon his disciples, that they might be respected as workers together with him. As also to signify in what way the spiritual food of the word should be dispensed to the world; from Christ, as the original author, by his ministers. What Christ designed for the churches, he signified to his servant John, Rev. i. 1—4. They delivered all that, and that only which they received from the Lord, 1 Cor. xi. 23. Ministers can never fill the people's hearts, unless Christ first fill their hands; And what he has given to the disciples they must give to the multitude; for they are stewards to give to every one their portion of meat, Matt. xxiv. 45. And, blessed be God, be the multitude never so great, there is enough for all, enough for each.

4. The increase of the meat. This is taken notice of only in the effect, not in the cause or manner of it; here is no mention of any word that Christ spoke, by which the food was multiplied; the purposes and intentions of his mind and will shall take effect, though they be not spoken out; but this is observable, that the meat was multiplied, not in the heap at first, but in the distribution of it. As the widow's oil increased in the pouring out, so here the bread in the breaking. Thus grace grows by being acted, and while other things perish in the using, spiritual gifts increase in the using. God ministers seed to the sower, and multiplies not the seed hoarded up, but the seed sown, 2 Cor. ix. 10. Thus there it that scattereth, and yet increaseth; that scattereth, and so increaseth.

Sixthly, The plentiful satisfaction of all the guests with this provision. Though the disproportion was so great, yet there was enough and to spare.

1. There was enough: They did all eat and were filled. Note, Those that Christ feeds he fills; so runs the promise, Psal. xxxviii. 19. They shall be satisfied: As there was enough for all, they did all eat; so there was enough to reach, they were filled: though there was but a little there was enough, and that is as good as a feast. Note, The blessing of God can make a little go a great way; as, if God blasts what we have, we eat, and have not enough, Haggaï i. 9.

2. There was to spare: They took up of the fragments that remained, twelve baskets full, one basket for each apostle; thus what they gave they had none, and a great deal more with it; and they were so far from being niggard, that they could make this broken meat serve another time and be thankful. This was to manifest and magnify the miracle, and to shew, that the provision Christ makes for those that are his is not bare and scanty, but rich and plenteous; bread enough, and to spare, Luke xv. 17. an overflowing goodness. Elisha's multiplying the loaves was somewhat like this, but far short of it, and then it was said, They shall eat and have, 2 Kings iv. 43.

It is the same divine power, though exerted in an ordinary way, which multiplieth the seed sown in the ground every year; and makes the earth yield her increase: so that what was brought out by handfuls, is brought home in sheaves: This is the Lord's doing: It is by Christ that all natural things consist, and by the word of his power that they are upheld.

22. ¶ And straightway Jesus constrained his disciples to get into a ship, and to go before him unto the other side, while he sent the multitudes away. 23. And when he had sent the multitudes away, he went up into a mountain apart to pray: and when the evening was come, he was there alone. 24. But the ship was now in the midst of the sea, tossed with waves: for the wind was contrary. 25. And in the fourth watch of the night Jesus went unto them, walking on the sea. 26. And when the disciples saw him walking on the sea, they were troubled, saying, It is a spirit; and they cried out for fear. 27. But straightway Jesus spake unto them, saying, Be of good cheer; it is I; be not afraid. 28. And Peter answered him and said, Lord, if it be thou, bid me come unto thee on the water. 29. And he said, Come. And when Peter was come down out of the ship, he walked on the water, to go to Jesus. 30. But when he saw the wind boisterous, he was afraid; and beginning to sink, he cried, saying, Lord, save me. 31. And immediately Jesus stretched forth his hand, and caught him, and said unto him, O thou of little faith, wherefore didst thou doubt? 32. And when they were come into the ship, the wind ceased. 33. Then they that were in the ship came and worshipped him, saying, Of a truth thou art the Son of God.

We have here the story of another miracle which Christ wrought for the relief of his disciples and followers, his walking upon the waters to his disciples. In the foregoing miracle he acted as the Lord of nature, improving its power for the supply of food that were in want; in this he acted as the Lord of nature, correcting and controlling its powers, for the succour of those that were in danger and distress. Observe,

First, Christ's dismissing of his disciples and the multitude, after he had fed them miraculously. He constrained his disciples to get into a ship, and go before him unto the other side, ver. 22. St. John gives a particular reason for the hasty breaking up of this assembly, because the people were so affected with the miracle of the loaves, that they were about to take him by force, and make him a king, John vi. 15. to avoid which, he immediately scattered the people, sent away the disciples, lest they should join with them, and he himself withdrew, John vi. 15.

When they had sitten down to eat and drink, they did not rise up to play, but each went to his business.

1. Christ sent the people away. It intimates somewhat of solemnity in the dismissing of them; he sent them away with a blessing, with some parting word of exhortation, counsel, and comfort, which might abide with them.

2. He constrained the disciples to go into a ship first, for till they were gone the people would not stir. The disciples were loth to go, and would not have gone if he had not constrained them. They were loth to go to sea without him. If thy presence go not with us, carry us not up hither, Exod. xxxiii. 15. They were loth to leave him alone, without any attendance, or any ship to wait for him; but they did it in pure obedience.

Secondly, Christ's retirement hereupon, ver. 23. He went up into a mountain apart to pray. Observe here,

1. That he was alone; he went apart into a solitary place, and was there all alone. Though he had so much work to do with others, yet he chose sometimes to be alone, to set us an example. Those are not Christ's followers, that do not care for being alone; that cannot enjoy themselves in solitude, when they have none else to converse with, none else to enjoy but God and their own hearts.

2. That he was alone at prayer; that was his business in this solitude, to pray. Though Christ as God was Lord of all, and was prayed to, yet Christ as a man had the form of a servant, of a beggar, and prayed. Christ has herein set before us an example of secret prayer, and the performance of it secretly, according to the rule he gave, Mat. vi. 6. Perhaps, in this mountain there was some private oratory or convenience, provided for such an occasion; it was usual among the Jews to have such. Observe, When the disciples went to sea, their Master went to prayer; when Peter was to be sifted as wheat, Christ prayed for him.

3. That he was long alone; there he was when the evening was come, and for ought appears, there he was till towards the morning, the fourth watch of the night. The night came on, and it was a stormy, tempestuous night, yet he continued instant in prayer. Note, It is good, at least sometimes upon special occasions and when we find our hearts enlarged, to continue long in secret prayer, and to take full scope in pouring out our hearts before the Lord. We must not restrain prayer, Job xv. 4.

Thirdly, The condition that the poor disciples were in at this time; Their ship was now in the midst of the sea, tossed with waves, ver. 24. We may observe here,

1. That they were got into the midst of the sea when the storm rose. We may have fair weather at the beginning of our voyage, and yet meet with storms before we arrive at the port we are bound for. Therefore let not him that girdeth on the harness boast as he that puts it off, but after a long calm expect some storm or other.

2. The disciples were now where Christ sent them, and yet met with this storm: Had they been flying from their Master and their work, as Jonah was when he was arrested by the storm, it had been a dreadful one indeed; but they had a special command from their Master to go to sea at this time, and were going about their work. Note, It is no new thing for Christ's disciples to meet with storms in the way of their duty, and to be sent to sea then when their Master foresees a storm; but let them not take it unkindly, what he doth they know not how, but they shall know hereafter, that Christ designs hereby to manifest himself with the more wonderful grace to them and for them.

3. It was a great discouragement to them now that they had not Christ with them, as they had formerly when they were in a storm; though he was then asleep indeed, yet he was soon awaked, chap. viii. 24. but now he was not with them at all. Thus Christ useth his disciples first to lesser difficulties, and then to greater, and so trains them up by degrees to live by faith, and not by sense.

4. Though the wind was contrary, and they were tossed with waves, yet being ordered by their Master to the other side, they did not tack about and come back again, but made the best of their way forward. Note, Though troubles and difficulties may disturb us in our duty, they must not drive us from it; but through the midst of them we must press forwards.

Fourthly, Christ's approach to them in this condition, ver. 25. and in this we have an instance,

1. Of his goodness, that he went unto them, as one that took cognizance of their case, and was under a concern about them, as a father about his children. Note, The extremity of the church and people of God is Christ's opportunity to visit them and appear for them; but he came not till the fourth watch towards three o'clock in the morning, for then the fourth watch began. It was in the morning watch that the Lord appeared for Israel in the Red sea, Exod. xiv. 24. so was this. He that keepeth Israel neither slumbers nor sleeps, but, when there is occasion, walks in darkness for their succour; helps, and that right early.

2. Of his power, that he went unto them walking on the sea. This is a great instance of Christ's sovereign dominion over all the creatures; they are all under his feet and at his command forget their natures, and change their qualities, that we called essential. We need not inquire how this was done, whether by condensing the surface of the water, when God pleased, the depths are congealed in the heart of the sea, Exod. xv. 8. or by suspending the gravitation of his body, which was transfigured as he pleased; it is sufficient that it proves his divine power, for it is God's prerogative to tread upon the waves of the sea, Job ix. 8. as it is to ride upon the wings of the wind. He that made the waters of the sea a wall for the redeemed of the Lord, Isa. li. 10. here makes them a walk for the Redeemer himself, who as Lord of all appears with one foot on the sea, and the other on dry land, Rev. x. 2. The same power that made iron swim, 2 Kings vi. 6. did this. What ailed thee, O thou sea? Psalm cxiv. 5. It was at the presence of the Lord. Thy way, O God, is in the sea, Psalm lxxvii. 19. Note, Christ can take what way he pleaseth to save his people.

Fifthly, Here is an account of what passed between Christ and his distressed friends upon his approach.

1. Between him and all the disciples. We are here told,

(1.) How their fears were raised, ver. 26. When they saw him walking on the sea, they were troubled, saying, It is a spirit; φάντασμα ἴστι, "it is an apparition;" so it might much better be rendered. It seems, the existence and appearance of spirits was generally believed by all except the Sadducees, whose doctrine Christ had warned his disciples against; yet doubtless, many supposed apparitions have been merely the creatures of men's own fear and fancy. These disciples said, It is a spirit: when they should have said, It is the Lord; it can be no other. Note, 1. Even the appearances and approaches of deliverance are sometimes the occasions of trouble and perplexity to God's people, who are sometimes most frightened when they are the least hurt; nay, when they are most favoured, as the Virgin Mary, Luke, i. 29. Exod. iii. 6, 7. The comforts of the Spirit of adoption, are introduced by the terrors of the spirit of bondage, Rom. vii. 15. 2. The appearance of a spirit, or the fancy of it, cannot but be frightful, and strike a terror upon us, because of the distance of the world of spirits from us, the just quarrel good spirits have with us, and the inveterate enmity evil spirits have against us: See Job iv. 14, 15. The more acquaintance we have with God, the Father of Spirits, and the more careful we are to keep ourselves in his love, the better able we shall be to deal with those fears. 3. The perplexing, disquieting fears of good people, arise from their mistakes and misapprehensions concerning Christ, his person, offices, and undertaking; the more clearly and truly we know his name, with the more assurance we shall trust in him, Psalm ix. 10. 4. A little thing frightens us in a storm. When without are fightings, no marvel that within are fears. Perhaps the disciples fancied this was some evil spirit that raised the storm. Note, Most of our danger from outward troubles ariseth from the occasion they give for inward troubles.

(2.) How these fears were silenced, ver. 27. He straightway relieved them by shewing them their mistake; when they were wrestling with the waves, he delayed his succour for some time, but hastened his succour against their fright, as much the more dangerous; he straightway laid that storm with his word, Be of good cheer, it is I; be not afraid.

1. He rectified their mistake, by making himself known to them, as Joseph to his brethren: It is I. He doth not name himself as he did to Paul, I am Jesus, for Paul as yet knew him not; but to these disciples it was enough to say, It is I; they knew his voice, as his sheep, John x. 45. as Mary Magdalen, John xx. 16. They need not ask, Who art thou, Lord? Art thou for us, or for our adversaries? but could say with the spouse, It is the voice of my beloved, Cant. ii. 8.—v. 2. True believers know it by a good token. It was enough to make them easy, to understand who it was they saw. Note, A right knowledge opens the door to true comfort, especially the knowledge of Christ.

2. He encouraged them against their fright. It is I; and therefore, (1.) Be of good cheer: Sapienter, be courageous; pluck up your spirits, and be courageous. If Christ's disciples be not cheerful in a storm, it is their own fault, he would have them so. (2.) Be not afraid; 1. Be not afraid of me, now you know it is I; surely you will not fear, for you know I mean you no hurt. Note, Christ will not be a terror to those to whom he manifests himself; when they come to understand him aright the terror will be over. 2. Be not afraid of the tempest, of the winds and waves, though noisy and very threatening, fear them not while I am so near you: I am he that concerns myself for you, and will not stand by and see you perish. Note, Nothing need be a terror to those that have Christ near them, and know he is theirs; no, not death itself.

2. Between him and Peter, ver. 28—31. where observe,

1. Peter's courage, and Christ's countenancing that.

(1.) It was very bold in Peter, that he would venture to come to Christ upon the water, ver. 28. Lord, if it be thou, bid me come to thee. Courage was Peter's master grace, and that made him so forward above the rest to express his love to Christ, though others perhaps loved him as well.

1. It is an instance of Peter's affection to Christ that he desired to come to him. When he saw Christ, whom, doubtless, during the storm he had many times wished for, he is impatient to be with him. He doth not say, Bid me walk upon the waters, as desiring it for the miracles sake; but bid me come to thee, as desiring it for Christ's sake: let me come to thee, no matter how. Note, True love will break through fire and water, if duly called to it, to come to Christ. Christ was coming to them to succour and deliver them; Lord, said Peter, bid me come to thee. Note, When Christ is coming towards us in a way of mercy, we must go forth to meet him in a way of duty; and herein we must be willing and bold to venture with him and venture for him. Those that would have benefit by Christ as a Saviour, must thus by faith come to him. Christ had been now for some time absent, and hereby it appears why he absented himself; it was to in-dear himself so much the more to his disciples at his return, to make it highly seasonable and doubly acceptable. Note, When for a small moment Christ has forsaken his people, his returns are welcome, and affectionately embraced; when gracious souls, after long seeking, find their beloved at last, they hold him, and will not let him go, Can. iii. 4.

2. It is an instance of Peter's caution and due observance of the will of Christ, that he would not come without a warrant. Note, If it be thou, I will come; but if it be thou, bid me come. Note, The boldest spirits must wait for a call to hazardous enterprises, and we must not rashly and presumptuously thrust ourselves upon them. Our will to services and sufferings is interpreted, not willingness but willfulness, if it have not a regard to the will of Christ, and be not regulated by his call and command. Such extraordinary warrants as this to Peter we are not now to expect, but must have recourse to the general rules of the world, which how to apply to particular cases with the help of providential hints, wisdom is profitable to direct.

3. It is an instance of Peter's faith and resolution, that he ventured upon the water when Christ bid him. To quit the safety of the ship, and throw himself into the jaws of death, to despise those threatening waves he so lately dreaded, argued a very strong dependence upon the power and word of Christ. What difficulty or danger could stand before such a faith and such a zeal.

(2.) It was very kind and condescending in Christ that he was pleased to own him in it, ver. 29. He might have condemned the proposal as foolish and rash; nay, and as proud and assuming; shall Peter pretend to do as his master doth? But Christ knew that it came from a sincere and zealous affection to him, and graciously accepted of it. Note, Christ is well pleased with the expressions of his people's love, though mixt with manifold infirmities, and makes the best of them.

1. He bid him come. When the Pharisees asked a sign, they had not only a repulse but a reproof for it, because they did it with a design to tempt Christ; when Peter asked a sign he had it, because he did it with a resolution to trust Christ. The gospel call is, Come, come to Christ; venture all in his hand, and commit the keeping of your souls to him; venture through a stormy sea, a troublesome world, to Jesus Christ.

2. He bore him out when he did come. He walked upon the water. The communion of true believers with Christ, is represented by their being quickened with him, and raised up with him, and made to sit with him, Eph. ii. 5, 6, and their being crucified with him, Gal. ii. 20. Now methinks it is represented in this story by their walking with him on the water: through the strength of Christ we are born up above the world, are enabled to trample upon it, kept from sinking into it, from being overwhelmed by it, obtain a victory over it, 1 John v. 4, by faith in Christ's victory, John xv. 33, and with him are crucified to it, Gal. vi. 14. See blessed Paul walking upon the water with Jesus, and more than a conqueror through him, and treading upon all the threatening waves as not able to separate him from the love of Christ, Rom. viii. 35, &c. Thus the sea of the world is become like a sea of glass, congealed so as to bear; and they that have gotten the victory stand upon it and sing, Rev. xv. 2, 3.

He walked upon the waters, not for diversion or ostentation, but to go to Jesus, and in that he was thus wonderfully borne up. Note, When our souls are following hard after God, then it is his that his right hand upholds us; it was David's experience, Psalm lxxiii. 8. Special supports are promised, and are to be expected only in spiritual pursuits. When God bears his Israel upon eagles wings, it is to bring them to himself, Exod. xix. 4. Nor can we ever come to Jesus unless we be upheld by his power; it is in his own strength that we wrestle with him, that we reach after him, that we press forward towards the mark, being kept by the power of God, which power we must depend upon, as Peter when he walked upon the water; and there is no danger of sinking while underneath are the everlasting arms.

2. Here is Peter's cowardice, and Christ's reproving him and succouring him. Christ bid him come, not only that he might walk upon the water and so know Christ's power, but that he might sink and so know his own weakness; for as he would encourage his faith, so he would check his confidence, and make him ashamed of it. Observe then,

1. Peter's great fear, ver. 30. He was afraid. The strongest faith and the greatest courage has a mixture of fear. Those that can say, Lord, I believe; must say, Lord, help my unbelief. Nothing but perfect love will quite cast out fear. Good men often fail in those graces they are most eminent for, and which they have then in exercise, to shew that they have not yet attained. Peter was very stout at first, but afterwards his heart failed him. The lengthening out of a trial discovers the weakness of faith.

Here is, (1.) The cause of this fear: He saw the wind boisterous. While Peter kept his eye fixed upon Christ, and upon his word and power, he walked upon the water well enough; but when he took notice withal of the danger he was in, and observed how the floods lift up their waves, then he feared. Note, Looking at difficulties with an eye of sense, more than at precepts and promises with an eye of faith, is at the bottom of all our inordinate fears, both as to public and personal concerns. Abraham was strong in faith, because he considered not his own body, Rom. iv. 19, he minded not the discouraging improbabilities which the promise lay under, but kept his eye on God's power, and so against hope believed in hope, ver. 18. Peter, when he saw the wind boisterous, shall have remembered what he had seen, chap. viii. 27, when the winds and the sea obeyed Christ; but therefore we fear continually every day, because we forget the Lord our Maker, Isa. li. 12, 13.

(2.) The effect of this fear: He began to sink. While faith kept up he kept up above water, but when faith staggered he began to sink. Note, The sinking of our spirits is owing to the weakness of our faith, we are upheld (but it is as we are saved) through faith, 1 Pet. i. 5, and therefore, when our souls are cast down and disquieted, the sovereign remedy is, to hope in God, Psalm xliiii. 5. It is likely Peter, being bred a fisherman, could swim very well: it should seem so by John xxi. 7, and perhaps he trusted in part to that when he cast himself into the sea; if he could not walk, he could swim; but Christ let him begin to sink, to shew him that it was Christ's right hand and his holy arm, not any skill of his own, that was his security: It was Christ's great mercy to him that, upon the failing of his faith, he did not leave him to sink outright, to sink to the bottom as a stone, Exod. xv. 5, but gave him time to cry, Lord, save me. Such is the care of Christ concerning true believers, though weak, they do but begin to sink! A man is never sunk, never undone till he is in hell. Peter walked as he believed: to him, as to others, the rule held good, According to your faith be it unto you.

(3.) The remedy he had recourse to in this distress, the old tried approved remedy, and that was prayer; he cried, Lord, save me. Observe, 1. The manner of his praying; it is fervent and importunate: He cried, Note, When faith is weak, prayer should be strong. Our Lord Jesus hath taught us in the day of our fear to offer up strong cries. Heb. v. 7. Sense of danger will make us cry, sense of duty and dependence on God should make us cry to him. The manner of his prayer was pertinent and to the purpose: He cried, Lord, save me. Christ is the great Saviour, he came to save; those that would be saved must not only come to him, but cry to him for salvation; but we are never brought to this, till we find ourselves sinking; sense of need will drive us to him.

2. Christ's great favour to Peter in this fright. Though there was a mixture of presumption with Peter's faith in his first adventure, and of unbelief with his faith in his after fainting, yet Christ did not cast him off; for,

(1.) He saved him; he answered him with the saving strength of his right hand, Psalm xx. 6, for immediately he stretched forth his hand and caught him. Note, Christ's time to save is when we sink, Psalm cxviii. 1—7, he helps at a dead-lift: Christ's hand is still stretched out to all believers to keep them from sinking. Those whom he hath once apprehended as his own, and hath snatched as brands out of the burning, he will catch out of the water too. Though he may seem to have let him hold, he doth but seem to do so, for they shall never perish, neither shall any man pluck them out of his hand. John x. 28. Never fear, he will hold his own. Our deliverance from our own fears, which else would overwhelm us, is owing to the hand of his power and grace, Psalm xxxiv. 4.

(2.) He rebuked him; for as many as he loves and saves, he reproves and chides. O thou of little faith, wherefore didst thou doubt? Note, 1. Faith may be true, and yet weak; at first like a grain of mustard seed. Peter had said enough to bring him upon the water, yet because not enough to carry him through, Christ tells him he had but little. 2. Our discouraging doubts and fears are all owing to the weakness of our faith: therefore we doubt, because we are but of little faith. It is the business of faith to resolve doubts, the doubts of sense in a stormy lay, so as even then to keep the head above water. Could we but believe more, we should doubt less. 3. The weakness of our faith, and the prevalency of our doubts, is very displeasing to our Lord Jesus. It is true, he doth not cast off weak believers, but it is as true that he is not pleased with weak faith, no not in those that are nearest to him. Wherefore didst thou doubt? what reason was there for it? Note, Our doubts and fears would soon vanish before a strict inquiry into the cause of them; for all things considered, there is no good reason why Christ's disciples should be of a doubtful mind, no not in a stormy day, because he is ready to them, a very present help.

Sixthly, The ceasing of the storm, ver. 32. When Christ was come into the ship, they were present at the shore. Christ walked upon the water, till he came to the ship, and then went into that, when he could as easily have walked to the shore; but when ordinary means are to be had miracles are not to be expected: Though Christ needs not instruments for the doing of his work, he is pleased to use them. Observe, when Christ came into the ship, Peter came in with him. Companions with Christ in his patience, shall be companions in his kingdom, Rev. i. 9. Those that walk with him, shall reign with him; that are exposed and suffer with him, shall triumph with him.

When they were come into the ship, immediately the storm ceased, for it had done its work, its trying work. He that has gathered the wind into his fists, and bound the waters in a garment, is the same that ascended and descended, and his word, his will, even stormy winds fulfil, Psalm cxlvi. 8. When Christ comes into a soul, he makes winds and storms to cease there, and commands peace. Welcome Christ, and the noise of her waves will soon be quelled. The way to be still is, to know that he is God, that he is the Lord with us.

Seventhly, The adoration paid to Christ hereupon, ver. 33. They that were in the ship came and worshipped him, and said, Of a truth thou art the Son of God. Two good uses they made of this distress, and this deliverance.

1. It was a confirmation of their faith in Christ, and abundantly convinced them that the fulness of the Godhead dwelt in him; for none but the world's Creator could multiply the loaves, none but its Governor could tread upon the waters of the sea; they therefore yield to the evidence, and make confession of their faith, Thou truly art the Son of God. They knew before that he was the Son of God, but now they knew it better. Faith, after a conflict with unbelief; is sometimes the more active, and gets to greater degrees of strength by being exercised. Now they know it of a truth. Note, It is good for us to know more and more of the certainty of those things wherein we have been instructed, Luke i. 4. Faith then grows when it arrives to a full assurance, when it sees clearly, and saith, Of a truth.

2. They took occasion from it to give him the glory due unto his name. They not only owned that great truth, but were suitably affected with it, they worshipped Christ. Note, When Christ manifests his glory for us, we ought to return it to him, Psalm l. 15. I will deliver thee and thou shalt glorify me. Their worship and adoration of Christ was thus expressed, Of a truth thou art the Son of God. Note, The matter of our creed may and must be made the matter of our praise. Faith is the proper principle of worship, and worship the general product of faith. He that comes to God must believe; and he that believes in God will come. Heb. ix. 6.

34. ¶ And when they were gone over, they came into the land of Gennesaret. 35. And when the men of that place had knowledge of him, they sent out into all that country round about, and brought unto him all that were diseased; 36. And besought him that they might only touch the hem of his garment: and as many as touched were made perfectly whole.

We have here an account of miracles by wholesale, which Christ wrought on the other side of the water, in the land of Gennesaret: Wherever Christ went, he was doing good. Gennesaret was a tract of land that lay between Bethsaida and Capernaum, and either gave the name to, or took the name from this sea, which is called, Luke v. 7. The lake of Gennesaret; it signifies the valley of branches. Observe here,

First, The forwardness and faith of the men of that place. These were more noble than the Gergesenes their neighbours, who were borderers upon the same lake: Those besought Christ to depart from them, they had no occasion for him; these besought him to help them, they had need of him.

Christ reckons it the greatest honour we can do him to make use of him. Now here we are told,

1. How the men of that place were brought to Christ; they had knowledge of him. It is likely his miraculous passage over the sea, which they that were in the ship would industriously spread the report of, might help to make way for his entertainment in those parts: and perhaps it was one thing Christ intended in it, for he has great reaches in what he doth. This they had knowledge of, and of other the miracles Christ had wrought, and therefore they flocked to him. Note, They that know Christ's name, will make their application to him: if Christ were better known, he would not be neglected as he is: he is trusted as far as he is known.

They had knowledge of him, i. e. of his being among them, and that he would be but a while among them. Note, The discerning of the day of our opportunities is a good step towards the improvement of it. This was the condemnation of the world, that Christ was in the world and the world knew him not, John i. 42. Jerusalem knew him not, Luke xix. 13. but there were some that, when he was among them, had knowledge of him. It is better to know that there is a prophet among us, than that there has been one, Ezek. ii. 5.

2. How they brought others to Christ, by giving notice to their neighbours of Christ's being come into those parts. They sent out into all that country. Note, Those that have got the knowledge of Christ themselves, should do all they can to bring others acquainted with him too. We must not eat these spiritual morsels alone; there is in Christ enough for us all, so that there is nothing got by monopolizing. When we have opportunities of getting good to our souls, we should bring as many as we can to share with us. More than we think of would close with opportunities, if they were but called upon and invited to them. They sent into their own country, because it was their own and they desired the welfare of it. Note, We can no better testify our love to our country, than by promoting and propagating the knowledge of Christ in it. Neighbourhood is an advantage of doing good, which must be improved. Those that are near to us, we should contrive to do something for, at least by our example, to bring them near to Christ.

3. What their business was with Christ; not only, perhaps not chiefly, if at all, to be taught, but to have their sick healed: They brought unto him all that were diseased. If love to Christ and his doctrine will not bring them to him, yet self-love would. Did we but rightly seek our own things, the things of our own peace and welfare, we should seek the things of Christ. We should do him honour and please him, by deriving grace and righteousness from him. Note, Christ is the proper person to bring the diseased to; whither should they go but to the physician, to the Son of righteousness that hath healing under his wings?

4. How they made their application to him. They besought him that they might only touch the hem of his garment, ver. 36. They applied themselves to him, 1. With great importunity they besought him. Well may we beseech to be healed, when God by his ministers beseecheth us that we will be healed. Note, The greatest favours and blessings are to be obtained from Christ by entreaty. Ask, and it shall be given. 2. With great humility; they came to him as those that were sensible of their distance, humbly beseeching him to help them: and their desiring to touch the hem of his garment intimates, they thought themselves unworthy that he should take any particular notice of them, that he should so much as speak to their case, much less touch them for their cure; but they will look upon it as a great favour, if he will give them leave to touch the hem of his garment. The eastern nations shew respect to their princes by kissing their sleeve or skirt. 3. With great assurance of the all-sufficiency of his power, not doubting but they should be healed, even by touching the hem of his garment; that they should receive abundant communications from him by the smallest token or symbol of communion with him. They did not expect the formality of striking his hand over the place of persons diseased, as Naaman did, 2 Kings v. 11. but were sure there was in him such an overflowing fulness of healing virtue, that they could not fail of a cure that were but admitted near him. It was in this country and neighbourhood that the woman with the bloody issue was cured by touching the hem of his garment, and was commended for her faith, Matt. ix. 20, 21, 22 and thence probably they took occasion to ask this. Note, The experience of others in their attendance upon Christ may be of use both to direct and to encourage us in our attendance on him. It is good using those means and methods which others before us have sped well in the use of.

Secondly, The fruit and success of this their application to Christ. It was not in vain that the seed of Jacob sought him, for as many as touched were made perfectly whole. 1. Note, Christ's cures are perfect cures. Those that he heals he heals perfectly. He doth not do his work by halves. Though spiritual healing be not perfected at first, yet doubtless he that has begun the good work, will perform it, Phil. i. 6. 2. There is abundance of healing virtue in Christ for all that apply themselves to him, be they never so many. That precious ointment which was poured on his head ran down to the skirts of his garment, Psal. cxxxiii. 2. The least of Christ's institutions, like the hem of his garment, is replenished with the overflowing fulness of his grace, and he is able to save to the uttermost. 3. The healing virtue that is in Christ, is put forth for the benefit of those that by a true and lively faith touch him. Christ is in heaven, but his word is nigh us, and he himself in that word. When we mix faith with the word, apply it to ourselves, depend upon it, and submit to the influences and commands of it, then we touch the hem of Christ's garment. It is but thus touching and we are made whole. On such easy terms are spiritual cures offered by him, that we may truly be said to heal freely; so that if our souls die of their wounds it is not long of our physician, it is not for want of skill or will in him; but it is purely long of ourselves. He could have healed us, he would have healed us, but we would not be healed; so that our blood will lie upon our own heads.

C H A P. XV.

In this chapter we have our Lord Jesus, as the great Prophet teaching, as the great Physician healing, and as the great Shepherd of the sheep feeding; as the Father of spirits instructing them; as the Conqueror of Satan dispossessing him, and as concerned for the bodies of his people, providing for them. Here is, (1.) Christ's discourse with the Scribes and Pharisees about human traditions and injunctions, ver. 1-9. (2.) His discourse with the multitude and with his disciples concerning the things that defile a man, ver. 10-20. (3.) His casting the devil out of the woman of Canaan's daughter, ver. 21-28. (4.) His healing of all that were brought to him, ver. 29, 30, 31. (5.) His feeding four thousand men, with seven loaves and a few little fishes, ver. 32-39.

1. THEN came to Jesus, Scribes and Pharisees, which were of Jerusalem, saying, 2. Why do thy disciples transgress the tradition of the elders? for they wash not their hands, when they eat bread. 3. But he answered and said unto them, Why do ye also transgress the commandment of God by your tradition? 4. For God commanded, saying, Honour thy father and mother: and, He that curseth father or mother, let him die the death. 5. But ye say, Whosoever shall say to his father or his mother, It is a gift by whatsoever thou mightest be profited by me, 6. And honour not his father or his mother, he shall be free. Thus have ye made the commandment of God of none effect by your tradition. 7. Ye hypocrites, well did Esaias prophecy of you, saying, 8. This people draweth nigh unto me with their mouth, and honoureth me with their lips: but their heart is far from me. 9. But in vain they do worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men

Evil manners, we say, beget good laws: The intemperate heat of the Jewish teachers for the support of their hierarchy, occasioned many excellent discourses of our Saviour's for the settling of the truth, as here,

First, Here is the caviol of the Scribes and Pharisees at Christ's disciples, for eating with unwashed hands. The Scribes and Pharisees were the topping men of the Jewish church, men whose gain was godliness, great enemies to the gospel of Christ, but colouring their opposition with a pretence of zeal for the law of Moses; when really nothing was intended but the support of their own tyranny over the consciences of men. They were men of learning and men of business. These Scribes and Pharisees here introduced were of Jerusalem, the holy city, the head city, whither the tribes went up, and where were set the thrones of judgment; they should therefore have been better than others, but they were worse. Note, External privileges if they be not duly improved, commonly well men up the more with pride and malignity. Jerusalem, which should have been a pure spring, was now become a poisoned sink. How is the faithful city become a harlot!

Now if these great men be the accusers, pray what is the accusation? What articles do they exhibit against the disciples of Christ? Why, truly the thing laid to their charge is non-conformity to the canons of their church, ver. 2. Why do thy disciples transgress the tradition of the elders? This charge they make good in a particular instance, they wash not their hands when they eat bread. A very high misdemeanor! It was a sign Christ's disciples carried themselves inoffensively, when this was the worst thing they could charge them with.

Observe, 1. What was the tradition of the elders. That people should often wash their hands, and always at meat. This they placed a great deal of religion in, supposing that the meat they touched with unwashed hands would be defiling to them. The Pharisees practised this themselves, and with a great deal of strictness imposed it upon others, not under civil penalties, but as matter of conscience, and making it a sin against God if they did not do it. Rabbi Jose determined, "that to eat with unwashed hands is as great a sin as adultery." And Rabbi Akiba being kept a close prisoner, having water sent him both to wash his hands with and to drink with his meat, the greatest part being accidentally shed, he washed his hands with the remainder, though he left himself none to drink, saying he would rather die than transgress the tradition of the elders. Nay, they would not eat meat with one that did not wash before meat. This mighty zeal in so small a matter would appear very strange, if we did not still see it incident to church oppressors, not only to be fond of practising their own inventions, but to be furious in pressing their own impositions.

1. What was the transgression of this tradition or injunction by the disciples; it seems they did not wash their hands when they ate bread, which was the more offensive to the Pharisees, because they were men that in other things were strict and conscientious. The custom was innocent enough, and had a decency in its civil use: we read of the water, for purifying at the marriage where Christ was present, John ii. 6. though Christ turned it into wine, and so put an end to that use of it. But when it came to be practised and imposed as a religious rite and ceremony, and such a stress laid upon it, the disciples though weak in knowledge, yet were so well taught as not to comply with it or observe it; no not when the Scribes and Pharisees had their eye upon them. They had already learned St. Paul's lesson, All things are lawful for me, no doubt it is lawful to wash before meat; but I will not be brought under the power of any; especially not of those who said to their souls, Bow down that we may go over, 1 Cor. vi. 12.

3. What was the complaint of the Scribes and Pharisees against them; they quarrel with Christ about it, supposing that he allowed them in it, as he did no doubt by his own example. Why do thy disciples transgress the canons of the church? and why dost thou suffer them to do it? It was well the complaint was made to Christ; for the disciples themselves, though they knew their duty in this case, yet perhaps were not so well able to give a reason for what they did as were to be wished.

Secondly, Here is Christ's answer to this caviol, and his justification of the disciples in that which was charged upon them as a transgression. Note, While we stand fast in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free, he will be sure to hear us out in it.

Two ways Christ replies upon them,

1. By way of recrimination, ver. 3-6. They were spying motives in the eyes of his disciples, but Christ shews them a beam in their own. But that which he charges upon them is not barely a recrimination, for it will be no vindication of ourselves to condemn our reprovers; but it is such a censure of their tradition (and the authority of that was it they built their charge upon) as makes not only a non-compliance lawful, but an opposition a duty. That human authority must never be submitted to which sets up in competition with divine authority.

The charge in general is, you transgress the commandment of God by your tradition. They called it the tradition of the elders, laying stress upon the antiquity of the usage, and the authority of them that imposed it, as the church of Rome doth upon fathers and councils: but Christ calls it their tradition. Note, Illegal impositions will be laid to the charge of those that support and maintain them and keep them up, as well as of those who first invented and enjoined them, Micah vi. 16. You transgress the commandment of God. Note, Those that are most zealous of their own impositions, are commonly most careless of God's commands: which is a good reason why Christ's disciples should stand upon their guard against such impositions, lest, though at first they seem only to infringe the liberty of Christians, they come at length to confront the authority of Christ. Though the Pharisees in this command of washing before meat, did not intrench upon any command of of God; yet because in other instances they did, he justifies his disciples disobedience to this.

2. The proof of this charge is in a particular instance, that of their transgressing the fifth commandment.

1. Let us see what the command of God is, ver. 4. what the precept, and what the sanction of the law is.

The precept is, Honour thy father and thy mother; this is enjoined by the common Father of mankind, and by paying respect to them whom providence has made the instruments of our being, we give honour to him who is the author of it, who has thereby, as to us, put some of his image upon them. The whole of children's duty to their parents is included in this of honouring them, which is the spring and foundation of all the rest: If I be a father, where is my honour? Our Saviour here supposes it to mean the duty of children maintaining their parents, and ministering to their wants, if there be occasion, and being every way serviceable to their comfort. Honour widows, i. e. maintain them, 1 Tim. v. 3.

The sanction of this law in the fifth commandment, is a promise, that thy days may be long; but our Saviour waves that, lest any should thence infer it to be only a thing commendable and profitable, and insists upon the penalty annexed to the breach of this commandment in another scripture, which speaks the duty highly and indispensably necessary; He that curseth father or mother, let him die the death: this law we have, Exod. xxi. 17. The sin of cursing parents is here opposed to the duty of honouring them. Those that speak ill of their parents, or with ill to them, that mock at them, or give them taunting or opprobrious language, break this law. If to call a brother Raca be so penal, what is it to call a father so? By our Saviour's application of this law, it appears that denying service or relief to parents is included in cursing of them. Though the language be respectful enough, and nothing abusive in it, yet what will that avail, if the deeds be not agreeable? It is but like him that said, I go, Sir, and went not, Matt. xxi. 30.

2. Let us see what was the contradiction which the tradition of the elders gave to this command. It was not direct and downright, but implicit; their casuists gave them such rules as furnished them with an easy evasion from the obligation of this command, ver. 5, 6. You hear what God saith, but ye say so and so. Note, That which men say, even great men and learned men, and men in authority, must be examined by that which God saith; and if it be found either contrary or inconsistent, it may and must be rejected, Act. iv. 19. Observe,

1. What their tradition was; that a man could not in any case bestow his worldly estate better than to give it to the priests, and devote it to the service of the temple; and that when any thing was so devoted, it was not only unlawful to alienate it, but all other obligations, though never so just and sacred, were thereby superseded, and a man was thereby discharged from them. And this proceeded partly from their ceremoniousness and the superstitious regard they had to the temple, and partly from their covetousness and love of money; for what was given to the temple they were gainers by. The former was in pretence, the latter was in truth at the bottom of this tradition.

2. How they allowed the application of this to the case of children. When their parents necessities called for their assistance, they pleaded, that all they could spare from themselves and their children they had devoted to the treasury of the temple. It is a gift, by whatsoever thou mightest be profited by me, and therefore their parents must expect nothing from them; suggesting withal, that the spiritual advantages of what was so devoted would redound to the parents, who must live upon the air. This they taught was a good and valid plea, and many undutiful unnatural children made use of it, and they justified them in it, and said, He shall be free; so we supply the sense: Some go further, and supply it thus, He doth well, his days shall be long in the land, and he shall be looked upon as having duly observed the fifth commandment. The pretence of religion would make his refusal to provide for his parents not only passable but plausible. But the absurdity and impiety of this tradition was very evident; for revealed religion was intended to improve, not overthrow natural religion; one of the fundamental laws of which is this of honouring our parents: and had they known what that meant, I will have justice and mercy, and not sacrifice, they had not thus made the most arbitrary rituals destructive of the most necessary morals. This was making the command of God of none effect. Note, Whatever leads to, or countenanceth disobedience, doth in effect make void the command; and they that take upon them to dispense with God's law, do in Christ's account repeal and disannul it. To break the law is bad, but to teach men so, as the Scribes and Pharisees did, is much worse, Matt. v. 19. To what purpose is the command given, if it be not obeyed? The rule is as to us of none effect, if we be not ruled by it. It is time for thee, Lord, to work; high time for the great reformer, the great refiner to appear; for they have made void thy law, Psal. cxix. 126. Not only sinned against the commandment, but as far as in them lay, sinned away the commandment. But thanks be to God, in spite of them and all their traditions, the command stands in full force, power and virtue.

2. The other part of Christ's answer is by way of reprehension, and that which he here chargeth them with is hypocrisy, ye hypocrites, ver. 7. Note, It is the prerogative of him who searcheth the heart and knows what is in man, to pronounce who are hypocrites. The eye of man can perceive open profaneness, but it is only the eye of Christ that can discern hypocrisy, Luke xvi. 15. And as it is a sin which his eye discovers, so it is a sin which of all other his soul hates.

Now Christ fetches his reproof from Isa. xxix. 13. Well did Isaiah prophesy of you. Isaiah spoke it of the men of that generation to whom he prophesied, yet Christ applies it to these Scribes and Pharisees. Note, The reproofs of sin and sinners, which we find in scripture, were designed to reach the like persons and practices to the end of the world; for they are not of private interpretation, 2 Pet. i. 20. The sinners of the latter days are prophesied of, 1 Tim. iv. 1. 2 Tim. iii. 1. 2 Pet. iii. 3. Threatenings directed against others belong to us, if we be guilty of the same sins. Isaiah prophesied not of them only, but of all other hypocrites, against whom that word of his is still levelled, and stands in force. The prophecies of scripture are every day in the fulfilling.

This prophecy doth exactly decipher an hypocritical nation, Isa. ix. 17.

—x. 6. Here is,

1. The description of hypocrites, in two things,

1. In their own performances of religious worship, ver. 8. When they draw nigh to God with their mouth, and honour him with their lips, their heart is far from him. Observe,

1. How far an hypocrite goes; he draws nigh to God, and honours him: he is in profession a worshipper of God. The Pharisee went up to the temple to pray; he doth not stand at that distance which those are at that live without God in the world, but has a name among the people near unto him. They honour him, i. e. they take on them to honour God, they join with those that do so. Some honour God has even from the services of hypocrites, as they help to keep up the face and form of godliness in the world, whence God fetches honour to himself, though they intend it not to him. When God's enemies submit themselves but feignedly, when they lie unto him, so the word is, Psal. lvi. 3. it redounds to his honour, and he gets himself a name.

2. Where he rests and takes up; this is done but with his mouth and with his lips. It is piety but from the teeth outwards; he shews much love, and that is all, there is in his heart no true love; they make their voice to be heard, Isa. lviii. 4. mention the name of the Lord, Isa. xlviii. 1. Hypocrites are those that only make a lip-labour of religion and religious worship. In word and tongue the worst hypocrites may do as well as the best saints, and speak as fair with Jacob's voice.

3. What that is wherein he comes short, it is in the main matter, their heart is far from me, habitually alienated and estranged, Eph. iv. 18. actually wandering and dwelling upon something else; no serious thoughts of God, no pious affections towards him, no concern about the soul and eternity, no thoughts agreeable to the service. God is near in their mouth, but far from their reins, Jer. xii. 2. Ezek. xxxiii. 31. The heart, with the fool's eyes, is in the ends of the earth. It is a silly dove that is without heart, and so it is a silly duty, Hos. vii. 11. An hypocrite saith one thing, but thinks another. The great thing that God looks at and requires is the heart, Prov. xxi. 26. if that be far from him it is not a reasonable service, and therefore not an acceptable one, it is the sacrifice of fools, Eccles. v. 1.

2. In their prescriptions to others; this is an instance of their hypocrisy, that they teach for doctrines the commandments of men. The Jews then, as the Papists since, paid the same respect to oral tradition that they did to the word of God, receiving it pari pietatis affectu ac reverentia, Conc. Trident. Sess. 4. Decr. 1. When men's inventions are tacked to God's institutions, and imposed accordingly; this is hypocrisy, a mere human religion. The commandments of men are properly conversant about the things of men, but God will have his own work done by his own rules, and accepts not that which he did not himself appoint. That only comes to him that comes from him.

2. The doom of hypocrites, it is put in a little compass, in vain do they worship me. Their worship doth not attain the end for which it was appointed, it will neither please God nor profit themselves. If it be not in spirit, it is not in truth, and so it is all nothing. That man who only seems to be religious, but is not so, his religion is vain, James i. 26. and if our religion be a vain oblation, a vain religion, how great is that vanity! How sad is it to live in an age of prayers and sermons, and sabbaths and sacraments, in vain, to beat the air in all these; it is so, if the heart be not with God in them. Lip-labour is lost labour, Isa. i. 11. Hypocrites sow the wind, and reap the whirlwind; trust in vanity, and vanity will be their recompence.

Thus Christ justified his disciples in their disobedience to the traditions of the elders, and this the Scribes and Pharisees got by their cavilling: we read not of any reply they made; if they were not satisfied, yet they were silenced, and could not resist the power wherewith Christ spoke.

10. ¶ And he called the multitude, and said unto them, Hear, and understand: 11. Not that which goeth into the mouth defileth a man; but that which cometh out of the mouth, this defileth a man. 12. Then came his disciples, and said unto him, Knowest thou that the Pharisees were offended after they heard this saying? 13. But he answered and said, Every plant which my heavenly Father hath not planted, shall be rooted up. 14. Let them alone: they be blind leaders of the blind. And if the blind lead the blind, both shall fall into the ditch. 15. Then answered Peter and said unto him, Declare unto us this parable. 16. And Jesus said, Are ye also yet without understanding? 17. Do not ye yet understand, that whatsoever entereth in at the mouth, goeth into the belly, and is cast out into the draught? 18. But those things which proceed out of the mouth come forth from the heart; and they defile the man. 19. For out of the heart proceed evil thoughts, murders, adulteries, fornications, thefts, false witness, blasphemies: 20. These are the things which defile a man: but to eat with unwashen hands, defileth not a man.

Christ having proved that the disciples in eating with unwashen hands were not to be blamed, as transgressing the traditions and injunctions of the elders, comes here to shew that they were not to be blamed as having done any thing that was in itself evil. In the former part of his discourse he overturned the authority of the law, and in this the reason of it. Observe,

First, The solemn introduction of this discourse, ver. 10. He called the multitude. They were withdrawn while Christ discoursed with the Scribes and Pharisees; probably those proud men ordered them to withdraw, as not willing to talk with Christ in their hearing; Christ must favour them at their pleasure with a discourse in private. But Christ had a regard to the multitude, he soon dispatched the Scribes and Pharisees, and then turned them off and invited the mob, the multitude, to be his hearers: thus the poor are evangelized, and the foolish things of the world, and things that are despised hath Christ chosen. The humble Jesus embraceth those whom the proud Pharisees looked upon with disdain, and to them he designed it for a mortification. He turns from them as wilful and unteachable, and turns to the multitude, who though weak, were humble and willing to be taught. To them he said, Hear and understand. Note, What we hear from the mouth of Christ, we must give all diligence to understand. Not only scholars, but even the multitude, the ordinary people, must apply their minds to understand the words of Christ. He therefore calls upon them to understand, because the lesson he was now about to teach them was contrary to the notions they had sucked in with their milk from their teachers; and overturned many of the customs and usages which they were wedded to, and laid stress upon. Note, There is need of a great intention of mind and clearness of understanding, to free men from those corrupt principles and practices which they have been bred up in, and long accustomed to; for in that case the understanding is commonly bribed and biased by prejudice.

Secondly, The truth itself laid down, ver. 11. in two propositions, which were opposite to the vulgar errors of that time, and were therefore surprising.

1. Not that which goes into the mouth defiles the man. It is not the kind or quality quality of our food, nor the dirtiness of our hands, that affects the soul with any moral pollution or defilement. The kingdom of God is not meat and drink, Rom. xiv. 17. That defiles the man, by which guilt is contracted before God, and the man is rendered offensive to him, and disfit for communion with him: now what we eat, if we do not eat unreasonably and immoderately, doth not this; for to the pure all things are pure, Tit. i. 15. The Pharisees carried the ceremonial pollutions by eating such and such meats much further than the law intended, and burdened it with additions of their own, which our Saviour witnessed against; intending hereby to pave the way to a repeal of the ceremonial law in that matter. He was now beginning to teach his followers to call nothing common or unclean; and if Peter, when he was bid to kill and eat, had remembered this word, he would not have said, Not so, Lord, Acts x. 13, 14, 15—28.

2. But that which comes out of the mouth, this defiles a man. We are polluted not by the meat we eat with unwashed hands, but by the words we speak from an unsanctified heart: so it is that the mouth causeth the flesh to sin, Eccles. v. 6. Christ in a former discourse had laid a great stress upon our words, Matt. xii. 36, 37. and that was intended for reproof and warning to those that cavilled at him: this here is intended for reproof and warning to those that cavilled at the disciples and censured them. It is not the disciples that defile themselves with what they eat, but the Pharisees that defile themselves with what they speak spitefully and censoriously of them. Note, Those who charge guilt upon others for transgressing the commandments of men, many times bring greater guilt upon themselves by transgressing the law of God against rash judging. Those most defile themselves who are most forward to censure the defilements of others.

Thirdly, The offence that was taken at this truth, and the account brought to Christ of that offence, ver. 12. The disciples said unto him, Knowest thou that the Pharisees were offended, and didst thou not foresee that they would be so, at this saying? and would think the worse of thee and of thy doctrine for it, and be the more enraged at thee?

1. It was not strange that the Pharisees should be offended at this plain truth, for they were men made up of error and enmity, mistake and malice. Sore eyes cannot bear clear light; and nothing is more provoking to proud imposers than the undeceiving of those whom they have first blindfolded, and then enslaved. It should seem that the Pharisees, who were strict observers of the traditions, were more offended than the Scribes, who were the teachers of them; and perhaps they were as much galled with the latter part of Christ's doctrine, which taught a strictness in the government of our tongue, as with the former part, which taught an indifferency about washing our hands. Great contenders for the formalities of religion, being commonly as great contempters of the substantial of it.

2. The disciples thought it strange their Master should say that which he knew would give so much offence; he did not use to do so: sure, think they, if he had considered now provoking it would be he would not have said it. But he knew what he said, and to whom he said it, and what would be the effect of it; and would teach us, that though in indifferent things we must be tender of giving offence, yet we must not for fear of that balk any truth or duty. Truth must be owned and duty must be done; and if any be offended, it is their own fault; it is not scandal given, but taken.

Perhaps the disciples themselves stumbled at the word Christ said, which they thought bold, and scarce reconcilable with the difference that was put by the law of God between clean and unclean meats; and therefore objected this to Christ, that they might themselves be better informed. They seem likewise to have a concern upon them for the Pharisees, though they had quarrelled with them; which teacheth us to forgive and seek the good, especially the spiritual good of our enemies, persecutors and slanderers. They would not have the Pharisees go away displeased at any thing Christ had said; and therefore though they do not desire him to retract it, yet they hope he will explain, correct and mollify it. Weak hearers are sometimes more solicitous than they should be not to have wicked hearers offended. But if we please men with the concealment of truth, and the indulging of their errors and corruptions, we are not the servants of Christ.

Fourthly, The doom passed upon the Pharisees and their corrupt traditions; which comes in as a reason why Christ cared not though he offended them, and therefore why the disciples should not care; because they were a generation of men that hated to be reformed, and were marked out for destruction. Two things Christ here foretels concerning them,

1. The rooting out of them and their traditions, ver. 13. Every plant which my heavenly Father hath not planted, shall be rooted up. Not only the corrupt opinions, and superstitious practices of the Pharisees, but their sect, and way, and constitution were plants not of God's planting: The rules of their profession were no institutions of his, but owed their origin to pride and formality. The people of the Jews were planted a noble vine, but now they are become the degenerate plant of a strange vine, God disowned them, as not of his planting. Note, 1. In the visible church, it is no strange thing to find plants that our heavenly Father has not planted. It is implied, that whatever is good in the church is of God's planting, Jsa. xli. 19. But let the husbandman be never so careful, his ground will cast forth seeds of itself more or less, and there is an enemy busy sowing tares. What is corrupt, though of God's permitting, is not of his planting, he sows nothing but good seed in his field. Let us not therefore be deceived, as if all must needs be right that we find in the church, and all those persons and things our Father's plants that we find in our Father's garden: believe not every spirit, but try the spirits; see Jer. xix. 5.—xxiii. 31, 32. 2. Those that are of the spirit of the Pharisees, proud, formal and imposing, what figure soever they make, and of what denomination soever they be, God will not own them as of his planting; by their fruit you shall know them. 3. Those plants that are not of God's planting shall not be of his protecting, but shall undoubtedly be rooted up. What is not of God shall not stand, Acts v. 38. What things are unscriptural will wither and die of themselves, or be justly exploded by the churches; however, in the great day these tares that offend will be bundled for the fire. What is done with the Pharisees and their traditions? They are long since abandoned, but the gospel of truth is great, and will remain. It cannot be rooted up.

2. The ruin of them and their followers, that had their persons and principles in admiration, ver. 14. Where,

1. Christ bids his disciples let them alone. Have no converse with them or concern for them; neither court their favour nor dread their displeasure; care not though they be offended, they will take their course, and let them take the issue of it: They are wedded to their own fancies, will have every thing their own way, and let them alone. Seek not to please a generation of men that please not God, (1 Thess. ii. 15.) and will be pleased with nothing less than an absolute dominion over your consciences. They are joined to idols, as Ephraim, Hos. iv. 17. the idols of their own fancy; let them alone, let them be filthy still, Rev. xxii. 11. The case of those sinners is sad indeed whom Christ orders his ministers to let alone.

2. He gives them two reasons for it. Let them alone; for,

1. They are proud and ignorant: two bad qualities that often meet, and render a man incurable in his folly, Prov. xxvi. 12. They be blind leaders of the blind. They are grossly ignorant of the things of God, and strangers to the spiritual nature of the divine law; and yet so proud, that they think they see better and further than any, and therefore undertake to be leaders of others, to shew others the way to heaven, when they themselves know not one step of the way; and accordingly they prescribe to all, and prescribe those who will not follow them. Though they were blind, if they had owned it, and come to Christ for eye-salve, they might have seen, but they took the intimation of such a thing very heinously, John ix. 40. Are we blind also? and were confident that they themselves were guides of the blind, Rom. ii. 19, 20. were appointed to be so, and fit to be so; that every thing they said was an oracle and a law; therefore let them alone, their case is desperate; do not meddle with them, you may soon provoke them, but never convince them. How miserable was the case of the Jewish church now when their leaders were blind! were so self-conceitedly foolish, as to be peremptory in their conduct, while the people were so sottishly foolish as to follow them with an implicit faith and obedience, and willingly walk after the commandment, Hos. v. 11. Now the prophecy was fulfilled, Jsa. xxix. 10—14. And it is easy to imagine what will be in the end hereof, when the prophets prophesy falsely, and the priests bear rule by their means, and the people love to have it so, Jer. v. 31.

2. They are posting to destruction, and will shortly be plunged into it: Both shall fall into the ditch. This must needs be the end of it, it both be so blind, and yet both so bold, venturing forwards, and yet not aware of danger. Both will be involved in the general desolation coming upon the Jews, and both drowned in eternal destruction and perdition. The blind leaders and the blind followers will perish together. We find, Rev. xvii. 15. that hell is the portion of those that make a lie, and of those that love it when it is made. The deceived and the deceiver are obnoxious to the judgment of God, Joh. xii. 16. Note, 1. Those that by their cunning craftiness draw others to sin and error, yet shall not with all their craft and cunning escape ruin themselves. If both fall together into the ditch, the blind leaders will fall undermost, and have the worst of it; see Jer. xiv. 15, 16. The prophets shall be consumed first, and then the people to whom they prophesy, Jer. xx. 6.—xxviii. 15, 16. 2. The sin and ruin of the deceivers will be no security to those that are deceived by them. Though the leaders of this people cause them to err, yet they that are led of them are destroyed, Isa. ix. 16. because they shut their eyes against the light which would have rectified their mistake. Seneca complained of most people's being led by common opinion and practice, unusquisque mutuit credere quam judicare, things are taken upon trust and never examined; concludes, inde ista tanta conservatio aliorum super aliis ruentium; De Vita Beata. The falling of both together will aggravate the fall of both; for they that have thus mutually increased each other's sin, will mutually exasperate each other's ruin.

Fifthly, Instruction given to the disciples concerning the truth Christ had laid down, ver. 10. Though Christ rejects the willfully ignorant that care not to be taught, he can have compassion on the ignorant that are willing to learn, Heb. v. 2. If the Pharisees that made void the law be offended, let them be offended; but this great prince have they that love the law, that nothing shall offend them, but some way or other the offence shall be taken off, Psal. cxix. 165.

Here is, 1. Their desire to be better instructed in this matter, ver. 15. and in this request, as in many others, Peter was their speaker; the rest it is probable, putting him on to speak, or intimating their concurrence: Declare unto us this parable. What Christ said was plain, but because it agreed not with the notions they had imbibed, though they would not contradict it, yet they call it a parable, and cannot understand it. Note, 1. Weak understandings are apt to turn plain truths into parables, and to seek for a knot in a bulrush: The disciples often did so, as John xvi. 17. even the grasshopper is a burden to a weak stomach, and babes in understanding cannot bear and digest strong meat. 2. Where a weak head doubts concerning any word of Christ, an upright heart and a willing mind will seek for instruction. The Pharisees were offended but kept it to themselves; hating to be reformed, they hated to be informed, but the disciples, though offended, sought for satisfaction, imputing the offence not to the doctrine delivered, but to the shallowness of their own capacity.

2. The reproof Christ gave them for their weakness and ignorance, ver. 16. Are ye also yet without understanding? As many as Christ loves and teaches he thus rebukes. Note, They are very ignorant indeed, who understand not that moral pollutions are abundantly worse and more dangerous than ceremonial ones. And two things aggravate their dulness and darkness.

1. That they were the disciples of Christ. Are ye also without understanding? you whom I have admitted into so great a degree of familiarity with me, are you so unskilful in the word of righteousness? Note, The ignorance and mistakes of those that profess religion and enjoy the privileges of church-membership, is justly a grief to the Lord Jesus. No wonder the Pharisees understand not this doctrine, who know nothing of the Messiah's kingdom; but you, that have heard of it, and embraced it yourselves, and preached it to others, are you also such strangers to the spirit and genius of it?

2. That they had been a great while Christ's scholars: Are you yet so, after you have been so long under my teaching? Had they been but of yesterday in Christ's school, it had been another matter, but to have been for so many months Christ's constant hearers, and yet to be without understanding, was a great reproach to them. Note, Christ expects from us some proportion of knowledge and grace and wisdom, according to the time and means we have had. See John xiv. 9. Heb. v. 12. 2 Tim. iii. 7, 8.

3. The explication Christ gave them of this doctrine of pollution. Though he chid them for their dulness, he did not cast them off, but pitied them and taught them, as Luke xxiv. 25, 26, 27. Here he shews us,

1. What little danger we are in of pollution from that which entereth in at the mouth, ver. 17. An inordinate appetite, intemperance, and excess of eating, comes out of the heart, and is defiling; but meat in itself is not so, as the Pharisees supposed. What there is of dregs and defilement in our meat, nature (or rather the God of nature) has provided a way to clear us of it, it goes in at the belly, and is cast out into the draught, and nothing remains to us but pure nourishment. So feriously and wonderfully are we made and preserved, and our souls held in life. The expulsive faculty is as necessary in the body as any other, for the discharge of that which is superfluous, noxious, or excrementitious; so happily is nature enabled to help itself and shift for its own good: by this means nothing defiles; if we eat with unwashed hands, and so any dirt stick to our meat, nature will separate it and cast it out; and it will be no defilement to us. So that though it may be a piece of cleanliness, it is no point of conscience to wash before meat; and we go upon a great mistake if we place religion in it. It is not the practice itself, but the opinion it is built upon that Christ condemns, as if meat commended us to God, 1 Cor. viii. 8. whereas Christianity stands not on such observances.

2. What great danger we are in of pollution from that which proceeds out out of the mouth, ver. 18. i. e. out of the abundance of the heart: compare Matt. xii. 34. There is no defilement in the products of God's bounty, the defilement ariseth from the products of our own corruption. Now here we have,

1. The corrupt fountain of that which proceeds out of the mouth, it comes from the heart; that is the spring and source of all sin, Jer. viii. 7. It is the heart that is so desperately wicked, Jer. xvii. 9. for there is no sin in word or deed, but it was first in the heart. There is the root of bitterness which bears gall and wormwood. It is the inward part of a sinner that is very wickedness, Psalm v. 9. All evil speakings come forth from the heart, and are defiling; from the corrupt heart comes the corrupt communication.

2. Some of the corrupt streams which flow from this fountain instanced in; though they do not all come out of the mouth, yet they will come out of the man, and are the fruits of that wickedness which is in the heart, and is wrought there, Psal. lvi. 2.

1. Evil thoughts, sins against all the commandments, therefore David puts vain thoughts in opposition to the whole law, Psalm cxix. 113. These are the first-born of the corrupt nature, the beginning of its strength, and do most resemble it: These, as the son and heir, abide in the house, and lodge within us. There is a great deal of sin that begins and ends in the heart, and goes no further. Carnal fancies and imaginations are evil thoughts, wickedness in the contrivance, Διαλογισμοὶ πονηροί, are wicked plots, purposes, and devices of mischief to others, Micah ii. 1.

2. Murders, sins against the sixth commandment; these come from a malice in the heart against our brother's life, or a contempt of it. Hence he that hates his brother, is said to be a murderer; he is so at God's bar, 1 John iii. 15. War is in the heart, Psalm lv. 21. James iv. 1.

3. Adulteries and fornications, sins against the seventh commandment; those come from the wanton, unclean, carnal heart; and the lust that reigns there is conceived there, and brings forth these sins, James i. 15. There is adultery in the heart first, and then in the act, Matt. v. 28.

4. Thefts, sin against the eighth commandment, cheats, wrongs, rapines, and all injurious contracts; the fountain of all these is in the heart, that is it that is exercised in these covetous practices, 2 Pet. ii. 14. that is set upon riches, Psalm lxxii. 10. Achan coveted, and then took, Josh. vii. 20.

5. False witness, against the ninth commandment; this comes from a complication of falsehood and covetousness, or falsehood and malice in the heart. If truth, holiness, and love, which God requires in the inward parts, reigned as they ought, there would be no false witness-bearing, Psalm lxxiv. 6. Jer. ix. 8.

6. Blasphemies, speaking evil of God, against the third commandment; speaking evil of our neighbour, against the ninth commandment; these come from a contempt and disesteem of both in the heart; thence the blasphemy against the Holy Ghost proceeds, Matt. xii. 33, 34. these are the overflowings of the gall within.

Now these are the things which defile a man, ver. 20. Note, Sin is defiling to the soul, renders it unlovely and abominable in the eyes of the pure and holy God, unfit for communion with him, and for the enjoyment of him in the new Jerusalem, into which nothing shall enter that defileth or worketh iniquity. The mind and conscience is defiled by sin, and that makes every thing else so, Titus i. 15. This defilement by sin was signified by the ceremonial pollutions which the Jewish doctors added to but understood not: See Heb. ix. 13, 14. 1 John i. 7.

These therefore are the things we most carefully avoid, and all approaches towards them, and not lay stress upon washing of the hands. Christ hath not yet repealed the law of the distinction of meats, that was not done till Acts x. but the tradition of the elders, which was tacked to that law; and therefore he concludes to eat with unwashed hands (which was the matter now in variance) this defileth not a man. If he wash, he is not the better before God; if he wash not, he is not the worse.

21. ¶ Then Jesus went thence, and departed into the coast of Tyre and Sidon. 22. And behold, a woman of Canaan came out of the same coasts, and cried unto him, saying, Have mercy on me, O Lord, thou Son of David; my daughter is grievously vexed with a devil. 23. But he answered her not a word. And his disciples came and besought him, saying, Send her away, for she crieth after us. 24. But he answered and said, I am not sent, but unto the lost sheep of the house of Israel. 25. Then came she and worshipped him, saying, Lord, help me. 26. But he answered and said, It is not meet to take the children's bread, and to cast it to dogs. 27. And she said, Truth, Lord: yet the dogs eat of the crumbs which fall from their masters' table. 28. Then Jesus answered and said unto her, O woman, great is thy faith: be it unto thee even as thou wilt. And her daughter was made whole from that very hour.

We have here that famous story of Christ's casting the devil out of the woman of Canaan's daughter. It has something in it singular and very surprising, and which looks favourably upon the poor Gentiles, and is an earnest of that mercy which Christ had in store for them. Here is a gleam to that light which was to lighten the Gentiles, Luke ii. 32. Christ came to his own, and his own received him not, but many of them quarrelled with him, and were offended in him; and observe what follows, ver. 22.

1. Jesus went thence. Note, Justly is the light taken from those that either play by it or rebel against it. When Christ and his disciples could not be quiet among them he left them, and so left an example to his own rule, Matt. x. 14. Shake off the dust off your feet. Though Christ endure long, he will not always endure the contradiction of sinners against himself. He had said, ver. 14. Let them alone, and he did so. Note, Wilful prejudices against the gospel, and cavils at it, often provokes Christ to withdraw, and to remove the candlestick out of its place, Acts xiii. 45—51.

2. When he went thence, he departed into the coasts of Tyre and Sidon, not to those cities, they were excluded from any share in Christ's mighty works, Matt. xi. 21, 22. but into that part of the land of Israel which lay that way, thither he went, as Elias to Sarepta, a city of Sidon, Luke iv. 25. Thither he went to look after this poor woman he had mercy in reserve for: While he went about doing good he was never out of his way. The dark corners of the country, which lay most remote, shall have their share of his benign influences; and as now the ends of the land, so afterwards the ends of the earth shall see his salvation, Isa. xlix. 6. Here it was that this miracle was wrought, in the story of which we may observe,

First, The address of the woman of Canaan to Christ, ver. 22. She was a Gentile, a stranger to the commonwealth of Israel; probably one of the posterity of those accursed nations that were devoted by that word, Cursed be Canaan. Note, The doom of political bodies doth not always reach every individual member of them: God will have his remnant out of all nations, chosen vessels in all coasts, even the most unlikely: she came out of the same coasts. If Christ had not now made a visit to these coasts, though the mercy was worth travelling far for, it is probable she had never come to him. Note, It is often an excitement to a dormant faith and zeal, to have opportunities of acquaintance with Christ brought to our doors, to have the word nigh us.

Her address was very importunate, she cried to Christ as one in earnest; cried, as being at some distance from him, not daring to approach too near, being a Canaanite, lest she should give offence. In her address,

1. She relates her misery; My daughter is grievously vexed with a devil, κακῶς δαμονιζέται, "she is ill bewitched, or possessed;" there were degrees of that misery, and this was the worst sort: It was a common case at that time, and very calamitous. Note, The vexations of children are the trouble of parents, and nothing should be more so than their being under the power of Satan. Tender parents very sensibly feel the miseries of those that are pieces of themselves: though vexed with the devil, yet she is my daughter still. The greatest afflictions of our relations do not dissolve our obligations to them, and therefore ought not to alienate our affections from them. It was the distress and trouble of her family that now brought her to Christ; she came to him, not for teaching but for healing: yet, because she came in faith he did not reject her: Though it is need that drives us to Christ, yet we shall not therefore be driven from him: It was the affliction of her daughter that gave her this occasion of applying to Christ: It is good to make others afflictions our own in sense and sympathy, that we may make them our own in improvement and advantage.

2. She requests for mercy; Have mercy on me, O Lord, thou Son of David. In calling him Lord, the Son of David, she owns him to be the Messiah; that is the great thing which faith should fasten upon and fetch comfort from. From the Lord we may expect acts of power, he can command deliverances; from the Son of David we may expect all that mercy and grace which was foretold concerning him. Though a Gentile, she owns the promise made to the fathers of the Jews and the honour of the house of David. The Gentile must receive Christianity, not only as an improvement of natural religion, but as the perfection of the Jewish religion, with an eye to the Old Testament.

Her petition is, Have mercy on me. She doth not limit Christ to this or that particular instance of mercy, but mercy, mercy is the thing she begs; she pleads not merit, but depends on mercy; Have mercy on me. Mercies to the children are mercies to the parents; favours to ours are favours to us; and are so to be accounted. Note, It is the duty of parents to pray for their children, and to be in earnest in prayer for them, especially for their souls: I have a son, a daughter, grievously vexed with a proud will, an unclean devil, a malicious devil, led captive by him at his will, Lord, help them. This is a case more deplorable than that of a bodily possession. Bring them to Christ by faith and prayer, who alone is able to heal them. Parents should look upon it as a great mercy to themselves, to have Satan's power broken in the souls of their children.

Secondly, The discouragement she met with in this address: In all the story of Christ's ministry we do not meet with the like: He was wont to countenance and encourage all that came to him, and either to answer before they called, or to hear while they were yet speaking; but here was one otherwise treated: and what should be the reason of it? 1. Some think Christ shewed himself backward to gratify this poor woman, because he would not give offence to the Jews, by being as free and as forward in his favour to the Gentiles as to them. He had bid his disciples not go into the way of the Gentiles, chap. x. 5. and therefore would not himself seem so inclinable to them as to others, but rather more shy. Or rather, 2. Christ treated her thus to try her; he knows what is in the heart, knew the strength of her faith, and how well able she was, by his grace, to break through such discouragements; and therefore met her with them, that the trial of her faith might be found unto praise, and honour, and glory, 1 Pet. i. 6, 7. This was like God's tempting Abraham, Gen. xxii. 1. like the angel's wrestling with Jacob, only to put him upon wrestling, Gen. xxxii. 24. Many of the methods of Christ's providence, and especially of his grace in dealing with his people, which are dark and perplexing, may be explained with the key of this story, which is for that end left upon record, to teach us that there may be love in Christ's heart while there are frowns in his face, and to encourage us therefore, though he slay us, yet to trust in him.

Observe the particular discouragement given her:

1. When she cried after him, he answered her not a word, ver. 23. His ear was wont to be always open and attentive to the cries of poor supplicants, and his lips, which dropped as the honey-comb, always ready to give an answer of peace; but to this poor woman he turned a deaf ear, and she could get neither an alms nor an answer. It was a wonder she did not fly off in a fret, and say, Is this he that is so famed for clemency and tenderness? Have so many been heard and answered by him, as they talk, and must I be the first rejected suitor? why so stiff to me, if it be true that he hath stooped to so many? But Christ knew what he did, and therefore did not answer, that she might be the more earnest in prayer. He heard her, and was pleased with her, and strengthened her with strength in her soul, to prosecute her request, Psalm cxxxviii. 3. Job xxiii. 6. though he did not immediately give her the answer she expected. By seeming to draw away the desired mercy from her, he drew her on to be so much the more importunate for it. Note, Every accepted prayer is not presently an answered prayer. Sometimes God seems not to regard his people's prayers, like a man asleep, or astonished, Psalm xlv. 3. Jer. xiv. 9. Psalm xxii. 1, 2. may to be angry at them, Psalm lxxx. 4. Lam. iii. 8, 44. but it is to prove, and so to improve their faith, and to make his after appearances for them the more glorious to himself, and the more welcome to them; for the vision at the end shall speak, and shall not lie, Hab. ii. 3. See Job xxxv. 14.

2. When the disciples spoke a good word for her, he gave a reason why he refused her, which was yet more discouraging.

(1.) It was some little relief that the disciples interposed on her behalf; they said, Send her away, for she crieth after us. It is desirable to have an interest in the prayers of good people, and we should be desirous of it. Yet the disciples, though wishing she might have what she came for, yet therein do consult rather their own ease than the poor woman's satisfaction; Send her away with a cure, for she cries and is in good earnest, she cries after us, and is troublesome to us, and shames us. Continued importunity may be uneasy to men, even to good men; but Christ loves to be cried after.

(2.) Christ's answer to the disciples quite dashed her expectations; I am not sent but to the lost sheep of the house of Israel: You know I am not, she is none of them, and would you have me go beyond my commission? Importunity seldom conquers the settled reason of a wise man, and those refusals are most silencing which are so backed. He doth not only not answer her, but he argues against her, and stops her mouth with a reason. It is true she is a lost sheep, and hath as much need of his care as any, but she is not of the house of Israel, to whom he was first sent, Acts iii. 26. and therefore not immediately interested in it, and intitled to it. Christ was a minister of the circumcision, Rom. xv. 8. and though he was intended for a light to the Gentiles, yet the fulness of time for that was not now come, the veil was not yet rent, nor the partition-wall taken down; Christ's personal ministry was to be the glory of his people; and if I am sent to them, what have I to do with those that are none of them? Note, It is a great trial, when we have occasion given us to question whether we be of those to whom Christ was sent. But blessed be God, no room is left for that doubt; the distinction between Jew and Gentile is taken away: we are sure he gave his life a ransom for many, and if for many, why not for me?

3. When she continued her importunity, he insisted upon the unfitness of the thing, and gave her not only a repulse, but a seeming reproach too, ver. 26. It is not meet to take the children's bread and to cast it unto dogs. This seems to cut her off from all hope, and might have driven her to despair, if she had not had a very strong faith indeed. Gospel grace and miraculous cures (the appurtenances of it) were children's bread; they belonged to them to whom pertained the adoption, Rom. ix. 4. and lay not upon the same level with that rain from heaven, and those fruitful seasons, which God gave to the nations whom he suffered to walk in their own ways, Acts xiv. 16, 17. no, these were peculiar favours appropriated to the peculiar people, the garden inclosed. Christ preached to the Samaritans, John iv. 41. but we read not of any cures he wrought among them; that salvation was of the Jews; it is not meet therefore to alienate these. The Gentiles were looked upon by the Jews with great contempt, were called and counted dogs, and, in comparison with the house of Israel, who were so dignified and privileged, Christ here seems to allow it; and therefore thinks it not meet that the Gentiles should share in the favours bestowed on the Jews. But see how the tables are turned; after the bringing the Gentiles into the church, the Jewish zealots for the law are called dogs, Phil. iii. 2.

Now this Christ urges against this woman of Canaan: How could she expect to eat of the children's bread who was not of the family? Note, 1. Those whom Christ intends most signally to honour, he first humbles and lays low in a sense of their own meanness and unworthiness. We must see first ourselves to be as dogs, less than the least of all God's mercies, before we are fit to be dignified and privileged with them. 2. Christ delights to exercise great faith with great trials, and sometimes reserves the sharpest for the last, that being tried, we may come forth like gold. This general rule is applicable to other cases for direction, though here used only for trial. Special ordinances and church privileges are children's bread, and must not be prostituted to the grossly ignorant and profane. Common charity must be extended to all, but spiritual dignities are appropriated to the household of faith; and therefore promiscuous admission to them without distinction, wastes the children's bread, and is the giving of that which is holy to the dogs, Matt. vii. 6. Procul hinc, procul inde profani.

Thirdly, Here is the strength of her faith and resolution, in breaking through all these discouragements. Many a one thus tried, would either have sunk down into silence or broke out into a passion. Here is cold comfort, might she have said, for a poor distressed creature; as good for me to have staid at home, as come hither to be taunted at and abused at this rate; not only to have a piteous case slighted, but to be called a dog. A proud unhumiliated heart would not have borne it. The reputation of the house of Israel was not now so great in the world, but that this slight put upon the Gentiles was capable of being retorted, had the poor woman been so minded. It might have occasioned a reflection upon Christ, and might have been a blemish upon his reputation, as well as a shock to the good opinion she had entertained of him; for we are apt to judge of persons as we ourselves find them; and think that they are what they are to us. Is this the Son of David? might she have said: Is this he that has such a reputation for kindness and tenderness and compassion? I am sure I have no reason to give him that character, for I was never treated so roughly in my life; he might have done as much for me as for others; or if not, he needed not to have set me with the dogs of his flock: I am not a dog, I am a woman, and an honest woman, and a woman in misery; and I am sure it is not meet to call me dog. No, here is not a word of this. Note, A humble believing soul, that truly loves Christ, takes every thing in good part that he saith and doth, and puts the best construction upon it.

She breaks through all these discouragements.

(1.) With a holy earnestness of desire in prosecuting her petition. This appeared upon the former repulse, ver. 25. Then she came and worshipped him, saying, Lord, help me. 1. She continued to pray. What Christ said silenced the disciples, you hear no more of them, they took the answer, but the woman did not. Note, The more sensibly we feel the burden, the more resolutely we should pray for the removal of it: And it is the will of God, that we should continue instant in prayer, should always pray, and not faint. 2. She improved in prayer. Instead of blaming Christ or charging him with unkindness, she seems rather to suspect herself, and lay the fault upon herself: she fears, lest in her first address she had not been humble and reverent enough, and therefore now she came and worshipped him, and paid him more respect than she had done; or that she had not been earnest enough, and therefore now she cries, Lord, help me. Note, When the answers of prayer are deferred, God is thereby teaching us to pray more and pray better. It is then time to inquire wherein we have come short in our former prayers, that what has been amiss may be amended for the future: Disappointment in the success of prayer, must be excitements to the duty of prayer; Christ in his agony prayed more earnestly.

3. She waves the question, whether she was of those to whom Christ was sent or no, she will not argue that with him, though perhaps she might have claimed some kindred to the house of Israel; but whether an Israelite or no I come to the Son of David for mercy, and I will not let him go, except he bless me. Many weak Christians perplex themselves with questions and doubts about their election, whether they are of the house of Israel or no, such had better mind their errand to God, and continue instant in prayer for mercy and grace; throw themselves by faith at the feet of Christ, and say, If I perish, I will perish here; and then that matter will by degrees clear itself. If we cannot reason down our belief, let us pray it down. A fervent affectionate Lord, help me, will help us over many of the discouragements which are sometimes ready to bear us down and overwhelm us.

4. Her prayer is very short, but comprehensive and fervent; Lord, help me. Take this, 1. As lamenting her case. If the Messiah be sent only to the house of Israel, the Lord help me, what will become of me and mine? Note, It is not in vain for broken hearts to bemoan themselves. God looks upon them then, Jer. xxxi. 18. Or, 2. As begging grace to assist her in this hour of temptation. She found it hard to keep up her faith when it was thus frowned upon, and therefore prays, Lord, help me; Lord, strengthen my faith now; Lord, let thy right hand uphold me, while my soul is following hard after thee, Psal. lxxiii. 8. Or, 3. As enforcing her original request, Lord, help me, i. e. Lord, give me what I come for. She believed that Christ could and would help her, though she was not of the house of Israel; else she would have dropt her petition. Still she keeps up good thoughts of Christ, and will not quit her hold. Lord, help me, is a good prayer, if well put up; and it is pity it should be turned into a by-word, and that we should take God's name in vain in it.

(2.) With a holy skilfulness of faith, suggesting a very surprising plea. Christ had placed the Jews with the children, as olive-plants round about God's table, and had put the Gentiles with the dogs, under the table; and she doth not deny the aptness of the similitude. Note, There is nothing got by contradicting any word of Christ, though it bear never so hard upon us. But this poor woman, since she cannot object against it, resolves to make the best of it, ver. 27. Truth, Lord, yet the dogs eat of the crumbs. Now here,

1. Her acknowledgment was very humble. Truth, Lord. Note, You cannot speak so meanly and slightly of a humble believer, but he is ready to speak as meanly and slightly of himself. Some that seem to dispraise and disparage themselves, will yet take it as an affront if others do so too; but one that is humbled aright, will subscribe to the most abasing challenges and not call them abusing ones. Truth, Lord, I cannot deny it; I am a dog, and have no right to the children's bread. David, Thou hast done foolishly, very foolishly: Truth, Lord. Asaph, Thou hast been as a beast before God. Agur, thou art more brutish than any man: Truth, Lord. Paul, thou hast been the chief of sinners, art less than the least of saints, not meet to be called an apostle: Truth, Lord.

2. Her improvement of this into a plea was very ingenious. Yet the dogs eat of the crumbs: It was by a singular acumen and spiritual quickness and sagacity, that she discerned matter of argument in that which looked like a slight. Note, A lively active faith, will make that to be for us which seems to be against us; will fetch meat out of the eater, and sweetness out of the strong. Unbelief is apt to mistake recruits for enemies, and to draw dismal conclusions even from comfortable promises, Judges xiii. 22, 23, but faith can find encouragement even in that which is discouraging, and get nearer to God, by taking hold on that hand which is stretched out to push it away. So good a thing it is to be of quick understanding in the fear of the Lord, Isa. xi. 3.

Her plea is, Yet the dogs eat of the crumbs. It is true, the full and regular provision is intended for the children only, but the small casual neglected crumbs are allowed to the dogs, and are not grudged them; that is, to the dogs under the table, that attend there expecting them. We poor Gentiles cannot expect the stated ministry and miracles of the Son of David, that belongs to the Jews; but they begin now to be weary of their meat and to play with it, they find fault with it and crumble it away; surely then some of the broken meat may fall to a poor Gentile: I beg a cure by the by, which is but as a crumb, though of the same precious bread, yet but a small inconsiderable piece, compared with the loaves which they have. Note, When we are ready to surfeit on the children's bread, we should remember how many there are that would be glad of the crumbs. Our broken meat in spiritual privileges, would be a feast to many a soul; as Acts xiii. 42. Observe here,

1. Her humility and necessity made her glad of crumbs. Those who are conscious to themselves that they deserve nothing, will be thankful for any thing; and then we are prepared for the greatest of God's mercies, when we see ourselves less than the least of them. The least of Christ is precious to a believer, and the very crumbs of the bread of life.

2. Her faith encouraged her to expect these crumbs. Why should it not be at Christ's table as at a great man's, where the dogs are fed as sure as the children. Observe, She calls it their master's table; if she were a dog, she was his dog, and it cannot be ill with us if we stand but in the meanest relation to Christ. Though unworthy to be called children, yet make me as one of the hired servants: nay rather let me be set with the dogs than turned out of the house; for in my Father's house there is not only bread enough, but to spare, Luke xv. 17-19. It is good lying in God's house, though we lie at the threshold there.

Fourthly, The happy issue and success of all this. She came off with credit and comfort from this struggle; and though a Canaanite, approved herself a true daughter of Israel, who like a prince had power with God and prevailed. Hitherto Christ hid his face from her, but now gathers her with everlasting kindness, ver. 27. Then Jesus said, O woman, great is thy faith. This was like Joseph's making himself known to his brethren, I am Joseph; so here in effect I am Jesus: Now he begins to speak like himself, and put on his own countenance: He will not contend for ever.

1. He commended her faith. O woman, great is thy faith. Observe, (1.) It is her faith that he commends. There were several other graces that shone bright in her conduct of this affair, wisdom, humility, meekness, patience, perseverance in prayer; but these were the product of her faith, and therefore Christ fastens upon that as most commendable: because of all graces faith honours Christ most, therefore of all graces Christ honours faith most.

(2.) It is the greatness of her faith. Note, 1. Though the faith of all the saints be alike precious, yet it is not in all alike strong, all believers are not of the same size and stature. 2. The greatness of faith consists much in a resolute adherence to Jesus Christ as an all-sufficient Saviour, even in the face of discouragements; to love him and trust him as a friend, even then when he seems to come forth against us as an enemy. This is great faith! 3. Though weak faith, if true, shall not be rejected, yet great faith shall be commended, and shall appear greatly well pleasing to Christ; for in them that thus believe he is most admired. Thus Christ commended the faith of the centurion, and he was a Gentile too: He had a strong faith in the power of Christ, this woman in the good-will of Christ; both were acceptable.

2. He cured her daughter. Be it unto thee even as thou wilt: I can deny nothing, take what thou camest for. Note, Great believers may have what they will for the asking. When our will conforms to the will of Christ's precept, his will concurs with the will of our desire. Those that will deny Christ nothing, shall find he will deny them nothing at last, though for a time he seem to hide his face from them. Thou wouldest have thy sins pardoned, thy corruptions mortified, thy nature sanctified, Be it unto thee even as thou wilt. And what canst thou desire more? When we come as this poor woman did, to pray against Satan and his kingdom, we concur with the intercession of Christ, and it shall be accordingly. Thou Satan mayst sift Peter, and buffet Paul, but, through Christ's prayer and the sufficiency of his grace, we shall be more than conquerors, Luke xxii. 31, 32. 2 Cor. xii. 7-9. Rom. xvi. 20.

The event was answerable to the word of Christ: Her daughter was made whole from that very hour; from hence-forward was never vexed with the devil any more: the mother's faith prevailed for the daughter's cure. Though the patient was at a distance, that was no hindrance to the efficacy of Christ's word. He spake, and it was done.

29. And Jesus departed from thence, and came nigh unto the sea of Galilee, and went up into a mountain, and and sat down there. 30. And great multitudes came unto him, having with them those that were lame, blind, dumb, maimed and many others, and cast them down at Jesus' feet; and he healed them: 31. Inasmuch that the multitude wondered, when they saw the dumb to speak, the maimed to be whole, the lame to walk, and the blind to see: and they glorified the God of Israel. 32. ¶ Then Jesus called his disciples unto him, and said, I have compassion on the multitude, because they continue with me now three days, and have nothing to eat: and I will not send them away fasting, lest they faint in the way, 33. And his disciples say unto him, Whence should we have so much bread in the wilderness, as to fill so great a multitude? 34. And Jesus saith unto them, How many loaves have ye? And they said, Seven, and a few little fishes. 35. And he commanded the multitude to sit down on the ground. 36. And he took the seven loaves and the fishes, and gave thanks, and brake them, and gave to his disciples, and the disciples to the multitude. 37. And they did all eat, and were filled: and they took up of the broken meat that was left seven baskets full. 38. And they that did eat were four thousand men, beside women and children. 39. And he sent away the multitude, and took ship, and came into the coasts of Magdala.

Here is, 1. A general account of Christ's cures, his curing by whole-sale. The tokens of Christ's power and goodness are neither scarce nor scanty; for there is in him an overflowing fulness. Now observe,

(1.) The place where these cures were wrought; it was near the sea of Galilee, a part of the country Christ was pretty much conversant with. We read not of any thing he did in the coasts of Tyre and Sidon, but the casting of the devil out of the woman of Canaan's daughter, as if he took that journey on purpose, with that in prospect. Let not ministers grudge their pains to do good, though but to few: He that knows the worth of souls, would go a great way to help to save one from death and Satan's power.

But Jesus departed thence; having let fall that crumb under the table, he here returns to make a full feast for the children. We may do that occasionally for one which we may not make a constant practice of. Christ steps into the coasts of Tyre and Sidon, but he sits down by the sea of Galilee, ver. 29. sits down, not only on a stately throne or tribunal of judgment, but on a mountain; so mean and homely were his most solemn appearances in the days of his flesh! He sat down on a mountain, that all might see him and have free access to him; for he is an open Saviour: He sat down there, as one tired with his journey and willing to have a little rest; or rather as one waiting to be gracious: He sat expecting patients, as Abraham at his tent door, ready to entertain strangers: He settled himself to this good work.

(2.) The multitudes and maladies that were healed by him, ver. 30. Great multitudes came to him; that the scripture might be fulfilled, Unto him shall the gathering of the people be, Gen. xlix. 10. If Christ's ministers could cure bodily diseases as Christ did, there would be more flocking to them than there is; for bodily pain and sickness is a thing we are soon sensible of; but few are concerned about their souls and their spiritual diseases.

Now, 1. Such was the goodness of Christ that he admitted all sorts of people: the poor as well as the rich are welcome to Christ, and with him there is room enough for all comers: He never complained of crowds or throngs of seekers, or looked with contempt upon the vulgar, the herd as they are called; for the souls of peasants are as precious with him as the souls of princes.

2. Such was the power of Christ that he healed all sorts of diseases; those that came to him, brought their sick relations and friends along with them, and cast them down at Jesus's feet, ver. 30. We read not of any thing they said to him, but they laid them down before him as objects of pity to be looked upon by him. Their calamities spoke more for them than the tongue of the most eloquent orator could. David shewed before God his trouble, that was enough, he left it with him, Psal. cxlii. 2. Whatever our case is, the only way to find ease and relief is to lay it at Christ's feet, to spread it before him, and refer it to his cognisance, and then submit it to him and refer it to his dispose. Those that would have spiritual healing from Christ, must lay themselves at his feet to be ruled and ordered as he pleaseth.

Here were lame, blind, dumb, maimed and many others, brought to Christ; see what work sin has made! it has turned the world into an hospital: what various diseases are human bodies subject to! See what work the Saviour makes! he conquers those hosts of enemies to mankind. Here were such diseases as a flame of fancy could contribute neither to the cause nor to the cure of; as lying not in the humours, but in the members of the body; and yet these were subject to the commands of Christ: He sent his word and healed them. Note, All diseases are at the command of Christ, to go and come as he bids them. This is an instance of Christ's power, which may comfort us in all our weaknesses; and of his pity, which may comfort us in all our miseries.

(3.) The influence that this had upon the people, ver. 31.

1. They wondered, and well they might. Christ's works should be our wonder. It is the Lord's doings, and it is marvellous, Psalm cxviii. 23. The spiritual cures that Christ works are wonderful. When blind souls are made to see by faith, the dumb to speak in prayer, the lame to walk in holy obedience, it is to be wondered at. Sing unto the Lord a new song, for thus he has done marvellous things.

2. They glorified the God of Israel, whom the Pharisees, when they saw these things, blasphemed. Miracles, which are the matter of our wonder, must be the matter of our praise; and mercies, which are the matter of our rejoicing, must be the matter of our thanksgiving. Those that were healed glorified God, if he heal our diseases, all that is within us must bless his holy name; and if we have been graciously preserved from blindness and lameness and dumbness, we have as much reason to bless God as if we had been cured of them; nay, and the standers by glorified God. Note, God must be acknowledged with praise and thankfulness in others' mercies, as in our own. They glorified him as the God of Israel, his church's God, a God in covenant with his people, who hath sent the Messiah promised, and this is he. See Luke i. 68. Blessed be the Lord God of Israel. This was done by the power of the God of Israel, and no other could do it.

2. Here is a particular account of his feeding four thousand men with seven loaves and a few little fishes, as he had lately fed five thousand with five loaves. The guests indeed were now not quite so many as then, and the provision a little more, which does not intimate that Christ's arm was shortened, but that he wrought his miracles as the occasion required and not for ostentation, and therefore he suited them to the occasion: both then and now he took as many as were to be fed, and made use of all that was at hand to feed them with. When once the utmost powers of nature are exceeded, we must say, This is the finger of God, and it is neither here nor there how far they are outdone; so that this is no less a miracle than the former.

Here is, (1.) Christ's pity, ver. 32. I have compassion on the multitude. He tells his disciples this, both to try and excite their compassion. When he was about to work this miracle he called them to him, and made them acquainted with his purpose, and discoursed them about it; not because he needed their advice, but because he would give an instance of his condescending love to them. He called them not servants, for the servant knows not what his Lord doth, but treated them as his right trusty and well beloved cousins and counsellors. Shall I hide from Abraham the thing which I do? Gen. xviii. 17. In what he said to them observe,

1. The case of the multitude; They continue with me now three days, and have nothing to eat. This is an instance of their zeal, and the strength of their affection to Christ and his word, that they not only left their callings to attend upon him on week-days, but underwent a deal of hardship to continue with him; they wanted their natural rest, and, for ought appeared, lay like soldiers in the field; they wanted necessary food, and had scarce enough to keep life and soul together. In those hotter countries they could better bear long fasting than we can in these colder climates; but, however, it could not but be grievous to the body, and might endanger their health, yet the zeal of God's house thus eat them up, and they esteemed the word of Christ more than their necessary food. We think three hours too much to attend upon public ordinances, but these people stayed together three days, and yet snuffed not at it, nor said, Behold what a weariness it is! Observe, With what tenderness Christ spoke of it, I have compassion on them. It had become them to have compassion on him, who took so much pains with them for three days together, and was so indefatigable in teaching and healing; so much virtue had gone out of him, and yet for ought appears he was fasting too; but he prevented them with his compassion. Note, Our Lord Jesus keeps an account how long his followers continue their attendance on him, and takes notice of the difficulty they sustain in it, Rev. ii. 2. I know thy works, and thy labour and thy patience, and it shall in no wise lose its reward.

Now the exigence the people were reduced to, serves to magnify, 1. The mercy of their supply; he fed them when they were hungry, and then food was doubly welcome: He treated them as he did Israel of old, he suffered them to hunger, and then fed them, Deut. viii. 3. for that is sweet to the hungry soul which the full soul loathes. 2. The miracle of their supply: having been so long fasting their appetites were the more craving: If two hungry meals make the third a glutton, what would three hungry days do? and yet they did all eat, and were filled. Note, There is mercy and grace enough with Christ, to give the most earnest and enlarged desire an abundant satisfaction: Open thy mouth wide, and I will fill it. He replenisheth even the hungry soul.

2. The care of our Master concerning them: I will not send them away fasting lest they should faint by the way: which would be a discredit to Christ and his family, and a discouragement both to them and to others. Note, It is the unhappiness of our present state, that when our souls are in some measure elevated and enlarged, yet our bodies cannot keep pace with them in good duties: The weakness of the flesh is a great grievance to the willingness of the spirit. It will not be so in heaven, where the body shall be made spiritual, where they rest not day or night from praising God, and yet faint not; where they hunger no more, nor thirst any more, Rev. vii. 16.

(2.) Christ's power. His pity of their wants sets his power on work for their supply. Now observe,

1. How his power was distrusted by his disciples, ver. 33. Whence should we have so much bread in the wilderness? A proper question, one would think, like that of Moses, Numb. xi. 22. Shall the flocks and the herds be slain to suffice them? But it was here an improper question, considering not only the general assurance the disciples had of the power of Christ, but the particular experience they lately had of a seasonable and sufficient provision by miracle in a like case; they had been not only the witnesses, but the ministers of the former miracle; the multiplied bread went through their hands; so that it was an instance of great weakness for them to ask, When shall we have bread? Could they be so weak while they had their master with them? Note, Forgetting former experiences leaves us under present doubts.

Christ knew how slender the provision was, but he would know it from them, ver. 34. How many loaves have ye? Before he would work he would have it seen how little he had to work on, that his power might shine the brighter. What they had they had for themselves, and it was little enough for their own family; but Christ would have them bestow it all upon the multitude, and trust providence for more. Note, It becomes Christ's disciples to be generous, their Master was so; what we have we should be free of as there is occasion; given to hospitality; not like Nabal, 1 Sam. xxv. 11. but like Elisha, 2 Kings iv. 42. Niggardiness of to-day out of thoughtfulness for to-morrow is a complication of corrupt affections that ought to be mortified: If we be prudently kind and charitable with what we have we may piously hope that God will send more: Jehovah-jireh; The Lord will provide. The disciples asked, Whence we should we have bread? Christ asked, How many loaves have ye? Note, when we cannot have what we would, we must make the best of what we have, and do good with it as far as it will go; we must not think so much of our wants as of our havings. Christ herein went according to the rule he gave to Martha, not to be troubled about many things, nor cumbered about much serving. Nature is content with little, grace with less, but lust with nothing.

2. How his power was discovered to the multitude in the plentiful provision he made for them: the manner of which is much the same as before, chap. xiv. 18, &c. Observe here,

1. The provision that was at hand: Seven loaves and a few little fishes. The fish not proportionable to the bread, for bread is the staff of life. It is likely the fish were such as they had themselves taken, for they were fishers, and were now near the sea. Note, It is a comfortable thing eating the labour of our hands, Psalm cxxxviii. 2. and enjoying that which is in any way the product of our own industry, Prov. xii. 27. And what we have got by God's blessing on our labour we should be free of, for therefore we must labour, that we may have to give, Eph. iv. 28.

2. The putting of the people in a posture to receive it, ver. 35. He commanded the multitude to sit down on the ground. They saw but very little provision, provision, yet they must sit down in faith that they should have a meal's meat out of it. They who would have spiritual food from Christ, must sit down at his feet to hear his word, and expect it to come in an unseen way.

3. The distributing of the provision among them. He first "gave thanks," ευχαριστίας. The word used in the former miracle was εὐλόγησεν, "he blessed." It comes all to one; giving thanks to God is a proper way of craving a blessing from God. And when we come to ask and receive further mercy, we ought to give thanks for the mercies we have received. He then broke the loaves, (for it was in the breaking that the bread multiplied) and gave to his disciples, and they to the multitude. Though the disciples had distrusted Christ's power, yet he made use of them now as before; he is not provoked, as he might be, by the weaknesses and infirmities of his ministers, to lay them aside; but still he gives to them, and they to his people of the word of life.

4. The plenty there was among them, ver. 37. They did all eat, and were filled. Note, Those whom Christ feeds he fills. While we labour for the world we labour for that which satisfieth not, Isa. lv. 2. but those that duly wait on Christ, shall be abundantly satisfied with the goodness of his house, Psalm lxxv. 4. Christ thus fed people once and again, to intimate, that though he was called Jesus of Nazareth, yet he was of Bethlehem, the house of bread; or rather, that he was himself the bread of life.

To shew that they had all enough there was a great deal left; seven baskets full of broken meat; not so much as there was before, because they did not gather after so many eaters, but enough to shew, that with Christ there is bread enough and to spare; supplies of grace for more than seek it, and for those that seek more.

5. The account taken of the guests, not that they might pay their ordinary; here was no reckoning to be discharged, they were fed gratis, but that they might be witnesses to the power and goodness of Christ; and that this might be some resemblance of that universal providence that gives food to all flesh, Psalm cxxxvi. 25. Here were four thousand men fed, but what were they to that great family which is provided for by the divine care every day? God is a great house-keeper, on whom the eyes of all the creatures wait, and he giveth them their food in due season, Psalm civ. 27. —cxlv. 15.

Lastly, the dismissal of the multitude, and Christ's departure to another place, ver. 39. He sent away the people. Though he had fed them twice they must not expect miracles to be their daily bread. Let them now go home to their callings and to their own tables. And he himself departed by ship to another place; for being the light of the world, he must be still in motion, and go about to do good.

CHAP. XVI.

None of Christ's miracles are recorded in this chapter, but four of his discourses. Here is, (1.) A conference with the Pharisees, which challenged him to shew them a sign of heaven, ver. 1—4. (2.) Another with his disciples about the leaven of the Pharisees, ver. 5—12. (3.) Another with them concerning himself, as the Christ, and concerning his church built upon him, ver. 13—20. (4.) Another concerning his sufferings for them and theirs for him, ver. 21—28. And all these are written for our learning.

1. THE Pharisees also with the Sadducees, came, and tempting, desired him that he would shew them a sign from heaven. 2. He answered and said unto them, When it is evening, ye say, It will be fair weather: for the sky is red. 3. And in the morning, It will be foul weather to-day: for the sky is red and lowring. O ye hypocrites, ye can discern the face of the sky, but can ye not discern the signs of the times? 4. A wicked and adulterous generation seeketh after a sign, and there shall no sign be given unto it, but the sign of the prophet Jonas. And he left them and departed.

We have here Christ's discourse with the Pharisees and Sadducees, men at variance among themselves, as appears, Acts xxiii. 7, 8. and yet unanimous in their opposition to Christ; because his doctrine did equally overthrow the errors and heresies of the Sadducees, who denied the existence of spirits and a future state; and the pride, tyranny and hypocrisy of the Pharisees, who were the great imposers of the traditions of the elders. Christ and Christianity meet with opposition on all hands. Observe,

First, Their demand, and the design of it.

1. The demand was of a sign from heaven; this they desired him to shew them; pretending they were very willing to be satisfied and convinced, when really they were far from being so, but sought excuses for an obstinate infidelity. That which they pretended to desire was,

1. Some other sign than what they had yet had. They had great plenty of signs, every miracle Christ wrought was a sign; for no man could do what he did unless God were with him; But this will not serve, they must have a sign of their own choosing; they despised those signs which relieved the necessity of the sick and sorrowful, and insisted upon some sign which would gratify the curiosity of the proud. It is fit the proofs of divine revelation should be chosen by the wisdom of God, not by the follies and fancies of men. The evidence that is given is sufficient to satisfy an unprejudiced understanding, but was not intended to please a vain humour. And it is an instance of the deceitfulness of the heart, to think that we should be wrought upon by the means and advantages which we have not, while we slight those we have. If we hear not Moses and the prophets, neither would we be wrought upon though one rose from the dead.

2. It must be a sign from heaven. They would have such miracles to prove his commission as were wrought at the giving of the law upon mount Sinai; thunder and lightning and the voice of words, were the sign from heaven, the true one. Whereas the sensible signs and terrible ones were not agreeable to the spiritual and comfortable dispensation of the gospel. Now the word comes more nigh us, Rom. x. 8. and therefore the miracles do so, and do not oblige us to keep such a distance as these did, Heb. xii. 18.

The design was to tempt him, not to be taught by him but to ensnare him. If he should shew them a sign from heaven, they would attribute it to a confederacy with the prince of the power of the air; if he should not, as they supposed he would not, they would have that to say for themselves, why they did not believe on him. They now tempted Christ as Israel did, 1 Cor. xi. 9. And observe their perverseness: then when they had signs from heaven, they tempted Christ, saying, Can he furnish a table in the wilderness? Now he had furnished a table in the wilderness, they tempted him, saying, Can he give us a sign from heaven?

Secondly, Christ's reply to this demand; lest they should be wise in their own conceit, he answered those fools according to their folly, Prov. xxvi. 5. In his answer,

1. He condemns their inadvertency of the signs they had, ver. 2, 3. They were seeking for the signs of the kingdom of God, when it was already among them. The Lord was in this place, and they knew it not. Thus their unbelieving ancestors, when miracles were their daily bread, yet asked, Is the Lord among us, or is he not?

To expose this, he observes to them,

1. Their skillfulness and sagacity in other things, particularly in natural prognostications of the weather; you know that a red sky over night is a pre-sage of fair weather, and a red sky in the morning of foul weather. There are common rules drawn from observation and experience, by which it is easy to foretell very probably what weather it will be. When second causes have begun to work, we may easily guess at their issue, so uniform is nature in its motions and so consistent with itself. We know not the balancing of the clouds, Job xxxvii. 16. but we may spell something from the faces of them. This gives no countenance at all to the wild and ridiculous predictions of the astrologers, the star-gazers, and the monthly prognosticators, Isa. xlvii. 13. concerning the weather long before, with which weak and foolish people are imposed upon; we are sure in general that seed time and harvest, cold and heat, summer and winter shall not cease. But as to the particulars, till by the weather glasses or otherwise we perceive the immediate signs and harbingers of the change of weather, it is not for us to know, no, not that concerning the times and seasons. Let it suffice, that it shall be what weather pleaseth God, and that which pleaseth God should not displease us.

2. Their sottishness and stupidity in the concerns of their souls; Can ye not discern the signs of the times?

1. Do you not see that the Messiah is come; The sceptre was departed from Judah, Daniel's weeks were upon expiring, and yet they regarded not. The miracles Christ wrought, and the gathering of the people to him, were plain indications that the kingdom of heaven was at hand, and this was the day of their visitation. Note, 1. There are signs of the times, by which wise and upright men are enabled to make moral prognostications, and so far to understand the motions and methods of providence, as from thence to take their measures, and to know what Israel ought to do, as the men of Issachar, as the physician from some certain symptoms find a crisis formed. 2. There are many who are skilful and enough in other things, yet cannot or will not discern the day of their opportunities, are not aware of the wind when it is fair for them, and so let slip the gale. See Jer. viii. 7. Isa. i. 3. 3. It is great hypocrisy when we slight the signs of God's ordaining, to seek for signs of our own prescribing.

2. Do you not foresee your own ruin coming for rejecting him? You will not entertain the gospel of peace, and can you not evidently discern that hereby you pull an inevitable destruction upon your own heads? Note, It is the undoing of multitudes that they are not aware what will be in the end of their refusing Christ.

2. He denies to give them any other sign, ver. 4. as he had done before in the same words, chap. xii. 39. Those that persist in the same iniquities must expect to meet with the same reproofs. Here, as there, 1. He calls them an adulterous generation; because while they professed themselves of the true church and spouse of God, they treacherously departed from him and broke their covenant with him. The Pharisees were a generation pure in their own eyes, having the way of an adulterous woman, that thinks she has done no wickedness, Prov. xxx. 20. 2. He refuseth to gratify their desire. Christ will not be prescribed to; we ask, and have not, because we ask amiss. 3. He refers them to the sign of the prophet Jonas, which should yet be given them; his resurrection from the dead, and his preaching by his apostles to the Gentiles; these were reserved for the last and highest evidences of his divine mission. Note, Though the fancies of proud men shall not be humoured, yet the faith of the humble shall be supported, and the unbelief of them that perish left for ever inexcusable, and every mouth shall be stopped.

This discourse broke off abruptly; he left them, and departed. Christ will not tarry long with those that tempt him, but justly withdraws from those that are disposed to quarrel with him. He left them as irreclaimable; let them alone. He left them to themselves, left them in the hand of their own counsels, so he gave them up to their own hearts lusts.

5. ¶ And when his disciples were come to the other side, they had forgotten to take bread. 6. Then Jesus said unto them, Take heed and beware of the leaven of the Pharisees, and of the Sadducees. 7. And they reasoned among themselves, saying, It is because we have taken no bread. 8. Which when Jesus perceived, he said unto them, O ye of little faith, why reason ye among yourselves, because ye have brought no bread? 9. Do ye not yet understand, neither remember the five loaves of the five thousand, and how many baskets ye took up? 10. Neither the seven loaves of the four thousand, and how many baskets ye took up? 11. How is it that ye do not understand, that I spake it not to you concerning bread, that ye should beware of the leaven of the Pharisees, and of the Sadducees? 12. Then understood they how that he bade them not beware of the leaven of bread, but of the doctrine of the Pharisees, and of the Sadducees.

We have here Christ's discourse with his disciples concerning bread, in which, as in many other, he speaks to them of spiritual things under a similitude, and they misunderstand him of carnal things. The occasion of it was their forgetting to victual the ship, and to take along with them provisions for their family on the other side the water; usually they carried bread along with them, because they were sometimes in desert places, and when they were not yet they would not be burdensome. But now they forgot, we will hope it was because their minds and memories were filled with better things. Note, Christ's disciples are often such as have no great forecast for the world.

First, Here is the caution Christ gave them to beware of the leaven of the Pharisees. He had now been discoursing with the Pharisees and Sadducees, and saw them to be men of such a spirit that it was necessary to caution his disciples to have nothing to do with them. Disciples are in most danger from hypocrites, against those that are openly vicious they stand upon their guard, but against Pharisees that are great pretenders to devotion, and Sadducees, that pretend to a free and impartial search after truth, they commonly lie unguarded: and therefore the caution is doubted, take heed and beware.

The corrupt principles and practices of the Pharisees and Sadducees are compared to leaven; they were souring and swelling, and spreading like leaven; they fermented wherever they came.

Secondly, Their mistake concerning this caution, ver. 7. They thought Christ hereby upbraided them with their improvidence and forgetfulness, they were so busy attending to his discourse with the Pharisees that therefore they forgot their private concerns. Or because having no bread of their own with them, they must be beholden to their friends for supply, he would not have them to ask it of the Pharisees or Sadducees, nor to receive of their alms, because he would not so far countenance them; or for fear, lest under pretence of feeding them they should do them a mischief. Or they took it for a caution, not to be familiar with the Pharisees and Sadducees, not to eat with them, Prov. xxiii. 6. whereas the danger was not in their bread, Christ himself did eat with them, Luke vii. 36—xiv. 1—xi. 37. but in their principles.

Thirdly, The reproof Christ gave them for this.

1. He proves their distrust of his ability and readiness to supply them in this straight, ver. 8. O ye of little faith why are ye in such perplexity because you have taken no bread? that you can mind nothing else, that you think your Master is as full of it as you, and apply every thing he saith to that. He doth not chide them for their little forecast, as they expected he would. Note, Parents and masters must not be angry at the forgetfulness of their children and servants, more than is necessary to make them take more heed another time; we are all apt to be forgetful of our duty. This should serve to excuse a fault, peradventure it was an oversight. See how easily Christ forgave his disciples' carelessness, though it was in such a material point as taking bread, and do likewise. But that which he chides them for is their little faith.

1. He would have them to depend upon him for supply, though it were in a wilderness, and not to disquiet themselves with anxious thoughts about it. Note, Though Christ's disciples be brought into wants and straits through their own carelessness and incogitancy, yet he encourageth them to trust in him for relief. We must not therefore use this as an excuse for our charity to those that are really poor, that they should have minded their own affairs better, and then they would not have been in need. It may be so, but they must not therefore be left to starve when they are in need.

2. He is displeased at their solicitude in this matter. The weakness and shiftlessness of good people in their worldly affairs, is that for which men are apt to condemn them; but it is not such an offence to Christ as their inordinate care and anxiety about those things: we must endeavour to keep the mean between the extremes of carelessness and carefulness; but of the two the excess of thoughtfulness about the world worst becomes Christ's disciples. O ye of little faith, why are ye disquieted for want of bread? Note, To distrust Christ, and disturb ourselves when we are in straits and difficulties, is an evidence of the weakness of our faith, which if it were in exercise as it should be, would ease us of the burden of care, by casting it on the Lord who careth for us.

3. The aggravation of their distrust was, the experience they had so lately had of the power and goodness of Christ in providing for them, ver. 9, 10. Though they had no bread with them, they had him with them that could provide bread for them. If they had not the cistern, they had the fountain. Do not ye yet understand, neither remember? Note, Christ's disciples are often to be blamed for the shallowness of their understandings and the slipperiness of their memories. Have you forgot those repeated instances of merciful and miraculous supplies; five thousand fed with five loaves, and four thousand with seven loaves, and yet they had enough and to spare. Remember how many baskets you took up, which were intended for memorials, by which to keep the mercy in remembrance, as the pot of manna which was preserved in the ark, Exod. xvi. 32. The fragments at those meals would be a feast now; and he that could furnish them with such an overplus then, surely could furnish them with what was necessary now. That meat for their bodies was intended to be meat for their faith, (Psal. lxxiv. 14.) which therefore they should have lived upon now they had forgotten to take bread. Note, We are therefore perplexed with present cares and distrusts, because we do not duly remember our former experiences of divine power and goodness.

2. He reproves their misunderstanding of the caution he gave them, ver. 11. How is it that ye do not understand? Note, Christ's disciples may well be ashamed of the slowness and dullness of their apprehensions in divine things; especially when they have long enjoyed the means of grace: I spake it not unto you concerning bread. He took it ill, 1. That they should think him as thoughtful about bread as they were; whereas his meat and drink was to do his Father's will. 2. They should be so little acquainted with his way of preaching, as to take that literally which he spoke by way of parable, and should thus make themselves like the multitude, who when Christ spoke to them in parables, seeing saw not, and hearing heard not, Matt. xiii. 13.

Fourthly, The rectifying of the mistake by this reproof, ver. 12. Then understood they what he meant. Note, Christ therefore shews us our folly and weakness, that we may stir up ourselves to take things right. He did not tell them expressly what he meant, but repeated what he had said, that they should beware of the leaven: and so obliged them, by comparing this with his other discourses, to bolt out the sense of it in their own thoughts. Thus Christ teacheth by the Spirit of wisdom in the heart, opening the understanding to the Spirit of revelation in the word. And those truths are most precious which we have thus digged for, and have found out after some mistakes. Though Christ did not tell them plainly, yet now they were aware that by the leaven of the Pharisees and Sadducees, he meant their doctrine and way, which was corrupt and vicious; but as they managed it, was very apt to insinuate itself into the minds of men like leaven, and to eat like a canker. They were leading men, and were had in reputation, which made the danger of infection by their errors the greater. In our age we may reckon atheism and deism to be the leaven of the Sadducees, and popery to be the leaven of the Pharisees, against both which it concerns all Christians to stand upon their guard.

13. ¶ When Jesus came into the coasts of Cesarea Philippi, he asked his disciples, saying, Whom do men say that I the Son of man am? 14. And they said, Some say that thou art John the Baptist, Some Elias; and others, Jeremias, or one of the prophets. 15. He saith unto them, But whom saith ye that I am? 16. And Simon Peter answered and said, Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God. 17. And Jesus answered and said unto him, Blessed art thou Simon Bar-jona: for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven. 18. And I say also unto thee, that thou art Peter, and upon this rock will I build my church; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it. 19. And I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven; and whatsoever thou shalt bind on earth shall be bound in heaven: and whatsoever thou shalt loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven. 20. Then charged he his disciples that they should tell no man that he was Jesus the Christ.

We have here a private conference which Christ had with his disciples concerning himself. It was in the coasts of Cesarea Philippi, the utmost borders of the land of Canaan northward: there in that remote corner perhaps there was less flocking after him than in other places, which gave him leisure for this private conversation with his disciples. Note, When ministers are abridged in their public work, they should endeavour to do the more in their own families.

Christ is here catechizing his disciples.

First, He enquires what the opinions of others were concerning him; Whom do men say, that I, the Son of man, am?

1. He calls himself the Son of man; which may be taken either, 1. As a title common to him with others. He was called, and justly, Son of God, for so he was, Luke i. 35. but he called himself the Son of man; for he is really and truly "man, made of a woman." In courts of honour it is a rule to distinguish men by their highest titles; but Christ having now emptied himself, though he was the Son of God, yet will be known by the stile and title of the Son of man. Ezekiel was often called so to keep him humble; Christ called himself so, to shew that he was humble. Or, 2. As a title peculiar to him as Mediator. He is made known in Daniel's vision as the Son of man, Dan. vii. 13. I am the Messiah, that Son of man that was promised. But,

2. He enquires what people's sentiments were concerning him: Whom do men say that I am? The Son of man? so I think it might better be read: do they own me for the Messiah? He asks not, whom do the Scribes and Pharisees say that I am? They were prejudiced against him, and said that he was a deceiver, and in league with Satan; but whom do men say that I am? The common people, whom the Pharisees despised, to whom Christ had a regard. Christ asked this question not as one that knew not; for if he knows what men think, much more what they say; not as one desirous to hear his own praises, but to make the disciples solicitous concerning the success of their preaching, by shewing that he himself was so. The common people conversed more familiarly with the disciples than they did with their Master, and therefore from them he might better know what they said. Christ had not said plainly who he was, but left people to infer it from his works, John x. 24, 25. Now he would know what inferences the people drew from them, and from the miracles which his apostles wrought in his name.

3. To this question the disciples give him an answer, ver. 14. Some say, thou art John the Baptist, &c. There were somewhat said, he was the Son of David, Matt. xii. 23. and the great prophet, John vi. 14. but the disciples do not mention that, but only those that were wide, which they had gathered up from their countrymen. Observe,

1. They are different opinions, some say one thing, and others another. Truth is one, but those who vary from that, commonly vary from one another. Thus Christ came eventually to send division, Luke xii. 51. Being so noted a person, every one would be ready to pass his verdict upon him and, "Many men, many minds;" those that were not willing to own him to be the Christ, and wild hypothesis.

2. They are honourable opinions, and speak the respect they had for him, according to the best of their judgment. These were not the sentiments of his enemies, but the sober thoughts of those that followed him with love and wonder. Note, It is possible men may have good thoughts of Christ, and yet not right ones; a high opinion of him, and yet not high enough.

3. They all suppose him to be one risen from the dead; which perhaps arose from a confused notion they had of the resurrection of the Messiah before his public preaching, as of Jonas; or their notions arose from an over-value of antiquity; as if it were not possible for an excellent man to be produced in their own age, but it must be one of the ancients returned to life again.

4. They are all false opinions but built upon mistakes, and wilful mistakes. Christ's doctrine and miracles spoke him an extraordinary person; but because of the meanness of his appearance, so different from what they expected, they would not own him to be the Messiah, but will grant him to be any thing rather than that.

1. Some say, thou art John the Baptist; Herod said so, chap. xiv. 2. and those about him would be apt to say as he said. And this notion might be strengthened by an opinion they had, that those who died as martyrs, should rise again before others; which some think the second of the seven sons refers to in his answer to Antiochus, 2 Macc. vii. 9. The King of the world shall raise us up, who have died for his laws, unto everlasting life.

2. Some Elias; taking occasion, no doubt, from the prophecy of Malachi, chap. iv. 5. Behold, I will send you Elijah. And the rather, because Elijah (as Christ) did many miracles; and was himself, in his translation, the greatest miracle of all.

3. Others Jeremias: they fasten upon him, either because he was the weeping prophet, and Christ was often in tears: or because God had set him over the kingdoms and nations, Jer. i. 10. which they thought agreed with their notion of the Messiah.

4. Or one of the prophets. This shews what an honourable account they made of the prophets, and yet they were the children of them that persecuted and slew them, Matt. xxiii. 29. Rather than they would allow Jesus of Nazareth, one of their own country, to be such an extraordinary person as his works spoke him to be, they would say, it was not he, but one of the old prophets.

Secondly, He enquires what their thoughts were concerning him; But whom say ye that I am? ver. 15. You tell me what other people say of me, can you say better? 1. The disciples had themselves been better taught than others, had by their intimacy with Christ greater advantages of getting knowledge than others had. Note, It is justly expected that those who enjoy greater plenty of the means of knowledge and grace than others, should have more clear and distinct knowledge of the things of God than others. Those that have more acquaintance with Christ than others, should have a more clear and distinct knowledge of the things of God than others. Those that have more acquaintance with Christ than others, should have truer sentiments concerning him, and be able to give a better account of him than others. 2. The disciples were trained up to teach others, and therefore it was highly requisite they should understand the truth themselves. Ye that are to preach the gospel of the kingdom, what are your notions of him that sends you? Note, Ministers must be examined before, before they be sent forth, especially what their sentiments are of Christ, and whom they say that he is; for how can they be owned as ministers of Christ, that are either ignorant or erroneous concerning Christ? This is a question we should every one of us be frequently putting to ourselves, whom do we say, what kind of one do we say that the Lord Jesus is? Is he precious to us? Is he in our eyes the chief of ten thousand? Is he the beloved of our souls? It is well or ill with us, according as our thoughts are right or wrong concerning Jesus Christ.

Well, this was the question; now let us observe,

1. Peter's answer to this question, ver. 16. To the former question concerning the opinion others had of Christ, several of the disciples answered, according as they had heard people talk; but to this Peter answers in the name of all the rest, they all consenting to it, and concurring in it. Peter's temper led him to be forward in speaking upon all such occasions, and sometimes he spoke well, sometimes amiss; in all companies there are found some warm bold men, to whom a precedence of speech falls of course; Peter was such a one: yet we find other of the apostles sometimes speaking as the mouth of the rest; as John, Mark ix. 38. Thomas and Philip, and Jude, John xiv. 5—8—22. So that this is far from being a proof of such primacy and superiority of Peter above the rest of the apostles, as the church of Rome ascribes to him. They will needs advance him to be a judge, when the utmost they can make of him is, that he was but foreman of the jury, to speak for the rest, and that only pro hac vice, not the perpetual dictator or speaker of the house, only a chairman upon this occasion.

Peter's answer is short, but it is full, and true, and to the purpose: Thou art Christ, the Son of the living God. Here is a confession of the Christian faith addressed to Christ, and so made an act of devotion. Here is a confession of the true God as the living God, in opposition to dumb and dead idols, and of Jesus Christ whom he hath sent, whom to know is life eternal. This is the conclusion of the whole matter.

1. The people called him a prophet, that prophet, John vi. 14. but the disciples own him to be the Christ, the anointed One; the great Prophet, Priest, and King of the church; the true Messiah promised to the fathers, and depended on by them as he that should come. It was a great thing to believe this concerning one whose outward appearance was so contrary to the general idea the Jews had of the Messiah.

2. He called himself the Son of man, but they owned him to be the Son of the living God. The people's notion of him was, that he was the ghost of a dead man, Elias or Jeremias, but they know and believe him to be the Son of the living God, who has life in himself, and has given to his Son to have life in himself, and to be the light of the world. If he be the Son of the living God, he is of the same nature with him; and though his divine nature was now veiled with the cloud of flesh, yet there were those who looked through it and saw his glory, the glory as of the only-begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth. Now can we with an assurance of faith subscribe to this confession? Let us then, with a fervency of affection and adoration, go to Christ and tell him so, Lord Jesus, thou art the Christ the Son of the living God!

3. Christ's approbation of his answer, ver. 17, 18, 19. In which Peter is replied to, both as a believer and as an apostle.

1. As a believer, ver. 17. Christ shews himself well pleased with Peter's confession, that it was so clear and express, without ifs or ands, as we say. Note, The proficiency of Christ's disciples in knowledge and grace is very acceptable to him; and Christ shews him whence he received the knowledge of this truth. At the first discovery of this truth in the dawning of the gospel-day, it was a mighty thing to believe it, all men had not this knowledge, had not this faith. But,

1. Peter had the happiness of it. Blessed art thou, Simon Bar-jona. He minds him of his rise and original, the meanness of his parentage, the obscurity of his extraction, he was Bar-jonas, (the son of a dove, so some.) Let him remember the rock out of which he was hewn, that he might see he was not born to this dignity, but preferred to it by the divine favour; it was free grace that made him to differ. Those that have received the Spirit must remember who is their Father, 1 Sam. x. 12. And having minded him of this, he makes him sensible of his great happiness as a believer; blessed art thou. Note, True believers are truly blessed, and those are blessed indeed whom Christ pronounceth blessed; his saying they are so makes them so. Peter, thou art a happy man, who thus knowest the joyful sound, Psalm lxxxix. 15. Blessed are your eyes, Matt. xiii. 16. All happiness attends the right knowledge of Christ.

1. God must have the glory of it, for flesh and blood has not revealed it to thee. Thou hadst this neither by the invention of thy own wit and reason, nor by the instruction and information of others; this light sprung neither from nature nor education; but from my Father which is in heaven. Note, 1. The Christian religion is a revealed religion, has its rise in heaven; it is a religion from above, given by inspiration of God, not the learning of philosophers, nor the politics of statesmen. 2. Saving faith is the gift of God, and wherever it is wrought by him, as the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, for his sake and upon the score of his mediation, Phil. i. 29. Therefore thou art blessed, because my Father has revealed it to thee. Note, The revealing of Christ to us and in us, is a distinguishing token of God's good will, and a firm foundation of true happiness; and blessed are they that are thus highly favoured.

Perhaps Christ discerned something of pride and vain-glory in Peter's confession; a subtil sin, and which is apt to mingle itself even with our good duties. It is hard for good men to compare themselves with others, and not to have too great a conceit of themselves; to prevent which, we should consider that our preference above others is no achievement of our own, but the free gift of God's grace to us, and not to others; so that we have nothing to boast of, Psalm cxv. 1. 1 Cor. iv. 7.

2. Christ replies to him as an apostle or ministers, ver. 18, 19. Peter, in the name of the church, had confessed Christ, and to him therefore the promise intended for the church is directed. Note, There is nothing lost by being forward to confess Christ; for those who thus honour him, he will honour.

Upon occasion of this great confession made of Christ, which is the church's homage and allegiance, he signed and published this royal, this divine charter, by which that body politic is incorporated. Such is the communion between Christ and the church, the bridegroom and the spouse. God had a church in the world from the beginning, and it was built upon the rock of the promised seed, Gen. iii. 15. But now that promised seed was come, it was requisite the church should have a new charter, as Christian, and standing in relation to a Christ already come. Now here we have that charter, and a thousand pities it is that this word, which is the great support of the kingdom of Christ, should be wrested and pressed into the service of antichrist. But the devil has employed his subtilty to pervert it, as he did that promise, Psalm xci. 11. which he perverted to his own purpose, Matt. iv. 6. and perhaps both that scripture and this he thus perverted because they stood in this way, and therefore he owed them a spite.

Now the purport of this charter is,

1. To establish the being of the church. I say also unto thee. It is Christ that makes the grant, he that is the church's head and ruler, to whom all judgment is committed, and from whom all power is derived. He that makes it pursuant to the authority received from the Father, and his undertaking for the salvation of the elect. The grant is put into Peter's hand, I say it to thee. The Old Testament promises relating to the church were given immediately to particular persons, eminent for faith and holiness as to Abraham and David; which yet gave no supremacy to them, much less to any of their successors; so the New Testament charter is here delivered to Peter as an agent, but to the use and behoof of the church in all ages, according to the purposes therein specified, and contained. Now it is here promised,

1. That Christ would build his church upon a rock. This body politic is incorporated by the style and title of Christ's church. It is a number of the children of men called out of the world, and set apart from it, and dedicated to Christ. It is not thy church but mine. Peter remembered this, when he cautioned ministers not to lord it over God's heritage. The church is Christ's peculiar, appropriated to him. The world is God's, and they that dwell therein; but the church is a chosen remnant that stands in relation to God through Christ as Mediator. It bears his image and superscription.

1. The builder and maker of the church is Christ himself, 1 will build it. The church is a temple which Christ is the builder of, Zech. vi. 11—13. Herein Solomon was a type of Christ, and Cyrus, Isa. xlv. 28. The materials and workmanship are his. By the working of his Spirit with the preaching of his word he adds souls to his church, and so builds it up with living stones, 1 Pet. ii. 5. Ye are God's building, and building is a progressive work; the church in this world is but in fieri, like a house in the building. It is comfort to all those who wish well to the church that Christ who has a divine wisdom and power, undertakes to build it.

2. The foundation on which it is built is this rock. Let the architect do this part never so well, if the foundation be rotten the building will not stand; let us therefore see what the foundation is, and it must be meant of Christ, for other foundation can no man lay. See Isa. xxviii. 16.

1. The church is built upon a rock; a firm, strong and lasting foundation, which time will not waste, nor will it sink under the weight of the building. Christ would not build his house upon the sand, for he knew that storms would arise. A rock is nigh, Psalm vi. 2. Christ's church doth not stand upon a level with this world, a rock is large and extends far, so doth the church's foundation; and the more large the more firm; those are not the church's friends that narrow its foundations.

2. It is built upon this rock. Thou art Peter, which signifies a stone or rock; Christ gave him that name when he first called him, John i. 42. and here he confirms it; Peter, thou dost answer thy name, thou art a solid substantial disciple, fixed and stayed, and one that there is some hold of; Peter is thy name, and strength and stability are with thee. Thou art not shaken with the waves of men's fluctuating opinions concerning me, but established in the present truth, 2 Pet. i. 12. And from the mention of this significant name, occasion is taken for this metaphor of building upon a rock.

1. Some by this rock understand Peter himself as an apostle, the chief, though not the prince of the twelve; senior among them, but not superior over them. The church is built upon the foundation of the apostles, Eph. ii. 20. The first stones of that building were laid in and by their ministry; hence their names are said to be written in the foundations of the new Jerusalem, Rev. xxi. 14. Now Peter being that apostle by whose hand the first stones of the church were laid both in Jewish converts, Acts ii. and in the Gentile converts, Acts x. he might in some sense be said to be the rock on which it was built. Cephas was one that seemed to be a pillar, Gal. ii. 9. But it sounds very harsh, to call a man that only lays the first stone of a building, which is a transient act, the foundation on which it is built, which is an abiding thing. Yet if it were so, this would not serve to support the pretensions of the Bishop of Rome; for Peter had no such headship as he claims, much less could derive it to his successors, least of all to the Bishops of Rome, who, whether they are so in place or not is a question, but that they are not so in the truth of christianity is past all question.

2. Others by this rock understand Christ. Thou art Peter, thou hast the name of a stone, but upon this rock, pointing to himself, I will build my church; perhaps he laid his hand on his breast, as when he said, destroy this temple, John ii. 19. when he spake of the temple of his body. Then he took occasion from the temple where he was to speak of himself, and gave occasion to some to misunderstand him of that; so here he took occasion from Peter to speak of himself as the rock, and gave occasion to some to misunderstand him of Peter. But this must be explained by those many scriptures which speak of Christ as the only foundation of the church, see 1 Cor. iii. 11. 1 Pet. ii. 6. Christ is both its founder and its foundation; he draws souls and he draws them to himself, to him they are united, and on him they rest and have a constant dependence.

3. Others by this rock, understand this confession which Peter made of Christ, and this comes all to one with understanding it of Christ himself, it was a good confession which Peter witnessed. Thou art Christ the Son of the living God: the rest concurred with him in it. Now saith Christ this is that great truth upon which I will build my church. 1. Take away this truth itself, and the universal church falls to the ground. If Christ be not the Son of God, christianity is a cheat, and the church is a mere chimera, our preaching is vain, your faith is vain, and you are yet in your sins, 1 Cor. xv. 14—17. If Jesus be not the Christ, those that own him are not of the church, but deceivers and deceived. 2. Take away the faith and confession of this truth from any particular church and it ceaseth to be a part of Christ's church, and relapseth to the state and character of infidelity: This is articulus stantis & cadentis ecclesiae, "the main hinge on which the door of salvation turns;" those who let go this do not hold the foundation; and though they may call themselves Christians, they give themselves the lie; for the church is a sacred society, incorporated upon the certainty and assurance of this great truth; and great it is, and has prevailed.

2. Christ here promiseth to preserve and secure his church when it is built. The gates of hell shall not prevail against it; neither against this truth, nor against the church which is built upon it.

(1.) This implies, that the church has enemies that fight against it, and endeavour its ruin and overthrow, here represented by the gates of hell, i. e. the city of hell; which is directly opposite to this heavenly city, this city of the living God: the devil's interest among the children of men; the gates of hell are the powers and policies of the devil's kingdom, the dragon's head and horns by which he makes war with the Lamb: all that comes out of hell-gates, has been hatched and contrived there; these fight against the church, by opposing gospel truths, corrupting gospel ordinances, persecuting good ministers and good Christians; drawing or driving, persuading by craft or forcing by cruelty, to that which is inconsistent with the purity of religion. This is the design of the gates of hell, to root out the name of christianity, Psalm lxxxiii. 4. to devour the man-child, Rev. xii. 9. to raise this city to the ground.

(2.) This assures us that the enemies of the church shall not gain their point. While the world stands Christ will have a church in it, in which his truths and ordinances shall be owned and kept up, in spite of all the opposition of the powers of darkness; they shall not prevail against it, Psal. cxxix. 1, 2. This gives no security to any particular church or church governors that they shall never err, never apostatise or be destroyed; but that somewhere or other the Christian religion shall have a being, though not always in the same degree of purity and splendor, yet so as that the entail of it shall never be quite cut off. The woman lives, though in a wilderness, Rev. xiv. 12. cast down, but not destroyed, 2 Cor. iv. 9. as dying, and behold we live, 2 Cor. vi. 9. Corruptions grieving, persecutions grievous, but neither fatal. The church may be foiled in particular encounters, but in the main battle it shall come off more than a conqueror. Particular believers are kept by the power of God, through faith unto salvation, 1 Pet. i. 5.

2. The other part of this charter is to settle the order and government of the church, ver. 19. When a city or society is incorporated, officers are appointed and empowered to act for the common good. A city without government is a chaos. Now this constituting of the government of the church, is here expressed by the delivering of the keys, and, with them, a power to bind and loose. This is not to be understood of any peculiar power that Peter was invested with, as if he were sole door-keeper of the kingdom of heaven, and had that key of David which belongs only to the Son of David; no, this invests all the apostles and their successors with a ministerial power to guide and govern the church of Christ, as it exists in particular congregations or churches, according to the rules of the gospel: Claves regni caelorum in B. Petro apostolo cuncti suscepimus sacerdotes; so Ambrose De dignit. sacerdot. Only the keys were first put into Peter's hand, because he was the first that opened the door of faith to the Gentiles, Acts x. 28. As the king, in giving a charter to a corporation, empowers the magistrates to hold courts in his name, to try matters of fact, and determine therein according to law, confirming what is so done regularly, as if done in any of the superior courts; so Christ having incorporated his church, hath appointed the office of the ministry for the keeping up of order and government, and to see that his laws be duly observed. I will give thee the keys. He doth not say, He has given them, or doth now, but he will do it after his resurrection; when he ascended on high, he gave those gifts, Ephes. iv. 8. then this power was actually given, not to Peter only, but to all the rest, Matt. xxviii. 19, 20. John xx. 21. He doth not say, the keys shall be given, but I will give them; for ministers derive their authority from Christ, and all the power is to be used in his name, 1 Cor. v. 4.

Now, (1.) The power here delegated is a spiritual power: it is a power pertaining to the kingdom of heaven, i. e. to the church, that part of it which is militant here on earth, to the gospel dispensation; that is it about which the apostolical and ministerial power is wholly conversant: it is not any civil secular power that is hereby conveyed. Christ's kingdom is not of this world; their instructions afterwards in things pertaining to the kingdom of God, Acts i. 3.

(2.) It is the power of the keys that is given, alluding to the custom of investing men with authority in such a place, by delivering to them the keys of the place. Or as the master of the house gives the keys to the steward, the keys of the stores where the provisions are kept, that he may give to every one in the house their portion of meat in due season, Luke xii. 42. and deny it, as there is occasion, according to the rules of the family. Ministers are stewards, 1 Cor. iv. 1. Tit. i. 7. Eliakim, that had the key of the house of David, was over the household, Isa. xxii. 22.

(3.) It is a power to bind and loose, i. e. following the metaphor of the keys to shut and open. Joseph that was lord of Pharaoh's house, and steward of the stores, had power to bind his princes, and to teach his senators wisdom, Psalm cv. 21, 22. When the stores and treasures of the house are shut up from any they are bound interdico tibi aqua & igne; when they are opened to them again, they are loosed from that bond, are discharged from the censure and restored to their liberty.

(4.) It is a power which Christ has promised to own the true administration of, to ratify the sentences of his stewards with his own approbation: it shall be bound in heaven, and loosed in heaven: Not that Christ hath hereby obliged himself to confirm all church-censures right or wrong; but such as are duly passed according to the word clave non errante, they are sealed in heaven, i. e. the word of the gospel, in the mouth of faithful ministers, is to be looked upon not as the word of man, but as the word of God, and to be received accordingly, 1 Thess. ii. 13. John xiii. 20.

Now the keys of the kingdom of heaven are,

1. The key of doctrine, called the key of knowledge; your business shall be to explain to the world the will of God, both as to truth and duty; and for this you shall have your commissions, credentials, and full instructions, to bind and loose; which in the common speech of the Jews at that time, signified to prohibit and permit; to teach or declare a thing to be unlawful, was to bind; to be lawful, was to loose. Now the apostles had an extraordinary power of this kind; some things forbidden by the law of Moses were now to be allowed, as the eating of such and such meats; some things allowed there were now to be forbidden, as divorce; and the apostles were empowered to declare this to the world, and men might take it upon their words. When Peter was first taught himself, and then taught others, to call nothing common or unclean, this power was exercised. There is also an ordinary power hereby conveyed to all ministers to preach the gospel as appointed officers; to tell people in God's name, and according to the scriptures, what is good, and what the Lord requires of them; and they who declare the whole counsel of God use these keys well, Acts xx. 27.

Some make the giving of the keys to allude to the custom of the Jews in creating a doctor of the law, which was to put into his hand the keys of the chest where the book of the law was kept, noting his being authorized to take and read it; and the binding and loosing to allude to the fashion about their books, which were in rolls; they shut them by binding them up with a string, which they untied when they opened them. Christ gives his apostles power to shut or open the book of the gospel to people, as the case required. See the exercise of this power, Acts xiii. 46—xviii. 6. When ministers preach pardon and peace to the penitent, wrath and the curse to the impenitent, in Christ's name, they act then pursuant to this authority of binding and loosing.

2. The key of discipline, which is but the application of the former to particular persons, upon a right estimate of their characters and actions; it is not a legislative power that is hereby conferred, but judicial; the judge doth not make the law, but only declares what is law, and, upon an impartial inquiry into the merits of the cause, give sentence accordingly. Such is the power of the keys wherever it is lodged, with reference to church-membership and the privileges thereof. 1. Christ's ministers have a power to admit into the church; Go, disciple all nations, baptizing them; those who profess faith in Christ and obedience to him, admit them, and their seed members of the church by baptism. Ministers are to let in to the wedding-feast those that are bidden; and to keep out such as are apparently unfit for so holy a communion. 2. They have a power to expel, and cast out such as have forfeited their church-membership, that is binding; refusing to unbelievers the application of gospel-promises and the seals of them; and declaring to such as appear to be in the gall of bitterness and bond of iniquity, that they have no part or lot in the matter, as Peter did to Simon Magus, though he had been baptized; and this is a binding over to the judgment of God. 8. They have a power to restore and to receive in again upon their repentance, such as had been thrown out; to loose those whom they had bound; declaring to them that if their repentance be sincere, the promise of pardon belongs to them. The apostles had a miraculous gift of discerning spirits, yet even they went by the rule of outward appearances, as Acts viii. 21. 1 Cor. v. 1. 2 Cor. ii. 7. 1 Tim. i. 20. which ministers may still make a judgment upon, if they be skillful and faithful.

Lastly, here is the charge which Christ gave his disciples to keep this private for the present, ver. 20. They must tell no man that he was Jesus the Christ. What they had professed to him they must not yet publish to the world for several reasons; 1. Because this was the time of preparation for his kingdom; the great thing now preached was, that the kingdom of heaven was at hand; and therefore those things were now to be insisted on which were proper to make way for Christ; as the doctrine of repentance; not this great truth, in and with which the kingdom of heaven was to be actually set up. Every thing is beautiful in its season; and it is good advice. Prepare thy work, and afterwards build, Prov. xxiv. 27.—2. Christ would have his Messiahship proved by his works, and would rather they should testify of him, than that his disciples should, because their testimony was but as his own, which he insisted not on: See John v. 31, 34. He was so secure of the demonstration of his miracles, that he waved other witnesses, John x. 25—38. 3. If they had known that he was Jesus the Christ, they would not have crucified the Lord of glory, 1 Cor. ii. 8. 4. Christ would not have the apostles preach this, till they had the most convincing evidence ready to alledge in confirmation of it. Great truths may suffer damage, by being asserted before they can be sufficiently proved. Now the great proof of Jesus being the Christ, was his resurrection; by that he was declared to be the Son of God with power; and therefore the divine wisdom would not have this truth preached, till that could be alledged for proof of it. 5. It was requisite that the preachers of so great a truth, should be furnished with greater measures of the Spirit than the apostles as yet had; therefore the open asserting it was adjourned till the Spirit should be poured out upon them. But when Christ was glorified, and the Spirit poured out, we find Peter proclaiming upon the house-tops, what was here spoken in a corner, Acts ii. 36. That God hath made this same Jesus both Lord and Christ; for as there is a time to keep silence so there is a time to speak.

21. ¶ From that time forth began Jesus to shew unto his disciples, how that he must go unto Jerusalem, and suffer many things of the elders and chief priests and Scribes, and be killed, and be raised again the third day. 22. Then Peter took him, and began to rebuke him, saying, Be it far from thee, Lord: this shall not be unto thee. 23. But he turned, and said unto Peter, Get thee behind me Satan, thou art an offence unto me: for thou savourest not the things that be of God, but those that be of men.

We have here Christ's discourse with his disciples concerning his own sufferings; in which observe,

First, Christ's foretelling his sufferings; Now he began to do it, and from this time frequently spoke of them. Some hints he had already given of sufferings, as when he said, Destroy this temple; when he spoke of the Son of man being lifted up, and of eating his flesh and drinking his blood; but now he began to shew it, to speak plainly and expressly of it: Hitherto he had not touched upon this, because the disciples were weak, and could not well bear the notice of a thing so very strange, and so very melancholy; but now they were more ripe in knowledge, and strong in faith, he began to tell them thus. Note, Christ reveals his mind to his people gradually, and lets in light as they can bear it, and are fit to receive it.

From that time, when they had made that full confession of Christ, that he was the Son of God, then he began to shew them this; when he found them knowing in one truth, he taught them another; for to him that has, shall be given: Let them first be established in the principles of the doctrine of Christ, and then go on to perfection, Heb. vi. 1. If they had not been well grounded in the belief of Christ's being the Son of God, it would have been a great shaking to their faith. All truths are not to be spoken to all persons, at all times, but such as are proper and suitable to their present state. Now observe,

(1.) What he foretold concerning his sufferings, the particulars and circumstances of them, are all surprising.

1. The place where he should suffer: He must go to Jerusalem, the head city, the holy city, and suffer there. Though he lived most of his time in Galilee, he must die at Jerusalem; there all the sacrifices were offered, there therefore he must die who is the great sacrifice, Luke xiii. 34.

2. The persons by whom he should suffer; the elders, and chief priests and Scribes; these made up the great Sanhedrim, which sat at Jerusalem, and was had in veneration by the people: Those that should have been most forward in owning and admiring Christ, were the most bitter in persecuting him. It was strange that men of knowledge in the scripture, who professed to expect the Messiah's coming and pretended to have something sacred in their character, should use him thus barbarously when he did come. It was the Roman power that condemned and crucified Christ, but he lays it at the door of the chief priests and Scribes who were the first movers.

3. What he should suffer: He must suffer many things, and be killed. His enemies insatiable malice, and his own invincible patience, appears in the variety and multiplicity of his sufferings; he suffered many things, and in the extremity of them; nothing less than his death would satisfy them, he must be killed: The suffering of many things, if not unto death, is more tolerable; for while there is life there is hope; and death, without such prefaces, would be less terrible; but he must first suffer many things, and then be killed.

4. What should be the happy issue of all his sufferings; he shall be raised again the third day. As the prophets, so Christ himself, when he testified beforehand his sufferings, testified withal the glory that should follow, 1 Pet. i. 11. His raising again the third day proved him to be the Son of God, notwithstanding his sufferings; and therefore he mentions that to keep up their faith. When he spoke of the cross and the shame, he spoke in the same breath of the joy set before him, in the prospect of which he endured the cross and despised the shame. Thus we must look upon Christ's sufferings for us, see his suffering the way to his glory; and thus we must look upon our suffering suffering for Christ, look through it to the recompence of reward; If we suffer with him, we shall reign with him.

(2.) Why he foretold his sufferings: 1. To shew, that they were the product of an eternal counsel and consent: were agreed upon between the Father and the Son from eternity: Thus it behoved Christ to suffer. The matter was settled in the determinate counsel and foreknowledge, in pursuance of his own voluntary susception and undertaking for our salvation; his sufferings were no surprise to him, did not come upon him as a snare, but he had a distinct and certain foresight of them, which greatly magnifies his love, John xviii. 4. 2. To rectify the mistakes of his disciples concerning the external pomp and power of his kingdom, which they had imbibed the notion of. Believe him to be the Messiah, they counted upon nothing but dignity and authority in the world; but here Christ reads them another lesson, tells them of the cross and sufferings; nay, and that the chief priests and the elders, whom, it is likely, they expected to be the supports of the Messiah's kingdom, should be the great enemies and persecutors of it; this would give them quite another idea of that kingdom which they themselves had preached the approach of; and it was requisite this mistake should be rectified: Those that follow Christ must be dealt plainly with, and warned not to expect great things in this world. 3. It was to prepare them for the share, at least of sorrow and fear which they must have in his sufferings. When he suffered many things, the disciples could not but suffer some; and if their Master be killed, they will be all frightened; let them know it before, that they may provide accordingly, and being forewarned, may be fore-armed.

Secondly, The offence which Peter took at this; he said, be it far from thee, Lord; and, it is likely, spoke the sense of the rest of the disciples, as before, for he was chief speaker: He took him and began to rebuke him. Perhaps Peter was a little elevated with the great things Christ had now said to him, which made him more bold with Christ than did become him; so hard is it to keep the spirit low and humble in the midst of great advancements!

1. It did not become Peter to contradict his Master, or take upon him to advise him; he might have wished, that if it were possible this cup might pass away, without saying so peremptorily, this shall not be, when Christ had said, it must be. Shall any teach God knowledge? He that reproveth God let him answer it. Note, When God's dispensations are either intricate or cross to us, it becomes us silently to acquiesce in; and not to prescribe to the divine will; God knows what he has to do without our teaching: Unless we know the mind of the Lord, it is not for us to be his counsellors, Rom. xi. 34.

2. It favoured much of fleshly wisdom, for him to appear so warmly against suffering, and to startle thus at the offence of the cross. It is the corrupt part of us that is thus solicitous to sleep in a whole skin: We are apt to look upon sufferings as they relate to this present life, to which they are uneasy; but there are rules to measure them by, which, if duly observed, will enable us to make nothing of them, Rom. viii. 18. See how passionately Peter speaks, Be it far from thee, Lord. God forbid that thou shouldst suffer and be killed; we cannot bear the thoughts of it: Master, spare thyself. So it might be read, ὦς σε σφύρι, "Be merciful to thyself," and then no one else can be cruel to thee; pity thyself, and then this shall not be to thee: He would have Christ to dread suffering as much as he did; but we mistake; if we measure Christ's love and patience by our own: He intimates likewise, the improbability of the thing, humanly speaking; This shall not be unto thee. It is impossible that one, who hath so great an interest in the people as thou hast, should be crushed by the elders, who fear the people: This can never be; we that have followed thee will fight for thee, if occasion be; and there are thousands that will stand by us.

Thirdly, Christ's displeasure against Peter for this suggestion of his, ver. 23. We do not read of any thing said or done by any of his disciples, at any time, that he resented so very ill as this here, though they often offended.

Observe, 1. How he expressed his displeasure: He turned upon Peter, and (we may suppose) with a frown said, Get thee behind me, Satan. He did not so much as take time to deliberate upon it, but gave an immediate reply to the temptation, which was such as made it appear how heinously he took it. Just now he had said, Blessed art thou, Simon, and had even laid him in his bosom; but here, Get thee behind me, Satan; and there was cause for both. Note, A good man may, by a surprise of temptation, soon grow very unlike himself. He answered him as he did Satan himself, Matt. 10. Note, 1. It is the subtilty of Satan to send temptations to us, by the unsuspected hands of our best and dearest friends. Thus he assaulted Adam by Eve, Job by his wife, and here Christ by his beloved Peter. It concerns us therefore not to be ignorant of his devices, but to stand against his wiles and depths, by standing always upon our guard against sin, whoever moves us to it: Even the kindnesses of our friends are often abused by Satan and made use of as temptations to us. 2. Those who have their spiritual senses exercised, will be aware of the voice of Satan, even in a friend, a disciple, a minister, that dissuades them from their duty. We must not regard who speaks, so much as what is spoken; we should learn to know the devil's voice when he speaks in a saint, as well as when he speaks in a serpent. Whoever takes us off from that which is good, and would have us afraid of doing too much for God, speaks Satan's language. 3. We must be free and faithful in reproving the dearest friend we have, that saith or doth amiss, though it may be under colour of kindness to us. We must not compliment, but rebuke mistaken courtesies: Faithful are the wounds of a friend: Such smittings must be accounted kindnesses, Psal. cxli. 5. Whatever appears to be a temptation to sin, must be resisted with abhorrence, and not parleyed with.

2. What was the ground of this displeasure; why did Christ thus resent a notion that seemed not only harmless but kind? Two reasons are given,

(1.) Thou art an offence to me; ἐκάρδησας μου, u. "Thou art my hindrance," so it may be read; "Thou standest in my way." Christ was hastening on in the work of our salvation, and his heart was so much upon it that he took it ill to be hindered, or tempted to start back from the hardest and most discouraging part of his undertaking. So strongly was he engaged for our redemption, that they who but indirectly endeavoured to divert him from it, touched him in a very tender and sensible part. Peter was not so sharply reprov'd for disowning and denying his Master in his sufferings, as he was for dissuading him from them; though that was the defect, this the excess of kindness. It argues a very great firmness and resolution of mind in any business when it is an offence to be dissuaded, and a man will not endure to hear any thing to the contrary; like that of Ruth, Entreat me not to leave thee. Note, Our Lord Jesus preferred our salvation before his own ease and safety; for even Christ pleased not himself, Rom. xv. 3. he came into the world not to spare himself, as Peter advised, but to spend himself.

See why he called Peter Satan when he suggested this to him; because whatever stood in the way of our salvation, he looked upon as coming from the devil, who is a sworn enemy to it. The same Satan that afterwards entered into Judas maliciously to destroy him in his undertaking, here prompted

Peter plausibly to divert him from it: thus he changes himself into an angel of light.

Thou art an offence to me. Note. 1. Those that engage in any great and good work, must expect to meet with hindrance and opposition from friends and foes, from within and from without. 2. Those that obstruct our progress in any duty, must be looked upon as an offence to us. Then we do the will of God, as Christ did, whose meat and drink it was to do it, when it is a trouble to us to be solicited from our duty. Those that hinder us from doing or suffering for God, when we are called to it, whatever they are in other things, in that they are Satan's, adversaries to us.

(2.) Thou savoured not the things that be of God, but these that be of men. Note, 1. The things that be of God; that is, the concerns of his will and glory, do often clash and interfere with the things that be of men; that is with our own wealth, pleasure and reputation. While we mind Christian duty as our way and work, and the divine favour as our end and portion, we savour the things of God; but if these be minded, the flesh must be denied, hazards must be run, and hardships borne, and here is the trial which of the two we savour. Those that inordinately fear, and industriously decline suffering for Christ when they are called to it, savour more of the things of man, than of the things of God; they relish those things more themselves, and make it appear to others that they do so.

24. ¶ Then said Jesus unto his disciples, If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow me. 25. For whosoever will save his life, shall lose it: and whosoever will lose his life for my sake shall find it. 26. For what is a man profited, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul? or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul? 27. For the Son of man shall come in the glory of his Father, with his angels; and then he shall reward every man according to his works. 28. Verily I say unto you, There be some standing here which shall not taste of death till they see the Son of man coming in his kingdom.

Christ having shewed his disciples that he must suffer, and that he was ready and willing to suffer, here shews them, that they must suffer too, and must be ready and willing to it. It is a weighty discourse that we have in these verses:

First, Here is the law of discipleship laid down, and the terms fixed upon which we may have the honour and benefit of it, ver. 24. He said this to his disciples, not only that they might instruct others concerning it, but that by this rule they might examine their own sincerity.

Observe, 1. What it is to be a disciple of Christ: It is to come after him. When Christ called his disciples, this was the word of command, Follow me. A true disciple of Christ is one that doth follow him in duty, and shall follow him to glory: He is one that comes after Christ, not one that prescribes to him, as Peter now undertook to do, forgetting his place. A disciple of Christ comes after him, as the sheep after the shepherd, the servant after his master, the soldiers after their captain; he is one that aims at the same end that Christ aimed at, the glory of God, and the glory of heaven; and one that walks in the same way that he walked in, is led by his Spirit, treads in his steps, submits to his conduct, and follows the Lamb whithersoever he goes, Rev. xiv. 4.

2. What are the great things required of those that will be Christ's disciples If any man will come, αὐτὸς θέλει, "If any man be willing to come:" It denotes a deliberate choice, and cheerfulness and resolution in that choice. Many are disciples more by chance, or the will of others, than by any act of their own will; but Christ will have his people volunteers, Psal. cx. 3. It is as if Christ had said, If any of the people, that are not my disciples, be stedfastly minded to come to me, and if you that are be in like manner minded to stick to me, it is upon these terms, these and no other, you must follow me in sufferings; as well as in other things, and therefore when you sit down to count the cost, reckon upon it.

Now what are these terms?

1. Let him deny himself. Peter had advised Christ to spare himself, and would be ready, in the like case, to take the advice; but Christ tells them all, they must be so far from sparing themselves, that they must deny themselves. Herein they must come after Christ, for his birth, and life, and death, were all continued act of self-denial, a self-emptying, Phil. ii. 7, 8. If self-denying be a hard lesson, and against the grain to flesh and blood, it is no more than what our master learned and practised before us and for us, both for our redemption and for our instruction; and the servant is not above the Lord. Note, All the disciples and followers of Jesus Christ must deny themselves: It is the fundamental law of admission into Christ's school, and the first and great lesson to be learned in this school, to deny ourselves; it is both the strait gate and the narrow way; it is necessary in order to our learning all the other good lessons that are there taught. We must deny ourselves absolutely, we must not admire our own shadow, nor gratify our own humour; we must not lean to our own understanding, nor seek our own things, nor be our own end. We must deny ourselves comparatively, we must deny ourselves for Christ, and his will and glory, and the service of his interests in the world; we must deny ourselves for our brethren, and for their good; and we must deny ourselves, for ourselves, deny the appetite of the body for the benefit of the soul.

2. Let him take up his cross. The cross is here put for all sufferings, as men or Christians; providential afflictions, persecutions for righteousness sake, every trouble that befalls us, either for doing well, or not for doing ill. The troubles of Christians are fitly called crosses, in allusion to the death of the cross, which Christ was obedient to; and it should reconcile us to troubles, and take off the terror of them, that they are what we bear in common with Christ, and such as he hath borne before us. Note, 1. Every disciple of Christ hath his cross, and must count upon it; as each hath his special duty to be done, so each hath his special trouble to be borne, and every one feels most from his own burden: Crosses are the common lot of God's children, but of this common lot each hath his particular share. That is our cross which infinite wisdom hath appointed for us, and a sovereign providence has laid on us, as fittest for us: It is good for us to call the cross we are under our own, and entertain it accordingly. We are apt to think we could bear such a one's cross better than our own, but that is best which is, and we ought to make the best of it. 2. Every disciple of Christ must take up that which the wise God hath made his cross. It is an allusion to the Roman custom of compelling those that were condemned to be crucified to carry their cross; when Simon carried Christ's cross after him, this phrase was illustrated. (1.) It is supposed that the cross lies in our way, and is prepared for us: We must not make crosses to ourselves, but must accommodate ourselves to those which God has made for us: Our rule is, not to go a step out of the way of duty, either to meet a cross or to miss one: We must not, by our rashness and indiscretion, pull crosses down upon our own heads, but must take them up when they are laid in our way: We must so manage an affliction, as that it may not be a stumbling block or hindrance to us in any service we have to do for God: We must take up our cross, by getting over the offence of the cross; none of these things more we; and we must then go on with it in our way, though it lie heavy. (2.) That which we have to do, is not only to bear the cross, that a stock, or a stone, or a stick may do; not only to be silent under it; but we must take up the cross, must improve it to some good advantage: Not say, this is an evil, and I must bear it, because I cannot help it; but this is an evil, and I will bear it, because it shall work for my good: When we rejoice in our afflictions and glory in them, then we take up the cross. This folly follows upon denying ourselves, for he that will not deny himself the pleasures of sin, and the advantages of this world, for Christ, when it comes to the push, will never have the heart to take up his cross: "He that cannot take up a resolution to live a saint, has a demonstration within himself, that he is never like to die a martyr;" so Archbishop Tillotson.

3. Let him follow me; in this particular of taking up the cross. Suffering saints must look unto Jesus, and take from him both direction and encouragement in suffering. Do we bear the cross? we therein follow Christ, who bears it before us, bears it for us, and so bears it off us; He bore the heavy end of the cross; the end that had the curse upon it, that was a heavy end, and so made the other light and easy for us. Or, we may take it in general, we must follow Christ in all instances of holiness and obedience. Note, the disciples of Christ must study to imitate their Master, and conform themselves in every thing to his example, and continue in well doing, whatever crosses lie in their way. To do well, and to suffer ill, is to follow Christ. If any man will come after me, let him follow me, that seems to be idem per idem, what is the difference? surely it is this, if any man will come after me, in profession, and so have the name and credit of a disciple, let him follow me in truth, and so do the work and duty of a disciple. Or thus, if any man will set out after me, in good beginnings, let him continue to follow me with all perseverance: That is following the Lord fully, as Caleb did: Those that come after Christ, must fulfil after him.

Secondly, Here are arguments to persuade us to submit to these laws, and come up to these terms: Self denial, and patient suffering, are hard lessons which will never be learned if we consult with flesh and blood: let us therefore consult with our Lord Jesus, and see what advice he gives us; and here he gives us.

1. Some considerations proper to engage us to these duties of self-denial and suffering for Christ. Consider,

(1.) The weight of that eternity which depends upon our present choice, ver. 25. Whosoever will save his life, by denying Christ, shall lose it; and whosoever is content to lose his life, for owning Christ, shall find it. Here is life and death, good and evil, the blessing and the curse set before us. Observe,

1. The misery that attends the most plausible apostasy: Whosoever will save his life in this world, if it be by sin, he shall lose it in another; He that forsakes Christ to preserve a temporal life, and avoid a temporal death, will certainly come short of eternal life, and will be hurt of the second death, and eternally held by it. There cannot be a fairer pretence for apostasy and iniquity, than saving the life by it, so cogent is the law of self-preservation, and yet even that is folly, for it will prove in the end, self-destruction; the life saved is but for a moment, the death shunned is but as a sleep; but the life lost is everlasting, and the death run upon is the depth and complement of all misery, and an endless separation from all good. Now, let any rational man consider of it, take advice, and speak his mind, whether there is any thing got at long run, by apostasy, though a man save his estate, preferment, or life by it.

2. The advantage that attends the most perilous and expensive constancy: Whosoever will lose his life for Christ's sake, in this world, shall find it in a better, infinitely to his advantage. Note, 1. There is many a life lost for Christ's sake, in doing his work, by labouring fervently for his name, in suffering work, by choosing rather to die than to deny him, or his truths and ways. Christ's holy religion is handed down to us, sealed with the blood of thousands, that have not known their own souls, but have despised their lives (as Job speaks in another case) though very valuable ones, when they had stood in competition with their duty, and the testimony of Jesus, Rev. xx. 4. 2. though many have been losers for Christ, even of life itself, yet never any one was or will be a loser by him in the end: The loss of other comforts for Christ may possibly be made up in this world, Mark x. 30. the loss of life cannot, but it shall be made up in the other world, in an eternal life; the believing prospect of which hath been the great support of suffering saints in all ages: an assurance of the life they should find, in lieu of the life they hazarded, hath enabled them to triumph over death in all its terrors; to go smiling to a scaffold, and stand singing at a stake, and to call the utmost instances of their enemies rage but a light affliction.

(2.) The worth of the soul which lies at stake, and the worthlessness of the world in comparison of it, *ver. 26. What is man profited, if he gain the whole world, and lose his own soul; or shall he give his soul for it; the same word which is translated his life, ver. 25. for the soul is the life, Gen. ii. 7. This alludes to that common principle, that whatever a man gets, if he loses his life it will do him no good, he cannot enjoy his gains. But it looks higher, and speaks of the soul as immortal, and a loss of it beyond death, which cannot be compensated by the gain of the whole world. Note, 1. Every man has a soul of his own: The soul is the spiritual and immortal part of man which thinketh and reasoneth, has a power of reflection and prospect, which act the body now, and will shortly act in a separation from the body. Our souls are our own, not in respect of dominion and propriety, for we are not our own, all souls are mine, saith God, but in respect of nearness and concern, our souls are our own, for they are ourselves. 2. It is possible the soul may be lost, and there is danger of it. The soul is lost when it is eternally separated from all the good to all the evil that a soul is capable of; when it dies as far as a soul can die; when it is separated from the favour of God, and sunk under his wrath and curse: A man is never undone till he is in hell. 3. If the soul be lost, it is of the sinner's own losing: The man loseth his own soul, for he doth that which is certainly destroying to it, and neglects that which alone would be saving, 1 Mos. xiii. 9. The sinner dies because he will die, his blood is on his own head. 4. One soul is more worth than all the world; our own souls that we have, of greater value to us than all the wealth, honour, and pleasures of this present time if we had it. Here is the whole world set in a scale against one soul, and let it be written upon it; it is weighed in the balance and found too light to weigh it down. It is Christ's judgment upon the matter, and he is a competent judge; he had reason to know the price of souls, for he redeemed them; nor would he under-rate the world, for he made it. 5. The winning of the world is oftentimes the losing of the soul: Many a one has ruined his eternal interests, by his preposterous and inordinate care to secure and advance his temporal ones: It is the lure of the world, and the eager pursuit of it, that drowns men in destruction and perdition. 6. The loss of the soul is so great a loss, that the gain of the whole world will not counter-* vail it, or make it up. He that loses his soul, though it be gain to the world makes a very bad bargain for himself, and will sit down at last an unspeakable loser: When he comes to balance the account, and to compare profit and loss, he will find, that instead of the advantage he promised himself, he is ruined to all intents and purposes, is irreparably broken.

What shall a man give in exchange for his soul? Note, If once the soul be lost, it is lost, it is lost for ever. There is no ἀντάλλαγμα, "no counter-price" that can be paid, or will be accepted. It is a loss that can never be repaired, never be retrieved. If after that great price which Christ laid down to redeem our souls, and to restore us to the possession of them they be so neglected for the world, as that they come to be lost, that new mortgage will never be taken off; there remains no more sacrifice for sins, nor price for souls, but the equity of redemption is eternally precluded. Therefore it is good to be wise in time, and do well for ourselves.

2. Here are some considerations proper to encourage us to self-denial and suffering for Christ.

1. The assurance we have of Christ's glory at his second coming to judge the world, ver. 27. If we look to the end of all these things, the period of the world, and the posture of souls then, we shall from thence form a very different idea of the present state of things. If we see things as they will appear then, we shall see them as they should appear now.

The great encouragement to steadfastness in religion is taken from the second coming of Christ, considering it,

1. As his honour. The Son of man shall come in the glory of his Father with his angels. To look upon Christ in his state of humiliation, so abased, so abused, a reproach of men, and despised of the people, would discourage his followers from taking any pains, or running any hazard for him; but with an eye of faith to see the Captain of our salvation coming in his glory, in all the pomp and power of the upper world, will animate us, and make us think nothing too much to do, or too hard to suffer for him. The Son of man shall come. He here gives himself the title of his humble state, he is the Son of man, to shew that he is not ashamed to own it. His first coming was in the meanness of his children, who being partakers of flesh, he took part of the same; but his second coming will be in the glory of his Father. In his first coming he was attended with poor disciples; in his second coming he will be attended with glorious angels, and if we suffer with him, we shall be glorified with him, 2 Tim. ii. 12.

2. As our concern. Then he shall reward every man according to his works. Observe, 1. Jesus Christ will come as a Judge, to dispense rewards and punishments, infinitely exceeding the greatest that any earthly potentate has the dispensing of. The terror of men's tribunal, (Matt. x. 18.) will be taken off by a believing prospect of the glory of Christ's tribunal. 2. Men will then be rewarded, not according to their gains in this world, but according to their works, according to what they were and did. In that day the treachery of backsliders will be punished with eternal destruction, and the constancy of faithful souls recompensed with a crown of life. 3. The best preparative for that day, to deny ourselves, and take up our cross, and follow Christ: for so we shall make the Judge our friend, and these things will then pass well in the account. 4. The rewarding of men according to their works is deferred till that day. Here good and evil seem to be dispensed promiscuously; we see not apostasy punished with immediate strokes, nor fidelity encouraged with immediate smiles from heaven; but in that day all will be set to rights. Therefore judge nothing before the time, 2 Tim. iv. 6, 7, 8.

2. The near approach of his kingdom in this world, ver. 28. It was so near, that there were some attending him that should live to see it. As Simeon was assured that he should not see death till he had seen the Lord Christ come in the flesh; so some here are assured that they shall not taste death (death is a sensible thing, its terrors are seen, its bitterness is tasted) till they had seen the Lord Christ coming in his kingdom. At the end of time he shall come in his Father's glory, but now in the fulness of time he was to come in his own kingdom, his mediatorial kingdom: Some little specimen was given of his glory a few days after this in his transfiguration, chap. xvii. 1. then he tried his robes. But this points at Christ's coming by the pouring out of his Spirit, the planting of the gospel church, the destruction of Jerusalem, and the taking away of the place and nation of the Jews, who were the most bitter enemies to christianity. Here was the Son of man coming in his kingdom. Many then present lived to see it, particularly John, who lived till after the destruction of Jerusalem, and saw christianity planted in the world. Let this encourage then the followers of Christ to suffer for him. 1. That their undertaking shall be succeeded; the apostles were employed in setting up Christ's kingdom; let them know, for their comfort, that whatever opposition they meet with, yet they should carry their point, should see of the travail of their soul. Note, It is a great encouragement to suffering saints to be assured, not only of the safety, but of the advancement of Christ's kingdom among men; not only notwithstanding their sufferings, but by their sufferings. A believing prospect of the success of the kingdom of grace, as well as of our share in the kingdom of glory, may carry us cheerfully through our sufferings. 2. That their cause shall be pleaded; their deaths shall be revenged, and their persecutors reckoned with. 3. That this shall be done shortly, in the present age. Note, The nearer the church's deliverances are, the more cheerful we should be in our sufferings for Christ. Behold, the judge standeth before the door. It is spoken as a favour to those that should survive the present cloudy time, that they should see better days. Note, It is desirable to share with the church in her joys, Dan. xii. 12. Observe, Christ saith, Some shall live to see those glorious days, not all; some shall enter into the promised land, but others shall fall in the wilderness. He doth not tell them who should live to see this kingdom, lest if they had known, they should have put off the thoughts of dying, but some of them shall. Behold the Lord is at hand. The judge standeth before the door; be patient therefore, brethren.

C H A P. XVII.

In this chapter we have, (1.) Christ in his pomp and glory transfigured, ver. 1-13. (2.) Christ in his power and grace casting the devil out of a child, ver. 14-21. And, (3.) Christ in his poverty and great humiliation, (1.) Foretelling his own sufferings, ver. 22, 23. (2.) Paying tribute, ver. 24-27. So that here are Christ the brightness of his Father's glory, by himself purging our sins, paying our debts, and destroying for us him that had the power of death, that is, the devil. Thus were the several indications of Christ's gracious intentions admirably interwoven.

1. AND after six days Jesus taketh Peter, James and John his brother and bringeth them up into a high mountain apart. 2. And was transfigured before them, and his face did shine as the sun, and his raiment was white as the light. 3. And behold there appeared unto them Moses and Elias talking talking with him. 4. Then answered Peter, and said unto Jesus, Lord, it is good for us to be here; if thou wilt, let us make us here three tabernacles: one for thee, and one for Moses, and one for Elias. 5. While he yet spake, behold, a bright cloud overshadowed them: and behold a voice out of the cloud, which said, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased; hear ye him. 6. And when the disciples heard it, they fell on their faces and were sore afraid. 7. And Jesus came and touched them, and said, Arise, and be not afraid. 8. And when they had lifted up their eyes, they saw no man, save Jesus only. 9. And as they came down from the mountain, Jesus charged them, saying, Tell the vision to no man, until the Son of man be risen again from the dead. 10. And his disciples asked him, saying, Why then say the Scribes, that Elias must first come? and Jesus answered and said unto them, Elias truly shall first come, and restore all things: 12. But I say unto you, that Elias is come already, and they knew him not, but have done unto him whatsoever they listed; likewise shall also the Son of man suffer of them. 13. Then the disciples understood that he spake unto them of John the Baptist.

We have here the story of Christ's transfiguration: he had said that the Son of man should shortly come in his kingdom, to which promise all the three evangelists industriously connect this story; as if Christ's transfiguration were intended for a specimen and an earnest of the kingdom of Christ, and of that light and love of his, which therein appears to his select and sanctified ones. Peter speaks of this as the power and coming of our Lord Jesus, 2 Pet. i. 16. because it was an emanation of his power, and a previous notice of his coming, which it was fit should be introduced by such proper prefaces.

When Christ was here in his humiliation, though his state for the main was a state of abasement and affliction, yet there was some glimpses of his glory intermixed, that he himself might be the more encouraged in his sufferings, and others the less offended. His birth, his baptism, his temptation and his death, were the most remarkable instances of his humiliation; and these were each of them attended with some signal points of glory, and the smiles of heaven. But the series of his public ministry being a continued humiliation, here, just in the midst of that, comes in this discovery of his glory. As now he is in heaven he has his condescension, so when he was on earth he had his advancements.

Now concerning Christ's transfiguration. Observe,

First, The circumstances of it which are here noted, ver. 1.

1. The time; six days after he had that solemn conference with his disciples, chap. xvi. 21. St. Luke saith, it was about eight days after, six whole days intervening, and this the eighth day, that day seven-night. Nothing is recorded to be said or done by our Lord Jesus for six days before his transfiguration; thus before some great appearances, there was silence in heaven for the space of half an hour, Rev. viii. 1. Then when Christ seems to be doing nothing for his church, expect, ere long, something more than ordinary.

2. The place; it was on the top of a high mountain apart. Christ chose a mountain, 1. As a secret place, he went apart; for though a city upon a hill can hardly be hid, two or three persons upon a hill can hardly be found; therefore their private oratories were commonly on mountains. Christ chose a retired place to be transfigured in, because his appearing publicly in his glory was not agreeable to his present state; and thus he would shew his humility, and teach us that privacy doth much befriend our communion with God. Those that would maintain an intercourse with heaven, must frequently withdraw from the converse and business of this world, and they will find themselves never less alone, than when alone, for the Father is with them. 2. Though a sublime place, elevated above things below. Note, Those that would have a transforming fellowship with God, must not only retire, but ascend; lift up their hearts, and seek things above. The call is, Come up hither, Rev. vi. 1.

3. The witnesses of it. He took with him Peter, and James, and John. 1. He took three, a competent number to testify what they should see; for out of the mouth of two or three witnesses, shall every word be established. Christ makes his appearances certain enough, but not too common; not to all the people, but to witnesses, Acts x. 41. that they might be blessed who have not seen and yet have believed. 2. He took these three, because they were the chief of his disciples, the first three of the worthies of the son of David, probably they excelled in gifts and graces; they were Christ's favourites, singled out to be witnesses of his retirements. They were present when he raised the damsel to life, Mark v. 37. They were afterwards to be the witnesses of his agony, and this was to prepare them for that. Note, A sight of Christ's glory while we are here in this world, is a good preparative for our sufferings with him, as these are preparatives for the sight of his glory in the other world. Paul that had abundance of trouble, had abundance of revelations.

Secondly, The manner of it, ver. 2. He was transfigured before them. The substance of his body remained the same, but the accidents and appearances of it were greatly altered; he was not turned into a spirit, but his body, which had appeared in weakness and dishonour, now appeared in power and glory. He was transfigured, μεταμορφωθῆναι, "he was metamorphosed." The profane poets amused and abused the world with idle extravagant stories and metamorphoses, especially the metamorphoses of their gods, and such as were disparaging and diminishing to them, which were equally false and ridiculous; to these some think Peter has an eye, when being about to mention this transfiguration of Christ he saith, We have not followed cunningly devised fables, when we made it known unto you, 2 Pet. i. 16. Christ was both God and man, but in the days of his flesh he took on him the form of a servant, μορφῇ δούλου, Phil. ii. 7. He drew a veil over the glory of his godhead, but now in his transfiguration, he put by that veil, appeared ἡ μορφή δούλου, in the form of God, Phil. ii. 6. and gave his disciples a glimpse of his glory, which could not but change his form.

The great truth which we declare is, that God is light, 1 John i. 5. dwells in light, 2 Tim. vi. 16. covers himself with light, Psal. civ. 2. And therefore when Christ would appear in the form of God, he appeared in light, the most glorious of all visible beings, the first born of the creation, and most nearly resembling the eternal parent. Christ is the light; while he was in the world he shined in darkness, and therefore the world knew him not, John i. 5—10. But at this time that light shined out of the darkness.

Now this transfiguration appeared in two things.

1. His face did shine as the sun. The face is the principal part of the body by which we are known; therefore such a brightness was put on Christ's face, that face which afterwards he hid not from shame and spitting. It shone as the sun when he goes forth in his strength, so clear, so bright; for he is the Sun of righteousness, the light of the world. The face of Moses shone but as the moon, with a borrowed reflected light, but Christ's shone as the sun, with an innate, inherent light: which was the more sensibly glorious, because it suddenly broke out as it were from behind a black cloud.

2. His raiment was white as the light. All his body was altered as his face was; so that beams of light darting from every part through his clothes, made them white and glittering. The shining of the face of Moses was so weak, that it could easily be concealed by a thin veil, but such was the glory of Christ's body, that his clothes were enlightened by it.

Thirdly, The companions of it. He will come at last with ten thousands of his saints; and as a specimen of that, there now appeared unto them, Moses, and Elias talking with him, ver. 3. Observe, 1. There were glorified saints attending him, that when there were three to bear record on earth, Peter, James, and John, there might be some to bear record from heaven too. Thus here was a lively resemblance of Christ's kingdom, which is made up of saints in heaven and saints on earth, and to which belong the spirits of just men made perfect. We see here that they which are fallen asleep in Christ are not perished, but do exist in a separate state, and shall be forthcoming when there is occasion. 2. These two were Moses and Elias, men very eminent in their day. They had both fasted forty days and forty nights, as Christ did, and wrought other miracles, and were both remarkable at their going out of the world, as well as in their living in the world. Elias was carried to heaven in a fiery chariot, and died not. The body of Moses was never found, possibly it was preserved from corruption, and reserved for this appearance. The Jews have great respect for the memory of Moses and Elias, and therefore they came to witness of him, they came to carry tidings concerning him to the upper world. In them the law and the prophets did honour Christ, and bore testimony to him. Moses and Elias appeared to the disciples, they saw them and heard them talk, and either by their discourse, or by information from Christ, they knew them to be Moses and Elias. Glorified saints shall know one another in heaven. They talked with Christ. Note, Christ has communion with the blessed, and will be no stranger to any of the members of that glorified corporation. Christ was now to be sealed in his prophetic office, and therefore these two great prophets were fittest to attend him, as transferring all their honour and interest to him; for in these last days God speaks to us by his son, Heb. i. 1.

Fourthly, the great pleasure and satisfaction that the disciples took in the sight of Christ's glory. Peter, as usual, spoke for the rest, Lord, it is good for us to be here. Peter here expresseth,

1. The delight they had in this converse; Lord, it is good to be here. Though upon a high mountain, which we may suppose rough and unpleasant, bleak and cold, yet it is good to be here. He speaks the sense of his fellow disciples, it is not only good for me, but good for us. He did not covet to monopolize this favour, but gladly takes them in. He saith this to Christ. Pious and devout affections love to pour out themselves before the Lord Jesus. The soul that loves Christ, and loves to be with him, loves to go and tell him so: Lord, it is good for us to be here; this intimates a thankful acknowledgment of his kindness in admitting them to this favour. Note, Communion with Christ is the delight of Christians. All the disciples of the Lord Jesus reckon it good for them to be with him in the holy mount. It is good to be here where Christ is, and brings us along with him by his appointment; it is good to be here, retired and alone with Christ, to be here where we may behold the beauty of the Lord Jesus, Psal. xxvii. 4. It is pleasant to hear Christ compare notes with Moses and the prophets, to see how all the institutions of the law, and all the predictions of the prophets pointed at Christ, and were fulfilled in him.

2. The desire they had of the continuance of it. Let us make here three tabernacles. There was in this, as in many other of Peter's sayings, a mixture of weakness and of good will, more zeal than discretion.

1. Here was a zeal for this converse with heavenly things, a laudable complacency in the sight they had of Christ's glory. Note, Those that by faith behold the beauty of the Lord in his house, cannot but desire to dwell there all the days of their life. It is good having a nail in God's holy place, Ezra ix. 8. A constant abode; to be in holy ordinances as a man at home, not as a wayfaring man. Peter thought this mountain was a fine spot of ground to build upon; and he was for making tabernacles there: as Moses in the wilderness made a tabernacle for the Shechinah, or divine glory.

It argued great respect for his Master, and the heavenly guests, with some commendable forgetfulness of himself and his fellow disciples, that he would have tabernacles for Christ, and Moses, and Elias, but none for himself. He would be content to lie in the open air, on the cold ground in such good company; if his Master have but where to lay his head, no matter whether he himself has or no.

2. Yet in his zeal he betrayed a great deal of weakness and ignorance; what need had Moses and Elias of tabernacles? they belonged to that blessed world, where they hunger no more, nor doth the sun light upon them. Christ had lately foretold his sufferings, and bid his disciples expect the like; Peter forgets that, or to prevent it, will needs be building tabernacles in the mount of glory, out of the way of trouble. Still he harps upon, Master, spare thyself, though he had been so lately checked for it. Note, There is a proneness in good men to expect the crown without the cross. Peter was for laying hold of this as the prize, though he had not yet fought his fight or finished his course, as those other disciples, Matt. xx. 21. We are out in our aim, if we look for a heaven here upon earth. It is not for strangers and pilgrims, (such as we are in our best circumstances in this world) to talk of building, or to expect a continuing city.

Yet it is some excuse for the incongruity of Peter's proposal, not only that he knew not what he said, Luke ix. 33. but also that he submitted the proposal to the wisdom of Christ; If thou wilt, let us make tabernacles. Note, Whatever tabernacles we propose to make ourselves in this world, we must always remember to ask Christ's leave.

Now to this which Peter said, there was no reply made: the disappearing of the glory would soon answer it. They that promise themselves great things on this earth, will soon be undeceived by their own experience.

Fifthly, The glorious testimony which God the Father gave to our Lord Jesus, in which he received from him honour and glory, 2 Pet. i. 17. when there came this voice from the excellent glory. This was like proclaiming the titles of honour, or the royal style of a prince, when at his coronation he he appears in his robes of state; and he it known to the comfort of mankind, the royal style of Christ is taken from his mediation. Thus in vision he appeared with a rainbow, the seal of the covenant, about his throne, Rev. iv. 3. for it is his glory to be our redeemer.

Now concerning this testimony from heaven to Christ. Observe,

1. How it came, and in what manner it was introduced.

1. There was a cloud. We find often in the Old Testament, that a cloud was the visible token of God's presence; he came down upon mount Sinai in a cloud, Exod. xix. 9. and so to Moses, Exod. xxxiv. 5. Numb. xi. 25. He took possession of the tabernacle in a cloud, and afterwards of the temple, where Christ was in his glory the temple was, and there God shewed himself present. We know not the balancings of the clouds, but we know that much of the intercourse and communication between heaven and earth is maintained by them. By the clouds vapours ascend and rains descend; therefore God is said to make the clouds his chariots; so he did here when he descended upon this mount.

2. It was a bright cloud; under the law it was commonly a thick and dark cloud that God made the token of his presence: he came down upon mount Sinai in a thick cloud, Exod. xix. 16. and said he would dwell in the thick darkness, see 1 Kings viii. 1. But we are not now come to that mount that was covered with blackness and darkness, Heb. xi. 18. but to the mount that is crowned with a bright cloud. Both the Old Testament and the New Testament dispensation had tokens of God's presence; but that was a dispensation of darkness, and terror, and bondage, this of light, love, and liberty.

3. It overshadowed them. This cloud was intended to break the force of that great light, which otherwise would have overcome the disciples, and have been intolerable; it was like the veil which Moses put upon his face when it shone. God, in manifesting himself to his people, considers their frame. This cloud was to their eyes as parables to their understandings, to convey spiritual things by things, insensible, as they were able to bear them.

4. There came a voice out the cloud, and it was the voice of God, who now, as of old, spake in the cloudy pillar, Psal. xlix. 7. Here was no thunder or lightning, or voice of a trumpet, as there was when the law was given by Moses, but only a voice, a still small voice, and that not ushered in with a strong wind, or an earthquake, or fire, as when God spake to Elias, 1 Kings xix. 11, 12. Moses then and Elias were witnesses, that in these last days God hath spoken to us by his son, in another way than he spake formerly to them. This voice came from the excellent glory, 2 Pet. i. 17. the glory which excelleth, in comparison of which the former had no glory; though the excellent glory was clouded, yet thence came a voice, for faith comes by hearing.

2. What this testimony from heaven was. This is my beloved Son, hear ye him. Here we have,

1. The great gospel-mystery revealed; This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased. This was the very same that was spoken from heaven at his baptism, chap. iii. 17. And it was the best news that ever came from heaven to earth since man sinned. It is to the same purpose with that great doctrine, 2 Cor. v. 19. That God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto himself. Moses and Elias were great men, and favourites of heaven, yet they were but servants, and servants that God was not always well-pleased in; for Moses spake unadvisedly, and Elias was a man subject to passions; but Christ is a Son, and in him God was always well-pleased. Moses and Elias were sometimes instruments of reconciliation between God and Israel; Moses was a great intercessor, and Elias a great reformer; but in Christ God is reconciling the world; his intercession is more prevalent than that of Moses, and his reformation more effectual than that of Elias.

This repetition of the same voice that came from heaven at his baptism was no vain repetition; but, like the doubling of Pharaoh's dreams, was to shew the thing was established. What God hath thus spoken once, yea twice, no doubt he will stand to, and he expects we should take notice of it. It was spoken at his baptism, because then he was entering upon his temptation, and his public ministry; and now it was repeated, because he was entering upon his sufferings, which are to be dated from hence; for now, and not before, he began to foretell them, and immediately after his transfiguration it is said, Luke ix. 31, and the time was come that he should be received up; this therefore was then repeated to arm him against the terror, and his disciples against the offence of the cross. When sufferings begin to abound, consolations are given in most abundantly, 2 Cor. i. 3.

2. The great gospel-duty required, and it is the condition of our benefit by Christ, hear ye him. God is well pleased with none in Christ but those that hear him. It is not enough to give him the hearing, what will that avail us? but we must hear him, and believe him as the great prophet and teacher; hear him and be ruled by him, as the great prince and lawgiver; hear him and heed him. Whoever would know the mind of God, must hearken to Jesus Christ; for by him God has in these last days spoken to us. This voice from heaven has made all the sayings of Christ as authentic as if they had been thus spoken out of a cloud. God doth here as it were turn us over to Christ for all the revelations of his mind; and it refers to that prediction concerning the prophet God would raise like unto Moses, Deut. xviii. 18. him shall ye hear.

Christ now appeared in glory, and the more we see of Christ's glory the more cause we shall see to hearken to him; but the disciples were gazing on that glory of his which they saw, they are therefore bid not to look at him; but to hear him. Their sight of his glory was soon intercepted by the cloud, but their business was to hear him. We walk by faith which comes by hearing, not by sight, 2 Cor. v. 7.

Moses and Elias were now with him, the law and the prophets, hitherto it was said, hear them, Luke xvi. 29. The disciples were ready to equal them with Christ, when they must have tabernacles for them as well as for him. They had been talking with Christ, and probably the disciples were very desirous to know what they said, and to hear something more from them; no, saith God, hear him, and that is enough; him, and not Moses and Elias, who were present, and whose silence gave consent to this voice; they had nothing to say to the contrary, whatever interest they had in the world as prophets, they were willing to see it all transferred to Christ, that in all things he might have the pre-eminence. Be not troubled that Moses and Elias make so short a stay with you, hear Christ, and you will not want them.

Sixthly, the fright which the disciples were put into by this voice, and the encouragement Christ gave them.

1. The disciples fell on their faces, and were sore afraid. The greatness of the light and the surprise of it, might have a natural influence upon them to dispirit them. But that was not all; ever since man sinned, and heard God's voice in the garden, extraordinary appearances of God have ever been terrible to man; who knowing he has no reason to expect any good, has been afraid to hear any thing immediately from God. Note, Even then when fair weather comes out of the secret place, yet with God is terrible majesty, Job xxxvii. 22. See what dreadful work the voice of the Lord makes, Psal. xxix. 4. It is well for us that God speaks to us by men like ourselves, whose terror shall not make us afraid.

2. Christ graciously raised them up with abundance of tender mercies. Note, The glories and advancements of our Lord Jesus, do not at all lessen his regard to and concern for his people that are compassed about with infirmity. It is comfortable to think, that now he is in his exalted state, he has a compassion for and condescends to the meanest true believer. Observe here, 1. What he said, He came and touched them. His approaches banished their fears; and when they apprehended that they were apprehended of Christ, there needed no more to make them uneasy. Christ laid his right hand upon John in a like case, and upon Daniel, Rev. i. 17. Dan. viii. 18. —x. 18. Christ's touches were often healing, and here they were strengthening and comforting. 2. What he said; Arise, and be not afraid. Note, Though a fear of reverence in our converse with heaven is pleasing to Christ yet a fear of amazement is not so, but must be striven against. Christ said, Arise. Note, It is Christ by his word, and the power of his grace going along with it, that raiseth up good men from their dejections, and silenceth their fears, and none but he can do it. Arise, be not afraid. Note Causeless fears would soon vanish, if ye would not yield to them and lie down under them, but get up and do what we can against them. Considering what they had seen and heard, they had more reason to rejoice than to fear, and yet it seems they needed this caution. Note, Through the infirmity of the flesh, we often frighten ourselves with that wherewith we should encourage ourselves. Observe, After they had had an express command from heaven to hear Christ, the first word they had from him was, be not afraid, hear that. Note, Christ's errand into the world was to give comfort to good people, that being delivered out of the hands of their enemies, they might serve God without fear, Luke i. 74, 75.

Seventhly, The disappearing of the vision, ver. 8. They lift up themselves, and then lift up their eyes, and saw no man, save Jesus only. Moses and Elias were gone, the rays of Christ's glory were laid aside, or veiled again. They hoped this had been the day of Christ's entrance into his kingdom, and his public appearance in that external splendor which they dreamed of, but see how they are disappointed. Note, It is not wisdom to raise our expectations high in this world, for the most valuable of our glories and joys here are vanishing, even those of near communion with God are so, not a continual feast, but a running banquet. If sometimes we are favoured with special manifestations of divine grace, glimpses and pledges of future glory, yet they are withdrawn presently; two heavens are too much for those to expect that never deserve our. Now they saw no man, save Jesus only. Note, Christ will tarry with us when Moses and Elias were gone. The prophets do not live for ever, Zech. i. 5. and we saw the period of our minister's conversation, but Jesus Christ is the same yesterday, to day, and for ever, Heb. xiii. 7, 8.

Eighthly, The discourse between Christ and his disciples as they came down from the mountain, ver. 9-13.

Observe, 1. They came down from the mountain. Note, Even the holy mountains where we have communion with God, and complacency in that communion, and of which we are saying, It is good to be here, yet we must come down from; even there we have no continuing city; blessed be God there is a mountain of glory and joy before us whence we shall never come down. But observe, When the disciples came down, Jesus came with them. Note, When we return to the world again after an ordinance, it must be our care to take Christ with us, and then it may be our comfort that he is with us.

2. As they came down they talked of Christ. Note, When we are returning from holy ordinances, it is good to entertain ourselves and one another with discourse suitable to the work we have been about. That communication which is good for the use of edifying, is then in a special manner seasonable, as, on the contrary, that which is corrupt is worse than that at another time.

Here is, 1. The charge that Christ gave the disciples to keep the vision very private for the present, ver. 9. Tell it to no man till the Son of man is risen. If they had proclaimed it, the credibility of it would have been shocked by his sufferings, which were now hastening on. But let the publication of it be adjourned till after his resurrection, and then that and his subsequent glory will be a great confirmation of it. Note, Christ observed a method in the manifestation of himself; would have his works put together, mutually to explain and illustrate each other, that they might appear in their full strength and convincing evidence. Every thing is beautiful in its season. Christ's resurrection was properly the beginning of the gospel state and kingdom, to which all before was but preparatory and by way of preface; and therefore though this was transacted before, yet it must not be produced as evidence till then, (and then it appears to have been much insisted on by 2 Pet. i. 16, 17, 18.) when the religion it was designed for the confirmation of was brought to its full consistence and maturity. Christ's time is the best and fittest for the manifesting of himself, and must be attended to by us.

2. An objection which the disciples made against something Christ had said, ver. 10. Who then say the Scribes that Elias must first come? If Elias make as short a stay, and is gone so suddenly, and we must say nothing of him; why have we been taught out of the law to expect his public appearance in the world immediately before the setting up of the Messiah's kingdom? Must the coming of Elias be a secret, which every body looks for? Or thus; if the resurrection of the Messiah, and with the beginning of his kingdom, be at hand, what comes of that glorious preface and introduction to it, which we expect in the coming of Elias? The Scribes, who were the public expositors of the law, said this according to the scriptures, Mal. iv. 5. Behold I send you Elijah the prophet. The disciples spoke the common language of the Jews, who made that the saying of the Scribes which was the saying of the scriptures; whereas what ministers speak to us according to the word of God, we should say, God speaks it to us, not the ministers; for we must not receive it as the word of men, 1 Thess. ii. 13. Observe, When the disciples could not reconcile what Christ said, with what they had heard out of the Old Testament, they desired him to explain it to them. Note, When we are puzzled with scripture difficulties, we must apply ourselves to Christ by prayer for his spirit to open our understandings and to lead us into all truth.

3. The solving of this objection. Ask, and it shall be given; ask instruction, and it shall be given.

1. Christ allows the prediction, ver. 11. Elias truly shall first come and restore all things, so far you are in the right; Christ did not come to alter or invalidate any thing foretold in the Old Testament. Note, Corrupt and mistaken glosses may be sufficiently rejected and exploded, without diminishing or derogating from the authority or dignity of the sacred text. New Testament prophecies are true and good, and to be received and improved, though some hot foolish men may have misinterpreted them, and drawn wrong inferences from them. He shall come and restore all things; not restore them to their former state. John Baptist went not about to do that, but he shall accomplish all things; so it may be read; to wit, all things that were written of him, all the predictions of the coming of Elias. John Baptist came to restore things spiritually, to revive the decays of religion, to turn the hearts of their fathers to the children; which means the same with this this here: he shall restore all things. John preached repentance, and that restores all things.

2. He asserts the accomplishment. The Scribes say true, that Elias shall come; but I say unto you, what the Scribes could not say, that Elias is come, ver. 12. Note, God's promises are often fulfilled, and men perceive it not, but enquire, where is the promise? when it is already performed. Elias is come, and they knew him not; they knew him not to be the Elias promised, the forerunner of the Messiah. The Scribes busied themselves in criticizing upon the scripture, but understood not by the signs of the times the fulfilling of the scripture. Note, It is easier to explain the word of God, than to apply it and make a right use of it. But it is no wonder that the morning star was not observed, when he who is the Sun itself was in the world, and the world knew him not.

Because they knew him not, they have done to him whatsoever they listed; if they had known, they would not have crucified Christ or beheaded John, 1 Cor. ii. 8. They ridiculed John, persecuted him, and at last put him to death; which was Herod's doing, but is here charged upon the whole generation of unbelieving Jews, and particularly the scribes, who though they could not prosecute John themselves, yet were pleased with what Herod did. He adds likewise also shall the Son of man suffer of them. Marvel not that Elias should be abused and killed by those who pretended with a great deal of reverence to expect him, when the Messiah himself will be in like manner treated. Note, The sufferings of Christ took off the strangeness of all other sufferings, John xv. 18. when they had imbrued their hands in the blood of John Baptist, they were ready to do the like to Christ. Note, As men deal with Christ's servants, so they would deal with him himself; and they that are drunk with the blood of the martyrs still cry, Give, give, Acts xii. 1, 2, 3.

4. The disciples satisfaction in Christ's reply to their objection, ver. 13. they understood that he spake unto them of John the Baptist. He did not name John, but gives them such a description of him as would put them in mind of what he had said to them formerly concerning him; this is Elias. This is a profitable way of teaching, it engageth the learners own thoughts, and makes them, if not their own teachers yet their own remembrancers; and thus knowledge becomes easy to him that understandeth. When we diligently use the means of knowledge, how strangely are mistakes scattered and mistakes rectified?

14. And when they were come to the multitude, there came to him a certain man kneeling down to him, and saying, 15. Lord have mercy on my son for he is lunatic, and sore vexed: for oft-times he falleth into the fire, and oft into the water. 16. And I brought him to thy disciples, and they could not cure me. 17. Then Jesus answered and said, O faithless and perverse generation, how long shall I be with you? how long shall I suffer you? bring him hither to me. 18. And Jesus rebuked the devil; and he departed out of him: and the child was cured from that very hour. 19. Then came the disciples to Jesus apart, and said, Why could not we cast him out? 20. And Jesus said, unto them, Because of your unbelief; for verily I say unto you, If ye have faith as a grain of mustard seed ye shall say unto this mountain, Remove hence to yonder place; and it shall remove; and nothing shall be impossible unto you. 21. Howbeit this kind goeth not out but by prayer and fasting.

We have here the miraculous cure of a child that was a lunatic and vexed with a devil. Observe,

First, A melancholy representation of the case of the child made to Christ by the afflicted Father. This was immediately upon his coming down from the mountain, where he was transfigured. Note, Christ's glories do not make him unmindful of us and our wants and miseries. Christ when he came down from the mount, where he had had conversation with Moses and Elias, did not take state upon him, but was as easy of access, as ready to poor beggars, and as familiar with the multitude as ever he used to be. This poor man's address was very importunate, he came kneeling to Christ. Note, Sense of misery will bring people to their knees. Those who see their need of Christ will be earnest, will be in good earnest in their applications to him: and he delights to be thus wrestled with.

Two things the Father of the child complains of.

1. The distress of his child, ver. 15. Lord, have mercy on my son. The affliction of the children cannot but affect the tender parents, for they are of pieces themselves. And the case of afflicted children should be presented to God by faithful and fervent prayer. This child's distemper, probably, disabled him to pray for himself. Note, Parents are doubly concerned to pray for their children, not only that are weak and cannot, but much more that are wicked and will not pray for themselves. Now, 1. The nature of this child's disease was very sad, he is a lunatic and sore vexed. A lunatic is properly one whose distemper lies in the brain, and returns with the change of the moon. The devil, by the divine permission, either caused this distemper, or at least concurred with it to heighten and aggravate it. The child had the falling sickness, and the hand of Satan was in it, by it he tormented them, and made it much more grievous than ordinarily it is. And those whom Satan got possession of, he afflicted by those diseases of the body which do most affect the mind; for it is the soul that he aims to do mischief to. The Father in his complaint saith, he is lunatic, taking notice of the effect: but Christ in his cure rebuked the devil, and so struck at the cause. Thus he doth in spiritual cures. 2. The effects of the disease were very deplorable, he oft falls into the fire, and into the water: If the force of the disease made him to fall, the malice of the devil made him to fall into the fire or water: so mischievous is he where he gains possession and power in any soul, He seeks to devour, 1 Pet. v. 8.

2. The disappointment of his expectations from the disciples, ver. 16. I brought him to thy disciples, and they could not cure him. Christ gave his disciples power to cast out devils, Matt. x. 1-8. and therein they were successful, Luke x. 17. yet at this time they failed in the operation, though there were nine of them together, and before a great multitude. Christ permitted this, 1. To keep them humble, and to shew them their dependence upon him, that without him they could do nothing. 2. To glorify himself and his own power. It is for the honour of Christ to come in with help in a dead lift, when other helpers cannot help. Elisha's staff in Gehazi's hand will not raise the child, he must come himself. Note, There are some special favours which Christ reserves the bestowing of to himself; and sometimes he keeps the cistern empty, that he may bring us to himself the fountain. But the failure of instruments shall not hinder the operations of his grace, which will work, if not by them without them.

Secondly, The rebukes that Christ gave to the people first, and then to the devil.

1. He chid those about him, ver. 17. O faithless and perverse generation. This is not spoken to the disciples, but to the people, and perhaps, especially to the Scribes, who are mentioned in Mark ix. 14. and who, as it should seem, insulted over the disciples, because they now met with a case that was too hard for them. Christ himself could not do many mighty works among a people in whom unbelief reigned. It was here owing to the faithlessness of this generation that they could not obtain those blessings from God that otherwise they might have had; as it was owing to the weakness of the disciples faith that they could not do those works for God, which otherwise they might have done. They were faithless and perverse. Note, Those that are faithless will be perverse; and perverseness is sin in its worst colours. Faith is compliance with God; unbelief is opposition and contradiction to God. Israel of old was perverse, because faithless, Psal. xcvi. 9. is froward, for in them is no faith, Deut. xxxii. 20.

Two things he upbraids them with. 1. His presence with them so long: How long shall I be with you? Will you always need my bodily presence, and never come to such maturity as to be fit to be left, the people to the conduct of the disciples, and the disciples to the conduct of the spirit and of their commission? Must the child be always carried, and will it never learn to go alone? 2. His patience with them so long: How long shall I suffer you? Note, 1. The faithlessness and perverseness of those who enjoy the means of grace, is a great grief to the Lord Jesus. Thus did he suffer the manners of Israel of old, Acts xiii. 18. 2. The longer Christ has borne with a perverse and faithless people, the more he is displeased with their perverseness and unbelief; and he is God and not man, else he would not suffer so long; nor bear so much as he doth.

2. He cured the child, and set him to rights again. He called, Bring him hither to me. Though the people were perverse, and Christ was provoked, yet care was taken of the child. Note, Though Christ may be angry, he is never unkind, nor doth he in the greatest of his displeasure shut up the bowels of his compassion from the miserable. Bring him to me. Note, When all other helps and succours fail we are welcome to Christ, and may be confident in him and in his power and goodness.

See here an emblem of Christ's undertaking as our redeemer.

1. He breaks the power of Satan, ver. 18. Jesus rebuked the devil, as one having authority, that could back with force his word of command. Note, Christ's victories over Satan are obtained by the power of his word, the sword that comes out of his mouth, Rev. xix. 21. Satan cannot stand before the rebukes of Christ, though his possession has been never so long. It is comfortable with those who are wrestling with principalities and powers that Christ hath spoiled them, Colos. ii. 15. The lion of the tribe of Judah will be too hard for the roaring lion that seeks to devour.

2. He redressed the grievances of the children at men. The child was cured from that very hour. It was an immediate cure and a perfect one. This is an encouragement to parents to bring their children to Christ, whose souls are under Satan's power; he is able to heal them, and as willing as he is able. Not only to bring them to Christ by prayer, but bring them to the word of Christ, the ordinary means by which Satan's strongholds are demolished in the soul. Christ's rebukes brought home to the heart will ruin Satan's power there.

Thirdly, Christ's discourse with his disciples hereupon.

1. They ask the reason why they could not cast out the devil at this time, ver. 19. They came to Jesus apart. Note, Ministers that are to deal for Christ in public, have need to keep up a private communion with him, that they may in secret, where no eyes see, bewail their weakness and straitness, their follies and infirmities in their public performances, and enquire into the cause of them. We should make use of that liberty of access we have to Jesus apart, where we may be free, and particular with him. Such questions as the disciples put to Christ, we should put to ourselves in communing with our own hearts upon our beds: What was the reason we were so dull and careless at such a time? we came so much short in such a duty? that finding out what was amiss it may be amended.

2. Christ gives them two reasons why they failed.

(1.) It was because of their unbelief, ver. 20. When he spoke to the father of the child and to the people, he charged it upon their unbelief; when he spoke to his disciples he charged it upon theirs; for the truth was there were faults on both sides, but we are more concerned to hear of our own faults than of other people's, and to impute amiss to ourselves than others. When the preaching of the word seems not to be so successful as sometimes it has been, the people are apt to lay all the fault upon the ministers, and the ministers upon the people: whereas, it is more becoming for each to own their own faultiness, and to say, "It is long of me." Ministers in reproving must learn thus to give to each their portion of the word: and to take people off from judging others by teaching all to judge themselves. It is because of your unbelief. Though they had faith, yet that faith was weak and ineffectual. Note, 1. As far as faith falls short of its due strength, vigor and activity, it may truly be said, there is unbelief; many are chargeable with unbelief, that yet are not to be called unbelievers. 2. It is because of our unbelief, that we bring so little to pass in religion, and so often miscarry and come short in that which is good.

Our Lord Jesus takes this occasion to shew them the power of faith, that they might not be defective in that another time, as they were now. If ye have faith as a grain of mustard seed, ye shall do wonders, ver. 20. Some make the comparison to refer to the quality of the mustard seed, which is, when bruised, sharp and penetrating; if you have an active growing faith, not dead, flat or insipid, you would not be baffled and balked thus: but it rather refers to the quantity; if you had but a grain of true faith, though so little that it were like that which is the least of all seeds, you would do wonders. Faith in general is a firm assent to, a compliance with, and a confidence in all divine revelation: the faith here required is, that which had for its object that particular revelation, by which Christ gave his disciples power to work miracles in his name, for the confirmation of the doctrine they preached. It was a faith in this revelation that they were defective in; either doubting the validity of their commission or fearing it was expired with their first mission, and was not to continue when they were returning to their Master; or that it was some way or other forfeited or withdrawn. Perhaps their Master's absence with the three chief of his disciples, with a charge to the rest not to follow them, might occasion some doubts concerning their power, or rather the power of the Lord with them, to do this; however, there was not, at present, such a strong actual dependence upon, and confidence in the promise of Christ's presence with them, as there should have been. It is good for us to be diffident of ourselves and of our strength; but it is displeasing to Christ, when we distrust any power derived from him or granted by him.

If ye have never so little of this faith in sincerity, if you truly rely upon the power committed to you, ye shall say to this mountain, Remove. This is a proverbial expression, noting that which follows and no more, nothing shall shall be impossible to you. They had a full commission, among other things, to cast out devils without exception; but this devil being more than ordinarily malicious and inveterate, they distrusted the power they had received, and so failed. To convince them of this, Christ shews them what they might have done. Note, An active faith can remove mountains, not of itself, but in the virtue of a divine power engaged by a divine promise, both which faith fastens upon.

(2.) Because there was something in this kind of the malady which rendered the cure more than ordinary difficult, ver. 21. This kind goes not out but by prayer and fasting. This possession, which works by a falling-sickness, or this kind of devils that are thus furious, is not cast out ordinarily, but by great acts of devotion, and therein you were defective. Note, 1. Though the adversaries we wrestle with be all principalities and powers, yet some are stronger than others, and their power more hardly broken. 2. The extraordinary power of Satan must not discourage our faith, but quicken us to a greater intenseness in the acting of it, and more earnestness in praying to God for the increase of it, and so some understand it here; this kind of faith (which removeth mountains) doth not proceed, i. e. is not obtained from God, nor is it carried up to its full growth, nor drawn out into act and exercise, but by earnest prayer. 3. Fasting and prayer are proper means for the bringing down of Satan's power against us, and the fetching in of divine power to our assistance: Fasting is of use to put an edge upon prayer, it is an evidence and instance of humiliation which is necessary in prayer, and is a means of mortifying some corrupt habits, and of disposing the body to serve the soul in prayer. When the devil's interest in the soul is confirmed by the temper and constitution of the body, fasting must be joined with prayer, to keep under the body.

22. ¶ And while they abode in Galilee, Jesus said unto them, The Son of man shall be betrayed into the hands of men: 23. And they shall kill him, and the third day he shall be raised again: and they were exceeding sorry.

Christ here foretells his own sufferings; he began to do it before, chap. xvi. 21. and finding that it was to his disciples a hard saying, he saw it necessary to repeat it; there are some things which God speaketh once, yea twice, and yet man perceiveth it not. Observe here,

(1.) What he foretold concerning himself, that he should be betrayed and killed. He perfectly knew before all things that should come to him, and yet undertook the work of our redemption, which greatly commendeth his love; nay, his clear foresight of them was a kind of ante-passion, had not his love to man made all easy to him.

1. He tells them, that he should be betrayed into the hands of men. He shall be delivered up, so it might be read and understood of his Father's delivering him up by his determined counsel and foreknowledge, Acts iv. 23. Rom. viii. 32. But as we render it, it refers to Judas's betraying him into the hands of the priests, and their betraying him into the hands of the Romans. He was betrayed into the hands of men; men, to whom he was allied by nature, and from whom therefore he might expect pity and tenderness; men whom he had undertaken to save, and from whom therefore he might expect honour and gratitude; yet these are his persecutors and murderers.

2. That they should kill him; nothing less than that would satisfy their rage; it was his blood, his precious blood they thirsted after; This is the heir, come let us kill him; and nothing less would satisfy God's justice, and answer his undertaking: if he be a sacrifice of atonement, he must be killed; without blood no remission.

3. That he shall be raised again the third day. Still when he spoke of his death he gave a hint of his resurrection, the joy set before him, in the prospect of which he endured the cross and despised the shame. This was an encouragement, not only to him but to his disciples; for if he rise the third day, his absence from them will not be long, and his return to them will be glorious.

(2.) How the disciples resented this: They were exceeding sorry. Herein appeared their love to their Master's person, but withal their ignorance and mistake concerning his undertaking. Peter indeed durst not say any thing against it, as he had done before, chap. xvi. 22. having then been soundly chidden for it; but he and the rest of them, greatly lamented it, as it would be their own loss, their Master's grief, and the sin and ruin of them that did it.

24. ¶ And when they were come to Capernaum, they that received tribute money, came to Peter, and said, Doth not your master pay tribute? 25. He saith, Yes. And when he was come into the house, Jesus prevented him, saying, What thinkest thou, Simon? of whom do the kings of the earth take custom or tribute? of their own children, or of strangers? 26. Peter saith unto him, Of strangers. Jesus saith unto him, Then are the children free. 27. Notwithstanding, lest we should offend them, go thou to the sea, and cast an hook, and take up the fish that first cometh up; and when thou hast opened his mouth, thou shalt find a piece of money: and take, and give unto them for me and thee.

We have here an account of Christ's paying tribute,

First, Observe how it was demanded, ver. 24. Christ was now at Capernaum, his head-quarters, where he mostly resided; he did not keep from thence to decline being called upon for his dues, but the rather came thither to be ready to pay them.

1. The tribute demanded was not any civil payment to the Roman powers, that was strictly exacted by the publicans, but the church duties, the half shekel, about fifteen pence, which was required from every person for the service of the temple, and the defraying the expences of the worship there; it is called a ransom for the soul, Exod. xxx. 12, &c. This was not so strictly exacted now as sometimes it had been, especially not in Galilee.

2. The demand was very modest, the collectors stood in such awe of Christ, because of his mighty works, that they durst not speak to him about it, but applied themselves to Peter, whose house was at Capernaum, and probably in his house Christ lodged, and therefore he was fittest to be spoken to as the house-keeper, and they presumed he knew his Master's mind. Their question is, Does not your master pay tribute? Some think they sought an occasion against him, designing, if he refused, to represent him as disaffected to the temple-service, and his followers as lawless people, that would pay neither toll, tribute, nor custom, Ezra iv. 13. It should rather seem, they asked this with respect, intimating, that if he had any privilege to exempt him from this payment, they would not insist upon it.

Peter presently passed his word for his Master; Yes, sure; my master pays tribute; it is his principle and practice; you need not fear moving it to him: 1. He was made under the law, Gal. iv. 4. therefore under this law he was paid for at forty days old, Luke ii. 22. and now he paid for himself, as one that, in his state of humiliation, had taken upon him the form of a servant, Phil. ii. 7, 8. 2. He was made sin for us, and was sent forth in the likeness of sinful flesh, Rom. viii. 3. Now this tax paid to the temple, is called an atonement for the soul, Exod. xxx. 15. Christ, that in every thing he might appear in the likeness of sinners, paid it, though he had no sin to atone for. 3. Thus it became him to fulfill all righteousness, Matt. iv. 15. He did this to set us an example, (1.) Of rendering to all their due, tribute to whom tribute is due, Rom. xiii. 7. The kingdom of Christ not being of this world, the favourites and officers of it are so far from having a power granted them as such to tax other people's purses, that theirs are made liable to the powers that be. (2.) Of contributing to the support of the public worship of God in the places where we are. If we reap spiritual things, it is fit we should return carnal things. The temple was now made a den of thieves, and the temple-worship a pretence for the opposition which the chief priests gave to Christ and his doctrine, and yet Christ paid this tribute. Note, Church duties legally imposed are to be paid, notwithstanding church corruptions. We must take heed of using our liberty as a cloak of covetousness or maliciousness, 1 Pet. ii. 16. If Christ pay tribute who can pretend an exemption?

Secondly, How it was disputed, ver. 25. not with the collectors themselves, lest they should be irritated, but with Peter, that he might be satisfied in the reason why Christ paid tribute, and might not mistake about it. He brought the collectors into the house, but Christ prevented him, to give him a proof of his omniscience, and that no thought can be withholden from him: The disciples of Christ are never attacked but he knows it.

Now, 1. He appeals to the way of the kings of the earth, which is to take tribute of strangers, of the subjects of their kingdom, or foreigners that deal with them, but not of their own children that are of their families; there is such a community of goods between parents and children, and a joint-interest in what they have, that it would be absurd for the parents to levy taxes upon their children, or demand any thing from them; it is like one hand taxing the other.

2. He applies this to himself; then are the children free. Christ is the Son of God and heir of all things, the temple is his temple, Mal. iii. 1. his Father's house, John ii. 16. in it he is faithful as a Son in his own house, Heb. iii. 6. and therefore not obliged to pay this tax for the service of the temple. Thus Christ asserts his right, lest his paying this tribute should be misimproved to the weakening of his title as the Son of God, and the king of Israel, and should have looked like a disowning of it himself. These immunities of the children are to be extended no further than our Lord Jesus himself; God's children by grace and adoption are freed from the slavery of sin and Satan, but not from their subjection to civil magistrates in civil things; here the law of Christ is express, Let every soul (sanctified souls not excepted) be subject to the higher powers. Render to Caesar the things that are Caesar's.

Thirdly, How it was paid notwithstanding, ver. 27.

1. For what reason Christ waived his privilege, and paid this tribute, though he was entitled to an exemption, lest we should offend them. Few knew, as Peter did, that he was the Son of God, and it would have been a diminution to the honour of that great truth, which was yet a secret, to advance it now to serve such a purpose as this. Therefore Christ drops that argument, and considers, that if he should refuse this payment, it would increase peoples prejudices against him and his doctrine, and alienate their affections from him, and therefore resolves to pay it. Note, Christian prudence and humility teach us, in many cases, to recede from our right, rather than give offence by insisting upon it. We must never decline our duty for fear of giving offence. Christ's preaching and miracles offended them, yet he went on with them, Matt. xv. 12, 13. better offend men than God; but we must deny ourselves in that which is our secular interest sometimes, rather than give offence; as Paul, 1 Cor. viii. 13. Rom. xiv. 13.

2. What course he took for the payment of this tax: he furnished himself with money for it out of the mouth of a fish, ver. 27. wherein appears,

(1.) The poverty of Christ; he had not fifteen pence at command to pay his tax with, though he cured so many that were diseased; it seems he did all gratis; for our sakes he became poor, 2 Cor. viii. 9. In his ordinary expences he lived upon alms, Luke viii. 3. and in extraordinary ones he lived upon miracles. He did not order Judas to pay this out of the bag which he carried, that was for subsistence, and he would not order that for his own particular use which was intended for the benefit of the community.

(2.) The power of Christ, in fetching money out of a fish's mouth for this purpose. Whether his omnipotence put it there, or his omniscience knew that it was there, it comes all to one, it was an evidence of his divinity, and that he is the Lord of hosts. Those creatures that are most remote from man, are at the command of Christ, even the fishes of the sea are under his feet, Psal. viii. 5. and to evidence his dominion in this lower world, and to accommodate himself to his present state of humiliation, he chose to take it out of a fish's mouth, when he could have taken it out of an angel's hand. Now observe,

1. Peter must catch the fish by angling. Even in miracles he would use means to encourage industry and endeavour. Peter has something to do, and it is in the way of his old calling too, to teach us diligence in the employment we are called to and called in. Do we expect Christ should give to us, let us be ready to work for him.

2. The fish came up with money in the mouth of it, which represents to us the reward of obedience in obedience. What work we do at Christ's command, brings its own pay along with it, Psal. xix. 11. In keeping God's commands, as well as after keeping them, there is great reward. Peter was made a fisher of men, and those that he caught thus, came up; where the heart is opened to entertain Christ's word, the hand is open to encourage his ministers.

3. The piece of money was just enough to pay the tax for Christ and Peter. Thou shalt find a stater, the value of the Jewish shekel, which would pay the poll-tax for two, for it was half a shekel, Exod. xxx. 13. Christ could as easily have commanded a bag of money, as a piece of money; but he would teach us not to covet superfluities, but having enough for our present occasions, therewith to be content, and not to distrust God, though we live but from hand to mouth. Christ made the fish his cash-keeper; and why may we not make God's providence our storehouse and treasury, and if we have a competency for to-day, let to-morrow take thought for the things of itself. Christ paid for himself and Peter, because it is probable here he only was assessed, and of him it was at this time demanded; perhaps the rest had paid already, or were to pay elsewhere. The Papists make a great mystery of Christ's paying for Peter, as if this made him the head and representative of the whole church; whereas the payment of tribute for him was rather a sign of subjection than of superiority. His pretended successors pay no tribute, but exact it. Peter fished for this money, and therefore part of it went for his use. Those that are workers together with Christ in winning souls, shall be sharers with him in his glory, and shall shine with him. Give it for thee and me. What Christ paid for himself, was looked upon as a debt; what he paid for Peter was a courtesy to him. Note, It is a desirable thing, if God so please, to have wherewithal of this world's goods, not only to be just but to be kind; not only to be charitable to the poor but obliging to our friend. What is a great estate good for, but that it enables a man to do so much the more good?

Lastly, Observe, that here is recorded the orders Christ gave to Peter what to do, the warrant he had; the effect is not particularly mentioned, but taken for granted, and justly; for with Christ, saying and doing are the same thing.

C H A P. XVIII.

The gospels are, in short, a record of what Jesus began both to do, and to teach. In the foregoing chapter we had an account of his doings, in this of his teachings; probably, not all at the same time, in a continued discourse, but at several times, upon divers occasions, here put together as near akin. We have here, 1. Instructions concerning humility, ver. 1—6. 2. Concerning offences in general, ver. 7. particularly offences given. (1.) By us to ourselves, ver. 8, 9. (2.) By us to others, ver. 10—14. (3.) By others to us; which were of two sorts, 1. Scandalous sins, that are to be reprov'd, ver. 15—20. 2. Personal wrongs that are to be forgiven, ver. 21—35. See how practical Christ's preaching was, he could have revealed mysteries, but he pressed plain duties, especially those that are most displeasing to flesh and blood.

1. AT the same time came the disciples unto Jesus, saying, Who is the greatest in the kingdom of heaven? 2. And Jesus called a little child unto him, and set him in the midst of them. 3. And said, Verily I say unto you, Except ye be converted, and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven. 4. Whosoever therefore shall humble himself as this little child, the same is greatest in the kingdom of heaven. 5. And who so shall receive one such little child in my name, receiveth me. 6. But who so shall offend one of these little ones which believe in me, it were better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck, and that he were drowned in the depth of the sea.

As there never was a greater pattern of humility, so there never was a greater preacher of it than Christ; he took all occasions to command it, to commend it to his disciples and followers.

First, The occasion of this discourse here concerning humility, was an unbecoming contest among the disciples for precedency; they came to him, saying, among themselves (for they were ashamed to ask him, Mark ix. 34.) Who is the greatest in the kingdom of heaven? They meant not, who by character, then the question had been good, that they might know what graces and duties to excel in, but who by name. They had heard much, and preached much of the kingdom of heaven, the kingdom of the Messiah, his church in this world; but as yet they were so far from having any clear notion of it, that they dreamt of a temporal kingdom, and the external pomp and power of it. Christ had lately foretold his sufferings and the glory that should follow, that he should rise again, from whence they expected his kingdom would commence, and now they thought it was time to put in for their places in it; it is good in such cases to speak early. Upon other discourses of Christ to that purpose, debates of this kind arose, Matt. xx. 19, 20, Luke xxii. 22—24. he spoke many words of his sufferings, but only one of his glory, yet they fastened upon that, and overlooked the other; and instead of asking how they might have strength and grace to suffer with him, they ask him who shall be highest in reigning with him. Note, Many love to hear and speak of privileges and glory, that are willing to pass by the thoughts of work and trouble: They look so much at the crown, that they forget the yoke and the cross: So the disciples here did, when they asked, Who is the greatest in the kingdom of heaven?

1. They suppose that all that have a place in that kingdom are great, for it is a kingdom of priests. Note, Those are truly great that are truly good, and they will appear so at last, when Christ shall own them as his, though never so mean and poor in the world.

2. They suppose that there are degrees in this greatness: All the saints are honourable, but not all alike so; one star differs from another star in glory. All David's officers were not worthies, nor all his worthies of the first three.

3. They suppose it must be some of them that must be prime ministers of state: To whom should King Jesus delight to do honour, but to them who had left all for him, and were now his companions in patience and tribulation.

4. They strive who it should be, each having some pretence or other to it. Peter was always the chief speaker, and already had the keys given him, and he expects to be lord chancellor or lord chamberlain of the household, and so to be the greatest. Judas had the bag, and therefore he expects to be lord treasurer, which, though now he comes last, he hopes will then denominate him the greatest. Simon and Jude are nearly related to Christ, and they hope to take place of all the great officers of state, as princes of the blood. John is the beloved disciple, the favourite of the prince, and therefore hopes to be the greatest. Andrew was first called, and why should not he be first preferred? Note, We are very apt to amuse and humour ourselves with foolish fancies of things that will never be.

Secondly, The discourse itself, which is a just rebuke to the question, Who should be greatest? And we have abundant reason to think, that if Christ ever intended that Peter and his successors at Rome should be heads of the church, and his chief vicars on earth, having so fair an occasion given him, he would now have let his disciples know it; but so far is he from this; that his answer disallows and condemns the thing itself; Christ will not lodge such an authority or supremacy any where in his church; whoever pretend to it are usurpers; instead of settling any of the disciples in this dignity, he warns them all not to put in for it.

Christ here teacheth them to be humble,

1. By a sign, ver. 2. He called a little child to him, and set him in the midst of them. Christ often taught by signs or sensible representations, comparisons to the eye, as the prophets of old. Note, Humility is a lesson so hardly learned, that we have need by all ways and means to be taught it. When we look upon a little child, we should be put in mind of the use Christ made of this child: Sensible things must be improved to spiritual purposes. He set him in the midst of them; not that they might play with him, but learn by him. Grown men, and great men should not disdain the company of little children, or think it below them to take notice of them: They may either speak to them, and give instruction to them; or look upon them and receive instruction from them. Christ himself, when a child, was in the midst of the doctors, Luke ii. 46.

2. By a sermon upon this sign, in which he shews them and us,

(1.) The necessity of humility, ver. 3. His preface is solemn, and commands both attention and assent: Verily I say unto you, I the Amen, the faithful Witness, say it, Except ye be converted, and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven. Here observe,

1. What it is that he requires and insists upon,

(1.) You must be converted, you must be of another mind, and in another frame and temper, must have other thoughts, both of yourselves and of the kingdom of heaven, before you be fit for a place in it: This pride, ambition, and affectation of honour and dominion, which appears in you, must be repented of, mortified and reformed, and you must come to yourselves. Note, Besides the first conversion of a soul from a state of nature to a state of grace, there are after conversions from particular paths of back-sliding, which are equally necessary to salvation: Every step out of the way by sin, must be a step into it again by repentance. When Peter repented of his denying his Master, he was converted. (2.) You must become as little children. Note, Converting grace makes us like little children, not foolish as children, 1 Cor. xiv. 20. nor fickle, Eph. iv. 14. nor playful, Matt. xi. 16. but as children we must desire the sincere milk of the word, 1 Pet. ii. 2. as children we must be careful for nothing, but leave it to our heavenly Father to care for us, Matt. vi. 31. We must as children be harmless and inoffensive, and void of malice, 1 Cor. xiv. 20. governable, and under command, Gal. iv. 2. and (which is here chiefly intended) we must be humble as little children, who do not take state upon them, nor stand upon the punctilios of honour; the child of a gentleman will play with the child of a beggar, Rom. xii. 16. the child in rags, if it have the breasts, is well enough pleased, and envies not the gaiety of the child in silk; little children have no great aims at great places, nor projects to themselves in the world; they exercise not themselves in things too high for them; and we should in like manner behave and quiet ourselves, Psalm cxxxi. 1, 2. As children are little in body and low in stature, so we must be little and low in spirit, and in our thoughts of ourselves: This is a temper which leads to other good dispositions; the age of childhood is the learning age.

2. What stress he lays upon this: Without this, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven. Note, Disciples of Christ have need to be kept in awe by threatenings, that they may fear lest they seem to come short, Heb. iv. 1.

1. The disciples, when they put that question, ver. 1. thought themselves sure of the kingdom of heaven, but Christ awakens them to be jealous of themselves: They were ambitious of being greatest in the kingdom of heaven; Christ tells them, that except they came to a better temper they should never come thither. Note, Many that set up for great ones in the church, prove not only little, but nothing, and are found to have no part or lot in the matter. Our Lord designs here to shew the great danger of pride and ambition; whatever profession men make, if they allow themselves in this sin, they will be rejected both from God's tabernacle, and from his holy hill: Pride threw the angels that sinned out of heaven, and will keep us out if we be not converted from it: They that are lifted up with pride, fall into the condemnation of the devil; to prevent this we must become as little children, and in order to that, must be born again, must put on the new man, must be like the holy child Jesus; so he is called, even after his ascension, Acts iv. 27.

(2.) He shews the honour and advancement that attend humility, ver. 4. which is a direct but surprising answer to their question; he that humbles himself as a little child, though he may fear that hereby he will render himself contemptible, as low spirits do, that thereby throw themselves out of the way of preferment, yet the same is greatest in the kingdom of heaven. Note, The humblest Christians are the best Christians, and most like to Christ and highest in his favour; are best disposed for the communications of divine grace, and fittest to serve God in this world and enjoy him in another. They are great, for God overlooks heaven and earth to look on such; and certainly those are to be most respected and honoured in the church, they are most humble and self-denying; for though they least seek it, they best deserve it.

(3.) The special care Christ takes for those that are humble; he espouseth their cause, protects them, interests himself in their concerns, and will see that they are not wronged, but they shall be righted.

Those that thus humble themselves will be afraid.

That no body will receive them; and as to that fear, ver. 5. Whoso shall receive one such little child in my name, receiveth me: Whatever kindnesses are done to such, Christ takes as done to himself: Who entertains a meek and humble Christian, keeps him in countenance, will not let him lose by his modesty, takes him into his love and friendship, and society and care, and studies to do him a kindness; and doth this in Christ's name, for his sake, because he bears the image of Christ, serves Christ, and because Christ has received him; this shall be accepted and recompensed as an acceptable piece of respect to Christ. Observe, Though it be but one such little child that is received in Christ's name, it shall be accepted. Note, The tender regard Christ has to his church, extends itself to every particular member, even the meaneast; not only to the whole family, but to every child of the family; the less they are in themselves to whom we shew kindness, the more there is of good will in it to Christ; the less it is for their sakes, the more it is for his, and he takes it accordingly. If Christ were personally among us, we think we should never do enough to welcome him; the poor, the poor in spirit, we have always with us, and they are his receivers. See Matt. xxv. 35—40.

2. They will be afraid that every body will abuse them; the basest men delight to trample upon the humble, verat censura columbas; this objection he obviates, ver. 6. where he warns all people, as they will answer it at their utmost peril, not to offer any injury to one of Christ's little ones: This word makes a wall of fire about them; he that toucheth them toucheth the apple of God's eye.

Observe, (1.) The crime supposed, offending one of these little ones that believe in Christ: Their believing in Christ, though they be little ones, unites them to him, so that as they partake of the benefit of his sufferings, so he partakes in the wrong of theirs, and interests him in their cause. Even the little little ones that believe, have the same privileges with the great ones, for they have all obtained like precious faith. There are those that offend these little ones, by drawing them to sin, 1 Cor. viii. 10, 11. grieving and vexing their righteous souls, discouraging them, taking occasion from their mildness to make a prey of them in their persons, families, goods, or good name: Thus the best men have often met with the worst treatment in this world.

(2.) The punishment of this crime, intimated in that word, better for him that he were drowned in the depth of the sea: The sin is so heinous, and the ruin proportionably so great, that he had better undergo the forest punishment inflicted on the worst of malefactors, which can only kill the body. Note, 1. Hell is worse than the depth of the sea, for it is a bottomless pit, and it is a burning lake: The depth of the sea is only killing, but hell is tormenting. We meet with one that had comfort in the depth of the sea, it was Jonah, chap. ii. 2—4—9. but never any had the least grain or glimpse of comfort in hell, nor will have to eternity. 2. The irresistible, irrevocable doom of the great Judge, will sink sooner and surer, and bind faster, than a millstone hung about the neck: It fixeth a great gulph that can never be broke through, Luke xvi. 26. Offending Christ's little ones, though by omission, is assigned as the reason of that dreadful sentence, Go, ye cursed, which will at last be the doom of proud persecutors.

7. ¶ Woe unto the world because of offences! for it must needs be that offences come: but woe to that man by whom the offence cometh: 8. Wherefore if thy hand or thy foot offend thee, cut them off, and cast them from thee: it is better for thee to enter into life halt or maimed, rather than having two hands or two feet to be cast into everlasting fire. 9. And if thine eye offend thee, pluck it out, and cast it from thee: it is better for thee to enter into life with one eye, rather than having two eyes to be cast into hell-fire. 10. Take heed that ye despise not one of these little ones; for I say unto you, that in heaven their angels do always behold the face of my Father which is in heaven. 11. For the Son of man is come to save that which was lost. 12. How think ye? if a man have an hundred sheep, and one of them be gone astray, doth he not leave the ninety and nine, and goeth into the mountains, and seeketh that which is gone astray? 13. And if so be that he find it, verily I say unto you, he rejoiceth more of that sheep, than of the ninety and nine which went not astray. 14. Even so it is not the will of your Father which is in heaven, that one of these little ones should perish.

Our Saviour here speaks of offences, or scandals.

(1.) In general, ver. 7. He takes occasion from the mention of the offending the little ones, to speak more generally of offences: That is an offence, 1. Which occasions guilt, which by enticement of alightment tends to draw men from that which is good to that which is evil. 2. Which occasions grief, which makes the heart of the righteous sad. Now concerning offences, Christ here tells them,

1. That they were certain things: It must needs be that offences come. When we are sure there is danger, we should be the better armed. Not that Christ's word necessitates any man to offend, but it is a prediction upon a view of the causes: considering the subtilty and malice of Satan, the weakness and depravity of men's hearts, and the foolishness that is found there, it is morally impossible but there should be offences: and God has determined to permit them for wise and holy ends, that both they which are perfect, and they which are not, may be made manifest: See 1 Cor. xi. 19. Dan. xi. 35. Being told before that there will be seducers, tempters, persecutors, and many ill examples, let us stand upon our guard, Matt. xxiv. 24. Acts xx. 29, 30.

(1.) A woe to the careless and unguarded to whom the offence is given; Woe to the world because of offences. The obstructions and oppositions given to faith and holiness in all places, are the bane and plague of mankind and the ruin of thousands. This present world is an evil world, it is so full of offences, of sins, and snares, and forrows: a dangerous road we travel, full of stumbling-blocks, precipices, and false guides: Woe to the world. As for those whom God hath chosen and called out of the world, and delivered from it, they are preserved by the power of God from the prejudice of these offences, and helped over all these stones of stumbling: They that love God's laws have great peace, and nothing shall offend them. Psal. cxix. 165.

(2.) A woe to the wicked that wilfully give the offence: But woe to that man by whom the offence comes. Though it must needs be that the offence will come, yet that will be no excuse for the offenders. Note, Though God make the sins of sinners to serve his purposes, yet that will not secure them from his wrath: And the guilt will be laid at the door of those that give the offence, though they also fall under a woe that take it. Note, They who any way hinder the salvation of others, will find their own condemnation the more intolerable, like Jeroboam that sinned, and made Israel to sin. This woe is the moral of that judicial law, Exod. xxi. 33, 34.—xxii. 6. that he who opened the pit, and kindled the fire, was accountable for all the damage that ensued. The antichristian generation, by whom came the great offence, will fall under this woe for their delusion of sinners, 2 Thess. ii. 11, 12. and their persecutions of saints, Rev. xvii. 1, 2—6. for the righteous God will reckon with those that ruin the eternal interests of precious souls, and the temporal interests of precious saints; for precious in the sight of the Lord is the blood of souls and the blood of saints; and men will be reckoned with, not only for their doings, but for the fruit of their doings, the mischief done by them.

(2.) In particular, Christ here speaks of offences given,

First, By us to ourselves, which is expressed by our hand or foot offending us; in such a case it must be cut off, ver. 8, 9. This Christ had said before, Matt. v. 29, 30. where it especially refers to seventh commandment sins; here it is taken more generally. Note, Those hard sayings of Christ, which are displeasing to flesh and blood, need to be repeated to us again and again, and all little enough. Now observe,

1. What it is that is here enjoined; We must part with an eye, or a hand, or a foot, i. e. that, whatever it is, which is dear to us, when it proves unavoidably on occasion of sin to us. Note, 1. Many prevailing temptations to sin arise from within ourselves; our own eyes and hands offend us; if there were never a devil to tempt us, we should be drawn away of our own lust: nay, those things which in themselves are good, and may be used as instruments of good, yet, through the corruptions of our hearts, prove snares to us, incline us to sin, and hinder us in duty. 2. In such a case we must, as far as lawfully we may, part with that which we cannot keep without being entangled in sin by it. (1.) It is certain, the inward lust must be mortified, though it be dear to us as an eye or a hand: The flesh, with its affections and lusts, must be mortified, Gal. v. 24. The body of sin must be destroyed, corrupt inclination and appetites must be checked and crossed, the beloved lust, that has been rolled under the tongue as a sweet morsel, must be abandoned with abhorrence. (2.) The outward occasions of sin must be avoided, though we thereby put as great a violence upon ourselves, as it would be to cut off a hand, or pluck out an eye. When Abraham quitted his native country for fear of being ensnared in the idolatry of it, and when Moses quitted Pharaoh's court for fear of being entangled in the sinful pleasures of it, there was a right hand cut off. We must think nothing too dear to part with for the keeping of a good conscience.

2. Upon what inducement this is required: It is better for thee to enter into life maimed, than having two hands to be cast into hell. The argument is taken from the future state, from heaven and hell; thence are fetched the most cogent dissuatives from sin: The argument is the same with that of the apostle, Rom. viii. 13. 1. If we live after the flesh, we must die; having two eyes, no breaches made upon the body of sin, in-bred corruption like Adonijah never displeased, we shall be cast into hell-fire. 2. If we through the Spirit mortify the deeds of the body, we shall live; that is meant by our entering into life maimed, i. e. the body of sin maimed, and it is but maimed at the best, while we are in this world. If the right hand of the old man be cut off, and its right eye plucked out, its chief policies blasted and powers broken, it is well; but there is still an eye and a hand remaining, with which it will struggle. They that are Christ's have nailed the flesh to the cross, but it is not yet dead; it is prolonged, but its dominion taken away, Dan. vii. 12. and the deadly wound given it that shall not be healed.

Secondly, Concerning offences given by us to others, especially Christ's little ones, which we are here charged to take heed of, pursuant to what he had said, ver. 6. Observe,

1. The caution itself: Take heed that ye despise not one of these little ones. This is spoken to his disciples. As Christ will be displeased with the enemies of his church, if they wrong any of the members of it, even the least, so he will be displeased with the great ones of the church, if they despise the little ones of it. You that are striving who shall be greatest, take heed lest in this contest you despise the little ones. We may understand it literally of little children, of them Christ was speaking, ver. 2—4. The infant seed of the faithful belong to the family of Christ, and are not to be despised. Or figuratively; true but weak believers are these little ones, that in their outward condition, or the frame of their spirits, are like little children, the lambs of Christ's flock.

1. We must not despise them, nor think meanly of them as lambs despised, Job xi. 5. We must not make a jest of their infirmities, nor look upon them with contempt, nor carry it scornfully or disdainfully towards them, as if we cared not what became of them; we must not say, though they be offended, and grieved, and stumbled, what is that to us; nor make a slight matter of doing that which will entangle and perplex them. This despising of the little ones is what we are largely cautioned against, Rom. xiv. 3—10—15—20, 21. We must not impose upon the consciences of others, to bring them into subjection to our humours, as they do, who say to men's souls, how down that we may go over. There is a respect owing to every man's conscience that appears to be conscientious.

2. We must take heed that we do not despise them; we must be afraid of the sin, and be very cautious what we say and do, lest we should through inadvertency give offence to Christ's little ones, lest we put contempt upon them, and are not aware of it. There were those that hated them, and cast them out, and yet said, Let the Lord be glorified. And we must be afraid of the punishment; take heed of despising them, for it is at your peril if you do.

2. The reasons to enforce the caution. We must not look upon these little ones as contemptible, because really they are considerable. Let not earth despise those whom heaven respects; nor let them be looked upon by us with disdain, whom God has put honour upon, and looks upon with respect as his favourites. To prove that the little ones which believe in Christ are worthy to be respected, consider,

1. The ministration of the good angels about them: In heaven their angels always behold the face of my Father. This Christ saith to us, and we may take it upon his word, who came from heaven to let us know what is done there by the world of angels. Two things he lets us know concerning them.

1. That they are the little ones angels. God's angels are their's, for all his is ours, if we be Christ's, 1 Cor. iii. 22. They are their's, for they have a charge concerning them to minister for their good, Heb. i. 14. to pitch their tents about them, and bear them up in their arms. Some have imagined that every particular saint has a guardian angel; but what need we suppose that, when we are sure every particular saint, when there is occasion, has a guard of angels. This is particularly applied here to the little ones, because they are most despised and exposed. They have but little that they can call their own, but they can look by faith on the heavenly hosts and call them theirs. While the great ones of the world have honourable men for their retinue and guards, the little ones of the church are attended with glorious angels; which speaks not only their dignity, but the danger those ran themselves upon that despise and abuse them. It is ill being enemies to those who are so guarded; and it is good having God for our God, for then we have his angels for our angels.

2. That they always behold the face of the Father in heaven. This speaks, 1. The angels continual felicity and honour. The happiness of heaven consists in the vision of God, seeing him face to face as he is, beholding his beauty; this the angels have without interruption, when they are ministering to us on earth, yet even then by contemplation they behold the face of God; for they are full of eyes within. Gabriel when speaking to Zechariah, yet stands in the presence of God, Rev. iv. 8. Luke i. 19. The expression intimates, as some think, the special dignity and honour of the little ones angels; the prime ministers of state are said to see the king's face, Esther i. 14. as if the strongest angels had the charge of the weakest saints. 2. It speaks their continual readiness to minister to the saints. They behold the face of God, expecting to receive orders from him what to do for the good of the saints. As the eyes of the servant are to the hands of the master, ready to go or come upon the least beck, so the eyes of the angels are upon the face of God, waiting for the intimations of his will, which those winged messengers fly swiftly to fulfil; they go and return like a flash of lightning, Ezek. i. 14. If we would behold the face of God in glory hereafter, as the angels do, Luke xx. 36. we must behold the face of God now, in readiness to our duty, as they do, Acts ix. 6.

2. The

and if we have a competency for to-day, let to-morrow take thought for the things of itself. Christ paid for himself and Peter, because it is probable here he only was assailed, and of him it was at this time demanded; perhaps the rest had paid already, or were to pay elsewhere. The Papists make a great mystery of Christ's paying for Peter, as if this made him the head and representative of the whole church; whereas the payment of tribute for him was rather a sign of subjection than of superiority. His pretended successors pay no tribute, but exact it. Peter fished for this money, and therefore part of it went for his use. Those that are workers together with Christ in winning souls, shall be sharers with him in his glory, and shall shine with him. Give it for thee and me. What Christ paid for himself, was looked upon as a debt; what he paid for Peter was a courtesy to him. Note, It is a desirable thing, if God so please, to have wherewithal of this world's goods, not only to be just but to be kind; not only to be charitable to the poor but obliging to our friend. What is a great estate good for, but that it enables a man to do so much the more good?

Lastly, Observe, that here is recorded the orders Christ gave to Peter what to do, the warrant he had; the effect is not particularly mentioned, but taken for granted, and justly; for with Christ, saying and doing are the same thing.

C H A P. XVIII.

The gospels are, in short, a record of what Jesus began both to do, and to teach. In the foregoing chapter we had an account of his doings, in this of his teachings; probably, not all at the same time, in a continued discourse, but at several times, upon divers occasions, here put together as near akin. We have here, 1. Instructions concerning humility, ver. 1—6. 2. Concerning offences in general, ver. 7. particularly offences given. (1.) By us to ourselves, ver. 8, 9. (2.) By us to others, ver. 10—14. (3.) By others to us; which were of two sorts, 1. Scandalous sins, that are to be reprov'd, ver. 15—20. 2. Personal wrongs that are to be forgiven, ver. 21—35. See how practical Christ's preaching was, he could have revealed mysteries, but he pressed plain duties, especially those that are most displeasing to flesh and blood.

1. AT the same time came the disciples unto Jesus, saying, Who is the greatest in the kingdom of heaven? 2. And Jesus called a little child unto him, and set him in the midst of them. 3. And said, Verily I say unto you, Except ye be converted, and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven. 4. Whosoever therefore shall humble himself as this little child, the same is greatest in the kingdom of heaven. 5. And whoso shall receive one such little child in my name, receiveth me. 6. But whoso shall offend one of these little ones which believe in me, it were better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck, and that he were drowned in the depth of the sea.

As there never was a greater pattern of humility, so there never was a greater preacher of it than Christ; he took all occasions to command it, to commend it to his disciples and followers.

First, The occasion of this discourse here concerning humility, was an unbecoming contest among the disciples for precedency; they came to him, saying, among themselves (for they were ashamed to ask him, Mark ix. 34.) Who is the greatest in the kingdom of heaven? They meant not, who by character, then the question had been good, that they might know what graces and duties to excel in, but who by name. They had heard much, and preached much of the kingdom of heaven, the kingdom of the Messiah, his church in this world; but as yet they were so far from having any clear notion of it, that they dreamt of a temporal kingdom, and the external pomp and power of it. Christ had lately foretold his sufferings and the glory that should follow, that he should rise again, from whence they expected his kingdom would commence, and now they thought it was time to put in for their places in it; it is good in such cases to speak early. Upon other discourses of Christ to that purpose, debates of this kind arose, Matt. xx. 19, 20, Luke xxii. 22—24. he spoke many words of his sufferings, but only one of his glory, yet they fastened upon that, and overlooked the other; and instead of asking how they might have strength and grace to suffer with him, they ask him who shall be highest in reigning with him. Note, Many love to hear and speak of privileges and glory, that are willing to pass by the thoughts of work and trouble. They look so much at the crown, that they forget the yoke and the cross. So the disciples here did, when they asked, Who is the greatest in the kingdom of heaven?

1. They suppose that all that have a place in that kingdom are great, for it is a kingdom of priests. Note, Those are truly great that are truly good, and they will appear so at last, when Christ shall own them as his, though never so mean and poor in the world.

2. They suppose that there are degrees in this greatness: All the saints are honourable, but not all alike so; one star differs from another star in glory. All David's officers were not worthies, nor all his worthies of the first three.

3. They suppose it must be some of them that must be prime ministers of state: To whom should King Jesus delight to do honour, but to them who had left all for him, and were now his companions in patience and tribulation.

4. They strive who it should be, each having some pretence or other to it. Peter was always the chief speaker, and already had the keys given him, and he expects to be lord chancellor or lord chamberlain of the household, and so to be the greatest. Judas had the bag, and therefore he expects to be lord treasurer, which, though now he comes last, he hopes will then denominate him the greatest. Simon and Jude are nearly related to Christ, and they hope to take place of all the great officers of state, as princes of the blood. John is the beloved disciple, the favourite of the prince, and therefore hopes to be the greatest. Andrew was first called, and why should not he be first preferred? Note, We are very apt to amuse and humour ourselves with foolish fancies of things that will never be.

Secondly, The discourse itself, which is a just rebuke to the question, Who should be greatest? And we have abundant reason to think, that if Christ ever intended that Peter and his successors at Rome should be heads of the church, and his chief vicars on earth, having so fair an occasion given him, he would now have let his disciples know it; but so far is he from this, that his answer disallows and condemns the thing itself; Christ will not lodge such an authority or supremacy any where in his church; whoever pretend to it are usurpers; instead of setting any of the disciples in this dignity, he warns them all not to put in for it.

Christ here teacheth them to be humble,

1. By a sign, ver. 2. He called a little child to him, and set him in the midst of them. Christ often taught by signs or sensible representations, comparable to the eye, as the prophets of old. Note, Humility is a lesson so hardly learned, that we have need by all ways and means to be taught it. When we look upon a little child, we should be put in mind of the use Christ made of this child: Sensible things must be improved to spiritual purposes. He set him in the midst of them; not that they might play with him, but learn by him. Grown men, and great men should not disdain the company of little children, or think it below them to take notice of them: They may either speak to them, and give instruction to them; or look upon them and receive instruction from them. Christ himself, when a child, was in the midst of the doctors, Luke ii. 46.

2. By a sermon upon this sign, in which he shews them and us, (1.) The necessity of humility, ver. 3. His preface is solemn, and commands both attention and assent: Verily I say unto you, I the Amen, the faithful Witness, say it, Except ye be converted, and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven. Here observe,

1. What it is that he requires and insists upon,

(1.) You must be converted, you must be of another mind, and in another frame and temper, must have other thoughts, both of yourselves and of the kingdom of heaven, before you be fit for a place in it: This pride, ambition, and affection of honour and dominion, which appears in you, must be repented of, mortified and reformed, and you must come to yourselves. Note, Besides the first conversion of a soul from a state of nature to a state of grace, there are after conversions from particular paths of back-sliding, which are equally necessary to salvation: Every step out of the way by sin, must be a step into it again by repentance. When Peter repented of his denying his Master, he was converted. (2.) You must become as little children. Note, Converting grace makes us like little children, not foolish as children, 1 Cor. xiv. 20. nor tickle, Eph. iv. 14. nor playful, Matt. xi. 16. but as children we must desire the sincere milk of the word, 1 Pet. ii. 2. as children we must be careful for nothing, but leave it to our heavenly Father to care for us, Matt. vi. 31. We must as children be harmless and inoffensive, and void of malice, 1 Cor. xiv. 20. governable, and under command, Gal. iv. 2. and (which is here chiefly intended) we must be humble as little children, who do not take state upon them, nor stand upon the punctilios of honour; the child of a gentleman will play with the child of a beggar, Rom. xii. 16. the child in rags, if it have the breasts, is well enough pleased, and envies not the gaiety of the child in silk; little children have no great aims at great places, nor projects to themselves in the world; they exercise not themselves in things too high for them; and we should in like manner behave and quiet ourselves, Psal. cxxxix. 1, 2. As children are little in body and low in stature, so we must be little and low in spirit, and in our thoughts of ourselves: This is a temper which leads to other good dispositions; the age of childhood is the learning age.

2. What stress he lays upon this: Without this, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven. Note, Disciples of Christ have need to be kept in awe by threatenings, that they may fear lest they seem to come short, Heb. iv. 1. The disciples, when they put that question, ver. 1. thought themselves sure of the kingdom of heaven, but Christ awakens them to be jealous of themselves: They were ambitious of being greatest in the kingdom of heaven; Christ tells them, that except they came to a better temper they should never come thither. Note, Many that let up for great ones in the church, prove not only little, but nothing, and are found to have no part or lot in the matter. Our Lord designs here to shew the great danger of pride and ambition; whatever profession men make, if they allow themselves in this sin, they will be rejected both from God's tabernacle, and from his holy hill: Pride threw the angels that sinned out of heaven, and will keep us out if we be not converted from it: They that are lifted up with pride, fall into the condemnation of the devil; to prevent this we must become as little children, and in order to that, must be born again, must put on the new man, must be like the holy child Jesus; so he is called, even after his ascension, Acts iv. 27.

(2.) He shews the honour and advancement that attend humility, ver. 4. which is a direct but surprising answer to their question; he that humbles himself as a little child, though he may fear that hereby he will render himself contemptible, as low spirits do, that thereby throw themselves out of the way of preferment, yet the same is greatest in the kingdom of heaven. Note, The humblest Christians are the best Christians, and most like to Christ and highest in his favour; are best disposed for the communications of divine grace, and fittest to serve God in this world and enjoy him in another. They are great, for God overlooks heaven and earth to look on such; and certainly those are to be most respected and honoured in the church, they are most humble and self-denying; for though they least seek it, they best deserve it.

(3.) The special care Christ takes for those that are humble; he espouseth their cause, protects them, interests himself in their concerns, and will see that they are not wronged, but they shall be righted.

Those that thus humble themselves will be afraid.

1. That no body will receive them; and as to that fear, ver. 5. Whoso shall receive one such little child in my name, receiveth me: Whatever kindnesses are done to such, Christ takes as done to himself: Whoso entertains a meek and humble Christian, keeps him in countenance, will not let him lose by his modesty, takes him into his love and friendship, and society and care, and studies to do him a kindness; and doth this in Christ's name, for his sake, because he bears the image of Christ, serves Christ, and because Christ has received him; this shall be accepted and recompensed as an acceptable piece of respect to Christ. Observe, Though it be but one such little child that is received in Christ's name, it shall be accepted. Note, The tender regard Christ has to his church, extends itself to every particular member, even the meaneast; not only to the whole family, but to every child of the family; the less they are in themselves to whom we show kindness, the more there is of good will in it to Christ; the less it is for their sakes, the more it is for his, and he takes it accordingly. If Christ were personally among us, we think we should never do enough to welcome him; the poor, the poor in spirit, we have always with us, and they are his receivers. See Matt. xxv. 35—40.

2. They will be afraid that every body will abuse them; the basest men delight to trample upon the humble, verax censura columbas; this objection he obviates, ver. 6. where he warns all people, as they will answer it at their utmost peril, not to offer any injury to one of Christ's little ones: This word makes a wall of fire about them; he that toucheth them toucheth the apple of God's eye.

Observe, (1.) The crime supposed, offending one of these little ones that believe in Christ: Their believing in Christ, though they be little ones, unites them to him, so that as they partake of the benefit of his sufferings, so he partakes in the wrong of theirs, and interests him in their cause. Even the little little ones that believe, have the same privileges with the great ones, for they have all obtained like precious faith. There are those that offend these little ones, by drawing them to sin, 1 Cor. viii. 10, 11. grieving and vexing their righteous souls, discouraging them, taking occasion from their mildness to make a prey of them in their persons, families, goods, or good name: Thus the best men have often met with the worst treatment in this world.

(2.) The punishment of this crime, intimated in that word, better for him that he were drowned in the depth of the sea: The sin is so heinous, and the ruin proportionably so great, that he had better undergo the sorest punishment inflicted on the worst of malefactors, which can only kill the body. Note, 1. Hell is worse than the depth of the sea, for it is a bottomless pit, and it is a burning lake: The depth of the sea is only killing, but hell is tormenting. We meet with one that had comfort in the depth of the sea, it was Jonah, chap. ii. 2—4—9. but never any had the least grain or glimpse of comfort in hell, nor will have to eternity. 2. The irresistible, irrevocable doom of the great Judge, will sink sooner and surer, and bind faster, than a millstone hung about the neck: It fixeth a great gulph that can never be broke through, Luke xvi. 26. Offending Christ's little ones, though by omission, is assigned as the reason of that dreadful sentence, Go, ye cursed, which will at last be the doom of proud persecutors.

7. ¶ Woe unto the world because of offences! for it must needs be that offences come: but woe to that man by whom the offence cometh: 8. Wherefore if thy hand or thy foot offend thee, cut them off, and cast them from thee: it is better for thee to enter into life halt or maimed, rather than having two hands or two feet to be cast into everlasting fire. 9. And if thine eye offend thee, pluck it out, and cast it from thee: it is better for thee to enter into life with one eye, rather than having two eyes to be cast into hell-fire. 10. Take heed that ye despise not one of these little ones; for I say unto you, that in heaven their angels do always behold the face of my Father which is in heaven. 11. For the Son of man is come to save that which was lost. 12. How think ye? if a man have an hundred sheep, and one of them be gone astray, doth he not leave the ninety and nine, and goeth into the mountains, and seeketh that which is gone astray? 13. And if so be that he find it, verily I say unto you, he rejoiceth more of that sheep, than of the ninety and nine which went not astray. 14. Even so it is not the will of your Father which is in heaven, that one of these little ones should perish.

Our Saviour here speaks of offences, or scandals.

(1.) In general, ver. 7. He takes occasion from the mention of the offending the little ones, to speak more generally of offences: That is an offence, 1. Which occasions guilt, which by enticement of a frightment tends to draw men from that which is good to that which is evil. 2. Which occasions grief, which makes the heart of the righteous sad. Now concerning offences, Christ here tells them,

1. That they were certain things: it must needs be that offences come. When we are sure there is danger, we should be the better armed. Not that Christ's word necessitates any man to offend, but it is a prediction upon a view of the causes: considering the subtilty and malice of Satan, the weakness and depravity of men's hearts, and the foolishness that is found there, it is morally impossible but there should be offences; and God has determined to permit them for wise and holy ends, that both they which are perfect, and they which are not, may be made manifest: See 1 Cor. xi. 19. Dan. xi. 35. Being told before that there will be seducers, tempters, persecutors, and many ill examples, let us stand upon our guard, Matt. xxiv. 24. Acts xx. 29, 30.

(1.) A woe to the careless and unguarded to whom the offence is given; Woe to the world because of offences. The obstructions and oppositions given to faith and holiness in all places, are the bane and plague of mankind and the ruin of thousands. This present world is an evil world, it is so full of offences, of sins, and snares, and sorrows: a dangerous road we travel, full of stumbling-blocks, precipices, and false guides: Woe to the world. As for those whom God hath chosen and called out of the world, and delivered from it, they are preserved by the power of God from the prejudice of these offences, and helped over all those stones of stumbling: They that love God's laws have great peace, and nothing shall offend them, Psal. cxix. 165.

(2.) A woe to the wicked that wilfully give the offence: But woe to that man by whom the offence comes. Though it must needs be that the offence will come, yet that will be no excuse for the offenders. Note, Though God make the sins of sinners to serve his purposes, yet that will not secure them from his wrath: And the guilt will be laid at the door of those that give the offence, though they also fall under a woe that take it. Note, They who any way hinder the salvation of others, will find their own condemnation the more intolerable, like Jeroboam that sinned, and made Israel to sin. This woe is the moral of that judicial law, Exod. xxi. 33, 34.—xxii. 6. that he who opened the pit, and kindled the fire, was accountable for all the damage that ensued. The antichristian generation, by whom came the great offence, will fall under this woe for their delusion of sinners, 2 Thess. ii. 11, 12. and their persecutions of saints, Rev. xvii. 1, 2—6. for the righteous God will reckon with those that ruin the eternal interests of precious souls, and the temporal interests of precious saints; for precious in the sight of the Lord is the blood of souls and the blood of saints; and men will be reckoned with, not only for their doings, but for the fruit of their doings, the mischief done by them.

(2.) In particular, Christ here speaks of offences given,

First, By us to ourselves, which is expressed by our hand or foot offending us; in such a case it must be cut off, ver. 8, 9. This Christ had said before, Matt. v. 29, 30. where it especially refers to seventh commandment sins; here it is taken more generally. Note, Those hard sayings of Christ, which are displeasing to flesh and blood, need to be repeated to us again and again, and all little enough. Now observe,

1. What it is that is here enjoined; We must part with an eye, or a hand, or a foot, i. e. that, whatever it is, which is dear to us, when it proves unavoidably on occasion of sin to us. Note, 1. Many prevailing temptations to sin arise from within ourselves; our own eyes and hands offend us; if there were never a devil to tempt us, we should be drawn away of our own lust: nay, those things which in themselves are good, and may be used as instruments of good, yet, through the corruptions of our hearts, prove snares to us, incline us to sin, and hinder us in duty. 2. In such a case we must, as far as lawfully we may, part with that which we cannot keep without being entangled in sin by it. (1.) It is certain, the inward lust must be mortified, though it be dear to us as an eye or a hand: The flesh, with its affections and lusts, must be mortified, Gal. v. 24. The body of sin must be destroyed, corrupt inclination and appetites must be checked and crossed, the beloved lust, that has been rolled on for the tongue as a sweet morsel, must be abandoned with abhorrence. (2.) The outward occasions of sin must be avoided, though we thereby put us great a violence upon ourselves, as it would be to cut off a hand, or pluck out an eye. When Abraham quitted his native country for fear of being entangled in the idolatry of it, and when Moses quitted Pharaoh's court for fear of being entangled in the sinful pleasures of it, there was a right hand cut off. We must think nothing too dear to part with for the learning of a good conscience.

2. Upon what inducement this is required: It is better for thee to enter into life maimed, than having two hands to be cast into hell. The argument is taken from the future state, from heaven and hell; thence are fetched the most cogent dissuatives from sin: The argument is the same with that of the apostle, Rom. vii. 13. 1. If we live after the flesh, we must die; having two eyes, no breaches made upon the body of sin, in-bred corruption like Adonijah never dispensed, we shall be cast into hell-fire. 2. If we through the Spirit mortify the deeds of the body, we shall live; that is meant by our entering into life maimed, i. e. the body of sin maimed, and it is but maimed at the best, while we are in this world. If the right hand of the old man be cut off, and its right eye plucked out, its chief policies blasted and powers broken, it is well; but there is still an eye and a hand remaining, with which it will struggle. They that are Christ's have nailed the flesh to the cross, but it is not yet dead; it is prolonged, but its dominion taken away, Dan. vii. 12. and the deadly wound given it that shall not be healed.

Secondly, Concerning offences given by us to others, especially Christ's little ones, which we are here charged to take heed of, pursuant to what he had said, ver. 6. Observe,

1. The caution itself: Take heed that ye despise not one of these little ones. This is spoken to his disciples. As Christ will be displeased with the enemies of his church, if they wrong any of the members of it, even the least, so he will be displeased with the great ones of the church, if they despise the little ones of it. You that are striving who shall be the greatest, take heed lest in this contest you despise the little ones. We may understand it literally of little children, of them Christ was speaking, ver. 2—4. The infant seed of the faithful belong to the family of Christ, and are not to be despised. Or figuratively; true but weak believers are these little ones, that in their outward condition, or the frame of their spirits, are like little children, the lambs of Christ's flock.

1. We must not despise them, nor think meanly of them as lambs despised, Job xv. 5. We must not make a jest of their infirmities, nor look upon them with contempt, nor carry it scornfully or disdainfully towards them, as if we cared not what became of them; we must not say, though they be offended, and grieved, and stumbled, what is that to us; nor make a slight matter of doing that which will entangle and perplex them. This despising of the little ones is what we are largely cautioned against, Rom. xiv. 3—10—15—20, 21. We must not impose upon the consciences of others, to bring them into subjection to our humours, as they do, who say to men's souls, how down that we may go over. There is a respect owing to every man's conscience that appears to be conscientious.

2. We must take heed that we do not despise them; we must be afraid of the sin, and be very cautious what we say and do. Lest we should through inadvertency give offence to Christ's little ones. Lest we put contempt upon them, and are not aware of it. There were those that hated them, and cast them out, and yet said, Let the Lord be glorified. And we must be afraid of the punishment; take heed of despising them, for it is at your peril if you do.

2. The reasons to enforce the caution. We must not look upon these little ones as contemptible, because really they are considerable. Let not earth despise those whom heaven respects; nor let them be looked upon by us with disdain, whom God has put honour upon, and looks upon with respect as his favourites. To prove that the little ones which believe in Christ are worthy to be respected, consider,

1. The ministration of the good angels about them: In heaven their angels always behold the face of my Father. This Christ saith to us, and we may take it upon his word, who came from heaven to let us know what is done there by the world of angels. Two things he lets us know concerning them.

1. That they are the little ones angels. God's angels are their's, for all his is ours, if we be Christ's, 1 Cor. iii. 22. They are their's, for they have a charge concerning them to minister for their good. Heb. i. 14. to pitch their tents about them, and bear them up in their arms. Some have imagined that every particular saint has a guardian angel; but what need we suppose that, when we are sure every particular saint, when there is occasion, has a guard of angels. This is particularly applied here to the little ones, because they are most despised and exposed. They have but little that they can call their own, but they can look by faith on the heavenly hosts and call them theirs. While the great ones of the world have honourable men for their retinue and guards, the little ones of the church are attended with glorious angels; which speaks not only their dignity, but the danger those ran themselves upon that despise and abuse them. It is ill being enemies to those who are so guarded; and it is good having God for our God, for then we have his angels for our angels.

2. That they always behold the face of the Father in heaven. This speaks, 1. The angels continual felicity and honour. The happiness of heaven consists in the vision of God, seeing him face to face as he is, beholding his beauty; this the angels have without interruption, when they are ministering to us on earth, yet even then by contemplation they behold the face of God, for they are full of eyes within. Gabriel when speaking to Zechariah, yet stands in the presence of God, Rev. iv. 8. Luke i. 19. The expression intimates, as some think, the special dignity and honour of the little ones angels; the prime ministers of state are said to see the king's face, Esther i. 14. as if the strongest angels had the charge of the weakest saints. 2. It speaks their continual readiness to minister to the saints. They behold the face of God, expecting to receive orders from him what to do for the good of the saints. As the eyes of the servant are to the hands of the master, ready to go or come upon the least beck, so the eyes of the angels are upon the face of God, waiting for the intimations of his will, which those winged messengers fly swiftly to fulfil; they go and return like a flash of lightning, Ezek. i. 14. If we would behold the face of God in glory hereafter, as the angels do, Luke xx. 36. we must behold the face of God now, in readiness to our duty, as they do, Acts ix. 6.

3. The

2. The gracious design of Christ concerning them, ver. 11. For the Son of man is come to save that which was lost. This is a reason, 1. Why the little ones angels have such a charge concerning them, and to attend upon them; it is in pursuance of Christ's design to save them. Note, The ministration of angels is founded in the mediation of Christ; through him angels are reconciled to us; and when they celebrated God's good-will towards men, to it they annexed their own. 2. Why they are not to be despised, because Christ came to save them, to save them that are lost, i. e. the little ones that are lost in their own eyes, Isa. lvi. 3. that are at a loss within themselves. Or rather, the children of men. Note, 1. Our souls by nature are lost souls, as a traveller is lost that is out of his way, as a convicted prisoner is lost; God lost the service of fallen man, lost the honour he should have had from him. 2. Christ's errand into the world was to save that which was lost, to reduce us to our allegiance, restore us to our work, to instate us in our privileges, and so put us into the right way that leads us to our great end; to save those that are spiritually lost from being eternally so. 3. This is a good reason why the least and weakest believers should not be despised or offended. If Christ put such a value upon them, let not us undervalue them. If he denied himself so much for their salvation, sure we should deny ourselves for their edification and consolation. See this argument urged, Rom. xiv. 15. 1 Cor. viii. 11, 12. Nay, if Christ came into the world to save souls, and his heart is so much upon that work, he will reckon severely with those that obstruct and hinder it, by obstructing the progress of those that are setting their faces heaven-wards, and so thwart his great design.

2. The tender regard which our heavenly Father has to these little ones, and his concern for their welfare. This is illustrated by a comparison, ver. 12, 13, 14. Observe the graduation of the argument; the angels of God are their servants, the Son of God is their Saviour, and to complete their honour, God himself is their friend. None shall pluck them out of my Father's hand, John x. 24.

Here is, 1. The comparison, ver. 12, 13. The owner that had lost one sheep out of a hundred, doth not slight it, but diligently inquires after it, is greatly pleased when he has found it, and has in that a sensible and affecting joy, more than in the ninety and nine that wandered not. The fear he was in of losing that one, and the surprise of finding it adds to the joy. Now this is applicable, 1. To the state of fallen man in general; he is strayed like a lost sheep, the angels that stood, were as the ninety-nine that never went astray; wandering man is sought upon the mountains, which Christ in great fatigue traversed in pursuit of him, and he is found; which is matter of joy: Greater joy there is in heaven for returning sinners than for remaining angels. 2. To particular believers that are offended, and put out of their way by the stumbling-blocks that are laid in their way, or the wiles of those that seduce them out of the way. Now though but one of a hundred should hereby be driven off, as sheep easily are, yet that one shall be looked after with a great deal of care, the return of it welcomed with a great deal of pleasure; and therefore the wrong done to it no doubt will be reckoned for with a great deal of displeasure. If there be joy in heaven for the finding of one of these little ones, there is wrath in heaven for the offending of them. Note, God is graciously concerned, not only for his flock in general, but for every lamb or sheep that belongs to it. Though they are many, yet out of those many he can easily miss one, for he is a great shepherd, but not so easily lose it, for he is a good shepherd, and takes a more particular cognizance of his flock than ever any did: for he calls his own sheep by name, John x. 3. See a full exposition of this parable, Ezek. xxxiv. 2—10—16—19.

2. The redition of this comparison, ver. 14. It is not the will of your Father, that one of these little ones should perish; more is implied than is expressed: It is not his will that any should perish, but, 1. It is his will that these little ones should be saved; it is the will of his design and delight, he has designed it, and set his heart upon it, and he will effect it; it is the will of his precept, that all should do what they can to further it, and nothing to hinder it. 2. This care extends itself to every particular member of the flock, even the meanest. We think if but one or two be offended and ensnared it is no great matter, we need not mind it; but God's thoughts of love and tenderness are above ours. 3. It is intimated, but those who do any thing by which any of these little ones are brought into danger of perishing, contradict the will of God, and highly provoke him; and though they cannot prevail in it, yet they will be reckoned with for it by him, who in his saints, as in other things, is jealous of his honour, and will not bear to have it trampled on. See Isai. iii. 15. What mean ye, that ye beat my people? Psal. lxxvi. 8, 9.

Observe, that ver. 19. Christ called God, My Father which is in heaven; ver. 14. he calls him, your Father which is in heaven; intimating that he is not ashamed to call his poor disciples brethren, for have not he and they one Father? John xx. 17. I ascend to my Father and your Father; therefore ours because his. This intimates likewise the ground of the safety of his little ones; that God is their Father, and is therefore inclined to succour them. A father takes care of all his children, but is particularly tender of the little ones, Gen. xiv. 20. He is their Father in heaven; a place of prospect, and therefore he sees all the indignities offered them; and a place of power, therefore he is able to avenge them. This comforts offended little ones, that their witness is in heaven, Job xvi. 19: their judge is there, Psal. lxxviii. 45.

15. ¶ Moreover, if thy brother shall trespass against thee, go and tell him his fault between thee and him alone: if he shall hear thee, thou hast gained thy brother. 16. But if he will not hear thee, then take with thee one or two more, that in the mouth of two or three witnesses every word may be established. 17. And if he shall neglect to hear them, tell it unto the church: but if he neglect to hear the church, let him be unto thee as an heathen man, and a publican. 18. Verily I say unto you, Whatsoever ye shall bind on earth, shall be bound in heaven: and whatsoever ye shall loose on earth, shall be loosed in heaven. 19. Again I say unto you, that if two of you shall agree on earth as touching any thing that they shall ask, it shall be done for them of my Father which is in heaven. 20. For where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them.

Christ having cautioned his disciples not to give offence, comes next to direct them what they must do in case of offences given them; which may be understood either of personal injuries, and then these directions are intended for the preserving the peace of the church; and of public scandals, and then they are intended for the preserving of the purity and beauty of the church. Let us consider it both ways.

First, Let us apply it to the quarrels that happen among Christians upon any account. If thy brother trespass against thee, by grieving thy soul, 1 Cor. viii. 12. by affronting thee, or putting contempt or abuse upon thee, if he blemish thy good name by false reports or tale-bearing, if he encroach on thy rights, or be any way injurious to thee in thy estate; if he be guilty of any of those trespasses that are intimated in Lev. vi. 2, 3. If he transgress the laws of justice, charity, or relative duties; these are trespasses against us, and often happen among Christ's disciples, and sometimes for want of prudence are of very ill consequence. Now observe what is the rule prescribed in this case.

1. Go, and tell him his fault between him and thee alone. Let this be compared with and explained by Lev. xix. 17. Thou shalt not hate thy brother in thy heart, i. e. if thou hast conceived a displeasure at thy brother for any injury he hath done thee, do not suffer any resentments to ripen into a secret malice, like a wound, that is most dangerous when it bleeds inwardly, but give vent to them in a mild and grave admonition, let them spend themselves and they will expire the sooner: do not go and rail against him behind his back, but thou shalt in any ways reprove him. If he has indeed done thee a considerable wrong, endeavour to make him sensible of it, but let the rebuke be private, between thee and him alone; if thou wouldst convince him, do not expose him, for that will but exasperate him, and make the reproof look like a revenge. This agrees with Prov. xxv. 8, 9. Go not forth hastily to strive, but debate thy cause with thy neighbour himself, argue it calmly and amicably, and if he shall hear thee, well and good, thou hast gained thy brother, there is an end of the controversy, and it is a happy end; let no more be said of it, but let the falling out of friends be the renewing of friendship.

2. If he will not hear thee, if he will not own himself in a fault, nor come to an agreement, yet do not despair, but try what he will say to it if thou take one or two more, not only to be witnesses of what passeth, but to reason the case further with him; he will be the more likely to hearken to them because they are disinterested; and if reason will rule him, the word of reason in the mouth of two or three witnesses will be better spoken to him (plus vident oculi quam oculus) and more regarded by him, and perhaps it will influence him to acknowledge his error, and to say, "I repent."

3. If he shall neglect to hear them, and will not refer the matter to their arbitration, then tell it to the church, to the ministers, elders, or other officers, or the most considerable persons in the congregation you belong to, make them the referees to accommodate the matter, and do not presently appeal to the magistrate, or fetch a writ for him; this is fully explained by the apostle, 1 Cor. vi. where he reproves those that went to law before the unjust, and not before the saints, ver. 1. and would have the saints to judge those small matters, ver. 2. that pertain to this life, ver. 3. If you ask who is the church that must be told, the apostle directs there, ver. 5. Is there not a wise man among you? Those of the church that are presumed most capable of determining such matters; and he speaks ironically when he saith, ver. 2. Set them to judge who are least esteemed in the church; those, if there be no better, those, rather than suffer an irreconcilable breach between two-church members. This rule was then in a special manner requisite, when the civil-government was in the hands of such as were not only aliens but enemies.

4. If he will not hear the church, will not stand in their award, but persists in the wrong he has done thee, and proceeds to do thee further wrong, let him be to thee as a heathen man, and a publican; take the benefit of the law against him, but let that always be the last remedy; appeal not to the courts of justice till thou had first tried all other means to compromise the matter in variance. Or thou mayest if thou wilt break off thy friendship and familiarity with him; though thou must by no means study revenge, yet thou mayest choose whether thou wilt have any dealings with him, at least in such a way as may give him an opportunity of doing the like again. Thou wouldst have healed him, wouldst have preserved his friendship, but he would not, and so has forfeited it: If a man cheat and abuse me once it is his fault, if twice it is my own.

Secondly, Let us apply it to scandalous sins, which are an offence to the little ones, of ill examples to those that are weak and pliable, and of great grief to those that are weak and timorous. Christ having taught us to indulge the weakness of our brethren, here cautions us not to indulge their wickedness under the pretence of that. Christ designing to erect a church for himself in the world, here took care for the preservation, 1. Of its purity, that it might have an expulsive faculty, a power to cleanse and clear itself, like a fountain of living waters, which is necessary as long as the net of the gospel brings up both good fish and bad. 2. Of its peace and order, that every member may know his place and duty, and the purity of it may be preserved in a regular way and not tumultuously. Now let us see,

1. What is the case supposed? If thy brother trespass against thee. The offender is a brother, one that is in Christian communion, that is baptized, that hears the word, and prays with thee, with whom thou joinest in the worship of God, steadily or occasionally. Note, Church discipline is for church-members. Them that are without God judgeth, 1 Cor. v. 12, 13. When any trespass is done against us, it is good to remember that the trespasser is a brother, which furnisheth us with a qualifying consideration. 2. The offence is a trespass against thee, if thy brother sins against thee, so the word is; if he do any thing which is offensive to thee as a Christian. Note, A gross sin against God, is a trespass against his people that have a true concern for his honour. Christ and believers have twofold interests; what is done against them Christ takes as done against himself, and what is done against him they cannot but take as done against themselves: The reproaches of them that reproached thee are fallen upon me, Psal. lxxix. 9.

2. What is to be done in this case. We have here,

1. The rules prescribed, ver. 15, 16, 17. Proceed in this method:

1. Go and tell him his fault between him and thee alone. Do not stay till he comes to thee, but go to him, as the physician visits the patient, and the shepherd goes after the lost sheep. Note, We should think no pains too much to take for the recovering of a sinner to repentance. Tell him his fault, and mind him of what he has done and of the evil of it, shew him his abomination. Note, People are loth to see their faults, and have need to be told of them. Though the fact is plain, and the fault too, yet they must be put together with application. Great sins often amuse conscience, and for the present stupify and silence it, and there is need of help to awaken it. David's own heart smote him, when he had cut off Saul's skirt, and when he had numbered the people, but (which is very strange) we do not find that it smote him in the matter of Uriah, till Nathan told him, Thou art the man.

Tell him his fault ἐλαγξον αὐτόν, "argue the case with him;" so the word signifies, and do it with reason and argument, not with passion. Where the fault is plain and great, the person proper for us to deal with, and we have an opportunity for it, and there is no apparent danger of doing more hurt than good; we must with meekness and faithfulness tell people of what is amiss in them. Christian reproof is an ordinance of Christ for the bringing of sinners to repentance, and must be managed as an ordinance. Let the reproof be private, between thee and him alone; that it may appear you seek not his reproach but his repentance. Note, It is a good rule, which should ordinarily be observed among Christians, not to speak of our brethren's faults to others, till we have first spoken of them to themselves; this would make less reproaching and more reproving; that is, less sin committed and more duty done. It will be likely to work upon an offender, when he sees his reprover concerned not only for his salvation, in telling him his fault, but for his reputation in telling him of it privately.

If he shall hear thee, that is, heed thee, if he be wrought upon by the reproof it is well, thou hast gained thy brother; thou hast helped to save him from sin and ruin, and it will be thy credit and comfort, James v. 19, 20. Note, The converting of a soul is the winning of that soul, Prov. ix. 30. And we should covet it, and labour after it as gain to us; and if the loss of a soul be a great loss, the gain of a soul is sure no small gain.

2. If that doth not prevail, then take with thee one or two more, ver. 16. Note, We must not be weary of well-doing, though we see not presently the good success of it. If he will not hear thee, yet do not give him up as in a desperate case, say not, it will be to no purpose to deal with him any further, but go on in the use of other means, even those that harden their necks must be often reprov'd, and those that oppose themselves instructed in meekness. In work of this kind we must travail in birth again, Gal. iv. 19, and it is after many pains and throes that the child is born.

Take with thee one or two more, 1. To assist thee; they may speak some penitent convincing word which thou didst not think of, and may manage the matter with more prudence than thou didst. Note, Christians should see their need of help in doing good, and pray in the aid one of another; as in other things, so in giving reproofs, that the duty may be done and may be done well. 2. To assist him; he will be the more likely to be humbled for his fault, when he sees it witnessed against by two or three, Deut. xix. 15. Note, Those should think it high time to repent and reform that see their miscarriages become a general offence and scandal. Though in such a world as this it is rare to find one good whom all men speak well of, yet it is more rare to find one good whom all men speak ill of. 3. To be witnesses of his carriage, in case the matter should be afterwards brought before the church. None should come under the censure of the church as obstinate and contumacious, till it be very well proved that they are so.

3. If he neglect to hear them, and will not be humbled, then tell it the church, ver. 17. There are some stubborn spirits to whom the likeliest means of conviction prove ineffectual, yet such must not be given over as incurable, but let the matter be made more public and further help called in. Note, 1. Private admonitions must always go before public censures; if gentler methods will do the work, those that are more rough and severe must not be used, Tit. iii. 10. Those that will not be reasoned out of their sins, need to be shamed out of them. Let God's work be done effectually, but with as little noise as may be; his kingdom comes with power, but not with observation. But, 2. Where private admonition doth not prevail, there public censure must take place. The church must receive the complaints of the offended, and rebuke the sins of the offenders, and judge between them, after an impartial inquiry made into the merits of the cause.

Tell it to the church. It is a thousand pities that this appointment of Christ, which was designed to end difference and remove offences, should itself be so much a matter of debate, and occasion differences and offences, through the corruption of men's hearts. What church must be told, is the great question; the civil magistrate, say some; the Jewish sanhedrim then in being, say others, but by what follows, ver. 18. it is plain he means a Christian church, which though not yet formed, was now in the embryo. Tell it the church, i. e. that particular church, in the communion of which the offender liveth; make the matter known to those of that congregation, who are by consent appointed to receive information of that kind. Tell it to the guides and governors of the church, the minister or ministers, the elders or deacons, or (if such the constitution of the society be) tell it to the representations or heads of the congregation, or to all the members of it? let them examine the matter, and if they find the complaint frivolous and groundless, let them rebuke the complainant; if they find it just, let them rebuke the offender and call him to repentance, and this will be likely to put an edge and an efficacy upon the reproof, because given, 1. With greater solemnity, and, 2. With greater authority. It is an awful thing to receive a reproof from a church, from a minister, a reprover by office; and therefore the more regarded by such as pay any deference to an institution of Christ and his ambassadors.

4. If he neglect to hear the church, if he slight the admonition, and will neither be ashamed of his faults nor amend them, let him be unto thee as a heathen man and a publican; let him be cast out of the communion of the church, secluded from special ordinances, degraded from the dignity of a church-member, let him be put under disgrace, and let the members of the society be warned to withdraw from him, that he may be ashamed of his sin, and they may not be infected by it or chargeable with it. Those who put contempt on the orders and rules of society, and bring reproach upon it, forfeit the honours and privileges of it, and are justly laid aside till they repent and submit, and reconcile themselves to it again. Christ has appointed this method for the vindicating of the church's honour, the preserving of its purity, and the conviction and reformation of those that are scandalous. But observe, he doth not say, let him be to thee as a devil or damned spirit, as one whose case is desperate, but as a heathen, and a publican, as one in a capacity of being restored and received in again. Count him not as an enemy, but admonish him as a brother. The directions given to the church of Corinth concerning the incestuous person, agree with the rules here; he must be taken away from among them, 1 Cor. v. 2. must be delivered to Satan; for if he be cast out of Christ's kingdom, he is looked upon as belonging to Satan's kingdom; they must not keep company with him, ver. 11—13. But when by this he is humbled and reclaimed, he must be welcomed into communion again, and all shall be well.

2. Here is a warrant signed for the ratification of all the church's proceedings according to these rules, ver. 18. What was said before to Peter, is here said to all the disciples, and in them to all the faithful office-bearers in the church to the world's end; while ministers preach the word of Christ faithfully, and in their government of the church strictly adhere to his laws clave non errante, they may be assured he will own them and stand by them, and will ratify what they say and do, so that it shall be taken as said and done by himself. He will own them,

1. In their sentence of suspension; whatsoever ye shall bind on earth, shall be bound in heaven. If the censures of the church duly follow the institution of Christ, his judgments will follow the censures of the church, his spiritual judgments which are the forest of all other, such as the rejected Jews fell under, Rom. ix. 8. a spirit of slumber; for Christ will not suffer his own ordinances to be trampled upon, but will say amen to the righteous sentences which the church passeth on obstinate offenders. How light soever proud scornors may make of the censures of the church, let them know that they are confirmed in the court of heaven, and it is in vain for them to appeal to that court, for judgment is there already given against them. They that are shut out from the congregation of the righteous now, shall not stand in it in the great day, Psalm i. 5. Christ will not own those as his, nor receive them to himself, whom the church has duly delivered to Satan; but if through error or envy the censure of the church be unjust, Christ will graciously find those who are so cast out, John ix. 34, 35.

2. In their sentence of absolution; whatsoever ye shall loose on earth, shall be loosed in heaven. Note, 1. No church censures bind to fast, but that upon the sinners repentance and reformation, they may and must be loosed again. Sufficient is the punishment which has attained its end, and the offender must then be forgiven and comforted, 2 Cor. ii. 6. There is no unpassable gulph fixed but that between hell and heaven. 2. Those that upon their repentance are received by the church into communion again, may take the comfort of their absolution in heaven, if their hearts be upright with God. As suspension is for the terror of the obstinate, so absolution is for the encouragement of the penitent. St. Paul speaks in the person of Christ, when he saith, to whom ye forgive any thing, I forgive also, 2 Cor. ii. 10.

Now it is a great honour which Christ here puts upon the church, that he will condescend not only to take cognizance of their sentences, but to confirm them; and in the following verses we have two things laid down as the ground of this.

1. God's readiness to answer the church's prayers, ver. 19. If two of you shall agree harmoniously, touching any thing that they shall ask, it shall be done for them. Apply this,

1. In general, to all the requests of the faithful praying seed of Jacob, they shall not seek God's face in vain. Many promises we have in scripture of a gracious answer to the prayers of faith, but this here gives a particular encouragement to joint-prayer; the requests which two of you agree in, much more which many agree in. No law of heaven limits the number of petitioners. Note, Christ has been pleased to put an honour upon, and to allow a special efficacy in the joint prayers of the faithful, and the common supplication they make to God. If they join in the same prayer, if they meet by appointment to come together to the throne of grace on some special errand, or, though at a distance, agree in some particular matter of prayer, they shall speed well. Besides the general regard God has to the prayers of the saints, he is particularly pleased with their union and communion in those prayers, See 2 Chron. v. 13. Acts iv. 24.

2. In particular to these requests that are put up to God about binding and loosing; to which this promise seems more especially to refer. Observe, 1. That the power of church-discipline is not here lodged in the hand of a single person, but two are at least supposed to be concerned in it. When the incestuous Corinthian was to be cast out, the church was gathered together, 1 Cor. v. 4. and it was a punishment inflicted of many, 2 Cor. ii. 6. In an affair of such importance, two are better than one, and in the multitude of counsellors there is safety. 2. It is good to see those that have the management of church-discipline agreeing in it. Hearts and unities among them, whose work it is to remove offences, will be the greatest offence of all. 3. Prayer must evermore go along with church-discipline. Pals no sentence, which you cannot in faith ask of God to confirm. The binding and loosing spoken of, chap. xvii. 27. was done by preaching, this by praying. The whole power of gospel-ministers is resolved into the word and prayer, to which they must wholly give themselves. He doth not say, if you shall agree to sentence and decree a thing, it shall be done; as if ministers were judges and lords, but if you agree to ask it of God, from him you shall obtain it. Prayer must go along with all our endeavours for the conversion of sinners; see James v. 16. 4. The unanimous petitions of the church of God for the ratifications of their just censures shall be heard in heaven, and obtain an answer. It shall be done, it shall be bound and loosed in heaven; God will set his seal to the appeals and applications you make to him. If Christ (who here speaks as one having authority) say it shall be done, we may be assured it is done, though we see not the effect in that way that we look for it. God doth especially own and accept us, when we are praying for those that have offended him and us. The Lord turned the captivity of Job, not when he prayed for himself, but when he prayed for his friends who had trespassed against him.

2. The presence of Christ in the assembly of Christians, ver. 20. Every believer hath the presence of Christ with him, but where two or three are gathered in his name, not only for discipline, but for religious worship, or any act of Christian communion. Meeting of Christians for holy purposes are hereby appointed, directed and encouraged.

1. They are hereby appointed; the church of Christ in the world exists most visibly in religious assemblies, which it is the will of Christ should be set up, and kept up for the honour of God, the edification of men, and the preferring of a face of religion upon the world. When God intends special answers to prayer, he calls for a solemn assembly, Joel ii. 15, 16. If there be no liberty and opportunity for large and numerous assemblies, yet then it is the will of God that two or three should gather together to shew their good-will to the great congregation. Note, when we cannot do what we should in religion, we must do as we can, and God will accept us.

2. They are hereby directed to gather together in Christ's name. In the exercise of church-discipline they must come together in the name of Christ, 1 Cor. v. 4. That name gives to what they do an authority on earth, and an acceptableness in heaven. In meeting for worship we must have an eye to Christ; must come together by virtue of his warrant and appointment, in token of our relation to him, professing faith in him, and in communion with all that in every place call upon him. When we come together to worship God in a dependence upon the Spirit and grace of Christ as mediator for assistance, and upon his merit and righteousness as mediator for acceptance, having an actual regard to him as our way to the Father, and our advocate with the Father, then we are met together in his name.

3. They are hereby encouraged with an assurance of the presence of Christ; there am I in the midst of them. By his common presence he is in all places as God, but this is a promise of his special presence: where his saints are, his sanctuary is, and there he will dwell, it is his rest, Psalm cxxxii. 14. it is his walk, Rev. ii. 1. he is in the midst of them, to quicken and strengthen them, to refresh and comfort them, as the sun in the midst of the universe. He is in the midst of them, i. e. in their hearts, it is a spiritual presence, the presence of Christ's Spirit with their spirits that is here intended. There am I, not only I will be there, but I am there, as if he came first, is ready before them, they shall find him there; he repeated this promise at parting, Matt. xxviii. 20. Lo, I am with you always. Note, The presence of Christ in the assemblies of Christians is promised, and may in faith be prayed for and depended on; there am I. This is equivalent to the Shechinah, or special presence of God in the tabernacle and temple of old, Exod. xl. 24. 2 Chron. v. 14.

Though but two or three are met together, Christ is among them; this is an encouragement to the meeting of a few, when it is either, 1. Of choice choice. Besides the secret worship performed by particular persons, and the public service of the whole congregation, there may be occasion sometimes for two or three to come together, either for mutual assistance in conference or joint assistance in prayer, not in contempt of public worship but in concurrence with it, there Christ will be present. Or, 2. By constraint: when there are not more than two or three to come together, or if there be they dare not for fear of the Jews, yet Christ will be in the midst of them; for it is not the multitude, but the faith and sincere devotion of the worshippers, that invites the presence of Christ; and though there be but two or three, the smallest number than can be, yet if Christ make one among them, who is the principal one, their meeting is as honourable and comfortable as if they were two or three thousand.

21. ¶ Then came Peter to him, and said, Lord, how oft shall my brother sin against me, and I forgive him? till seven times? 22. Jesus saith unto him, I say not unto thee, Until seven times; but, Until seventy times seven. 23. ¶ Therefore is the kingdom of heaven likened unto a certain king, which would take account of his servants. 24. And when he had begun to reckon, one was brought unto him, which owed him ten thousand talents. 25. But forasmuch as he had not to pay, his lord commanded him to be sold, and his wife, and children, and all that he had, and payment to be made. 26. The servant therefore fell down, and worshipped him, saying, Lord, have patience with me, and I will pay thee all. 27. Then the Lord of that servant was moved with compassion, and loosed him, and forgave him the debt. 28. But the same servant went out, and found one of his fellow-servants, which owed him an hundred pence: and he laid hands on him, and took him by the throat, saying, Pay me that thou owest. And his fellow-servant fell down at his feet, and besought him, saying, Have patience with me, and I will pay thee all. 30. And he would not: but went and cast him into prison, till he should pay the debt. 31. So when his fellow-servants, saw what was done, they were very sorry, and came and told unto their lord all that was done. 32. Then his lord, after that he had called him, said unto him, O thou wicked servant, I forgave thee all that debt, because thou desiredst me: 33. Shouldest not thou also have had compassion on thy fellow-servant, even as I had pity on thee? 34. And his lord was wroth, and delivered him to the tormentors, till he should pay all that was due unto him. 35. So likewise shall my heavenly Father do also unto you, if ye from your hearts forgive not every one his brother their trespasses.

This part of the discourse concerning offences, is certainly to be understood of personal wrongs, which it is in our power to forgive. Now observe,

1. Peter's question concerning this matter, ver. 21. Lord, how oft shall my brother trespass against me, and I forgive him? will it suffice to do it seven times.

1. He takes it for granted that he must forgive; Christ had before taught his disciples this lesson, Matt. vi. 14, 15. and Peter has not forgot it. He knows he must not only not bear a grudge against his brother, or meditate revenge, but he must be as good a friend as ever, and forget the injury.

2. He thinks it a great matter to forgive till seven times seven; he means not seven times a day, as Christ said, Luke xvii. 4. but seven times in his life; supposing, that if a man had any way abused him seven times, though he were never so desirous to be reconciled, he might then abandon his society, and have no more to do with him. Perhaps Peter had an eye to Prov. xxxiv. 16. A just man fulleth seven times; or to the mention of three transgressions, and four, which God would no more pass by, Amos ii. 1. Note, There is a proneness in our corrupt nature to flint ourselves in that which is good, and to be afraid of doing too much in religion, particularly of forgiving too much, though we have so much forgiven us.

2. Christ's direct answer to Peter's question. I say not unto thee till seven times, he never intended to set up any such bounds, but until seventy times seven, a certain number for an indefinite one, but a great one. Note, It doth not look well for us to keep count of the offences done against us by our brethren: There is something of ill-nature in scoring up the injuries we forgive, as if we would allow ourselves to be revenged when the measure is full. God keeps an account, Deut. xxxii. 34. because he is the judge, and vengeance is his; but we must not, lest we be found stepping into his throne. It is necessary to the preservation of peace, both within and without, to pass by injuries, without reckoning how often; to forgive and forget. God multiplies his pardons, and so should we, Psal. lxxviii. 38—40. It intimates, that we should make it our constant practice to forgive injuries, and should accustom ourselves to it till it becomes habitual.

3. A further discourse of our Saviour's by way of parable, to shew the necessity of forgiving the injuries that are done to us. Parables are of use not only for the explaining of Christian doctrines, but for the pressing of Christian duties; for they make and leave an impression. The parable is a comment upon the fifth petition of the Lord's prayer, Forgive us our trespasses, as we forgive them that trespass against us. Those, and those only may expect to be forgiven of God, who forgive their brethren. The parable represents the kingdom of heaven, i. e. the church, and the administration of the gospel dispensation in it. The church is God's family, it is his court, there he dwells, there he rules; God is our Master, his servants we are, at least in profession and obligation. In general, the parable intimates how much provocation God has from his family on earth, and how untoward his servants are.

There are three things in the parable:

First, The master's wonderful clemency to his servant who was indebted to him, he forgave him ten thousand talents out of pure compassion to him, ver. 23—27. Where observe,

1. Every sin we commit is a debt to God; not like a debt to an equal, contracted by buying or borrowing, but to a superior; like a debt to a prince when a recognisance is forfeited, or a penalty incurred by a breach of the law or breach of the peace; like this debt of a servant to his master, by withholding his service, wasting his lord's goods, breaking his indentures, and incurring the penalty. We are all debtors, we owe satisfaction and are liable to the process of the law.

2. There is an account kept of these debts, and we must shortly be reckoned with for them. This king would take account of his servants. God now reckons with us by our own consciences; conscience is an auditor for God in the soul, to call us to account, and to account with us. One of the first questions that an awakened Christian asks is; How much owest thou unto my Lord? And unless he be bribed, he will tell the truth, and not write fifty for a hundred. There is another day of reckoning coming, when these accounts will be called over, and either passed or disallowed, and nothing but the blood of Christ will balance the account.

3. The debt of sin is a very great debt, and some are more in debt by reason of sin than others. When we began to reckon, one of the first defaulters appeared to owe ten thousand talents. There is no evading the inquiries of divine justice, your sin will be sure to find you out. The debt was ten thousand talents, a vast sum, amounting by computation to one million eight hundred seventy-five thousand pounds sterling; a king's ransom or a kingdom's subsidy, more likely than a servant's debt; see what our sins are; 1. For the heinousness of their nature; they are talents, the greatest denomination that ever was used in the account of money or weight. Every sin is the load of a talent, a talent of lead, this is wickedness, Zech. v. 7, 8. The trusts committed to us as stewards of the grace of God are each of them a talent, Matt. xxv. 15. a talent of gold, and for every one of them buried, much more for every one of them wasted, we are a talent in debt, and this raises the account. 2. For the vastness of their number; they are ten thousand, a myriad, more than the hairs on our head, Psal. xl. 12. who can understand the number of his errors, or tell how oft he offends? Psal. xix. 12.

4. The debt of sin is so great, that we are not able to pay it; he had not to pay: Sinners are insolvent debtors, the scripture which concludeth all under sin, is a statute of bankrupt against us all. Silver and gold would not pay our debt, Psal. xlix. 6, 7. Sacrifice and offering would not do it, our good works are but God's work in us, and cannot make satisfaction; we are without strength, and cannot help ourselves.

5. If God should deal with us in strict justice, we should be condemned as insolvent debtors, and God might exact the debt by glorifying himself in our utter ruin. Justice demands satisfaction, currat lex, "let the sentence of the law be executed." The servant contracted this debt by his wastefulness and wilfulness, and therefore might justly be left to lie by it. His lord commanded him to be sold, as a bondslave into the galleys, sold to grind in the prison house; his wife and children to be sold, and all that he had, and payment to be made. See here what every sin deserves; this the wages of sin. 1. To be sold: Those that sell themselves to work wickedness, must be sold to make satisfaction: Captives to sin are captives to wrath. He that is sold for a bondslave, is deprived of all his comforts, and has nothing left him but his life, that he may be sensible of his miseries; which is the case of damned sinners. 2. Thus he would have payment to be made, i. e. something done towards it, though it is impossible that the sale of one so worthless should amount to the payment of so great a debt: By the damnation of sinners divine justice will be to eternity in the satisfying, but never satisfied.

6. Convinced sinners cannot but humble themselves before God and pray for mercy. The servant, under this charge, and this doom, fell down at the feet of his royal master, and worshipped him; or as some copies read it, He besought him; his address was very submissive and very importunate; Have patience with me, and I will pay thee all, ver. 26. The servant knew before that he was so much in debt, and yet was under no concern about it, till he was called to an account. Sinners are commonly careless about the pardon of their sins, till they come under the arrears of some awakening word, some startling providence, or an approaching death, and then, Wherewith shall I come before the Lord? Micah vi. 6. How easily, how quickly can God bring the proudest sinner to his feet! Ahab to his sackcloth, Manasseh to his prayers, Pharaoh to his confessions, Judas to his restitution, Simon Magus to his supplication, Belshazzar and Felix to their tremblings. The stoutest hearts will truckle, when God sets their sins in order before it. This servant doth not deny the debt, nor seek evasions, or go about to abscond.

But, (1.) He begs day: Have patience with me. Patience and forbearance is a great favour, but is folly to think that that alone will save us: reprieves are not pardons: Many are born with that are not thereby brought to repentance, Rom. ii. 4. and then their being born with death their no kindness.

(2.) He promiseth payment: I will pay thee all. Note, It is the folly of many that are under convictions of sin, to imagine that they can make God satisfaction for the wrong they have done him; as those that, like a compounding bankrupt, would discharge the debt, by giving their first-born for their transgression, Micah vi. 7. that go about to establish their own righteousness, Rom. x. 3. He that had nothing to pay, ver. 25. yet fancied he could pay all. See how close pride sticks, even to awakened sinners; they are convinced but not humbled.

7. The God of infinite mercy is very ready, out of pure compassion, to forgive the sins of those that humble themselves before him, ver. 27. The Lord of that servant, when he might justly have ruined him, mercifully released him, and since he could not be satisfied by the payment of the debt, he would be glorified by the pardon of it. The servant's prayer was, Have patience with me; the master's grant is, a discharge in full. Note, 1. The pardon of sin is owing to the mercy of God, to his tender mercy, Luke i. 77, 78. He was moved with compassion. God's reasons of mercy are fetched from within himself; he has mercy because he will have mercy. God looked with pity on mankind in general, because miserable, and sent his Son to be a surety for them; he looks with pity on particular penitents, because sensible of their misery, their hearts broken and contrite, and accepts them in the Beloved. 2. There is forgiveness with God for the greatest sins, if they be repented of. Though the debt was vastly great, he forgave it all, ver. 32. Though our sins be very numerous and very heinous, yet upon gospel-terms they may be pardoned. 3. The forgiving of the debt is the losing of the debtor: He loosed him. The obligation is cancelled, the judgment vacated; we never walk at liberty till our sins are forgiven. But observe, Though he discharged him from the penalty as a debtor, he did not slacken but strengthen our obligations to obedience; and we must reckon it a favour that God is pleased to continue such wasteful servants as we have been in such a gainful service as his is, and should therefore deliver us, that we might serve him, Luke i. 74. I am thy servant, for thou hast loosed my bonds.

Secondly, The servants unreasonable severity towards his fellow-servant, notwithstanding his Lord's clemency towards him, ver. 28, 29, 30. This represents the sin of those who, though they are not unjust in demanding that which which is not their own, yet are rigorous and unmerciful in demanding that which is their own, to the utmost of right, which sometimes proves a real wrong. Summum jus summa injuria. To exact satisfaction for debts of injury, which tend neither to reparation nor to the public good, but purely for revenge, though the law may allow it, in terrorem, and for the hardness of men's hearts, yet favours not of a Christian spirit. To sue for money-debts, when the debtor cannot possibly pay them, and so let him rot in prison, argues a greater love of money, and a less love of our neighbour than we ought to have, Neh. v. 7.

See here, 1. How small the debt was, how very small compared with the ten thousand talents which his Lord forgave him: He owed him a hundred pence, about three pounds and half a crown of our money. Note, Offence done to men are nothing to those which are committed against God. Dishonours done to a man like ourselves are but as pence, notes, grats; but dishonours done to God are as talents, beams, camels. Not that therefore we may make light of wronging our neighbour, for that is also a sin against God; but therefore we should make light of our neighbour's wronging us, and not aggravate it, or study revenge. David was unconcerned at the indignities done to him, I, as a deaf man, heard not; but laid much to heart the sins committed against God, for their rivens of tears ran down his eyes.

2. How severe the demand was; He laid hands on him, and took him by the throat. Proud and angry men think, if the matter of their demand be just that will bear them out, though the manner of it be never so cruel and unmerciful; but it will not hold. What needed all this violence? The debt might have been demanded without taking the debtor by the throat; without sending for a writ, or setting the bailiff upon him. How lordly is this man's carriage, and yet how base and servile is his spirit! If he had been himself going to prison for his debt to his Lord, his occasions would have been so pressing, that he might have had some pretence for going to this extremity in requiring his own; but many times pride and malice prevail more to make men severe, than the most urgent necessity would do.

3. How submissive the debtor was. His fellow-servant, though his equal, yet knowing how much he lay at his mercy, fell down at his feet, and humbled himself to him for this trifling debt, as much as he did to his lord for that great debt, for the borrower is servant to the lender, Prov. xxii. 7. Note, Those that cannot pay their debts, yet ought to be very respectful to their creditors, and not only give them good words, but do them all the good offices they possibly can. They must not be angry at those who claim their own, nor speak ill of them for it, no, not though they do it in a rigorous manner, but in that case leave it to God to plead their cause. The poor man's request is, Have patience with me; he honestly confesseth the debt, and puts not his creditor to the charge of proving it, only begs time. Note, Forbearance, though it be no acquittance, is sometimes a piece of needful and laudible charity: As we must not be hard, so we must not be hasty in our demands, but think how long God bears with us.

How implacable and furious the creditor was, ver. 30. He would not have patience with him, would not hearken to his fair promise, but without mercy cast him into prison. How insolently did he trample upon one as good as himself that submitted to him! How cruelly did he use one that had done him no harm, and though it would be no advantage to himself! In this, as in a glass, unmerciful creditors may see their own faces, who take pleasure in nothing more than to swallow up and destroy, 2 Sam. xx. 19. and glory in having their poor debtor's bones.

5. How much concerned the rest of the servants were, they were very sorry, ver. 31. Sorry for the creditor's cruelty, and for the debtor's calamity. Note, The sins and sufferings of our fellow-servants should be matter of grief and trouble to us: It is sad that any of our brethren should either make themselves beasts of prey, by cruelty and barbarity; or be made beasts of slavery, by the inhuman usage of those who have power over them: To see a fellow-servant, either raging like a bear, or trampled on like a worm, cannot but occasion great regret to all that have any jealousy for the honour, either of their nature or of their religion. See with what eye Solomon looked, both upon, the tears of the oppressed, and the power of the oppressors, Ecc. iv. 1.

6. How the notice of it was brought to the master, they came and told their lord. They durst not reprove their fellow-servant for it, he was so unreasonable and outrageous. Let a bear robbed of her whelps meet a man rather than such a fool in his folly; but they went to their lord, and besought him to appear for the oppressed against the oppressor. Note, That which gives us occasion for sorrow, should give us occasion for prayer. Let our complaints, both of the wickedness of the wicked, and of the afflictions of the afflicted, be brought to God and left with him.

Thirdly, The master's just resentment of the cruelty his servant was guilty of. If the servant took it so heinously, much more would the master, whose compassions are infinitely ours. Now observe here,

1. How he reproveth his servant's cruelty, ver. 32, 33. O thou wicked servant. Note, Unmercifulness is wickedness, it is great wickedness. (1.) He upbraids him with the mercy he had found with his master. I forgave thee all that debt. Those that will use God's favours shall never be upbraided with them, but they that abuse them may expect it, Matt. ix. 20. Consider, it was all that debt, that great debt. Note, The greatness of sin magnifies the riches of pardoning mercy: We should think how much has been forgiven us, Luke vii. 47. (2.) He thence shews him the obligation he was under to be merciful to his fellow-servant: Shouldest not thou also have had compassion on thy fellow-servant, even as I had pity on thee? Note, It is justly expected, that such as have received mercy should shew mercy: Dat ille veniam facile, cui venia est apud. Senec. Agamemnon, He shews him,

1. That he should have been more compassionate to the distress of his fellow-servant, because he had himself experienced the same distress. What we have had the feeling of ourselves, we can the better have the fellow-feeling of with our brethren. The Israelites know the heart of a stranger, for they were strangers; and this servant should have better known the heart of an arrested debtor, than to have been thus hard upon such a one.

2. That he should have been more comfortable to the example of his master's tenderness, having himself experienced it so much to his advantage. Note, The comfortable sense of pardoning mercy, tends much to the disposing of our hearts to forgive our brethren. It was in the close of the day of atonement, that the jubilee trumpet sounded a release of debts, Lev. xxv. 9. for we must have compassion on our brethren, as God has on us.

2. How he revoked his pardon and cancelled the acquittance, so that the judgment against him revived, ver. 34. He delivered him to the tormentors till he should pay all that was due unto him. Though the wickedness was very great, his lord laid upon him no other punishment but the payment of his own debt. Note, Those that will not come up to the terms of the gospel, need be no more miserable than to be left open to the law, and to let that have its course against them. See how the punishment answers the sin; he that would not forgive, shall not be forgiven: He delivered him to the tormentors; the utmost he could do to his fellow-servant was but to cast him into prison, but he was himself delivered to the tormentors. Note, The power of God's wrath to ruin us, goes far beyond the utmost extent of any creature's strength and wrath: The reproaches and terrors of his own conscience would be his tormentors, for that is a worm that dies not; devils, the executioners of God's wrath, that are sinners tempters now, will be their tormentors for ever. He was sent to Bridewell till he should pay all. Note, Our debts to God are never compounded, either all is forgiven or all is exacted; glorified saints in heaven are pardoned all, through Christ's complete satisfaction; damned sinners in hell are paying all, that is, are punished for all. The offence done to God by sin, is a point of honour, which cannot be compounded for without such a diminution as the case will by no means admit, and therefore, some way or other, by the sinner, or by its surety, it must be satisfied.

Lastly, Here is the reddition of the whole parable, ver. 35. So likewise shall my heavenly Father do unto you. The title Christ here gives to God was made use of, ver. 19. in a comfortable promise, It shall be done for them of my Father which is in heaven; here it is made use of in a terrible threatening. If God's government be fatherly, it follows thence that it is righteous, but it doth not therefore follow that it is not rigorous, or that under his government we must not be kept in awe by the fear of the divine wrath. When we pray to God as our Father in heaven, we are taught to ask for the forgiveness of sins, as we forgive our debtors. Observe here,

1. The duty of forgiving, we must from our hearts forgive. Note, We do not forgive our offending brother aright, nor acceptably, if we do not forgive from the heart; for that is it that God looks at. No malice must be harboured there, or ill-will to any person, one or another; no projects of revenge must be hatched there, or desires of it, as there are in many who outwardly appear peaceable and reconciled. Yet this is not enough, we must from the heart desire and endeavour the welfare, even of those that have offended us.

2. The danger of not forgiving; so shall your heavenly Father do. 1. This is not intended to teach us that God reverseth his pardons to any, but that he denies them to those that are unqualified for them, according to the tenor of the gospel; though having seemed to be humbled, like Ahab, they thought themselves, and others thought them in a pardoned state, and they made bold with the comfort of it. Intimations enough we have in scripture, of the forfeiture of pardons, for caution to the presumptuous; and yet security enough of the continuance of them, for comfort to those that are sincere but timorous; that the one may fear and the other may hope. Those that do not forgive their brother's trespasses, did never truly repent of their own, nor ever truly believe the gospel; and therefore that which is taken away is only what they seemed to have, Luke viii. 18. 2. This is intended to teach us, that they shall have judgment without mercy, that have shewed no mercy, James ii. 13. It is indispensably necessary to pardon and peace, that we not only do justly, but love mercy. It is an essential part of that religion which is pure and undefiled before God and the Father, of that wisdom from above which is gentle and easy to be intreated. Look how they will answer it another day who, though they bear the Christian name, persist in the most rigorous and unmerciful treatment of their brethren, as if the strictest laws of Christ might be dispensed with for the gratifying of their unbridled passions; and so they curse themselves every time they say the Lord's prayer.

CHAP. XIX.

In this chapter we have, 1. Christ changing his quarters, leaving Galilee, and coming into the coasts of Judea, ver. 1, 2. His dispute with the Pharisees about divorce, and his discourse with the disciples upon occasion of it, ver. 3—12. 3. The kind entertainment he gave to some little children which were brought to him, ver. 13, 14, 15. 4. An account of what passed between Christ and a hopeful young gentleman that applied himself to him, ver. 16—22. 5. His discourse with his disciples upon that occasion, concerning the difficulty of the salvation of those that have much in the world, and the certain recompense of those that leave all for Christ, ver. 23—30.

1. AND it came to pass, that when Jesus had finished these sayings, he departed from Galilee, and came into the coasts of Judea beyond Jordan: 2. And great multitudes followed him; and he healed them there.

We have here an account of Christ's remove. Observe,

1. He left Galilee. There he had been brought up, and had spent the greatest part of his life in that remote despicable part of the country; it was only upon occasion of the feasts that he came up to Jerusalem, and manifested himself there; and, we may suppose, that having no constant residence there when he did come, his preaching and miracles were the more observable and acceptable: But it was an instance of his humiliation, and in this, as in other things he appeared mean, that he would go under the character of a Galilean, a north-countryman, the least polite and refined part of the nation. Most of Christ's sermons hitherto had been preached, and most of his miracles wrought in Galilee; but now having finished these sayings, he departed from Galilee, and it was his final farewell; for (unless his passing through the midst of Samaria and Galilee, Luke xvii. 11. was after this, which yet was but a visit in transitu) he never came to Galilee again till after his resurrection, which makes his transition very remarkable; Christ did not take his leave of Galilee till he had done his work there, and then he departed thence. Note, As Christ's faithful ministers are not taken out of the world, so they are not removed from any place, till they have finished their testimony in that place, Rev. xi. 7. This is very comfortable to those that follow not their own humours, but God's providence, in their removes, that their sayings shall be finished before they depart: And who would desire to continue any where longer than he has work to do for God there?

2. He came into the coasts of Judea, beyond Jordan, that they might have their day of visitation as well as Galilee, for they also belonged to the lost sheep of the house of Israel. But still Christ kept to those parts of Canaan that lay towards other nations; Galilee is called Galilee of the Gentiles; and the Syrians dwelt beyond Jordan: Thus Christ intimated, that while he kept within the confines of the Jewish nation, he had his eye upon the Gentiles; and his gospel was aiming and coming towards them.

3. Great multitudes followed him. Where Shiloh is, there will the gathering of the people be. The redeemed of the Lord are such as follow the lamb whithersoever he goes, Rev. xiv. 4. When Christ departs it is best for us to follow him. It was a piece of respect to Christ, and yet it was a continual trouble to be thus crowded after wherever he went; but he sought not his own ease, nor, considering how mean and contemptible this mob was (as some would call them) his own honour much, in the eye of the world: he went about doing good; for so it follows, he healed them there. This shews what they followed him for, to have their sick healed; and they found him as able and ready to help here, as he had been in Galilee; for where-ever this sin of righteousness arose, it was with healing under his wings. He healed them there, because he would not have them follow him to Jerusalem lest it should give offence. He shall not strive, nor cry.

3. ¶ The Pharisees also came unto him, tempting him, and saying unto him, Is it lawful for a man to put away his wife for every cause? 4. And he answered and said unto them, Have ye not read, that he which made them at the beginning, made them male and female? 5. And said, For this cause shall a man leave father and mother, and shall cleave to his wife; and they twain shall be one flesh. 6. Wherefore they are no more twain, but one flesh. What therefore God hath joined together, let no man put asunder. 7. They say unto him, Why did Moses then command to give a writing of divorcement, and to put her away? 8. He saith unto them, Moses because of the hardness of your hearts, suffered you to put away your wives; but from the beginning it was not so. 9. And I say unto you, Whosoever shall put away his wife, except it be for fornication, and shall marry another, committeth adultery: and whoso marrieth her which is put away, doth commit adultery. 10. ¶ His disciples say unto him, If the case of a man be so with his wife, it is not good to marry. 11. But he said unto them, All men cannot receive this saying, save they to whom it is given. 12. For there are some eunuchs, which were so born from their mother's womb: and there are some eunuchs, which were made eunuchs of men: and there be eunuchs which have made themselves eunuchs for the kingdom of heaven's sake. He that is able to receive it, let him receive it.

We have here the law of Christ in the case of divorce, occasioned, as some other declarations of his will, by a dispute with the Pharisees: So patiently did he endure the contradiction of sinners, that he turned it into instructions to his own disciples.

First, The case proposed by the Pharisees, ver. 13. Is it lawful for a man to put away his wife? This they asked, tempting him, not desiring to be taught by him. Some time ago he had in Galilee declared his mind in this matter, against that which was the common practice, Matt. v. 31, 32. and if he would, in like manner, declare himself now against divorce, they would make use of it for the prejudicing and incensing of the people of this country against him, who would look with a jealous eye upon one that attempted to cut them short in a liberty they were very fond of: They hoped he would loose himself in the affections of the people as much by this as by any of his precepts. Or the temptation might be designed thus: If he should say that divorces were not lawful, they would reflect upon him as an enemy to the law of Moses, which allowed them; if he should say they were, they would represent his doctrine as not having that perfection in it which was expected in the doctrine of the Messiah; since, though divorces were looked upon by the stricter sort of people as not of good report. Some think, though the law of Moses did permit divorce, yet in assigning the just causes for it there was a controversy between the Pharisees among themselves, and they desired to know what Christ said to it. Matrimonial cases have been numerous, and sometimes intricate and perplexed; made so, not by the law of God, but by the lusts and follies of men; and many times in these cases people resolve, before they ask, what they will do.

Their question is, Whether a man may put away his wife for every cause? That it might be done for some cause, even for that of fornication, was granted; but may it be done, as now it commonly was done, by the looser sort of people, for every cause; for any cause that a man shall think fit to assign, though never so frivolous; upon every dislike or displeasure? The toleration, in this case permitted it, in case she found no favour in his eyes, because he hath found some uncleanness in her, Deut. xxiv. 1. This they interpreted so largely as to make any disgust, though causeless, the ground of a divorce.

Secondly, Christ's answer to this question; though it was proposed to tempt him, yet being a case of conscience, and a weighty one, he gave a full answer to it, not a direct one, but an effectual one; laying down such principles as undeniably prove, that such arbitrary divorces as were then in use, which made the matrimonial bond so very precarious, were by no means lawful. Christ himself would not give the rule without a reason, nor lay down his judgment without scripture-proof to support it. Now his argument is this: If husband and wife are by the will and appointment of God joined together in the strictest and closest union, then they are not to be lightly and upon every occasion separated; if the knot be sacred, it cannot be easily untied. Now to prove that there is such a union between man and wife, he urgeth three things:

1. The creation of Adam and Eve, concerning which he appeals to their own knowledge of the scriptures: Have ye not read? It is some advantage in arguing, to deal with those that own and have read the scriptures: You have read (but have not considered) that he which made them at the beginning, made them male and female, Gen. i. 27.—v. 2. Note, It will be of great use to us often to think of our creation, how and to whom, what and for what, we were created. He made them male and female, one female for one male, so that Adam could not divorce his wife and take another, for there was no other to take. It likewise intimated an inseparable union between them; Eve was a rib out of Adam's side, so that he could not put her away, but he must put away a piece of himself, and contradict the manifest indications of her creation. Christ hints briefly at this, but in appealing to what they had read, he refers them to the original record, where it is observable, that though the rest of the living creatures were made male and female, yet it is not said so concerning any of them, but only concerning mankind; because between man and woman the conjunction is rational, and intended for nobler purposes than merely the pleasing of sense and the preserving of a seed; and it is therefore more close and firm than that between male and female among the brutes, who were not capable of being such help-mates for one another as Adam and Eve were: Hence the manner of expression is somewhat singular, Gen. i. 27. In the image of God created he him, male and female created he them; him and them are used promiscuously; being one by creation before they were two, when they became one again by marriage-covenant, that oneness could not but be closer and indissoluble.

2. The fundamental law of marriage, which is, that a man shall leave father and mother, and shall cleave to his wife, ver. 5. The relation between husband and wife is nearer than that between parents and children; now if the filial relation may not easily be violated, much less may the marriage union be broken. May a child desert his parents, or may a parent abandon his children, for any cause? for every cause? No, by no means. Much less may a husband put away his wife, betwixt whom, though not by nature yet by divine appointment, the relation is nearer, and the bond of union stronger, than between parents and children; for that is in a great measure superseded by marriage, when a man must leave his parents to cleave to his wife. See here the power of a divine institution, that the result of it is a union stronger than that which results from the highest obligations of nature.

3. The nature of the marriage-contract; it is a union of persons; they twain shall be one flesh, so that ver. 6. they are no more twain, but one flesh. A man's children are pieces of himself, but his wife is himself. As the conjugal union is closer than that between parents and children, so it is in a manner equivalent to that between one member and another in the natural body. As this is a reason why husbands should love their wives, so it is a reason why they should not put away their wives, for no man ever yet hated his own flesh, or cut it off, but nourisheth and cherisheth it, and doth all he can to preserve it. They two shall be one, therefore there must be but one wife, for God made but one Eve for one Adam, Mal. ii. 15.

From hence he infers, What God hath joined together, let not man put asunder. Note, 1. Husband and wife are of God's joining together, οὐκ ἐμὴν, "he hath yoked them together," so the word is, and it is very significant; God himself instituted the relation between husband and wife in the state of innocency: Marriage and the sabbath are the most ancient of divine ordinances: Though marriage be not peculiar to the church but common to the world, yet being stamped with a divine institution, and here ratified by our Lord Jesus, it ought to be managed after a godly sort, and sanctified by the word of God, and prayer. A conscientious regard to God in this ordinance, would have a good influence upon the duty, and consequently upon the comfort of the relation. 2. Husband and wife being joined together by the ordinance of God, are not to be put asunder by any ordinance of man: Let not man put them asunder; nor the husband himself, or any one for him; nor the magistrate, God never gave him authority to do it: The God of Israel hath said, that he hateth putting away, Mal. ii. 16. It is a general rule, that man must not go about to put asunder what God hath joined together.

Thirdly, an objection started by the Pharisees against this, and it has colour enough, ver. 7. Why did Moses command to give a writing of divorcement, in case a man did put away his wife? He urged scripture-reason against divorce, they alledge scripture authority for it. Note, The seeming contradictions that are in the word of God, are great stumbling-blocks to men of corrupt minds. It is true, Moses was faithful to him that appointed him, and commanded nothing but what he received from the Lord but as to the thing itself, what they call a command, was only an allowance, (Deut. xxiv. 1.) and designed rather to restrain the exorbitances of it, than to give countenance to the thing itself: And the Jewish Doctors themselves observe such limitations in that law, as that it could not be done without great deliberation: A particular reason must be assigned, the bill of divorce must be written, and, as a judicial act, must have all the solemnities of a deed, executed and enrolled: It must be given into the hands of the wife herself, and (which would oblige men, if they had any consideration in them, to consider) they were expressly forbidden ever to come together again.

Fourthly, Christ's answer to this objection, in which,

1. He rectifies their mistake concerning the law of Moses; they called it a command, Christ calls it but a permission, a toleration; carnal hearts will take an ell if but an inch be given them. The law of Moses in this case was a political law, which God gave, as the governor of that people; and it was for reasons of state that divorces were tolerated; The strictness of the marriage union being the result not of a natural, but a positive law, the wisdom of God dispensed with divorces in some cases, without any impeachment to his holiness.

But Christ tells them there was a reason for this toleration, not at all for their credit, it was because of the hardness of your hearts, that you were permitted to put away your wives; Moses complained of the people of Israel in his time that their hearts were hardened, Deut. ix. 6—xxxi. 24. hardened against God; this is here meant of their being hardened against their relations; they were generally violent and outrageous, which way soever they took, both in their appetites and in their passions; and therefore if they had not been allowed to put away their wives, when they had conceived a dislike of them, they would have used them cruelly, would have beaten and abused them, and perhaps have murdered them. Note, There is not a greater piece of hardheartedness in the world, than for a man to be harsh and severe with his own wife. The Jews, it seems, were infamous for this, and therefore were allowed to put them away; better divorce them than do worse; than that the altar of the Lord should be covered with tears, Mal. ii. 13. A little compliance to humour a madman or a man in a phrenzy, may prevent a greater mischief: Positive laws may be dispensed with for the preservation of the law of nature, for God will have mercy and not sacrifice; but then those are hard-hearted wretches that have made it necessary; and none can wish to have the liberty of divorce, but they must own the hardness of their hearts.

Observe, He saith it is for the hardness of your hearts, not only theirs who lived then, but all their seed. Note, God not only sees, but foresees, the hardness of men's hearts; he suited both the ordinances and providences of the Old Testament to the temper of that people both in terror. Further observe. The law of Moses considered the hardness of men's hearts, but the gospel of Christ cures it; and his grace take away the heart of stone, and gives a heart of flesh; By the law was the knowledge of sin, but by the gospel was the conquest of it.

2. He reduced them to the original institution; but from the beginning it was not so. Note, Corruptions that are crept into any ordinances of God, must be purged out by having recourse to the primitive institution: if the copy be vicious, it must be examined and corrected by the original. Thus when St. Paul would redress the grievances of the church of Corinth about the Lord's supper, he appealed to the appointment, 1 Cor. xi. 23. So and so I received it from the Lord. Truth was from the beginning, we must therefore inquire for the good old way, Jer. vi. 16. and must reform, not by later patterns, but by ancient rules.

3. He settles the point by an express law; I say unto you, ver. 9. and it agrees with what he said before, chap. v. 32. there it was said in preaching, here in dispute, but the same, for Christ is constant to himself. Now, in both these places,

(1.) He allows divorce in case of adultery; the reason of the law against divorce being this, They two shall be one flesh; if the wife play the harlot, and make herself one flesh with an adulterer, the reason of the law ceaseth, and and so doth the law. By the law of Moses adultery was punished with death, Deut. xxii. 22. Now our Saviour mitigates the rigour of that, and appoints divorce to be the penalty. Dr. Whitby understands this, not of adultery, but (because our Saviour useth the word porneia "fornication") of unchastities committed before marriage but discovered afterwards; because if it were committed after it was a capital crime, and there needed no divorce.

(2.) He disallows it in all other cases; Whosoever puts away his wife, except for fornication, and marries another, commits adultery. This is a direct answer to their query, that it is not lawful. In this, as in other things, gospel-times are times of reformation. Heb. ix. 10. The law of Christ tends to reinstate man in his primitive integrity; the law of love, conjugal love, is no new commandment, but was from the beginning. If we consider what mischief to families and states, what confusion and disorders would follow upon arbitrary divorces, we shall see how much this law of Christ is for our own benefit, and what a friend Christianity is to our secular interests.

The law of Moses allowing divorce for the hardness of mens hearts, and the law of Christ forbidding it, intimates, that Christians being under a dispensation of love and liberty, tenderness of heart may justly be expected among them, that they will not be hard-hearted, like Jews, for God has called us to peace. There will be no occasion for divorces, if we forbear one another, and forgive one another, in love, as those that are and hope to be forgiven, and have found God not forward to put us away, Isa. i. 1. No need of divorces, if husbands love their wives, and wives be obedient to their husbands, and they live together as heirs of the grace of life; and these are the laws of Christ, such as we find not in all the law of Moses.

Fifthly, Here is a suggestion of the disciples, against this law of Christ, ver. 10. If the case of a man be so with his wife, it is better not to marry. It seems, the disciples themselves were loth to give up the liberty of divorce, thinking it a good expedient for preserving comfort in the married state, and therefore, like fallen children, if they may not have what they would have, they will throw away what they have: If they may not be allowed to put away their wives when they please, they will have no wives at all; though from the beginning, when no divorce was allowed, God said, It is not good for man to be alone, and blessed them, pronounced them blessed, who were thus strictly joined together; yet, unless they may have a liberty of divorce, they think it is good for a man not to marry. Note, 1. Corrupt nature is impatient of restraint, and would fain break Christ's bonds in sunder, and have a liberty for its own lusts. 2. It is a foolish peevish thing for men to abandon the comforts of this life, because of the crosses that are commonly woven in with them: As if we must needs go out of the world, because we have not every thing to our mind in the world; or must enter into no useful calling or condition, because it is made our duty to abide in it; no, whatever our condition is, we must bring our minds to it, be thankful for its comforts, submissive to its crosses, and, as God has done, set the one over against the other, and make the best of that which is, Eccles. vii. 14. If the yoke of marriage may not be thrown off at pleasure, it doth not follow that therefore we must not come under it; but therefore when we do come under it, must resolve to comport with it, by love and meekness and patience, which will make divorce the most unnecessary, undesirable thing that can be.

Sixthly, Christ's answer to this suggestion, ver. 11, 12, in which,

1. He allows it good for some not to marry: He that is able to receive it, let him receive it. Christ allowed what the disciples said It is good not to marry, not as an objection against the prohibition of divorce, as they intended it, but as giving them a rule (perhaps no less displeasing to them) that they, who have the gift of continency, and are not under any necessity of marrying, do best if they continue single, 1 Cor. vii. 1. for they that are unmarried have opportunity, if they have but a heart, to care more for the things of the Lord, how they may please the Lord, 1 Cor. vii. 32-34. being less incumbered with the cares of this life, and having a greater vacancy of thought and time to mind better things. The increase of grace is better than the increase of the family, and fellowship with the Father and with his Son Jesus Christ, is to be preferred before any other fellowship.

2. He disallows it as utterly mischievous, to forbid marriage, because, all men cannot receive this saying; indeed few can, and therefore the crosses of the married state must be born, rather than that men should run themselves into temptation to avoid them; better marry, than burn.

Christ here speaks of a two-fold unaptness to marriage:

(1.) That which is a calamity by the providence of God, such are they under that are born eunuchs; or made so by men, that, being incapable of answering one great end of marriage, ought not to marry. But to that calamity let them oppose the opportunity that there is in the single state of serving God better than to balance it.

(2.) That which is a virtue by the grace of God, such is theirs who have made themselves eunuchs for the kingdom of heaven's sake. This is not meant of an unaptness for marriage in body (which some through mistake of this scripture, have foolishly and wickedly brought upon themselves) but in mind. Those have thus made themselves eunuchs, who have attained a holy indifference to all the delights of the married state, have a fixed resolution, in the strength of God's grace, wholly to abstain from them; and by fasting, and other instances of mortification, have subdued all desires towards them: These are they that can receive this saying; and yet these are not to bind themselves by a vow that they will never marry; only that, in the mind they are now in, they purpose not to marry.

Now, 1. This affection to the single state must be given of God, for none can receive it save they to whom it is given. Note, Continence is a special gift of God to some, and not to others; and when a man in the single state, finds, by experience, that he has this gift, he may determine with himself, and (as the apostle speaks, 1 Cor. vii. 37) stand steadfast in his heart, having no necessity, but having power over his own will; that he will keep himself so. But men, in this case, must take heed lest they boast of a false gift, Prov. xxv. 14.

2. The single state must be chosen for the kingdom of heaven's sake; those who resolve never to marry, only that they may save charges, or may gratify a morose selfish humour, or have a greater liberty to serve other lusts and pleasures, in them it is so far from being a virtue, that it is an ill-natured vice; but when it is for religion's sake, not as in itself a meritorious act (which the papists make it) but only as a means to keep our minds more intire for and more intent upon the services of religion, and, having no families to provide for, we may do the more in works of charity, then it is approved and accepted of God. Note, That condition is best for us, and to be chosen and stuck to accordingly, which is best for our souls, and tends most to the preparing of us for, and the preserving of us to, the kingdom of heaven.

13. ¶ Then were there brought unto him little children, that he should put his hands on them, and pray: and the disciples rebuked them. 14. But Jesus said, Suffer little children, and forbid them not to come unto me: for of such is the kingdom of heaven. 15. And he laid his hands on them, and departed thence.

We have here the welcome which Christ gave to some little children that were brought to him. Observe,

First, the faith of those that brought them. How many they were that were brought, we are not told, but they were so little as to be taken up in arms, a year old it may be or two at most. The account here given of it is, that there were brought unto him little children; that he should put his hands on them, and pray, ver. 13. Probably, they were their parents, guardians or nurses, that brought them; and herein, 1. They testified their respect to Christ, and the value they had for his favour and blessing. Note: Those who glorify Christ by coming to him themselves, should further glorify him by bringing all they have, or have influence upon, to him likewise: Thus give him the honour of his unsearchable riches of grace, his overflowing, never failing fulness. We cannot better honour Christ, than by making use of him. 2. They did a kindness to their children, not doubting but they would fare the better in this world and the other, for the blessing and prayers of the Lord Jesus, whom they looked upon at least as an extraordinary person, as a prophet, if not as a priest, and king, and the blessings of such were valued and desired. Others brought their children to Christ to be healed when they were sick; but these children were under no present malady, only they desired a blessing for them. Note, It is a good thing when we come to Christ ourselves, and bring our children to him, before we are driven to him (as we say) by wo-need; not only to visit him when we are in trouble, but to address ourselves to him in a sense of our general dependence on him, and of the benefit we expect by him, this is pleasing to him.

They desired that he would put his hands on them and pray: Imposition of hands was a ceremony used, especially in paternal blessing; Jacob used it when he blessed and adopted the sons of Joseph, Gen. xlviii. 14. It intimates something of love and familiarity mixed with power and authority, and speaks an efficacy in the blessing. Whom Christ prays for in heaven, he puts his hand upon by his Spirit. Note, 1. Little children may be brought to Christ as needing, and being capable of receiving blessings from him, and having an interest in his intercession. 2. Therefore they should be brought to him. We cannot do better for our children than to commit them to the Lord Jesus to be wrought upon and prayed for by him. We can but beg a blessing for them, it is Christ only that can command the blessing.

Secondly, The fault of the disciples in rebuking them. They discountenanced the address as vain and frivolous, and reproved them that made it as unpertinent and troublesome; either they thought it below their Master to take notice of little children, except any thing in particular ailed them. Or they thought he had toil enough with his other work, and would not have him diverted from it; or they thought if such an address as this were encouraged, all the country would bring their children to him, and they should never see an end of it. Note, It is well for us that Christ has more love and tenderness in him than the best of his disciples have. And let us learn of him not to discountenance any willing well meaning souls in their enquiries after Christ, though they are but weak. If he do not break the bruised reed, we should not. Those that seek unto Christ, must not think it strange if they meet with opposition and rebuke, even from good men, who think they know the mind of Christ better than they do.

Thirdly, The favour of our Lord Jesus. See how he carried it here.

1. He rebuked the disciples, ver. 14. Suffer little children and forbid them not; and he rectifies the mistake they went upon, of such is the kingdom of heaven. Note, 1. The children of believing parents belong to the kingdom of heaven, and are members of the visible church. Of such, not only of such indispotion and affection, that might have served for a reason why doves or lambs should be brought to him, but of such, in age, is the kingdom of heaven; to them pertain the privileges of visible church-membership, as among the Jews of old. The promise is to you and your children. I will be a God to thee and thy seed. 2. That for this reason they are welcome to Christ, who is ready to entertain those, that, when they cannot come themselves, are brought to him. And this, 1. In respect to the little children themselves, whom he has upon all occasions expressed a concern for; and who having participated of the malignant influences of the first Adam's sin, must needs share in the riches of the second Adam's grace, else what would come of the apostle's parallel, 1 Cor. xv. 22. Rom. v. 14, 15, &c. Those that are given to Christ, as part of his purchase, he will in no wise cast out. 2. With an eye to the faith of the parents that brought them; and presented them as living sacrifices; parents are trustees of their children's wills, are empowered by nature to transact for their benefit, and therefore Christ accepts their dedication of them as their act and deed, and will own these dedicated things in the day he makes up his jewels. 3. Therefore he takes it ill of those who forbid them, and exclude those whom he has received; who cast them out from the inheritance of the Lord, and say ye have no part in the Lord; see Josh. xxii. 27. and who forbid water that they should be baptized, who if that promise be fulfilled, Ihu. xlv. 3. have received the Holy Ghost as well as we, for ought we know.

2. He received the little children, and he did as he was desired, he laid his hands on them, that is, he blessed them. The strongest believer lives not so much by apprehending Christ, as by being apprehended of him, Phil. iii. 12. not so much by knowing God, as by being known of him, Gal. iv. 9. and this the least child is capable of. If they cannot stretch out their hands to Christ, yet he can lay his hands on them, and so make them his own, and own them for his own.

He thinks it hath something observable in it, that when he had done this he departed thence, ver. 15. As if he reckoned he had done enough there, when he had thus asserted the rights of the lambs of his flock, and made this provision for a succession of subjects in this kingdom:

16. ¶ And behold, one came and said unto him, Good master, what good thing shall I do, that I may have eternal life? 17. And he said unto him, Why callest thou me good? there is none good but one, that is God: but if thou wilt enter into life, keep the commandments. 18. He saith unto him, Which? Jesus said, Thou shalt do no murder, Thou shalt not commit adultery, Thou shalt not steal, Thou shalt not bear false witness. 19. Honour thy father and thy mother: and Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself. 20. The young man saith unto him, All these things have I kept from my youth up: what lack I yet? 21. Jesus said unto him, If thou wilt be perfect, go and sell that thou hast, and give to the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven: and come and follow me. 22. But when the young man heard that saying, he went away sorrowful: for he had great possessions.

Here is an account of what passed between Christ and a hopeful young gentleman that addressed himself to him upon a serious errand; he is said to be a young man, ver. 22. and I called him a gentleman, not only because he had great possessions, but because he was a ruler, Luke xvii. 18. a magistrate, a justice of peace in his country; it is probable he was of pregnant parts beyond his years, else his youth would have debarred him from the magistracy.

Now concerning this young gentleman, we are told how far he bid for heaven, and came short.

1. How fair he did for heaven, and how kindly and tenderly Christ treated him, in favour to good beginnings. Here is,

1. The gentleman's serious address to Jesus Christ, ver. 16. Good master, what good thing shall I do that I may have eternal life? Not a better question could be asked, nor more gravely.

1. He gives Christ an honourable title, Good master, Διδάκαλε ἀγαθὲ. It signifies not a ruling, but a teaching Master. His calling him Master, speaks his submissiveness, and willingness to be taught; and good Master, his affection and peculiar respect to the teacher, like that of Nicodemus, thou art a teacher come from God. We read not of any that addressed themselves to Christ more respectfully than that master in Israel and this ruler. It is a good thing when men's quality and dignity increases their civility and courtesy. It was gentleman-like to give this title of respect to Christ, notwithstanding the present meanness of his appearance. It was not usual among the Jews to accost their teachers with the title of good, and therefore this speaks the singular uncommon respect he had for Christ. Note, Jesus Christ is a good master, the best of teachers; none teacheth like him, he is famous for his goodness, for he can have compassion on the ignorant; he is meek and lowly in heart.

2. He comes to him upon an errand of importance, none could be more so, and he came not to tempt him, but sincerely desiring to be taught by him. His question is, What good thing shall I do that I may have eternal life? By this it appears, 1. That he had a firm belief of eternal life; he was no Sadducee. He was convinced that there is a happiness prepared for those in the other world, that are prepared for it in this world. 2. That he was concerned to make it sure to himself that he should live eternally, and was desirous of that life more than of any of the delights of this life. It was a rare thing for one of his age and quality to appear so much in care about another world. The rich are apt to think it below them to make such an inquiry as this, and young people think it is time enough yet; but here was a young man, and a rich man solicitous about his soul and eternity. 3. That he was sensible something must be done, some good thing for the attainment of this happiness. It is by patient continuance in well-doing that we seek for immortality, Rom. ii. 7. We must be doing, and doing that which is good. The blood of Christ is the only purchase of eternal life, he merited it for us, but obedience to Christ is the appointed way to it, Heb. v. 9. 4. That he was, or at least thought himself, willing to do what was to be done for the obtaining of this eternal life. Those that know what it is to have eternal life; and what it is to come short of it, will be glad to accept it upon any terms. Such a holy violence doth the kingdom of heaven suffer. Note, While there be many that say, who will shew us any good? one great enquiry should be what shall we do that we may have eternal life? what shall we do to be for ever happy, happy in another world? for this world has not that in it that will make us happy.

2. The encouragement that Jesus Christ gave to this address. He doth not use to send any away without an answer, that come to him on such an errand; for nothing pleaseth him more, ver. 17. In his answer,

1. He tenderly assists his faith; for doubtless he did not mean it for a reproof, when he said, Why callest thou me good? but would seem to find that faith in what he said, when he called him good Master, which the gentleman perhaps was not conscious to himself of; he intended no more but to own and honour him as a good man, but Christ would lead him to own and honour him as a good God, for there is none good but one, that is God. Note, As Christ is graciously ready to make the best that he can of what is said or done amiss; so he is ready to make the most that can be of what is well said and well done. His constructions are often better than our intentions; as in that, I was hungry, and you gave me meat, though you little thought it was to me. Christ will have this young man either known him to be God, or not call him good; to teach us to transfer to God all the praise that is at any time given to us; do any call us good? tell them all goodness is from God, and therefore not to us but to him give glory. All crowns must lie before his throne. Note, God only is good, and there is none essentially, originally and unchangeably good but God only. His goodness is of and from himself, and all the goodness in the creature is from him; he is the fountain of goodness, and whatever the streams are, all the springs are in him, James i. 17. He is the great pattern and sampler of goodness, by him all goodness is to be measured; that is good which is like him, and agreeable to his mind. We in our language call him God, because he is good. In this, as in other things, our Lord Jesus was the brightness of his glory, (and his goodness is his glory) and the express image of his person, and therefore fitly called good Master.

2. He plainly directs his practice, in answer to his question. He started that thought of his being good, and therefore God; but did not stay upon it, lest he should seem to divert from, and so drop the main question, as many do in needless disputes and strife of words. Now Christ's answer is in short thus, If thou wilt enter into life keep the commandments.

1. The end proposed is entering into life. The young man in his question spoke of eternal life. Christ in his answer speaks of life; to teach us, that eternal life is the only true life. The words concerning that are the words of this life, Acts v. 20. The present life scarce deserves the name of life, for in the midst of life we are in death. Or into life, i. e. that spiritual life which is the beginning and earnest of eternal life. He desired to know how he might have eternal life; Christ tells him how he might enter into it: we have it by the merit of Christ, a mystery which was not as yet fully revealed, and therefore Christ waves that; but the way of entering into it is by obedience, and Christ directs us in that. By the former we make our title, by this, as by our evidence, we prove it; it is by adding to faith virtue, that an entrance, (the word here used) is ministered to us into the everlasting kingdom, 2 Pet. i. 5—7. Christ who is our life is the way to the Father, and to the vision and fruition of him; he is the only way, but duty and the obedience of faith is the way to Christ. There is an entrance into life hereafter, at death, at the great day, a complete entrance, and those only shall then enter into life that do their duty; it is the diligent faithful servant that shall then enter into the joy of his Lord, and that joy will be his eternal life. There is an entrance into life now; we which have believed, do enter into rest, Heb. iv. 3. We have peace, and comfort, and joy in the believing prospect of the glory to be revealed, and to this also, since here obedience is indispensably necessary.

2. The way prescribed is keeping the commandments. Note, keeping the commandments of God, according as they are revealed and made known to us, is the only way to life and salvation: and sincerity herein is accepted through Christ as our gospel-perfection, provision being made of pardon upon repentance, wherein we come short. Through Christ we are delivered from the condemning power of the law, but the commanding power of it is lodged in the hand of the Mediator, and under that in that hand we still are under the law to Christ; 1 Cor. ix. 12. under it as a rule, though not as a covenant. Keeping the commandments includes faith in Jesus Christ, for that is the great commandment, 1 John iii. 23. and it was one of the laws of Moses, that when the great prophet should be raised up they should hear him. Observe, In order to our happiness here and for ever, it is not enough for us to know the commandments of God, but we must keep them, keep in them as our way, keep to them as our rule, keep them as our treasure, and with care, as the apple of our eye.

3. At his further instance and request he mentions some particular commandments which he must keep, ver. 18, 19. The young man saith unto him, which? Note, Those that would do the commandments of God must seek them diligently, and enquire after them, what they are. Ezra set himself to seek the law, and to do it, Ezra vii. 10. There were many commandments in the law of Moses, good Master, let me know which those are the keeping of which is necessary to salvation.

In answer to this, Christ instanteth in several, especially the commandments of the second table. 1. That which concerns our own and our neighbour's life, Thou shalt do no murder. 2. Our own and our neighbour's chastity, which should be as dear to us as life itself, Thou shalt not commit adultery. 3. Our own and our neighbour's wealth and outward estate, as hedged about by the law of property, Thou shalt not steal. 4. That which concerns truth, and our own and our neighbour's good name, Thou shalt not bear false witness, neither for thyself, nor against thy neighbour; for so it is here left at large. 5. That which concerns the duties of particular relations, Honour thy father and mother. 6. That comprehensive law of love, which is the spring and summary of all these duties, whence they all flow, on which they are all founded, and in which they are all fulfilled, Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself, Gal. v. 14. Rom. xiii. 9. that royal law, James ii. 8. Some think this comes in here, not as the sum of the second table, but as the particular import of the tenth commandment; Thou shalt not covet, which in Mark is, Defraud not; intimating, that it is not lawful for me to design advantage or gain to myself by the diminution or loss of another; for that is to covet, and to love myself better than my neighbour, whom I ought to love as myself, and to treat as I would myself be treated.

Our Saviour here instanteth in second table duties only; not as if the first were of less account, but, 1. Because they that now sat at Moses's seat, either wholly neglected or greatly corrupted these precepts in their preaching. While they pressed the tithing of mint, anise and cummin, judgment, and mercy, and faith, the summary of second table duties, were overlooked, Matt. xxiii. 23. Their preaching run out all in rituals and nothing in morals, and therefore Christ pressed that most which they least insisted on. As one truth, so one duty must not jostle out another, but each must know its place, and be kept in it; but equity requires that that be helped up which is most in danger of being thrust out. That is the present truth we are called to bear our testimony to, not only which is opposed, but which is neglected. 2. Because he would teach him and us all, that moral honesty is a necessary branch of true Christianity, and to be minded according. Though a mere moral man comes short of being a complete Christian, yet an immoral man is certainly no true Christian; for the grace of God teacheth us to live soberly and righteously, as well as godly. Nay, though first table duties have in them more of the essence of religion, yet second table duties have in them more of the evidence of it. Our light burns in love to God, but it shines in love to our neighbour.

2. See here how he came short, though he bid thus fair, and wherein he failed; he failed by two things,

1. By pride and a vain conceit of his own merit and strength; this is the ruin of thousands, who keep themselves miserable by fancying themselves happy. When Christ told him what commandments he must keep, he answered very scornfully, All these things have I kept from my youth up, ver. 20.

Now, 1. According as he understood the law, as prohibiting only the outward acts of sin, I am apt to think he said true, and Christ knew it, for he did not contradict him; nay, it is said in Mark; he loved him; so far was very good and pleasing to Christ. St. Paul reckons it a privilege not contemptible in itself, though it was drops in comparison with Christ, that he was, as touching the righteousness that is in the law, blameless, Phil. iii. 6. His observance of these commands was universal, all these have I kept, it was early and constant, from my youth up. Note, A man may be free from gross sin, and yet come short of grace and glory. His hands may be clean from external pollutions, and yet he may perish eternally in his heart-wickedness. What shall we think then of those who do not attain to this? Whose fraud and injustice, drunkenness and uncleanness, witness against them, that all these they have broken from their youth up, though they have named the name of Christ? Well, it is sad to come short of those that come short of heaven.

It was commendable also that he desired to know further what his duty was; What lack I yet? He was convinced he wanted something to fill up his works before God, and was therefore desirous to know it, because if he was not mistaken in himself, he was willing to do it. Having not yet attained, he thus seemed to press forward. And he applied himself to Christ; whose doctrine was supposed to improve and perfect the Mosaic institution. He desired to know what were the peculiar precepts of his religion, that he might have all that was in them to polish and accomplish him. Who could bid fairer?

But, 2. Even in this that he said he discovered his ignorance and folly. 1. Taking the law in its spiritual sense, as Christ expounded it, no doubt, in many things he had offended against all these commands. Had he been acquainted with the extent and spiritual meaning of the law, instead of saying, All these have I kept, what lack I yet? He would have said, with shame and sorrow, All these have I broken, what shall I do to get my sins pardoned? 2. Take it how you will, what he said favoured of pride and vain-glory, and had in it too much of that boasting which is excluded by the law of faith, Rom. iii. 27. and which doth exclude from justification, Luke xviii. 11—14. He valued himself too much, as the Pharisees did, upon the plausibleness of his profession before men, and was proud of that, which spoiled the acceptableness of it. That word, What lack I yet? Perhaps was not so much a desire of further instruction, as a demand of the praise of his present fancied perfection, and a challenge to Christ himself to shew him any one instance wherein he was deficient.

2. He came short by an inordinate love of the world, and his enjoyments in it. This was the fatal rock on which he split. Observe,

1. How he was tried in this matter, ver. 21. Jesus said unto him, If thou wilt be perfect, go and sell that thou hast. Christ waved the matter of his boasted obedience to the law, and let that drop, because this would be a more effectual way of discovering him than a dispute of the extent of the law. Come, saith Christ, if thou wilt be perfect, if thou wilt approve thyself sincere in thine obedience; for sincerity is our gospel perfection; if thou wilt come up to that which Christ had added to the law of Moses; if thou wilt be perfect, i. e. if thou wilt enter into life, and so be perfectly happy; for that which Christ here prescribes is not a thing of supererogation, or a perfection we may be saved without; but in the main scope and intentment of it, it is our necessary and indispensable duty. What Christ said to him he thus far said to us all, that if we will approve ourselves Christians indeed, and would be found at last the heirs of eternal life, we must do these two things.

1. We must practically prefer the heavenly treasures before all the wealth and riches in this world. That glory must have the pre-eminence in our judgment and esteem before this glory. No thanks to us to prefer heaven before hell, the worst man in the world would be glad that Jerusalem for a refuge when he can stay no longer here, and to have it in reserve; but to make it our choice, and to prefer it before this earth, that is to be a Christian indeed.

Now as an evidence of this,

1. We must dispose of what we have in this world for the honour of God, and in his service. Sell that thou hast, and give to the poor. If the occasions of charity be very pressing, sell thy possessions, that thou mayest have to give to them that need; as the first Christians did, with an eye to this precept, Acts iv. 34. Sell what thou canst spare for pious uses, all thy superfluities; if thou canst not otherwise do good with it, sell it. Sit loose to it, be willing to part with it for the honour of God, and the relief of the poor. A gracious contempt of the world, and compassion of the poor and afflicted ones in it, is in all a necessary condition of salvation; and in those that have wherewithal, giving of alms is as necessary an evidence of that contempt of the world, and compassion to our brethren; by this the trial will be at the great day, Mate xxv. 35. Though many that call themselves Christians do not act as if they believed it; it is certain, when we embrace Christ we must let go the world, for we cannot serve God and mammon. Christ knew that covetousness was the sin that did most easily beset this young man, that though what he had he had got honestly, yet he could not cheerfully part with it, and by this he discovered his insincerity. This command was like the call to Abraham, Get thee out of thy country, to a land that I will shew thee. As God tries believers by their strongest graces, so hypocrites by their strongest corruptions. 2. We must depend upon what we hope for in the other world as an abundant recompence for all we have left or lost, or laid out for God in this world. Thou shalt have treasure in heaven. We must in the way of chargeable duty, trust God for a happiness out of sight, which will make us rich amends for all our expences in God's service. The precept founded hard and harsh, Sell that thou hast, and give it away; and the objection against it would soon arise, that "Charity begins at home," therefore Christ immediately annexeth this assurance of a treasure in heaven. Note, Christ's promises make his precepts easy, and his yoke not only tolerable, but pleasant, and sweet, and very comfortable; yet this promise was as much a trial of this young man's faith, as the precept was of his charity, and contempt of the world.

2. We must devote ourselves entirely to the conduct and government of our Lord Jesus; Come and follow me. It seems here to be meant of a close and constant attendance upon his person, such as the selling what he had in the world was as necessary to, as it was to the other disciples to quit their callings; but of us it is required that we follow Christ, that we duly attend upon his ordinances, strictly conform to his pattern, and cheerfully submit to his disposals, and by upright and universal obedience, to observe his statutes, and keep his laws, and all this from a principal of love to him, and dependence on him, and with a holy contempt of every thing else in comparison of him, and much more in competition with him. This is to follow Christ fully. To sell all and give to the poor will not serve, unless we come and follow Christ. If I give all my goods to feed the poor, and have not love, it profits me nothing. Well, on these terms, and on no lower, is salvation to be had, and they are very easy and reasonable terms, and will appear so to those who are brought to be glad of it upon any terms.

3. See how he was discovered. This touched him in a tender part, ver. 22. When he heard that saying, he went away sorrowful, for he had great possessions.

1. He was a rich man, and loved his riches, and therefore went away. He did not like eternal life upon these terms. Note, 1. Those that have much in the world are in the greatest temptation to love it, and to set their hearts upon it. Such is the bewitching nature of worldly wealth, that those who want it least desire it most; when riches increase, then is the danger of setting the heart upon them, Psal. lxxii. 10. If he had but two mites in all the world, and had been commanded to give them to the poor, or but one handful of meal in the barrel, and a little oil in the cruse, and had been bidden to make a cake of that for a poor prophet, the trial, one would think, had been much greater, and yet those trials have been overcome, Luke xxi. 4. and 1 Kings xvii. 14. Which shews that the love of the world draws stronger than the most pressing necessities. 2. The reigning love of this world keeps many from Christ that seem to have had some good desires towards him. A great estate, as to those who are got above it, is a great furtherance; so to those who are entangled in the love of it, it is a great hindrance in the way to heaven.

Yet something of honesty there was in it, that when he did not like the terms he went away, and would not pretend to that which he could not find in his heart to come up to the strictness of; better so than do as Demas did, who having known the way of righteousness, afterwards turned aside out of love to this present world, to the greater scandal of his profession; since he could not be a complete Christian, he would not be an hypocrite.

2. Yet he was a thinking man, and well inclined, and therefore went away sorrowful: He had a good mind to Christ, and was loth to part with him. Note, Many a one is ruined by the sin he commits with reluctance; leaves Christ sorrowfully, and yet is never truly sorry for leaving him; for if he were he would return to him. Thus this man's wealth was vexation of spirit to him, then when it was his temptation; what then would the sorrow be afterwards when his possessions would be gone, and all hopes of eternal life gone too?

23. ¶ Then said Jesus unto his disciples, Verily I say unto you, that a rich man shall hardly enter into the kingdom of heaven. 24. And again I say unto you, it is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle, than for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of God.

25. When his disciple heard it, they were exceedingly amazed, saying, Who then can be saved? 26. But Jesus beheld them, and said unto them, With men this is impossible, but with God all things are possible. 27. ¶ Then answered Peter, and said unto him, Behold, we have forsaken all, and followed thee; what shall we have therefore? 28. And Jesus said unto them, Verily I say unto you, that ye which have followed me in the regeneration, when the Son of man shall sit in the throne of his glory, ye shall also sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel. 29. And every one that hath forsaken houses, or brethren, or sisters, or father, or mother, or wife, or children or lands, for my name's sake, shall receive an hundred-fold, and shall inherit everlasting life. 30. But many that are first shall be last; and the last shall be first.

We have here Christ's discourse with his disciples upon occasion of the rich man's breaking with Christ.

First, Christ took occasion from thence to shew the difficulty of the salvation of rich people, ver. 23—26.

1. That it is a very hard thing for a rich man to get to heaven, such a rich man as this here. Note, From the harms and falls of others it is good for us to infer that which will be of caution to us.

Now 1. This is vehemently asserted by our Saviour, ver. 23, 24. He said this to his disciples, who were poor, and had but little in the world, to reconcile them to their condition with this, that the less they had of worldly wealth, the less hindrance they had in the way to heaven. Note, It should be a satisfaction to them who are in a low condition, that they are not exposed to the temptations of a high and prosperous condition; if they live more hardly in this world than the rich, yet if withal they get more easily to a better world, they have no reason to complain. This saying is ratified, ver. 23. Verily I say unto you. He that has reason to know what the way to heaven is, for he has laid it open, he tells us that this is one of the greatest difficulties in that way. It is repeated, ver. 24. Again I say unto you: Thus he speaketh once, yea twice, that which man is loth to perceive, and more loth to believe.

2. He saith, that it is a hard thing for a rich man to be a good Christian and to be saved; to enter into the kingdom of heaven, either here or hereafter. The way to heaven is to all a narrow way, and the gate that leads into it a strait gate, but it is particularly so to rich people. More duties are expected from them than from others, which they can hardly do; and more sins do easily beset them, which they can hardly avoid. Rich people have great temptations to resist and such as are very intemperate; it is hard not to be charmed with a smiling world; very hard when our bellies are filled with these last treasures, not to take up with them for a portion. Rich people have a great account to make up for their estates, their interests, their time, and their opportunities of doing and getting good, above others. It must be a great measure of divine grace that will enable a man to break through these difficulties.

1. He saith, that the conversion and salvation of a rich man is so extremely difficult, that it is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle, ver. 24. This is a proverbial expression, noting a difficulty altogether unconquerable by the art and power of man; nothing less than the almighty grace of God will enable a rich man to get over this difficulty. The difficulty of the salvation of apostates, Heb. vi. 4. and of old sinners, Jer. xiii. 23. is thus represented as an impossibility. The salvation of any is so very difficult, even the righteous scarcely are saved, that where there is a peculiar difficulty it is fitly set forth thus: It is very rare for a man to be rich, and not to set his heart upon his riches; and it is utterly impossible for a man that sets his heart upon his riches to get to heaven; for if any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him, 1 John ii. 15. James iv. 4. 1. The way to heaven is very fitly compared to a needle's eye, which is hard to hit, and hard to get through. 2. A rich man is fitly compared to a camel, a beast of burden, for he has riches, as a camel has his load; he carries it, but it is another's; he has it from others, spends it for others, and must shortly leave it to others; it is a burden, for men load themselves with thick clay, Hab. ii. 6. A camel is a large creature, but unwieldy.

2. This truth is very much admired, and scarce credited by the disciples, ver. 25. They were exceedingly amazed, saying, Who then can be saved? Many surprising truths Christ told them, which they were astonished at and knew not what to make of, and this was one, and their weakness was the cause of their wonder. It was not in contradiction to Christ, but for awakening to themselves, that they said, Who then can be saved? Note, Considering the many difficulties that are in the way of salvation, it is really strange that any are saved. When we think how good God is, it may seem a wonder that so few are his; but when we think how bad man is, it is more a wonder that so many are, and Christ will be eternally admired in them. Who then can be saved? Since so many are rich, and have great possessions, and so many more would be rich, and are well affected to great possessions, who can be saved? If riches are a hindrance to rich people, are not pride and luxury incident to those that are not rich, and as dangerous to them, and who then can get to heaven? This is a good reason why rich people should strive against the stream.

2. That though it be hard, yet it is not impossible but that rich people may be saved, ver. 26. Jesus beheld them, turned and looked wistly upon his disciples, to shame them out of their fond conceit of the advantages rich people had in spiritual things: He beheld them as men that had got over this difficulty, and were in a fair way for heaven, and the more so because poor in this world; and he said unto them, With men this is impossible, but with God all things are possible. This speaks a great truth in general, that God is able to do that which quite exceeds all created power; that nothing is too hard for God, Gen. xviii. 14. Numb. xi. 23. when men are at a loss God is not, for his power is infinite, and irresistible; but this truth is here applied, 1. To the salvation of any. Who can be saved? say the disciples. None, saith Christ, by any created power. With men this is impossible; the wisdom of man would soon be nonplussed in contriving, and the power of man baffled, in effecting the salvation of a soul. No creature can work the change that is necessary to the salvation of a soul, either in itself, or in any one else: With men it is impossible that so strong a stream should be turned, so hard a heart softened, so stubborn a will bowed. It is a creation, it is a resurrection, and with men this is impossible; it can never be done with philosophy, medicine, or politics; but with God all things are possible. Note, The beginning, progress, and perfection of the work of salvation, depends entirely upon the almighty power of God, to which all things are possible. Faith is wrought by that power, Eph. i. 19. and is kept kept by it, 1 Pet. i. 5. Job's experience of God's convincing, humbling grace, made him acknowledge more than any thing else, I know that thou canst do every thing, Job xlii. 2. To the salvation of rich people especially; it is impossible with men that such should be saved, but with God even this is possible; not that rich people should be saved in their worldliness, but that they should be saved from it. Note, The sanctification and salvation of such as are surrounded with the temptations of this world, is not to be despised of; it is possible it may be brought about by the all-sufficiency of the divine grace; and when such are brought to heaven, they will be there everlasting monuments of the power of God. I am willing to think, that in this word of Christ, there is an intimation of mercy Christ had yet in store for this young gentleman; that was now gone away sorrowful; it was not impossible to God yet to recover him, and bring him to a better mind.

Secondly, Peter took occasion from hence to enquire what they should get by it, who had come up to these terms, upon which this young man broke with Christ, and had left all to follow him, ver. 27, &c. where we have the disciples' expectations from Christ, and his promises to them.

1. We have their expectations from Christ; Peter, in the name of the rest, signifies that they depended upon him for something considerable in lieu of what they had left for him: Behold, we have forsaken all and have followed thee; what shall we have, therefore? Christ had promised the young man, that if he would sell all, and come and follow him, he should have treasure in heaven; now Peter desires to know,

(1.) Whether they had sufficiently come up to those terms: they had not sold all, for they had many of them wives and families to provide for, but they had forsaken all; they had not given it to the poor, but they had renounced it as far as it might be any way a hindrance to them in serving Christ. Note, When we hear what are the characters of those that shall be saved, it concerns us to enquire whether we, through grace, answer those characters. Now Peter hopes, that as to the main scope and intentment of the condition, they had come up to it, for God had wrought in them a holy contempt of the world, and the things that are seen; in comparison with Christ, and the things that are not seen; and how this must be evidenced, no certain rule can be given, but according as we are called.

Lord, saith Peter, we have forsaken all. Alas! it was but a poor all that they had forsaken; one of them had indeed quitted a place in the custom-house, but Peter, and the most of them, had only left a few boats and nets, and the appurtenances of a poor fishing-trade, and yet see how big Peter there speaks of it, as if it had been some mighty thing: Behold, we have forsaken all. Note, We are too apt to make the most of our services and sufferings, our expences and losses for Christ; and to think we have made him much our debtor. However, Christ doth not upbraid them with this, though it was but little they had forsaken, yet it was their all, like the widow's two mites, and was as dear to them as if it had been more, and therefore Christ took it kindly that they left it to follow him; for he accepts according to what a man hath.

(2.) Whether therefore they might expect that treasure the young man shall have if he will sell all: Lord, saith Peter, shall we have it who have left all? All people are for what they can get, and Christ's followers are allowed to count it their own true interest, and to ask, What shall we have? Christ looked at the joy set before him, and Moses at the recompence of reward. For this end it is set before us, that by a patient continuance in well-doing we might seek for it. Christ encourageth us to ask, that we shall gain by leaving all to follow him, that we may see he doth not call us to our prejudice, but unspeakably to our advantage. As it is the language of an obedient faith to ask, What shall we do? with an eye to the precepts: so it is of a hoping, trusting faith to ask, What shall we have? with an eye to the promises. But observe, the disciples had long since left all to engage themselves in the service of Christ, and yet never, till now, asked, What shall we have? Though there was no visible prospect of advantage by it, they were so well assured of his goodness, that they knew they should not lose by him at last, and therefore referred themselves to him, in what way he would make up their losses to them; minded their work, and asked not what should be their wages? Note, It honours Christ to trust him, and serve him, and not to indent with him. Now this young man was gone from Christ to his possessions, it was time for them to think which they should take to, what they should trust to? when we see what others keep by their hypocrisy and apostasy, it is proper for us to consider what we hope, through grace, to gain, not for, but by our sincerity and constancy, and then we shall see more reason to pity them than to envy them.

2. We have here Christ's promises to them, and to all others that tread in the steps of their faith and obedience: What there was either of vain glory or vain hopes in that which Peter said; Christ overlooks, and is not extreme to mark it, but takes this occasion to give the bond of a promise.

(1.) To his immediate followers, ver. 28. They had signified their respects to him as the first that followed him, and to them he promiseth not only treasure, but honour in heaven; and here they have a grant or patent for it, from him who is the fountain of honour in that kingdom; Ye which have followed me in the regeneration shall sit upon twelve thrones. Observe,

1. The preamble to the patent, or the consideration of the grant, which, as usual, is a recital of their services; you have followed me in the regeneration, and therefore this will I do for you. The time of Christ's appearing in this world was a time of regeneration, of reformation; Heb. ix. 10. when old things began to pass away, and all things to look new. The disciples had followed Christ when the Church was yet in the embryo, when the gospel-temple was but in the framing, when they had more of the work and service of apostles, than of the dignity and power that belonged to their office. Now they followed Christ with a constant fatigue when few did, and therefore on them he will put particular marks of honour. Note, Christ hath special favour for those that begin early with him, that trust him further than they can see him, as they did who followed him in the regeneration. Observe, Peter spoke of their forsaking all to follow him, Christ only speaks of their following him, which was the main matter.

2. The date of their honour, which fixeth the time when it should commence, not immediately from the day of the date of these presents; no, they must continue a while in obscurity, as they were: But when the Son of man shall sit in the throne of his glory? and to this some refer that, in the regeneration; you which now have followed me, shall in the regeneration be thus dignified, Christ's second coming will be a regeneration, when there shall be new heavens, and a new earth, and the restitution of all things. All that partake of the regeneration in grace, (John iii. 3.) shall partake of the regeneration in glory; for as grace is the first resurrection, Rev. xx. 6. so glory is the second regeneration.

Now their honour being adjourned till the Son of man's sitting in the throne of his glory, intimates, 1. That they must stay for their advancement till then. Note, As long as our Master's glory is delayed, it is fit that ours should be so too, and that we should wait for it with an earnest expectation, as of a hope not seen, Rom. viii. 19. We must live, and work, and suffer, in faith, and hope, and patience, which therefore must be tried by these delays: 2. That they must share with Christ in his advancement;

their honour must be a communion with him in his honour. They having suffered with a suffering Jesus, must reign with a reigning Jesus, for both here and hereafter Christ will be all in all; we must be where he is, John xii. 26. must appear with him, Col. iii. 4. And this will be an abundant recompence; not only for our loss, but for the delay; and when our Lord comes, we shall receive not only our own; but our own with usury. The longest voyages make the richest returns.

3. The honour itself hereby granted: Ye shall also sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel. It is hard to determine the particular sense of this promise, and whether it was not to have many accomplishments, which I see no harm in admitting. 1. When Christ is ascended to the right hand of the Father, and sits on the throne of his glory; there the apostles shall receive power by the Holy Ghost, (Acts i. 8.) shall be so much advanced above themselves as they are now, that they shall think themselves upon thrones in promoting the gospel, they shall deliver it with authority, as a judge from the bench; they shall then have their commission enlarged, and shall publish the laws of Christ, by which the church, God's spiritual Israel, (Gal. vi. 16.) shall be governed, and Israel according to the flesh, that continues in infidelity, with all others that do likewise, shall be condemned. This honour and power given them may be explained by Jer. i. 10. See, I have set thee over the nations, and Ezek. xx. 4. Will thou judge them? and Dan. vii. 18. The saints shall take the kingdom; and Rev. xii. 11. where the doctrine of Christ is called a crown of twelve stars. 2. When Christ appears for the destruction of Jerusalem; Matt. xxiv. 30. then shall he send the apostles to judge the Jewish nation, because in that destruction their predictions, according to the word of Christ, would be accomplished. 3. Some think it has reference to the conversion of the Jews, which is yet to come, at the latter end of the world, after the fall of antichrist, so Dr. Whitby; and that "it respects the apostles government of the twelve tribes of Israel, not by a resurrection of their persons, but by a reviviscence of that Spirit which resided in them, and of that purity and knowledge which they delivered to the world; and, chiefly, by admission of their gospel to be the standard of their faith, and the direction of their lives." 4. It is certainly to have its full accomplishment at the second coming of Jesus Christ, when the saints in general shall judge the world, and the twelve apostles especially, as assessors with Christ, in the judgment of the great day, when all the world shall receive their final doom, and they shall ratify and applaud the sentence: But the tribes of Israel are named, partly because the number of the apostles was designedly the same with the number of the tribes; partly because the apostles were of the Jewish nation, befriended them most, but were most spitefully persecuted by them; and it intimates, that the saints will judge their acquaintance and kindred according to the flesh, and will, in the great day, judge those they had a kindness for; will judge their persecutors, who in this world judged them.

But the general intentment of this promise is; to shew the glory and dignity reserved for the saints in heaven, which will be an abundant recompence for the disgrace they suffered here in Christ's cause: There are higher degrees of glory for those that have done and suffered most. The apostles in this world were hurried and tossed, there they shall sit down at rest and ease: Here bonds, and afflictions, and deaths, did abide them, but there they shall sit on thrones of glory: Here they were dragged to the bar, there they shall be advanced to the bench: Here the twelve tribes of Israel trampled upon them, there they shall tremble before them. And will not this be recompence enough to make up all their losses and expences for Christ? See Luke xxii. 29.

4. The ratification of this grant, it is firm, it is inviolably immutably sure; for Christ hath said, Verily I say unto you, I the Amen, the faithful Witness, who am impowered to make this grant, I have said it, and it cannot be disannulled.

(2.) Here is a promise to all others that should in like manner leave all to follow Christ. It was not peculiar to the apostles to be thus preferred, but this honour have all his saints: Christ will take care they shall none of them lose by him, ver. 29. Every one that has forsaken any thing for Christ, shall receive.

1. Losses for Christ are here supposed: Christ had told them, that his disciples must deny themselves in all that is done to them in this world; now here he instanteth in particulars, for it is good to count upon the work; if they have not forsaken all, as the apostles did, yet they have forsaken a great deal, houses suppose, and have turned themselves out to wander in deserts; or dear relations, that would not go with them to follow Christ; these are particularly mentioned, as hardest for a tender gracious spirit to part with; brethren, or sisters, or father, or mother, or wife, or children: and lands are added in the close, the profits of which were the support of the family.

Now, (1.) The loss of these things is supposed to be for Christ's name's sake, else he doth not oblige himself to make it up: Many forsake brethren, and wife, and children, in humour and passion, as the bird that wanders from her nest; that is a sinful desertion: But if we forsake them for Christ's sake, because we cannot keep them and keep a good conscience, we must either quit them, or quit our interest in Christ; nor quit our concern for them, or our duty to them, but our comfort in them, and will do it rather than deny Christ, and this with an eye to him, and to his will and glory; this is that which shall be thus recompenced. It is not the suffering, but the cause, that makes both the martyr and the confessor.

(2.) It is supposed to be a great loss, and yet Christ undertakes to make it up, for he is able to do it he never so great. See the barbarity of the persecutors, that they stripped innocent people of all they had for no other crime but because they adhered to Christ! See the patience of the persecuted, and the strength of their love to Christ, which was such as all these waters could not quench!

2. A recompence of these losses is here secured. Thousands have dealt with Christ and have trusted him far, but never any one lost by him, never any one but was an unspeakable gainer by him, when the account came to be balanced. Christ here gives his word for it, that he will not only indemnify his suffering servants, and save them harmless, but will abundantly reward them. Let them make a schedule of their losses for Christ, and they shall be sure to receive,

(1.) A hundred-fold in this life, sometimes in kind, in the things themselves they have parted with; God will raise up for his suffering servants more friends, that will be so to them for Christ's sake, than they have left that were so for their own sakes. The apostles, wherever they came, met with those that were kind to them, and entertained them, and opened their hearts and doors to them. However, they shall receive a hundred-fold in kindness, in those things that are abundantly better, and more valuable. Their graces shall increase, their comforts abound, they shall have tokens of God's love, more free communion with him, more full communications from him, clearer foresights, and sweeter foretastes of the glory to be revealed: and then they may truly say, they have received a hundred times more comfort in God and Christ, than they could have had in wife, or children.

(2.) Eternal life at last. The former is steward enough, if there were no more;

more; cent. per cent. is great profit; what then is hundred to one; but this comes in over and above, as it were into the bargain: The life here promised includes in it all the comforts of life in the highest degree, and all eternal. Now if we could but mix faith with the promise, and trust Christ for the performance of it, surely we should think nothing too much to do, nothing too hard to suffer, nothing too dear to part with, for him.

Our Saviour, in the last verse, obviates a mistake of some, as if a pre-eminence in glory went by precedence in time, other than the measure and degree of grace: No; many that are first shall be last, and the last first, ver. 30. God will cross hands, will reveal that to babes, which he hid from the wise and prudent; will reject unbelieving Jews, and receive believing Gentiles. The heavenly inheritance is not given as earthly inheritances commonly are, by seniority of age, and priority of birth, but according to God's pleasure. This is the text of another sermon, which we shall meet with in the next chapter.

CHAP. XX.

We have four things in this chapter; 1. The parable of the labourers in the vineyard, ver. 1—16. 2. A prediction of Christ's approaching sufferings, ver. 17, 18, 19. 3. The petition of two of the disciples, by their mother, reproved, ver. 20—28. 4. The petition of the two blind men granted, and their eyes opened, ver. 29—34.

1. FOR the kingdom of heaven is like unto a man that is an householder, which went out early in the morning to hire labourers into his vineyard. 2. And when he had agreed with the labourers for a penny a day, he sent them into his vineyard. 3. And he went out about the third hour, and saw others standing idle in the market place. 4. And said unto them; Go ye also into the vineyard, and whatsoever is right I will give you. And they went their way. 5. Again he went about the sixth and ninth hour, and did likewise. 6. And about the eleventh hour he went out, and found others standing idle, and said unto them, Why stand ye here all the day idle? 7. They say unto him. Because no man hath hired us. He said unto them, Go ye also into the vineyard; and whatsoever is right, that shall ye receive. 8. So when even was come, the lord of the vineyard said unto his steward, Call the labourers, and give them their hire, beginning from the last unto the first. 9. And when they came that were hired about the eleventh hour, they received every man a penny. 10. But when the first came, they supposed that they should have received more: and they likewise received every man a penny. 11. And when they had received it, they murmured against the good man of the house, 12. Saying, These last have wrought but one hour, and thou hast made them equal unto us, which have bore the burden and heat of the day. 13. But he answered one of them, and said, Friend, I do thee no wrong: didst not thou agree with me for a penny? 14. Take that thine is, and go thy way: I will give unto this last, even as unto thee. 15. Is it not lawful for me to do what I will with mine own? Is thine eye evil, because I am good? 16. So the last shall be first, and the first last: for many are called but few chosen.

This parable of the labourers in the vineyard is intended,

1. To represent to us the kingdom of heaven; ver. 1. that is, the way and method of the gospel-dispensation. The laws of that kingdom are not wrapped up in parables, but plainly set down, as in the sermon upon the mount; but the mysteries of that kingdom are delivered in parables, in sacraments, as here, and Matt. xiii. The duties of Christianity are more necessary to be known than the notions of it, and yet the notions of it more necessary to be illustrated than the duties of it; which is that that parables are designed for.

2. In particular, to represent to us that concerning the kingdom of heaven, which he had said in the close of the foregoing chapter, that many that are first shall be last, and the last first; to which this parable is connected; that truth having in it a seeming contradiction, needed further explication.

Nothing was more a mystery in the gospel-dispensation than the rejection of the Jews, and the calling in of the Gentiles; the apostle speaks of it, Eph. iii. 3—6. That the Gentiles should be fellow-heirs; nor was any thing more provoking to the Jews than the intimations of it; now this seems to be the principal scope of this parable, to shew that the Jews should be first called into the vineyard, and many of them should come at the call, but at length the gospel should be preached to the Gentiles, and they would receive it, and be admitted to equal privileges and advantages with the Jews; should be fellow citizens with the saints, which the Jews, even those of them that believed, would be very much disgusted at; but without reason.

But the parable may be applied more generally, and shews us, 1. That God is debtor to no man; a great truth, which the contents in our Bible give as the scope of this parable. 2. That many who begin last, and promise little religion, sometimes, by the blessing of God, arrive to greater attainments in knowledge, grace and usefulness, than others whose entrance was more early, and who promised fairer; though Cushi gets the start of Ahimauz, yet Ahimauz, choosing the way of the plain, outruns Cushi; John is swifter of foot, and comes first to the sepulchre; but Peter has more courage, and goes first into it: Thus many that are last shall be first. Some make it a caution to the disciples, who had boasted of their timely and zealous embracing of Christ; they had left all to follow him; but let them look to it that they keep up their zeal; let them press forwards, and persevere, else their good beginnings will avail them little; they that seemed to be first, would be last: Sometimes those that are converted later in their lives, outstrip those that are converted earlier; Paul was as one born out of due time, yet came not behind the chiefest of the apostles, and outdid those that were in Christ before him. Something of affinity there is between this parable and that of the prodigal son, where he that returned from his wandering was as dear to his father as he was that never went astray; first and last alike. 3. That the recompence of reward will be given to the saints, not according to the time of their conversion, but according to the preparations for it by grace in this world; not according to the seniority, (as Gen. xliii. 33.) but according to the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ. Christ had promised the apostles, who followed him in the regeneration at the beginning of the gospel-dispensation, great glory chap. xix. 23. but now tells them, those that are in like manner faithful to him, even in the latter end of the world, shall have the same reward, shall sit with Christ on his throne, as well as the apostles, Rev. ii. 26.—iii. 21. Sufferers for Christ in the latter days, shall have the same reward with the martyrs and confessors of the primitive times, though they are more celebrated; and faithful ministers now the same with the first fathers.

We have two things in the parable: the agreement with the labourers, and the account with them.

First here is the agreement made with the labourers, ver. 1—7. and here it will be asked, as usual,

1. Who hires them? A man that is an householder. God is the great householder, whose we are, and whom we serve; as a householder he has work that he will have to be done, and servants that he will have to be doing; he hath a great family in heaven and earth, which is named from Jesus Christ, Eph. iii. 16. which he is owner and ruler of: God hires labourers, not because he needs them or their service, for if we be righteous, what do we unto him? but as some charitable generous householders keep poor men to work, in kindness to them, to save them from idleness and poverty, and pay them for working for themselves.

2. Whence they are hired? out of the market-place, where till they are hired into God's service, they stand idle, ver. 3. all the day idle. ver. 6. Note. 1. The soul of man stands ready to be hired into some service or other; it was (as all the creatures were) created to the work, and is either a servant to iniquity, or a servant to righteousness, Rom. vi. 19. The devil, by his temptations, is hiring labourers into his field, to feed swine; God, by his gospel is hiring labourers into his vineyard, to dress it, and keep it, paradise work: We are put to our choice, for hired we must be, Joshua xxiv. 15. Choose ye this day whom ye will serve. 2. Till we are hired into the service of God, we are standing all the day idle; a sinful state, though a state of drudgery to Satan, may really be called a state of idleness; sinners are doing nothing, nothing to the purpose, nothing of the great work they were sent into the world about, nothing that will pass well in the account.

3. The gospel is given to those that stand idle in the market-place: The market-place is a place of concourse, and there wisdom cries, Prov. i. 20, 21. it is a place of sport, there the children are playing, chap. xi. 16. and the gospel calls us from vanity to seriousness: It is a place of business, of noise, and hurry, and from thence we are called to retire. Come, come from this market-place.

3. What are they hired to? To labour in his vineyard. Note. 1. The church is God's vineyard, is of his planting, watering, and fencing; and the fruits of it must be to his honour and praise. 2. We are all called upon to be labourers in this vineyard: The work of religion is vineyard-work, pruning, dressing, digging, watering, fencing, weeding; we have each of us our own vineyard to keep, our own soul, and it is God's, and to be kept and dressed for him. In this work we must not be slothful, not loiterers, but labourers, working, and working out our own salvation: Work for God will not admit of trifling: A man may go idle to hell, but he that will go to heaven must be busy.

4. What will be their wages? He promiseth, 1. A penny, ver. 2. The Roman penny was in our money of the value of sevenpence halfpenny, a day's wages for a day's work, and the wages sufficient for the day's maintenance. This doth not prove that the reward of our obedience to God is of works, or of debt: no, it is of grace, free grace, Rom. iv. 4. or that there is any proportion between our services and heaven's glories; no, when we have done all we are unprofitable servants; but it is to signify, that there is a reward set before us, and a sufficient one. 2. Whatsoever is right, ver. 4—7. Note, God will be sure not to be behind-hand with any for the service they do him: never any lost by the working for God. The crown set before us is a crown of righteousness, which the righteous Judge shall give.

5. For what term are they hired? For a day: It is but a day's work that is here done: the time of life is the day, in which we must work the works of him that sent us into the world: It is a short time; the reward is for eternity, the work is but for a day; man is said to accomplish as a hireling his day, Job xiv. 16. This should quicken us to expedition and diligence in our work, that we have but a little time to work in, and the night is hastening on when no man can work; and if our great work be undone when our day is done, we are undone for ever. It should also encourage us in reference to the hardships and difficulties of our work, that it is, but for a day; the approaching shadow, which the servant earnestly desireth, will bring with it both rest and the reward of our work, Job vii. 2. Hold out faith and patience yet a little while.

6. Notice is taken of the several hours of the day, at which the labourers were hired. The apostles were sent forth at the first and third hour of the gospel-day; they had a first and second mission while Christ was on earth, and their business was to call in the Jews; after Christ's ascension, about the sixth and ninth hour, they went out again on the same errand, preaching the gospel to the Jews only, to them in Judea first, and afterwards to them of the dispersion; but at length, as it were about the eleventh hour, they called the Gentiles to the same work and privilege with the Jews and told them that in Christ Jesus there should be no difference made between Jew and Greek.

But this may be, and commonly is, applied to the several ages of life in which souls are converted to Christ. The common call is promiscuous, to come work in the vineyard; but the effectual call is particular, and it is then effectual, when they come at the call.

(1.) Some are effectually called, and begin to work in the vineyard when they are very young, are sent in early in the morning, whose tender years are seasoned with grace, and the remembrance of their Creator. John Baptist was sanctified from the womb, and therefore great, Luke i. 15. Timothy from a child, 2 Tim. iii. 15. Obadiah feared the Lord from his youth. Those that have such a journey to go had need set out betimes, the sooner the better.

(3.) Others are hired into the vineyard in old age, at the eleventh hour, when the day of life is far spent, and there is but one hour of the twelve remaining. None are hired at the twelfth hour, when life is done opportu-

kept by it, 1 Pet. i. 5. Job's experience of God's convincing, humbling grace, made him acknowledge more than any thing else, I know that thou canst do every thing, Job xlii. 2. To the salvation of rich people especially; it is impossible with men that such should be saved, but with God even this is possible; not that rich people should be saved in their worldliness, but that they should be saved from it. Note, The sanctification and salvation of such as are surrounded with the temptations of this world, is not to be despised; it is possible it may be brought about by the all-sufficiency of the divine grace, and when such are brought to heaven, they will be there everlasting monuments of the power of God. I am willing to think, that in this word of Christ, there is an intimation of mercy Christ had yet in store for this young gentleman, that was now gone away sorrowful; it was not impossible to God yet to recover him, and bring him to a better mind.

Secondly, Peter took occasion from hence to enquire what they should get by it, who had come up to these terms, upon which this young man broke with Christ, and had left all to follow him, ver. 27, &c. where we have the disciples' expectations from Christ, and his promises to them.

1. We have their expectations from Christ; Peter, in the name of the rest, signifies that they depended upon him for something considerable in lieu of what they had left for him. Behold, we have forsaken all and have followed thee; what shall we have, therefore? Christ had promised the young man, that if he would sell all, and come and follow him, he should have treasure in heaven; now Peter desires to know,

(1.) Whether they had sufficiently come up to those terms: they had not sold all, for they had many of them wives and families to provide for, but they had forsaken all; they had not given it to the poor, but they had renounced it as far as it might be any way a hindrance to them in serving Christ. Note, When we hear what are the characters of those that shall be saved, it concerns us to enquire whether we, through grace, answer those characters. Now Peter hopes, that as to the main scope and intendment of the condition, they had come up to it, for God had wrought in them a holy contempt of the world, and the things that are seen; in comparison with Christ, and the things that are not seen; and how this must be evidenced, no certain rule can be given, but according as we are called.

Lord, saith Peter, we have forsaken all. Alas! it was but a poor all that they had forsaken; one of them had indeed quitted a place in the custom-house, but Peter, and the most of them, had only left a few boats and nets, and the appurtenances of a poor fishing-trade, and yet see how big Peter there speaks of it, as if it had been some mighty thing: Behold, we have forsaken all. Note, We are too apt to make the most of our services and sufferings, our expenses and losses for Christ, and to think we have made him much our debtor. However, Christ doth not upbraid them with this, though it was but little they had forsaken, yet it was their all, like the widow's two mites, and was as dear to them as if it had been more, and therefore Christ took it kindly that they left it to follow him; for he accepts according to what a man hath.

(2.) Whether therefore they might expect that treasure the young man shall have if he will sell all: Lord, saith Peter, shall we have it who have left all? All people are for what they can get, and Christ's followers are allowed to content their own true interest, and to ask, What shall we have? Christ looked at the joy set before him, and Moses at the recompence of reward. For this end it is set before us, that by a patient continuance in well-doing we might seek for it. Christ encourageth us to ask what we shall gain by leaving all to follow him, that we may see he doth not call us to our prejudice, but unspeakably to our advantage. As it is the language of an obedient faith to ask, What shall we do? with an eye to the precepts: so it is of a hoping, trusting faith to ask, What shall we have? with an eye to the promises. But observe, the disciples had long since left all to engage themselves in the service of Christ, and yet never, till now, asked, What shall we have? Though there was no visible prospect of advantage by it, they were so well assured of his goodness, that they knew they should not lose by him at last, and therefore referred themselves to him, in what way he would make up their losses to them; minded their work, and asked not what should be their wages? Note, It honours Christ to trust him, and serve him, and not to indent with him. Now this young man was gone from Christ to his possessions, it was time for them to think which they should take to, what they should trust to? when we see what others keep by their hypocrisy and apostacy, it is proper for us to consider what we hope, through grace, to gain, not for, but by our sincerity and constancy, and then we shall see more reason to pity them than to envy them.

2. We have here Christ's promises to them, and to all others that tread in the steps of their faith and obedience: What there was either of vain glory or vain hopes in that which Peter said, Christ overlooks, and is not extreme to mark it, but takes this occasion to give the bond of a promise.

(1.) To his immediate followers, ver. 28. They had signified their respects to him as the first that followed him, and to them he promiseth not only treasure, but honour in heaven; and here they have a grant or patent for it, from him who is the fountain of honour in that kingdom: Ye which have followed me in the regeneration shall sit upon twelve thrones. Observe,

1. The preamble to the patent, or the consideration of the grant, which, as usual, is a recital of their services; you have followed me in the regeneration, and therefore this will I do for you. The time of Christ's appearing in this world was a time of regeneration, of reformation; Heb. ix. 10. when old things began to pass away, and all things to look new. The disciples had followed Christ when the Church was yet in the embryo, when the gospel-temple was but in the framing, when they had more of the work and service of apostles, than of the dignity and power that belonged to their office. Now they followed Christ with a constant fatigue when few did, and therefore on them he will put particular marks of honour. Note, Christ hath special favour for those that begin early with him, that trust him further than they can see him, as they did who followed him in the regeneration. Observe, Peter spoke of their forsaking all to follow him, Christ only speaks of their following him, which was the main matter.

2. The date of their honour, which fixeth the time when it should commence, not immediately from the day of the date of these presents; no, they must continue a while in obscurity, as they were: But when the Son of man shall sit in the throne of his glory? and to this some refer that, in the regeneration; you which now have followed me, shall in the regeneration be thus dignified, Christ's second coming will be a regeneration, when there shall be new heavens, and a new earth, and the restitution of all things. All that partake of the regeneration in grace, (John iii. 3.) shall partake of the regeneration in glory; for as grace is the first resurrection, Rev. xx. 6. so glory is the second regeneration.

Now their honour being adjourned till the Son of man's sitting in the throne of his glory, intimates, 1. That they must stay for their advancement till then. Note, As long as our Master's glory is delayed, it is fit that ours should be so too, and that we should wait for it with an earnest expectation, as of a hope not seen, Rom. viii. 19. We must live, and work, and suffer, in faith, and hope, and patience, which therefore must be tried by these delays: 2. That they must share with Christ in his advancement;

their honour must be a communion with him in his honour. They having suffered with a suffering Jesus, must reign with a reigning Jesus, for both here and hereafter Christ will be all in all; we must be where he is, John xii. 26. must appear with him, Col. iii. 4. And this will be an abundant recompence; not only for our loss, but for the delay; and when our Lord comes, we shall receive not only our own; but our own with usury. The longest voyages make the richest returns.

3. The honour itself hereby granted: Ye shall also sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel. It is hard to determine the particular sense of this promise, and whether it was not to have many accomplishments, which I see no harm in admitting. 1. When Christ is ascended to the right hand of the Father, and sits on the throne of his glory, there the apostles shall receive power by the Holy Ghost, (Acts i. 8.) shall be so much advanced above themselves as they are now, that they shall think themselves upon thrones in promoting the gospel, they shall deliver it with authority, as a judge from the bench; they shall then have their commission enlarged, and shall publish the laws of Christ, by which the church, God's spiritual Israel, (Gal. vi. 16.) shall be governed, and Israel according to the flesh, that continues in infidelity, with all others that do likewise, shall be condemned. This honour and power given them may be explained by Jer. i. 10. See, I have set thee over the nations, and Ezek. xx. 4. Will thou judge them? and Dan. vii. 18. The saints shall take the kingdom; and Rev. xii. 11. where the doctrine of Christ is called a crown of twelve stars: 2. When Christ appears for the destruction of Jerusalem; Matt. xxiv. 30. then shall he send the apostles to judge the Jewish nation, because in that destruction their predictions, according to the word of Christ, would be accomplished: 3. Some think it has reference to the conversion of the Jews, which is yet to come, at the latter end of the world, after the fall of antichrist, so Dr. Whitby; and that "it respects the apostles' government of the twelve tribes of Israel, not by a resurrection of their persons, but by a reviviscence of that Spirit which reled in them, and of that purity and knowledge which they delivered to the world; and, chiefly, by admission of their gospel to be the standard of their faith, and the direction of their lives." 4. It is certainly to have its full accomplishment at the second coming of Jesus Christ, when the saints in general shall judge the world, and the twelve apostles especially, as assessors with Christ, in the judgment of the great day, when all the world shall receive their final doom, and they shall ratify and applaud the sentence: But the tribes of Israel are named, partly because the number of the apostles was designedly the same with the number of the tribes; partly because the apostles were of the Jewish nation, befriended them most, but were most spitefully persecuted by them; and it intimates, that the saints will judge their acquaintance and kindred according to the flesh, and will, in the great day, judge those they had a kindness for; will judge their persecutors, who in this world judged them.

But the general intendment of this promise is, to shew the glory and dignity reserved for the saints in heaven, which will be an abundant recompence for the disgrace they suffered here in Christ's cause: There are higher degrees of glory for those that have done and suffered most. The apostles in this world were hurried and tossed, there they shall sit down at rest and ease: Here bonds, and afflictions, and deaths, did abide them, but there they shall sit on thrones of glory: Here they were dragged to the bar, there they shall be advanced to the bench: Here the twelve tribes of Israel trampled upon them, there they shall tremble before them. And will not this be recompence enough to make up all their losses and expences for Christ? See Luke xxi. 29.

4. The ratification of this grant, it is firm, it is inviolably immutably sure; for Christ hath said, Verily I say unto you, I the Amen, the faithful Witness, who am impowered to make this grant, I have said it, and it cannot be disannulled.

(2.) Here is a promise to all others that should in like manner leave all to follow Christ. It was not peculiar to the apostles to be thus preferred, but this honour have all his saints: Christ will take care they shall none of them lose by him, ver. 29. Every one that has forsaken any thing for Christ, shall receive.

1. Losses for Christ are here supposed: Christ had told them that his disciples must deny themselves in all that is done to them in this world; now here he instructeth in particulars, for it is good to count upon the worst; if they have not forsaken all, as the apostles did, yet they have forsaken a great deal, houses suppose, and have turned themselves out to wander in deserts; or dear relations, that would not go with them to follow Christ; these are particularly mentioned, as hardest for a tender gracious spirit to part with; brethren, or sisters, or father, or mother, or wife, or children: and lands are added in the close, the profits of which were the support of the family.

Now, (1.) The loss of these things is supposed to be for Christ's name's sake, else he doth not oblige himself to make it up: Many forsake brethren, and wife, and children, in humour and passion, as the bird that wanders from her nest; that is a sinful desertion: But if we forsake them for Christ's sake, because we cannot keep them and keep a good conscience, we must either quit them, or quit our interest in Christ; nor quit our concern for them, or our duty to them, but our comfort in them, and will do it rather than deny Christ, and this with an eye to him, and to his will and glory; this is that which shall be thus recompenced. It is not the suffering, but the cause, that makes both the martyr and the confessor.

(2.) It is supposed to be a great loss, and yet Christ undertakes to make it up, for he is able to do it he it never so great. See the barbarity of the persecutors, that they stripped innocent people of all they had for no other crime but because they adhered to Christ! See the patience of the persecuted, and the strength of their love to Christ, which was such as all these waters could not quench!

2. A recompence of these losses is here secured. Thousands have dealt with Christ and have trusted him far, but never any one lost by him, never any one but was an unspeakable gainer by him, when the account came to be balanced. Christ here gives his word for it, that he will not only indemnify his suffering servants, and save them harmless, but will abundantly reward them: Let them make a schedule of their losses for Christ, and they shall be sure to receive,

(1.) A hundred-fold in this life, sometimes in kind, in the things themselves they have parted with; God will raise up for his suffering servants more friends, that will be so to them for Christ's sake, than they have left that were so for their own sakes. The apostles, wherever they came, met with those that were kind to them, and entertained them, and opened their hearts and doors to them. However, they shall receive a hundred-fold in kindness, in those things that are abundantly better, and more valuable. Their graces shall increase, their comforts abound, they shall have tokens of God's love, more free communion with him, more full communications from him, clearer foresights, and sweeter foretastes of the glory to be revealed; and then they may truly say, they have received a hundred times more comfort in God and Christ, than they could have had in wife, or children.

(2.) Eternal life at last. The former is toward enough, if there were no more;

more; cent. per cent. is great profit; what then is hundred to one; but this comes in over and above, as it were into the bargain: The life here promised includes in it all the comforts of life in the highest degree, and all eternal. Now if we could but mix faith with the promise, and trust Christ for the performance of it, surely we should think nothing too much to do, nothing too hard to suffer, nothing too dear to part with, for him.

Our Saviour, in the last verse, obviates a mistake of some, as if a pre-eminence in glory went by precedence in time, other than the measure and degree of grace: No; many that are first shall be last, and the last first, ver. 30. God will cross hands, will reveal that to babes, which he hid from the wise and prudent; will reject unbelieving Jews, and receive believing Gentiles. The heavenly inheritance is not given as earthly inheritances commonly are, by seniority of age, and priority of birth, but according to God's pleasure. This is the text of another sermon, which we shall meet with in the next chapter.

CHAP. XX.

We have four things in this chapter; 1. The parable of the labourers in the vineyard, ver. 1—16. 2. A prediction of Christ's approaching sufferings, ver. 17, 18, 19. 3. The petition of two of the disciples, by their mother, reproved, ver. 20—28. 4. The petition of the two blind men granted, and their eyes opened, ver. 29—34.

1. FOR the kingdom of heaven is like unto a man that is an housholder, which went out early in the morning to hire labourers into his vineyard. 2. And when he had agreed with the labourers for a penny a day, he sent them into his vineyard. 3. And he went out about the third hour, and saw others standing idle in the market place. 4. And said unto them; Go ye also into the vineyard, and whatsoever is right I will give you. And they went their way. 5. Again he went about the sixth and ninth hour, and did likewise. 6. And about the eleventh hour he went out, and found others standing idle, and said unto them, Why stand ye here all the day idle? 7. They say unto him, Because no man hath hired us. He said unto them, Go ye also into the vineyard; and whatsoever is right, that shall ye receive. 8. So when even was come, the lord of the vineyard said unto his steward, Call the labourers, and give them their hire, beginning from the last unto the first. 9. And when they came that were hired about the eleventh hour, they received every man a penny. 10. But when the first came, they supposed that they should have received more: and they likewise received every man a penny. 11. And when they had received it, they murmured against the good man of the house, 12. Saying, These last have wrought but one hour, and thou hast made them equal unto us, which have bore the burden and heat of the day. 13. But he answered one of them, and said, Friend, I do thee no wrong: didst not thou agree with me for a penny? 14. Take that thine is, and go thy way: I will give unto this last, even as unto thee. 15. Is it not lawful for me to do what I will with mine own? Is thine eye evil, because I am good? 16. So the last shall be first, and the first last: for many are called but few chosen.

This parable of the labourers in the vineyard is intended,

1. To represent to us the kingdom of heaven, ver. 1. that is, the way and method of the gospel-dispensation. The laws of that kingdom are not wrapped up in parables, but plainly set down, as in the sermon upon the mount; but the mysteries of that kingdom are delivered in parables, in sacraments, as here, and Matt. xiii. The duties of Christianity are more necessary to be known than the notions of it, and yet the notions of it more necessary to be illustrated than the duties of it; which is that that parables are designed for.

2. In particular, to represent to us that concerning the kingdom of heaven, which he had said in the close of the foregoing chapter, that many that are first shall be last, and the last first; to which this parable is connected; that truth having in it a seeming contradiction, needed further explication.

Nothing was more a mystery in the gospel-dispensation than the rejection of the Jews, and the calling in of the Gentiles; the apostle speaks of it, Eph. iii. 3—6. That the Gentiles should be fellow-heirs; nor was any thing more provoking to the Jews than the intimations of it; now this seems to be the principal scope of this parable, to shew that the Jews should be first called into the vineyard, and many of them should come at the call, but at length the gospel should be preached to the Gentiles, and they would receive it, and be admitted to equal privileges and advantages with the Jews; should be fellow citizens with the saints, which the Jews, even those of them that believed, would be very much disgusted at, but without reason.

But the parable may be applied more generally, and shews us, 1. That God is debtor to no man; a great truth, which the contents in our Bible give as the scope of this parable. 2. That many who begin last, and promise little religion, sometimes, by the blessing of God, arrive to greater attainments in knowledge, grace and usefulness, than others whose entrance was more early, and who promised fairer; though Cushi gets the start of Ahimaaz, yet Ahimaaz, choosing the way of the plain, outruns Cushi; John is swifter of foot, and comes first to the sepulchre; but Peter has more courage, and goes first into it: Thus many that are last shall be first. Some make it a caution to the disciples, who had boasted of their timely and zealous embracing of Christ; they had left all to follow him; but let them look to it that they keep up their zeal; let them press forwards, and persevere, else their good beginnings will avail them little; they that seemed to be first, would be last: Sometimes those that are converted later in their lives, outstrip those that are converted earlier; Paul was as one born out of due time, yet came not behind the chiefest of the apostles, and outdid those that were in Christ before him. Something of affinity there is between this parable and that of the prodigal son, where he that returned from his wandering was as dear to his father as he was that never went astray; first and last alike. 3. That the recompence of reward will be given to the saints, not according to the time of their conversion, but according to the preparations for it by grace in this world; not according to the seniority, (as Gen. xliii. 33.) but according to the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ. Christ had promised the apostles, who followed him in the regeneration at the beginning of the gospel-dispensation, great glory chap. xix. 23. but now tells them, those that are in like manner faithful to him, even in the latter end of the world, shall have the same reward, shall sit with Christ on his throne, as well as the apostles, Rev. ii. 26.—iii. 21. Sufferers for Christ in the latter days, shall have the same reward with the martyrs and confessors of the primitive times, though they are more celebrated; and faithful ministers now the same with the first fathers.

We have two things in the parable: the agreement with the labourers, and the account with them.

First here is the agreement made with the labourers, ver. 1—7. and here it will be asked, as usual,

1. Who hires them? A man that is an housholder. God is the great housholder, whose we are, and whom we serve; as a housholder he has work that he will have to be done, and servants that he will have to be doing; he hath a great family in heaven and earth, which is named from Jesus Christ, Eph. iii. 16. which he is owner and ruler of: God hires labourers, not because he needs them or their service, for if we be righteous, what do we unto him? but as some charitable generous householders keep poor men to work, in kindness to them, to save them from idleness and poverty, and pay them for working for themselves.

2. Whence they are hired? out of the market-place, where till they are hired into God's service, they stand idle, ver. 3. all the day idle, ver. 6. Note. 1. The soul of man stands ready to be hired into some service or other; it was (as all the creatures were) created to the work, and is either a servant to iniquity, or a servant to righteousness, Rom. vi. 19. The devil, by his temptations, is hiring labourers into his field, to feed swine; God, by his gospel is hiring labourers into his vineyard, to dress it, and keep it, paradise work: We are put to our choice, for hired we must be, Joshua xxiv. 15. Choose ye this day whom ye will serve. 2. Till we are hired into the service of God, we are standing all the day idle; a sinful state, though a state of drudgery to Satan, may really be called a state of idleness; sinners are doing nothing, nothing to the purpose, nothing of the great work they were sent into the world about, nothing that will pass well in the account.

3. The gospel is given to those that stand idle in the market-place: The market-place is a place of concourse, and there wisdom cries, Prov. i. 20, 21. it is a place of sport, there the children are playing, chap. xi. 16. and the gospel calls us from vanity to seriousness: It is a place of business, of noise, and hurry, and from that we are called to retire. Come, come from this market-place.

3. What are they hired to? To labour in his vineyard. Note. 1. The church is God's vineyard, is of his planting, watering, and fencing; and the fruits of it must be to his honour and praise. 2. We are all called upon to be labourers in this vineyard: The work of religion is vineyard-work, pruning, dressing, digging, watering, fencing, weeding; we have each of us our own vineyard to keep, our own soul, and it is God's, and to be kept and dressed for him. In this work we must not be slothful, not loiterers, but labourers, working, and working out our own salvation: Work for God will not admit of trifling: A man may go idle to hell, but he that will go to heaven must be busy.

4. What will be their wages? He promiseth, 1. A penny, ver. 2. The Roman penny was in our money of the value of sevenpence halfpenny, a day's wages for a day's work, and the wages sufficient for the day's maintenance. This doth not prove that the reward of our obedience to God is of works, or of debt; no, it is of grace, free grace, Rom. iv. 4. or that there is any proportion between our services and heaven's glories; no, when we have done all we are unprofitable servants; but it is to signify, that there is a reward set before us, and a sufficient one. 2. Whatsoever is right, ver. 4—7. Note, God will be sure not to be behind-hand with any for the service they do him: never any lost by the working for God. The crown set before us is a crown of righteousness, which the righteous Judge shall give.

5. For what term are they hired? For a day: It is but a day's work that is here done: the time of life is the day, in which we must work the works of him that sent us into the world: It is a short time; the reward is for eternity, the work is but for a day; man is said to accomplish as a hireling his day, Job xiv. 16. This should quicken us to expedition and diligence in our work, that we have but a little time to work in, and the night is hastening on when no man can work; and if our great work be undone when our day is done, we are undone for ever. It should also encourage us in reference to the hardships and difficulties of our work, that it is but for a day; the approaching shadow, which the servant earnestly desireth, will bring with it both rest and the reward of our work, Job vii. 2. Hold out faith and patience yet a little while.

6. Notice is taken of the several hours of the day, at which the labourers were hired. The apostles were sent forth at the first and third hour of the gospel-day; they had a first and second mission while Christ was on earth, and their business was to call in the Jews; after Christ's ascension, about the sixth and ninth hour, they went out again on the same errand, preaching the gospel to the Jews only, to them in Judea first, and afterwards to them of the dispersion; but at length, as it were about the eleventh hour, they called the Gentiles to the same work and privilege with the Jews and told them that in Christ Jesus there should be no difference made between Jew and Greek.

But this may be, and commonly is, applied to the several ages of life in which souls are converted to Christ. The common call is promiscuous, to come work in the vineyard; but the effectual call is particular, and it is then effectual, when they come at the call.

(1.) Some are effectually called, and begin to work in the vineyard when they are very young, are sent in early in the morning, whose tender years are seasoned with grace, and the remembrance of their Creator. John Baptist was sanctified from the womb, and therefore great, Luke i. 15. Timothy from a child, 2 Tim. iii. 15. Obadiah feared the Lord from his youth. Those that have such a journey to go had need set out betimes, the sooner the better.

(2.) Others are savingly wrought upon in middle age, go work in the vineyard at the third, sixth, or ninth hour. The power of divine grace is magnified in the conversion of some, when they are in the midst of their pleasures and worldly pursuits, as Paul. God has work for all ages: no time amiss to turn to God; none can say it is all in good time, for whatever hour of the day it is with us, the time past of our life may suffice that we have served sin; Go ye also into the vineyard. God turns away none that are willing to be hired, for yet there is room.

nity is done; but "while there is life, there is hope." 1. There is hope for old sinners, for if in sincerity they turn to God, they shall doubtless be accepted; true repentance is never too late: And, 2. There is hope of old sinners, that they may be brought to true repentance; nothing is too hard for almighty grace to do, that can change the Ethiopian's skin, and the leopard's spots; can set those to work who have contracted a habit of idleness. Nicodemus may be born again when he is old, and the old man may be put off, which is corrupt.

Yet let none, upon this presumption, put off their repentance till they are old. These were sent into the vineyard, it is true, at the eleventh hour, but nobody had hired them, or offered to hire them before: The Gentiles came in at the eleventh hour, but it was because the gospel had not been before preached to them. Those that have had gospel-offers made them at the third or sixth hour, and have resisted and refused them, will not have that to say for themselves at the eleventh hour that these had. No man has hired us; nor can they be sure that any man will hire them at the ninth, or eleventh; and therefore, not to discourage any, but to awaken all, be it remembered, that now is the accepted time; if we will hear his voice, it must be to-day.

Secondly, Here is the account with the labourers. Observe, 1. When the account was taken; when the evening was come, then, as usual, the day-labourers were called and paid. Note, Evening time is the reckoning time; the particular account must be given up in the evening of our life; for after death the judgment. Faithful labourers shall receive their reward when they die; it is deferred till then, that they may wait with patience for it: but no longer; for God will observe his own rule, the hire of the labourers shall not abide with thee all night, until the morning: See Deut. xxiv. 15. When Paul, that faithful labourer, departs, he is with Christ presently. The payment shall not be wholly deferred till the morning of the resurrection, but then, in the evening of the world, will be the general account, when every one shall receive according to the things done in the body: When time ends, and with it the world of work and opportunity, then the state of retribution commeth: Then call the labourers, and give them their hire. Ministers call them into the vineyard, to do their work; death calls them out of the vineyard to receive their penny: and those to whom the call into the vineyard is effectual, the call out of it will be joyful. Observe, They did not come for their pay till they were called; we must with patience wait God's time for our rest and recompence; go by our Master's clock. The last trumpet, at the great day, shall call the labourers, 1 Thess. iv. 16. Then shalt thou call, faith the good and faithful servant, and I will answer. In calling the labourers, they must begin from the last, and so to the first: Let not those that come in at the eleventh hour be put behind the rest, but, lest they should be discouraged, call them first. At the great day, though the dead in Christ shall rise first, yet they which are alive and remain, on whom the end of the world (the eleventh hour of its day) comes, shall be caught up together with them in the clouds; no preference shall be given to seniority, but every man shall stand in his own lot at the end of the days.

2. What the account was; and in that observe,

(1.) The general pay, ver. 9, 10. They received every man a penny. Note, All that by patient continuance in well doing seek for glory, honour, and immortality, shall undoubtedly obtain eternal life, Rom. ii. 7. not as wages for the value of their work, but as the gift of God. Though there be degrees of glory in heaven, yet it will be to all a complete happiness: They that come from the east and west, and so come in late, that are picked up out of the highways and hedges, yet shall sit down with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, at the same feast, Matt. viii. 11. In heaven every vessel will be full, brim full, though every vessel is not alike large and capacious. In the distributions of future joys, as it was in the gathering of the manna, he that shall gather much will have nothing over, and he that shall gather little will have no lack, Exod. xvi. 18. Those whom Christ fed miraculously, though of different sizes, men, women and children, yet did all eat, and were filled.

The giving of a whole day's wages to those that had not done the tenth part of a day's work, is designed to shew, that God distributes his rewards by grace and sovereignty, and not of debt: The best of the labourers, and those that begin soonest, yet having so many empty spaces in their time, and their works not being filled up before God, may truly be said to labour in the vineyard scarce one hour of their twelve; but because we are under grace, and not under the law, even such defective services, done in sincerity, shall not only be accepted, but by free grace richly rewarded. Compare Luke xvi. 7, 8. with Luke xii. 37.

(2.) The particular pleading with those that were offended with this distribution in gavel-kind. The circumstances of this serve to adorn the parable, but the general scope is plain, that the last shall be first. We have here,

1. The offence taken, ver. 11, 12. They murmured at the good man of the house; not that there is or can be any discontent or murmuring in heaven, for that is both guilt and grief, and in heaven there is neither; but there may be, and often is, discontent and murmuring concerning heaven and heavenly things, while they are in prospect and promise in this world. This signifies the jealousy which the Jews were provoked to by the admission of the Gentiles into the kingdom of heaven: As the elder brother, in the parable of the prodigal, repined at the reception of the younger brother, and complained of his father's generosity to him; so these labourers quarrelled with their master and found fault, not because they had not enough, so much as because others were made equal with them: They boast as the prodigal's elder brother did, of their good services: We have borne the burden and heat of the day; that was the most they could make of it: Sinners are said to labour on the very fire, Hab. ii. 13. whereas God's servants, at the worst, do but labour in the sun; not in the heat of the iron furnace, but only in the heat of the day: Now these last were worked but one hour, and that too in the cool of the day, and yet thou hast made them equal with us. The Gentiles, that are newly called in, have as much of the privileges of the kingdom of the Messiah as the Jews have, that have so long been labouring in the vineyard of the Old Testament church; under the yoke of the ceremonial law, in expectation of that kingdom. Note, There is a great proneness in us to think that we have too little, and others too much, of the tokens of God's favour; and that we do too much, and others too little in the work of God: Very apt we all are to undervalue others' deserts, and to overvalue our own. Perhaps Christ here gives an intimation to Peter not to boast too much, as he seemed to do, of his having left all to follow Christ; as if, because he and the rest of them had borne the burden and heat of the day thus, they must have a heaven by themselves. It is hard for those that do or suffer more than ordinary for God, not to be elevated too much with the thought of it, and to expect to merit by it. Blessed Paul guarded against this, when, though the chief of the apostles, he owned himself to be nothing, to be less than the least of all saints.

2. The offence removed. Three things the master of the house urgeth, in answer to this ill-natured turn of mind.

(1.) That the complainant had no reason at all to say he had any wrong done to him, ver. 13, 14. Here he asserts his own justice, Friend, I do thee no wrong. He calls him friend, for in reasoning with others we should use soft words and hard arguments; if our inferiors are peevish and provoking, yet we should not thereby be put into a passion, but speak calmly to them. 1. It is incontestably true, that God can do no wrong. This is the prerogative of the King of kings. Is there unrighteousness with God? The apostle startles at the thought of it; God forbid! Rom. viii. 3, 6. His word should silence all our murmurings, that whatever God doth to us, or withhold from us, he doth no wrong. 2. If God gives that grace to others which he denies to us, it is kindness to them but no injustice to us; and bounty to another, while it is no injustice to us, we ought not to find fault with: Because it is free grace that is given to those that have it, boasting is for ever excluded; and because it is free grace that is withheld from those that have it not, murmuring is for ever excluded; Thus shall every mouth be stopped, and all flesh shall be silent before God.

To convince the murmurer that he did no wrong, he refers him to the bargain, Didst thou not agree with me for a penny? and if thou hadst what thou didst agree for, thou hast no reason to cry out of wrong; thou shalt have what we agreed for: Though God is a debtor to none, yet he is graciously pleased to make himself a debtor by his own promise, for the benefit of which, through Christ, believers agree with him, and he will stand to his part of the agreement. Note, It is good for us often to consider what it was that we agreed with God for. 1. Carnal worldlings agree with God for their penny in this world; they choose their portion in this life, Psalm. xvii. 14. in these things they are willing to have their reward, Matt. vi. 2—5. their consolation, Luke vi. 24. their good things, Luke xvi. 25. and with these they shall be put off, shall be cut off from spiritual and eternal blessings; and herein God doth them no wrong; they have what they choose, the penny they agreed for; so shall their doom be, themselves have decided it; it is conclusive against them. 2. Obedient believers agree with God for their penny in the other world, and they must remember that they have so agreed. Didst not thou agree to take God's word for it? thou didst; and wilt thou go and agree with the world? Didst not thou agree to take up with heaven as thy portion, thy all, and to take up with nothing short of it? and wilt thou seek for a happiness in the creature, or think from thence to make up the deficiencies of thy happiness in God?

He therefore, 1. Ties him to his bargain, ver. 14. Take that thine is, and go thy way. If we understand it of that which is ours by debt or absolute propriety, it would be a dreadful word; we are all undone if we be put off with that only which we can call our own: The highest creature must go away into nothing, if he must go away with that only which is his own; but if we understand it of that which is ours by gift, the free gift of God: it teacheth us to be content with such things as we have: Instead of repining that we have no more, let us take what we have and be thankful. If God be better in any respect to others than to us, yet we have no reason to complain when he is so much better to us than we deserve, in giving us our penny, though we are unprofitable servants. 2. He tells him, that those he envied should fare as well as he did; I will give unto this last, even as unto thee: I am resolved I will. Note, The unchangeableness of God's purposes in dispensing his gifts, should silence our murmuring: If he will do it, it is not for us to gainsay; for he is in one mind, and who can turn him; neither giveth he an account of any of his matters; nor is it fit he should.

(2.) He had no reason to quarrel with the master, for what he gave was absolutely his own, ver. 15. As before he asserted his justice, so here his sovereignty; Is it not lawful for me to do what I will with my own? Note, 1. God is the owner of all good, his propriety in it is absolute, sovereign and unlimited. 2. He may therefore give or withhold his blessings as he pleaseth. What we have is not our own, and therefore it is not lawful for us to do what we will with it; but what God has is his own; and this will justify him. (1.) In the disposals of his providence; when God takes from us that which was dear to us, and which we could ill spare, we must silence our discontents with this: May he not do what he will with his own? Absolutit, sed & deus. It is not for such depending creatures as we are to quarrel with our sovereign. (2.) In all the dispensations of his grace, God gives or withholds the means of grace, and the Spirit of grace, as he pleaseth: Not but that there is a counsel in every will of God, and what seems to us to be done arbitrarily, will appear at length to have been done wisely and for holy ends: But this is enough to silence all murmurers and objectors, that God is sovereign Lord of all, and may do what he will with his own. We are in his hand, as clay in the hand of the potter; and it is not for us to prescribe to him or strive with him.

(3.) He had no reason to envy his fellow servant or to grudge at him; nor to be angry that he came into the vineyard no sooner; for he was not sooner called; not to be angry that the master had given him wages for the whole day, when he had idled away the greatest part of it, for, Is thine eye evil, because I am good? See here,

1. The nature of envy, it is an evil eye. The eye is oftentimes both the inlet and outlet of this sin. Saul saw that David prospered, and he eyed him, 1 Sam. xviii. 9—15. It is an evil eye, being displeased at the good of others, and desiring their hurt: What can have more evil in it? It is grief to ourselves, anger to God, and ill-will to our neighbour; and it is a sin that has neither pleasure, profit, nor honour in it; it is an evil, an only evil.

2. The aggravation of it, it is because I am good. Envy is unlikeness to God, who is good, and doth good, and delights in doing good; nay, it is an opposition and contradiction to God; it is a dislike of his proceedings, and a displeasure at what he doth and is pleased with: It is a direct violation of both the two great commandments at once; both that of love to God, in whose will we should acquiesce; and love to our neighbour, in whose welfare we should rejoice. Thus man's badness takes occasion from God's goodness to be more exceeding sinful.

Lastly, Here is the reddition of the parable, ver. 16: in that observation which occasioned it, chap. xiv. 30. So the first shall be last and the last first. There were many that followed Christ now in the regeneration when the gospel kingdom was first set up, and these Jewish converts seemed to have got the start of others, but Christ, to obviate and silence their boasting, here tells them,

1. That they might possibly be outstripped by their successors in profession, and though they were before others in profession, might be found inferior to them in knowledge, grace and holiness. The Gentile church, which was as yet unborn; the Gentile world, which as yet stood idle in the market-place, would produce greater numbers of eminent, useful Christians, than were found among the Jews. More and more excellent shall be the children of the desolate, than those of the married wife, Isa. liv. 1. Who knows but that the church, in its old age, may be more fat and flourishing than ever, to shew that the Lord is upright? Though primitive Christianity had more of the purity and power of that holy religion, than is to be found in the degenerate age wherein we live, yet what labourers may be sent into the vineyard in the eleventh hour of the church's day, in the Philadelphia period, and what plentiful effusions of the Spirit may then be, above what has been yet, who can tell?

2. That they had reason to fear, lest they themselves should be found hypocrites at last: for many are called, but few chosen. This is applied to the the Jews chap. xxii. 14. It was so then, it is too true still; many are called with a common call, that are not chosen with a saving choice: All that are chosen from eternity, are effectually called, in the fulness of time, Rom. viii. 30. so that in making our effectual calling sure we make sure our election, 2 Pet. i. 10. but it is not so as to the outward call; many are called, and yet refuse, Prov. i. 24. nay, as they are called to God, so they go from him, Hos. xi. 2—7. by which it appears they were not chosen, for the election will obtain, Rom. xi. 7. Note, There are but few chosen Christians, in comparison with the many that are only called Christians; it therefore highly concerns us to build our hope for heaven upon the rock of an eternal choice, and not upon the sand of an external call; and we should fearlest we be found but seeming Christians, and so should really come short; nay, lest we found blemished Christians, and so should seem to come short, Heb. iv. 1.

17. ¶ And Jesus going up to Jerusalem, took the twelve disciples apart in the way, and said unto them, 18. Behold, we go up to Jerusalem, and the Son of man shall be betrayed unto the chief priests, and unto the Scribes, and they shall condemn him to death. 19. And shall deliver him to the Gentiles to mock and to scourge and crucify him: and the third day he shall rise again.

This is the third time that Christ gave his disciples notice of his approaching sufferings; he was now going up to Jerusalem to celebrate the passover, and to offer up himself the great passover; both must be done at Jerusalem, there the passover must be kept, Deut. xii. 5. and there a prophet must perish, because there the great Sanhedrin sat, who were judges in that case, Luke xiii. 33.

Observe, 1. The privacy of this prediction! he took the twelve disciples apart in the way. This was one of those things which was told to them in darkness, but which they were afterwards to speake in the light, Matt. x. 27. His secret was with them, as his friend, and this particularly. It was a hard saying; and if any could bear it, they could. They would be more immediately exposed to peril with him, and therefore it was requisite they should know of it, that being forewarned, they might be fore-armed. It was not fit to be spoken publicly as yet. 1.) Because many that were cool towards him, would hereby have been driven to turn their back upon him; the scandal of the cross would have frightened them from following him any longer. 2.) Because many that were hot for him, would hereby be driven to take up arms in his defence, and it might have occasioned an uproar among the people, Matt. xxvi. 5. which would have been laid to his charge, if he had told them of it publicly before: and besides, that such methods are utterly disagreeable to the genius of this kingdom, which is not of this world; he never countenanced any thing which had a tendency to prevent his sufferings. This discourse was not in the synagogue, or in the house, but in the way, as they travelled along; which teaches us, in our walks and travels with our friends, to keep up such discourse as is good, and the use of edifying: See Deut. xvi. 7.

2. The prediction itself, ver. 18, 19. Observe, (1.) It is but a repetition of what he had once and again said before, chap. xvi. 21.—xvii. 22, 23. This intimates, that he not only saw clearly what troubles lay before him, but that his heart was upon his suffering-work, it filled him, not with fear, then he would have studied to avoid it, and could have done it, but with desire and expectation; he spoke thus frequently of his sufferings, because through them he was to enter into his glory. Note, It is good for us to be often thinking and speaking of our death, and of the sufferings which, it is likely, we may meet with betwixt this and the grave; and thus, by making them more familiar, they would become less formidable: This is one way of dying daily, and of taking up our cross daily, to be daily speaking of the cross, and of dying; which which would come neither the sooner nor the surer, but much the better for our thoughts and discourses of them.

(2.) He is more particular here in foretelling his sufferings than any time before. He had said, chap. xvi. 21. that he should suffer many things and be killed; and chap. xvii. 22. that he should be betrayed into the hands of men, and they should kill him; but here he adds, that he shall be condemned, and delivered to the Gentiles, that they shall mock him, and scourge him, and crucify him. These are frightful things, and the certain foresight of them was enough to damp an ordinary resolution, yet (as was foretold concerning him, Isa. xlii. 4.) he did not fail, nor was discouraged; but the more clearly he foresaw his sufferings, the more cheerfully he went forth to meet them. He foretells by whom he shall suffer, by the chief priests and the Scribes, so he had said before, but here he adds, they shall deliver him to the Gentiles, that he might be the better understood; for the chief priests and Scribes had no power to put him to death, nor was crucifying a manner of death in use among the Jews. Christ suffered from the malice both of Jews and Gentiles; both had a hand in his death, because he was to reconcile both by his cross, Ephes. ii. 16.

(3.) Here, as before, he annexeth the mention of his resurrection and his glory to that of death and sufferings: The third day he shall rise again. He still brings this in, 1. To encourage himself in his sufferings, and to carry them cheerfully through them. He endured the cross for the joy set before him; he foresaw he should rise again, and rise quickly, the third day; He shall be straightway glorified, John xiii. 32. The reward is not only sure, but very near. 2. To encourage his disciples, and comfort them, who would be overwhelmed and greatly terrified by his sufferings. 3. To direct us under all the sufferings of this present time, to keep up believing prospect of the glory to be revealed, to look at the things that are not seen, that are eternal, which will enable us to cull the present afflictions light, and but for a moment.

20. ¶ Then came to him the mother of Zebedee's children with her sons, worshipping him, and desiring a certain thing of him. 21. And he said unto her, What wilt thou? She saith unto him, Grant that these my two sons may sit, the one on thy right hand, and the other on the left in thy kingdom. 22. But Jesus answered and said, Ye know not what ye ask. Are ye able to drink of the cup that I shall drink of, and to be baptized with the baptism that I am baptized with? They say unto him, We are able. 23. And he saith unto them, Ye shall drink indeed of my cup, and be baptized with the baptism that I am baptized with; but to sit on my right hand, and on my left, is not mine to give, but it shall be given to them for whom it is prepared of my Father. 24. And when the ten heard it they were moved with indignation against the two brethren. 25. But Jesus called them unto him, and said, Ye know that the princes of the Gentiles exercise dominion over them, and they that are great exercise authority upon them. 26. But it shall not be so among you: but whosoever will be great among you, let him be your minister. 27. And whosoever will be chief among you, let him be your servant. 28. Even as the Son of man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many.

Here is, first, the request of the two disciples to Christ, and the rectifying of the mistake upon which that was grounded, ver. 20—23. The sons of Zebedee were James and John, two of the first three of Christ's disciples. Peter and they were his favourites; John was the disciple whom Jesus loved, yet none were so often reproved as they, whom Christ loves best he reproves most, Rev. iii. 19.

1. Here is the ambitious address they made to Christ, that they might sit the one on his right hand, and the other on his left in his kingdom, ver. 20, 21. It was a great degree of faith, that they were confident of his kingdom, though now he appeared in meanness; but a great degree of ignorance, that they still expected a temporal kingdom with worldly pomp and power, when Christ had so often told them of sufferings and self-denial. This kingdom they expected to be grandees in. They ask not for employment in his kingdom, but for honour only, and no place would serve them in this imaginary kingdom but the highest next to Christ, and above every body else. It is likely, the last word in Christ's foregoing discourse gave occasion to this request, that the third day he shall rise again. They concluded that his resurrection would be his entrance upon his kingdom, and therefore were resolved to put in betimes for the best place; nor would they lose it for want of speaking early. What Christ said to comfort them, they thus abused, and were puffed up with. Some cannot bear comforts, but they turn them to a wrong purpose; as sweetmeats in a foul stomach breed cholera. Now observe,

1. There was policy in the management of this address, that they put their mother on to present it, that it might be looked upon as her request, and not theirs. Though proud people think well of themselves, they would not be thought to do so, and therefore affect nothing more than a show of humility, Colos. ii. 18. and others must be put on to court that honour for them which they were ashamed to court for themselves. The mother of James and John was Salome, as appears by comparing Matt. xxvii. 46. with Mark xv. 40. Some think she was daughter of Cleophas or Alphaeus, and sister or cousin-german to Mary the Mother of our Lord. She was one of those women that attended Christ, and ministered to him; and they thought she had such an interest in him that he could deny her nothing, and therefore they make her their advocate. Thus when Adonijah had an unreasonable request to make to Solomon, he put Bathsheba on to speak for him. It was their mother's weakness thus to become the tool of their ambition, which she should have given a check to. Those that are wife and good would not be seen in an ill-favoured thing. In gracious requests we should learn this wisdom, to desire the prayers of those that have an interest at the throne of grace; should beg of our praying friends to pray for us, and reckon it a real kindness.

It was likewise policy to ask first for a general grant, that he would do a certain thing for them, not in faith, but in presumption upon that general promise, Ask, and it shall be given you; in which is implied this qualification of our request, that it be according to the revealed will of God, otherwise we ask and have not, if we ask to consume it upon our lusts, James, iv. 3.

2. There was pride at the bottom of it, a proud conceit of their own merit, a proud contempt of their brethren, and a proud desire of honour and preferment; pride is a sin that doth easily beset us, and which it is hard to get clear of. It is holy ambition to strive to excel others in grace and holiness, but it is a sinful ambition to covet to exceed others in pomp and grandeur; seeketh thou great things for thyself, when thou hast just now heard of thy Master's being mocked, and scourged, and crucified! For shame! seek them not, Jer. xiv. 45.

2. Christ's answer to this address, ver. 22, 23, direct not to the mother, but to the sons that sat her on. Though others be our mouth in prayer, the answer will be given to us according as we stand affected. Christ's answer is very mild, they were overtaken in the fault of ambition, but Christ restored them with the spirit of meekness. Observe,

1. How he reproved the ignorance and error of their petition: Ye know not what ye ask. 1. They were much in the dark concerning the kingdom they had their eye upon; they dreamed of a temporal kingdom, whereas Christ's kingdom is not of this world. They knew not what it was to sit on his right hand, and on his left; they talked of it as blind men do of colours. Our apprehensions of that glory which is yet to be revealed, are like the apprehensions which a child has of the preferments of grown men: If at length through grace we arrive at perfection, we shall then put away such childish fancies, when we come to see face to face we shall know what we enjoy; but now, alas! we know not what we ask; we can but ask for the good as it lies in the promise, Tit. i. 2. What it will be in the performance, eye has not seen nor ear heard. 2. They were much in the dark concerning the way to that kingdom. They know not what they ask that ask for the end, but overlook the means, and so put asunder what God has joined together. The disciples thought when they had left what little All they had for Christ, and had gone about the country a while preaching the gospel of the kingdom, and their service and suffering was over, and it was now time to ask, What shall we have? As if nothing were now to be looked for but crowns and garlands; whereas there were far greater hardships and difficulties before them than they had yet met with; they imagined their warfare was accomplished when it was scarce begun, and they had yet but run with the footmen. They dream of being in Canaan presently, and consider not what they shall do in the swellings of Jordan. Note, 1. We are all apt when we are but girding on the harness to boust as though we had put it off. We know not what we ask when we ask for the glory of wearing the crown, and ask not for grace to bear the cross in our way to it.

2. How he expressed the vanity and ambition of their request. They were pleasing themselves with the fancy of sitting on his right hand, and on his left, in great state; now to check this he leads them to the thoughts of their sufferings, and leaves them in the dark about their glory.

1. He leads them to the thoughts of their sufferings, which they were not so mindful of as they ought to have been. They looked so earnestly upon the crown, the prize, that they were ready to plunge headlong and unprepared into the foul way that led to it; and therefore he thinks it necessary cessary to put them in mind of the hardships that were before them, that they might be no surprise or terror to them.

Observe, 1. How fairly he puts the matter to them concerning these difficulties, ver. 22. You would stand candidates for the first post of honour in the kingdom, but are you able to drink of the cup that I shall drink of? You talk of what great things you must have when you have done your work, but are you able to hold out to the end of it? Put the matter seriously to yourselves. These same two disciples once knew not what manner of spirit they were of when they were disturbed with anger, Luke ix. 55. and now were not aware what was amiss in their spirits when they were lifted up with ambition. Christ sees that pride in us which we discern not in ourselves.

Note, 1. That to suffer for Christ is to drink of a cup, and to be baptized with a baptism. In this description of sufferings, 1. It is true that affliction doth abound. It is supposed to be a bitter cup that is drunk of, worm-wood and gall, those waters of a full cup that are wrung out to God's people, Psal. lxxiii. 10. A cup of trembling indeed, but not of fire and brimstone, the portion of the cup of wicked men, Psal. xi. 6. It is supposed to be a baptism, a washing with the waters of affliction; some are dipped in them, the waters compass them about even to the soul, Jonah ii. 5. Others have but a sprinkling of them; both are baptisms, some are overwhelmed in them, as in a deluge, others all wet, as in a sharp shower. But 2. Even in this consolation doth more abound. It is but a cup, not an ocean; it is but a draught, bitter perhaps, but we shall see the bottom of it, it is a cup in the hand of a father, John xviii. 11. and it is full of mixture, Psal. lxxv. 8. It is but a baptism, if dipped, that is the worst of it, not drowned, perplexed but not in despair. Baptism is an ordinance by which we join ourselves to the Lord in covenant and communion, and so is suffering for Christ, Ezek. xx. 37. Isa. xlviii. 10. Baptism is "an outward and visible sign of an inward and spiritual grace," and so is suffering for Christ, for unto us it is given, Phil. i. 29.

2. It is to drink of the same cup that Christ drank of, and to be baptized with the same baptism that he was baptized with. Christ is beforehand with us in suffering, and in that as in other things left us an example. 1. It speaks the condescension of a suffering Christ, that he would drink of such a cup, John xviii. 11. nay, and such a brook, Psal. xc. 7. and drink so deep and yet so cheerfully; that he would be baptized with such a baptism, and was so forward to it, Luke xii. 50. It was much he would be baptized with water as a common sinner, much more with blood as an uncommon malefactor. But in all this he was made in the likeness of sinful flesh, and was made sin for us. 2. It speaks the consolation of suffering Christians, that they do but pledge Christ in the bitter cup, are partakers of his sufferings, and fill up that which is behind of them; we must therefore arm ourselves with the same mind, and go to him without the camp.

3. It is good for us to be often putting it to ourselves, whether we are able to drink of this cup, and to be baptized with this baptism. We must expect suffering, and look upon it as a hard thing to suffer well and as becomes us. Are we able to suffer cheerfully, and in the worst of times still to hold fast our integrity? What can we afford to part with for Christ? How far will we give him credit? Could I find in my heart to drink of a bitter cup, and to be baptized with a bloody baptism, rather than let go my hold of Christ? The truth is, religion, if it be worth any thing, is worth every thing; but it is worth little, if it be not worth suffering for. Now let us sit down and count the cost of dying for Christ rather than denying him, and ask, can we take him upon these terms?

2. See how boldly they engage for themselves, they said, We are able, in hopes of sitting on his right hand and on his left; but at the same time fondly hoped that they should never be tried. As before they knew not what they asked, so now they knew not what they answered. We are able; they would have done well to put in, Lord, by thy strength, and in thy grace we are able, otherwise we are not. But the same that was Peter's temptation, to be confident of his own sufficiency, and presume upon his own strength, was here the temptation of James and John, and it is a sin we are all prone to. They knew not what Christ's cup was, nor what his baptism, and therefore they were thus bold in promising for themselves. But those are commonly most confident that are least acquainted with the cross.

3. See how plainly and positively their sufferings are here foretold, ver. 23. Ye shall drink of my cup. Sufferings foreseen will be the easier borne, especially if looked upon under a right notion, as drinking of his cup, and being baptized with his baptism. Christ began in suffering for us, and expects we should pledge him in suffering for him. Christ will have us know the worst, that we may make the best of our way to heaven. Ye shall drink, i. e. ye shall suffer. James drank the bloody cup first of all the apostles, Acts xii. 2. John, though at last he died in his bed, if we may credit the ecclesiastical historians, yet often drank of this bitter cup, as when he was banished into the Isle of Patmos, Rev. i. 9. and when (as they say) at Ephesus he was put into a cauldron of boiling oil, but was miraculously preserved. He was, as the rest of the apostles, in deaths often. He took the cup, offered himself to the baptism, and it was accepted.

2. He leaves them in the dark about the degrees of their glory. To carry them cheerfully through their sufferings, it was enough to be assured that they should have a place in his kingdom: The lowest seat in heaven is an abundant recompence for the greatest sufferings on earth. But as to the preferments there, it was not fit there should be any intimation given for whom they were intended; for the infirmity of their present state could not bear such a discovery with any evenness. To sit on my right hand and on my left, is not mine to give, and therefore it is not for you to ask it or to know it, but it shall be given to them for whom it is prepared of my Father. Note, 1. It is very probable there are degrees of glory in heaven; for our Saviour seems to allow that there are some that shall sit on his right hand and on his left, in the highest places. 2. As the future glory itself, so the degrees of it are purposed and prepared in the eternal counsel of God; as the common salvation, so the more peculiar honours are appointed, the whole affair is long since settled, and there is a certain measure of the stature, both in grace and glory, Eph. iv. 3. 3. Christ in dispensing the fruits of his own purchase goes exactly by the measures of his Father's purpose. It is not mine to give, save to them (so it may be read) for whom it is prepared. Christ has the sole power of giving eternal life, but then it is to as many as were given him, John xvii. 2. it is not mine to give, i. e. to promise now, that matter is already settled and concerted, and the Father and Son understand one another perfectly well in this matter. It is not mine to give to those that seek it and are ambitious of it, but to those that by great humility and self-denial are prepared for it.

Secondly, Here is the reproof and instruction which Christ gave to the other ten disciples for their displeasure at the request of James and John. He had something to do with them all, they were so weak in knowledge and grace, yet he bore their manners.

1. The fret that the ten disciples were in, ver. 24. They were moved with indignation against the two brethren; not because they were desirous to be preferred, which was their sin, and for which Christ was displeased with them, but because they were desirous to be preferred before them, which was a reflection upon them; many seem to have indignation at sin, but it is not because it is sin, but because it toucheth them. They will inform against a man that swears, but it is only if he swear at them and affront them, not because he dishonours God. These disciples were angry at their brethren's ambition, though they themselves, nay because they themselves were ambitious. Note, It is common for people to be angry at those sins in others, which they allow of and indulge in themselves. Those that are proud and covetous themselves, yet do not care to see others so. Nothing makes more mischief among brethren, nor is the cause of more indignation and contention, than ambition and desire of greatness. We never find Christ's disciples quarreling, but something of this was at the bottom of it.

2. The check that Christ gave them, which was very gentle, rather by way of instruction what they should be, than by way of reprehension for what they were. He had reproved this very sin before, chap. xviii. 3. and told them they must be humble as little children, yet they relapsed into it, and yet he reproved them for it thus mildly.

He called them unto him, which intimates great tenderness and familiarity. He did not in anger bid them get out of his presence, but called them in love to come into his presence; for therefore he is fit to teach, and we are invited to learn of him, because he is meek and lowly in heart. What he had to say concerning both the two disciples and the ten, and therefore he will have them all together. And he tells them, that whereas they were asking which of them should have dominion in a temporal kingdom, there was really no such dominion reserved for any of them. For,

1. They must not be like the princes of the Gentiles. Christ's disciples must not be like Gentiles, do not like princes of the Gentiles. Principality doth no more become ministers than Gentilism doth Christians.

Observe, 1. What is the way of the princes of the Gentiles, ver. 25. to exercise dominion and authority over their subjects, and (if they can but win the upper hand with a strong hand) over one another too. And that which bears them up in it is, that they are great, and great men think they may do any thing. Dominion and authority is the great thing which the princes of the Gentiles pursue, and pride themselves in; they would bear sway, would carry all before them, have every body to truckle to them, and every sheaf bow to theirs. They would have it cried before them, Bow the knee; like Nebuchadnezzar, who slew and kept alive at pleasure.

2. What is the will of Christ concerning his apostles and ministers in this matter.

1. It shall not be so among you. The constitution of the spiritual kingdom is quite different from this. You are to teach the subjects of this kingdom, to instruct and beseech them, to counsel and comfort them, to take pains with them and suffer with them, not to exercise dominion or authority over them; you are not to lord it over God's heritage, 1 Pet. v. 3. but to labour in it. This forbids not only tyranny and abuse of power, but the claim or use of any such secular authority as the princes of the Gentiles lawfully exercise. So hard it is for vain men, even good men, to have such authority and not to be puffed up with it, and do more hurt than good with it, that our Lord Jesus saw fit wholly to banish it out of his church. Paul himself disowns dominion over the faith of any, 2 Cor. i. 24. The pomp and grandeur of the princes of the Gentiles ill becomes Christ's disciples. Now if there were no such power and honour intended to be in the church, it was nonsense for them to be striving who should have it. They knew not what they asked.

2. How then shall it be among the disciples of Christ? Something of greatness among them Christ himself had intimated, and here he explains it. He that will be great among you, that will be chief, that would really be so, and would be found to be so at last, let him be your minister, your servant, ver. 26, 27. Here observe, 1. That it is the duty of Christ's disciples to serve one another for mutual edification. This includes both humility and usefulness. The followers of Christ must be ready to stoop to the meanest offices of love for the good of one another, must submit to one another, 1 Pet. v. 5. Eph. v. 21. and edify one another, Rom. xiv. 19. please one another for good, Rom. xv. 2. The great apostle made himself every one's servant; see 1 Cor. ix. 19. 2. It is the dignity of Christ's disciples faithfully to discharge this duty. The way to be great and chief is to be humble and serviceable. Those are to be best accounted of, and most respected in the church, and will so by all that understand things aright, not those that are dignified with high and mighty names, like the names of the great ones of the earth, that appear in pomp, and assume to themselves a power proportionable; but those that are most humble and self-denying, and lay out themselves most to do good, though to the diminishing of themselves. These honour God most, and those he will honour. As he must become a fool that would be wise, so he must become a servant that would be chief. St. Paul was a great example of this, he laboured more abundantly than they all; made himself (as some would call it) a drudge to his work, and is not he chief? Do we not by consent call him the great apostle, though he called himself less than the least? And perhaps our Lord Jesus had an eye to him, when he said, there were last that should be first; for Paul was one born out of due time, 1 Cor. xv. 8. Not only the youngest child of the family of the apostles, but a posthumous one, yet he became greatest. And perhaps he it was for whom the first post of honour in Christ's kingdom was reserved and prepared of his Father, not for James who sought it; and therefore just before Paul began to be famous as an apostle, providence ordered it so that James was cut off. Acts xii. 1. that in the college of the twelve Paul might be substituted in his room.

2. They must be like the master himself, and it is very fit they should; that while they were in the world they should be as he was when he was in the world; for to both the present state is in a state of humiliation, the crown and glory was reserved for both in the future state. Let them consider that the Son of man came not to be ministered to, but to minister and to give his life a ransom for many, ver. 28. Our Lord Jesus here sets himself before his disciples as a pattern of those two things, before recommended, humility and usefulness.

1. Never was there such an example of humility and condescension as there was in the life of Christ, who came not to be ministered unto, but to minister. When the Son of God came into the world, his ambassador to the children of men, one would think he should have been ministered to, should have appeared in an equipage agreeable to his person and character, but he did not so; he made no figure, had no pompous train of state-servants to attend him, nor was he clad in robes of honour, for he took upon him the form of a servant. He was indeed ministered to as a poor man, which was a part of his humiliation, there were those that ministered to him of their substance, Luke viii. 2, 3. But he was never ministered to as a great man; never took state upon him, was not waited on at table; he once washed his disciples' feet, but we never read that they washed his feet. He came to minister help to all that were in distress; he made himself a servant to the sick and diseased; was ready to their requests as ever any servant was at the beck of his master, and took as much pains to serve them; he attended continually to this very thing, and denied himself both food and rest to attend to it.

2. Never was there such an example of beneficence and usefulness as there there was in the death of Christ, who gave his life a ransom for many. He lived as a servant, and went about doing good; but he died as a sacrifice, and in that did the greatest good of all. He came into the world on purpose to give his life a ransom, it was laid in his intention. The aspiring princes of the Gentiles make the lives of many a ransom for their own honour, and perhaps a sacrifice to their own honour. Christ doth not do so, his subjects blood is precious to him, and he is not prodigal of it, Psal. lxxii. 14. But on the contrary he gives his honour and life too a ransom for his subjects. Note, 1. Jesus Christ laid down his life for a ransom. Our lives were forfeited into the hands of divine justice by sin; Christ by parting with his life made atonement for sin, and so rescued ours; he was made sin, and a curse for us, and died, not only for our good, but in our stead, Acts xx. 28. 1 Peter i. 18, 19. 2. It was a ransom for many, sufficient for all, effectual for many; and if for many, then faith the poor doubting soul, Why not for me? for many, that by him many may be made righteous. These many were his seed, for which his soul travailed, Isaiah liii. 10, 11. For many, so they will be when they come altogether, though now they appear but a little flock.

Now this is a good reason why we should not strive for precedency, because the cross is our banner, and our Master's death is our life. It is a good reason why we should study to do good, and in consideration of the love of Christ in dying for us, not stick at laying down our lives for the brethren, 1 John iii. 16. Ministers should be more forward than others to serve and suffer for the good of souls, as blessed Paul was, Acts xx. 24. Phil. ii. 17. And the nearer we are all concerned in, and the more we are advantaged by the humility and humiliation of Christ, the more ready and careful we should be to imitate it.

29. And as they departed from Jericho, a great multitude followed him. 30. ¶ And, behold, two blind men sitting by the way side, when they heard that Jesus passed by, cried out, saying, Have mercy on us, O Lord, thou Son of David. 31. And the multitude rebuked them, because they should hold their peace: but they cried the more, saying, Have mercy on us, O Lord, thou Son of David. 32. And Jesus stood still, and called them, and said, What will ye that I should do unto you? 33. They say unto him, Lord, that our eyes may be opened. 34. So Jesus had compassion on them, and touched their eyes: and immediately their eyes received sight, and they followed him.

We have here an account of the cure of two blind beggars; in which we may many observe,

1. Their address to Christ, ver. 29, 30. And in this, 1. The circumstances of it are observable: It was as Christ and his disciples departed from Jericho; that devoted place which was rebuilt under a curse, Christ took his leave of it with this blessing, for he received gifts even for the rebellious. It was in the presence of a great multitude that followed him: Christ had a numerous, though not a pompous attendance, and did good to them, though he did not take state to himself. This multitude that followed Christ was a mixed multitude: some followed him for loves, and some for love; some for curiosity, and some in expectation of his temporal reign, which the disciples themselves dreamed of, and very few with desire to be taught their duty; yet for the sake of those few he confirmed his doctrine by miracles wrought in the presence of great multitudes; who, if they were not convinced by them, would be the more inexcusable. Two blind men concurred in their request, for joint-prayer is pleasing to Christ, Matt. xviii. 19. These joint-sufferers were joint suitors, being companions in the same tribulation, they were partners in the same supplication. Note, It is good for those that are labouring under the same calamity, or infirmity of body or mind, to join together in the same prayer to God for relief, that they may quicken one another's fervency, and encourage one another's faith. There is mercy enough in Christ for all the petitioners. These blind men were sitting by the way-side, as blind beggars used to do. Note, Those that would receive mercy from Christ, must place themselves there where his out-goings are; where he useth to manifest himself to those that seek him. It is good thus to way-lay Christ, to be in his road.

They heard that Jesus passed by. Though they were blind, they were not deaf. Seeing and hearing are the learning senses. It is a great calamity to want either; but the defect of one may be, and often is made up in the acuteness of the other; and therefore it has been observed by some as an instance of the goodness of Providence, that none were ever known to be born both blind and deaf; but that one way or other they might be in a capacity of receiving knowledge. These blind men had heard of Christ by the hearing of the ear, but they desired that their eyes might see him. When they heard that Jesus passed by, they asked no further questions who were with him, or whether he was in haste, but immediately cried out. Note, It is good to improve the present opportunity, to make the best of the price now in hand, because if once let slip it may never return; these blind men did so, and did wisely; for we do not find that Christ ever came to Jericho again. Now is the accepted time.

2. The address itself is most observable. Have mercy on us, O Lord, thou son of David, repeated again, ver. 31. Four things are recommended to us for an example in this address; for though the eye of the body was dark, the eye of the mind was enlightened concerning truth, duty, and interest.

1. Here is an example of importunity in prayer. They cried out as men in earnest; men in want use to be so. Cold desires do but beg denials. Those that would prevail in prayer, must stir up themselves to take hold on God in the duty. When they were discountenanced in it, they cried the more. The stream of fervency, if it be stopped, will rise and swell the higher. This is wrestling with God in prayer, and makes us the fitter to receive mercy; for the more it is striven for, the more it will be prized and thankfully acknowledged.

2. Of humility in prayer: In that word, have mercy on us, not specifying the favour, or preferring what; much less pleading merit, but casting themselves upon and referring themselves cheerfully to the Mediator's mercy, in what way he pleaseth, only have mercy. They ask not for silver and gold, though they were poor, but mercy, mercy. This is that which our hearts must be upon when we come to the throne of grace, that we may find mercy, Heb. iv. 16. Psal. cxxx. 7.

3. Of faith in prayer: In the title they gave to Christ, which was in the nature of a plea, O Lord, thou Son of David, they confess that Jesus Christ is Lord; and therefore had authority to command deliverance for them. Surely it was by the Holy Ghost that they called Christ Lord, 1 Cor. xii. 3.

Thus they take their encouragement in prayer from his power, as in calling him the son of David, they take encouragement from his goodness, as Messiah, of whom so many kind and tender things had been foretold, particularly his compassion to the poor and needy, Psal. lxxii. 12, 13. It is of excellent use in prayer to eye Christ in the grace and glory of his Messiahship; remember that he is the son of David, whose office it is to help, and save, and plead it with him.

2. Of perseverance in prayer, notwithstanding discouragement. The multitude rebuked them, as noisy and clamorous, and impertinent, and bid them hold their peace, and not disturb the Master, who perhaps at first himself seemed not to regard them. In following Christ with our prayers, we must expect to meet with hindrances and manifold discouragements from within and from without, something or other that bids us hold our peace. Such rebukes are permitted, that faith and fervency, patience and perseverance may be tried: These poor blind men were rebuked by the multitude that followed Christ. Note, The sincere and serious beggars at Christ's door commonly meet with the worst rebukes from those that follow him but in pretence and hypocrisy: But they would not be beaten off so, when they were in pursuit of such a mercy, it was no time to compliment or to be mealy-mouthed; no, they cried the more. Note, Men ought always to pray, and not to faint, pray with all perseverance, Luke xviii. 1. to continue in prayer with resolution, and not to yield to opposition.

2. The answer of Christ to this address of theirs: The multitude rebuked them, but Christ encouraged them. It were ill for us if the Master were not more kind and tender than the multitude; but he loves to countenance those with special favour that are under browns, and rebukes, and contempt from men. He will not suffer his humble supplicants to be run down and dashed out of countenance.

1. He stood still and called them, ver. 32. He was now going up to Jerusalem, and was straitened till his work there was accomplished, and yet he stood still to cure these blind men. Note, When we are never so much in haste about any business, yet we should be willing to stand still to do good. He called them, not because he could not cure them at a distance, but because he would do it in the most obliging and instructing way, and would countenance weak but willing patients and petitioners. Christ doth not only injoin us to pray, but invites us; holds out the golden sceptre to us, and bids us come touch the top of it.

2. He enquired farther into their case: What will ye that I should do unto you? Which speaks, 1. A very fair offer. Here I am, let me know what you would have, and you shall have it; and what would ye more? He is able to do for us, and as willing as he is able. Ask, and it shall be given you.

2. A condition annexed to this offer, which is a very easy and reasonable one, that they should tell him what they would have him do for them: One would think this a strange question, any one might tell what they would have; Christ knew well enough, but he would know it from them, whether they begged only for an alms, as from a common person, or for a cure, as from the Messiah. Note, It is the will of God that we should in every thing make our requests known to him by prayer and supplication; not to inform or move him, but to qualify ourselves for the mercy. The water-man in the boat, that with his hook takes hold of the shore, doth not thereby pull the shore to the boat, but the boat to the shore. So in prayer we do not draw the mercy to ourselves, but ourselves to the mercy.

They soon made known their request to him, such a one as they never made to any one else, Lord, that our eyes may be opened. The wants and burdens of the body we are soon sensible of, and can readily relate, ubi dolor, ibi digitus; O that we were but as apprehensive of our spiritual maladies, and could as feelingly complain of them, especially our spiritual blindness! Lord, that the eyes of our mind may be opened! Many are spiritually blind, and yet say they see, John ix. 41. Were we but sensible of our darkness, we should soon apply ourselves to him, who alone has the eye-salve, with this request, Lord, that our eyes may be opened.

3. He cured them, when he encouraged them to seek him, he did not say, seek in vain; What he did was an instance,

1. Of his pity; he had compassion on them: Misery is the object of mercy. They that are poor and blind, are wretched and miserable, Rev. iii. 17. and the objects of compassion. It was the tender mercy of our God that gave light and sight to them that sat in darkness, Luke i. 78, 79. We cannot help those that are under such calamities as Christ did, but we may and must pity them as Christ did, and draw out our soul to them.

2. Of his power: He that formed the eye, can he not heal it? Yes, he can, he did, he did it easily, he touched their eyes; he did it effectually, immediately their eyes received sight. Thus he not only proved that he was sent of God, but shewed on what errand he was sent, to give sight to those that are spiritually blind, to turn them from darkness to light.

Lastly, These blind men, when they had received sight, followed him. Note, None follow Christ blindfold: He first by his grace opens men's eyes, and so draws their hearts after him. They followed Christ, as his disciples, to learn of him, and as his witnesses, eye-witnesses, to bear their testimony to him, and to his power and goodness. The best evidence of spiritual illumination, is a constant inseparable adherence to Jesus Christ as our Lord and leader.

CHAP. XXI.

The death and resurrection of Jesus Christ, are the two main hinges upon which the door of salvation turns. He came into the world on purpose to give his life a ransom, so he had lately said, chap. xx. 28: And therefore the history of his sufferings, even unto death, and his rising again, is more particularly recorded by all the evangelists than any other part of his story; and to that this evangelist now hastens apace. For at this chapter begins that which they call the passion-week: He had said to his disciples more than once, Behold, we go up to Jerusalem; and there the Son of man must be betrayed; a great deal of good work he did by the way, and now at length he is come up to Jerusalem; and here we have, (1.) The public entry which he made into Jerusalem, upon the first day of the passion-week, ver. 1—11. (2.) The authority he exercised there, in cleansing the temple, and driving out of it the buyers and sellers, ver. 12—16. (3.) The emblem he gave of the state of the Jewish church, in cursing the barren fig-tree, and his discourse with his disciples thereupon, ver. 17—22. (4.) His justifying his own authority, by appealing to the baptism of John, ver. 23—27. (5.) His shaming the infidelity and obstinacy of the chief priests and elders, with the repentance of the Publicans, illustrated by the parable of the two sons, ver. 28—32. (6.) His reading the doom of the Jewish church for its unfruitfulness, in the parable of the vineyard let out to unthankful husbandmen, ver. 33—46.

1. AND when they drew nigh unto Jerusalem, and were come to Bethphage, unto the mount of Olives, then sent Jesus two disciples, 2. Saying unto to them, Go into the village over against you, and straightway ye shall find an ass tied, and a colt with her: loose them, and bring them unto me. 3. And if any man say ought unto you, ye shall say, The Lord hath need of them; and straightway he will send them. 4. All this was done, that it might be fulfilled which was spoken by the prophet, saying, 5. Tell ye the daughter of Sion, Behold, thy king cometh unto thee, meek, and sitting upon an ass, and a colt the foal of an ass. 6. And the disciples went, and did as Jesus commanded them. 7. And brought the ass, and the colt; and put on them their clothes, and they set him thereon. 8. And a very great multitude spread their garments in the way; others cut down branches from the trees, and strewed them in the way. 9. And the multitudes that went before, and that followed, cried, saying, Hosanna to the son of David: Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord: Hosanna in the highest. 10. And when he was come into Jerusalem, all the city was moved, saying, Who is this? 11. And the multitude said, This is Jesus the prophet of Nazareth of Galilee.

All the four evangelists take notice of this passage of Christ's riding in triumph into Jerusalem, five days before his death; the passover was on the fourteenth day of the month, and this was the tenth; on which day the law appointed that the paschal lamb should be taken up, Exod. xii. 3. and set apart for that service; on that day therefore Christ our passover, who was to be sacrificed for us, was publicly shewed. So that this was the prologue to his passion: He had lodged at Bethany, a village not far from Jerusalem, for some time: at a supper there the night before Mary had anointed his feet, John xii. 2. But as is usual with ambassadors, he deferred his public entry till some time after his arrival. Our Lord Jesus travelled much, and his custom was to travel on foot from Galilee to Jerusalem, some scores of miles, which was both mean and toilsome; many a dirty weary step he had when he went about doing good; how ill doth it become Christians to be inordinately solicitous about their own ease and state, when their Master had so little of either? Yet once in his life he rode in triumph, and it was now when he went into Jerusalem to suffer and die, as if that were the pleasure and preferment he courted; and then he thought himself begin to look great.

Now here we have,

First, The provision that was made for this solemnity: and it was very poor and ordinary, and such as bespoke his kingdom not of this world: Here were no heralds at arms provided, no trumpet sounded before him, no chariots of state, no liveries; such things as these were not agreeable to his present state of humiliation, but will be far outdone at his second coming, to which his magnificent appearance is reserved, when the last trumpet shall sound, the glorious angels shall be his heralds and attendants, and the clouds his chariots. But in this public appearance,

1. The preparation was sudden and off-hand; for his glory in the other world, and ours with him, preparation was made before the foundation of the world, for that was the glory his heart was upon; his glory in this world he was dead to, and therefore though he had it in prospect, did not forecast for it, but took what came next. They were come to Bethphage, which was the suburbs of Jerusalem, and was accounted (say the Jewish doctors) in all things, as Jerusalem, a long scattering street that lay towards the mount of Olives; when he entered upon that, he sent two of his disciples, some think Peter and John, to fetch him an ass, for he had none laid ready for him.

2. It was very mean: He sent only for an ass and her colt, ver. 2. Asses were much used in that country for travel, horses were kept only by great men, and for war; Christ could have summoned a cherub to carry him, Psal. xviii. 10. But though by his name Jah, which speaks him God, he rides upon the heavens, yet now by his name Jesus, Immanuel, God with us, in his state of humiliation he rides upon an ass; yet some think he had herein an eye to the custom in Israel for the judges to ride upon white asses, Judges v. 10. and their sons on ass-colts, Judges xii. 14. And Christ would thus enter, not as a conqueror, but as the judge of Israel, who for judgment came into this world.

3. It was not his own, but borrowed; though he had not a house of his own, yet one would think, like some wayfaring men that live upon their friends, he might have had an ass of his own to carry him about; but for our sakes he became in all respects poor, 2 Cor. viii. 9. It is commonly said, they that live on borrowing live on sorrowing; in this therefore, as in other things, Christ was a man of sorrows, that he had nothing of this world's goods but what was given him or lent him.

The disciples who were sent to borrow this ass, are directed to say, the Lord has need of him. Those that are in need must not be ashamed to own their need, nor say as the unjust steward, to beg I am ashamed, Luke xvi. 3. As on the other hand, none ought to impose upon the kindness of their friends, by going to beg or borrow when they have not need. In the borrowing of this ass,

1. We have an instance of Christ's knowledge; though the thing was altogether contingent, yet Christ could tell his disciples where they should find an ass tied, and a colt with her: His omniscience extends itself to the meanest of his creatures; asses and their colts, and their being bound or loosed: Doth God take care for oxen? 1 Cor. ix. 9. no doubt he doth, and would not see Balaam's ass abused. He knows all the creatures, so as to know and to make them serve his own purposes.

2. We have an instance of his power over the spirits of men; the hearts of the meanest subjects, as well as of kings, are in the hand of the Lord. Christ asserts his right to use the ass, in bidding them bring it to him; the fulness of the earth is the Lord Christ's; but he foresees some hindrance which the disciples might meet with in this service; but they must not take them clamorously & secretly, but in the sight of the owner, much less vi & armis, but with the consent of the owner, which he undertakes they shall have; If any man say ought to you, ye shall say, The Lord has need of him. Note, What Christ sets us to do, he will bear us out in the doing of, and furnish us with answers to the objections we may be assaulted with, and make them prevalent; as here, straightway he will send them. Christ in commanding the ass into his service, shewed that he is Lord of hosts; and in inclining the owner to lend him without further security, shewed that he is the God of the spirits of all flesh, and can bow men's hearts.

3. We have an example of justice and honesty, in not using the ass though for so small a piece of service as riding the length of a street or two, without the owner's consent. And as some read the latter clause, it gives us a further rule of justice, you shall say the Lord has need of them, and he (that is, the Lord) will presently send them back, and take care that they be safely delivered to the owner, as soon as he has done with them. Note, What we borrow we must restore in due time and in good order; for the wicked borrow, and pay not again. Care must be taken of borrowed goods, that they be not damaged. Alas, Master, for it was borrowed!

Secondly, The prediction that was fulfilled in this, ver. 4, 5. Our Lord Jesus in all he did and suffered, had very much his eye upon this, that the scriptures might be fulfilled. As the prophets looked forward to him, to him they all bear witness, so he looked back upon them, that all things which were written of the Messiah might be punctually accomplished in him. This particularly which was written of him, Zech. ix. 9. where it ushers in a large prediction of the kingdom of the Messiah, Tell the daughter of Sion, Behold thy king cometh, must be accomplished. Now observe here,

1. How the coming of Christ is foretold; Tell ye the daughter of Sion, the church, the holy mountain, Behold, thy king cometh unto thee. Note, 1. Jesus Christ is the church's king, one of our brethren like unto us, according to the law of the kingdom, Deut. xvii. 15. He is appointed king over the church, Psal. ii. 6. He is accepted king by the church, the daughter of Sion swears allegiance to him, Hos. i. 11. 2. Christ, the king of his church came to his church, even in this lower world; he comes to thee, to rule thee, to rule in thee, to rule for thee, he is head over all things to the church: He came to Zion, Rom. xi. 26. that out of Sion the law might go forth: for the church and its interests were all in all with the Redeemer. 3. Notice was given to the church beforehand of the coming of her king; Tell the daughter of Sion. Note, Christ will have his coming looked for, and waited for, and his subjects big with expectation of it; Tell the daughter of Sion, that they may go forth and behold king Solomon, Cant. iii. 11. Notices of Christ's coming are usually ushered in with a Behold! A note commanding both attention and admiration; Behold, thy king cometh; behold and wonder at him, behold and welcome him; here is a royal progress truly admirable. Pilate, like Caiaphas, said he knew not what, in that great word, John xix. 14. Behold your king.

1. How his coming is described. When a king comes, something great and magnificent is expected, especially when he comes to take possession of his kingdom; the King, the Lord of hosts was seen upon a throne, high and lifted up, Isa. vi. 1. But here is nothing of that here, Behold he comes to thee meek, and sitting upon an ass; when Christ would appear in his glory, it is in his meekness, not in his majesty.

1. His temper is very mild: he comes not in wrath to take vengeance, but in mercy to work salvation; he is meek to suffer the greatest injuries and indignities for Sion's cause; meek to bear with the follies and unkindnesses of Sion's own children: He is easy of access, easy to be intreated. He is not only meek as a teacher, but meek as a ruler; he rules by love. His government is mild and gentle, and his laws not written in the blood of his subjects, but in his own: His yoke is easy.

2. As an evidence of this, his appearance is very mean, sitting upon an ass, a creature made not for state but service, not for battles but for burdens; slow in its motions, but sure and safe and constant. The foretelling of this so long before, and the care taken that it should be exactly fulfilled, intimates it to have a peculiar significance, for the encouragement of poor souls to apply themselves to Christ: Sion's king comes riding, not on a prancing horse, which the timorous petitioner dares not come near, or a running horse, which the slow-footed petitioner cannot keep pace with, but on a quiet ass, that the poorest of his subjects may not be discouraged in their access to him. Mention is made in the prophecy of a colt, the foal of an ass; and therefore Christ sent for the colt with the ass, that the scripture might be fulfilled.

Thirdly, The procession itself, which was answerable to the preparation, both being destitute of worldly pomp, and yet both accompanied with a spiritual power.

Observe, 1. His equipage. The disciples did as Jesus commanded them, ver. 6. they went to fetch the ass and the colt, not doubting but to find them, and to find the owner willing to lend them. Note, Christ's commands must not be disputed but obeyed, and those that sincerely obey them, shall not be balked or baffled in it; they brought the ass, and the colt. The meanness and contemptableness of the beast Christ rode on, might have been made up with the richness of the trappings; but those were, like all the rest, such as came next to hand; they had not so much as a saddle for the ass, but the disciples threw some of their clothes upon it, and that must serve for want of better accommodations. Note, We ought not to be nice or curious, or to affect exactness in outward conveniences: A holy indifference and neglect well becomes us in these things. It will evidence that our heart is not upon them, and that we have learned the apostle's rule, Rom. xii. 16. margin, to be content with mean things. Anything will serve travellers, and there is a beauty in some sort of carelessness, a noble negligence; yet the disciples furnished him with the best they had, and did not object the spoiling of their clothes when the Lord had need of them. Note, We must not think the clothes on our backs too dear to part with for the service of Christ, for the clothing of his poor destitute and afflicted members, I was naked, and you clothed me, Matt. xxv. 36. Christ stripped himself for us.

2. His retinue; and there was nothing in this stately or magnificent; Sion's King comes to Sion, and the daughter of Sion was told of his coming long before, and yet he is not attended by the gentlemen of the country, nor met by the magistrates of the city in their formalities, as one might have expected; he should have had the keys of the city presented to him, and should have been conducted with all possible conveniency to the thrones of judgment, the thrones of the house of David; but here is nothing of all this, yet he has his attendants, a very great multitude; they were only the common people, the mob, (the rabble we should have been apt to call them) that graced the solemnity of Christ's triumph, and none but they. The chief priests and the elders afterwards herded themselves with the multitude that abused him upon the cross, but we find none of them here joining with the multitude that did him honour. Ye see here your calling, brethren, not many mighty, or noble, attend on Christ, but the foolish things of this world, and base things, which are despised, 1 Cor. i. 26-28. Note, Christ is honoured by the multitude, more than by the magnificence of his followers, for he values men by their souls not by their preferments, names, or titles of honour.

Now, concerning this great multitude, we are here told,

(1.) What they did; according to the best of their capacity they studied to do honour to Christ; 1. They spread their garments in the way, that he might ride upon them. When Jehu was proclaimed king, the captains put their garments under him, in token of their subjection to him. Note, Those that take Christ for their King must lay their all under his feet; the clothes in token of the heart; for when Christ comes, though not when any else comes, it must be said to the soul, Row down, that he may go over. Some think, these garments were spread, not upon the ground, but on the hedges or or walls, to adorn the courts: as to beautify a balcony the balconies are hung with tapestry. This was but a poor piece of state, yet Christ accepted their good-will, and we are hereby taught to contrive how to make Christ well-come, Christ our guest, Christ our king, into our hearts and houses: How shall we express our respect for Christ? What honour and what dignity shall be done to him? 2. Others cut down branches from the trees, and strewed them in the way. Is they used to do at the feast of tabernacles, in token of liberty, victory and joy: for the mystery of that feast is particularly spoke of as belonging to gold-diggers, Zech. xiv. 16.

(2.) What they said: They that went before, and they that followed, were in the same tune: both those that gave notice of his coming, and those that attended him with their applauses, they cried, saying, Hosanna to the son of David. ver. 9. When they carried branches about as the feast of tabernacles, they were wont to cry hosanna, and from thence to call their bundles of branches their hosannas. Hosanna signifies Sure now, see he fetch thee; referring to Psal. cxviii. 25. 26. where the Messiah is prophesied of as the head-stone of the corner, though the builders rejoiced him; and all his loyal subjects are brought in triumphing with him, and attending him with hearty good-wills to the prosperity of all his enterprises: Hosanna to the son of David is, this we do in honour to the son of David.

The hosannas with which Christ was attended speak two things:

1. Their welcoming his kingdom: Hosanna speaks the same with, Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord. It was foretold concerning this son of David, that all nations shall call him blessed, Psal. lxxii. 17. these here began, and all true believers in all ages concur in it and call him blessed; it is the genuine language of faith. Note, 1. Jesus Christ comes in the name of the Lord is sanctified and sent into the world as mediator; him hath God the Father rejoiced. 2. The coming of Christ in the name of the Lord, is worthy of acceptance; and we all ought to say, Blessed is he that cometh; praise him, and be pleased in him: let his coming in the name of the Lord be mentioned with strong affections to our comfort and joyful acclamations to his glory. Well may we say, Blessed is he, for it is in him that we are blessed: well may we follow him with our blessings that meets us with his.

2. Their willing well to his kingdom: intimated in their hosanna; earnestly desiring that prosperity and success may attend it, and that it might be a victorious kingdom: Send now prosperity to that kingdom. If they understood it of a temporal kingdom, and had their hearts carried out thus towards it, it was their mistake, which a little time would rectify; however, their good-will was accepted. Note, It is our duty earnestly to desire and pray for the prosperity and success of Christ's kingdom in the world. Thus prayer must be made for him continually, Psal. lxxii. 15. that all happiness may attend his interest in the world, and that, though he rode on an ass, yet in his majesty he may ride prosperously, because of that meekness, Psal. xlv. 4. This we mean, when we pray, Thy kingdom come. They add, Hosanna in the highest: Let prosperity in the highest degree attend him, let him have a name above every name, a throne above every throne; or let us praise him in the best manner with exalted affections, or let our prayers for his church ascend to heaven, to the highest heavens, and fetch in peace and salvation from thence. See Psal. xx. 6. The Lord sanctified his anointed, and will hear from his high, his holy heaven.

3. We have here his entertainment in Jerusalem, ver. 10. When he was come into Jerusalem, all the city was moved; every one took notice of him, some were moved with wonder at the novelty of the thing, others with laughter at the meanness of it; some perhaps were moved with joy, who waited for the consolation of Israel; others of the Pharisees and scribes were moved with envy and indignation: So various are the motions in the minds of men upon the approach of Christ's kingdom!

Upon this conjunction see Act. i. 1. her to'd.

(1.) What the citizens said: Who is this? 1. They were it seems ignorant concerning Christ; though he was the glory of his people, Israel, yet Israel knew him not; though he had distinguished himself by the many miracles he wrought among them, yet the daughters of Jerusalem knew him not from another beloved, Mat. v. 9. The holy one unknown in the holy city: In places where the clearest light shines, and the greatest profession of religion is made, there is more ignorance than we are aware of. 2. Yet they were inquisitive concerning him: Who is this that is thus cried up, and comes with so much observation? Who is this king of glory that demands admission into our hearts? Psal. xlv. 8. Isa. lxiii. 1.

(2.) How the multitude answered them: This is Jesus, ver. 11. The multitude were better acquainted with Christ than the great ones; ver. 10. populi is sometimes rex Dei. Now in the account they give of him, 1. They were right in calling him the prophet, that great prophet; hitherto he had been known as a prophet, teaching and working miracles; now they attend him as a king; Christ's priestly office was, of all the three, last discovered. 2. Yet they missed it in saying he was of Nazareth, and it helped to confirm some of their prejudices against him. Note, Some that are willing to honour Christ, and bear their testimony to him, yet labour under mistakes concerning him, which would be rectified if they would take pains to inform themselves.

12. ¶ And Jesus went into the temple of God, and cast out all them that sold and bought in the temple, and overthrew the tables of the money changers, and the seats of them that sold doves. 13. And said unto them, It is written, My house shall be called the house of prayer, but ye have made it a den of thieves. 14. And the blind and the lame came to him in the temple, and he healed them. 15. And when the chief priests and scribes saw the wonderful things that he did, and the children crying in the temple, and saying, Hosanna to the son of David; they were fore displeased, 16. And said unto him, Hearst thou what these say? And Jesus saith unto him, Yea; have ye never read, Out of the mouth of babes and sucklings thou hast perfected praise? 17. And he left them, and went out of the city into Bethany, and he lodged there.

When Christ came into Jerusalem, he did not go up to the court or the palace, though he came in as a king, but into the temple; for his kingdom is spiritual, and not of this world, it is in holy things that he rules, in the temple of God that he exerciseth authority. Now, what did he do here?

First, Thence he drove the buyers and sellers: Abusers must first be purged out, and the plants not of God's planting be plucked up, before that which is right can be established: The great Redeemer appears as a great reformer, that turns away ungodliness, Rom. ix. 26. Here we are told,

1. What he did, ver. 12. He cast out all them that sold and bought; he had done this once before, John ii. 14, 15. but there was occasion to do it again. Note, Buyers and sellers driven out of the temple, will return and nestle there again, if there be not a continual care and oversight to prevent it, and if the blow be not followed and often repeated.

(2.) The abuse was buying and selling, and changing money in the temple. Note, Lawful things, ill timed and ill placed, may become unlawful things: That which was decent enough in another place, and on a lawful but laudable on another day, yet despoles the sanctuary, and profanes the sabbath. This buying and selling, and changing money, though for our employments, yet had the pretence of being in or on an ad spiritual, as they sold beasts for sacrifice, for the convenience of those that could easily bring their money with them than their beast; and they changed money for those that wanted the half shekel, which was their yearly poll or redemption money; or upon the tail of return: so that this might pass for an outward business of the house of God, and yet Christ will not allow of it. Note, Great corruptions and abuses come into the church by the practices of those whose goal is godliness, that is, that make worldly gain the end of their godliness, and counterfeit godliness their way to worldly gain, 1 Tim. vi. 5. from such turn away.

(3.) The purging out of this abuse: Christ cast them out that did: He did it before with a scourge of small cords, John vi. 13. now he did it with a look, with a frown, with a word of command. Some reckon this note of the least of Christ's miracles, that he should himself enter the temple, and not be opposed in it by them who by this craft got their living, and were backed in it by the priests and elders. It is an instance of his power over the spirits of men, and the hold he has of them, by their own confessions. This was the only act of regal authority and coercive power that Christ did in the days of his flesh; he began with it, John vi. and here ended with it. Tradition saith, that his face shone, and beams of light darted from his blessed eyes, which astonished these market-people, and compelled them to yield to his command: if so, the scripture was fulfilled, Prov. xx. 1. The king that sitteth in the throne of judgment scattereth away all evil with his eyes. He overthrew the tables of the money-changers; he did not take the money to himself, but uttered it, threw it to the ground, the fittest place for it. The Jews, in Elizer's time, on the spot laid not their hand, Elizer ix. 10.

2. What he said, to justify himself, and to convict them, ver. 13. It is written. Note, In the reformation of the church the eye must be upon the scripture, and that must be adhered to as the rule, the pattern, in the mount; and we must go no farther than we can justify ourselves with. It is written. Reformation is then right, when corrupted ordinances are reduced to their primitive institution.

(1.) He shews, from a scripture prophecy, when the temple should be, and was designed to be: My house shall be called the house of prayer; which is quoted from, Isa. lvi. 7. Note, All the ceremonies and institutions were intended to be subservient to moral duties: the house of prayer was to be a house of prayer, for that was the substance and soul of all those services; the temple was in a special manner designed to be a house of prayer, for it was not only the place of that worship, but the medium of it, so that the prayer made in or towards that house had a particular promise of acceptance, 2 Chron. vi. 21. as it was a type of Christ; therefore Daniel looked that way in prayer; and so a house or place is now, or can be a house of prayer, for Christ is our temple; yet in some sense the appointed places of our righteous assemblies may be so called, as places where prayer is wont to be made, Acts xvi. 13.

(2.) He shews from a scripture reproof, how they had abused the temple, and perverted the intention of it: Ye have made it a den of thieves. This is quoted from, Jer. vii. 11. Is this house become a den of robbers in your eyes? When assembled pety is made the cloak and cover of iniquity, it may be said, that the house of prayer is become a den of thieves, in which they lurk and shelter themselves. Markets are too often dens of thieves, so many are the corrupt and cheating practices of buying and selling; but markets in the temple are certainly so, for they rob God of his honour, the word of thieves, Mat. iii. 8. The priests lived and lived plentifully, upon the altar; but not content with that, they found other ways and means to squeeze money out of the people; and Christ therefore here calls them thieves, for they exacted that which did not belong to them.

Secondly, There, in the temple, he healed the blind and the lame, ver. 14. When he had driven the buyers and sellers out of the temple, he invited the blind and lame into it: he filleth the hungry with good things, but the rich he sends empty away. Count in the temple, by his word there preached, and in answer to the prayers there made, heals those that are spiritually blind and lame. It is good coming to the temple when Christ is there, who, as he shews himself glorious in the honour of his temple, in expelling those that profane it, so he sheweth himself gracious to those who humbly seek him. The blind and the lame were debarred David's palace, 2 Sam. v. 8. but were admitted into God's house; for the state and honour of his temple lies not in those things, wherein the magnificence of princes' palaces is supposed to consist; from them blind and lame must keep their distance, but from God's temple only the wicked and profane. The temple was profaned and abused when it was made a market-place, but it was graced and honoured when it was made an hospital; to be doing good in God's house, is more honourable and better becomes it than to be getting money there: Christ's healing was a real answer to that question, Who is this? His works testified more of him than the hosannas; and the healing in the temple was the fulfilling of the promise, that the glory of the latter house should be greater than the glory of the former.

There also he silenced the offence which the chief priests and scribes took at the acclamations with which he was attended, ver. 15, 16. They that should have been most forward to give him honour were his worst enemies.

1. They were inwardly vexed at the wonderful things that he did; they could not deny them to be true miracles, and therefore were cut to the heart with indignation at them, as Act. iv. 16.—v. 23. The works that Christ did recommend themselves to every man's conscience; if they had any sense they could not but own the miracle of them; and if any good nature, could not but be in love with the merry of them; yet because they were resolved to oppose him, for these they envied him and bore him a grudge.

2. They openly quarrelled at the children's hosannas; they thought hereby an honour was given him which did not belong to him, and that it looked like ostentation. Proud men cannot bear that honour should be done to any but to themselves, and are uneasily at nothing more than at the just praises of deserving men. Thus Saul envied David the women's songs, and "Who can stand before envy?" When Christ is most honoured his enemies are most displeased.

Just now we had Christ preferring the blind and the lame before the buyers and sellers; now here we have him, ver. 16. taking part with the children against priests and scribes.

Observe, 1. The children were in the temple, perhaps playing there; and no wonder when the rulers made it a market-place, that the children make it a place of pastime; but we are willing to hope many of them were worshipping there. Note, It is good to bring children sometimes to the house house of prayer, for such is the kingdom of heaven. Let children be taught to keep up the form of godliness, it will help to lead them to the power of it; Christ has a tenderness for the lambs of his flock.

2. They were there crying hosanna to the Son of David; this they learned from those that were grown up; little children say and do as they hear others say, and see others do; so easily do they imitate; and therefore great care must be taken to set them good examples, and no ill ones: Maxima debetur puero reverentia: Children will learn of those that are with them, either to curse and swear, or to pray and praise. The Jews did sometimes teach their children to carry branches at the feast of the tabernacles, and to cry hosanna; but God taught them here to apply it to Christ. Note, Hosanna to the Son of David well becomes the mouths of little children, who should learn young the language of Canaan.

3. Our Lord Jesus not only allowed it, but was very well pleased with it, and quoted a scripture which was fulfilled in it, (Psalms viii. 2.) or at least may be accommodated to it; Out of the mouth of babes and sucklings thou hast perfected praise; which some think refers to the children joining in the acclamations of the people, and the women's songs with which David was honoured when he returned from the slaughter of the Philistine; and therefore is very fitly applied here to the hosannas with which the Son of David was cried up, now he was entering upon his conflict with Satan that Goliath. Note, 1. Christ is so far from being ashamed of the services of little children, that he takes particular notice of them (and children love to be taken notice of) and is well pleased with them. If God may be honoured by babes and sucklings, who are made to hope at the best, much more by children that are grown up to maturity and some capacity. 2. Praise is perfected out of the mouth of such; it has a peculiar tendency to the honour and glory of God for little children to join in his praises; the praise would be accounted defective and imperfect, if they had not their share in it; which is an encouragement for children to be good betimes, and to parents to teach them to be so; the labour neither of the one nor of the other shall be in vain. In the psalm it is, Thou hast ordained strength. Note, God perfecteth praise, by ordaining strength out of the mouths of babes and sucklings; when great things are brought about by weak and unlikely instruments, God is thereby much honoured, for his strength is perfected in weakness, and the infirmities of the babes and sucklings serve for a foil to the divine power. That which flows in the psalm, That thou mightest still the enemy and the avenger, was very applicable to the priests and scribes, but Christ did not apply it to them, but left it to them to apply it.

Lastly, Christ having thus silenced them forsook them, ver. 17. he left them, in prudence, lest they should now have seized him before his hour was come; in justice, because they had forfeited the favour of his presence: By repining at Christ's praises we drive him from us. He left them as incorrigible, and he went out of the city to Bethany, which was a more quiet retired place; not so much that he might sleep undisturbed, as that he might pray undisturbed. Bethany was but two little miles from Jerusalem, thither he now went on foot, to shew that when he rode it was not only to fulfil the scripture: He was not lifted up with the hosannas of the people, but as having forgot them, soon returned to his mean and toilsome way of travelling.

18. Now in the morning as he returned into the city; he hungered. 19. And when he saw a fig-tree in the way, he came to it, and found nothing thereon, but leaves only, and said unto it, Let no fruit grow on thee henceforward for ever. And presently the fig-tree withered away. 20. And when the disciples saw it, they marvelled, saying, How soon is the fig-tree withered away! 21. Jesus answered and said unto them, Verily I say unto you, If ye have faith, and doubt not, ye shall not only do this which is done to the fig-tree, but also if ye shall say unto this mountain, Be thou removed, and be thou cast into the sea: it shall be done. 22. And all things, whatsoever ye shall ask in prayer, believing, ye shall receive.

Observe, 1. Christ returned in the morning to Jerusalem, ver. 18. Some think he went out of the city overnight, because none of his friends there durst entertain him for fear of the great men, yet having work to do there, he returned. Note, We must never be driven from our duty, either by the malice of our foes or the unkindness of our friends. Though he knew that in this city bonds and afflictions did abide him, yet none of these things moved him. Paul followed him when he went bound in the spirit to Jerusalem. Acts xx. 22.

2. As he went he hungered. He was a man, and submitted to the infirmities of our nature; he was an active man, and was so intent upon his work, that he neglected his food, and came out fasting; for the zeal of God's house did even eat him up, and his meat and drink was to do his Father's will; He was a poor man, and had no present supply; he was a man that pleased not himself, for he would willingly have taken up with green raw figs for his breakfast, when it was fit he should have had something warm.

Christ therefore hungered, that he might have occasion to work this miracle, in cursing and so withering the barren fig-tree, and therein might give us an instance of his justice and power, and both instructive.

1. See his justice, ver. 19. He went to it expecting fruit, because it had leaves, but finding none he sentenced it to a perpetual barrenness. This miracle had its significancy, as well as other his miracles; all Christ's miracles were wrought hitherto for the good of men, and proved the power of his grace and blessing; (the sending of the devils into the herd of swine, was but a permission) all he did was for the benefit and comfort of his friends, none for the terror or punishment of his enemies; but now at last, to shew that all judgment is committed to him, and that he is able not only to save but to destroy, he would give a specimen of the power of his wrath and curse; yet this not on any man, woman or child, because the great day of his wrath is not yet come, but on an inanimate tree; but that is set forth for an example; Come, learn a parable of the fig-tree, Matt. xxiv. 32. the scope of it is the same with the parable of the fig-tree, Luke xiii. 6.

(1.) This cursing of the barren fig-tree, represents the state of hypocrites in general; and so it teacheth us, 1. Thus the fruit of fig-trees may justly be expected from those that have the leaves. Christ looks for the power of religion from those that make profession of it; the favour of it from those that have the shew of it; grapes from the vineyard that is planted in a fruitful hill; he hungers after it, his soul desires the first ripe fruit.

2. Christ's just expectations from flourishing professors are often frustrated and disappointed: he comes to many seeking fruit, and finds leaves only, and he discovers it; Many have a name to live, and are not alive indeed; dote on the form of godliness, and yet deny the power of it.

2. The sin of barrenness is justly punished with the curse and plague of barrenness; Let no fruit grow on thee henceforward for ever. A- one of the chiefest blessings, and which was the first, is, Be fruitful; so one of the saddest curses is, Be no fruitful. Thus the sin of hypocrites is made their punishment; they would not do good, and therefore they shall do none; he that is fruitless let him be fruitless still, and lose his honour and comfort.

4. A false and hypocritical profession commonly withers in this world, and it is the effect of Christ's curse; the fig-tree that had no fruit soon lost its leaves. Hypocrites may look plausible for a time, but having no principle, no root in themselves, their profession will soon come to nothing; the gifts wither, common graces decay, the credit of the profession declines and sinks, and the falseness and folly of the pretender is manifested in all men.

(2.) It represents the state of the nation and people of the Jews in particular; they were a fig-tree planted in Christ's way, as a Church. Now observe,

1. The disappointment they gave to our Lord Jesus: He came among them expecting to find some fruit, something that would be pleasing to him; he hungered after it; not that he desired a gift, he needed it not, but fruit that might abound to a good account, but his expectations were frustrated, he found nothing but leaves; they called Abraham their father, but did not do the works of Abraham; they professed themselves expectants of the promised Messiah, but when he came they did not receive and entertain him.

2. The doom he passed upon them, that never any fruit should grow upon them, or be gathered from them, as a church, or as a people, from henceforward for ever. Never any good came from them (except the particular persons among them that believed) after they rejected Christ, they went worse and worse; blindness and hardness happened to them, and grew upon them, till they were unchurched, unpeopled and undone, and their place and nation rooted up; their beauty was defaced, their privileges and ornaments, their temple, and priesthood, and sacrifices, and festivals, and all the glories of their church and state, fell like leaves in autumn. How soon did their fig-tree wither away, after they said, His blood be on us, and on our children! and the Lord was righteous in it.

2. See the power of Christ; the former is wrapped up in the figure, but this more fully discoursed of, Christ intending hereby to direct his disciples in the use of their powers.

(1.) The disciples admired the effect of Christ's curse, ver. 20. They marvelled; no power could do it but his, who spake, and it was done: they admired at the suddenness of the thing; How soon is the fig-tree withered away! There was no visible cause of the fig-tree's withering, but it was a secret blast, a worm at the root; it was not only the leaves of it that withered, but the body of the tree; it withered away in an instant, and became like a dry stick. Gospel curses are upon this account the most dreadful, that they work insensibly and silently, by a fire not blown, but effectually.

(2.) Christ empowered them by faith to do the like, ver. 21, 22. as he said, John xiv. 12. Greater works than these shall ye do.

Observe, 1. The description of this wonder working faith; If ye have faith and doubt not. Note, doubting of the power and promise of God is the great thing that spoils the efficacy and success of faith. If ye have faith, and dispute not, so some read it; dispute not with yourselves, dispute not with the promise of God; if you stagger not at the promise, Rom. iv. 20. for as far as we do, so our faith is deficient; as certain as the promise is, so confident our faith should be.

2. The power and prevalency of it is expressed figuratively; If ye shall say to this mountain, meaning the mount of Olives, Be thou removed, it shall be done. There might be a particular reason for his saying so of this mountain, for there was a prophecy, that the mount of Olives, which is before Jerusalem, should cleave in the midst, and then remove, Zech. xiv. 4. and whatever was the intent of that word, the same must be the expectation of faith, how impossible soever it might appear to sense. But this is a proverbial expression; intimating, that we are to believe that nothing is impossible with God, and therefore what he has promised shall certainly be performed, though to us it seem impossible. It was among the Jews a usual commendation of their learned Rabbins, that they were removers of mountains, i. e. could solve the greatest difficulties; now this may be done by faith acted on the word of God, which will bring great and strange things to pass.

3. The way and means of exercising this faith, and of doing that which is to be done by it; All things whatsoever ye shall ask in prayer, believing, ye shall receive. Faith is the soul, prayer is the body, both together make a complete man for any service: Faith, if it be right, will excite prayer; and prayer is not right, if it do not spring from faith. This is the condition of our receiving, we must ask in prayer, believing; the requests of prayer shall not be denied; the expectations of faith shall not be frustrated. We have many promises to this purpose from the mouth of our Lord Jesus, and all to encourage faith the principal grace, and a prayer the principal duty of a Christian. It is but ask and have, believe and receive; and what would we more? Observe, How comprehensive the promise is, of all things whatsoever ye shall ask: this is like all and every the premises in a conveyance: All things is general, whatsoever brings it to particulars; though generals include particulars, yet such is the folly of our unbelief, that though we think we assent to promises in general, yet we fly off when it comes to particulars, and therefore, that we might have strong consolation, it is thus copiously expressed, All things whatsoever.

23. ¶ And when he was come into the temple, the chief priests and the elders of the people came unto him as he was teaching, and said, By what authority doest thou these things? and who gave thee this authority? 24. And Jesus answered and said unto them, I also will ask you one thing, which if ye tell me, I in like wise will tell you by what authority I do these things. 25. The baptism of John, whence was it? from heaven, or of men? And they reasoned with themselves, saying, If we shall say, From heaven; he will say unto us, Why did ye not then believe him? 26. But if we shall say, Of men; we fear the people; for all hold John as a prophet. 27. And they answered Jesus, and said, We cannot tell. And he said unto them, Neither tell I you by what authority I do these things.

Our Lord Jesus (like St. Paul after him) preached his gospel with much contention; his first appearance was in a dispute with the doctors in the temple, when he was twelve years old; and here, just before he died; we have him engaged. In this sense he was like Jeremiah, a man of contention; not striving, but striving with. The great contenders with him were the chief priests and the elders, the judges of two distinct courts; the chief priests presided in the ecclesiastical court in all matters of the Lord, as they are called: the elders of the people were judges of the civil courts, in temporal matters; See an idea of both, 2 Cron. xix. 5—8—11. These joined to attack Christ, thinking they should find or make him obnoxious either to the one or to the other. See how woefully degenerate that generation was, when the governors both in church and state, that should have been the great promoters of the Messiah's kingdom were the great opposers of it? Here we have them disturbing him when he was preaching, ver. 23. They would neither receive his instructions themselves, nor let others receive them. Observe,

1. As soon as he came to Jerusalem he went to the temple, though he had been affouled there the day before, was there in the midst of enemies, and in the mouth of danger; yet thither he went, for there he had a fairer opportunity of doing good to souls than any where else in Jerusalem: though he became hungry to the city, and was disappointed of a breakfast at the barren fig-tree, yet, for ought appears, he went straight to the temple, as one that esteemed the words of God's mouth, the preaching of them more than his necessary food.

2. In the temple he was teaching; he had called it a house of prayer, ver. 13. and here we have him preaching there. Note, In the solemn assemblies of Christians, praying and preaching must go together, and neither must encroach upon or justify out the other. To make up a communion with God, we must not only speak to him in prayer, but hear what he has to say to us by his word: Ministers must give themselves both to the word and to prayer, Acts vi. 4. Now Christ taught in the temple, that scripture was fulfilled, Isa. ii. 3. Let us go up to the house of the Lord, and he will teach us his ways. The priests of old often taught there the good knowledge of the Lord, but they never had such a teacher as this.

When Christ was teaching the people, the priests and elders came upon him and challenged him to produce his orders: the hand of Satan was in this to hinder him in his work. Note, It cannot but be a trouble to a faithful minister to be taken off or diverted from plain and practical preaching, by an unavoidable necessity of engaging in controversies; yet good was brought out of this evil, for hereby occasion was given to Christ to dispel the objections that were advanced against him, to the greater satisfaction of his followers; and while his adversaries thought by their power to have silenced him, he by his wisdom silenced them.

Now in this dispute with them we may observe,

First, How he was assaulted by their insolent demand: by what authority dost thou these things; and who gave thee this authority? Had they duly considered his miracles, and the power by which he wrought them, they needed not to have asked this question; but they must have something to say for the shelter of an obstinate infidelity. Thou ridest in triumph into Jerusalem, receivest the hosannas of the people, controuldest in the temple, drivest out such as had license to be there from the rulers of the temple, and paid them rent: thou art here preaching a new doctrine; whence dost thou a commission to do all this? was it from Cæsar? or from the high priest? or from God? Produce thy warrant, thy credentials. Dost not thou take too much upon thee? Note, It is good for all that take upon them to act with authority, to put this question to themselves, Who gave them that authority? For unless a man be clear in his own conscience concerning that, he cannot act with any comfort or hope of success. They who run before their warrant, run without their blessing, Jer. xxiii. 21, 22.

Christ had often said it, and proved it beyond contradiction, and Nicodemus, a master in Israel, had owned it, that he was a teacher sent of God, John iii. 2. yet at this time of day, when that point had been so fully cleared and settled, they come to him with this question: 1. In the ostentation of their own power, as chief priests and elders, which they thought authorized them to call him to an account in this manner. How haughtily do they ask, Who gave thee this authority? intimating, that he could have no authority, because he had none from them. 1 Kings xxii. 24. Jer. xx. 1. Note, It is common for the greatest abusers of their power, to be the most rigorous aspersers of it, and to take a pride and pleasure in any thing that looks like the exercise of it. 2. It was to insinuate and entangle him; should he deny to answer this question, they would enter judgement against him upon nihil dicit, would condemn him as standing mute; and would insinuate to the people, that his silence was a tacit confession of himself an usurper; should he plead an authority from God, they would, as formerly, demand a sign from heaven, or make his defence his offence, and accuse him of blasphemy for it.

Secondly How he answered this demand with another, which would help them to answer it themselves, ver. 24, 25. I also will ask you one thing. He declined giving them a direct answer, lest they should take advantage against him, but answers them with a question: those that are as sheep in the midst of wolves, have need to be wise as serpents: the heart of the wise studieth to answer. We must give a reason of the hope that is in us, not only with meekness, but with fear, 1 Pet. iii. 15. with prudent caution, lest truth be damaged or ourselves endangered.

Now this question is concerning John's baptism, here put for his whole ministry, preaching as well as baptizing; was this from heaven, or of men? one of the two it must be; either what he did was of his own head, or he was sent of God to do it: Gamaliel's argument turned upon this hinge, Acts v. 38, 39. either this counsel is of men or of God. Though that which is manifestly bad cannot be of God, yet that which is seemingly good may be of men, nay of Satan, when he transforms himself into an angel of light. This question was not at all shuffling, to evade theirs; but,

1. If they answered this question, it would answer theirs; if they should say against their consciences that John's baptism was of men, yet it would be easier to answer, John did no miracles, John x. 41. Christ did many; but if they should say, as they could not but own, that John's baptism was from heaven, (which was supposed in the questions sent him, John i. 21. Art thou Elias, or that prophet?) then their demand was answered, for he bore testimony to Christ. Note, Truths appear in the clearest light when they are taken in their due order; the resolving of the previous question will be a key to the main question.

2. If they refuse to answer it, there will be a good reason why he should not offer proofs of his authority to men that were obstinately prejudiced against the strongest conviction: it was but to cast pearls before swine. Thus he taketh the wise in their own craftiness, 1 Cor. iii. 19. and those that would not be convinced of the plainest truths shall be convicted of the vilest malice, against John first, then against Christ, and in both against God.

Thirdly, How they were hereby baffled and run aground; they knew the truth but would not own it, and so were taken in the snare they laid for our Lord Jesus. Observe,

1. How they reasoned with themselves, not concerning the merits of the cause, what proofs there were of the divine original of John's baptism; no, their care was how to make their part good against Christ: Two things they considered and consulted in this reasoning with themselves, their credit, and their safety, the same things which they principally aim at that seek their own things.

1. They consider their own credit, which they would endanger if they should own John's baptism to be of God, for then Christ would ask them before all the people, Why did ye not believe him? And to acknowledge that a doctrine is from God, and yet not receive and entertain it, is the greatest absurdity and iniquity that a man can be charged with: Many that will not be kept by the fear of sin from neglecting and opposing that which they know to be true and good, yet are kept by the fear of shame from owning that to be true and good which they neglect and oppose. Thus they reject the counsel of God against themselves, in not submitting to John's baptism, and were left without excuse.

2. They consider their own safety, that they would expose themselves to the resentments of the people, if they should say that John's baptism was of men; we fear the people, for all hold John as a prophet. It seems then, 1. That the people had truer sentiments of John than the chief priests and the elders had, or at least were more free and faithful in declaring their sentiments. This people, of whom they said in their pride that they knew not the law and were cursed, John vii. 49. it seems, knew the gospel and were blessed. 2. That the chief priests and elders stood in awe of the common people, which is an evidence that things were in disorder among them, and that mutual jealousies were at a great height; that the government was become obnoxious to the hatred and scorn of the people, and the scripture was fulfilled, I have made you contemptible and base. Mal. ii. 8, 9. If they had kept their integrity, and done their duty, they had kept up their authority and needed not to fear the people: We find sometimes that the people feared them, and it served them for a reason why they did not confess Christ, John ix. 22.—xii. 44. Note, Those cannot but fear the people who studied only how to make the people fear them. 3. That it is usually the temper, even of common people, to be zealous for the honour of that which they account sacred and divine. If they account John as a prophet, they will not endure it should be said his baptism was of men; hence the hottest contests have been about holy things. 4. That the chief priests and elders were kept from an open denial of the truth, even against the conviction of their own minds, not by the fear of God, but purely by the fear of the people; as the fear of man may bring good people into a snare, Prov. xxix. 25. so sometimes it may keep bad people from being over-much wicked, lest they should die before their time, Eccles. vii. 17. Many ill people would be a deal worse than they are if they durst.

2. How they replied to our Saviour, and so dropt the question: They fairly confessed we cannot tell; that is, we will not, οὐκ οἶδμεν, "we never knew;" the more shame for them, while they pretended to be leaders of the people, and by their office were obliged to take cognizance of such things; when they would not confess their knowledge, they were constrained to confess their ignorance. And observe, by the way, when they said we cannot tell, they told a lie, for they knew that John's baptism was of God. Note, There are many who are more afraid of the shame of lying than of the sin; and therefore scruple not to speak that which they know to be false concerning their own thoughts and apprehensions, their affections and intentions, or their remembering or forgetting of things, because in those things they know nobody can discover them.

Thus Christ avoided the snare they laid for him, and justified himself in refusing to gratify them, neither tell I you by what authority I do these things: If they be so wicked and base as either not to believe, or not to confess that the baptism of John was from heaven, (though it obliged to repentance that great duty, and sealed the kingdom of God at hand, that great promise) they were not fit to be discoursed with concerning Christ's authority; for men of such a disposition could not be convinced of the truths, nay they could not be provoked by it, and therefore he that is thus ignorant, let him be ignorant still. Note, Those that imprison the truth they know, in unrighteousness, either by not professing them or by not practising according to them, are justly denied the further truths they enquire after, Rom. i. 18, 19. Take away the talent from him that buried it: those that will not see, shall not see.

28. ¶ But what think ye? A certain man had two sons: and he came to the first, and said, Son, go work to-day in my vineyard. 29. He answered and said, I will not: but afterward he repented, and went. 30. And he came to the second and said likewise. And he answered and said, I go, sir: and went not. 31. Whether of them twain did the will of his father? They say unto him, The first. Jesus saith unto them, Verily I say unto you, that the publicans and the harlots go into the kingdom of God before you. 32. For John came unto you in the way of righteousness, and ye believed him not: but the publicans and the harlots believed him: and ye when ye had seen it, repented not afterward, that ye might believe him.

As Christ instructed his disciples by parables, which made the instructions the more easy, so sometimes he convinced his adversaries by parables, which bring reproofs more close, and make men, or ever they are aware, to reprove themselves. Thus Nathan convinced David by a parable, 2 Sam. xii. 1. and the woman of Tekoa surprised him in like manner, 2 Sam. xiv. 2. Reproving parables are appeals to the offenders themselves, and judge them out of their own mouths. This Christ designs here, as appears by the first words, ver. 28. But what think ye?

In these verses we have the parable of the two sons sent to work in the vineyard, the scope of which is to shew, that they who knew not John's baptism to be of God, were shamed even by the publicans and harlots who knew it and owned it. Here is,

First, The parable itself, which represents two sorts of persons; some that prove better than they promise, represented by the first of those sons; others that promise better than they prove, represented by the second.

1. They had both one and the same father, which signifies that God is a common Father to all mankind. There are favours which all alike receive from him, and obligations which all alike lie under to him; Have we not all one Father? Yes, and yet there is a vast difference between men's characters.

2. They had both the same command given them: Son, go work to-day in my vineyard. Parents should not breed up their children in idleness; nothing more pleasing, and yet nothing more pernicious to youth than that, Lam. iii. 27. God sets his children to work though they are all heirs; This command is given to every one of us. Note, 1. The work of religion, which we are called to engage in, is vineyard-work, creditable, profitable, and pleasant. By the sin of Adam we are turned out to work upon the common, and to eat the herb of the field; but by the grace of our Lord Jesus we are called to work again in the vineyard. 2. The gospel-call to work in the vineyard requires present obedience; Son, go work to-day, while it is called to day, because the night comes when no man can work; we were not sent into the world to be idle, nor had we day-light given us to play by, and therefore if ever we mean to do any thing for God and our souls, Why not now? Why not to-day? 2. The exhortation to go work to-day in the vineyard speaking unto us as unto children, Heb. xii. 5. Son go work; it is the command of a Father, which carries with it both authority and affection, a Father that pities his children and considers their frame, and will not over-task them, Psal. ciii. 13, 14. a Father that is very tender of his son that serves him, Mal. iii. 17. if we work in our Father's vineyard we work for ourselves.

3. Their carriage was very different.

1. One of the sons did better than he said, proved better than he promised: His answer was ill, but his actions well.

1. Here his untoward answer he gave to his Father; he said flat and plain, I will not: See to what a degree of impudence the corrupt nature of man riseth, to say, I will not, to the command of a father: such a command of such a Father, they are impudent children and stiff-hearted: Those that will not bend, surely they cannot blush; if they had any degree of modesty left them, they could not say, we will not, Jer. ii. 25. Excuses are bad, but downright denials are worse; yet such peremptory refusals do the calls of the gospel often meet with. 1. Some love their ease, and will not work; they would live in the world, as leviathan in the waters, to play therein, Psal. iv. 36. they do not love working. 2. Their hearts are so much upon their own fields, that they are not for working in God's vineyard. They love the business of the world better than the business of their religion. Thus some by the delights of sense, and others by the employments of the world are kept from doing that great work which they were sent into the world about, and so stand all the day idle.

2. Here is the happy change of his mind, and of his way upon second thoughts; Afterwards he repented, and went. Note, There are many that in their beginning are wicked and willful, and very unpromising, who afterwards repent and mend, and come to something. Some that God hath chosen are suffered for a great while to run to a great excess of riot; such were some of you, 1 Cor. vi. 11. These are set forth for patterns of long-suffering, 1 Tim. i. 16. afterwards he repented. Repentance is μετανοια, "an after-wit," and μεταμελεις, "an after-care." Better late than never. Observe, When he repented he went, that was the fruit meet for repentance: The only evidence of our repentance for our former resistance is immediately to comply and set to work, and then what is past shall be pardoned, and all shall be well. See what a kind father God is; he respects not the affront of our refusals, as justly he might. He that told his father to his face he would not do as he bid him, deserved to be kicked out of doors and disinherited; but our God wants to be gracious, and notwithstanding our former follies, if we repent and mend, will favourably accept of us; blessed be God, we are under a covenant that leaves room for such a repentance.

3. The other son said better than he did, promised better than he proved; his answer was well, but his actions ill. To him the father said likewise, ver. 30. The gospel-call, though very different, in effect is the same to all, and is carried on with an even tenor. We have all the same commands, engagements, encouragements, though to some they are a favour of life unto life, to others of death unto death. Observe,

1. How fairly this other son promised. He said, I go, Sir. He gives his father a title of respect, Sir. Note, It becomes children to speak respectfully to their parents. It is one branch of that honour which the fifth commandment requires. He professes a ready obedience, I go; not, I will go by and by, but ready, Sir, you may depend upon it, I go just now. This answer we should give from the heart heartily to all the calls and commands of the word of God. See Jer. iii. 22. Psal. xxxvii. 8.

2. How he failed in the performance, he went not. Note, There are many that give good words and make fair promises in religion, and those from some good motions for the present, that rest there and go no further, and so come to nothing. Saying and doing are two things, and many there are that say and do not; it is particularly charged upon the Pharisees Matt. xxiii. 3. Many with their mouth shew much love, but their heart goes another way. They had a good mind to be religious, but they met with something to be done that was too hard, or something to be parted with that was too dear, and so their purposes are to no purpose. Buds and blossom are not fruit.

Secondly, A general appeal upon the parable: Whether of them did the will of his father? ver. 31. They both had their faults, one was rude, and the other was false; such variety of exercises parents sometimes have in the different humours of their children, and they have need of a great deal of wisdom and grace to know what is the best way of managing them. But the question is, which was the better of the two, and the less faulty? And it was soon resolved; the first, because his actions were better than his words, and his latter end than his beginning. This they had learned from the common sense of mankind, who would much rather deal with one that will be better than his word, than with one that will be false to his word: And in the intention of it, they had learned from the account God gives of the rule of judgment, Ezek. xviii. 22, 23. that if the sinner turn from his wickedness, he shall be pardoned; and if the righteous man turn from his righteousness, he shall be rejected. The tenor of the whole scripture gives us to understand, that those are accepted as doing their Father's will, who wherein they have missed it are sorry for it, and do better.

Thirdly, A particular application of it to the matter in hand, ver. 31, 32. The primary scope of the parable is to shew how the publicans and harlots, who never talked of the Messiah and his kingdom, yet entertained the doctrine and submitted to the discipline of John Baptist his forerunner, when the priests and elders, who were big with the expectations of the Messiah, and seemed very ready to go into his measures, slighted John Baptist, and run counter to the designs of his mission. But it has a further reach, the Gentiles were sometimes disobedient, had been long so, children of disobedience, like the elder son, Tit. iii. 3, 4: yet when the gospel was preached to them they became obedient to the faith; whereas the Jews who said, I go, Sir, promised fair, Exod. xxiv. 7. Joshua xxix. 24. yet went not; they did but flatter God with their mouth, Psal. lxxviii. 36.

In Christ's application to this parable, observe,

1. How he proves that John's baptism was from heaven, and not from men. If you cannot tell, saith Christ, you might tell,

(1.) By the scope of his ministry. John came unto you in the way of righteousness. Would you know whether John had his commission from heaven remember the rule of trial, by their fruits ye shall know them; the fruits of their doctrines, the fruits of their doings. Observe but their way, and you may trace out both their rise and their tendency. Now it was evident that John came in the way of righteousness. In his ministry he taught people to repent, and to work the works of righteousness: In his conversation he was a great example of strictness and seriousness, and contempt of the world, denying himself and doing good to every body else: Christ therefore submitted to the baptism of John, because it became him to fulfil all righteousness: Now if John thus came in the way of righteousness, could they be ignorant that his baptism was from heaven, or make any doubt of it?

(2.) By the success of his ministry. The publicans and the harlots believed him; he did abundance of good among the worst sort of people. St. Paul moves his apostleship by the seals of his ministry, 1 Cor. ix. 2. If God had not sent John Baptist, he would not have crowned his labours with such wonderful success, nor have made him so instrumental as he was for the conversion of souls. If publicans and harlots believe his report, surely the arm of the Lord is with him. The people's profiting is the minister's best testimonial.

2. How he reproves them for their contempt of John's baptism, which yet for fear of the people they were not willing to own. And to shame them for it, he sets before them the faith, repentance, and obedience of the publicans and harlots, which aggravated their unbelief and impenitence. As he shews, Matt. xi. 21. that the less likely would have repented, so here that the less likely did repent.

1. The publicans and harlots were like the first son in the parable, from whom little religion was expected. They promised little good, and those that knew them promised themselves little good from them: Their disposition was generally rude, and their conversation profligate and debauched, and yet many of them were wrought upon by the ministry of John, who came in the spirit and power of Elias. See Luke vii. 29. And these fitly represented the Gentile world; for, as Dr. Whitby observes, the Jews generally ranked the publicans with the heathen; nay, and the heathen were represented by the Jews as harlots, and born of harlots, John viii. 41.

2. The Scribes and Pharisees, the chief priests and elders, and indeed the Jewish nation in general, were like the other son that gave good words; they made a specious profession of religion, and yet when the kingdom of the Messiah was brought among them by the baptism of John they slighted it, they turned their back upon it, nay they lift up the heel against it. An hypocrite is more hardly convinced and converted than a gross sinner; the form of godliness, if that be rested in becomes one of Satan's strong-holds, by which he opposeth the power of godliness. It was an aggravation of their unbelief, 1. That John was such an excellent person, that he came, and came to them, in the way of righteousness. The better the means are, the greater will the account be if not improved. 2. That when they saw the publicans and harlots go before them into the kingdom of heaven, they did not afterwards repent and believe; were not thereby provoked to a holy emulation, Rom. xi. 14. Shall publicans and harlots go away with grace and glory, and shall not we put in for a share? Shall our inferiors be more holy and more happy than we? They had not the wit and grace that Elias had, who was moved to take other measures than he had done, by the example of his younger brother, Gen. xxviii. 6. These proud priests that set up for leaders, scorned to follow, though it were into the kingdom of heaven, especially to follow publicans; through the pride of their countenance they would not seek after God, after Christ, Psal. x. 4.

33. ¶ Hear another parable: There was a certain householder, which planted a vineyard, and hedged it round about, and digged a wine press in it, and built a tower, and let it out to husbandmen, and went into a far country: 34. And when the time of the fruit drew near, he sent his servants to the husbandmen, that they might receive the fruits of it. 35. And the husbandmen took his servants, and beat one, and killed another, and stoned another. 36. Again, he sent other servants more than the first; and they did unto them likewise. 37. But last of all he sent unto them his son, saying, They will reverence my son. 38. But when the husbandmen saw the son, they said among themselves, This is the heir; come, let us kill him, and let us seize on his inheritance. 39. And they caught him, and cast him out of the vineyard, and slew him. 40. When the lord therefore of the vineyard cometh, what will he do unto those husbandmen? 41. They say unto him, He will miserably destroy those wicked men, and will let out his vineyard unto other husbandmen, which shall render him the fruits in their seasons. 42. Jesus saith unto them, Did ye never read in the scriptures, The stone which the builders rejected, the same is become the head of the corner: this is the Lord's doing, and it is marvellous in our eyes? 43. Therefore I say unto you, The kingdom of God shall be taken from you, and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof. 44. And whosoever shall fall on this stone shall be broken; but on whomsoever it shall fall, it will grind him to powder. 45. And when the chief priests and Pharisees had heard his parables, they perceived that he spake of them. 46. But when they sought to lay hands on him, they feared the multitude, because they took him for a prophet.

This parable plainly sets forth the sin and ruin of the Jewish nation; they and their leader, are the husbandmen here, and what is spoken for conviction to them, is spoken for caution to all that enjoy the privileges of the visible church, not to be high-minded, but fear.

First, We have here the privileges of the Jewish church represented by the letting out of a vineyard to the husbandmen; they were as tenants holding by, from, and under God the great householder. Observe,

1. How God established a church for himself in the world. The kingdom of God upon earth is here compared to a vineyard, furnished with all things requisite to an advantageous management and improvement of it. 1. He planted this vineyard. The church is the planting of the Lord, Isa. lxi. 3. The forming of a church is a work by itself, like the planting of a vineyard, which requires a great deal of cost and care. It is the vineyard which his right hand has planted, Psal. lxxx. 15. planted with the chiefest vine, Isa. v. 2. a noble vine, Jer. ii. 21. The earth of itself produceth thorns thorns and briars, but vines must be planted. The being of a church is owing to God's distinguishing favour, and his manifesting himself to some and not to others. He hedged it round about. Note, God's church in the world is taken under his special protection. It is a hedge round about, like that about Job on every side, Job i. 10. a wall of fire, Zech. ii. 5. Wherever God has a church, it is and will always be his peculiar care. The covenant of circumcision and the ceremonial law were a hedge or wall of partition about the Jewish church, which is taken down by Christ; who yet has appointed a gospel-order and discipline to be the hedge of his church. He will not have his vineyard to lie in common, that those that are without may thrust in at pleasure; not to lie at large, that those that are within may lash out at pleasure, but care is taken to set bounds about this holy mountain. 3. He digged a wine-press, and built a tower. The altar of burnt-offerings was the wine-press, to which all the offerings were brought. God instituted ordinances in his church for the due oversight of it, and for the promoting of its fruitfulness. What could have been done more to make it every way convenient?

2. How he intrusted these visible church privileges with the nation and people of the Jews, especially their chief priests and elders: he let it out to them as husbandmen, not because he had need of them as landlords have of their tenants: but because he would try them, and be honoured by them. When in Judah God was known, and his name was great; when they were taken to be to God for a people, and for a name; and for a praise, Jer. xiii. 11. when he revealed his word unto Jacob, Psalm cxlvii. 19. when the covenant of life and peace were made with Levi, Mal. ii. 4, 5. then this vineyard was let out. See an abstract of the lease, Cant. viii. 11, 12. The Lord of the vineyard was to have a thousand pieces of silver, (compare Isa. vii. 13.) the main profit was to be his; but the keepers were to have two hundred, a competent and comfortable encouragement. And then he went into a far country. When God had in a visible appearance settled the Jewish church at mount Sinai, he did in a manner withdraw; they had no more such open vision, but were left to the written word. Or they imagined that he was gone into a far distant country, as Israel when they made the calf, fancied that Moses was gone. They put far from them the evil day.

Secondly, God's expectation of rent from these husbandmen, ver. 34. And good reason, for who plants a vineyard and eats not of the fruit thereof? Note, From those that enjoy church-privileges, both ministers and people, God looks for fruit accordingly. 1. His expectations were not hasty; he did not demand a fore-rent, though he had been at such expence upon it; but till the time of the fruit drew near, as it did now John preached the kingdom of heaven is at hand; God waits to be gracious that he may give us time. 2. They were not high, he did not require them to come at their peril, upon penalty of forfeiting their lease if they ran behind-hand; but he sent his servants to them to mind them of their duty, and of the rent-day, and to help them in gathering in the fruit, and making return of it. These servants were the prophets of the Old Testament who were sent, and sometimes directly to the people of the Jews, to reprove and instruct them. 3. They were not hard, it was only to receive the fruits. He did not demand more than they could make of it, but some fruit of that which he himself planted; and observance of the laws and statutes he gave them. What could have been done more reasonable? But his expectations were frustrated, he found none. Israel was an empty vine, nay it was become the degenerate plant of a strange vine, and brought forth wild grapes.

Thirdly, The husbandmen's baseness in abusing the messengers that were sent to them.

(1.) When he sent them his servants they abused them, though they represented the master himself, and spoke in his name. Note, The calls and reproofs of the word, if they do not engage, will but exasperate. See here what hath all along been the lot of God's faithful messengers, more or less, 1. To suffer; so persecuted they the prophets, they were hated with a cruel hatred; they not only despised and reproached them, but treated them as the worst of malefactors, they beat them, and killed them, and stoned them. They beat Jeremiah, killed Isaiah, stoned Zechariah the son of Jehoiada in the temple. If they that live godly in Christ Jesus themselves shall suffer persecution, much more they that press others to it. This was God's old quarrel with the Jews, misusing his prophets, 2 Chron. xxvi. 16. 2. It has been their lot to suffer from their Master's own tenants. They were the husbandmen that treated them thus, the chief priests and elders that sat in Moses's chair, and professed religion and relation to God; these were the most bitter enemies of the Lord's prophets, that cast them out and killed them, and said, Let the Lord be glorified, Isa. lxvi. 5. See Jer. xxi. 1, 2.—xxvi. 11.

Now see, 1. How God persevered in his goodness to them. He sent other servants, more than the first; though the first sped not, but were abused. He sent them John Baptist, and him they had beheaded, and yet he sent them his disciples to prepare his way. O the riches of the patience and forbearance of God, in keeping up in his church a despised, persecuted ministry!

2. How they persisted in their wickedness. They did unto them likewise. One sin makes way for another of the same kind. They that are drunk with the blood of the saints, add drunkenness to thirst, and still cry, Give, give.

(2.) At length he sent them his Son; we have seen God's goodness in sending, and their badness in abusing the servants, but in the latter instance both these exceed themselves.

1. Never did grace appear more gracious than in sending the Son. This was done last of all. Note, All the prophets were harbingers and forerunners of Christ. He was sent last; for if nothing else would work upon them, sure this would; it was therefore reserved for the ratio ultima, the last expedient. Surely they will reverence my Son, and therefore I will send him. Note, It might reasonably be expected, that the Son of God when he came to his own should be revered. And reverence to Christ would be a powerful and effectual principle of fruitfulness and obedience to the glory of God; if they will but reverence the Son the point is gained. Surely they will reverence my Son, for he comes with more authority than the servants could; judgment is committed to him, that all men should honour him. There is greater danger in refusing him than in despising Moses's law.

2. Never did sin appear more sinful than in the abusing of him; which was now to be done in two or three days. Observe,

1. How it was plotted, ver. 39. When they saw the Son; when he came whom the people owned and followed as the Messiah, who would either have the rent paid, or disclaim for it; this touched their copyhold, and they were resolved to make one bold push for it, and to preserve their wealth and grandeur by taking him out of the way, who was the only hindrance of it, and rival with them. This is the heir, come let us kill him. Pilate and Herod, the princes of this world, knew not; for if they had known, they would not have crucified the Lord of glory, 1 Cor. ii. 8. But the chief priests and elders knew that this was the heir, at least some of them; and therefore, Come let us kill him: many are killed for what they have. The chief thing they envied him, and for which they hated and feared him, was his interest in the people, and their hosannas, which, if he were taken off, they hoped to ingross securely to themselves. They pretended he must die to save the people from the Romans, John xi. 50. but really he must die to save their hypocrisy and tyranny from that reformation which the expected kingdom of the Messiah would certainly bring along with it. He drives the buyers and sellers out of the temple, and therefore let us kill him; and then, as if the premises must of course go to the occupant, let us seize on his inheritance. They thought, if they could but get rid of this Jesus, they should carry all before them in the church without control, might impose what traditions, and force the people to what submissions they pleased. Thus they take counsel against the Lord and his anointed; but he that sits in heaven laughs to see them out-shot in their own bow; for while they thought to kill him and to seize on his inheritance, he went by his cross to his crown, and they were broken in pieces with a rod of iron, and their inheritance seized, Psalm ii. 2, 3, 6—9.

2. How this plot was executed, ver. 39. While they were so set upon killing him, in pursuance of their design to secure their own pomp and power, and while he was so set upon dying, in pursuance of his design to subdue Satan and save his chosen, no wonder is they soon caught him and slew him, when his hour was come. Though the Roman power condemned him, yet it is still charged upon the chief priests and elders; for they were not only the prosecutors, but the principal agents, and had the greater sin. Ye have taken, Acts ii. 23. Nay, looking upon him to be as unworthy to live, as they were unwilling he should, they cast him out of the vineyard, out of the holy church which they supposed themselves to have the key of, and out of the holy city, for he was crucified without the gate, Heb. xiii. 12. As if he had been the shame and reproach, who was the greatest glory of his people Israel. Thus they who persecuted the servants, persecuted the Son; as men treat God's ministers, they would treat Christ himself if he were with them.

Fourthly, Here is their doom read out of their own mouths, ver. 40, 41. He puts it to them, When the Lord of the vineyard comes what will he do unto these husbandmen? He puts it to themselves for their stronger conviction, that knowing the judgment of God against them which do such things they might be the more inexcusable. Note, God's proceedings are for unexceptionable, that there needs but an appeal to sinners themselves concerning the equity of them; God will be justified when he speaks. They could readily answer, He will miserably destroy those wicked men. Note, Many can easily prognosticate the dismal consequences of other people's sin, that see not what will be the end of their own.

1. Our Saviour in his question supposeth that the lord of the vineyard will come and reckon with them. God is lord of the vineyard, the property is his, and he will make them know it who now lord it over his heritage, as if it were all their own. The lord of the vineyard will come. Persecutors say in their hearts, he delays his coming, he doth not see, he will not require; but they shall find, though he bear long with them he will not bear always. It is comfort to abused saints and ministers, that the Lord is at hand, the judge stands before the door. When he comes, what will he do to carnal professors? What will he do to cruel persecutors? They must be called to account, they have their day, but he sees that this day is coming.

2. They in their answer suppose that it will be a terrible reckoning; the crime appearing so very black, you may be sure,

1. That he will miserably destroy those wicked men, it is destruction that is their doom Kakos kakos apostoloi. Malus male perdit: "Let men never expect to do ill, and fare well." This was fulfilled upon the Jews, in that miserable destruction which was brought upon them by the Romans, and was completed about 40 years after this; an unparalleled ruin, attended with all the most dismal aggravating circumstances. It will be fulfilled upon all that tread in the steps of their wickedness; hell is everlasting destruction, and it will be the most miserable destruction to them of all others, that have enjoyed the greatest share of church privileges and have not improved them. The hottest place in hell will be the portion of hypocrites and persecutors.

2. That he will let out his vineyard to other husbandmen. Note, God will have a church in the world, notwithstanding the unworthiness and opposition of many that abuse the privileges of it. The unbelief and forwardness of man shall not make the word of God of none effect. If one will not, another will. The Jews' leavings were the Gentiles' feast. Persecutors may destroy the ministers, but cannot destroy the church. The Jews imagined, that no doubt but they were the people, and wisdom and holiness must die with them; and if they were cut off, what would God do for a church in the world? But when God makes use of any to bear up his name, it is not because he needs them, nor is he at all beholden to them. If we were made a desolation and an astonishment, God could build a flourishing church upon our ruins; for he is never at a loss what to do for his great name, whatever becomes of us, and of our place and nation.

Fifthly, The further illustration and application of this by Christ himself, telling them in effect they had rightly judged.

1. He illustrates it by referring to a scripture fulfilled in this, ver. 42. Did ye never read in the scripture? Yes, no doubt, they had often read and sung it, but had not considered it. We lose the benefit of what we read for want of meditation. The scripture he quotes, Psalm cxviii. 22, 23. the same context out of which the children fetched their hosannas. The same word yields matter of praise and comfort to Christ's friends and followers, which speaks conviction and terror to his enemies. Such a two-edged sword is the word of God. That scripture, the stone which the builders refused is become the head-stone of the corner, illustrates the preceding parable, especially that part of it which refers to Christ.

1. The builders rejecting the stone, is the same with the husbandmen's abusing the Son that were sent to them. The chief priests and the elders were the builders, had the oversight of the Jewish church, which was God's building: And they would not allow Christ a place in their building, would not admit his doctrine or laws into their constitution; they threw him aside as a despised broken vessel, a stone that would serve only for a stepping stone to be trampled upon.

2. The advancing of this stone to be the head of the corner, is the same with letting out the vineyard to other husbandmen. He who was rejected by the Jews was embraced by the Gentiles; and to that church where there is no difference of circumcision or uncircumcision, Christ is all, and in all. His authority over the gospel-church and influence upon it, his ruling it as the head, and uniting it as the corner-stone, is the great instance of his exaltation. Thus in spite of the malice of the priest and elders he divided a portion with the great, and received his kingdom, though they would not have him to reign over them.

3. The hand of God was in all this; this is the Lord's doing. Even the rejecting of him by the Jewish builders was, by the determinate counsel and fore-knowledge of God, permitted and over-ruled; much more was his advancement to the head of the corner; his right hand and his holy arm brought it about, it was God himself that highly exalted him, and gave him a name above every name; and it is marvellous in our eyes. The wickedness of the Jews that rejected him is marvellous: that men should be so prejudiced against against their own interest; see Isa. xix. 9, 10—14. The honour done him by the Gentile world, notwithstanding the abuses done him by his own people, is marvellous. That he whom men despised and abhorred should be adored by kings, Isa. xlix. 7. but it is the Lord's doing.

2. He applies it to them, and application is the life of preaching.

1. He applies the sentence which they had passed, ver. 41. and turns it upon themselves; not the former part of it concerning the miserable destruction of the husbandmen, he could not bear to speak of that, but the latter part, of letting out the vineyard to others, he makes application of; because, though it looked black upon the Jews, it spoke good to the Gentiles. Know then,

(1.) That the Jews shall be unchurched; the kingdom of God shall be taken from you. This turning out of the husbandmen speaks the same doom with that of dismantling the vineyard, and laying it common, Isa. v. 5. To the Jews had long pertained the adoption and the glory, Rom. ix. 5. to them were committed the oracles of God, Rom. iii. 2. and the sacred trust of revealed religion, and bearing up God's name in the world, Psal. lxxvi. 1, 2. But now it shall be no longer. They were not only unfruitful in the use of their privileges, but under pretence of them opposed the gospel of Christ, and so forfeited them, and it was not long ere the forfeiture was taken. Note, It is a righteous thing with God to remove church privileges from those that not only sin against them, but sin with them, Rev. ii. 4, 5. The kingdom of God was taken from the Jews, not only by the temporal judgment that befel them, but by the spiritual judgments they lay under, their blindness of mind, hardness of heart, and indignation at the gospel, Rom. xi. 8, 9, 10. 1 Theff. ii. 15.

(2.) That the Gentiles shall be taken in. God needs not ask us leave whether we shall have a church in the world; though his vine be plucked up in one place, he shall find another to plant it in. He will give it 3rd "to the Gentile world," that will bring forth the fruit of it. They who had been not a people, and had not obtained mercy, became favourites of heaven. This is the mystery which blessed Paul was so much affected with, Rom. xi. 30—33. and which the Jews were so much affronted by, Acts xxii. 21, 22. At the first planting of Israel in Canaan, the fall of the Gentiles was the riches of Israel, Psal. cxxxv. 10, 11. So at their extirpation the fall of Israel was the riches of the Gentiles, Rom. xi. 12. It shall go to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof. Note, Christ knows beforehand who will bring forth gospel-fruits in the use of gospel-means; because our fruitfulness is all the work of his own hands, and known unto God are all his works. They shall bring forth the fruits better than the Jews had done; God has had more glory from the New Testament church, than from that of the Old Testament, for when he changeth it shall not be to his loss.

2. He applies the scripture which he had quoted, ver. 42. to their terror, eccl. 44. This stone which the builders refused to set for the fall of many in Israel; and we have here the doom of two sorts of people, for whose fall it proves that Christ is set.

1. Some through ignorance stumble at Christ in his estate of humiliation; when this stone lies on the earth, where the builders threw it, they through their blindness and carelessness fall on it, fall over it, and they shall be broken: The offence they take at Christ will not hurt him, no more than he that stumbles hurts the stone he stumbles at, but it will hurt themselves; they will fall, and be broken, and snared, Isa. viii. 14. 1 Pet. ii. 7, 8. The unbelief of sinners will be their ruin.

2. Others through malice oppose Christ, and bid defiance to him in his estate of exaltation; when this stone is advanced to the head of the corner, and on them it shall fall, for they pull it on their own heads, as the Jews did by that challenge, his blood be upon us and upon our children, and it will grind them to powder. The former seems to speak the sin and ruin of all unbelievers; this the greater sin, and sorer ruin of persecutors, that kick against the pricks and persist in it. Christ's kingdom will be a burdensome stone to all those that attempt to overthrow it, or heave it out of its place; see Zech. vii. 3. This stone cut out of the mountains without hands will break in pieces all opposing power, Dan. ii. 34, 35. Some make this an allusion to the manner of stoning to death among the Jews. The malefactors were first thrown down violently from a high scaffold upon a great stone, which would much bruise them; but then they threw another great stone upon them, which would crush them to pieces; one way or other Christ will utterly destroy all those that fight against him. If they be so stout-hearted that they are not destroyed by falling on this stone, yet it shall fall on them, and do their business. He will strike through kings, he will fill the places with dead bodies, Psal. cx. 5, 6. None ever hardened his heart against God and prospered.

Lastly, The entertainment which this discourse of Christ met with among the chief priests and elders that heard his parables.

1. They perceived that he spake of them, ver. 45. and that in what they said, ver. 41. they had but read their own doom. Note, A guilty conscience needs no accuser, and sometimes will save a minister the labour of saying, Thou art the man. Mutato nomine de te fabula narratur. So quick and powerful is the word of God, and such a discernor of the thoughts and intents of the heart, that it is easy for bad men (if conscience be not quite seared) to perceive that it speaks of them.

2. They sought to lay hands on him. Note, When those who hear the reproofs of the word perceive that it speaks of them, if it do not do them a great deal of good, it will certainly do them a great deal of hurt. If they be not pricked to the heart with conviction and contrition, as they were, Acts ii. 37. they will be cut to the heart with rage and indignation, as they were, Acts v. 33.

3. They durst not do it for fear of the multitude, who took him for a prophet, though not for the Messiah; this served to keep the Pharisees in awe; The fear of the people restrained them from speaking ill of John, ver. 26, and here from doing ill to Christ. Note, God has many ways of restraining the remainders of wrath, as he has of making that which breaks out to redound to his praise, Psal. lxxvi. 10.

CHAP. XXII.

This chapter is a continuation of Christ's discourses in the temple, two or three days before he died: His discourses then are largely recorded, as being of special weight and consequence. In this chapter we have, (1.) Instructions given, by the parable of the marriage-supper, concerning the rejection of the Jews and the calling of the Gentiles, ver. 1—10, and, by the doom of the guest that had not the wedding-garment, the danger of hypocrisy in the profession of Christianity, ver. 11—14. (2.) Disputes with the Pharisees, Sadducees, and Scribes, who opposed Christ, 1. Concerning paying tribute to Cæsar, ver. 15—22. 2. Concerning the resurrection of the dead and future state, ver. 23—33. 3. Concerning the great commandment of the law, ver. 34—40. 4. Concerning the relation of the Messiah to David, ver. 41—46.

1. AND Jesus answered and spake unto them again by parables, and said, 2. The kingdom of heaven is like unto a certain king, which made a marriage for his son, 3. And sent forth his servants to call them that were bidden to the wedding: and they would not come. 4. Again, he sent forth other servants, saying, Tell them which are bidden, Behold, I have prepared my dinner; my oxen and my fatlings are killed, and all things are ready; come unto the marriage. 5. But they made light of it, and went their ways, one to his farm, another to his merchandize: 6. And the remnant took his servants, and entreated them spitefully, and slew them, 7. But when the king heard thereof, he was wroth: and he sent forth his armies, and destroyed those murderers, and burnt up their city. 8. Then saith he to his servants, The wedding is ready, but they which were bidden were not worthy, 9. Go ye therefore into the highways, and as many as ye shall find, bid to the marriage. 10. So those servants went out into the highways, and gathered together all as many as they found, both bad and good: and the wedding was furnished with guests. 11. ¶ And when the king came in to see the guests, he saw there was a man which had not on a wedding garment: 12. And he saith unto him, Friend, how camest thou in hither, not having a wedding garment? and he was speechless. 13. Then said the king to his servants, Bind him hand and foot, and take him away, and cast him into outer darkness: there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth. 14. For many are called, but few are chosen.

We have here the parable of the guests invited to the wedding-feast. In that it is said, ver. 1. Jesus answered, not to what his opposers said, for they were put to silence, but to what they thought, when they were wishing for an opportunity to lay hands on him, chap. xxi. 46. Note, Christ knows how to answer men's thoughts, for he is a discernor of them. Or he answered, i. e. he continued his discourse to the same purpose; for this parable represents the gospel offer and the entertainment it meets with, as the former, but under another similitude: The parable of the vineyard represents the sin of the rulers that persecuted the prophets, this shews also the sin of the people, who generally neglected the message, while their great ones were persecuting the messengers.

First, Gospel preparations are here represented by a feast which a king made at the marriage of his son: such is the kingdom of heaven, such the provision made for precious souls, in and by the new covenant: The King is God, a great King, King of kings. Now,

(1.) Here is a marriage for his son. Christ is the bridegroom, the church is the bride; the gospel-day is the day of his espousals, Cant. iii. 11. Behold by faith the church of the first-born, that are written in heaven, and were given to Christ by him whose they were; and in them you see the bride, the Lamb's wife, Rev. xxi. 9. The gospel covenant is a marriage covenant betwixt Christ and believers, and it is a marriage of God's making. This branch of the similitude is only mentioned, and not prosecuted here,

(2.) Here is a dinner prepared for this marriage, ver. 4. All the privileges of church membership, and all the blessings of the new covenant, pardon of sin, the favour of God, peace of conscience, the promises of the gospel, and all the riches contained in them, access to the throne of grace, the comforts of the Spirit, and a well grounded hope of eternal life: These are the preparations for this feast, a heaven upon earth now, and a heaven in heaven shortly: God has prepared it in his counsel, in his covenant. It is a dinner, noting present privileges in the midst of our day, besides the supper at night in glory.

1. It is a feast: Gospel preparations were prophesied of as a feast, Isa. xxv. 6. a feast of fat things, and were typified by the many festivals of the ceremonial law, 1 Cor. v. 8. Let us keep the feast. A feast is a good day, Ester viii. 17. so is the gospel, it is a continual feast: Oxen and fatlings are killed for this feast; no niceties, but substantial food; enough and enough of the best. The day of a feast is a day of slaughter, or sacrifice, James v. 5. Gospel preparations are all founded in the death of Christ, his sacrifice of himself. A feast was made for love, it is a reconciliation feast, a token of God's good-will towards men. It was made for laughter, Ecc. v. 19. it is a rejoicing feast: It was made for fulness; the delign of the gospel was to fill every hungry soul with good things: It was made for fellowship, to maintain an intercourse between heaven and earth. We are sent for to the banquet of wine, that we may tell what is our petition, and what is our request.

2. It is a wedding feast: Wedding feasts used to be most rich and free, and most joyful. The first miracle Christ wrought was to make plentiful provision for a wedding-feast, John ii. 7. and surely then he will not be wanting in provision for his own wedding-feast: When the marriage of the Lamb is come, and the bride has made herself ready, a victorious triumphant feast, Rev. xix. 7—17, 18.

3. It is a royal wedding-feast, it is the feast of a king, 1 Sam. xxv. 36. at the marriage, not of a servant, but of a son; and then, if ever, he will, like Ahasuerus, shew the riches of a glorious kingdom, Ester i. 4. The provision made for believers in the covenant of grace, is not such as becomes such worthless worms as we are to receive, but such as becomes the King of glory to give: He gives like himself, for he gives himself to be to them El-shaddai, a God that is enough, a feast indeed for a soul.

Secondly, Gospel calls and offers are represented by an invitation to this feast: Those that make a feast, will have guests to grace the feast with: God's guests are the children of men: Lord, what is man, that he should be thus dignified? The guests that were first invited were the Jews; wherever the gospel is preached, this invitation is given; ministers are the servants that are sent to invite, Prov. ix. 4, 5.

Now, 1. The guests are called, bidden to the wedding: All that are within hearing of the joyful sound of the gospel: to them is the word of this invitation sent: The servants that bid, have not their names set down in a paper, that needs not, since none are excluded but those that exclude themselves. Those that are bidden to the dinner, are bidden to the wedding: for all that partake of gospel privileges, are to give a due and respectful attendance on the Lord Jesus, as the faithful friends and humble servants of the bridegroom. They are bidden to the wedding, that they may go forth to meet the bridegroom; for it is the Father's will, that all men should honour the Son.

2. The guests are called upon; for in the gospel there are not only gracious proposals made, but gracious persuasives: We persuade men, we beseech them in

in Christ's stead, 2 Cor. v. 11—20. See how much Christ's heart is set upon the happiness of poor souls! he not only provides for them in consideration of their want, but sends to them in consideration of their weakness and forgetfulness. When the invited guests were slack in coming, the king sent forth other servants, ver. 4. When the prophets of the Old Testament prevailed not, nor John Baptist, nor Christ himself, who told them dinner was almost ready; the kingdom of God was at hand; the apostles and ministers of the gospel were sent after Christ's resurrection, to tell them it was come, it was quite ready; and to persuade them to accept the offer. One would think, that it had been enough to give men an intimation that they had leave to come, and should be welcome; that, during the solemnity of the wedding, the king kept open house; but because the natural man discerns not, and therefore desires not the things of the Spirit of God, we are pressed to accept the call by the most powerful inducements, drawn with the cords of a man, and all the bonds of love. If the repetition of the call will move us, Behold, the Spirit saith, Come; and the bride saith, Come; let him that hears say, Come; let him that is athirst come, Rev. xxii. 17. If the reason of the call will work upon us, Behold, the dinner is prepared, the oxen and fountains are killed, and all things are ready; the Father is ready to accept of us, the Son to intercede for us, the Spirit to sanctify us; pardon is ready, peace ready, comfort ready; the promises ready, as wells of living water for supply; ordinances ready, as golden pipes for conveyance: angels ready to attend us, creatures ready to be in league with us, promises ready to work for our good, and heaven at last ready to receive us; it is a kingdom prepared, ready to be revealed in the last time. Is all this ready, and shall we be unready? Is all this preparation made for us, and is there any room to doubt of our welcome, if we come in a right manner? Come therefore, O come to the marriage, we beseech you, receive not all this grace of God in vain, 2 Cor. vi. 1.

Thirdly, The ill entertainment which the gospel of Christ often meets with among the children of men, represented by the cold treatment that this message met with, and the hot treatment the messengers met with, and in both the king himself and the royal bridegroom are affronted. This reflects primarily upon the Jews, who rejected the counsel of God against themselves; but it looks further to the contempt that would, by many in all ages, be put upon, and the opposition that would be given to the gospel of Christ.

1. The message was basely slighted, ver. 3. They would not come. Note, The reasons why sinners come not to Christ and salvation by him, it is not because they cannot, but because they will not, John v. 40. Ye will not come unto me. This will aggravate the misery of sinners, that they might have had happiness for the coming for, but it was their own act and deed to refuse it: I would, and ye would not. But this was not all, ver. 5. they made light of it; they thought it not worth coming for; thought the messengers made more ado than needs; let them magnify the preparations never so much, they could dine as well at home. Note, Making light of Christ, and of the great salvation wrought out by him, is the damning sin of the world. Amalequitis, "they were careless." Note, Multitudes perish eternally through mere carelessness, that have not any direct aversion to, but a prevailing indifferency in the matters of their souls, and an unconcernedness about them.

And the reason why they made light of the marriage-feast was, because they had other things that they minded more, and had more mind to; they went their ways, one to his farm, and another to his merchandise. Note, The business and profit of worldly employment proves to many a great hindrance in closing with Christ: None turn their back on the feast but with some plausible excuse or other, Luke xiv. 18. The country people have their farms to look after, about which there is always something or other to do; the town's people must tend their shops, and be constant upon the exchange; they must buy and sell, and get gain: And it is true, that both farmers and merchants must be diligent in their business, but not so as to keep them from making religion their main business; Licetis perimus omnes: These lawful things undo us, when they are unlawfully managed; when we are so careful and troubled about many things, as to neglect the one thing needful. Observe, Both the city and the country have their temptations, the merchandise in the one, and the farms in the other; so that whatever we have of the world in our hands, our care must be to keep it out of our hearts, lest it come between us and Christ.

2. The messengers were basely abused: The remnant, or the rest of them, that is, those who did not go to the farms, or merchandise, were neither husbandmen nor tradesmen, but ecclesiastics, the Scribes and Pharisees, and chief priests, these were the persecutors, these took the servants and intreated them spitefully, and slew them. This in the parable is unaccountable, never any could be so rude and barbarous as this, to servants that came to invite them to a feast, but in the reddition of the parable it was matter of fact; they whose feet should have been beautiful, because they brought the glad tidings of the solemn feasts, (Nahum i. 15.) were treated as the off-scouring of all things, 1 Cor. iv. 13. The prophets and John Baptist had been thus abused already, and the apostles and ministers of Christ must count upon the same: The Jews were either directly or indirectly agents in most of the persecutions of the first preachers of the gospel; witness the history of the Acts, i. e. the sufferings of the apostles.

Fourthly, The utter ruin that was coming upon the Jewish church and nation, is here represented by the revenge which the king in wrath took on these insolent recusants, ver. 7. He was wrath: The Jews that had been the people of God's love and blessing, by rejecting the gospel, became the generation of his wrath and curse: Wrath came upon them to the uttermost, 1 Thess ii. 16. Now observe here,

1. What was the crying sin that brought the ruin, it was their being murderers. He doth not say, he destroyed those despisers of his call, but those murderers of his servants; as if God were more jealous for the lives of his ministers, than for the honour of his gospel; he that toucheth them, toucheth the apple of his eye. Note, Persecution of Christ's faithful ministers, fills the measure of guilt more than any thing. Filling Jerusalem with innocent blood, was that sin of Manassch, which the Lord would not pardon, 2 Kings xxiv. 4.

2. What was the ruin itself that was coming: He sent forth his armies. The Roman armies were his armies, of his raising, of his sending against the people of his wrath, and he gave them a charge to tread them under foot, Isa. x. 6. God is the Lord of men's hosts, and makes what use he pleaseth of them to serve his own purposes, though they mean not so, neither doth their heart think so, Micah iv. 11, 12. His armies destroyed those murderers, and burnt up their city. This speaks very plainly the destruction of the Jews, and the burning of Jerusalem by the Romans forty years after this. No age ever saw a greater desolation than that, nor more of the direful effects of fire and sword. Though Jerusalem had been a holy city, the city that God had chosen to put his name there; beautiful for situation, the joy of the whole earth; yet that city being now become a harlot, righteousness being no longer lodged in it, but murderers, the worst of murderers, (as the prophet speaks, Isa. i. 21.) judgment came upon it, and ruin without remedy; and it is set forth for an example to all that should oppose Christ, and his gospel: It was the Lord's doing, to avenge the quarrel of his covenant.

Vol. III. No. CLXVI*.

Fifthly, the replenishing of the church again by the bringing in of the Gentiles, is here represented by the furnishing of the feasts with guests out of the high-ways, ver. 8, 9, 10.

Here is, 1. The complaint of the master of the feast concerning those that were first bidden, ver. 8. The wedding is ready, the covenant of grace ready to be sealed, a church ready to be founded, but they which were bidden, i. e. the Jews, to whom pertained the covenant and the promises, by which they were of old invited to the feast of fat things, they were not worthy, i. e. they were utterly unworthy, and, by their contempt of Christ, had forfeited all the privileges they were invited to. Note, It is not long of God that sinners perish, but of themselves. Thus when Israel of old was within sight of Canaan, the land of promise was ready, the milk and honey ready, but their unbelief and murmuring, and contempt of that pleasant land, shut them out, and their carcasses were left to perish in the wilderness; and these things happened to them for ensamples: See 1 Cor. x. 11. Heb. iii. 16—iv. 1.

2. The commission he gave to the servants to invite other guests; the inhabitants of the city, (ver. 7.) had refused; Go to the highways then; into the way of the Gentiles, which at first they were to decline, Matt. x. 5. Thus by the fall of the Jews salvation is come to the Gentiles, Rom. xi. 11, 12. Ephes. iii. 8. Note, Christ will have a kingdom in the world, though many reject the grace, and resist the power of that kingdom: Though Israel be not gathered, he will be glorious. The offer of Christ and salvation to the Gentiles, was, 1. Unlooked for and unexpected: such a surprise as it would be to wayfaring men upon the road to be met with an invitation to a wedding-feast. The Jews had notice of the gospel long before, and expected the Messiah and his kingdom; but to the Gentiles it was all new, and what they had never heard of before, Acts xvii. 19, 20. nor thought it did belong to them: See Isa. lxxv. 1, 2. 2. It was universal and undistinguishing: Go, and bid as many as you find. The high-ways are public places, and there wisdom cries, Prov. i. 20. Ask them that go by the way, i. e. ask any body, John xxi. 29. high and low, rich and poor, bond and free, young and old, Jew and Gentile; tell them all they shall be welcome to gospel privileges upon gospel terms; whoever wills let him come without exception.

3. The success of this second invitation; if some will not come, others will, ver. 10. They gathered together all, as many as they found: The servants obeyed their orders. Jonah was sent into the high-ways, but was so tender of the honour of his country, that he avoided the errand; but Christ's apostles, though Jews, preferred their service of Christ before their respects to their nation; and St. Paul, though sorrowing for the Jews, yet magnifies his office as the apostle of the Gentiles. They gathered together all. The design of the gospel is, 1. To gather souls together, not the nation of the Jews only, but all the children of God who were scattered abroad, John xi. 52. The other sheep that were not of the fold, John x. 16. They were gathered into one body, one family, one corporation. 2. To gather them together to the wedding-feast, to pay their respects to Christ, and to partake of the privileges of the new covenant. Where the dove is, there will the poor be gathered together.

Now the guests that were gathered were, 1. A multitude, all, as many as they found; so many that the guest-chamber was filled. The sealed ones of the Jews were numbered, but those of other nations were without number, a very great multitude, Rev. vii. 9. See Isa. lx. 4—8. 2. A mixed multitude, both bad and good; some that before their conversion were sober and well inclined, as the devout Greeks, Acts xvii. 4. and Cornelius, others that had run to an excess of riot, as the Corinthians. 1 Cor. vi. 11. Such were some of you. Or, some that after their conversion proved bad, that turned not to the Lord with all their heart, but feignedly; others that were upright and sincere, and proved well. Ministers, in casting the net of the gospel, inclose both good fish and bad, but the Lord knows them that are his.

Sixthly, The case of hypocrites that are in the church, but not of it; that have a name to live, but are not alive indeed, is represented by the guest that had not a wedding-garment; one of the bad that were gathered in. Those come short of salvation by Christ, not only who refuse to take upon them the profession of religion, but who are not sound at heart in that profession. Concerning this hypocrite observe,

1. His discovery, how he was found out, ver. 11.

(1.) The king came in to see the guests, to bid those welcome that came prepared, and to turn those out that came otherwise. Note, The God of heaven takes particular notice of those who profess religion, and have a place and a name in the visible church: our Lord Jesus walks among the golden candlesticks, and therefore knows their works: See Rev. ii. 1, 2. Cant. vii. 12. Let this be a warning to us against hypocrisy, that disguises will shortly be stripped off, and every man will appear in his own colours; and an encouragement to us in our sincerity, that God is a witness to it.

Observe, This hypocrite was never discovered to be without a wedding-garment, till the king himself came in to see the guests. Note, It is God's prerogative to know who are sound at heart in their profession, and who are not. We may be deceived in men, either one way or other, but he cannot. The day of judgment will be the great discovering day, when all the guests will be presented to the King, when he will separate between the precious and the vile, Matt. xxv. 32. the secrets of all hearts will then be made manifest, and we shall infallibly discern between the righteous and the wicked, which now is not easy to do: It concerns all the guests to prepare for that scrutiny, and to consider how they will pass the piercing eye of the heart-searching God.

(2.) As soon as he came in, he presently espied the hypocrite; he saw there a man which had not on a wedding-garment; though but one, he soon had his eye upon him; there is no hope of being hid in a crowd from the arrests of divine justice; he had not on a wedding-garment; he was not dressed as became a nuptial solemnity; he had not his best clothes on. Note, Many come to the wedding-feast without a wedding-garment. If the gospel be the wedding-feast, then the wedding-garment is a frame of heart, and a course of life agreeable to the gospel and our profession of it; worthy of the vocation wherewith we are called, Ephes. iv. 1. as becomes the gospel of Christ, Phil. i. 27. The righteousness of saints, their real holiness and sanctification, and Christ made righteousness to them, is the clean linen, Rev. xix. 8. This man was not naked or in rags, some raiment he had, but not a wedding-garment. Those, and those only, that put on the Lord Jesus, that have Christian temper of mind, and are adorned with Christian graces, that live by faith in Christ, and to whom he is all in all, have the wedding-garment.

2. His trial, ver. 12. and there we may observe,

(1.) How he was arraigned, ver. 12. Friend, how camest thou in hither, not having a wedding-garment? A startling question to one that was priding himself in the place he securely possessed at the feast. Friend! that was a cutting word; a seeming friend, a pretended friend, a friend in profession, under manifold ties and obligations to be a friend. Note, There are many in the church that are false friends to Jesus Christ, that say they love him, but their hearts are not with him. How camest thou in hither? He doth not chide the servants so letting him in: the wedding-garment is an inward thing, ministers must go according to that which falls within their cognisance, but he checks his presumption in crowding in, when he knew his heart was not upright: how durst thou claim a share in gospel-benefits, when thou hadst no regard to gospel-rules? What hast thou to do to declare my statutes, Psalm l. 16, 17. Such are spots in the feast, dishonour the bridegroom, affront the company, and disgrace themselves; and therefore, How camest thou in hither? Note, The day is coming when hypocrites will be called to account for all their presumptuous intrusion to gospel-ordinances, and usurpation of gospel-privileges: Who has required this at your hand? Isa. i. 12. Despised sabbaths and abused sacraments must be reckoned for, and judgment taken out upon an action of waste against all those who received the grace of God in vain. How camest thou to the Lord's table at such a time unhumbled and unsanctified? What brought thee to sit before God's prophets, as his people do, when thy heart went after thy covetousness? How camest thou in? Not by the door, but some other way, as a thief and a robber. It was a tortious entry, a possession without colour of a title. Note, It is good for those who have a place in the church often to put it to themselves, How came I in hither? Have I a wedding-garment? If we would thus judge ourselves, we should not be judged.

not

(2.) How he was convicted: he was speechless; ἑρμῆς, "he was muzzled," so the word is used, 1 Cor. ix. 9. the man stood mute upon his arraignment, being convicted and condemned by his own conscience. They who live within the church, and die without Christ, will not have one word to say for themselves in the judgment of the great day, they will be without excuse; should they plead, We have eaten and drunken in thy presence, as they do, Luke xii. 26. that is to plead guilty; for the crime they are charged with is thrusting themselves into the presence of Christ, and to his table, before they were called: They that never heard a word of this wedding-feast, will have more to say for themselves, their sin will be more excusable, and their condemnation more tolerable, than theirs who came to the feast without the wedding-garment, and so sin against the clearest light and dearest love.

3. His sentence, ver. 13. Bind him hand and foot, &c.

(1.) He is ordered to be pinioned, as condemned malefactors are, to be manacled and shackled. Those that will not work and walk as they should, may expect to be bound hand and foot. There is a binding in this world by the servants, the ministers, whose suspending of persons that walk disorderly, to the scandal of religion, is called binding of them, Matt. xviii. 18. bind them up from partaking of special ordinances, and the peculiar privileges of their church-membership; bind them over to the righteous judgment of God. In the day of judgment hypocrites will be bound; the angels shall bind up these tares in bundles for the fire, Matt. xiii. 41. Damned sinners are bound hand and foot by an irreversible sentence; this signifies the same with the fixing of the great gulf; they can neither resist nor outrun their punishment.

(2.) He is ordered to be carried off from the wedding-feast; take him away. When the wickedness of hypocrites appears, they are to be taken away from the communion of the faithful, to be cut off as withered branches. This speaks the punishment of loss in the other world, they shall be taken away from the king, from the kingdom, from the wedding-feast: Depart from me, ye cursed. It will aggravate their misery, that (like the unbelieving lord, 2 Kings vii. 2.) they shall see all this plenty with their eyes, but shall not taste of it. Note, Those that walk unworthy of their Christianity, forfeit all the happiness they presumptuously laid claim to, and complimented themselves with a groundless expectation of.

(3.) He is ordered into a doleful dungeon; cast him into outer darkness. Our Saviour here insensibly slides out of this parable into the reddition of it, the damnation of hypocrites in the other world; hell is utter darkness, it is darkness, out of heaven the land of light; or it is extreme darkness, darkness to the last degree, without the least ray or spark of light or hope of it, like that of Egypt; darkness which might be felt; the blackness of darkness, as darkness itself, Job x. 22. Note, Hypocrites go by the light of the gospel itself down to utter darkness; and hell will be hell indeed to such, a condemnation more intolerable; there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth. This our Saviour often useth as part of the description of hell-torments, which are hereby represented, not so much by the misery itself, as by the resentment sinners will have of it; there shall be weeping, an expression of great sorrow and anguish; not a gush of tears, which gives present ease, but constant weeping, which is constant torment; and the gnashing of teeth, is an expression of the greatest rage and indignation; they will be like a wild bull in a net, full of the fury of the Lord, Isa. li. 20—viii. 21, 22. Let us therefore hear and fear.

Lastly, The parable is concluded with that remarkable saying which we had before, Matt. xx. 16. Many are called, but few are chosen, ver. 14. Of the many that are called to the wedding-feast, if you set aside all those as unchosen that make light of it, and avowedly prefer other things before it; if then you set aside all that make a profession of religion, but the temper of their spirits and the tenor of their conversation is a constant contradiction to it; set aside all the profane and all the hypocrites; and you will find they are few, very few, that are chosen; many called to the wedding-feast, but few chosen to the wedding-garment, i. e. to salvation by sanctification of the Spirit: This is the strait gate, and narrow way, which few find.

15. ¶ Then went the Pharisees, and took counsel how they might intangle him in his talk. 16. And they sent out unto him their disciples with the Herodians, saying, Master, we know that thou art true, and teachest the way of God in truth, neither carest thou for any man: for thou regardest not the person of men. 17. Tell us therefore, What thinkest thou? Is it lawful to give tribute unto Cæsar, or not? 18. But Jesus perceived their wickedness, and said, Why tempt ye me, ye hypocrites? 19. Shew me the tribute-money. And they brought unto him a penny. 20. And he saith unto them, Whose is this image and superscription? 21. They say unto him, Cæsar's. Then saith he unto them, Render therefore unto Cæsar the things which are Cæsar's, and unto God the things that are God's. 22. When they had heard these words, they marvelled, and left him, and went their way.

It was not the least grievous of the sufferings of Christ, that he endured the contradiction of sinners against himself, and had snares laid for him, by those who sought how to take him off by some pretence. In these verses we have him attacked by the Pharisees and Herodians with a question about paying tribute to Cæsar. Observe,

First, What their design was which they proposed to themselves, they took counsel to entangle him in his talk. Hitherto his encounters had been mostly with the chief priests and the elders, men in authority, who trusted more to their power than to their policy, and examined him concerning his commission, chap. xxi. 23. but now he is set upon from another quarter, the Pharisees will try whether they can deal with him by their learning in the law and in casuistical divinity, and they have a tentamen novum for him. Note, It is in vain for the best and wisest of men to think, that by their ingenuity, or interest, or industry, or by their innocency and integrity itself, they can escape the hatred and ill-will of bad men, or screen themselves from the strife of tongues. See how unwearied the enemies of Christ and his kingdom are in their opposition!

1. They took counsel; It was foretold concerning him that the rulers would take counsel against him, Psalm ii. 2. and so persecuted they the prophets: Come, and let us devise devices against Jeremiah: See Jer. xviii. 18.—xx. 10. Note, The more there is of contrivance and consultation about sin, the worse it is: There is a particular woe to them that devise iniquity, Micah ii. 1. The more there is of the wicked wit in the contrivance of a sin, the more there is of the wicked will in the commission of it.

2. That which they aimed at, was to intangle him in his talk: They saw him free and bold in speaking his mind, and hoped by that, if they could bring him to some nice and tender point, to get an advantage against him. It has been the old practice of Satan's agents and emissaries, to make a man an offender for a word, a word misplaced, or mistook, or misunderstood; a word, though innocently designed, yet perverted by strained meanings; thus they lay a snare for him that reproveth in the gate, Isa. xxix. 21. and represent the greatest teachers as the greatest troublers of Israel: Thus the wicked plotteth against the just, Psalm xxxvii. 12, 13.

There are two ways by which the enemies of Christ might be revenged on him, and he rid of him; either by law or by force. By law they could not do it unless they could make him obnoxious to the civil government; for it was not lawful for them to put any man to death, John xviii. 31. and the Roman powers were not apt to concern themselves about questions of words, and names, and their law, Acts xviii. 14. By force they could not do it, unless they could make him obnoxious to the people, who were always the hands, whoever were the heads, in such violences, which they called the beating of the rebels; now the people took Christ for a prophet, and therefore they could not get him mobbed. Now (as the old serpent was from the beginning more subtil than any beast of the field) the design was to bring him into such a dilemma, that he must make himself liable to the displeasure either of the Jewish multitude or of the Roman magistrates; let him take which side of the question he will, he shall run himself into a precipice; and so they gain their point, and make his own tongue to fall upon him.

Secondly, The question which they put to him, pursuant to this design, ver. 16, 17. Having devised this iniquity in secret, in a close cabal, behind the curtain, when they went abroad without loss of time they practised it. Observe,

1. The persons they employed; they did not go themselves, lest the design should be suspected, and Christ should stand the more upon his guard, but they sent their disciples, who would look less like tempters, and more like learners. Note, Wicked men will never want wicked instruments to be employed in carrying on their wicked counsels: Pharisees have their disciples at their beck, that will go on any errand for them, and say as they say; and they have this in their eye when they are so industrious to make proselytes.

With them they sent the Herodians, a party among the Jews, who were for a cheerful and entire subjection to the Roman emperor, and to Herod his deputy; and made it their business to reconcile people to that government, and pressed all to pay their tribute. Some think, they were the collectors of the land-tax, as the publicans were of the customs, and they went with the Pharisees to Christ, with this blind upon their plot, that, while the Herodians demanded the tax, and the Pharisees denied it, they were both willing to refer it to Christ as a proper judge to decide the quarrel. Herod being obliged, by the charter of the sovereignty, to take care of the Roman tribute, these Herodians, by assisting him in that, helped to endear him to his great friends at Rome: The Pharisees, on the other hand, were zealous for the liberty of the Jews, and did what they could to make them impatient of the Roman yoke: Now if he should countenance the paying of tribute, the Pharisees would incense the people against him; if he should discountenance or disallow it, the Herodians would incense the government against him. Note, It is common for those that oppose one another, to continue in an opposition to Christ and his kingdom: Samson's foxes looked several ways, but met in one firebrand: See Psalm lxxxiii. 3—5—7, 8. If they are unanimous in opposing, should not we be so in maintaining the interests of the gospel?

2. The preface, with which they were plausibly to introduce the question; and it is a mighty compliment upon our Saviour, ver. 16. Master, we know that thou art true, and teachest the way of God in truth. Note, It is a common thing for the most spiteful projects to be covered with the most specious pretences. Had they come to Christ with the most serious enquiry and the most sincere intention, they could not have expressed themselves better. Here is hatred covered with deceit, and a wicked heart with burning lips, Prov. xxvi. 23. as Judas that kissed and betrayed, Joab that kissed and killed.

Now, (1.) What they said of Christ was right, and, whether they knew it or no, blessed be God, we know it:

1. That Jesus Christ was a faithful teacher: Thou art true, and teachest the way of God in truth. For himself, he is true, the Amen, the faithful Witness; he is the truth itself. As for his doctrine, the matter of his teaching was the way of God, the way that God requires us to walk in, the way of duty that leads to happiness; that is the way of God: The manner of it was in truth; he shewed people the right way, the way in which they should go: He was a skilful teacher, and knew the way of God; and a faithful teacher, that would be sure to let us know it: See Prov. viii. 6—9. This is the character of a good teacher, to preach the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, and not to balk, pervert or stretch any truth for favour or affection, hatred or good-will, either out of a desire to please, or a fear to offend any man.

2. That he was a bold reprovor: In preaching he cared not for any, he valued no man's frowns or smiles, he did not court, he did not dread either the great or the many, for he regarded not the person of man: In his evangelical judgment he did not know faces, that lion of the tribe of Judah turned not away for any, Prov. xxx. 30. turned not a step from the truth, nor from his work, for fear of the most formidable: He reproveth with equity, Isa. xi. 4. and never with partiality.

(2.) Though what they said was true for the matter of it, yet there was nothing but flattery and treachery in the intention of it: They called him Master, when they were contriving to treat him as the worst of malefactors; they pretended respect for him, when they intended mischief against him; and they affronted his wisdom as a man, much more his omniscience as God, which he had so often given pregnant proofs of, when they imagined that they could impose upon him with these pretences, and that he could not see through them. It is the grossest atheism, that is, the greatest folly in the world, to think to put a cheat upon Christ, who searcheth the heart, Rev. ii, 23. Those that mock God do but deceive themselves, Gal. vi. 7.

(3.) The proposal of the case; What thinkest thou? q. d. Many men are of many minds in this matter; it is a case which relates to practice, and occurs daily; let us have thy thoughts freely in the matter, Is it lawful to give tribute to Caesar, or not? Which implies a further question; Have they a right to demand it? The nation of the Jews was lately, about a hundred years before this, conquered by the Roman sword, and so, as other nations; made subject to the Roman yoke, and became a province of the empire; accordingly toll, tribute and custom were demanded from them, and sometimes poll-money. By this it appeared that the sceptre was departed from Judah, Gen. xl. 10. and therefore, if they had understood the signs of the times, they must have concluded that Shiloh was come; and either this was he, or they must find out another more likely to be so.

Now the question was, Whether it was lawful to pay these taxes voluntarily, or whether they should not insist upon the ancient liberty of their nation, and rather suffer themselves to be distrained upon? The ground of the doubt was, that they were Abraham's seed, and should not by consent be in bondage to any man, John viii. 33. God had given them a law, that they should not set a stranger over them; and whether they did not imply that they were not to yield any willing subjection to any prince, state, or potentate, that was not of their own nation or religion. This was an old mistake, arising from that pride and haughty spirit, which brings destruction, and a fall. Jeremiah, in his time, though he spake in God's name, could not possibly beat them off it, nor persuade them to submit to the king of Babylon, and their obstinacy in that matter was then their ruin, Jer. xxvii. 12, 13, and now again they stumbled at the same stone; and it was the very thing which in a few years after brought a final destruction upon them by the Romans. They quite mistook the sense both of the precept and of the privilege, and under colour of God's word contended with his providence, when they should have kissed the rod, and accepted the punishment of their iniquity.

However, by this question they hoped to intangle Christ, and, which way soever he resolved it, to expose him to the fury either of the jealous Jews or of the jealous Romans; and were ready to triumph, as Pharaoh did over Israel, that the wilderness had shut him in, and his doctrine would be concluded either injurious to the rights of the church, or hurtful to kings and provinces.

Thirdly, The breaking of this snare by the wisdom of the Lord Jesus.

1. He discovered it, ver. 13. He perceived their wickedness; for, surely in vain is the net spread in the sight of any bird, Prov. i. 17. A temptation perceived is half conquered, for our greatest danger lies from snakes under the green grass; and he said, why tempt ye me, ye hypocrites? Note, Whatever vizard the hypocrite puts on, our Lord Jesus sees through it; he perceives all the wickedness that is in the hearts of pretenders, and can easily convict them of it, and set it in order before them: He cannot be imposed upon, as we often are, by flatteries and fair pretences: He that searcheth the heart can call hypocrites by their own name, as Abijah did the wife of Jeroboam, 1 Kings xiv. 6. Why feignest thou thyself to be another? Why tempt ye me, ye hypocrites? Note, Hypocrites tempt Jesus Christ, they try his knowledge, whether he can discover them through their disguises; they try his holiness and truth, whether he will allow of them in his church; but if they that of old tempted Christ, when he was but darkly revealed, were destroyed of serpents, of how much sorer punishment shall they be thought worthy, who tempt him now in the midst of gospel light and love! Those that presume to tempt Christ, will certainly find him too hard for them, and that he is of more piercing eyes than not to see, and more pure eyes than not to hate the disguised wickedness of hypocrites, that dig deep to hide their counsel from him.

2. He evaded it; his convicting them of hypocrisy might have served for an answer: such captious malicious questions deserve a reproof, not a reply. But our Lord Jesus gave a full answer to their question, and introduced it by an argument sufficient to support it, so as to lay down a rule for his church in this matter, and yet to avoid giving offence, and to break the snare.

1. He forced them ere they were aware to confess Caesar's authority over them, ver. 19, 20. in dealing with those that are exceptions, it is good to give our reasons, and if possible reasons of confessed cogency, before we give our resolutions. Thus the evidence of truth may silence gainers by surprise, while they only stood upon their guard against the truth itself, not against the reason of it; shew me the tribute-money. He had none of his own to convince them by; it should seem he had not so much as one piece of money about him, for our sakes he emptied himself and became poor: he despised the wealth of this world, and thereby taught us not to over-value it: silver and gold he had none, why then should we covet to load ourselves with that thick clay? The Romans demanded their tribute in their own money, which was current among the Jews at that time: that therefore is called the tribute-money: he doth not name what piece, but the tribute-money, to shew that he did not mind things of that nature, nor concern himself about them; his heart was upon better things, the kingdom of God and the riches and righteousness thereof, and ours should be so too. They presently brought him a penny, a Roman penny in silver, in value about seven-pence halfpenny of our money, the most common piece then in use: it was stamped with the emperor's image and superscription, which was the warrant of the public faith for the value of the pieces so stamped; a method agreed on by most nations, for the more easy circulation of money with satisfaction. The coining of money has always been looked upon as a branch of the prerogative, a flower of the crown, a royalty belonging to the sovereign powers; and the admitting of that as the good and lawful money of a country, is an implicit submission to those powers, and an owning of them in money matters. How happy is our constitution, and how happy we, who live in a nation where, though the image and superscription be the sovereign's, the property is the subject's, under the protection of the laws, and that we have we can call our own!

Christ asked them, Whose image is this? and they owned it to be Caesar's, and thereby convicted those of falsehood, who said, We were never in bondage to any, and confirmed what afterwards they said, We have no king but Caesar. It is a rule in the Jewish Talmud, that "he is the king of the country whose coin is current in the country." And some think the superscription upon this coin was a memorandum of the conquest of Judea by the Romans, anno post captam Judæam: and they admitted that too.

2. From thence he inferred the lawfulness of paying tribute to Caesar, ver. 21. Render therefore to Caesar the things that are Caesar's: not give it him, as they expressed it, ver. 17. but render it, return or restore it; if Caesar fill the purses, let Caesar command them: It is too late now to dispute paying tribute to Caesar, for you are become a province of his empire; and when once a relation is admitted, the duty of it must be performed: Render to all their due, and particularly tribute to whom tribute is due. Now by this answer,

1. No offence was given: It was much to the honour of Christ and his doctrine, that he did not interpose as a judge or a divider in matters of this nature, but left them as he found them, for his kingdom is not of this world; and in this he hath given an example to his ministers, who deal in sacred things, not to meddle with disputes about things secular, not to wade far into controversies relating to them, but leave that to those whose proper business it is. Ministers that would mind their business, and please their master, must not intangle themselves in the affairs of this life: They forfeit the conduct of God's Spirit, and the convoy of his providence, when they thus go out of their way. Christ discusseth not the emperor's title, but joins a peaceable subjection to the powers that be: The government therefore had no reason to take offence at his determination, but to thank him, for it would strengthen Caesar's interest with the people that held him for a prophet; and yet such was the impudence of his persecutors, that though he had expressly charged them to render to Caesar the things that are Caesar's, they laid the direct contrary in his indictment, that he forbade to give tribute to Caesar, Luke xxii. 2. As to the people, the Pharisees could not accuse him to them, because they themselves had, before they were aware, yielded the premises, and then it was too late to evade the conclusion. Note, Though truth seeks not a fraudulent concealment, yet it sometimes needs a prudent management, to prevent the offence which may be taken at it.

2. His adversaries are reproved; 1. Some of them would have had him make it unlawful to give tribute to Caesar, that they might have a pretence to save their money. Thus many excuse themselves from that which they must do, by arguing whether they may do it or no. 2. They all withheld from God his dues, and are reproved for that: while they were vainly contending about their civil liberties, they had lost the life and power of religion, and need to be put in mind of their duty, to God, with that to Caesar.

3. His disciples were instructed, and standing rules left to the church.

1. That the Christian religion is no enemy to civil government, but a friend to it: Christ's kingdom doth not clash or interfere with the kingdoms of the earth, in any thing that pertains to their jurisdiction. By Christ kings reign.

2. It is the duty of subjects to render to magistrates that which according to the laws of their country is due. The higher power being intrusted with the public welfare, the protection of the subject, and the conservation of the peace, are intitled, in consideration thereof, to a just proportion of the public wealth, and the revenue of the nation; for this cause pay we tribute, because they attend continually to this very thing, Rom. xiii. 6. and it is doubtless a greater sin to cheat the government than to cheat a private person; though it is the constitution that determines what is Caesar's, yet when that is determined Christ bids us render it to him: my coat is my coat by the law of man, but he is a thief by the law of God that takes it from me.

3. When we render to Caesar the things that are Caesar's, we must remember withal to render to God the things that are God's. If our purses be Caesar's, our consciences are God's: he hath said, My son, give me thy heart; he must have the innermost and uppermost place there, we must render to God that which is his due out of our time and out of our estates; from them he must have his share, as well as Caesar his: and if Caesar's commands interfere with God's, we must obey God rather than men.

Lastly, Observe how they are dashed by this answer; they marvelled, and left him, and went their way, ver. 22. They admired his sagacity in discovering and evading a snare which they thought so craftily laid. Christ is and will be the wonder, not only of his beloved friends, but of his baffled enemies. One would think they should have marvelled and followed him, marvelled and submitted to him; no, they marvelled and left him. Note, There are many in whose eyes Christ is marvellous, and yet not precious: They admire his wisdom, but will not be guided by it; his power, but will not submit to it. They went their way as persons ashamed, and made an inglorious retreat. The stratagem being defeated, they quitted the field. Note, There is nothing got by contending with Christ.

23. ¶ The same day came to him the Sadducees, which say that there is no resurrection, and asked him, 24. Saying, Master, Moses said, If a man die, having no children, his brother shall marry his wife, and raise up seed unto his brother. 25. Now there were with us seven brethren: and the first, when he had married a wife, deceased, and, having no issue, left his wife unto his brother: 26. Likewise the second also, and the third, unto the seventh. 27. And last of all the woman died also. 28. Therefore in the resurrection whose wife shall she be of the seven? for they all had her. 29. Jesus answered, and said unto them, Ye do err, not knowing the scriptures, nor the power of God. 30. For in the resurrection they neither marry, nor are given in marriage, but are as the angels of God in heaven. 31. But as touching the resurrection of the dead, have ye not read that which was spoken unto you, by God, saying, 32. I am the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob? God is not the God of the dead, but of the living. 33. And when the multitude heard this, they were astonished at his doctrine.

We have here Christ's dispute with the Sadducees concerning the resurrection; and it was the same day that he was attacked by the Pharisees about paying tribute. Satan was now more busy than ever to ruffle and disturb him; it was an hour of temptation, Rev. iii. 10. The truth as it is in Jesus will still meet with contradiction in some branch or other of it. Observe here,

1. The opposition which the Sadducees made to a very great truth of religion, they say, There is no resurrection, as there are some fools who say, There is no God. These heretics were called Sadducees from one Sadoc, a disciple of Antigonus Sochreus, who flourished about two hundred and eighty-four years before our Saviour's birth: They lie under an ill character among the writers of their own nation, as men of base and debauched conversations, which their principles led them to. They were the fewest in number of all the sects among the Jews, but generally persons of some rank. As the Pharisees and Essenes seemed to follow Plato and Pythagoras, so the Sadducees were much of the genius of the Epicureans; they denied the resurrection, they said there is no future state, no life after this; that when the body dies, the soul is annihilated and dies with it; that that there is no state of reward or punishments in the other world; no judgment to come in heaven or hell. They maintained, that except God, there is no spirit, Acts xxiii. 8. nothing but matter and motion: They would not own the divine inspiration of the prophets, nor any revelation from heaven, but what God himself spoke upon mount Sinai. Now the doctrine of Christ carried that great truth of the resurrection and a future state much farther than it had yet been revealed, and therefore the Sadducees in a particular manner set themselves against it. The Pharisees and Sadducees were contrary to each other, and yet confederates against Christ: Christ's gospel hath always suffered between superstitious ceremonious hypocrites and bigots on the one hand, and profane deists and infidels on the other. The former abusing, the latter despising, the form of godliness, but denying the power of it.

2. The objection they made against the truth, which was taken from a supposed case of a woman that had seven husbands successively; now they take it for granted, if there be a resurrection, it must be a return to such a state as this we are now in, and to the same circumstances, like the imaginary Platonic year; and if so, it is an invincible absurdity for this woman in the future state to have seven husbands, or else an insuperable difficulty, which of them should have her; he whom she had first, or he whom she had last, or he whom she loved best, or he whom she lived longest with.

1. They suggest the law of Moses in this matter, ver. 24. that the next of kin should marry the widow of him that died childless, Deut. xxv. 5. we have it practised, Ruth iv. 5. It was a political law founded in the particular constitution of the Jewish commonwealth, to preserve the distinction of families and inheritances, of both which there was special care taken in that government.

2. They put a case upon this statute, which whether it were a case in fact, or only a moot case, is not at all material; if it had not really occurred, yet possibly it might: It was of seven brothers that married the same woman, ver. 25, 26, 27. Now this case supposeth,

(1.) The desolations that death sometimes makes in families when it comes with commission, how it often sweeps away a whole fraternity in a little time. Seldom (as the case is put) according to seniority, the land of darkness is without any order, but heaps upon heaps; it diminisheth families that had multiplied greatly, Psal. cvii. 28, 29. when there were seven brothers grown up to man's estate, there was a family very likely to be built up, and yet this numerous family leaves neither son nor nephew, nor any remaining in their dwellings; Job xviii. 14. Well may we say then, Except the Lord build the house, they labour in vain that build it. Let none be sure of the advancement and perpetuity of their names and families, unless they could make a covenant of peace with death, or be at an agreement with the grave.

2. The obedience of these seven brothers to the law, though they had a power of refusal under the penalty of a reproach, Deut. xxv. 7. Note, Discouraging providences should not keep us from doing our duty, because we must be governed by the rule not by the event. The seventh that ventured last to marry the widow, many a man would say, was a bold man. I would say, if he did it purely in obedience to God, he was a good man, and one that made conscience of his duty.

But last of all the woman died also. Note, Survivorship is but a reprieve; they that live long and bury their relations and neighbours one after another, do no thereby acquire an immortality; no, their day will come to fall. Death's bitter cup goes round, and sooner or later we must all pledge in it. Alluding to Jer. xxv. 26.

3. They propose a doubt upon this case, ver. 28. In the resurrection whose wife shall she be of the seven? You cannot tell whose, and therefore we must conclude there is no resurrection. The Pharisees, who professed to believe a resurrection, had very gross and carnal notions concerning it, and concerning the future state, expecting to find there, as the Turks in their paradise, the delights and pleasures of the animal life, which perhaps drove the Sadducees to deny the thing itself; for nothing gives greater advantage to atheism and infidelity, than the carnality of those that make religion, either in its professions or in its prospects, a servant to their sensual appetites and secular interests; while those that are erroneous deny the truth, those that are superstitious betray it to them. Now they in this objection went upon the Pharisees hypothesis. Note, It is not strange that carnal minds have very false notions of spiritual and eternal things. The natural man receiveth not these things, for they are foolishness to him, 1 Cor. ii. 14. Let truth be set in a clear light, and then it appears in its full strength.

3. Christ's answer to this objection herein, by reproving their ignorance and rectifying their mistake, he shews the objection to be fallacious and unconcluding.

1. He reproves their ignorance, ver. 28. Ye do err. Note, Those do greatly err in the judgment of Christ, who deny the resurrection and a future state: Here Christ reproves with the meekness of wisdom, and is not so sharp upon them (whatever was the reason) as sometimes he was upon the chief priests and elders, Ye do err, not knowing. Note, Ignorance is the cause of error; those that are in the dark, miss their way: The patrons of error do therefore resist the light, and do what they can to take away the key of knowledge; Ye do err in this matter, not knowing. Note, Ignorance is the cause of error about the resurrection and the future state. What it is in its particular instances, the wisest and best know not; it doth not yet appear what we shall be, it is a glory that is to be revealed; when we speak of the state of separate souls, the resurrection of the body, and of eternal happiness and misery, we are soon at a loss; we cannot order our speech by reason of darkness, but that it is, is a thing about which we are not left in the dark; blessed be God we are not; and those who deny it are guilty of a willing and affected ignorance. It seems, there were some Sadducees, some such monsters among professing Christians, some among you that say there is no resurrection of the dead, 1 Cor. xv. 22. and some that did in effect deny it, by turning it into an allegory, saying, the resurrection is past already. Now observe,

1. They knew not the power of God; which speaks it possible that there may be a resurrection and a future state. Note, The ignorance, disbelief, or weak belief of God's power, is at the bottom of many errors, particularly theirs who deny the resurrection: When we are told of the soul's existence and agency in a state of separation from the body, and especially that a dead body, which has lain many ages in the grave, and is turned into common and undistinguished dust, that this shall be raised the same body that it was, and live, move and act again; we are ready to say, How can these things be? Nature allows it for a maxim, A privation ad habitum non datur regressus; "If a man die, shall he live again? And vain men, because they cannot comprehend the way of it, question the truth of it; whereas if we firmly believe in God the Father Almighty, that nothing is impossible with God, all these difficulties vanish. This therefore we must fasten upon in the first place, that God is omnipotent, and can do what he will; and then no room is left for doubting but that he will do what he has promised; and if so, Why should it be thought a thing incredible with you, that God should raise the dead? Acts xxvi. 8. His power far exceeds the power of nature.

(2.) They know not the scriptures, which speak it certain that there shall be a resurrection and a future state. The power of God, determined and engaged by his promise, is the foundation for faith to build upon. Now the scriptures speak plainly that the soul is immortal, and there is another life after this; it is the scope both of the law and of the prophets, That there shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and of the unjust, Acts xxiv. 14, 15. Job knew it, Job xii. 26. Ezekiel foresaw it, Ezek. xxxvii. and Daniel plainly foretold it, Dan. xii. 2. Christ rose again according to the scriptures, 1 Cor. xv. 8. and so shall we: Those therefore who deny it, either have not conversed with the scriptures, or do not believe them, or do not take the true sense and meaning of them. Note, Ignorance of the scripture is the rise of abundance of mischief.

2. He rectifies their mistake, and, ver. 30. corrects those gross ideas which they had of the resurrection and a future state, and fixeth these doctrines upon a true and lasting basis. Concerning that state, observe,

1. It is not like the state we are now in upon earth; they neither marry, nor are given in marriage. In our present state marriage is necessary, it was instituted in innocency, whatever intermission or neglect there has been of other institutions, this was never laid aside, nor will be to the end of time. In the old world they were marrying, and given in marriage; the Jews in Babylon, when cut off from other ordinances, yet were bid to take them wives, Jer. xxix. 6. All civilized nations have had a sense of the obligation of the marriage covenant; and it is requisite for the gratifying of the desires, and recruiting the deficiencies of human nature: But in the resurrection there is no occasion for marriage; whether in glorified bodies there will be any distinction of sexes some too curiously dispute, the ancients are divided in their opinions about it; but whether there will be a distinction or no, it is certain there will be no conjunction; where God will be all in all, there needs no other meet-help: the body will be spiritual, and there will be in it no carnal desires to be gratified: when the mystical body is completed, there will be no further occasion to seek a godly seed, which was one end of the institution of marriage, Mal. ii. 15. In heaven there will be no decay of the individuals, and therefore no eating and drinking; no decay of the species, and therefore no marrying; where there shall be no more deaths, Rev. xxi. 4. there needs be no more births. The married state is a composition of joys and cares; those that enter upon it are taught to look upon it as subject to changes, richer and poorer, sickness and health, and therefore it is fit for this mixed, changing world; but as in hell, where there is no joy, the voice of the bridegroom and the voice of the bride shall be heard no more at all; so in heaven, where there is all joy, and no care, or pain, or trouble, there will be no marrying: The joys of that state are pure and spiritual, and arise from the marriage of all of them to the Lamb, not any of them to one another.

2. It is like the state angels are now in in heaven; they are as the angels of God in heaven; they are so, i. e. undoubtedly they shall be so: They are so already in Christ their head, who has made them sit with him in heavenly places, Ephes. ii. 6. The spirits of just men already made perfect, are of the same corporation with the innumerable company of angels, Heb. xii. 22, 23. Man in his creation was made a little lower than the angels, Psal. viii. 5. but in his complete redemption and renovation will be as the angels; pure and spiritual as the angels, knowing and loving as those blessed seraphims, ever praising God like them and with them. The bodies of the saints shall be raised incorruptible and glorious, like the uncompounded vehicles of those pure and holy spirits, 1 Cor. xv. 42, &c. swift and strong, like them. We should therefore endeavour and desire to do the will of God now as the angels do it in heaven, because we hope shortly to be like the angels, who always behold our Father's face. He saith nothing of the state of the wicked in the resurrection, but, by consequence, they shall be like the devils, whose lusts they have done.

4. Christ's argument to confirm this great truth of the resurrection and a future state; the matters being of great concern, he did not think it enough (as in some other disputes) to discover the fallacy and sophistry of the objections, but backed the truth with a solid argument; for Christ brings forth judgment to truth as well as victory, and enables his followers to give a reason of the hope that is in them. Now observe,

1. From whence he fetched his argument; from the scripture; that is the great magazine or armoury, whence we may be furnished with spiritual weapons, offensive and defensive; it is written, is Goliath's sword: I have ye not read that which is spoken to you by God? Note, 1. What the scripture speaks God speaks. 2. What was spoken to Moses was spoken to us; it was spoken and written for our learning. 3. It concerns us to read and hear what God hath spoken, because it is spoken to us. It was spoken to you Jews in the first place, for to them were committed the oracles of God. The argument is fetched from the books of Moses, because the Sadducees received them only, as some think, or however them chiefly, for canonical scriptures; Christ therefore fetched his proof from the most indisputable fountain. The latter prophets have more express proofs of a future state than the law of Moses has; for though the law of Moses doth suppose the immortality of the soul and a future state, as principles of religion in some degree naturally, yet no new express revelation of it is made by the law of Moses; because so much of that law was peculiar to that people, and was therefore guarded as municipal laws used to be with temporal promises and threatenings, and the more express revelation of a future state was reserved for the latter days; but our Saviour finds a very solid argument for the resurrection, even in the writings of Moses. Much scripture-treasure lies under ground that must be digged for.

2. What his argument was, ver. 32. I am the God of Abraham: This was not an express proof, totidem verbis, and yet it was really a conclusive argument. Consequences from scripture, if rightly deduced, must be received as scripture; for it was written for those that have the use of reason.

1. Now the drift of the argument is to prove, First, That there is a future state, another life after this, in which the righteous shall be truly and constantly happy. This is proved from what God said; I am the God of Abraham.

(1.) For God to be any one's God, supposeth some very extraordinary privilege and happiness; unless we know fully what God is, we could not comprehend the riches of that word, I will be to thee a God, i. e. a benefactor like myself. The God of Israel is a God to Israel. 1 Chron. xvii. 24: a spiritual benefactor, for he is the Father of spirits, and blessed with spiritual blessings: it is to be an all-sufficient benefactor, a God that is enough, a complete good and an eternal benefactor; for he is himself an everlasting God, and will be to those that are in covenant with him an everlasting good. This great word God has often said to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob; and it was intended as a recompence for their singular faith and obedience; in quitting their country at God's call. The Jews had a mighty veneration for those three patriarchs, and would extend the promise God made them to the uttermost.

(2.) It is manifest that these good men had no such extraordinary happiness befal them in this life, as might look any thing like the accomplishment of so great a word as that. They were strangers in the land of promise, wandering, pinched with famine, had not a foot of ground of their own, but

but a burying-place, (which directed them to look for something beyond this life.) In present enjoyments they came far short of their neighbours that were strangers to this covenant. What was there in this world to difference them and the heirs of their faith from other people, any whit proportionable to the dignity and distinction of this covenant? If no happiness had been reserved for these great and good men on the other side death; that melancholy word of poor Jacob's when he was old; Gen. xlvii. 9. Few and evil are the days of the years of my life been, would have been an errand reproach to the wisdom, goodness, and faithfulness of that God who had so often called himself the God of Jacob.

(3.) Therefore there must certainly be a future state, in which, as God will ever live to be eternally rewarding, so Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, will ever live to be eternally rewarded. That of the apostle, Heb. xi. 16. is a key to this argument, where, when he had been speaking of the faith and obedience of the patriarchs in the land of their pilgrimage, he adds, Therefore God is not ashamed to be called their God: because he has provided for them a city, a heavenly city; implying, that if he had not provided so well for them in the other world, considering how they sped in this, he would have been ashamed to have called himself their God; but now he is not, having done that for them which answers it in its true intent and full extent.

Secondly, That the soul is immortal, and the body shall rise again to be united; if the former point be gained, these will follow; but are likewise proved by considering the time when God spake this: it was to Moses at the bush, long after Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, were dead and buried; and yet God saith, not I was, or have been, but I am the God of Abraham. Now God is not the God of the dead, but of the living. He is a living God, and communicates vital influences to those to whom he is a God. If when Abraham died there had been an end of him, there had been an end likewise of God's relation to him as his God; but at that time when God spake to Moses he was the God of Abraham, and therefore Abraham must be then alive; which proves the immortality of the soul in a state of bliss; and that by consequence infers the resurrection of the body; for there is such inclination in the human soul to its body, as would make a final and eternal separation inconsistent with the bliss of those that have God for their God. The Sadducees notion was, that the union between body and soul is so close, that when the body dies, the soul dies with it. Now upon the same hypothesis, if the soul lives, as it certainly doth, the body must some time or other live with it. And besides the Lord is for the body, it is an essential part of the man; there is a covenant with the dust, which will be remembered, otherwise the man would not be happy. The charge which the dying patriarchs gave concerning their bones, and that in faith, was an evidence that they had some expectation of the resurrection of their bodies. But this doctrine was reserved for a more full revelation after the resurrection of Christ, who was the first-fruits of them that sleep.

Lastly, We have the issue of this dispute. The Sadducees were put to silence, ver. 34. and so put to shame. They thought by their subtilty to put Christ to shame, when they were preparing shame for themselves. But the multitude were astonished at his doctrine, ver. 33. 1. Because it was new to them. See to what a sad pass the exposition of scripture was come among them; when people were astonished at it as a miracle, to hear the fundamental promise applied to this great truth; they had sorry Scribes, or this had been no news to them. 2. Because it had something in it very good and great. Truth often shews the brighter, and is the more admired for its being opposed. Observe, Many gainsayers are silenced, and many hearers astonished, when neither are savingly converted; yet even in the silence and astonishment of unsanctified souls God magnifies his law, magnifies his gospel, and makes both honourable.

34. ¶ But when the Pharisees had heard that he had put the Sadducees to silence, they were gathered together. 35. Then one of them, which was a lawyer, asked him a question, tempting him; and saying, 36. Master, which is the great commandment in the law? 37. Jesus said unto him, Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind, 38. This is the first and great commandment. 39. And the second is like unto it, Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself. 40. On these two commandments, hang all the law and the prophets.

Here is a discourse which Christ had with a Pharisee lawyer, about the great commandment of the law. Observe,

1. The combination of the Pharisees against Christ, ver. 34. They heard that he had put the Sadducees to silence, had stopped their mouths, though their understandings were not opened; and they were gathered together, not to return him the thanks of their party, as they ought to have done, for his effectual asserting and confirming the truth against the Sadducees, the common enemies of their religion; but to tempt him, in hopes to get the reputation of puzzling him who had puzzled the Sadducees. They were more vexed that Christ was honoured, than pleased that the Sadducees were silenced; being more concerned for their own tyranny and traditions which Christ opposed, than for the doctrine of the resurrection and a future state which the Sadducees opposed. Note, It is an instance of Pharisaical envy and malice, to be displeased at the maintaining of a confessed truth, when it is done by those we do not like; to sacrifice a public good to private piques and prejudices. Blessed Paul was otherwise minded, Phil. ii. 8.

2. The lawyer's question which he put to Christ. The lawyers were students in and teachers of the law of Moses as the Scribes were; but some think in this they differed, that they dealt more in practical questions than the Scribes; they studied and professed casuistical divinity. This lawyer asked him a question, tempting him; not with any design to insnare him, as appears by St. Mark's relation of this story, where we find that this was he to whom Christ said, Thou art not far from the kingdom of God, Mark xii. 34. but only to see what he would say, and to draw on discourse with him to satisfy his own and his friends curiosity.

(1.) The question was, Master, which is the great commandment of the law? A needless question, when all the things of God's law are great things, Hosea viii. 12. and the wisdom from above is without partiality, partiality in the law, Mal. ii. 9. and hath respect to them all. Yet it is true, there are some commands that are the principles of the oracles of God, more extensive and inclusive than others. Our Saviour speaks of the weightier matters of the law, Matth. xxiii. 23.

(2.) The design was to try him or tempt him; to try, not so much his knowledge as his judgment. It was a question disputed among the critics in the law: Some would have the law of circumcision to be the great commandment; others the law of the sabbath, others the law of sacrifices, according as they severally stood affected and spent their zeal; now they would try what Christ said to this question, hoping to incense the people against him if he should not answer according to the vulgar opinion; and if he should magnify one commandment, they would reflect on him as vilifying the rest. The question was harmless enough, and it appears by comparing Luke x. 27, 28. that it was an adjudged point among the lawyers, that the love of God and our neighbour is the great commandment, and the sum of all the rest, and Christ had there approved it; so that the putting of it to him here seems rather a scornful design to catechise him as a child, than a spiteful design to dispute with him as an adversary.

3. Christ's answer to this question: and it is well for us that such a question was asked him, that we might have his answer. It is no disparagement to great men to answer plain questions. Now Christ recommends to us those as the great commandments, not which are so exclusive of others, but which are therefore so because inclusive of others. Observe,

1. Which these great commandments are, ver. 37, 38, 39. not the judicial laws; those could not be the greatest, now the people of the Jews, to whom they pertained, were so little: not the ceremonial laws; those could not be the greatest, now they were waxen old and were ready to vanish away: not any particular moral precept; but the love of God and our neighbour, which are the spring and foundation of all the rest, which (these being supposed) will follow of course.

(1.) All the law is fulfilled in one word, and that is love. See Rom. xiii. 10. All obedience begins in the affections, and nothing in religion is done right that is not done there first. Love is the leading affection which gives law and gives ground to the rest; and therefore that, as the main fort, is to be first secured and garrisoned for God. Man is a creature cut out for love; thus therefore is the law written in the heart, that it is a law of love. Love is a short and sweet word, and if that be fulfilling of the law, surely the yoke of the command is very easy. Love is the rest and satisfaction of the soul, if we walk in this good old way we shall find rest.

(2.) The love of God is the first and great commandment of all, and the summary of all the commands of the first table. The proper act of love being complacency, good is the proper object of it. Now God being good infinitely, originally, and eternally, he is to be loved in the first place, and nothing loved beside him, but what is loved for him. Love is the first and great thing that God demands from us, and therefore the first and great thing that we should devote to him.

Now here we are directed,

1. To love God as ours. Thou shalt love the Lord thy God as thine. The first commandment is, Thou shalt have no other God: which implies, that we must have him for our God, and that will engage our love to him. Those that made the sun and moon their gods loved them, Jer. viii. 2. Judges xviii. 24. To love God as ours is to love him because he is ours, our creator, owner, and ruler, and to carry ourselves to him as ours, with obedience to him and dependence on him. We must love God as reconciled to us, and made ours by covenant, that is the foundation of this, thy God.

2. To love him with all our heart, our soul, and mind. Some make these to signify one and the same thing, love him with all thy powers; others distinguish them, the heart, soul, and mind, are the will, affections, and understanding; or the vital, sensitive, and intellectual faculties. Our love of God must be a sincere, and not one in word and tongue only, as theirs is who say they love him, but their hearts are not with him. It must be a strong love, we must love him in the most intense degree; as we must praise him, so we must love him with all that is within us, Psal. ciii. 1. It must be a singular and superlative love, we must love him more than any thing else; this way the stream of our affections must entirely run. The heart must be united to love God, in opposition to a divided heart. All our love is too little to bestow upon him, and therefore all the powers of the soul must be engaged for him and carried out towards him. This is the first and great commandment; for obedience to this is the spring of obedience to all the rest; which is then only acceptable when it flows from love.

(3.) To love our neighbour as ourselves is the second great commandment, ver. 39. It is like unto the first; it is inclusive of all the precepts of the second table as that is of the first. It is like it, for it is founded upon it and flows from it; and a right love to our brother whom we have seen, is both an instance and an evidence of our love to God, whom we have not seen, 1 John iv. 20.

1. It is implied that we do and should love ourselves. There is a self-love which is corrupt and the root of the greatest sins, and it must be put off and mortified: but there is a self-love which is natural and the rule of the greatest duty, and it must be preserved and sanctified. We must love ourselves, i. e. we must have a due regard to the dignity of our own natures, and a due concern for the welfare of our own souls and bodies.

2. It is prescribed that we love our neighbour as ourselves. We must honour and esteem all men, and must wrong and injure none; must have a goodwill to all, and good wishes for all, and as we have opportunity must do good to all. We must love our neighbour as ourselves, as truly and sincerely as we love ourselves, and in the same instances; nay, in many cases we must deny ourselves for the good of our neighbour, and must make ourselves servants to the true welfare of others, and be willing to spend and be spent for them, to lay down our lives for the brethren.

3. Observe what the weight and greatness of these commandments is, ver. 40. On these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets, i. e. this is the sum and substance of all those precepts relating to practical religion, which were written in men's hearts by nature, revived by Moses, and backed and enforced by the preaching and writing of the prophets. All hang upon the law of love; take away this, and all falls to the ground and comes to nothing. Rituals and ceremonials must give way to these, as must all spiritual gifts, for love is the more excellent way. This is the spirit of the law which animates it, the cement of the law which joins it; it is the root and spring of all other duties, the compendium of the whole Bible, not only of the law and the prophets, but the gospel too, only supposing this love to be the fruit of faith, and that we love God in Christ, and our neighbour for his sake. All hang on these two commandments, as the effect doth both on its efficient and on its final cause; for the fulfilling of the law is love, Rom. xiii. 10. and the end of law is love, 1 Tim. i. 5. The law of love is the nail, is the nail in the sure place, fastened by the masters of assemblies, Eccles. xii. 11. on which is hung all the glory of the law and the prophets, Isa. xxii. 24. a nail that shall never be drawn; for on this nail all the glory of the new Jerusalem shall eternally hang. Love never faileth. Into these two great commandments therefore let our hearts be delivered as into a mould; in the defence and evidence of these let us spend our zeal, and not in notions, names, and strifes of words, as if those were the mighty things on which the law and the prophets hung, and to them the love of God and our neighbour must be sacrificed; but to the commanding power of these let every thing else be made to truckle.

41. ¶ While the Pharisees were gathered together, Jesus asked them, 42. Saying, What think ye of Christ?

Christ? whose son is he? They say unto him, The son of David. 43. He saith unto them, How then doth David in spirit call him Lord, saying, 44. The LORD said unto my Lord, Sit thou on my right hand, till I make thine enemies thy footstool? 45. If David then call him Lord, how is he his son? 46. And no man was able to answer him a word, neither durst any man from that day forth ask him any more questions.

Many questions the Pharisees had asked Christ, by which, though they thought to expose him, they did but expose themselves; but now let him ask them a question, and he will do it when they are gathered together, ver. 41. He did not take some one of them apart from the rest, (ne Hercules contra duos) but to shame them the more he took them all together, when they were in confederacy and consult against him, and yet puzzled them. Note, God delights to baffle his enemies when they most strengthen themselves, gives them all the advantages they can wish for, and yet conquers them. Associate yourselves, and you shall be broken in pieces, Isa. iii. 9, 10. Now here,

1. Christ proposeth a question to them, which they could easily answer, it was a question in their own catechism; What think ye of Christ? Whose Son is he? Whose Son do you expect the Messiah to be, who was promised to the fathers? This they could easily answer, The Son of David. It was the common periphrasis of the Messiah, they called him the Son of David. So the Scribes who expounded the scripture, had taught them from Psal. lxxxix. 35, 36. I will not lie unto David, his seed shall endure for ever, Isa. ix. 7. upon the throne of David. And Isa. ix. 1. A rod out of the stem of Jesse. The covenant of royalty made with David, with a figure of the covenant of redemption made with Christ; who as David was made king with an oath, and was first humbled and then advanced. If Christ was the son of David, he was really and truly man; Israel said, We have ten parts in David; and Judah said, He is our bone and our flesh; what part have we then in the Son of David who took our nature upon him.

What think ye of Christ? They had put questions to him one after another, out of the law; but he comes and puts a question to them upon the promise. Many are so full of the law that they forget Christ; as if their duties would save them without his merit and grace. It concerns each of us seriously to ask ourselves, What think we of Christ? Some think not of him at all, he is not in all, not in any of their thoughts; some think meanly and some think hardly of him; but to them that believe he is precious: and how precious then are the thoughts of him! While the daughters of Jerusalem think no more of Christ than of another beloved, the spouse thinks of him as the chief of ten thousands.

2. He starts a difficulty upon their answer, which they could not so easily solve, ver. 43, 44, 45. Many can so readily affirm the truth, that they think they have knowledge enough to be proud of, who, when they are called to confirm the truth, and to vindicate and defend it, shew they have ignorance enough to be ashamed of. The objection Christ raised was, If Christ be David's son, How then doth David in spirit call him Lord? He did not hereby design to insnare them, as they did him, but to instruct them in a truth they were loth to believe, that the expected Messiah is God.

(1.) It is easy to see that David calls Christ Lord, and this in spirit, being divinely inspired and acted therein by a spirit of prophecy; for it was the spirit of the Lord that spake by him, 2 Sam. xxiii. 1, 2. David was one of those holy men that spake as he was moved by the Holy Ghost, especially in calling Christ Lord; for it was then, as it is still, (1 Cor. xii. 3.) that no man can say that Jesus is the Lord, but by the Holy Ghost. Now to prove that David in spirit called Christ Lord, he quotes, Psal. xc. 1. which psalm the Scribes themselves understood of Christ; of him it is certain the prophet there speaks of him and of no other man; and it is a prophetic summary of the doctrine of Christ, it describes him executing the offices of a prophet, priest, and king, both in his estate of humiliation and exaltation.

Christ quotes the whole verse, which shews the Redeemer in his exaltation: 1. Sitting at the right hand of God. His sitting notes both rest and rule: his sitting at God's right hand, notes superlative honour and sovereign power. See in what great words this is expressed, Ileb. viii. 1. He is set on the right hand of the throne of the Majesty: See Phil. ii. 9. Eph. i. 21. He did not take this honour to himself, but was intitled to it by covenant with his Father, and invested in it by commission from him, and here is that commission. 2. Subduing his enemies. There he shall sit till they be all made either his friends or his footstool. The carnal mind, wherever it is, is enmity to Christ, and that is subdued in the conversion of the willing people that are called to his foot, as the expression is, Isa. xli. 2. and in the confusion of his impenitent adversaries that shall be brought under his foot, as the kings of Canaan were under the feet of Joshua.

But that which this verse is quoted for is, that David calls the Messiah his Lord: The Lord, Jehovah, said unto my Lord. This intimates to us, that in expounding scripture we must take notice of and improve, not only that which is the main scope and sense of a verse, but of the words and phrases, by which the Spirit chooseth to express that sense, which have many times a very useful and instructive significancy. Here is a good note from that word, My Lord.

(2.) It is not so easy for those who believe not the Godhead of the Messiah, to clear this from an absurdity, if Christ be David's son; It is incongruous for the father to speak of his son, the predecessor of his successor, as his Lord: If David call him Lord, that is laid down, ver. 45. as the magis notum, the more evident truth; for whatever is said of Christ's humanity and humiliation, must be construed and understood in consistency with the truth of his divine nature and dominion: We must hold this fast, that he is David's Lord, and by that explain his being David's son. The seeming differences of scripture, as here, may not only be accommodated, but contribute to the beauty and harmony of the whole. Amica scripturarum lites utinam & nostræ.

3. We have here the success of this gentle trial which Christ made of the Pharisees knowledge in two things:

(1.) It puzzled them, ver. 46. No man was able to answer him a word; either it was their ignorance that they did not know, or their impicity that they would not own the Messiah to be God; which truth was the only key to unlock this difficulty. What those Rabbies could not then answer, blessed be God, the plainest Christian that is led into the understanding of the gospel of Christ, can now account for; that Christ, as God, was David's Lord; and Christ, as man, was David's son. This he did not now himself explain, but reserved it till the proof of it was completed by his resurrection, but we have it fully explained by him in his glory, Rev. xxii. 16. I am the root and offspring of David. Christ, as God, was David's root; Christ, as man, was David's offspring. If we hold not fast this truth, that Jesus Christ is over all God blessed for ever, we run ourselves into inextricable difficulties. And well might David, his remote ancestor, call him

Lord, when Mary, his immediate mother, after she had conceived him, called him, Lord, and God, her Saviour, Luke i. 46, 47.

(2.) It silenced them and all others that sought occasion against him: Neither durst any man, from that day forth, ask him any more such captious tempting, insinuating questions. Note, God will glorify himself in the silencing of many whom he will not glorify himself in the salvation of. Many are convinced, that are not converted by the word. Had these been converted, they would have asked him more questions, especially that great question, What must we do to be saved? But since they could not gain their point, they would have no more to do with him. But thus all that strive with their Master shall be convinced, as these Pharisees and lawyers here were, of the inequality of the match.

C H A P. XXIII.

In the foregoing chapter we had our Saviour's discourses with the Scribes and Pharisees, here we have his discourse concerning them, or rather against them. 1. He allows their office, ver. 2, 3. 2. He warns his disciples not to imitate their hypocrisy and pride, ver. 4—12. 3. He exhibits a charge against them for divers high crimes and misdemeanors, corrupting the law, opposing the gospel, and treacherous dealing both with God and man; and to each article he prefixes a woe, ver. 13—33. 3. He passeth sentence upon Jerusalem, and foretells the ruin of the city and temple, especially for the sin of persecution, ver. 34—39.

1. THEN spake Jesus to the multitude, and to his disciples, 2. Saying, The Scribes and the Pharisees sit in Moses' seat: 3. All therefore whatsoever they bid you observe, that observe and do; but do not ye after their works: for they say, and do not. 4. For they bind heavy burdens and grievous to be borne, and lay them on men's shoulders; but they themselves will not move them with one of their fingers. 5. But all their works they do for to be seen of men: they make broad their phylacteries, and enlarge the borders of their garments. 6. And love the uppermost rooms at feasts, and the chief seats in the synagogues. 7. And greetings in the markets, and to be called of men, Rabbi, Rabbi. 8. But be not ye called Rabbi: for one is your Master, even Christ; and all ye are brethren. 9. And call no man your father upon the earth: for one is your father, which is in heaven. 10. Neither be ye called masters: for one is your Master, even Christ. 11. But he that is greatest among you shall be your servant. 12. And whosoever shall exalt himself shall be abased; and he that shall humble himself shall be exalted.

We find not Christ in all his preaching so severe upon any sort of people, as upon these Scribes and Pharisees; for the truth is, nothing is more directly opposite to the spirit of the gospel, than the temper and practice of that generation of men, who were made up of pride, worldliness, and tyranny, under a cloke and pretence of religion; yet these were the idols and darlings of the people, who thought, if but two men went to heaven, one would be a Pharisee. Now Christ directs his discourse here to the multitude, and to his disciples, ver. 1. to rectify their mistakes concerning these Scribes and Pharisees, by painting them out in their true colours, and so to take off the prejudice which some of the multitude had conceived against Christ and his doctrine, because it was opposed by those topping men of their church, that called themselves the people's guides. Note, It is good to know the true characters of men, that we may not be imposed upon by great and mighty names, titles, and pretensions to power: People must be told of the wolves, Acts xx. 29, 30. the dogs, Phil. iii. 2. the deceitful workers, 2 Cor. xi. 23. that they may know where to stand upon their guard: and not only the mixed multitude, but even the disciples need these cautions; for good men are apt to have their eyes dazzled with worldly pomp.

Now in this discourse,

1. Christ allows their office as expositors of the law. The Scribes and Pharisees (that is, the whole Sanhedrin, who sat at the helm of the church government, who were all called Scribes, and were some of them Pharisees) they sit in Moses' seat, ver. 2. as public teachers and interpreters of the law, and, the law of Moses being the municipal law of their estate, they were as judges or a bench of justices; teaching and judging seem to be equivalent, comparing, 2 Chron. xvii. 7—9. with 2 Chron. xix. 5, 6—8. they were not the itinerant judges that rode the circuit, but the standing bench that determined on appeals, special verdicts or writs of error by the law: they sat in Moses's seat, not as he was Mediator between God and Israel, but only as he was chief justice, Exod. xviii. 26. Or we may apply it, not to the Sanhedrin, but to the other Pharisees and Scribes that expounded the law, and taught the people how to apply it to particular cases. The pulpit of wood, such as was made for Ezra, that ready Scribe in the law of God. (Neh. viii. 4.) is here called Moses's seat, because Moses had those in every city, (so the expression is, Acts xv. 21.) which in those pulpits preached him; this was their office, and it was just and honourable; it was requisite there should be some at whose mouth the people might enquire the law, Mal. ii. 7. Note, 1. There is many a good place filled with bad men; it is no new thing for the vilest men to be exalted even to Moses's seat, Psal. xii. 8. and when it is so, the men are not so much honoured by the seat as the seat is dishonoured by the men. Now they that sat in Moses's seat were so wretchedly degenerated, that it was time for the great Prophet to arise like unto Moses, to erect another seat. 2. Good and useful offices and powers are not therefore to be presently condemned and abolished, because they fall sometimes into the hands of ill men that abuse them. We must not therefore pull down Moses's seat because Scribes and Pharisees have got possession of it; rather than so, let both grow together until the harvest, Matt. xiii. 30.

Hence he infers, ver. 3. Whatsoever they bid you observe, that observe and do. As far as they sit in Moses's seat, i. e. read and preach the law that was given by Moses (which, as yet, continued in full force, power and virtue) and judge according to that law, so far you must hearken to them, as remembrancers to you of the written word. The Scribes and Pharisees made it their business to study the scripture, and were well acquainted with the language, history and customs of it, and its stile and phraseology: Now Christ

Christ would have the people to make use of the helps they gave them for the understanding of the scripture, and do accordingly. As long as their comments did illustrate the text, and not pervert it; did make plain, and not make void the commandment of God; so far they must be observed and obeyed, but with caution and a judgment of discretion. Note, We must not think the worse of good truths for their being preached by bad ministers; nor of good laws for their being executed by bad magistrates. Though it is most desirable to have our food brought by angels, yet if God send it us by ravens, if it be good and wholesome we must take it, and thank God for it. Our Lord Jesus promiseth this, to pervert the cavil which some would be apt to make at his following discourse; as if by condemning the Scribes and Pharisees, he designed to bring the law of Moses into contempt, and to draw people off from it; whereas he came not to destroy, but to fulfil. Note, It is wisdom to obviate the exception which may be taken at just-reproaches, especially when there is occasion to distinguish between officers and their offices, that the ministry be not blamed when the ministers are.

2. He condemns the men. He had ordered the multitude not to do as they did, to beware of their leaven: Do not ye after their works. Their traditions were their works, were their idols, the works of their fancy. Or do not according to their example. Doctrines and practices are both spirits that must be tried, and, where there is occasion, must be carefully separated and distinguished; And as we must not swallow corrupt doctrines for the sake of any laudable practices of those that teach them, so we must not imitate any ill examples for the sake of the plausible doctrines of those that give them. The Scribes and Pharisees boasted as much of the goodness of their works as of the orthodoxy of their teaching, and hoped to be justified by them; it was the plea they put in, Luke xviii. 11, 12. and yet these things which they valued themselves so much upon, were an abomination in the sight of God.

Our Saviour here and in the following verses instanceth in divers particular of their works, wherein we must not imitate them. In general they are charged with hypocrisy, dissimulation or double dealing in religion; a crime which cannot be enquired of at men's bar, because we can only judge according to outward appearance; but God, who searcheth the heart, can convict of hypocrisy; and nothing is more displeasing to him, for he desireth truth.

Four things are in these verses charged upon them.

First, Their saying and doing were two things.

Their practice was no way agreeable either to their preaching or with their profession; for they say and do not; they teach out of the law that which is good, but their conversation gives them the lie; and they seem to have found another way to heaven for themselves than what they shew to others. See this illustrated and charged home upon them, Rom. ii. 17—24. Those are of all sinners most inexcusable, that allow themselves in the same sins they condemn in others or in worse. This doth especially touch wicked ministers, who will be sure to have their portion appointed them with hypocrites, Matt. xiv. 51. for what greater hypocrisy can there be, than to press that upon others to be believed and done which they themselves lie in unbelief of and disobedience to? who pull down in their practice what they build up in their preaching; who, when they are in the pulpit, preach so well that it is a pity they should ever come out; but, when they are out of the pulpit, live so ill that it is pity they should ever come in; like bells that call others to church but hang out of it themselves; or mercurial posts, that point the way to others but stand still themselves; such will be judged out of their own mouths.

It is applicable to all others that say and do not; that make a plausible profession of religion but do not live up to that profession; that make fair promises but do not perform their promises; are full of good discourse, and can lay down the law to all about them, but are empty of good works; great talkers but little doers; the voice is Jacob's voice, but the hands are the hands of Esau: Vox & præterea nihil. They speak fair, I go, sir; but there is no trusting them, for there are seven abominations in their heart.

Secondly, They were very severe in imposing upon others those things which they were not themselves willing to submit to the burden of, ver. 4. They bind heavy burdens, and grievous to be born; not only insisting upon the minute circumstances of the law, which is called a yoke, Acts xvi. 10. and pressing the observation of them with more strictness and severity than God himself did (whereas the maxim of the lawyers is, Apices juris non sunt jura) but by adding to his word, and imposing their own inventions and traditions under the highest penalties. They loved to shew their authority and to exercise their domineering faculty, lording it over God's heritage, and saying to men's souls, Bow down, that we may go over; witness their many additions to the law of the fourth commandment, by which they made the sabbath a burden on men's shoulders, which was designed to be the joy of their hearts. Thus with force and cruelty did those shepherds rule the flock, as of old, Ezek. xxxiv. 4.

But see their hypocrisy; they themselves will not move them with one of their fingers. 1. They would not exercise themselves in those things which they imposed upon others; they pressed upon the people a strictness in religion, which they themselves would not be bound by; but secretly transgressed their own traditions which they publicly enforced: They indulged their pride in giving law to others; but consulted their ease in their own practice. Thus it has been said, to the reproach of the popish priests, that they fast with wine and sweetmeats; while they force people to fast with bread and water; and decline the penances they enjoin the laity. 2. They would not ease the people in these things, not put a finger to lighten their burden when they saw it pinched them: They could find out loose constructions to put upon God's law, and could dispense with that, but would not bate an ace of their own impositions, nor dispense with a failure in the least punctilio of them: They allowed no chancery to relieve the extremity of their common law. How contrary to this was the practice of Christ's apostles, who would allow to others that use of Christian liberty, which, for the peace and edification of the church, they would deny themselves in! They would lay no other burden but necessary things, and those easy, Acts xv. 28. How carefully doth Paul spare those to whom he writes, 1 Cor. vii. 28.—iv. 12.

Thirdly, They were all for shew and nothing for substance in religion, ver. 5. All their works they do to be seen of men. We must do such good works that they who see them may glorify God: but we must not proclaim our good works, with design that others may see them and glorify us; which our Saviour here chargeth upon the Pharisees, in general, as he had done before in the particular instances of prayer and giving of alms. All their end was to be praised of men, and therefore all their endeavour was to be seen of men, to make a fair shew in the flesh. In those duties of religion which fall under the eye of men, none so constant and abundant as they; but in what lies between God and their souls, in the retirements of their closets, and the recesses of their hearts, they desire to be excused: The form of godliness will get them a name to live, which is all they aim at, and therefore trouble not themselves with the power of it, which is essential to a life indeed: He that doth all to be seen doth nothing to the purpose.

He instanceth in two things which they did to be seen of men:

1. They made broad their phylacteries. Those were little scrolls of paper on parchment, wherein were written, with great niceness, these four paragraphs of the law, Exod. xiii. 2. to ver. 11. Exod. xiii. 11—16, Deut. vi. 4—9. Deut. xi. 13—21. These were sown up in leather, and worn upon their foreheads and left arms: It was a tradition of the elders, which had reference to Exod. xiii. 9. and Prov. vii. 3. where the expressions seem to be figurative, intimating no more, but that we should bear the things of God in our minds as carefully as if we had them bound between our eyes: Now the Pharisees made broad these phylacteries, that they might be thought more holy, and strict, and zealous for the law, than others. It is a gracious ambition to covet to be really more holy than others, but it is a proud ambition to covet to appear so. It is good to excel in real piety, but not to exceed in outward shews; for overdoing is justly suspected of design, Prov. xxvii. 14. It is the guise of hypocrisy to make more ado than needs in external services, more than is needful either to prove or to improve the good affections and dispositions of the soul.

2. They enlarged the borders of their garment. God appoints the Jews to make borders or fringes upon their garments, Numb. xv. 38. to distinguish them from other nations, and to be a memorandum to them of their being a peculiar people: but the Pharisees were not content to have these borders like other peoples, which might serve God's design in appointing them; but they must be larger than ordinary, to answer their design of making themselves to be taken notice of; as if they were more religious than others: But those who thus enlarge their phylacteries, and the borders of their garments, while their hearts are straitened and destitute of the love of God and their neighbour, though they may now deceive others, will in the end deceive themselves.

Fourthly, They much affected pre-eminence and superiority, and prided themselves extremely in it. Pride was the daring reigning sin of the Pharisees, the sin did most easily beset them, and which our Lord Jesus takes all occasions to witness against.

1. He describes their pride, ver. 6, 7. They courted, and coveted,

(1.) Places of honour and respect. In all public appearance, as at feasts, and in the synagogues; they expected and had, to their hearts delight, the uppermost rooms, and the chief seats: They took place of all others, and precedence was adjudged to them, as persons of the greatest note and merit; and it is easy to imagine what a complacency they took in it: they loved to have the pre-eminence, 3 John 9. It is not possessing the uppermost rooms, not sitting in the chief seats that is condemned (some body must sit uppermost) but loving them; for men to value such a little piece of ceremony as sitting highest, going first, taking the wall, or the better hand, and to value themselves by it, and seek it, and resent it if they have it not; what is that but making an idol of ourselves, and then falling down and worshipping it? the worst kind of idolatry! It is bad any where, but especially in the synagogues. There to seek honour ourselves, where we come to give glory to God and to humble ourselves before him, is indeed to mock God instead of serving him. David would willingly lie at the threshold, in God's house, so far was he from coveting the chief seat there, Psal. lxxxiv. 10. It savours much of pride and hypocrisy, when people do not care for going to church, unless they can look fine and make a figure there.

(2.) Titles of honour and respect. They loved greetings in the markets, loved to have people put off their hats to them, and shew them respect when they met them in the streets. O how it pleased them, and fed a vain humour, digito monstrari & dicier hic, est, to have way made for them in the crowd of market-people; stand off, here is a Pharisee coming! and to be complimented with the high and pompous title of Rabbi, Rabbi! this was meat and drink and dainties to them; and they took as great a satisfaction in it as Nebuchadnezzar did in his palace, when he said, Is not this great Babylon that I have built? The greetings would not have done them half so much good, if they had not been in the markets, where every body might see how much they were respected, and how high they stood in the opinion of the people. It was but a little before Christ's time, that the Jewish teachers, the masters of Israel, had assumed the titles of Rabbi, Rab, and Rabba, which signifies great or much; and was construed as doctor or my lord; And they laid such a stress upon it, that they gave it for a maxim, that "he who saluteth his teacher, and doth not call him Rabbi, provokes the divine Majesty to depart from Israel;" and so much religion did they place in that which was but a piece of good manners! For him that is taught in the word to give respect to him that teacheth is commendable enough in him that gives it: but for him that teacheth to love it, and demand it, and affect it, to be pulled up with it, to be displeased if it should be omitted, is sinful and abominable; and, instead of teaching, he has need himself to learn the first lesson in the school of Christ, which is humility.

2. He cautions his disciples against being herein like them; herein they must not do after their works; but be not ye called so, for ye shall not be of such a spirit, ver. 8, &c.

Here is, (1.) A prohibition of pride: They are here forbidden,

1. To challenge titles of honour and dominion to themselves, ver. 8—10. it is repeated twice; Benot called Rabbi, neither be ye called master or guida; not that it is unlawful to give civil respect to those that are over us in the Lord, nay it is an instance of that honour and esteem of them, which is our duty; but, 1. Christ's minister must not affect the name of Rabbi or master, by way of distinction from other people; it is not agreeable to the simplicity of the gospel, for them to covet or accept the honour which they have that are in kings palaces. 2. They must not assume the authority and dominion over the faith of Christians: What they received of the Lord, all must receive from them; but in other things they must not make their opinions and wills a rule and standard to all other people, to be admitted with an implicit faith, and submitted to with an implicit obedience. The reasons for this prohibition are,

(1.) One is your master, even Christ, ver. 8. and again, ver. 10. Note, 1. Christ is our master, our teacher, our guide. Mr. George Herbert, when he named the name of Christ, usually added, my master. 2. Christ only is our master, ministers are but ushers in the school. Christ only is the master, that great prophet whom we must hear, and be ruled and overruled by; whose word must be an oracle and a law to us; verily I say unto you, must be enough to us: And if he only be our master, then for his ministers to set up for dictators, and to pretend to a supremacy and an infallibility, is a daring usurpation of that honour of Christ which he will not give to another.

(2.) All ye are brethren. Ministers are not only brethren to one another but to the people, and therefore it ill becomes them to be masters, when there are none of them to master it over but their brethren; yea, and we are all younger brethren, otherwise the eldest might claim an excellency of dignity and power, Gen. xlix. 3. But to preclude that Christ himself is the first-born among many brethren, Rom. viii. 29. ye are brethren, as ye are all disciples of the same master: School-fellows are brethren, and as such should help one another in getting their lesson: but it will by no means be allowed, that one of the scholars step into the master's seat and give law to the school: If we are all brethren, we must not be many masters, James iii. 1.

2. They are forbidden to ascribe such titles to others, ver. 9. Call no man your father upon the earth; constitute no man the father of your religion ligion, that is, the founder, author, director, and governor of it. The fathers of our flesh must be called fathers, and as such we must give them reverence; but God only must be owned as the Father of our spirits, Heb. xii. 9. Our religion must not be derived from or made to depend upon any man: We are born again to the spiritual and divine life, not of corruptible seed, but by the word of God; not of the will of the flesh, or the will of man, but of God. Now the will of man not being the rise of our religion must not be the rule of it: We must not jurare in verba magistri, not swear to the dictates of any creatures, not the wisest or best, nor pin our faith on any man's sleeve, because we know not whither he will carry it. St. Paul calls himself a father to those whose conversion he had been an instrument of, 1 Cor. iv. 10. Philem. 10. but he pretends to no dominion over them, and useth that title to note, not authority but affection; therefore he calls them not his obliged but his beloved sons, 1 Cor. iv. 14.

The reason given is, One is your Father, which is in heaven: God is our Father, and is all in all in our religion: He is the fountain of it and its founder; the life of it and its Lord; from whom alone, as the original, our spiritual life is derived, and on whom it doth depend: He is the Father of all lights, James i. 17. that one Father, from whom are all things, and we in him, Ephes. iv. 6. Christ having taught us to say, Our Father, which art in heaven, let us call no man Father upon earth; no man, because man is a worm, and the son of man is a worm, hewn out of the same rock with us; especially not upon earth, for man upon earth is a sinful worm: there is not a just man upon earth that doth good, and sins not, and therefore not fit to be called Father.

(2.) Here is a precept of humility and mutual subjection, ver. 11. He that is greatest among you shall be your servant: not only call himself so, we know of one that styles himself Servus servorum Dei, but acts as Rabbi, and father, and master, and Dominus Deus noster, and what not, but he shall be so. Take it as a promise; he shall be accounted greatest and stand highest in the favour of God, that is most submissive and serviceable: or as a precept he that is advanced to any place of dignity, trust and honour in the church let him be your servant, (some copies read isra, for isra;) let him not think that his patent of honour is a writ of ease: no: he that is greatest, is not a lord, but a minister. St. Paul, who knew his privilege as well as duty, though free from all, yet made himself servant of all, 1 Cor. ix. 19. and our Master frequently pressed it upon his disciples to be humble and self-denying, mild and condescending, and to abound in all offices of Christian love, though mean, and to the meanest, and of this he hath set us an example.

(3.) Here is a good reason for all this, ver. 12. Consider.

1. The punishment intended for the proud: Whosoever shall exalt himself, shall be abased. If God give them repentance, they will be abased in their own eyes, and will abhor themselves for it; if they repent not, sooner or later they will be abased before the world. Nebuchadnezzar, in the height of his pride, was turned to be a fellow-commoner with the beasts; Herod, to be a feast for the worms; and Babylon, that sat as a queen, to be the scorn of nations. God made the proud and aspiring priests contemptible and base, Mal. ii. 9. and the lying prophet to be the tail, Isa. ix. 15. But if proud men have not marks of humiliation set upon them in this world, there is a day coming, when they shall rise to everlasting shame and contempt, Dan. xii. 2. so plentifully will he reward the proud doer, Psal. xxxi. 23.

2. The precept intended for the humble: He that shall humble himself, shall be exalted. Humility is that ornament, which is in the sight of God of great price. In this world, the humble have the honour of being accepted with the holy God, and respected by all wise and good men; of being qualified for, and often called out to the most honourable services; for honour is like the shadow, which flees from those that pursue it and grasp at it, but follows those that flee from it: However, in the other world, they that have humbled themselves in contrition for their sin, in compliance with their God, and in condescension to their brethren, shall be exalted to inherit the throne of glory; shall be not only owned, but crowned before angels and men.

13. ¶ But woe unto you, Scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye shut up the kingdom of heaven against men: for ye neither go in yourselves, neither suffer ye them that are entering to go in. 14. Woe unto you, Scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye devour widows' houses, and for a pretence make long prayers: therefore ye shall receive the greater damnation. 15. Woe unto you, Scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye compass sea and land to make one proselyte, and when he is made, ye make him twofold more the child of hell than yourselves. 16. Woe unto you, ye blind guides, which say, Whosoever shall swear by the temple, it is nothing: but whosoever shall swear by the gold of the temple, he is a debtor! 17. Ye fools and blind: for whether is greater, the gold, or the temple that sanctifieth the gold? 18. And, Whosoever shall swear by the altar, it is nothing; but whosoever sweareth by the gift that is upon it, he is guilty. 19. Ye fools and blind: for whether is greater, the gift, or the altar that sanctifieth the gift? 20. Whoso therefore shall swear by the altar, sweareth by it, and by all things thereon. 21. And whoso shall swear by the temple, sweareth by it, and by him, that dwelleth therein. 22. And he that shall swear by heaven, sweareth by the throne of God, and by him that sitteth thereon. 23. Woe unto you, Scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye pay tithe of mint and anise and cummin, and have omitted the weightier matters of the law, judgment, mercy, and faith: these ought ye to have done, and not to leave the other undone. 24. Ye blind guides, which strain at a gnat, and swallow a camel. 25. Woe unto you, Scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye make clean the outside of the cup and of the platter, but within they are full of extortion and excess. 26. Thou blind Pharisee, cleanse first that which is within the cup and platter, that the outside of them may be clean also. 27. Woe unto you, Scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye are like unto whited sepulchres, which indeed appear beautiful outward, but are within full of dead men's bones, and of all uncleanness. 28. Even so ye also outwardly appear righteous unto men, but within ye are full of hypocrisy and iniquity. 29. Woe unto you, Scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! because ye build the tombs of the prophets, and garnish the sepulchres of the righteous, 30. And say, If we had been in the days of our fathers, we would not have been partakers with them in the blood of the prophets, 31. Wherefore ye be witnesses unto yourselves, that ye are the children of them which killed the prophets. 32. Fill ye up then the measure of your fathers. 33. Ye serpents, ye generation of vipers, how can ye escape the damnation of hell?

In these verses we have eight woes levelled directly against the Scribes and Pharisees by our Lord Jesus Christ, like so many claps of thunder, or flashes of lightening from mount Sinai: Three woes are made to look very dreadful, Rev. viii. 13.—ix. 10. but here are eight woes, in opposition to the eight beatitudes, Matt. v. 8. The gospel has its woes as well as the law, and gospel curses are of all other the heaviest. These woes are the more remarkable, not only because of the authority, but because of the meekness and gentleness of him that denounced them: He came to bless, and loved to bless, but if his wrath be kindled, to be sure there is cause for it; and who shall intreat for him the great intercessor pleads against? A woe from Christ is a remediless woe.

This is here the burden of the song, and it is a heavy burden: Woe unto you, Scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites. Note, 1. The Scribes and Pharisees were hypocrites, that is it in which all the rest of their ill characters are summed up; it was the leaven which gave the relish to all they said and did. An hypocrite is a stage-player in religion, that is the primary signification of the word, he personates or acts the part of one that he neither is nor may be; or perhaps that he neither is nor would be. 2. That hypocrites are in a woeful state and condition; woe to hypocrites; so he said whose saying their case is miserable makes it so; while they live their religion is vain, when they die their ruin is great.

Now each of these woes against the Scribes and Pharisees has a reason annexed to it, containing a separate crime charged upon, proving their hypocrisy, and justifying the judgment of Christ upon them; for his woes, his curses are never causeless.

First, They were sworn enemies to the gospel of Christ, and consequently to the salvation of the souls of men, ver. 13. They shut up the kingdom of heaven against men, i.e. they did all they could to keep people from believing in Christ, and so entering into his kingdom. Christ came to open the kingdom of heaven, that is, to lay open for us a new and living way into it, to bring men to be subjects of that kingdom. Now the Scribes and Pharisees, who sat in Moses's seat, and pretended to the key of knowledge, ought to have contributed their assistance herein, by opening those scriptures of the Old Testament which pointed at the Messiah and his kingdom, in their true proper sense; they that undertook to expound Moses and the prophets, should have shewed the people how they testified of Christ; that Daniel's weeks were expiring, the scepter was departed from Judah, and therefore now was the time for the Messiah's appearing. Thus they might have facilitated that great work, and have helped thousands to heaven; but instead of this they shut up the kingdom of heaven; they made it their business to press the ceremonial law, which was now in the vanishing, and to suppress the prophecies, which were now in the accomplishing, and to beget and nourish up in the minds of people's prejudices against Christ and his doctrine.

1. They would not go in themselves: Have any of the rulers, or of the Pharisees, believed on him? John vii. 48. No; they were too proud to stoop to his meanness, too formal to be reconciled to his plainness; they did not like a religion which insisted so much on humility, self-denial, contempt of the world and spiritual worship: Repentance was the door of admission into this kingdom, and nothing could be more disagreeable to the Pharisees, that justified themselves and admired themselves, than to repent, that is, to accuse and abase and abhor themselves; therefore they went not in themselves; but that was not all,

4. They would not suffer him that were entering to go in. It is bad to keep away from Christ ourselves, but it is worse to keep others from him; yet that is commonly the way of hypocrites, they do not love that any should go beyond them in religion or be better than they. Their not going in themselves, was a hindrance to many; for having so great an interest in the people, multitudes rejected the gospel only because their leaders did; but besides that they opposed both Christ's entertaining of sinners, Luke vii. 39. and sinners entertaining of Christ; they perverted his doctrine, confronted his miracles, quarrelled with his disciples, and represented him and his institutes and economy to the people in the most disingenuous, disadvantageous manner imaginable; they thundered out their excommunications against those that confessed him, and used all their wit and power to serve their malice against him; and thus they shut up the kingdom of heaven, so that they who would enter into it must suffer violence, Matt. xi. 12. and press into it, Luke xvi. 16. through a crowd of Scribes and Pharisees, and all the obstructions and difficulties they could contrive to lay in their way. How well is it for us that our salvation is not intrusted in the hands of any man or company of men in the world; if it were we were undone! they that shut out of the church, would shut out of heaven if they could; but the malice of men cannot make the promise of God to his chosen of none effect; blessed be God it cannot.

Secondly, They made religion and the form of godliness a cloke and stalking-horse to their covetous practices and desires, ver. 14. Observe here,

1. What their wicked practices were; they devoured widows' houses, either by quartering themselves and their attendants upon them for entertainment, which must be of the best for men of their figure: or by insinuating themselves in their affections, and so getting to be the trustees of their estates, which they would make on easy prey of, for who could presume to call such as they were to an account? The thing they aimed at was to enrich themselves; and this being their chief and highest end, all consideration of justice and equity was laid aside, and even widow's houses were sacrificed to this. Widows are of the weaker sex in its weakest state, easily imposed upon; and therefore they fastened on them to make a prey of: They devoured those whom, by the law of God, they were particularly obliged to protect, patronize and relieve. There is a woe in the Old Testament to those that made widows their prey, Isa. x. 1, 2. and Christ here seconded it with his woe. God is the Judge of the widows, they are his peculiar care, he establisheth their border, Prov. xv. 25. and espouseth their cause, Exod. xxii. 22, 23. yet these were they whose houses the Pharisees devoured by whole sale; sale; so greedy were they to get their bellies filled with the treasures of wickedness! Their devouring denotes not only covetousness, but cruelty in their oppression, described, Micah iii. 3. They eat the flesh, and flay the skin: and doubtless they did all this under colour of law; for they did it so artfully that it passed uncensured, and did not at all lessen the people's veneration for them.

2. What was the cloke with which they covered this wicked practice; for a pretence they made long prayers, very long indeed, if it be true which some of the Jewish writers tell us, that they spent three hours at a time in the formalities of meditation and prayer, and did it thrice every day, which is more than an upright soul, that makes conscience of being inward with God in the duty, dares pretend ordinarily to do; but to the Pharisees it was easy enough, who never made a business of the duty, and always made a trade of the outside of it; By this craft they got their wealth and maintained their grandeur. It is not probable that these long prayers were extemporary, for then (as Mr. Baxter observes) the Pharisees had much more of the gift of prayer than Christ's disciples had; but rather that they were stated forms of words in use among them, which they said over by tale, as the papists drop their beads. Christ doth not here condemn long prayers, as in themselves hypocritical; nay, if there were not a great appearance of good in them, they would not have been used for a pretence; and the cloke must be very thick which was used to cover such wicked practices. Christ himself continued all night in prayer to God, and we are commanded to pray without ceasing too soon; where there are many sins to be confessed, and many wants to pray for the supply of, and many mercies to give thanks for, there is occasion for long prayers; but the Pharisees long prayers were made up of vain repetitions, and, which was the end of them, they were for a pretence; by them they got the reputation of pious devout men, that loved prayer, and were the favourites of heaven; and by this means people were made to believe it was not possible such men as they should cheat them; and therefore, happy the widow that could get a Pharisee for her trustee, and guardian to her children: Thus while they seemed to soar heaven-wards upon the wings of prayer, their eye like the kite's, was all the while upon their prey on the earth, some widow's house or other that lay convenient for them. Thus circumcision was the cloke of the Shechemites covetousness, Gen. xxxiv. 22, 23. and the payment of a vow in Hebron the cover of Absalom's rebellion, 2 Sam. xv. 7. and a fast in Jezreel must patronize Naboth's murder, and the extirpation of Baal is the footstool of Jehu's ambition. Popish priests, under pretence of long prayers for the dead, masses and dirges, and I know not what stuff, enrich themselves by devouring the houses of the widows and fatherless. Note, It is no new thing for the shew and form of godliness to be made a cloke to the greatest enormities: But dissembled piety, however it passeth now, will be reckoned for as double iniquity, in the day when God shall judge the secrets of men.

1. The doom passed upon them for this; therefore ye shall receive the greater damnation. Note, 1. There are degrees of damnation; there are some whose sin being more inexcusable, their ruin will be more intolerable. 2. The pretences of religion, with which hypocrites used to disguise or excuse their sin now, will aggravate their condemnation shortly. Such is the deceitfulness of sin, that that very thing by which sinners hope to expiate and atone for their sins, will come against them, and make their sins more exceeding sinful. But it is sad for the criminal when his defence proves his offence, and his plea, we have prophesied in thy name, and in thy name made long prayers, heightens the charge against him.

Thirdly, While they were such enemies to the conversion of souls to Christianity, they were very industrious in the perversion of them to their faction: They shut up the kingdom of heaven against those that would turn to Christ, but at the same time compassed sea and land to make proselytes to themselves, ver. 15. Observe here,

1. Their commendable industry in making proselytes to the Jewish religion, not only proselytes of the gate, who obliged themselves to no more but the observance of the seven precepts of the sons of Noah, but proselytes of righteousness, who addicted themselves wholly to all the rites of the Jewish religion, for that was the game they flew at; for this, for one such, though but one, they compassed sea and land, had many a cunning reach, and laid many a plot, rid and run, and sent and wrote, and laboured unweariedly; and what did they aim at? not the glory of God and the good of souls; but that they might have the credit of making them proselytes, and the advantage of making a prey of them when they were made. Note,

1. The making of proselytes, if it be to the truth and serious godliness, and be done with a good design, is a good work, well worthy of the utmost care and pains: Such is the value of souls, that nothing must be thought too much to do to save a soul from death. The industry of the Pharisees herein may shew the negligence of many, who would be thought to act from better principles, but will be at no pains or cost to propagate the gospel.

2. To make a proselyte sea and land must be compassed; all ways and means must be tried: first one way and then another must be tried, all little enough; but all well paid if the point be gained. 3. Carnal hearts seldom stick at pains to carry on their carnal purposes; when a proselyte is to be made to serve a turn for themselves, they will compass sea and land to make him, rather than be balked.

2. Their cursed impiety in abusing their proselytes when they were made; ye make him the disciple of a Pharisee presently, and he sucks in all their notions, and so ye make him twofold more the child of hell than yourselves. Note, 1. Hypocrites, while they fancy themselves heirs of heaven, are, in the judgment of Christ, the children of hell. The rise of their hypocrisy is from hell, for the devil is the father of lies; and the tendency of their hypocrisy is towards hell, that is the country they belong to, the inheritance they are heirs to; they are called children of hell because of their rooted enmity to the kingdom of heaven, which was the principle and genius of Pharisaism. 2. Though all that maliciously oppose the gospel are children of hell, yet some are twofold more so than others, more furious and bigoted; and malignant. 3. Perverted proselytes are commonly the greatest bigots; the scholars outdid their masters, (1.) In fondness of ceremony; the Pharisees themselves saw the folly of their own impositions, and in their heart smiled at the obsequiousness of those that conformed to them, but their proselytes were eager for them. Note, Weak heads commonly admire those shews and ceremonies which wise men (however for public ends they countenance them) cannot but think meanly of. (2.) In fury against Christianity; the proselytes readily imbibed the principles which their crafty leaders were not wanting to possess them with, and so became extreme hot against the truth. The most bitter enemies the apostles met with in all places were the Hellenist Jews, that were mostly proselytes, Acts xiii. 45. xiv. 2—19. xvii. 5. xviii. 6. Paul, a disciple of the Pharisees, was exceedingly mad against the Christians, Acts xxvi. 11. when his master, Gamaliel, seems to have been more moderate.

Fourthly, Their seeking of their own worldly gain and honour more than God's glory, put them upon coining false and unwarrantable distinctions, with which they led the people into dangerous mistakes, particularly in the matter of oaths; which, as an evidence of an universal sense of religion, have been by all nations accounted sacred, ver. 16. Ye blind guides, Note, 1. It is sad to think, how many are under the guidance of such as are themselves blind; who undertake to shew others that way which they are themselves willingly ignorant of. His watchmen are blind, Isa. lvi. 10. and too often the people love to have it so, and say to the seers, See not. But the case is bad, when the leaders of the people cause them to err, Isa. ix. 16. 2. Though the condition of those whose guides are blind is very sad; yet that of the blind guides themselves is yet more woeful. Christ denounceth a woe to the blind guides that have the blood of so many souls to answer for.

Now to prove their blindness he instanceth in the matter of swearing, and shews what corrupt casuists they were.

1. He lays down the doctrine they taught.

(1.) They allowed swearing by creatures, provided they were consecrated to the service of God, and stood in any special relation to him. They allowed swearing by the temple and the altar, though they were the work of men's hands, intended to be the servants of God's honour, not sharers in it. An oath is an appeal to God, to his omniscience and justice; and to make this appeal to any creature is to put that creature in the place of God. See Deut. vi. 13.

(2.) They distinguished between an oath by the temple and an oath by the gold of the temple; an oath by the altar and by the gift upon the altar; making the latter binding, but not the former. Here was a double wickedness: 1. That there were some oaths which they dispensed with and made light of, and reckoned a man was not bound by to assert the truth, or perform a promise. They ought not to have sworn by the temple or the altar; but when they had so sworn they were taken in the words of their mouth; that doctrine cannot be of the God of truth, which gives countenance to the breach of faith in any case whatsoever. Oaths are edge-tools, and are not to be jested with. 2. That they preferred the gold before the temple, and the gift before the altar, to encourage people to bring gifts to the altar, and gold to the treasures of the temple, which they hoped to be gainers by. They who had made gold their hope, and whose eyes were blinded by gifts in secret, were great friends to the Corban; and gain being their godliness, by a thousand artifices they made religion truckle to their worldly interests. Corrupt church-guides make things to be sin or no sin as it serves their purposes, and lay a much greater stress on that which concerns their own gain than that which is for God's glory and the good of souls.

2. He shews the folly and absurdity of this distinction, ver. 17—19. Ye fools and blind: It was in the way of a necessary reproof, not an angry reproach, that Christ called them fools. Let it suffice us from the word of wisdom to shew the folly of sinful opinions and practices; but for the fastening of the character upon particular persons leave that to Christ, who knows what is in man, and has forbidden us to say, Thou fool.

To convict them of folly he appeals to themselves, Whether is greater, the gold (the golden vessels and ornaments, or the gold in the treasury) or the temple that sanctifies the gold? The gift, or the altar that sanctifies the gift? Any one will own, Propter quod aliquid est tale, id est magis tale They that swore by the gold of the temple had an eye to it as holy; but what was it that made it holy but the holiness of the temple, to the service of which it was appropriated? And therefore the temple cannot be less holy than the gold but must be more so: for the less it blessed and sanctified of the better, Heb. vii. 7. The temple and altar were dedicated to God fixedly, the gold and gift but secondarily, Christ is our altar, Heb. xiii. 10. our temple, John ii. 21. for it is he that sanctifies all our gifts, and puts an acceptableness in them, 1 Pet. ii. 5. Those that put their own works into the place of Christ's righteousness in justification, are guilty of the Pharisees absurdity that preferred the gift before the altar. Every true Christian is a living temple; and by virtue thereof common things are sanctified to him; unto the pure all things are pure, Tit. 15. and the unbelieving husband is sanctified by the believing wife, 1 Cor. vii. 14.

3. He rectifies the mistake, ver. 20, 21, 23. by reducing all those oaths they had invented to the true intent of an oath, which is, By the name of the Lord: So that though an oath by the temple, or the altar, or heaven, be formally bad, yet they are binding: Quod fieri non debuit, factum valet. A man shall never take advantage of his own fault.

(1.) He that swears by the altar, let him not think to shake off the obligation of it by saying the altar is but wood and stone and brass; for his oath shall be construed most strongly against himself; because he was culpable, and so as that the obligation of it may be preserved, ut res potius valeat quam pereat. And therefore an oath by the altar, shall be interpreted by it and by all things thereon; for the appurtenances pass with the principal; and the things thereon being offered up to God, to swear by it and them, was in effect to call God himself to witness; for it was the altar of God; and he that went to that went to God, Psalm. xliii. 4. xxvi. 6.

(2.) He that swears by the temple, if he understood what he doth, cannot but apprehend that the ground of such a respect to it is, not because it is a fine house, but because it is the house of God, dedicated to his service, the place where he hath chosen to put his name there; and therefore he swears by it, and by him that dwelleth therein, there he was pleased in a peculiar manner to manifest himself and gives tokens of his presence; so that whoso swears by it, swears by him who had said, This is my rest, here will I dwell. Good Christians are God's temple, and the Spirit of God dwells in them, 1 Cor. iii. 16. vi. 19. and God takes what is done to them as done to himself; he that grieves a gracious soul, grieves it and the Spirit that dwells in it, Eph. iv. 30.

(3.) If a man swears by heaven he sins, Matt. v. 34. and he shall not therefore be discharged from the obligation of his oath; no, God will make him know that the heaven he swears by is his throne, Isa. lxvi. 1. and he that swears by the throne, appeals to him that sits upon it; who as he represents the affront done to him in the form of the oath, so he will certainly revenge the greater affront done to him by the violation of it. Christ will not countenance the evasion of a solemn oath though never so plausible.

Fifthly, They were very strict and precise in the smaller matters of the law, but as careless and loose in the weightier matters, ver. 23, 24. They were partial in the law, Mat. ii. 9. would pick and choose their duty, according as they were interested or stood affected. Sincere obedience is universal, and he that from a right principle obeys any of God's precepts, will have respect to them all, Psalm. cxix. 6. But hypocrites, who act in religion for themselves and not for God, will do no more in religion than they can serve a turn by for themselves. The partiality of the Scribes and Pharisees appears here in two instances.

1. They observed smaller duties, but omitted greater; they were very exact in paying tithes, till it came to mint, anise, and cummin, their exactness in tithing of which would not cost them much, but would be cried up, and they should buy reputation pretty cheap. The Pharisees boasted of this, I give tithes of all that I possess, Luke xviii. 12. But it is likely, they had ends of their own to serve, and would find their own account in it; for the priests and Levites, to whom the tithes were paid, were in their interests, and knew how to return their kindness. Paying tithes was their duty, and what the law required; Christ tells them they ought not to leave it undone.

Note. All ought in their places to contribute to the support and maintenance of a standing ministry: Withholding tithes is called robbing God, Mal. iii. 8, 9, 10. They that are taught in the word, and do not communicate to them that teach them, that love a cheap gospel, come short of the Pharisees.

But that which Christ here condemns them for is, that they omitted the weightier matters of the law, judgment, mercy, and faith; and their niceness in paying tithes was, if not to atone to God, yet at least to excuse and palliate to men the omission of those. All the things of God's law are weighty, but those are most weighty, which are most expressive of inward holiness in the heart; the instances of self-denial, contempt of the world, and resignation of God, in which lies the life of religion. Judgment and mercy towards men, and faith towards God, are the weightier matters of the law, the good things which the Lord our God requires, Micah. vi. 8. to do justly, and love mercy, and humble ourselves by faith to walk with God. This is the obedience which is better than sacrifice or tithe; judgment is preferred before sacrifice, Isa. i. 11. To be just to the priests in their tithe, and yet to cheat and defraud every body else, is but to mock God and deceive ourselves. Mercy is also preferred before sacrifice, Hos. vi. 6. To feed those who made themselves fat with the offerings of the Lord, and at the same time to shut up the bowels of compassion from a brother or a sister that is naked and destitute of daily food, to pay tithe-mint to the priest and to deny a crumb to Lazarus, is to lie open to that judgment without mercy which is awarded to those who pretended to judgment and shewed no mercy; nor will judgment and mercy serve without faith in divine revelation; for God will be honoured in his truths, as well as in his laws.

2. They avoided lesser sins, but committed greater, ver. 24. Ye blind guides; so he had called them before, ver. 16. for their corrupt teaching, here he calls them so for their corrupt living, for their example was leading as well as that doctrine; and in this also they were blind and partial; they strained at a gnat, and swallowed a camel. In their doctrine they strained at gnats, warned people against every the least violation of the tradition of the elders. In their practice they strained at gnats, heaved at them, with a seeming dread as if they had a great abhorrence of sin, and were afraid of it in the least instance; but they made no difficulty of those sins which, in comparison with them, were as a camel to a gnat; when they devoured widow's houses they did indeed swallow a camel; when they gave Judas the price of innocent blood, and yet scrupled to put the return money into the treasury, Matth. xxvii. 6. when they would not go into the judgment-hall for fear of being defiled, and yet would stand at the door and cry out against the holy Jesus, John xviii. 28. when they quarrelled with the disciples for eating with unwashed hands, and yet for the filling of the Corban taught people to break the fifth commandment, they strained at gnats, or lesser things, and yet swallowed camels. It is not the scrupling of a little sin that Christ here reproves, if it be a sin, though but a gnat, it must be strained at, but the doing of that and then swallowing a camel; in the lesser matters of the law to be superstitious, and to be profane in the greater, is the hypocrisy here condemned.

Sixthly, They were all for the outside, and not at all for the inside of religion: They were more desirous and solicitous to appear pious to men, than to approve themselves so towards God. This is illustrated by two similitudes.

1. They are compared to a vessel that is clean washed on the outside, but all dirt within, ver. 25, 26. The Pharisees placed religion in that which at best was but a point of decency, the washing of cups, Mark vii. 4. They were in care to eat their meat in clean cups and platters, but made no conscience of getting their meat by extortion and using it to excess. Now what a foolish thing would it be for a man to wash only the outside of a cup which is to be looked at, and to leave the inside dirty which is to be used; so they do who only avoid scandalous sins that would spoil their reputation with men, but allow themselves in heart-wickedness, which renders them odious to the pure and holy God. In reference to this, observe,

(1.) The practice of the Pharisees; they made clean the outside. In those things which fell under the observation of their neighbours they seemed very exact, and carried on their wicked intrigues with so much artifice that their wickedness was not suspected; people generally took them for very good men: But within, in the recesses of their hearts and the close retirements of their lives, they were full of extortion and excess; of violence and incontinence, so Dr. Hammond; that is, of injustice and intemperance. While they would seem to be godly, they were neither sober nor righteous. Their inward part was very wickedness, Psalm v. 9. and that we are really that we are inwardly.

(2.) The rule Christ gives in opposition to this practice, ver. 26. It is addressed to the blind Pharisees. They thought themselves the seers of the land, but John ix. 40. Christ calls them blind. Note, Those are blind in Christ's account, who (how quick-sighted soever they are in other things) are strangers and no enemies to the wickedness of their own hearts; that see not and hate not the secret sin that lodgeth there. Self-ignorance is the most shameful and hurtful ignorance, Rev. iii. 17. The rule is, cleanse first that which is within. Note, The principal care of every one of us should be to wash our hearts from wickedness, Jer. iv. 14. The main business of a Christian lies within, to get cleansed from the filthiness of the spirit. Corrupt affections and inclinations; the secret lusts that lurk in the soul, unseen and unobserved; those must first be mortified and subdued. Those sins must be conscientiously abstained from which the eye of God only is a witness who searcheth the heart.

Observe, The method prescribed; cleanse first that which is within: not that only, but that first; because if due care be taken concerning that, the outside will be clean also. External motives and inducements may keep the outside clean, while the inside is filthy; but if renewing, sanctifying grace make clean the inside, that will have an influence upon the outside, for the commanding principle is within. If the heart be well kept, all is well, for out of it are the issues of life; the eruptions will vanish of course. If the heart and spirit be made new, there will be a newness of life; here therefore we must begin with ourselves: first cleanse that which is within, we then make sure work when this is our first work.

2. They are compared to whitened sepulchres, ver. 27, 28.

1. They were fair without, like sepulchres, which appear beautiful outward: Some make it to refer to the custom of the Jews to whiten graves only for the notifying of them, especially if they were in unusual places, that people might avoid them, because of the ceremonial pollution contracted by the touch of a grave, Numb. xix. 16. And it was part of the charge of the overseers of the highways, to repair that whitening when it was decayed. Sepulchres were thus made remarkable, 2 Kings xxiii. 16. 17. The formality of hypocrites, by which they study to recommend themselves to the world, doth but make all wise and good men the more careful to avoid them for fear of being defiled by them. Beware of the Scribes, Luke xx. 46. It rather alludes to the custom of whitening the sepulchres of eminent persons for the beautifying of them: It is said here, ver. 29. that they garnished the sepulchres of the righteous; as it is usual with us to erect monuments upon the graves of great persons, and to strew flowers on the graves of dear friends: Now the righteousness of the Scribes and Pharisees was like the ornaments of a grave, or the dressing up of a dead body, only for shew. The top of their ambition was to appear righteous before men, and to be applauded and had in admiration by them. But,

2. They were foul within, like sepulchres, full of dead men's bones and all uncleanness: So vile are our bodies, when the soul has deserted them. Thus were they full of hypocrisy and iniquity. Hypocrisy is the worst iniquity of all other. Note, It is possible for those that have their hearts full of sin, yet to have their lives free from blame and to appear very good. But what will it avail us to have the good word of our fellow-servants, if our master doth not say, Well done? When all other graves are opened, these whitened sepulchres will be looked into, and the dead men's bones and all the uncleanness shall be brought out, and be spread before all the host of heaven, Jer. viii. 1, 2. For it is the day when God shall judge, not the shews, but the secrets of men. And it will then be small comfort to them who shall have their portion with hypocrites, to remember how creditably and plausibly they went to hell, applauded by all their neighbours.

Seventhly, They pretended a deal of kindness for the memory of the prophets that were dead and gone, while they hated and persecuted those that were present with them. This is put last, because it was the blackest part of their character. God is jealous for his honour in his laws and ordinances, and resents it if they be profaned and abused; but he has often expressed a no less jealousy for his honour in his prophets and ministers, and resents it worse if they be wronged and persecuted; and therefore when our Lord Jesus comes to this head, he speaks more fully than upon any of the other, ver. 29—37. for he that toucheth his ministers toucheth his Anointed, and toucheth the apple of his eye. Observe here,

1. The respect which the Scribes and Pharisees pretended for the prophets that were gone, ver. 29, 30. This was the varnish, and that in which they outwardly appeared righteous.

(1.) They honoured the relicts of the prophets, they built their tombs and garnished their sepulchres. It seems the places of their burial were known, David's sepulchre was with them, Acts ii. 29. There was a title upon the sepulchre of the man of God, 2 Kings xxiii. 17. and Josiah thought it respect enough not to move his bones, ver. 18. But they would do more, rebuild and beautify them. Now consider this, 1. As an instance of honour done to deceased prophets, who while they live were counted as the off-scouring of all things, and had all manner of evil spoken against them falsely. Note, God can extort, even from bad men, an acknowledgment of the honour of piety and holiness. Them that honour God he will honour, and sometimes with those from whom contempt is expected, 2 Sam. vi. 27. The memory of the just is blessed, when the names of those that hated and persecuted them shall be covered with shame. The honour of constancy and resolution in the way of duty will be a lasting honour; and those that are manifest to God, will be manifest in the consciences of those about them. 2. As an instance of the hypocrisy of the Scribes and Pharisees who paid their respect to them. Note, Carnal people can easily honour the memories of faithful ministers that are dead and gone, because they do not reprove them or disturb them in their sins. Dead prophets are seers that see not, and those they can hear well enough; they do not torment them; as the living witnesses do, that bear their testimony viva voce, Rev. xi. 10. They can pay a respect to the writings of the dead prophets, which tell them what they should be; but not the reproofs of the living prophets, which tell them what they are. Sit divus, modo non sit vivus. The extravagant respects which the church of Rome pays to the memory of saints departed, especially the martyrs, dedicating days and places to their names, enshrining their relics, praying to them and offering to their images, while they make themselves drunk with the blood of the saints of their own day, is a manifest proof that they not only succeed, but exceed the Scribes and Pharisees in a counterfeit hypocritical religion, which builds the prophets tombs, but hates the prophets doctrine.

(2.) They protested against the murder of them, ver. 30. If we had been in the days of our fathers, we would not have been partakers with them. They would never have consented to the silencing of Amos, and the imprisonment of Micah, to the putting of Hanani in the stocks, and Jeremiah in the dungeon, to the stoning of Zechariah, and the mocking of all the messengers of the Lord, and the abuses put upon his prophets; no, not they, they would sooner have lost their right hands than have done any such thing. What, is thy servant a dog? And yet they were at this time plotting to murder Christ, to whom all the prophets bore witness. They think if they had lived in the days of the prophets, they would have heard them gladly and obeyed, and yet rebelled against the light that Christ brought into the world. But it is certain, a Herod and an Herodias to John Baptist, would have been an Ahab and a Jezebel to Elijah. Note, The deceitfulness of sinners hearts appears very much in this, that while they go down the stream of the sins of their own day, they fancy they should have swum against the streams of the sins of the former days: that if they had had other peoples opportunities, they would have improved them more faithfully; had been in other peoples temptations, they would have resisted them more vigorously; when yet they improve not the opportunities they have, nor resist the temptations they are in. We are sometimes thinking, if we had lived when Christ was upon earth, how constantly we would have followed him; we would not have despised and rejected him, as they then did; and yet Christ in his spirit, in his word, in his ministers, is still no better treated.

3. Their enmity and opposition to Christ and his gospel notwithstanding, and the ruin they were bringing upon themselves and upon that generation thereby, ver. 32, 33. Observe here,

1. Their indictment proved. Ye be witnesses against your yourselves. Note, There are no hopes for sinners escaping the judgment of Christ, for want of proof against them, when it is easy to find them witnesses against themselves, and their very pleas will not only be over-ruled, but turned to their conviction, and their own tongues shall be made to fall upon them, Psal. lxxiv. 8.

(1.) By their own confession it was the great wickedness of their forefathers to kill the prophets; so that they knew the fault of it, and yet were themselves guilty of the same fact. Note, They who condemn sin in others, and yet allow the same or worse in themselves, are of all others most inexcusable, Rom. i. 32, —ii. 1. They knew they ought not to have been partakers with persecutors, and yet were the followers of them. Such self-contradictions now will amount to self-condemnations in the great day. Christ puts another construction upon their building of the tombs of the prophets than what they intended; as if by beautifying their graves, they justified their murders, Luke xi. 48. for they persisted in the sin.

(2.) By their own confession these notorious persecutors were their ancestors, Ye are the children of men. They meant no more but that they were their children by blood and nature, but Christ turns it upon them, that they were so by spirit and disposition. You are of those fathers, and their lusts you will do. They are, as you say, your fathers, and you do patrizare; it is the sin that runs in the blood among you. As your fathers did, so do ye, Acts vii. 51. They came of a persecuting breed, were a seed of evil doers, Isa. i. 4. risen up in their fathers stead, Numb. xxxii. 14. Malice and envy, and cruelty, were bred in the bone with them, and they had formerly espoused it for a principle to do as their fathers did, Jer. xlv. 17. And it is observable here, here, ver. 30. how careful they are to mention the relation; they were our fathers that killed the prophets, and they were men in honour and power, whose sons and successors we are. If they had detested the wickedness of their ancestors, as they ought to have done, they would not have been so fond to call them their fathers; for it is no credit to be akin to persecutors, though they had never so much dignity and dominion.

2. The sentence passed upon them. Christ here proceeds,

(1.) To give them up to sin as irreclaimable, ver. 32. Fill ye up then the measure of your fathers. If Ephraim be joined to idols, and hate to be reformed, let him alone. He that is filthy, let him be filthy still. Christ knew they were now contriving his death, and in a few days would accomplish it; well, saith he, go on with your plot, take your course, walk in the way of your heart and in the sight of your eyes, and see what will come of it. What thou dost, so quickly. You will but fill up the measure of guilt, which will then overflow in a deluge of wrath. Note, 1. There is a measure of sin to be filled up, before utter ruin comes upon persons and families, churches and nations. God will bear long, but the time will come when he can no longer forbear, Jer. xlv. 22. We read of the measure of the Amorites that was to be filled, Gen. xv. 16. and the harvest of the earth being ripe for the sickle, Rev. xiv. 15—19. and of sinners making an end to deal treacherously, arriving to a full stature in treachery, Isa. xxxiii. 1. 2. Children fill up the measure of their fathers' sins when they are gone, if they persist in the same or the like. That national guilt which brings national ruin, is made up of the sin of many in several ages; and in the successions of societies here is a score going on; for God justly visits the iniquity of the fathers upon the children that tread in the steps of it. 3. Persecuting Christ, and his people and ministers, is a sin that fills the measure of a nation's guilt sooner than any other. This was it that brought wrath without remedy upon the fathers, 2 Chron. xxxvi. 16. and wrath to the utmost upon the children too, 1 Thess. ii. 16. This was that fourth transgression, which, when added to the other three, the Lord would not turn away the punishment of, Amos i. 3—6—9—11—13. 4. It is just with God to give up those to their own hearts lust that obstinately persist in the gratification of them. Those that will run headlong to ruin, let the reins be laid in their neck, and it is the saddest condition a man can be in on this side hell.

(2.) He proceeds to give them up to ruin as irrecoverable, to a personal ruin in the other world, ver. 33. Ye serpents, ye generation of vipers, how can ye escape the damnation of hell? These are strange words to come from the mouth of Christ, into whose lips grace was poured. But he can and will speak terror, and in these words he explains and sums up the eight woes he had denounced against the Scribes and Pharisees.

Here is, (1.) Their description; Ye serpents. Doth Christ call names? Yes, but this doth not warrant us to do so. He infallibly knew what was in man, and knew them to be subtil as serpents; cleaving to the earth, feeding on dust, and had a specious outside, but were within malignant, had poison under their tongues, the seed of the old serpent. They were a generation of vipers; they and those that went before them, they and those that joined with them, were a generation of envenomed, enraged, spiteful adversaries to Christ and his gospel. They loved to be called of men, Rabbi, Rabbi, but Christ calls them serpents and vipers; for he gives men their true characters, and delights to put contempt upon the proud.

(2.) Their doom. He represents their condition as very sad, and in a manner desperate; how can ye escape the damnation of hell? Christ himself preached hell and damnation, for which his ministers have often been reproached by those that care not to hear of it. Note, 1. The damnation of hell will be the fearful end of all impenitent sinners. This doom coming from Christ, was more terrible than coming from all the prophets and ministers that ever were, for he is the Judge, into whose hands the keys of hell and death are put, and his saying they were damned made them so. 2. There is a way of escaping this damnation, this is implied here; some are delivered from the wrath to come. 3. Of all sinners, those who are of the spirit of the Scribes and Pharisees are least likely to escape this damnation; for repentance and faith are necessary to that escape; and how will they be brought to these, who are so conceited of themselves, and so prejudiced against Christ and his gospel as they were? How could they be healed and saved that would not bear to have their wound searched, nor the balm of Gilead applied to it? Publicans and harlots, who were sensible of their disease and applied themselves to the physician were more likely to escape the damnation of hell than those; who, though they were in the high road to it, were confident they were in the way to heaven.

34. ¶ Wherefore, behold, I sent unto you prophets, and wise men, and Scribes: and some of them ye shall kill and crucify: and some of them shall ye scourge in your synagogues, and persecute them from city to city: 35. That upon you may come all the righteous blood shed upon the earth, from the blood of righteous Abel unto the blood of Zacharias son of Barachias, whom ye slew between the temple and the altar. 36. Verily I say unto you, All these things shall come upon this generation. 37. O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, thou that killest the prophets, and stonest them which are sent unto thee, how often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not! 38. Behold your house is left unto you desolate. 39. For I say unto you, Ye shall not see me henceforth, till ye shall say, Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord.

We have left the blind leaders fallen into the ditch under Christ's sentence, into the damnation of hell; let us see what will become of the blind followers of the body of the Jewish church, and particularly Jerusalem.

First, Jesus Christ designs yet to try them with the means of grace. I sent unto you prophets, and wise men, and Scribes. The connection is strange, you are a generation of vipers, not likely to escape the damnation of hell; one would think it should follow, therefore you shall never have a prophet sent to you any more; no, therefore I will send unto you prophets, to see if you will yet at length be wrought upon, or else to leave you inexcusable, and to justify God in your ruin. It is therefore ushered in with a note of admiration, behold! Observe,

1. It is Christ that sends them, I send. By this he avows himself to be God, having power to gift and commission prophets. It is an act of kingly office; he sends them as ambassadors to treat with us about the concerns of our souls. After his resurrection he made this word good, when he said, So send I you, John xx. 21. Though now he appeared mean; yet he was intrusted with this great authority.

2. He sends them to the Jews first, I send them to you. They began at Jerusalem, and wherever they went they observed this rule, to make the first tender of gospel-grace to the Jews, Acts xiii. 46.

3. Those he sends are called prophets, wise men, and Scribes, Old Testament names for New Testament officers; to shew that the ministers sent to them now should not be inferior to the prophets of the Old Testament, to Solomon the wise or Ezra the Scribe. The extraordinary ministers which in the first ages were divinely inspired, were as the prophets commissioned immediately from heaven; the ordinary settled ministers that were then, and continue in the church still, and will do to the end of time, are as the wise men and Scribes, to guide and instruct the people in the things of God. Or we may take the apostles and evangelists for the prophets and wise men, and the pastors and teachers for the Scribes, instructed in the kingdom of heaven, Matt. xiii. 52. for the office of a Scribe was honourable till the men dishonoured it.

Secondly, He foresees and foretels the ill usage that his messengers would meet with among them. Some of them shall kill and crucify, and yet I will send them. Christ knows beforehand how ill his servants will be treated, and yet sends them and appoints them their measure of sufferings; yet he loves them never the less for his thus exposing them, for he designs to glorify himself by their sufferings, and those after them; and will balance them though not prevent them. Observe,

1. The cruelty of these persecutors; ye shall kill and crucify them. It is no less than the blood, the life-blood that they thirst after; their lust is not satisfied with any thing short of their destruction, Exod. xv. 9. They killed the two James's, crucified Simon the son of Cleophas, and scourged Peter and John; thus did the members partake of the sufferings of the head, he was killed and crucified, and so were they. Christians must expect to resist unto blood.

2. Their unwearied industry. Ye shall persecute them from city to city. As the apostles went from city to city to preach the gospel, the Jews dodged them and haunted them, and stirred up persecution against them, Acts xiv. 19—xvii. 13. They that did not believe in Judea, were more bitter enemies to the gospel than any other unbelievers, Rom. xvi. 31.

3. The pretence of religion in this; they scourged them in their synagogues, their places of worship, where they kept their ecclesiastical courts; so that they did it as a piece of service to the church; cast them out, and said, Let the Lord be glorified, Isa. lxvi. 5. John xv. 2.

Thirdly, He imputes the sin of all the righteous blood shed upon the earth, ver. 35, 36. Though God bear long with a persecuting generation, he will not bear always; and patience abused turns into the greatest wrath. The longer sinners have been heaping up treasures of wickedness, the deeper and fuller will the treasures of wrath be: and the breaking of them up will be like breaking up the fountains of the great deep.

Observe, 1. The extent of this imputation: it takes in all the righteous blood shed upon the earth, i. e. the blood shed for righteousness' sake, which has all been laid up in God's treasury, and not a drop of it lost, for it is precious, Psal. lxxii. 14. He dates the account from the blood of righteous Abel, thence this ara martyrum doth commence; he is called righteous Abel, for he obtained witness from heaven that he was righteous, God's testifying of his gifts. How early did martyrdom come into the world! the first that died, died for his religion, and being dead, he yet speaketh: His blood not only cried against Cain, but continues to cry against all that walk in the way of Cain, and hate and persecute their brother, because their works are righteous. He extends it to the blood of Zacharias the son of Barachias, ver. 36. not Zecharias the prophet, though he was the son of Barachias, Zech. i. 1. as some would have it; nor Zecharias, the father of John Baptist, as others say; but, as is most probable, Zechariah the son of Jehoiada, who was slain in the court of the Lord's house, 2 Chron. xxiv. 20, 21. His father is called Barachias, which signifies much the same with Jehoiada; and it was usual among the Jews for the same person to have two names; whom ye slew, ye of this nation, though not of this generation. This is intimated in, because the requiring of that is particularly spoken of, 2 Chron. xxiv. 22. as that of Abel's is. The Jews imagined that the captivity had sufficiently atoned for that guilt, but Christ let them know it was not yet fully accounted for but remained upon the score. And some think this is mentioned with a prophetic hint, for there was one Zecharias, the son of Baruch, whom Josephus speaks of, De Bello Judaico, liv. v. cap. 1. that was a just and good man, who was killed in the temple a little before it was destroyed by the Romans. Archbishop Tillotson thinks, Christ doth both allude to the history of the former Zecharias in Chronicles, and foretel the death of this latter in Josephus. Though the latter was not yet slain, yet before this destruction comes, it would be true that they had slain him; so that all shall be put together from first to last.

2. The effect of it: All these things shall come, all the guilt of this blood, all the punishment of it, it shall all come upon this generation. The misery and ruin that is coming upon them shall be so very great, that, though considering the evil of their own sins, it was less than even those deserved; yet comparing it with other judgments, it would seem to be a general reckoning for all the wickedness of their ancestors, especially their persecutions, to all which God declared this ruin to have special reference and relation. The destruction shall be so dreadful, as if God had once for all arraigned them for all the righteous blood shed in the world. It shall come upon this generation; which intimates, that it shall come quickly; some here shall live to see it. Note, The sorer and nearer the punishment of sin is, the louder is the call to repentance and reformation.

Fourthly, He laments the wickedness of Jerusalem, and justly upbraids them with the many kind offers he had made them, ver. 37. See with what concern he speaks of that city: O Jerusalem, Jerusalem! The repetition is emphatical, and speaks abundance of commiseration. A day or two before Christ had wept over Jerusalem, now he signed and groaned over it. Jerusalem, the vision of peace, so it signifies, must now be the seat of war and confusion: Jerusalem, that had been the joy of the whole earth, must now be a hissing, and an astonishment, and a by-word: Jerusalem, that has been a city compact together, shall now be shattered and ruined by its own intestine broils: Jerusalem, the place that God has chosen to put his name there, shall now be abandoned to the spoil and the robbers, Lam. i. 1—iv. 1. But wherefore will the Lord do all this to Jerusalem? Why? Jerusalem hath grievously sinned, Lam. i. 8.

1. She persecuted God's messengers: Thou that killest the prophets, and stonest them that are sent unto thee. This sin is especially charged upon Jerusalem, because there the Sanhedrin, or great council sat, who took cognizance of church-matters, and therefore a prophet could not perish but in Jerusalem, Luke xiii. 33. It is true, they had not now a power to put any man to death, but they killed the prophets in popular tumults, mobbed them, as Stephen, and put the Roman powers on to kill them. At Jerusalem, where the gospel was first preached, it was first persecuted, Acts viii. 1. and that place was the head-quarters of the persecutors, thence warrants were issued out to other cities, and thither the saints were brought bound, Acts ix. 2. Thou stonest them: that was a capital punishment, in use only among among the Jews. By the law false prophets and seducers were to be stoned, Deut. xiii. 10. under colour of which law they put the true prophets to death. Note, It has often been the artifice of Satan to turn that artillery against the church which was originally planted in the defence of it. Brand the true prophets as seducers; and the true professors of religion as heretics and schismatics, and then it will be easy to persecute them. There was abundance of other wickedness in Jerusalem, but this was the sin that made the loudest cry, and which God had an eye to more than any other in bringing that ruin upon them, as 2 Kings xxiv. 4. 2 Chron. xxxvi. 16. Observe, Christ speaks in the present tense; thou killest, and stonest; for all they had done, and all they would do, was present to Christ's notice.

2. She refused and rejected Christ, and gospel offers: The former was a sin without remedy; this against the remedy. Here is, (1.) The wonderful grace and favour of Jesus Christ towards them; How often would I have gathered thy children together, as a hen gathers her chickens under her wings! Thus kind and condescending are the offers of gospel grace, even to Jerusalem's children, as bad as she is, the inhabitants, the little ones not excepted. 1. The favour proposed was the gathering of them: Christ's design is to gather poor souls, gather them in from their wanderings, gather them home to himself, as the centre of unity; for to him must the gathering of the people be. He would have taken the whole body of the Jewish nation into the church, and so gathered them all (as the Jews used to speak of proselytes) under the wings of the Divine Majesty. It is here illustrated by an humble similitude, as a hen clucks her chickens together. Christ would have gathered them, (1.) With such a tenderness of affection as the hen doth, that has by instinct, a strong concern for her young ones. Christ's gathering-souls comes from his love, Jer. xxxi. 3. (2.) For the same end; the hen gathered her chickens under her wings, for protection and safety, and for warmth and comfort; poor souls have in Christ both refuge and refreshment: The chickens naturally run to the hen for shelter, when they are threatened by the birds of prey; perhaps Christ refers to that promise, Psalm xci. 4. He shall cover thee with his feathers. There is healing under Christ's wings, Mal. iv. 2. that is more than the hen has for her chickens.

2. The forwardness of Christ to confer this favour; His offers are, 1. Very free; I would have done it: Jesus Christ is truly willing to receive and save poor souls that come to him: He desires not their ruin, he delights in their repentance. 2. Very frequent; How often? Christ often came up to Jerusalem, preached and wrought miracles there; and the meaning of all this was, he would have gathered them: He keeps account how often his calls have been repeated. As often as we have heard the sounds of the gospel, as often as we have felt the strivings of the Spirit, so often Christ would have gathered us.

(3.) Their wilful refusal of this grace and favour; ye would not. How emphatically is their obstinacy opposed to Christ's mercy! I would, and ye would not. He was willing to save them, but they were not willing to be saved by him. Note, It is wholly owing to the wicked wills of sinners, that they are not gathered under the wings of the Lord Jesus: They did not like the terms upon which Christ proposed to gather them; and loved their sins, and yet trusted to their righteousness; they would not submit either to the grace of Christ or to his government, and so the bargain broke off.

Fifthly, He reads Jerusalem's doom, ver. 38, 39. Therefore behold, your house is left unto you desolate: Both the city and the temple, God's house and their own, all shall be laid waste: But it is especially meant of the temple, which they boasted of and trusted to: that holy mountain because of which they were so haughty. Note, They that will not be gathered by the love and grace of Christ, shall be consumed and scattered by his wrath: I would, and you would not. Israel would none of me, so I gave them up. Psalm lxxxi. 11, 12.

1. Their house shall be deserted: it is left unto you. Christ was now departing from the temple, and never came into it again, but by his word abandoned it to ruin. They doted on it, would have it to themselves; Christ must have no room or interest there; well, saith Christ, it is left to you, take it and make your best of it, I will never have any thing more to do with it: They had made it a house of merchandise, and a den of thieves, and so it is left to them. Not long after this, the voice was heard in the temple, "Let us depart hence." When Christ went, Ichabod, the glory departed. Their city also was left to them, destitute of God's presence and grace; he was no longer a wall of fire about them nor the glory in the midst of them.

2. It shall be desolate; it is left unto you desolate; it is left spus; "a wilderness." (1.) It was immediately, when Christ left it, in the eyes of all that understood themselves, a very dismal melancholy place. Christ's departure makes the best furnished, best replenished place a wilderness, though it be the temple, the chief place of concourse; for what comfort can there be where Christ is not? Though there may be a crowd of other contentments; yet, if Christ's special spiritual presence be withdrawn, that soul, that place, is become a wilderness, a land of darkness, as darkness itself: And this comes of men's rejecting Christ, and driving him away from them. (2.) It was, not long after, destroyed and ruined, and not one stone left upon another. The lot of Jerusalem's enemies will now become Jerusalem's lot; to be made of a city a heap, of a defended city a ruin, Isa. xxv. 2. A lofty city laid low, even to the ground, Isa. xxvi. 5. The temple, that holy and beautiful house, become desolate: When God goes out, all enemies break in.

Lastly, Here is the final farewell that Christ took of them and their temple: Ye shall not see me henceforth, till ye shall say blessed is he that cometh. This speaks,

1. His departure from them: The time was at hand, when he should leave the world to go to his Father, and be seen no more. After his resurrection, he was only seen by a few chosen witnesses, and they saw him not long, but he soon removed to the invisible world, and there will be till the time of the restitution of all things, when his welcome at his first coming will be repeated with loud acclamations; Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord. Christ will not be seen again till he comes in the clouds and every eye shall see him; Rev. i. 7. and then, even they, who, when time was, rejected and pierced him, will be glad to come in among his adorers: then every knee shall bow to him, even those that had bowed to Baal; and even the workers of iniquity will then cry, Lord, Lord, and will own, when his wrath is kindled, that blessed are they that put their trust in him. Would we have our lot in that day with those that say, Blessed is he that cometh; let us be with them now, with them that truly worship, and truly welcome Jesus Christ.

2. Their continued blindness and obstinacy: Ye shall not see me, i. e. not see me to be the Messiah, (for otherwise they did see him upon the cross) not see the light of the truth concerning me, nor the things that belong to your peace, till ye shall say, Blessed is he that cometh. They will never be convinced, till Christ's second coming convinceth them, when it will be too late to make an interest in him, and nothing will remain but a fearful looking for of judgment. Note, 1. Wilful blindness is often punished with judicial blindness: If they will not see, they shall not see. With this word he concludes his public preaching. After his resurrection which was the sign of the prophet Jonas, they should have no other sign given them till they should see the sign of the Son of man, Matt. xxiv. 30. 2. When the Lord comes with ten thousand of his saints, he will convince all, and will force acknowledgments from the proudest of his enemies of his being the Messiah, and even they shall be found liars to him: They that would not now come at his call, shall then be forced to depart with his curse. The chief priests and scribes were displeased with the children for crying hosanna to Christ, but the day is coming when proud persecutors would gladly be found in the condition of the meanest, and poorest they now trample upon: They who now reproach and ridicule the hosannas of the saints, will be of another mind shortly; it were therefore better to be of that mind now. Some make this to refer to the conversion of the Jews to the faith of Christ, then they shall see him and own him, and say, Blessed is he that cometh: but it seems rather to look further, for the complete manifestation of Christ and conviction of sinners is reserved to be the glory of the last day.

C H A P. XXIV.

Christ's preaching was mostly practical; but in this chapter we have a prophetic discourse, a prediction of things to come: but such as had a practical tendency, and was intended, not to gratify the curiosity of his disciples, but to guide their consciences and conversations, and it is therefore concluded with a practical application. The church has always had particular prophecies, besides general promises, both for direction and for encouragement to believers: But it is observable, Christ preached this prophetic sermon in the close of his ministry, as the Apocalypse is the last book of the New Testament, and the prophetic books of the Old Testament are placed last, to intimate to us, that we must be well grounded in plain truths and duties, and those must first be well digested, before we dive into those things that are dark and difficult: many run themselves into confusion by beginning their Bible at the wrong end. Now in this chapter we have, 1. The occasion of this discourse, ver. 1, 2, 3. 2. The discourse itself, in which, (1.) The prophecy of divers events, especially referring to the destruction of Jerusalem, and the utter ruin of the Jewish church and nation, which was now hastening on, and was completed about forty years after; the prefaces to that destruction, the concomitants and consequences of it; yet looking farther to Christ's coming at the end of time and the consummation of all things, of which that was a type and figure, ver. 4—31. (2.) The practical application of this prophecy, for the awakening and quickening of his disciples to prepare for these great and awful things, ver. 32—51.

1. AND JESUS went out, and departed from the temple: and his disciples came to him for to shew him the buildings of the temple. 2. And Jesus said unto them, See ye not all these things? Verily I say unto you, There shall not be left here one stone upon another, that shall not be thrown down. 3. ¶ And as he sat upon the mount of Olives, the disciples came unto him privately, saying, Tell us, when shall these things be? and what shall be the sign of thy coming, and of the end of the world?

Here is, 1. Christ's quitting the temple, and his public work there. He had said, in the close of the foregoing chapter, your house is left unto you desolate; and here he made his words good, he went out and departed from the temple. The manner of expression is observable; he not only went out of the temple, but departed from it, took his final farewell of it; but departed from it, never to return to it any more; and then immediately follows a prediction of its ruin. Note, That house is left desolate indeed, which Christ leaves, Woe unto them when I depart, Hos. ix. 12. Jer. vi. 8. It was now time to groan out their Ichabod, their glory is departed, their defence is departed. Three days after this the veil of the temple was rent; when Christ left it, all became common and unclean; but Christ departed not till they drove him away; did not reject them, till they first rejected him.

2. His private discourse with his disciples; he left the temple, but he did not leave the twelve, who were the seed of the gospel-church, which the casting off of the Jews was the enriching of: When he left the temple his disciples left it too, and came to him. Note, It is good being where Christ is, and leaving that which he leaves. They came to him to be instructed in private, when his public preaching was over; for the secret of the Lord is with them that fear him. He had spoken of the destruction of the Jewish church to the multitude in parables, which here, as usual, he explains to his disciples. Observe,

(1.) His disciples came to him to shew him the buildings of the temple. It was a stately and beautiful structure, one of the wonders of the world; no cost was spared, no art left untried to make it sumptuous: Though it came short of Solomon's temple, and its beginning was small, yet its latter end did greatly increase. It was richly furnished with gifts and offerings, to which there were continual additions made. They shewed Christ these things, and desired him to take notice of them, either,

1. As being greatly pleased with them themselves, and expecting he should be so too. They had lived mostly in Galilee, at a distance from the temple, had seldom seen it, and therefore were the more struck with admiration at it, and thought he should admire as much as they did all this glory, Gen. xxxi. 1. and would have him divert himself after his preaching, and from his sorrow, which they saw him perhaps almost overwhelmed with, with looking about him. Note, Even good men are apt to be too much enamoured with outward pomp and gaiety, and to overvalue it, even in the things of God; whereas we should be, as Christ was, dead to it, and look upon it with contempt. The temple was indeed glorious, but, 1. Its glory was sullied and stained with the sin of the priests and people; that wicked doctrine of the Pharisees, which preferred the gold before the temple that sanctified it, was enough to deface the beauty of all the ornaments of the temple. 2. Its glory was eclipsed and outdone by the presence of Christ in it, who was the glory of this latter house, Hag. ii. 9. so that the buildings had no glory, in comparison with that glory which excelled.

Or, 2. As pitying that this house should be left desolate, they shewed him the buildings, as if they would move him to reverse the sentence; Lord, let not this holy and beautiful house, where our fathers praised thee, be made a desolation. They forgot how many providences, concerning Solomon's temple, had manifested how little God cared for that outward glory glory which they had so much admired, when the people were wicked, 2 Chron. vii. 21. This house which is high, sin will bring low. Christ had lately looked upon the precious souls and wept for them, Luke xix. 41. The disciples look upon the pompous buildings, and are ready to weep for them: In this, as in other things, his thoughts are not like ours: It was weakness, and meanness of spirit, in the disciples to be so fond of fine buildings; it was a childish thing; Animo magno nihil magnum. Seneca.

(2.) Christ hereupon foretells the utter ruin and destruction that was coming upon this place, ver. 2. Note, A believing foresight of the defacing of all worldly glory, will help to take us off from admiring it and overvaluing it. The most beautiful body will be shortly worms-meat, and the most beautiful building a ruinous heap: And shall we then set our eyes upon that which soon is not? and look upon that with so much admiration, which ere long we shall certainly look upon with so much contempt? See ye not all these things? They would have Christ look upon them, and be as much in love with them as they were; he would have them look upon them and be as dead to them as he was. There is such a sight of these things as will do us good; so to see them as to see through them, and see to the end of them.

Christ, instead of reversing the decree, ratifies it; Verily I say unto you, there shall not be left one stone upon another.

1. He speaks of it as a certain ruin: I say unto you. I, that know what I say, and know how to make good what I say; take my word for it, it shall be so; I, the Amen, the true Witness, say it to you. All judgment being committed to the Son, the threatenings as well as the promises are all yea, and amen, in him, Heb. vi. 17, 18.

2. He speaks of it as an utter ruin: The temple shall not only be stripped and plundered and defaced, but utterly demolished and laid waste; not one stone shall be left upon another. Notice is taken in the building of the second temple of the laying of one stone upon another, Hag. ii. 15. and here, in the ruin, of not leaving of one stone upon another. The story tells us, that this was fulfilled in the letter; for though Titus, when he took the city, did all he could to preserve the temple, yet he could not restrain the enraged soldiers from destroying it utterly; and it was done to that degree that Turnus Rufus ploughed up the ground on which it had stood: And that scripture was fulfilled, Micah. iii. 12. Sion shall for your sake be ploughed as a field. And afterwards, in Julian the Apostate's time, when the Jews were encouraged by him to rebuild their temple in opposition to the Christian religion, what remained of the ruins were quite pulled down, to level the ground for a new foundation; but the attempt was defeated by the miraculous eruption of fire out of the ground, which destroyed the foundation they laid, and frightened away the builders. Now this prediction of the final and irreparable ruin of the temple, includes a prediction of the period of the Levitical priesthood and the ceremonial law.

(3.) The disciples not disputing either the truth or the equity of this sentence, nor doubting of the accomplishment of it, inquire more particularly of the time when it should come to pass, and the signs of its approach, ver. 3. Observe,

1. Where they made this inquiry, privately, as he sat upon the mount of Olives: probably, he was returning to Bethany, and there sat down by the way to rest him; the mount of Olives directly faced the temple, and from thence he might have a full prospect of it at some distance; there he sat as a judge upon the bench, the temple and city before him as at the bar, and thus he passed sentence on them. We read, Ezek. xi. 23. of the removing of the glory of the Lord from the temple to the mountain; so Christ, the great Shechinah, here removes to this mountain.

2. What the inquiry itself was; When shall these things be? and what shall be the sign of thy coming, and of the end of the world? Here are three questions which they put,

(1.) Some think, these questions do all point at one and the same thing, the destruction of the temple, and the period of the Jewish church and nation, which Christ had himself spoken of at his coming, chap. xvi. 28. and which would be the consummation of the age, for so it may be read, the finishing of that dispensation: Or, they thought the destruction of the temple must needs be the end of the world. If that house be laid waste, the world cannot stand; for the Rabbins used to say, that the house of the sanctuary was one of the seven things for the sake of which the world was made; and they think, if so the world will not survive the temple.

(2.) Others think their question, When shall these things be? refers to the destruction of Jerusalem, and the other two to the end of the world; or Christ's coming may refer to his setting up his gospel kingdom, and the end of the world to the day of judgment: I rather incline to think, that their question looked no further than the event Christ now foretold; but it appears by other passages, they had very confused thoughts of future events; so that perhaps it is not possible to put any certain construction upon this question of theirs.

But Christ, in his answer, though he doth not expressly rectify the mistakes of his disciples, that must be done by the pouring out of the Spirit, yet looks further than their question, and instructs his church, not only concerning the great events of that age, the destruction of Jerusalem, but concerning the second coming at the end of time, which here he insensibly slides into a discourse of, and of that, it is plain he speaks in the next chapter, which is a continuation of this sermon.

4. And Jesus answered and said unto them, Take heed that no man deceive you. 5. For many shall come in my name, saying, I am Christ; and shall deceive many. 6. And ye shall hear of wars, and rumours of wars: see that ye be not troubled: for all these things must come to pass, but the end is not yet. 7. For nation shall rise against nation, and kingdom against kingdom: and there shall be famines, and pestilences, and earthquakes in divers places. 8. All these are the beginning of sorrows. 9. Then shall they deliver you up to be afflicted, and shall kill you: and ye shall be hated of all nations for my name's sake. 10. And then shall many be offended and shall betray one another, and shall hate one another. 11. And many false prophets shall rise, and shall deceive many. 12. And because iniquity shall abound, the love of many shall wax cold. 13. But he that shall endure unto the end, the same shall be saved. 14. And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world, for a witness; unto all nations, and then shall the end come. 15. When ye therefore shall see the abomination of desolation, spoken of by Daniel the prophet, stand in the holy place, (whoso readeth, let him understand.) 16. Then let them which be in Judea, flee into the mountains. 17. Let him which is on the house-top, not come down to take any thing out of his house: 18. Neither let him which is in the field return back to take his clothes. 19. And woe unto them that are with child, and to them that give suck in those days. 20. But pray ye that your flight be not in the winter, neither on the Sabbath day: 21. For then shall be great tribulation, such as was not since the beginning of the world to this time, no, nor ever shall be. 22. And except those days should be shortened, there should no flesh be saved: but for the elect's sake those days shall be shortened. 23. Then if any man shall unto you, Lo, here is Christ, or there; believe it not. 24. For there shall arise false christs, and false prophets, and shall shew great signs and wonders, insomuch that (if it were possible) they shall deceive the very elect. 25. Behold, I have told you before. 26. Wherefore, if they shall say unto you, Behold, he is in the desert, go not forth: Behold, he is in the secret chambers, believe it not. 27. For as the lightening cometh out of the east, and shineth even unto the west: so shall also the coming of the Son of man be. 28. For wheresoever the carcass is, there will the eagles be gathered together. 29. ¶ Immediately after the tribulation of those days, shall the sun be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light, and the stars shall fall from heaven, and the powers of the heavens shall be shaken. 30. And then shall appear the sign of the Son of man in heaven: and then shall all the tribes of the earth mourn, and they shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven, with power and great glory. 31. And he shall send his angels with a great sound of a trumpet, and they shall gather together his elect from the four winds, from one end of heaven to the other.

The disciples had asked concerning the time, When these things should be? and Christ gives them no answer to that, after what number of days and years his prediction should be accomplished, for it is not for us to know the times, Acts i. 7. But they had asked, What shall be the sign? and that question he answers fully; for we are concerned to understand the signs of the times, Matt. xvi. 3. Now the prophecy primarily respects the events near at hand, the destruction of Jerusalem, the period of the Jewish church and state, the calling of the Gentiles, and the setting up of Christ's kingdom in the world; but as the prophecies of the Old Testament, which have an immediate reference to the affairs of the Jews and the revolutions of their state, yet under the figure of them do certainly look further to the gospel-church and the kingdom of the Messiah, and are so expounded in the New Testament; and such expressions are found in those predictions as are peculiar thereto and not applicable otherwise; so this prophecy, under the type of Jerusalem's destruction, looks as far forward as the general judgment; and, as is usual in prophecies, some passages are most applicable to the type, and others to the antitype; and towards the close as it points more particularly to the latter. And it is observable, that what Christ here saith to his disciples tends more to engage their caution than to satisfy their curiosity; more to prepare them for the events that should happen, than to give them a distinct idea of the events themselves. This is that good understanding of the times we should all covet, from thence to infer what Israel ought to do; and so this prophecy is of standing lasting use to the church, and will be so to the end of time; for the thing that has been, is that which shall be, Eccles. i. 5, 6, 7—9, and the series, connexion and presages of events, are much the same still that they were then; so that upon the prophecy of this chapter pointing at that event, moral prognostications may be made, and such constructions of the signs of the times, as the wise man's heart will know how to improve.

First, Christ here foretels the going forth of deceivers; he begins with a caution, Take heed that no man deceive you. They expected to be told when these things should be, to be let into that secret; but this caution is a check to their curiosity, What is that to you? mind you your duty, follow me, and be not seduced from following me. Those that are most inquisitive concerning the secret things which belong to them, are easiest imposed upon by seducers, 2 Thess. ii. 3. The disciples, when they heard that the Jews, their most inveterate enemies, should be destroyed, might be in danger of falling into security; nay, saith Christ, you are more exposed other ways; seducers are more dangerous enemies to the church than persecutors.

Three times in his discourse he mentions the false prophets appearing, which was, 1. A presage of Jerusalem's ruin. Justly were they that killed the true prophets, left to be ensnared by false prophets; and that crucified the true Messiah, left to be deceived and broken by false christs and pretended messiahs. The appearing of these was the occasion of dividing that people into parties and factions, which made their ruin the more easy and speedy: and the sin of the many that were led aside by them helped to fill the measure. 2. It was a trial to the disciples of Christ, and therefore agreeable to their state of probation, that they which are perfect may be made manifest.

Now concerning these deceivers, observe here,

1. The pretences they should come under; Satan acts most mischievously when he appears as an angel of light; the colour of the greatest good is often the cover of the greatest evil.

(1.) There should appear false prophets, ver. 11—24. the deceivers would pretend to divine inspiration, an immediate mission and a spirit of prophecy, when it was all a lie. Such there had been formerly, Jer. xxiii. 16. Ezek. xiii. 6. as was foretold, Dent. xiii. 3. Some think the seducers here pointed to were such as had been settled teachers in the church, and had gained reputation as such, but afterwards betrayed the truth they had taught and revolted to error: and from such the danger is the greater, because least suspected. One false traitor in the garrison may do more mischief than a thousand avowed enemies without.

(2.) There should appear false christs coming, in Christ's name, ver. 5. assuming to themselves the name peculiar to him, and saying, I am Christ; pseudo-christs, ver. 24. There was at that time a general expectation of the appearing of the Messias; they spoke of him as he that should come; but when he did come, the body of the nation rejected him; which those who were ambitious of making themselves a name, took advantage of and set up for christ. Josephus speaks of several such impostors between this and the destruction of Jerusalem; one Theudas, that was defeated by Cuspius Fadus; another by Felix, another by Festus. Dosethus said, he was the Christ foretold by Moses, Origin adversus Celsum. See Acts v. 36, 37—xxi. 28. Simon Magus pretended to be the great power of God, Acts viii. 10. In after-ages there have been such pretenders; one about an hundred years after Christ, that called himself Bar-cochobas, the son of a star, but proved Bar-cosba, the son of a lie. And about fifty years ago Sabbati-Levi set up for a Messiah in the Turkish empire, and was greatly caressed by the Jews; but in a short time his folly was made manifest, see Sir Paul Rycaut's History. The Popish religion doth, in effect set up a false christ; the Pope comes in Christ's name as his vicar, but invades and usurps all his offices, and so is a rival with him, and as such an enemy to him, a deceiver and an antichrist.

(5.) These false christ's and false prophets would have their agents and emissaries busy in all places to draw people in to them, ver. 23. Then when public troubles are great and threatening, and people will be catching at any thing that looks like deliverance; then Satan will take the advantage of imposing upon them; then they will say, Lo, here is a Christ, or there is one, but do not mind them: the true Christ did not strive or cry; nor was it said of him, Lo, here; or lo, there; Luke xvii. 21. therefore if any man say so concerning him, look upon it as a temptation. The hermits that place religion in a monastical life, say, he is in the desert; the priests who make the consecrated wafer to be Christ's, say, he is in the cupboards, in the secret chambers: Lo, he is in this shrine, in that image. Thus some appropriate Christ's spiritual presence to one party or persuasion, as if they had the monopoly of Christ and Christianity; and the kingdom of Christ must stand and fall, must live and die with them: Lo, he is in this church, in that council; whereas Christ is all in all, not here or there; but meets his people with a blessing, in every place where he records his name.

2. The proofs they should offer for the making good of these pretences, they shall shew great signs and wonders, ver. 24. not true miracles, those are a divine seal, and with those the doctrine of Christ stands confirmed; and therefore if any offer to draw us from that by signs and wonders, we must have recourse to that rule given of old, Deut. xiii. 1, 2, 3. If the sign or wonder come to pass, yet follow not him that would draw you to serve other gods, or believe in other christ's, for the Lord your God proveth you. But these were lying wonders wrought by Satan (God permitting him) who is the prince of the power of the air, 2 Thess. ii. 9. It is not said, they shall work miracles, but they shall shew great signs; they are but a shew; either they impose upon men's credulity by false narratives, or deceive their senses by tricks of legerdemain or arts of divination, as the magicians of Egypt by their incantments.

2. The success they should have in these attempts,

(1.) They shall deceive many, ver. 5. and again, ver. 11. Note, The devil and his instruments may prevail far in deceiving poor souls; few find the strait gate, but many are drawn into the broad way; many will be imposed upon by their signs and wonders, and many drawn in by the hopes of deliverance from their oppressions. Note, Neither miracles nor multitudes are certain signs of a true church, for all the world wanders after the beast, Rev. xiii. 3.

(2.) They shall deceive, if it were possible, the very elect, ver. 24. This speaks, 1. The strength of the delusion; it is such as many shall be carried away by (so strong shall the stream be) even those that were thought to stand fast. Men's knowledge, gifts, learning, eminent station and long profession, will not secure them; but notwithstanding these, many will be deceived; nothing but the almighty grace of God, pursuant to his eternal purpose, will be a protection. 2. The safety of the elect in the midst of this danger, which is taken for granted in that parenthesis, if it were possible, plainly implying that it is not possible, for they are kept by the power of God, that the purpose of God, according to the election, may stand. It is possible for those that have been enlightened to fall away, Heb. vi. 4, 5, 6. but not for those that were elect. If God's chosen ones should be deceived, God's choice would be defeated, which is not to be imagined, for whom he did predestinate, he called, justified and glorified, Rom. viii. 30. They were given to Christ, and of all that were given to him he will lose none, John x. 28. Grotius will have this to be meant of the great difficulty of drawing the primitive Christians from their religion, and quotes it as used proverbially by Galen, when he would express a thing very difficult and morally impossible, he saith, You may sooner draw away a Christian from Christ.

4. The repeated cautions which our Saviour gives to his disciples to stand upon their guard against them; therefore he gave them warning that they might watch, ver. 25. Behold, I have told you before. He that is told before where he will be assaulted, may save himself, as the king of Israel, did, 2 Kings vi. 9, 10. Note, Christ's warnings are designed to engage our watchfulness; and though the elect shall be preserved from delusion, yet they shall be preserved by the use of appointed means, and a due regard to the cautions of the word; we are kept through faith, faith in Christ's word, which he has told us before.

(1.) We must not believe those that say, Lo, here is Christ; or, lo he is there, ver. 23. we believe that the true Christ is at the right hand of God, and that his spiritual presence is where two or three are gathered together in his name; believe not those therefore who would draw you off from a Christ in heaven, by telling you he is here, or he is there; believe it not. Note, There is not a greater enemy to true faith than vain credulity: The simple believeth every word, and runs after every cry: μηνετο ἀνθρώπων.

(2.) We must not go forth after those that say, he is in the desert, or he is in the secret chambers, ver. 26. we must not hearken to every empiric and pretender, nor follow every one that puts up the finger to point us to a new Christ and a new gospel; go not forth, for if you do you are in danger of being taken by them; therefore keep out of harm's way, be not carried about with every wind; many a man's vain curiosity to go forth, hath led him into a fatal apostasy; your strength at such a time is to sit still, to have the heart established with grace.

Secondly, He foretells wars and great commotions among the nations, ver. 6, 7. When Christ was born, there was a universal peace in the empire, the temple of Janus was shut, but think not that Christ came to send or continue such a peace, Luke xii. 5. no, his city and his wall are to be built even in troublesome times, and even wars shall forward his work. From the time that the Jews rejected Christ, and he left their house desolate, the sword did never depart from their house, the sword of the Lord was never quiet, because he had given it a charge against an hypocritical nation and the people of his wrath, and by it brought ruin upon them.

Here is, 1. A prediction of the event of the day; you will now shortly hear of wars, and rumours of wars; when wars are, they will be heard; for every battle of the warrior is with confused noise, Isa. ix. 5. See how terrible it is, Jer. iv. 19. Thou hast heard, O my soul, the alarms of wars! even the quiet in the land, and the least inquisitive after new things, cannot but hear the rumours of war. See what comes of refusing the gospel! those that will not hear the messengers of peace, shall be made to hear the messengers of war: God has a sword ready to avenge the quarrel of his covenant, his new covenant. Nation shall rise up against nation, i.e. one part or province of the Jewish nation against another, one city against another, 2 Chron. xv. 5, 6. and in the same province and city one party or faction shall rise up against another, so, that they shall be devoured and dashed in pieces against one another, Isa. ix. 19—21.

2. A prescription of the duty of the day; see that ye be not troubled. Is that possible? to hear such sad news and not be troubled? Yet where the heart is fixed trusting in God, it is kept in peace, and is not afraid, no not of the evil tidings of wars, and rumours of wars; no not the noise of Arm, arm, Be not troubled; μὴ φοβηθῆτε, "be not put into confusion or commotion;" nor put into throws, as a woman with child by a fright; see that ye be not, &c. Note, There is need of constant care and watchfulness to keep trouble from the heart where there are wars abroad; and it is against the mind of Christ that his people should have troubled hearts even in troublous times.

We must not be troubled for two reasons:

(1.) Because we are bid to expect this; the Jews must be punished; ruin must be brought upon them: by this the justice of God and the honour of the Redeemer must be asserted; and therefore all those things must come to pass; the word is gone out of God's mouth, and it shall be accomplished in its season. Note, the consideration of the unchangeableness of the divine counsels, which govern all events, should compose and quiet our spirits whatever happens: God is but performing the thing that is appointed for us, and our inordinate trouble is an interpretative quarrel with that appointment. Let us therefore acquiesce, because these things must come to pass; not only necessitate decreti, as the product of the divine counsel, but necessitate medii, as a means in order to a further end. The old house must be taken down (though it cannot be done without noise and dust and danger) ere the new fabric can be erected: the things that are shaken (and ill shaken they were) must be removed, that the things which cannot be shaken may remain, Heb. xii. 27.

(2.) Because we are still to expect worse; the end is not yet; the end of time is not, and while time lasts we must expect trouble, and that the end of one affliction will be but the beginning of another; or the end of these troubles is not yet, there must be more judgments than one made use of to bring down the Jewish power; more vials of wrath must yet be poured out; there is but one woe past, more woes are yet to come, more arrows are yet to be spent upon them out of God's quiver; therefore be not troubled, do not give way to fear and trouble, sink not under the present burden, but rather gather in all the strength and spirit you have to encounter what is yet before you. Be not troubled to hear of wars and rumours of wars, for then what will become of you when the famines and pestilences come? If it be to us a vexation but to understand the report, Isa. xxviii. 19. what will it be to feel the stroke when it toucheth the bone and the flesh? If running with the footmen weary us, how shall we contend with horses? And if we be frightened at a little brook in our way, what shall we do in the swellings of Jordan? Jer. xii. 5.

Thirdly, He foretells other judgments more immediately sent of God, famines, pestilences and earthquakes. Famine is often the effect of war, and pestilence of famine. These were the three judgments which David was to choose one out of, and he was in a great strait, for he knew not which was the worst: but what dreadful desolations will they make when they all pour in together upon a people! Besides war, and that is enough, there shall be,

1. Famine, signified by the black horse under the third seal, Rev. vi. 5, 6. We read of a famine in Judea not long after Christ's time, which was very impoverishing, Acts xi. 28, 29. but the sorest famine was in Jerusalem during the siege. See Lam. iv. 9, 10.

2. Pestilence, signified by the pale horse, and Death upon him, and the grace at his heels, under the fourth seal, Rev. vi. 7, 8. he destroys without distinction, and in a little time lays heaps upon heaps.

3. Earthquakes in divers places, or from place to place, pursuing those that flee from them, as they did from the earthquake in the days of Uzziah, Zech. xiv. 5. Great desolations have sometimes been made by earthquakes, of late and formerly; they have been the death of many and the terror of more. In the apocalyptic visions it is observable, that earthquakes bode good and no evil to the church, Rev. vi. 12. Compare ver. 15—xi. 12, 13—19—xvi. 17, 18, 19. When God shakes terribly the earth, Isa. ii. 21. it is to shake the wicked out of it, Job xxxviii. 13. and to introduce the desire of all nations, Haggai. ii. 6, 7. But here they are spoken of as dreadful judgments, and yet but the beginning of sorrows, ωδύνας, "of travelling pains," which grow even the longer, the more quick and violent. Note, When God judgeth he will overcome; when he begins in wrath, he will make a full end, 1 Sam. iii. 12. When we look forward to the eternity of misery that is before the obstinate refusers of Christ and his gospel, we may truly say, concerning the greatest temporal judgments, they are but the beginning of sorrows: as bad as things are with them there is worse behind.

Fourthly, He foretells the persecution of his own people and ministers, and a general apostasy and decay in religion thereupon, ver. 9, 10—12, 13. Observe,

1. The cross itself foretold, ver. 9. Note, Of all future events we are as much concerned, though commonly as little desirous to know of our own sufferings as of any thing else. Then when famines and pestilences prevail, then they shall impute them to the Christians, and make that a pretence for persecuting them; Christianos ad leones. Christ had told his disciples when he first sent them out what hard things they should suffer; but they had hitherto experienced little of it, and therefore he minds them of it again, that the less they had suffered the more there was behind to be filled up, Coloss. i. 24.

(1.) They shall be afflicted with bonds and imprisonments, cruel mockings and scourgings, as blessed Paul, 2 Cor. xi. 23, 24, 25. not killed outright, but killed all the day long, in deaths often, killed so as to feel themselves die, made a spectacle to the world, 1 Cor. iv. 9—11.

(2.) They shall be killed; so cruel are the church's enemies, that nothing less will satisfy them than the blood of the saints, which they thirst after, suck and shed like water.

(3.) They shall be hated of all nations, for Christ's name sake, as he had told them before, chap. x. 22. The world was generally leavened with an enmity and malignity to Christians: the Jews though spiteful to the heathen, yet were never persecuted by them so as the Christians were; they were hated by the Jews that were dispersed among the nations, were the common but of the world's malice. What shall we think of this world, when the best men had the worst usage in it? It is the cause that makes the martyr and comforts him? it was for Christ's sake that they were thus hated! their professing and preaching his name incensed the nations so much against them, the devil finding a fatal shock thereby given to his kingdom, and that his time was likely to be short, came down, having great wrath.

2. The offence of the cross, ver. 10—12. Satan thus carries on his interest by force of arms, though Christ at the length will bring glory to himself out of the sufferings of his people and ministers. Three ill effects of persecution are here foretold: religion, sit loose to it, grow weary of it, and at length revolt from it. Note, 1. It is no new thing (though it is a strange thing) for those that have known the way of righteousness to turn aside out of it. Paul often complains of deserters, who began well, but something hindered them; they were with us, but got out from us, because never truly of us, 1 John ii. 19. we are told of it before. 2. Suffering times are shaking times, and those fall in the storm that stood in fair weather, like the stony ground hearers, Matt. xiii. 21. Many will follow Christ in the sunshine, that will shift for themselves and leave him to do so too in the cloudy dark day: They like their religion while they can have it cheap, and sleep with it in a whole skin, but if their profession cost them any thing quit it presently.

(1.) The apostasy of some: when the profession of Christianity begins to cost men dear, then shall many be offended, shall first fall out with, and then fall off from their profession: they will begin to pick quarrels with their religion.

(2.) The malignity of others: when persecution is in fashion, envy, enmity and malice are strangely diffused into the minds of men by contagion: and charity, tenderness and moderation are looked upon as singularities, which make a man like a specked bird; then they shall betray one another, i. e. those that have treacherously deserted their religion, shall hate and betray those who adhere to it, for whom they have pretended friendship: Apostates have commonly been the most bitter and violent persecutors. Note, Persecuting times are discovering times. Wolves in sheep's clothing will then throw off their disguise and appear wolves: They shall betray one another, and hate one another. The times must needs be perilous when treachery and hatred, two of the worst things that can be, because directly contrary to two of the best, truth and love, shall have the ascendant. This seems to refer to the barbarous treatment which the several contending factions among the Jews gave to one another, and justly were they who eat up God's people as they eat bread left thus to bite and devour one another till they were consumed one of another; or it may refer to the mischief done to Christ's disciples, by those that were nearest to them, as Matt. x. 21. the brother shall deliver up the brother to death.

(3.) The general declining and cooling of most, ver. 12. In seducing times, when false prophets arise, in persecuting times, when the saints are hated, expect these two things,

1. The abounding of iniquity; though the world always lies in wickedness, yet there are some times, in which it may be said, that iniquity doth in a special manner abound, as when it is more extensive than ordinary, as in the old world, when all flesh had corrupted their way; and when it is more excessive than ordinary, when violence is risen up to a rod of wickedness, Ezek. vii. 11. so that hell seems to be broke loose in blasphemies against God, and enmities to the saints.

2. The abating of love: this is the consequence of the former; because iniquity shall abound, the love of many shall wax cold; understand it in general of true serious godliness, which is all summed up in love; it is too common for professors of religion to grow cool in their profession, when the wicked are hot in their wickedness; as the church of Ephesus in bad times left her first love, Rev. ii. 2—4. or more particularly of brotherly love. When iniquity abounds, seducing iniquity, persecuting iniquity, this grace commonly waxes cold; Christians begin to be shy and suspicious one of another, affections are alienated, distances created, parties made, and so love comes to nothing. The devil is the accuser of the brethren, not only to their enemies, which makes persecuting iniquity abound, but one to another, which makes the love of many to wax cold.

This gives a melancholy prospect of the times; that there shall be such a great decay of love; but, 1. It is the love of many, not of all. In the worst of times God has his remnant that hold fast their integrity and retain their zeal, as in Elijah's days, when he thought himself left alone. 2. This love is grown cold, but not dead; it abates, but is not quite cast off. There is life in the root, which will shew itself when the winter is past. The new nature may wax cold, but shall not wax old, for then it would decay and vanish away.

3. Comfort administered in reference to this offence of the cross, for the support of the Lord's people under it, ver. 13. He that endures to the end shall be saved. 1. It is comfortable to those who wish well to the cause of Christ in general, that though many are offended, yet some shall endure to the end; when we see so many drawing back, we are ready to fear that the integrity of Christ will sink for want of supporters, and his name be left and forgotten for want of some to make profession of it; but even at this time there is a remnant according to the election of grace, Rom. xi. 5. It is spoken of the same time that this prophecy has reference to; a remnant who are not of them that draw back unto perdition, but believe and persevere to the saving of the soul; they endure to the end, to the end of their lives, to the end of their present state of probation, or to the end of these suffering trying times, to the last encounter, though they should be called to resist unto blood. 2. It is comfortable to those who do thus endure to the end, and suffer for their constancy, that they shall be saved: Perseverance wins the crown through free grace and shall wear it; they shall be saved: perhaps they may be delivered out of their troubles, and comfortably survive them in this world, but it is the eternal salvation that is here intended: They that endure to the end of their days, shall then receive the end of their faith and hope, even the salvation of their souls, 1 Pet. i. 9. Rom. ii. 7. Rev. ii. 20. The crown of glory will make amends for all; and a believing regard to that will enable us to choose rather to die at a stake with the persecuted, than to live in a palace with the persecutors.

Fifthly, He foretels the preaching of the gospel in all the world, ver. 14. This gospel shall be preached, and then the end shall come. Observe here, 1. It is called the gospel of the kingdom, because it reveals the kingdom of grace, which leads to the kingdom of glory; sets up Christ's kingdom in this world, and secures ours in the other world. 2. This gospel, sooner or later, is to be preached in all the world, to every creature, and all nations disciplined by it, for it in Christ is to be salvation to the ends of the earth; for this end the gift of tongues was the first-fruits of the Spirit, 3. The gospel is preached for a witness to all nations, i. e. a faithful declaration of the mind and will of God concerning the duty which God requires from man, and the recompence which man may expect from God. It is a record, 1 John v. 11. it is a witness for those who believe, that they shall be saved, and against those who persist in unbelief, that they shall be damned. See Mark xvi. 16. But how doth this come in here?

1. It is intimated that the gospel should be, if not heard, yet at least heard of throughout the then known world before the destruction of Jerusalem; that the Old Testament church should not be quite dissolved till the New Testament was pretty well settled, had got considerable footing, and began to make some figure: better is the face of a corrupt degenerate church than none at all. Within forty years after Christ's death the sound of the gospel was gone forth to the ends of the earth, Rom. x. 18. St. Paul fully preached the gospel from Jerusalem, and round about from Illyricum; and the other apostles were not idle: The persecuting of the saints at Jerusalem helped to disperse them, so that they went every where preaching the word, Acts viii. 1—4. And when the tidings of the Redeemer were sent over all the parts of the world, then shall come the end of the Jewish state: Thus that which they thought to prevent, by putting Christ to death, they hereby procured; all men believed on him, and the Romans came and took away their place and nation, John xi. 48. Paul speaks of the gospel being come to all the world, and preached to every creature, Col. i. 6—23.

2. It is likewise intimated that even in times of temptation, trouble and persecution, the gospel of the kingdom shall be preached and propagated, and shall force its way through the greatest opposition; though the enemies of the church grow very hot, and many of her friends very cool, yet the gospel shall be preached. And even then when many fall by the sword and by flame, and many do wickedly and are corrupted by flatteries, yet then the people that do know their God shall be strengthened to do the greatest exploits of all in instructing many; see Dan. xi. 32, 33. and see an instance, Phil. i. 12—14.

3. That which seems chiefly intended here is, that the end of the world shall be then, and not till then, when the gospel has done its work in the world. The gospel shall be preached, and that work carried on when you are dead: So that all nations first or last, shall have either the enjoyment or the refusal of the gospel; and then cometh the end, when the kingdom shall be delivered up to God, even the Father: When the mystery of God shall be finished, the mystical body completed, and the nations either converted and saved, or convicted and silenced by the gospel, and then shall the end come, which he had said before, ver. 6, 7. not yet, not till those intermediate counsels be fulfilled. The world shall stand as long as any of God's chosen ones remain uncalled, but when they are all gathered in, it will be set on fire presently.

Sixthly, He foretels more particularly the ruin that was coming upon the people of the Jews, their city, temple and nation, ver. 15, &c. Here he comes more closely to answer their question concerning the desolation of the temple, and what he said here would be of use to his disciples, both for their conduct and for their comfort, and reference to that great event; and here he describes the several steps of that calamity, such as are usual in war.

1. The Romans setting up the abomination of desolation in the holy place, ver. 15. Now, 1. Some understand by this an image or statue set up in the temple by some of the Roman governors, which was very offensive to the Jews, provoked them to rebel, and so brought the desolation upon them. The image of Jupiter Olympus which Antiochus caused to be set upon the altar of God, is called Βλᾱσυμα ἱερουσιῶν, "the abomination of desolation." the very word here used by the historian, 1 Maccab. i. 54. Since the captivity in Babylon, nothing was or could be more distasteful to the Jews than an image in the holy place, as appeared by the mighty opposition they made when Caligula offered to set up his effigies there, which had been of fatal consequence if it had not been prevented, and the matter accommodated by the conduct of Petronius; but Herod did set up an eagle over the temple-gate; and some say, the effigies of Titus was set up in the temple. 2. Others choose to expound it by the parallel place, Luke xxi. 20. when ye shall see Jerusalem encompassed with armies. Jerusalem was the holy city, Canaan the holy land, the Mount Moriah which lay about Jerusalem, for its nearness to the temple was, they thought, in a particular manner holy ground; on the country lying round about Jerusalem the Roman army was encamped, that was the abomination that made desolate. The land of an enemy is said to be the land which thou abhorrest, Isa. vii. 16. so an enemy's army to a weak but wilful people may well be called the abomination. Now this is said to be spoken of by Daniel the prophet, who spake more plainly of the Messiah and his kingdom than any of the Old Testament prophets did; he speaks of an abomination making desolate, which should be set up by Antiochus, Dan. xi. 31.—xii. 11. but this that our Saviour refers to, we have in the message that the angel brought him, Dan. xi. 27. of what should come at the end of seventy weeks, long after the former, for the overspreading of abomination, or as the margin reads it, with the abominable armies, (which comes home to this here) he shall make it desolate. Armies of idolaters may well be called abominable armies; and some think the tumults, insurrections, and abominable factions and seditions in the city and temple, may at least be taken in as a part of the abomination making desolate. Christ refers them to that prophecy of Daniel, that they might see how the ruin of their city and temple was spoken of in the Old Testament, which would both confirm his prediction and take off the odium of it. They might likewise from thence gather the time of it, soon after the cutting off of Messiah the prince; the sin that procured it, their rejecting him, and the certainty of it, it is a desolation determined. As Christ by his precepts confirmed the law, so by his predictions he confirmed the prophecies of the Old Testament, and it will be of good use to compare both together.

Reference being here had to a prophecy, which is commonly dark and obscure, Christ inserts this memorandum, If those readeth, let him understand; whose readeth the prophecy of Daniel, let him understand that it is to have its accomplishment now shortly in the desolations of Jerusalem. Note, Those that read the scriptures should labour to understand the scriptures, else their reading is to little purpose, we cannot use that which we do not understand. See John v. 30. Acts vii. 39. The angel that delivered this prophecy to Daniel, stirred him up to know and understand, Dan. ix. 25. And we must not despair of understanding even dark prophecies; the great New Testament prophecy is called a revelation, not a secret. Now things revealed belong to us, and therefore must be humbly and diligently searched into: Or, let him understand, not only the scriptures which speak of those things, but by the scriptures let him understand the times, 1 Chron. xii. 32. Let him observe and take notice, so some read it; let him be assured, that notwithstanding the vain hopes with which the deluded people feed themselves, the abominable armies will make desolate.

2. The means of preservation which thinking men should betake themselves to, ver. 16—20. Then let them which be in Judah flee. They conclude there is no other way to help themselves but by flying for the same. We may take this,

(1.) As a prediction of the ruin itself, that it should be irresistible; that it would be impossible for the stoutest hearts to make head against it or contend with it, but they must have recourse to the last shift of getting out of the way. It speaks that which Jeremiah so much insisted upon, but in vain, when Jerusalem was besieged by the Chaldeans, but it would be to no purpose to resist, but it was their wisdom to yield and capitulate; so Christ here, to shew how fruitless it would be to stand it out, bids every one make the best of his way.

(2.) We may take it as a direction to the followers of Christ what to do, not to say a confederacy with those who fought and warred against the Romans for the preservation of their city and nation, only that they might consume the wealth of both upon their lusts, (for to this very affair, the struggles of the Jews against the Roman power, some years before their final overthrow, the apostle refers, James iv. 1, 2, 3.) But let them acquiesce in the decree that was gone forth, and with all speed quit the city and country, as they would quit a falling house or a sinking ship, as Lot quitted Sodom, and Israel the tents of Dathan and Abiram; he shews them,

1. Whither they must flee, from Judea to the mountains, not the mountains round about Jerusalem, but those in the remote corners of the land, which would be some shelter to them, not so much by their strength as by their secrecy. Israel is said to be scattered upon the mountains, 2 Chron. xviii. 16. and see Heb. xi. 28. It would be safer among the lions' dens, and the mountains of the leopards, than among the seditious Jews or the enraged Romans. Note, In times of imminent peril and danger, it is not only lawful but our duty to seek our own preservation by all good and honest means; and and if God opens a door of escape, we ought to make our escape, otherwise we do not trust God but tempt him. There may be a time when even those that are in Judea, where God is known and his name is great, must flee to the mountains; and while we only go out of the way of danger, not out of the way of duty, we may trust God to provide a dwelling for his outcasts, Isa. xvi. 4, 5. In times of public calamity, when it is manifest we cannot be serviceable at home and may be safe abroad, providence calls us to make our escape: He that flees may fight again.

2. What haste they must make, ver. 17, 18. The life will be in danger, in imminent danger, the scourge will slay suddenly; and therefore he that is on the house top when the alarm comes, let him not come down into the house to look after his effects there, but go the next way down to make his escape; and so he that shall be in the field will find it his wisest course to take to his heels immediately, and not return to fetch his clothes or the wealth of his house, for two reasons, 1. Because the time which would be taken up in packing up his things would delay his flight. Note, When death is at the door delays are dangerous; it was the charge to Lot, Look not behind thee. Those that are convinced of the misery of a sinful state, and the ruin that attends them in that state, and consequently of the necessity of their fleeing to Christ, must take heed, lest after all these convictions they perish eternally by delays. 2. Because the carrying of his clothes, and other his moveables and valuables with him, would but burden him and clog his flight. The Syrians in their flight cast away their garments, 2 Kings viii. 15. At such a time we must be thankful if our lives be given us for a prey, though we can save nothing, Jer. xiv. 4, 5. for the life is more than meat, Matt. vi. 25. Those who carried off least were safest in their flight; Cantabit tacuus coram latrone viator. It was to his own disciples that Christ recommended this forgetfulness of their house and clothes, who had an habitation in heaven, treasure there, and durable clothing, which the enemy could not plunder them of; Omnia mea mecum porto, said Bias the philosopher in his flight empty-handed. He that has grace in his heart carries his all along with him when stripped of all.

Now those to whom Christ said this immediately, did not live to see this dismal day, none of all the twelve but John only; they needed not to be hid in the mountains, Christ hid them in heaven, but they left the direction to their successors in profession who pursued it, and it was of use to them; for when the Christians in Jerusalem and Judea saw the ruin coming on, they all retired to a town called Pella, on the other side Jordan, where they were safe; so that of the many thousands that perished in the destruction of Jerusalem, there was not so much as one Christian. See Euseb. Eccles. Hist. lib. iii. cap. 5. Thus the prudent man, foresees the evil, and hides himself, Prov. xxi. 3. Heb. xi. 7. This warning was not kept private; St. Matthew's gospel was published long before that destruction, so that others might have taken the advantage of it; but their perishing through their unbelief of this, was a figure of their eternal perishing through their unbelief of the warnings Christ gave concerning the wrath to come.

3. Whom it would go hard with at that time, ver. 19. Woe to them that are with child, and to them that give suck. To this same event that saying of Christ at his death refers, Luke xxiii. 29. they shall say, Blessed are the wombs that never bare, and the paps that never gave suck. Happy are they that have no children to see the murder of, but most unhappy they whose wombs are then bearing, their paps then giving suck: they of all others will be in the most melancholy circumstances. 1. To them the famine would be most grievous, when they should see the tongue of the suckling child cleaving to the roof of his mouth for thirst, and themselves by the calamity made more cruel than the sea monsters, Lam. iv. 3, 4. 2. To them the sword would be most terrible; when it is in the hand of worse than brutal rage. It is a direful midwifery, when the women with child come to be ripped up by the enraged conqueror, 2 Kings xv. 16. Hosea xiii. 15. Amos i. 13. or the children brought forth to the murderers, Hosea ix. 13. 3. To them also the flight would be most afflictive; the woman with child cannot make haste or go far; the suckling child cannot be left behind, or if it should, can a woman forget it that she should not have compassion on it? And if it be carried along it retards the mother's flight and so exposeth her life, and is in danger of Mephibosheth's fate, who was lamed by a fall he got in his nurse's flight, 2 Sam. iv. 4.

4. What they should pray against at that time, that your flight be not in the winter, or on the sabbath-day, ver. 20. Observe in general, it becomes Christ's disciples in times of public trouble and calamity to be much in prayer, that is a salve for every sore, never out of season, but in a special manner seasonable when we are distressed on every side. There is no remedy but you must flee, the decree is gone forth, so that God will not be intreated to take away his wrath, no not if Noah, Daniel and Job stood before him, Let it suffice thee, speak no more of this matter, but labour to make the best of that which is; and when you cannot in faith pray that you may not be forced to flee, yet pray that the circumstances of it may be graciously ordered, that though the cup may not pass from you, yet the extremity of the judgment may be prevented. Note, God has the disposing of the circumstances of events, which sometimes make a great alteration one way or other: and therefore in those our eyes must be ever towards him. Christ's bidding them pray for this favour, intimates his purpose of granting it to them; and in a general calamity we must not overlook a circumstantial kindness, but see and own wherein it might have been worse. Christ bids his disciples now and still to pray for themselves and their friends, that whenever they were forced to flee it might be in the most convenient time. Note, When trouble is in prospect, at a great distance, it is good to lay in a stock of prayers beforehand: they must pray, 1. That their flight, if it were the will of God, might not be in the winter, when the days are short, the weather cold, the ways dirty, and therefore travelling very uncomfortable, especially for whole families. Paul hastens Timothy to come to him before winter, 2 Tim. iv. 21. Note, Though the ease of the body is not to be mainly consulted, it ought to be duly considered: though we must take what God sends, and when he sends it, yet we may pray against bodily inconveniences, and are encouraged to do so, in that the Lord is for the body. 2. That it might not be on the sabbath-day; not on the Jewish sabbath, because travelling then would give offence to them, who were angry with the disciples for plucking the ears of corn on that day; not on the Christian sabbath, because being forced to travel on that day would be a grief to themselves. This intimates Christ's design, that a weekly sabbath should be observed in his church after the preaching of the gospel to all the world. We read not of any of the ordinances of the Jewish church, which were purely ceremonial, that Christ ever expressed any care about, because they were all to vanish, but for the sabbath he often shewed a concern. It intimates likewise that the sabbath is ordinarily to be observed as a day of rest from travel and worldly labour; but that according to his own explication of the fourth commandment, works of necessity were lawful on the sabbath-day, as this of fleeing from an enemy to save our lives; had it not been lawful, he would have said, whatever becomes of you, do not flee on the sabbath-day, but abide by it, though you die by it, for we must not commit the least sin to escape the greatest trouble; but it intimates likewise that it is very uneasy and uncomfortable to a good man, to be taken off by any work of necessity, from the solemn service and worship of God on the sabbath-day. We should pray that we may have quiet undisturbed sabbaths, and may have no other work but sabbath work to do on sabbath-days; that we may attend upon the Lord without distraction. It was desirable, that if they must flee, they must have the benefit and comfort of one sabbath more to help to bear their charges: To flee in the winter is uncomfortable to the body; but to flee on the sabbath-day is so to the soul, and the more so when it remembers former sabbaths, as Psalm xlii. 4.

3. The greatness of the troubles which should immediately ensue, ver. 21. Then shall be great tribulation; then when the measure of iniquity is full; then when the servants of God are sealed and secured, then come the troubles; nothing can be done against Sodom till Lot is entered into Zoar, and then look for fire and brimstone presently. There shall be great tribulation. Great indeed, when within the city plague and famine raged, and (worse than either) faction and division, so that every man's sword was against his fellow; then, and there it was that the hands of the pitiful women fled their own children; Without the city was the Roman army ready to swallow them up with a particular rage against them, not only as Jews, but as rebellious Jews. War was the only one of the three sore judgments that David excepted against; but that was it by which the Jews were ruined, and famine and pestilence in extremity besides. Josephus's History of the wars of the Jews, has in it more tragical passages than perhaps any history whatsoever.

1. It was a desolation unparalleled, such as was not since the beginning of the world nor ever shall be; many a city and kingdom has been made desolate, but never any with a desolation like this. Let not daring sinners think that God has done his worst, he can heat the furnace seven times and yet seven times hotter, and will when he sees greater and still greater abominations. The Romans, when they destroyed Jerusalem, were degenerated from the honour and virtue of their ancestors, which had made even their victories easily to be vanquished. And the wilfulness and obstinacy of the Jews themselves contributed much to the increase of the tribulation. No wonder the ruin of Jerusalem was an unparalleled ruin, when the sin of Jerusalem was an unparalleled sin, even their crucifying Christ. The nearer any people are to God in profession and privileges, the greater and heavier will his judgments be upon them if they abuse those privileges, and be false to that profession, Amos iii. 2.

2. It was a desolation which, if it should continue long, would be intolerable, so that no flesh should be saved, ver. 23. So triumphantly would death ride, in so many dismal shapes, and with such attendants, that there would be no escaping, but first or last all would be cut off. He that escaped one sword would fall by another, Isa. xxiv. 17, 18. The computation which Josephus makes of those that were slain in several places amount to above two millions: No flesh shall be saved; he doth not say, no soul shall be saved, for the destruction of the flesh may be for the saving of the Spirit in the day of the Lord Jesus; but temporal lives will be sacrificed so profusely, that one would think, if it last a while, it would make a full end.

But here is one word of comfort in the midst of all this terror, that for the elect's sake these days shall be shortened, not shorter than what God had determined, for that determined shall be poured upon the desolate, Dan. ix. 27. but shorter than what he might have decreed, if he had dealt with them according to their sins; shorter than what the enemy designed, who would have cut all off, if God who made use of them to serve his own purpose, had not set bounds to their wrath. Shorter than one that judged by human probabilities would have imagined. Note, 1. In times of common calamity God manifests his favour to the elect remnant; his jewels, whom he will then make up; his peculiar treasure, which he will secure when the lumber is abandoned to the spoiler. 2. The shortening of calamities is a kindness God often grants for the elect's sake. Instead of complaining that our afflictions last so long, if we consider our defects, we shall see reason to be thankful that they do not last always; when it is bad with us, it becomes us to say, Blessed be God it is no worse; blessed be God it is not hell, endless and remediless misery: It was a lamenting church that said, It is of the Lord's mercies that we are not consumed; and it is for the sake of the elect, lest their spirit should fail before them, if he should contend for ever and lest they should be tempted to put forth, if not their heart, yet their hand to iniquity.

And now comes in the repeated caution which was opened before, to take heed of being ensnared by false Christs, and false prophets, ver. 23, &c. who would promise them deliverance, as the lying prophets in Jeremiah's time, Jer. xiv. 13.—xxiii. 16, 17.—xxvii. 19.—xxviii. 2. but would delude them. Times of great trouble used to be times of great temptation, and therefore we have need to double our guard then. If they should say, Here is a Christ, or there is one, that shall deliver us from the Romans, do not heed them, it is all but talk; such a deliverance is not to be expected, and therefore not such a deliverer.

Seventhly, He foretells the sudden spreading of the gospel in the world, about the time of these great events, ver. 27, 28. As the lightning comes out of the east, so shall the coming of the Son of man be. It comes in here as an antidote against the poison of those seducers, that said, Lo, here is Christ or, Lo, he is there; compare Luke xvii. 23, 24. Harken not to them, for the coming of the Son of man will be as the lightning.

1. It seems primarily to be meant of his coming to set up his spiritual kingdom in the world; where the gospel came in its light and power, there the Son of man came, and in a way quite contrary to the fashion of the seducers and false Christs, who came creeping in the desert, or the secret chambers, 2 Tim. iii. 6. no, Christ comes not with such a spirit of fear, but of power and of love, and of a sound mind. The gospel would be remarkable for two things. (1.) Its swift spreading; it shall fly as the lightning, so shall the gospel be preached and propagated. The gospel is light, John iii. 19. and it is not in this as the lightning, that it is a sudden flash and away; for it is sun-light, and day-light: but it is as lightning in these respects:

1. It is light from heaven, as the lightning. It is God and not man that sends the lightning, and summons them that they may go, and say, Here we are, Job xxxviii. 35. it is God that directs it, Job xxxvii. 3. to man it is one of nature's miracles, above his power to effect, and one of nature's mysteries, above his skill to account for, but is from above; his lightnings lightened the world, Psal. cxvii. 4.

2. It is visible and conspicuous as the lightning. The seducers carried on their depth of Satan in the desert and secret chambers, shunning the light; heretics were called lucifuge. But truth seeks no corners, however it may sometimes be forced into them, as the woman in the wilderness, though clothed with the sun, Rev. xii. 1—6. Christ preached his gospel openly, John xviii. 20. and his apostles on the house-top, Matth. x. 27. not in a corner, Acts xxvi. 26. See Psalm cxviii. 2.

3. It was sudden and surprising to the world as the lightning: The Jews indeed had predictions of it, but to the Gentiles it was altogether unlooked for, and came upon them with an unaccountable energy, or ever they were aware: It was light out of darkness, Matt. iv. 6. 2 Cor. iv. 6. We read of the discomfiting of armies by lightning, 2 Sam. xxii. 15. Psal. cxliv. 6. The powers of darkness were dispersed and vanquished by the gospel lightning.

4. It spread far and wide, and that quickly and irresistibly, like the lightning lightning, which comes, suppose, out of the east. (Christ is said to ascend from the east, Rev. vii. 2. Isa. xli. 2.) and lightning to the west. The propagating of Christianity to so many distant countries of divers languages, by such unlikely instruments, destitute of all secular advantages, and in the face of so much opposition, and this in so short a time, was one of the greatest miracles that ever was wrought for the confirmation of it; here was Christ upon his white horse, noting speed as well as strength, and going on conquering and to conquer, Rev. vi. 2. Gospel-light rose with the sun and went with the same, so that the beams of it reached to the ends of the earth, Rom. x. 18. compare with Psal. xix. 3, 4. Though it was fought against, it could never be cooped up in a desert or in a secret place, as the seducers were; but by this, according to Gamaliel's rule, proved itself to be of God, that it could not be overthrown, Acts v. 38, 39. Christ speaks of shining into the west, because it spread most effectually into those countries which lay west from Jerusalem, as Mr. Herbert observes in his Church-militant. How soon did the gospel-lightning reach this island of Great Britain? Tertullian, who wrote in the second century, takes notice of it, Britannorum inaccessa Romanis loca, Christo tamen subdita. This was the Lord's doing.

(2.) Another thing remarkable concerning the gospel, was its strange success in those places to which it was spread; it gathered in multitudes, not by external compulsion, but as it were by such a natural instinct and inclination as brings the birds of prey to their prey, for where the carcass is, there will the eagles be gathered together, ver. 28. when Christ is preached, souls will be gathered in to him: The lifting up of Christ from the earth, i. e. the preaching of Christ crucified, which one would think should drive all men from him, will draw all men to him, John xii. 32. according to Jacob's prophecy, that to him shall the gathering of the people be, Gen. xlix. 10. See Isa. lx. 8. The eagles will be where the carcass is, for it is food for them, it is a feast for them, where the slain are there is she, Job xxxix. 30. And eagles are said to have a strange sagacity and quickness of scent to find out the prey, and they fly swiftly to it, Job ix. 26. So those whose spirits God shall stir up, will be effectually drawn to Jesus Christ to feed upon him; whither should the eagle go but to the prey? Whither should the soul go but to Jesus Christ, who has the words of eternal life? The eagles will distinguish what is proper for them from that which is not; so those who have spiritual senses exercised, will know the voice of the good shepherd from that of a thief and a robber. Saints will be where the true Christ is, not the false Christ. This is applicable to the desires that are wrought in every gracious soul after Christ, and communion with him. Where he is in his ordinances, there will his servants choose to be. A living principle of grace is a kind of natural instinct in all the saints, drawing them to Christ to live upon him.

2. Some understand these verses of the coming of the Son of man to destroy Jerusalem, Mat. iii. 1, 2—5. So much was there of an extraordinary display of divine power and justice in that event, that it is called the coming of Christ.

Now here are two things intimated concerning it,

(1.) That to the most it would be as unexpected as a flash of lightning, which indeed gives warning of the clap of thunder which follows, but is itself surprising! The seducers say, Lo, here is Christ to deliver us, or there is one, a creature of their own fancies; but ere they are aware the wrath of the Lamb, the true Christ will arrest them, and they shall not escape.

(2.) That it might be as justly expected, as that the eagles should fly to the carcass; though they put far from them the evil day, yet the desolation will come as certainly as the birds of prey to a dead carcass that lies exposed in the open field. 1. The Jews were so corrupt and degenerate, so vile and vicious, that they were become a carcass, obnoxious to the righteous judgment of God; they were also so factions and seditious, and every way provoking to the Romans, that they had made themselves obnoxious to their resentments, and an inviting prey to them. 2. The Romans were as an eagle, and the ensign of their armies was an eagle. The army of the Chaldeans is said to fly as the eagle that hasteth to eat, Hab. i. 8. The robe of the New Testament Babylon is represented by a call to the birds of prey to come and feast upon the slain, Rev. xix. 17, 18. Notorious malefactors have their eyes eaten out by the young eagles, Prov. xxv. 17. the Jews were hung up in chains, Jer. vii. 83.—xvi. 4. 3. The Jews could no more preserve themselves from the Romans, than the carcass can secure itself from the eagles. 4. The destruction shall find out the Jews wherever they are, as the eagle scents the prey. Note, When a people do by their sin make themselves carcases, putrid and loathsome, no other can be expected but that God should send eagles among them to devour and destroy them.

3. It is very applicable to the day of judgment, the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ in that day, and our gathering together unto him, 2 Thess. ii. 1. Now see here,

1. How he shall come; as the lightning. The time was now at hand when he should depart out of the world to go to the Father. Therefore those that enquire after Christ must not go into the desert or the secret places, nor listen to every one that will put up the finger to invite them to a sight of Christ; but let them look upwards, for the heavens must contain him, and thence we look for the Saviour, Phil. iii. 20; he shall come in the clouds, as the lightning doth, and every eye shall see him, as they say it is natural for all living creatures to turn their faces towards the lightning, Rev. i. 7. Christ will appear to all the world, from one end of heaven to the other; nor shall any thing be hid from the light and heat of that day.

2. How the saints shall be gathered to him as the eagles are to the carcass by natural instinct, and with the greatest swiftness and alacrity imaginable: Saints when they shall be fetched to glory will be carried as on eagles' wings, Exod. xix. 4. as on angels' wings. They shall mount up with wings like eagles, and like them renew their youth.

Eighthly, He foretels his second coming at the end of time, ver. 20—30, 31. The sun shall be darkened, &c.

1. Some think this is to be understood only of the destruction of Jerusalem and the Jewish nation; the darkening of the sun, moon, and stars, notes the eclipse of the glory of that state, its convulsions, and the general confusion that attends that desolation. Great slaughter and devastation is in the Old Testament thus set forth, as Isa. xlii. 10—xxxiv. 4. Ezek. xxxii. 7. Joel ii. 31. or by the sun, moon, and stars, may be meant the temple, Jerusalem, and the cities of Judah, which should all come to ruin: And the sign of the Son of man, ver. 30. means a signal appearance of the power and justice of the Lord Jesus in it, avenging his own blood on them that imprecated the gift of it, upon them and their children: and the gathering of the elect, ver. 31. signifies the delivering of a remnant from this sin and ruin.

2. It seems rather to refer to Christ's second coming. The destruction of the particular enemies of the church was typical of the complete conquest of them all, and therefore what will be done really at the great day may be applied metaphorically to those destructions; but still we must attend to the principal scope of them; and while we are all agreed to expect Christ's second coming, what need we put such strained constructions, as some do, upon these verses, which speak of it so clearly and so agreeably to other scriptures, especially when Christ is here answering an inquiry concerning his coming at the end of the world, which Christ was never shy of speaking of to his disciples?

The only objection against this is, that it is said to be immediately after the tribulations of those days; but as to that, 1. It is usual in the prophetic style to speak of things great and certain as near and just at hand, only to express the greatness and certainty of them. Enoch spoke of Christ's second coming as within ken, Behold the Lord cometh, Jude 14. 2. A thousand years are in God's sight but as one day, 2 Pet. iii. 8. It is there urged, with reference to this very thing, and so it might be said to be immediately after. The tribulation of those days includes not only the destruction of Jerusalem, but all the other tribulations which the church must pass through; not only its share in the calamities of the nation, but the tribulations peculiar to itself, while the nations are torn with wars and the church with schisms, delusions, and persecutions, we cannot say that the tribulation of those days is over; the whole state of the church on earth is militant, we must count upon that; but when the church's tribulation is over, her warfare accomplished, and what is behind of the sufferings of Christ ended up, then look for the end.

Now concerning Christ's second coming, it is here foretold,

1. That there shall be then a great and amazing change of the creatures, and particularly the heavenly bodies, ver. 29. The sun shall be darkened, and the moon not give her light: the moon shines with a borrowed light, and therefore if the sun from whom she borrows her light is turned into darkness, she must fall of course and become bankrupt. The stars shall fall, i. e. they shall lose their light and disappear, and be as if they were taken; and the powers of heaven shall be shaken. This intimates,

(1.) That there shall be a great change, in order to the making of all things new; then shall be the restitution of all things, when the heavens shall not be cast away as a rag, but changed as a vesture, to be worn in a better fashion, Psal. cx. 26. They shall pass away with a great noise, that there may be new heavens, 2 Pet. iii. 10—13.

(2.) It shall be a visible change, and such as all the world must take notice of, for so the darkening of the sun and moon cannot but be; and it will be an amazing change, for the heavenly bodies are not so liable to alteration as the creatures of this lower world are. The days of heaven and the continuance of the sun and moon are used to express that which is lasting and unchangeable; as Psal. lxxxix. 29.—36, 37. yet they shall thus be shaken.

(3.) It shall be an universal change: if the sun be turned into darkness, and the powers of heaven shaken, the earth cannot but be turned into a dungeon, and its foundation made to tremble: The mountains of the earth shall be shaken, when the stars of heaven drop, no marvel if the circulating mountains melt, and the perpetual hills bow; nature shall sustain a general shock and convulsion, which yet shall be no hindrance to the joy and rejoicing of heaven and earth, before the Lord, when he cometh to judge the world, Psal. xvi. 11—13. they shall as it were glory in the tribulation.

(4.) The darkening of the sun, moon, and stars, which were made to rule over the day, and over the night, (which is the first dominion we find of any creature, Gen. i. 16—18.) signifies the putting down of all rule, authority, and power; (even that which seems of the greatest antiquity and usefulness) that the kingdom may be delivered up to God, even the Father, and he may be all in all, 1 Cor. xv. 24—28. The sun was darkened at the death of Christ, for then was in one sense a judgment of this world, John xii. 31, an indication what would be a general judgment.

(5.) The glorious appearance of our Lord Jesus, who will then shew himself as the brightness of his Father's glory, and the express image of his person, will darken the sun and moon, as a candle is darkened in the beams of the noon-day sun; they will have no glory, because of the glory that excelleth 2 Cor. i. 16. Then the sun shall be ashamed, and the moon confounded, when God shall appear, Isa. xxiv. 23.

(6.) The sun and moon shall be then darkened, because there will be no more reason for them; To sinners that choose their portion in this life, all comfort will be eternally denied, as they shall not have a drop of water, so not a ray of light. Now God causeth his sun to rise on the earth, but then interdico vobis sol & luna, darkness must be their portion! And to the saints that had their treasure above, such light of joy and comfort will be given as shall supersede that of the sun and moon, and render them useless. What need we vessels of light, when we come to the fountain and Father of light? See Isa. lx. 19. Rev. xxi. 3.

2. That then shall appear the sign of the Son of man in heaven, ver. 30. i. e. the Son of man himself; as it follows here, they shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds. At his first coming he was set forth as a sign that should be spoken against, Luke ii. 34. but at his second coming, a sign that should be admired. Ezekiel was a son of man set for a sign, Ezek. xii. 6. Some make this a prediction of the harbingers and forerunners of his coming, giving notice of his approach; a light shining before him, and a fire flaming, Psalm l. 3. 1 Kings xix. 11, 12. the beams coming out of his hands, where had long been the hiding of his power, Hab. iii. 4. It is a groundless conceit of some of the ancients, that this sign of the Son of man, will be the sign of the cross displayed as a banner: It will certainly be such a clear convincing sign as will dash infidelity quite out of countenance, and fill their faces with shame who said, Where is the promise of his coming?

3. That then all the tribes of the earth shall mourn, ver. 30. See Rev. i. 7. All the kindreds of the earth shall then wail because of him; some of all the tribes and kindreds of the earth shall mourn; for the greater part will tremble at his approach, while the chosen remnant, one of a family and two of a tribe, shall lift up their heads with joy, knowing that their redemption draws nigh, and their Redeemer. Note, Sooner or later, all sinners will be mourners; penitent sinners look to Christ, and mourn after a godly sort; and they who sow in those tears, shall shortly reap in joy; impenitent sinners shall look unto them whom they have pierced, and though they laugh now, shall mourn and weep after a devilish sort, in such a horror and despair.

4. That then they shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven, with power and great glory. Note, 1. The judgment of the great day will be committed to the Son of man, both in purchase, and in recompence of his great undertaking for us as Mediator, John v. 22—27. 2. The Son of man will at that day come in the clouds of heaven. Much of the sensible intercourse between heaven and earth is by the clouds, they are betwixt them as it were the medium participationis, drawn by heaven from the earth, distilled by heaven upon the earth; Christ went to heaven in a cloud, and will in like manner come again, Acts i. 9—11. Behold, he comes in the clouds, Rev. i. 7. A cloud will be the judge's chariot, Psalm civ. 3. his robe, Rev. x. 1. his pavilion, Psalm xviii. 11. his throne, Rev. xiv. 14. When the world was destroyed by water, the judgment came in the clouds of heaven, for the windows of heaven were opened; so when it shall be destroyed by fire. Christ went before Israel in a cloud, which had a bright side and a dark side; so will the cloud have in which Christ will come at the great day, it will bring forth comfort and terror. 3. He will come with power and great glory; his first coming was in weakness and great meanness, 2 Cor. xiii. 4. but his second coming will be with power and glory, agreeable both to the dignity of his person, and to the purposes of his coming. 4. He will be seen with bodily eyes in his coming; therefore the Son of man will be the Judge, that he may be seen, that sinners thereby may be the more confounded, who shall see him as Balaam did, but not nigh, Numb. xxiv. 17. see him, but not as theirs. It added to the torment of that damned sinner that he saw Abraham afar off. Is this he whom we have slighted and rejected, and rebelled against? whom we have crucified to ourselves afresh? who might have been our Saviour but is our Judge, and will be our enemy for ever? The desire of all nations will then be their dread.

5. That he shall send his angels with a great sound of a trumpet; ver. 31. Note. 1. The angels shall be attendants upon Christ at his second coming; they are called his angels, which proves him to be God, and Lord of the angels; they shall be obliged to wait upon him. 2. These attendants shall be employed by him as officers of the court in the judgment of that day; they are now ministering spirits sent forth by him, Heb. i. 14. and will be so then. 3. Their ministration will be ushered in with a great sound of a trumpet, to awaken and alarm a sleeping world. This trumpet is spoken of, 1 Cor. xv. 52. and 1 Thess. iv. 16. At the giving of the law on mount Sinai, the sound of the trumpet was remarkably terrible, Exod. xix. 13—16. but much more will it be so in the great day. By the law trumpets were to be sounded for the calling of assemblies, Numb. x. 2. in praising God, Psalm lxxxix. 3. in offering sacrifices, Numb. x. 10. and in proclaiming the year of jubilee, Lev. xxv. 9. Very fitly therefore shall there be the sound of a trumpet at the last day, when the general assembly shall be called, when the praises of God shall be gloriously celebrated, when sinners shall fall as sacrifices to divine justice, and when the saints shall enter upon their eternal jubilee.

6. That they shall gather together his elect from the four winds. Note. At the second coming of Jesus Christ, there will be a general meeting of all the saints. 1. The elect only will be gathered, the chosen remnant, who are but few in comparison with the many that are only called. This is the foundation of the saints eternal happiness, that they are God's elect; the gifts of love to eternity, follow the thoughts of love from eternity; and the Lord knows them that are his. 2. The angels shall be employed to bring them together, as Christ's servants, and as the saints friends; we have the commission given them, Psalm i. 5. Gather my saints together unto me; nay, it will be said to them, Habetis fratres; for the elect will then be equal to the angels, Luke xx. 36. 3. They shall be gathered from one end of heaven to the other; the elect of God are scattered abroad, John xi. 52. there are some in all places, in all nations, Rev. vii. 9. but when that great gathering day comes, there shall not one of them be missing; distance of place shall keep none out of heaven, if distance of affliction do not: Undique ad celos tantundem est via. See Matt. viii. 11. Isa. xliii. 6—xlix. 12.

32. Now learn a parable of the fig tree; When his branch is yet tender, and putteth forth leaves, ye know that summer is nigh: 33. So likewise ye, when ye shall see all these things, know that it is near, even at the doors. 34. Verily I say unto you, This generation shall not pass, till all these things be fulfilled. 35. Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away. 36. ¶ But of that day and hour knoweth no man, no, not the angels of heaven, but my Father only. 37. But as the days of Noe were, so shall also the coming of the Son of man be. 38. For as in the days that were before the flood they were eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage, until the day that Noe entered into the ark. 39. And knew not until the flood came, and took them all away; so shall also the coming of the Son of man be. 40. Then shall two be in the field; the one shall be taken, and the other left. 41. Two women shall be grinding at the mill; the one shall be taken, and the other left. 42. ¶ Watch therefore: for ye know not what hour your Lord doth come. 43. But know this, that if the good man of the house had known in what watch the thief would come, he would have watched, and would not have suffered his house to be broken up. 44. Therefore be ye also ready: for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of man cometh. 45. Who then is a faithful and wise servant, whom his Lord hath made ruler over his household, to give them meat in due season? 46. Blessed is that servant, whom his lord when he cometh shall find so doing. 47. Verily I say unto you, That he shall make him ruler over all his goods. 48. But and if that evil servant shall say in his heart, My lord delayeth his coming; 49. And shall begin to smite his fellow-servants, and to eat and drink with the drunken; 50. The lord of that servant shall come in a day when he looketh not for him, and in an hour that he is not aware of. 51. And shall cut him asunder, and appoint him his portion with the hypocrites: there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth.

We have here the practical application of the foregoing prediction; in general, we must expect and prepare for the events here foretold.

First, We must expect them: Now learn a parable of the fig-tree, ver. 32, 33. Now learn what use to make of the things you have heard; so observe and understand the signs of the times, and compare them with the predictions of the word, as from thence to foresee what is at the door, that you may provide accordingly. The parable of the fig-tree is no more but this, that its budding and blossoming is a presage of summer coming; for as the stork in the heaven, so the trees of the field, know their appointed time: The beginning of the working of second causes assures of the progress and perfection of it. Thus when God begins to fulfil prophecies, he will make an end. There is a certain series in the works of providence, as there is in the works of nature: The signs of the times are compared with the prognostics of the face of the sky, Matt. xvi. 3. so here with those of the face of the earth, when that is renewed we foresee that summer is coming, not immediately, but at some distance; after the branch grows tender, we expect the March-winds, and the April-showers, before the summer comes, however we are sure it is coming; so likewise ye, when the gospel-day is broke, count upon it, that through this variety of events that I have told you of, the perfect day will come: The things revealed must shortly come to pass, Rev. i. 1. they must come in their own order, in the order appointed for them: Know that it is near. He doth not here say what, but it is that which your hearts are upon; and which you are inquisitive after and long for; the kingdom of God is near, so it is expressed in the parallel place, Luke xxi. 31. Note, when the trees of righteousness begin to bud and blossom, when God's people promise faithfulness, it is a happy presage of good times: In them God begins his work, first prepares their heart, and then he will go on with it, for, as for God, his work is perfect; and he will revive it in the midst of their years.

Now touching the events foretold here, which we are to expect,

1. Christ doth here assure us of the certainty of them, ver. 35. Heaven and earth shall pass away: they continue this day indeed according to God's ordinance, but they shall not continue for ever, Psalm cii. 25, 26. see 2 Pet. iii. 10. but my words shall not pass away. Note, The word of Christ is more sure and lasting than heaven and earth. Hath he spoken, and shall he not do it? We may build with more assurance upon the word of Christ, than we can upon the pillars of heaven, or the strong foundations of the earth; for when they shall be made to tremble and totter, and shall be no more, the word of Christ shall remain, and be in full force, power, and virtue: See 1 Pet. i. 24, 25. It is easier for heaven and earth to pass, than the word of Christ, so it is expressed, Luke xvi. 17. compare Isa. liv. 10. The accomplishment of these prophecies might seem to be delayed, and intervening events might seem to disagree with them, but do not think that therefore the word of Christ is fallen to the ground, for that shall never pass away: Though it be not fulfilled, either in the time or in the way that we have prescribed; yet in God's time, which is the best time, and in God's way, which is the best way, it shall certainly be fulfilled. Every word of Christ is very pure, and therefore very sure.

2. He here instructs us as to the time of them, ver. 34—36. And as to this, it is well observed by the learned Grotius, that there is a manifest distinction made between the τάρτα, ver. 34. and the ἔκκλι, ver. 36. these things, and that day and hour; which will help to clear this prophecy.

(1.) As to these things, the wars, seductions, and persecutions, here foretold, and especially the ruin of the Jewish nation; this generation shall not pass away, till all these things be fulfilled, ver. 34. there are those now alive that shall see Jerusalem destroyed, and the Jewish church brought to an end: And, because it might seem strange, he backs it with a solemn asseveration; Verily, I say unto you: You may take my word for it, these things are at the door. Christ often speaks of the nearness of that desolation, the more to affect people, and quicken them to prepare for it. Note, There may be greater trials and troubles yet before us, in our own day, than we are aware of: They that are old know not what sons of Anak may be reserved for their last encounters.

(2.) But as to that day and hour which will put a period to time, that knows no man, ver. 36. Therefore take heed of confounding these two, as they did, who from the words of Christ add the apostles letters, inferred that the day of Christ was at hand, 2 Thess. i. 2. No, it was not; this generation, and many another, shall pass before that day and hour comes. Note, 1. There is a certain day and hour fixed for the judgment to come, it is called the day of the Lord, because no unalterably fixed: None of God's judgments are adjourned sine die. 2. That day and hour is a great secret: Temporis exitum caliginosa nocte premit Deus. Hor. No man knows it; not the wisest by their sagacity, not the best by any divine discovery: We all know there shall be such a day; but none knows when it shall be; no, not the angels; though their capacities for knowledge are great, and their opportunities of knowing this advantageous, they dwell at the fountain-head of light, and though they are to be employed in the solemnity of that day, yet they are not told when it shall be; none knows, but my Father only: This is one of those secret things, which belong to the Lord our God. The uncertainty of the time of Christ's coming is, to those who are watchful, a savour of life unto life, and makes them more watchful; but to those who are careless, it is a savour of death unto death, and makes them more careless.

Secondly, To this end we must expect these events, that we may prepare for them; and here we have a caution against security and sensuality, which will make it a dismal day indeed to us, ver. 37—41. in which verses we have such an idea given us of the judgment-day, as may serve to startle and awaken us, that we may not sleep as others do.

It will be a surprising day and a separating day.

(1.) It will be a surprising day, as the deluge was to the old world, ver. 37, 38, 39. That which he here intends to describe, is the posture of the world at the coming of the Son of man; besides his first coming to save, he has other comings to judge: He saith, John x. 39. For judgment I am come; and for judgment he will come; for all judgment is committed to him, both that of the word, and that of the sword.

Now this here is applicable,

1. To temporal judgments, particularly that which was now hastening upon the nation and people of the Jews; though they had fair warning given them of it, and there were many prodigies that were presages of it, yet it found them secure, crying, Peace and safety, 1 Thess. v. 3. The siege was laid to Jerusalem by Titus Vespasian, when they were met at the passover in the midst of their mirth; like the men of Laish, they dwelt careless when the ruin arrested them, Judges xxi. 7—27. The destruction of Babylon, both that in the Old Testament and that in the New, comes, when she saith, I shall be a lady for ever, Isa. xlvii. 7, 8, 9. Rev. xviii. 7. Therefore the plagues come in a moment, in one day. Note, Men's unbelief shall not make God's threatenings of none effect.

2. To the eternal judgment, so the judgment of the great day is called, Heb. vi. 2. Though notice has been given of it from Enoch, yet when it comes it will be unlooked for by the most of men; the latter days, which are nearest to that day, will produce scoffers, that say, Where is the promise of his coming? 2 Pet. iii. 3, 4. Luke xviii. 8. Thus it will be when the world that now is shall be destroyed by fire, for thus it was when the old world, being overflowed by water, perished, 2 Pet. iii. 6, 7. Now Christ here shews what was the temper and posture of the old world when the deluge came,

(1.) They were sensual and worldly, they were eating and drinking, marrying, and giving in marriage. It is not said, they were killing and stealing, and whoring and swearing; these were indeed the horrid crimes of some of the worst of them; the earth was full of violence; but they were all of them except Noah, over head and ears in the world and regardless of the word of God, and this ruined them. Note, Universal neglect of religion is a more dangerous symptom to any people, than particular instances here and there of daring irreligion: Eating and drinking is necessary to the preservation of man's life; marrying and giving in marriage, is so to the preservation of mankind; but, licitis perimus omnes, these lawful things undo us unlawfully managed. 1. They were unreasonable in it, inordinate and intire in the pursuit pursuit of the delights of sense, and the gains of the world; they were wholly taken up with these things, καὶ τὰς τρυφὰς, "they were eating," they were in these things as in their element, as if they had their being for no other end but to eat and drink, Isa. lvi. 12. 2. They were unseasonable in it; they were intire and intent upon the world and the flesh, when the destruction was at the door, which they had had such fair warning of: They were eating and drinking when they should have been repenting and praying; when God, by the ministry of Noah, called to weeping and mourning, then joy and gladness: This was to them, as it was to Israel afterwards, the unpardonable sin, Isa. xxii. 12—14. especially, because it was in defiance of those warnings, by which they should have been awakened. Let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we die; if it must be a short life, let it be a merry one. The apostle James speaks of this as the general practice of the wealthy Jews before the destruction of Jerusalem, when they should have been weeping for the miseries that were coming upon them, they were living in pleasure, and nourishing their hearts, as in a day of slaughter, James v. 1—5.

(2.) They were secure and careless; they knew not until the flood came, ver. 39. Knew not? Surely they could not but know: Did not God, by Noah, give them fair warning of it? Did he not call them to repentance, while his long-suffering waited; 1 Pet. iii. 19, 20. But they knew not, z. e. they believed not; they might have known but would not know. Note, What we know of the things that belong to our everlasting peace, if we do not mix faith with it and improve it, it is all one if we did not know it at all. Their not knowing is joined with their eating and drinking, and marrying; for, 1. Therefore they were sensual because they were secure. Note, The reason why people are so eager in the pursuit and so entangled in the pleasures of this world, is because they do not know and believe, and consider the eternity which they are upon the brink of. Did we know aright that all these things must shortly be dissolved, and we must certainly survive them, we would not set our eyes and hearts upon them so much as we do. 2. Therefore they were secure because they were sensual, therefore they knew not that the flood was coming, because they were eating and drinking; were so taken up with things seen and present, that they had neither time nor heart to mind the things not seen as yet, which they were warned of. Note, As security bolsters men up in their brutal sensuality, so sensuality rocks them asleep in their carnal security. They knew not until the flood came. (1.) The flood did come, though they would not foresee it. Note, Those that will not know by faith, shall be made to know by feeling the wrath of God revealed from heaven against their ungodliness and unrighteousness. The evil day is never the further off for men's putting it far off from them. (2.) They did not know it till it was too late to prevent it, as they might have done if they had known it in time, which made it so much the more grievous. Judgments are most terrible and amazing to the secure, and these that have made a jest of them.

The application of this, concerning the old world, we have in these words, So shall the coming of the Son of man be; that is, 1. In such a posture shall he find people, eating and drinking and never expecting him. Note, Security and sensuality are likely to be the epidemical diseases of the latter days. All slumber and sleep, and at midnight the bridegroom comes. All off their watch and at their ease. 2. With such a power, and for such a purpose will he come upon them: As the flood took away the sinners of the old world irresistibly and irrecoverably; so shall secure sinners, that mocked at Christ and his coming, be taken away by the wrath of the Lamb, when the great day of his wrath comes, which will be like the coming of the deluge, a destruction which there is no fleeing from.

(2.) It will be a separating day, ver. 40, 41. Then shall two be in the field.

Two ways this may be applied,

1. We may apply it to the success of the gospel, especially at the first preaching of it, it divided the world; some believed the things which were spoken and were taken to Christ; others believed not, and were left to perish in their unbelief: Those of the same age, place, capacity, employment and condition in the world, grinding in the same mill, those of the same family, may those that were joined in the same bond of marriage, yea one effectually called, the other passed by, and left in the gall of bitterness. This is that division, that separating fire, which Christ came to send, Luke xii. 49—51. This renders free grace the more obliging, that it is distinguishing; to us, and not to the world, John xiv. 22. nay to us, and not to those in the same field, the same mill, the same house.

When ruin came upon Jerusalem, a distinction was made by divine providence, according to that which had been before made by divine grace; for all the Christians among them were saved from perishing in that calamity by the special care of heaven. If two were at work in the field together, and one of them was a Christian, he was taken into a place of shelter, and had his life given him for a prey, while the other was left to the sword of the enemy. Nay, if but two women were grinding at the mill, if one of them belonged to Christ, though but a woman, a poor woman, a servant, yet she was taken to a place of safety, and the other abandoned. Thus the meek of the earth are hid in the day of the Lord's anger, Zeph. ii. 3. either in heaven or under heaven. Note, Distinguishing preservations in times of general destruction are special tokens of God's favour, and ought so to be acknowledged. If we are safe when thousands fall on our right hand and on our left, are not consumed when others are consumed round about us, so that we are as brands plucked out of the fire, we have reason to say, It is of the Lord's mercies, and it is a great mercy.

2. We may apply it to the second coming of Jesus Christ, and the separation which will be made in that day. He had said before, ver. 31. that the elect will be gathered together. Here he tells us, in order to that, they will be distinguished from those that were nearest to them, in this world; the choice and chosen ones taken to glory, the other left to perish eternally. Those that sleep in the dust of the earth, two in the same grave, their ashes mixed, yet shall arise, one to be taken to everlasting life, the other left to shame and everlasting contempt, Dan. xii. 2. Here it is applied to them who shall be found alive. Christ will come unlooked for, will find people busy at their usual occupations, in the field, at the mill; and then, according as they are vessels of mercy prepared for glory, or vessels of wrath prepared for ruin; accordingly it will be with them; the one taken to meet the Lord and his angels in the air, to be for ever with him and them; the other left to the devil and his angels, who, when Christ has gathered out his own, will sweep up the residue. This will aggravate the condemnation of sinners, that others shall be taken from the midst of them to glory, and they left behind. And it speaks abundance of comfort to the Lord's people. (1.) Are they mean and despised in the world, as the man-servant in the field or the maid at the mill? Exod. xi. 5. yet they shall not be forgotten or overlooked in that day. The poor in the world, if rich in faith, are heirs of the kingdom. (2.) Are they dispersed in distant and unlikely places, where one would not expect to find the heirs of glory, in the field, at the mill? yet the angels will find them there, hid as Saul among the stuff, when they are to be enthroned, and fetched from thence; and well may they be said to be changed, for a very great change it will be to go to heaven from ploughing and grinding. (3.) Are they weak and unable of themselves to move heaven-ward? they shall be taken or laid hold on, as Lot was taken out of Sodom by a gracious violence, Gen. xix. 16. Those whom Christ has once apprehended and laid hold on, he will never lose his hold of. (4.) Are they intermixed with others, linked with them in the same habitations, societies, employments? let not that discourage any true Christian; God knows how to separate between the precious and the vile, the gold and dross in the same lump, the wheat and chaff in the same floor.

Thirdly, Here is a general exhortation to us to watch and be ready against that day comes, enforced by divers weighty considerations, ver. 42, &c. Observe,

First, The duty required. Watch and be ready, ver. 42—44.

1. Watch therefore, ver. 42. Note, It is the great duty and interest of all the disciples of Christ to watch, to be awake and keep awake, that they may mind their business. As a sinful state and way is compared to sleep, senseless and inactive, 1 Thess. v. 4. so a gracious state and way is compared to watching and waking. We must watch for our Lord's coming, to us in particular at our death, after which is the judgment, that is, the great day with us, the end of our time; and his coming at the end of all time to judge the world, the great day with all mankind. To watch, for this is not only to believe that our Lord will come, but to desire that he would come, to be often thinking of his coming and always looking for it as sure and near, and the time of it uncertain. To watch for Christ's coming, is to maintain that gracious temper and disposition of mind which we would be willing our Lord when he comes should find us in. To watch, is to be aware of the first notices of his approach, that we may immediately attend his motions and address ourselves to the duty of meeting him. Watching is supposed to be in the night, which is sleeping time; while we are in this world it is night with us, and we must take pains to keep ourselves awake.

2. Be ye also ready. We wake in vain if we do not get ready. It is not enough to look for such things; but we must therefore give diligence, 2 Pet. iii. 11—14. We have then our Lord to attend upon, and we must have our lamps ready trimmed; a cause to be tried, and we must have our plea ready drawn and signed by our advocate; a reckoning to make up, and we must have our accounts ready stated and balanced; there is an inheritance which we hope then to enter upon, and we must have ourselves ready, made meet to partake of it, Coloss. i. 12.

Secondly, The reasons to induce us to this watchfulness and diligent preparation for that day, which are two:

1. Because the time of our Lord's coming is very uncertain. This is the reason immediately annexed to the double exhortation, ver. 42—44. and it is illustrated by a comparison, ver. 43. Let us consider then,

1. That we know not what hour he will come, ver. 42. We know not the day of our death, Gen. xxvii. 2. We may know that we have but a little time to live, 2 Tim. iv. 6. The time of my departure is at hand, but we cannot know that we have a long time to live, for our souls are continually in our hands; nor can we know how little a time we have to live, for it may prove less than we expect. Much less do we know the time fixed for the general judgment. Concerning both we are kept at uncertainty, that we might expect that every day which may come any day; may never boast of a year's continuance, James iv. 13. No, nor of to-morrow's return as if it were ours, Prov. xxvii. 1. Luke xii. 20.

2. That he may come at such an hour as we think not, ver. 44. Though there be such uncertainty in the time, there is none in the thing itself; though we know not when he will come, we are sure he will come. His parting word was surely I come quickly: his saying I come surely, obligeth us to expect him; his saying I come quickly, obligeth us to be always expecting him; for it keeps us in a state of expectancy. In such an hour as you think not, i. e. such an hour as they which are unready and unprepared think not, ver. 50. nay, such an hour as the most lively expectants perhaps thought least likely. The bridegroom came when the wise were slumbering. It is agreeable to our present state, that we should be under the influence of a constant and general expectation, rather than that of particular presages and prognostications, which we are sometimes tempted vainly to desire and wish for.

3. The children of this world are thus wise in their generation, that when they know of danger approaching, they will keep awake and stand on their guard against it. This he shews in a particular instance, ver. 43. If the master of a house had notice that a thief would come such a night, and such a watch of the night, (for they divided the night into four watches, allowing three hours to each) and would make an attempt upon his house, though it were the midnight watch when he was most sleepy; yet he would be up and listen to every noise in every corner, and be ready to give him a warm reception. Now, though we know not just when our Lord will come, yet knowing that he will come, and come quickly, and without any other warning than what he hath given in his word, it concerns us to watch always. Note, (1.) We have every one of us a house to keep that lies exposed, in which all we are worth is laid up, and that house is our own souls, which we must keep with all diligence. (2.) The day of the Lord comes by surprise, as a thief in the night. Christ chooseth to come when he is least expected, that the triumphs of his enemies may be turned into the greater shame, and the fears of his friends into the greater joy. (3.) If Christ when he comes finds us asleep and unready, one house will be broken up, and we shall lose all we are worth, not as by a thief unjustly, but as by a just and legal process; death and judgment will seize upon all we have, to our irreparable damage and utter undoing. Therefore be ready, be ye also ready; as ready at all times as the good man of the house would be at the hour when he expected the thief: we must put on the armour of God, that we may not only stand in that evil day, but as more than conquerors may divide the spoil.

2. Because the issue of our Lord's coming will be very happy and comfortable to those that shall be found ready, but very dismal and dreadful to those that are not, ver. 45, &c. This is represented by the different state of good and bad servants, when their lord comes to reckon with them. It is likely to be well or ill with us to eternity, according as we are found ready or unready at that day; for Christ comes to render to every man according to his works. Now this parable with which the chapter closeth, is applicable to all Christians who are in profession and obligation God's servants, but it seems especially intended as a warning to ministers, for the servant spoken of is a steward. Now observe what Christ here saith,

First, Concerning the good servant; he shews here what he is, a ruler of the household; what being so, he should be faithful and wise; and what if he be so, he shall be eternally blessed. Here are good instructions and encouragements to the ministers of Christ.

1. Here is his place and office. He is one whom his lord has made ruler over his household, to give them meat in due season. Note, (1.) The church of Christ is his household or family, standing in relation to him as the father and master of it. It is the household of God, a family named from Christ, Eph. iii. 15. (2.) Gospel ministers are appointed rulers in this household; not as princes, Christ has entered a caveat against that, but as stewards or other subordinate officers; not as lords, but as guides; not to proscribe new ways, but to shew and lead in the ways that Christ has appointed: that is the signification of the ἐκκλησία, which we translate, "having rule over you," Heb. xiii. 17. and as overseers, not to cut out new work, but to direct in and quicken to the work which Christ has ordered; that is the signification of ἐπίσκοποι, bishops. They are rulers by Christ; what power they have is derived from him, and none may take it from them or abridge it to them; he is one whom the Lord has made ruler, Christ has the making of ministers. They are rulers under Christ, and act in subordination to him, and rulers for Christ, for the advancement of his kingdom. (3.) The work of gospel-ministers is to give to Christ's household their meat in due season; as stewards, and therefore they have the keys delivered to them. (1.) Their work is to give, not to take to themselves, Ezek. xxxiv. 8. but to give to the family what the master has bought, to dispense what Christ has purchased. And to ministers it is said, that it is more blessed to give than to receive, Acts xx. 35. (2.) It is to give meat, not to give law, that is Christ's work; but to deliver those doctrines to the church, which if duly digested will be nourishment to souls. They must give, not the poison of false doctrines, not the stones of hard and unprofitable doctrines, but the meat that is sound and wholesome. (3.) It must be given in due season, ἐν καιρῷ, "while there is time for it," when eternity comes it will be too late; we must work while it is day; or in time, i. e. whenever any opportunity offers itself; or in the stated time, time after time, according as the duty of every day requires.

2. His right discharge of this office. The good servant, if thus preferred, will be a good steward; for,

1. He is faithful; stewards must be so, 1 Cor. iv. 2. He that is trusted must be trusty; and the greater the trust is, the more is expected from them. It is a great good thing that is committed to ministers, 2 Tim. ii. 2. and they must be faithful as Moses was, Heb. iii. 2. Christ counts those ministers, and those only, that are faithful, 1 Tim. i. 12. A faithful minister of Jesus Christ is one that sincerely designs his Master's honour, not his own; delivers the whole counsel of God, not his own fancies and conceits; follows Christ's institutions and adheres to them; regards the meanest, reproves the greatest, and doth not respect persons.

2. He is wise to understand his duty and the proper season of it; and in guiding of the flock there is need, not only of the integrity of the heart, but the skilfulness of the hands. Honesty may suffice for a good servant, but wisdom is necessary to a good steward; for it is profitable to direct.

3. He is doing, so doing as his office requires. The ministry is a good work, and they whose office it is have always something to do; they must not indulge themselves in ease, nor leave the work undone, or carelessly turn it off to others, but be doing, and doing to the purpose. So doing, giving meat to the household, minding their own business, and not meddling with that which is foreign. So doing as the Master has appointed, as the office imports, and as the case of the family doth require; not talking, but doing. It was the motto Mr. Perkins used, Minister verbi us, not only age, but hoc age.

4. He is found doing when his Master comes; which intimates, (1.) Constancy at his work. At what hour soever his Master comes, he is found busy at the work of the day. Ministers should not leave empty spaces in their time, lest their Lord should come in one of those empty spaces. As with a good God the end of one mercy is the beginning of another, so with a good man, a good minister, the end of one duty is the beginning of another. When Calvin was persuaded to remit his ministerial labours, he answered with some resentment, "What, would you have my Master find me idle?" (2.) Perseverance in his work till his Lord doth come. Hold fast till then, Rev. ii. 25. Continue in these things, 1 Tim. iv. 16.—vi. 14. endure to the end.

5. The recompence of reward intended him for this, in three things.

1. He shall be taken notice of. This is intimated in these words, Who then is that faithful and wise servant? Which supposes that there are but few who answer this character; such an interpreter is one of a thousand, such a faithful and wise steward. Those who thus distinguish themselves now by humility, diligence and sincerity in their work, Christ will in the great day both dignify and distinguish by the glory conferred on them.

2. He shall be blessed; Blessed is that servant; and Christ's pronouncing him blessed makes him so. All the dead that die in the Lord are blessed, Rev. xiv. 13. But there is a peculiar blessedness secured to them that approve themselves faithful stewards; and are found so doing. Next to the honour of those who die in the field of battle suffering for Christ as the martyrs, is the honour of those that die in the field of service, ploughing and sowing and reaping for Christ.

3. He shall be preferred, ver. 47. He shall make him ruler over all his goods. Alluding to the way of great men, who, if the stewards of their house carry themselves well in that place, commonly prefer them to be the managers of their estates; thus Joseph was preferred in the house of Potiphar, Gen. xxxix. 4-6. But the greatest honour which the kindest master ever did to his most tried servants in this world, is nothing to that weight of glory which the Lord Jesus will confer upon his faithful watchful servants in the world to come. What is here said by a similitude, is the same that is said more plainly, John xii. 26. Him will my Father honour. And God's servants, when thus preferred, shall be perfect in wisdom and holiness to bear that weight of glory, so that there is no danger from these servants when they reign.

Secondly, Concerning the evil servants. Here we have,

1. His description given, ver. 48, 49. where we have the wretch drawn in his own colours. The vilest of creatures is a wicked man, the vilest of men is a wicked Christian, and the vilest of them a wicked minister, Corruptio optimi est pessima. Wickedness in the prophets of Jerusalem is a horrible thing indeed, Jer. xxiii. 14. Here is,

(1.) The cause of his wickedness, and that is a practical disbelief of Christ's second coming. He hath said in his heart, My lord delays his coming, and therefore he begins to think he will never come, but has quite forsaken his church. Observe, (1.) Christ knows what they say in their hearts, who with their lips, cry, Lord, Lord, as this servant here. (2.) The delay of Christ's coming, though it is a gracious instance of his patience, yet it is greatly abused by wicked people, whose hearts are thereby hardened in their wicked ways. When Christ's coming is looked upon as doubtful, or a thing at a mighty distance, the hearts of men are fully set to do evil, Eccles. viii. 11. See Ezek. xii. 27. They that walk by sense are ready to say of the unseen Jesus, as the people did of Moses when he tarried in the mount upon their errand, we wot not what is become of him, and therefore up make us gods, the world as a god, the belly a god, any thing but he that should be.

(2.) The particulars of his wickedness, and they are sins of the first magnitude; he is a slave to his passions and his appetites.

1. Persecution is here charged upon him. He begins to smite his fellow-servants. Note, (1.) Even the stewards of the house are to look upon all the servants of the house as their fellow-servants, and therefore are forbidden to lord it over them. If the angel call himself fellow-servant to John, Rev. xix. 10. no marvel if John have learned to call himself brother to the Christians of the churches of Asia, Rev. i. 9. (2.) It is no new thing to see evil servants smiting their fellow-servants; both private Christians and faithful ministers. He smites them, either because they reprove him, or because they will not bow and do him reverence; will not say as he saith, and do as he doth, against their consciences. Smites them with the tongue, as they smote the prophet, Jer. xviii. 18. And if he get power into his hand, or can press those into his service that have, as the ten horns upon the head of the beast, it goes further; Pashur the priest smote Jeremiah and put him in the stocks, Jer. xx. 1. The revolvers have many times been of all others most profound to make slaughter, Illos. v. 2. The steward, when he smites his fellow-servants, doth it under colour of his master's authority and in his name; he saith, Let the Lord be glorified, Isa. lxvi. 5. But he shall know that he could not put a greater affront upon his master.

2. Profaneness and immorality. He begins to eat and drink with the drunken. (1.) He associates with the worst of sinners, hath fellowship with them, is intimate with them; he walks in their counsel, stands in their way, sits in their seat, and sings their songs. The drunken are the merry jovial company, and those he is for, and thus he hardens them in their wickedness. (2.) He doth like them, eats and drinks and is drunken; so it is in Luke. And this is an inlet to all manner of sin. Drunkenness is a leading wickedness; they who are slaves to that, are never master of themselves in any thing else. The persecutors of God's people have commonly been the most vicious and immoral men. Persecuting consciences, whatever the pretensions be, are commonly the most profligate and debauched consciences. What will not they be drunk with, that will be drunk with the blood of the saints? Well, this is the description of a wicked minister, who yet may have the common gifts of learning and utterance above others; and, as hath been said of some, may preach so well in the pulpit, that it is pity he should ever come out, and yet live so ill out of the pulpit, that it is pity he should ever come in.

2. His doom read, ver. 50, 51. The coat and character of wicked ministers will not only not secure them from condemnation, but will greatly aggravate it. They can plead no exemption from Christ's jurisdiction, whatever they pretend to in the church of Rome from that of the civil magistrate; no benefit of clergy at Christ's bar. Observe,

1. The surprisingness of his doom, ver. 50. The Lord of that servant will come. Note, (1.) Our putting off the thoughts of Christ's coming will not put off his coming. Whatever fancy he deludes himself with, his Lord will come. The unbelief of man shall not make that great promise or threatening (call it which you will) of none effect. (2.) The coming of Christ will be a most dreadful surprise to secure and careless sinners, especially to wicked ministers. He shall come in a day when he looketh not for him. Note, Those that have slighted the warnings of the word, and silenced those of their own consciences concerning the judgment to come, cannot expect any other warnings; those will be adjudged sufficient legal notices given, whether taken or no; and no unfairness can be charged on Christ if he come suddenly, without giving other notice. Behold, he has told us before.

2. The severity of his doom, ver. 51. It is not more severe than righteous, but it is a doom that carries in it utter ruin, wrapt up in two dreadful words, death and damnation.

1. Death, his Lord shall cut him asunder, ἀποκομίσῃ αὐτόν, "he shall cut him off from the land of the living," from the congregation of the righteous, shall separate him unto evil; which is the definition of a curse, Deut. xxix. 21. shall cut him down, as a tree that cumbereth the ground; perhaps it alludes to the sentence often used in the law, That soul shall be cut off from his people; noting an utter extirpation. Death cut off a good man, as a choice imp is cut off to be grafted in a better stock; but it cuts off a wicked man as a withered branch is cut off for the fire. Cuts him off from this world which he set his heart so much upon, and was as it were one with. Or, as we read it, shall cut him asunder, i. e. part body and soul, send the body to the grave to be a prey for worms, and the soul to hell to be a prey for devils, and there is the sinner cut asunder. The soul and body of a godly man at death part fairly, the one cheerfully lifted up to God, the other left to the dust; but the soul and body of a wicked man at death are cut asunder, torn asunder, for to them death is the king of terrors, Job xviii. 14. The wicked servant divided himself between God and the world, Christ and Belial, his profession and his lusts, justly therefore will he thus be divided.

2. Damnation. He shall appoint him his portion with the hypocrites, and a miserable portion it will be, for there shall be weeping. Note, (1.) There is a place and state of everlasting misery in the other world, where there is nothing but weeping and gnashing of teeth; which speaks the soul's tribulation and anguish under God's indignation and wrath. (2.) The divine sentence will appoint this place and state as the portion of those who by their own sin were fitted for it. Even he of whom he said, that he was his Lord, shall thus appoint him his portion. He that is now the Saviour, will then be the Judge, and the everlasting state of the children of men will be as he appoints. They that choose the world for their portion in this life, will have hell for their portion in the other life. This is the portion of a wicked man from God, Job xx. 29. (3.) Hell is the proper place of hypocrites. This wicked servant has his portion with the hypocrites. They are, as it were, the freeholders, other sinners are but as inmates with them, and have but a portion of their misery. When Christ would express the most severe punishment in the other world, he calls it the portion of hypocrites. If there be any place in hell hotter than other, as it is like there is, it will be the allotment of those that have the form, but hate the power of godliness. (4.) Wicked ministers will have their portion in the other world with the worst of sinners, even with the hypocrites, and justly, for they are the worst of hypocrites. The blood of Christ, which they have by their profaneness trampled under their feet, and the blood of souls, which they have by their unfaithfulness brought upon their heads, will bear hard upon them in that place of torment. Son, remember, will be as cutting a word to a minister if he perish as to any other sinner whatsoever. Let them therefore who preach to others fear, lest they themselves should be cast-aways.

C H A P. XXV.

This chapter continues and concludes our Saviour's discourse, which began in the foregoing chapter, concerning his second coming and the end of the world. This was his farewell-sermon of caution, as that, John xiv. xv. and xvi. was of comfort to his disciples; and they had need of both in a world of so much temptation and trouble as this is. The application of that discourse was, Watch, therefore, and be also ready: Now in prosecution of these serious awakening cautions, in this chapter we have three parables, the scope of which is the same, to quicken us all with the utmost care and diligence to get ready for Christ's second coming, which in all his farewells to his church mention was made of, as that before he died, John xiv. 2. At his ascension, Acts i. 11. And at the shutting up of the canon of the scripture, Rev. xxii. 20. Now it concerns us to prepare for Christ's coming; (1.) That we may then be ready to attend upon him? and this is shewed in the parable of the ten virgins, ver. 1—13. (2.) That we may then be ready to give up our account to him, and this is shewed in the parable of the three servants, ver. 14—30. (3.) That we may then be ready to receive from him our final sentence, and that it may be to eternal life; and this is shewed in a more plain description of the process of the last judgment, ver. 31—46. These are things of awful consideration because of everlasting concern to every one of us.

1. THEN shall the kingdom of heaven be likened unto ten virgins, which took their lamps, and went forth to meet the bridegroom. 2. And five of them were wise, and five were foolish. 3. They that were foolish took their lamps, and took no oil with them: 4. But the wise took oil in their vessels with their lamps. 5. While the bridegroom tarried, they all slumbered and slept. 6. And at midnight there was a cry made, Behold, the bridegroom cometh; go ye out to meet him. 7. Then all those virgins arose, and trimmed their lamps. 8. And the foolish said unto the wise, Give us of your oil; for our lamps are gone out, 9. But the wise answered, saying, Not so; lest there be not enough for us and you: but go ye rather to them that sell, and buy for yourselves. 10. And while they went to buy, the bridegroom came: and they that were ready went in with him to the marriage: and the door was shut. 11. Afterward came also the other virgins, saying, Lord, Lord, open to us. 12. But he answered and said, Verily I say unto you, I know you not. 13. Watch therefore, for ye know neither the day nor the hour wherein the Son of man cometh.

Here, 1. That in general which is to be illustrated, is the kingdom of heaven, the state of things under the gospel, the external kingdom of Christ, and the administration and success of it. Some of Christ's parables had shewed us what it is like now in the present reception of it, as Matt. xiii. This tells us what it shall be like when the mystery of God shall be finished, and that kingdom delivered up to the Father. The administration of Christ's government towards the ready and the unready in the great day, may be illustrated by this similitude; or the kingdom is put for the subjects of the kingdom: The professors of Christianity shall then be likened to those ten virgins, and shall be thus distinguished.

2. That by which it is illustrated is a marriage solemnity: it was a custom sometimes used among the Jews on that occasion, that the bridegroom came, attended with his friends late in the night to the house of the bride, where she expected him attended with her bride-maids; who, upon notice given of the bridegroom's approach, were to go out with lamps in their hands, to light him into the house with ceremony and formality, in order to the celebrating of the nuptials with great mirth. And some think, on these occasions they had usually ten virgins; for the Jews never held a synagogue, circumcised, kept the passover, or contracted marriage, but ten persons at least were present. Boaz, when he married Ruth, had ten witnesses, Ruth iv. 2. Now in this parable,

First, The bridegroom is our Lord Jesus Christ; he is so represented in the xlvth Psalm, Solomon's Song, and often in the New Testament. It speaks his singular and superlative love to, and his faithful and inviolable covenant with his spouse the church. Believers are now betrothed to Christ, Hosea ii. 19. But the solemnizing of the marriage is reserved for the great day, when the bride, the Lamb's wife, will have made herself completely ready, Rev. xix. 7—9.

Secondly, The virgins are the professors of religion, members of the church, but here represented as her companions, Psalm xlv. 14. as elsewhere her children, Isa. liv. 1. her ornaments, Isa. xlix. 18. They that follow the Lamb are said to be virgins, Rev. xiv. 4. noting their beauty and purity; they are to be presented as chaste virgins to Christ, 2 Cor. xi. 2. The bridegroom is a king, so these virgins are maids of honour, virgins without number, Cant. vi. 8. yet here are said to be ten.

Thirdly, The office of these virgins is to meet the bridegroom, which is as much their happiness as their duty. They come to wait upon the bridegroom when he appears, and in the mean time to wait for him. See here the nature of Christianity. As Christians we profess ourselves to be, (1.) Attendants upon Christ to do him honour, as the glorious bridegroom, to be to him for a name and a praise, especially then when he shall come to be glorified in his saints. We must follow him as honorary servants do their masters, John xii. 26. Hold up the name; and hold forth the praise of the exalted Jesus, this is our business. (2.) Expectants of Christ's, and of his second coming. As Christians we profess, not only to believe and look for, but to love and long for the appearing of Christ, and to act in our whole conversation with a regard to it. The second coming of Christ is the centre in which all the lines of our religion meet, and to which the whole of the divine life hath a constant reference and tendency.

Fourthly, their chief concern is to have lights in their hands, when they attend the bridegroom, thus to do him honour and do him service. Note, Christians are children of light. The gospel is light, and they who receive it, must not only be enlightened by it themselves, but must shine as lights, must hold it forth, Phil. ii. 15, 16. This in general.

Now concerning these ten virgins, we may observe,

First, Their different character, with the proof and evidence of it.

1. Their character was, that five were wise, and five foolish, ver. 2. and wisdom excelleth folly, as far as light excelleth darkness, so saith Solomon, a competent judge, Eccles. ii. 13. Note, Those of the same profession and denomination among men, may yet be of characters vastly different in the sight of God. Sincere Christians are the wise virgins, and hypocrites the foolish ones, as in another parable, they are represented by wise and foolish builders. Note, Those are wise or foolish, indeed that are so in the affairs of their souls. True religion is true wisdom; sin is folly, but especially the sin of hypocrisy, for those are the greatest fools that are wise in their own conceit, and those the worst of sinners, that feign themselves just men. Some observe from the equal number of the wise and foolish, what a charitable decorum (it is Archbishop Tillotson's expression) Christ observes, as if he would hope that the number of true believers were near equal to that of hypocrites, or at least teach us to hope the best concerning those that profess religion, and to think of them with a bias to the charitable side. Though in judging of ourselves we ought to remember, that the gate is strait, and few find it; yet in judging of others we ought to remember, that the Captain of our salvation brings many sons to glory.

2. The evidence of this character is in the very thing which they were to attend to; by that they are judged of.

1. It was the folly of the foolish virgins that they took their lamps, and took no oil with them, ver. 3. They had just oil enough to make their lamps burn for the present, to make a shew with, as if they intended to meet the bridegroom; but no cruse or bottle of oil with them for a recruit if the bridegroom tarried; thus hypocrites.

(1.) They have no principle within. They have a lamp of profession in their hands, but have not in their hearts that stock of sound knowledge, rooted dispositions and settled resolutions, which are necessary to carry them through the services and trials of the present state. They act under the influence of external inducements but are void of spiritual life, like a tradesman, that sets up without a stock, or the seed on the stony ground that wanted root.

(2.) They have no prospect of nor make provision for what is to come. They took lamps for a present shew, but not oil for after-use. This incompetency is the ruin of many professors; all their care is to recommend themselves to their neighbours, whom they now converse with, not to approve themselves to Christ, whom they must hereafter appear before: as if any thing will serve, provided it will but serve for the present. Tell them of things not seen as yet, and you are like Lot to his sons in law, as one that mocked. They do not provide for hereafter as the ant doth, nor lay up for the time to come, 2 Cor. iv. 18.

2. It was the wisdom of the wise virgins, that they took oil in their vessels with their lamps, ver. 4. They had a good principle within which would maintain and keep up their profession. (1.) The heart is the vessel, which it is our wisdom to get furnished; for out of a good treasure there good things must be brought; but if that root be rottenness, the blossom will be dust. (2.) Grace is the oil which we must have in this vessel; in the tabernacle there was constant provision made of oil for the light, Exod. xxxv. 24. Our light must shine before men in good works; but this cannot be, or not long, unless there be a fixed active principle in their heart, of faith in Christ and love to God and our brethren; from which we must act in every thing we do in religion with an eye to what is before us. They that took oil in their vessels, did it upon supposition that perhaps the bridegroom might tarry. Note, In looking forwards it is good to prepare for the worst, to lay in for a long siege. But remember that this oil which keeps the lamps burning, is derived to the candlestick from Jesus Christ, the great and good olive, by the golden pipes of the ordinances, as it is represented in that vision, Zeck. iv. 2, 3—12. which is explained, John i. 16. Of his fulness have all we received, grace for grace.

Secondly, Their common fault, during the bridegroom's delay, they all slumbered and slept, ver. 25. Observe here,

1. The bridegroom tarried, i. e. he did not come out so soon as they expected. What we look for as certain, we are apt to think is very near; many in the apostles times imagined that the day of the Lord was at hand, but it is not so; Christ as to us seems to tarry, and yet really doth not, Hab. ii. 3. There is good reason for the bridegroom's tarrying, there are many intermediate counsels and purposes to be accomplished, the elect must all be called in, God's patience must be manifested, and the saints patience tried, the harvest of the earth must be ripened, and so must the harvest of heaven too. But though Christ tarry past our time, he will not tarry past the due time.

2. While he tarried, those that waited for him grew careless, and forgot what they were attending, they all slumbered and slept; as if they had given over looking for him; for when the Son of man comes he will not find faith, Luke xviii. 8. Those that inferred the suddenness of it from its certainty, that what answered not their expectation, were apt from the delay to infer its uncertainty. The wise virgins slumbered, and the foolish slept, so some distinguish it; however, they were both faulty. The wise virgins kept their lamps burning, but did not keep themselves awake. Note, Too many good Christians, when they have been long in profession, grow remiss in their preparations for Christ's second coming; they intermit their care, abate their zeal, their graces are not lively, nor their works sound perfect before God; and though all love be not lost, yet the first love is left. If it was hard to the disciples to watch with Christ one hour, much more to watch with him an age. I sleep, saith the spouse, but my heart wakes. Observe, first, they slumbered and then they slept. Note, One degree of carelessness and remissness makes way for another. Those that allow themselves in slumbering, will scarce keep themselves from sleeping; therefore dread the beginning of spiritual decays, venienti occurrere morbo. The ancients generally understood the virgins slumbering and sleeping of their dying; they all died, wise and foolish, (Psalm xlix. 20.) before judgment-day. So Ferus, Antequam veniat sponsus, omnibus obdormiscendum est, hoc est, moriendum, and so Calvin. But I think it is rather to be taken as we have opened it.

Thirdly, The surprising summons given them to attend the bridegroom, ver. 6. At midnight there was a cry made, Behold, the bridegroom cometh. Note, (1.) Though Christ tarry long he will come at last; though he seem slow he is sure. In his first coming he was thought long by those that waited for the consolation of Israel, yet in the fulness of time he came; so his second coming, though long deferred, is not forgotten; his enemies shall find to their cost that forbearance is no acquittance; and his friends shall find to their comfort, that the vision is for an appointed time, and at the end it shall speak, and not lie. The year of the redeemed is fixed, and it will come. (2.) Christ's coming will be at our midnight, when we least look for him, and are most disposed to take our rest. His coming for the relief and comfort of his people, often is when the good intended seems to be at the greatest distance: and his coming to reckon with his enemies, is when they put the evil day farthest from them. It was at midnight that the first-born of Egypt were destroyed, and Israel delivered, Exod. xii. 22. Death often comes when it is least expected: the soul required this night, Luke xii. 20. Christ will come when he pleaseth, to shew his sovereignty, and will not let us know when, to teach us our duty. (3.) When Christ comes, we must go forth to meet him. As Christians we are bound to attend all the motions of the Lord Jesus, and meet him in all his out-goings. When he comes to us at death, we must go forth out of the body, out of the world, to meet him with affections and workings of soul suitable to the discoveries we then expect him to make of himself. Go ye forth to meet him, is a call to those who are habitually prepared, to be actually ready. (4.) The notice given of Christ's approach and the call to meet him, will be awakening. There was a cry made. His first coming was not with any observation at all, nor did they say, Lo, here is Christ, or lo, he is there; he was in the world, and the world knew him not; but his second coming will be with the observation of all the world, every eye shall see him. There will be a cry from heaven, for he shall descend with a shout, Arise ye dead, and come to judgment; and a cry from the earth too, a cry to rocks and mountains, Rev. vi. 16.

Fourthly, The address they all made to answer this summons, ver. 7.

O o

is the signification of the ἐπισκοπῶν, which we translate, "having rule over you." Heb. xiii. 17. and is overscers, not to cut out new work, but to direct in and quaken to the work which Christ has ordered; that is the signification of ἐκκλ. ἐκκλ. ἐπισκοπῶν. They are rulers by Christ; what power they have is derived from him, and none may take it from them or abridge it to them; he is one whom the Lord has made ruler, Christ has the making of ministers. They are rulers under Christ, and act in subordination to him and rulers for Christ, for the advancement of his kingdom. (1.) The work of gospel-ministers is to give to Christ's household their meat in due season; as stewards, and therefore they have the keys delivered to them. (1.) Their work is to give, not to take to themselves, Ezek. xxxiv. 8, but to give to the family what the master has bought, to dispose what Christ has purchased. And to ministers it is said, that it is more blessed to give than to receive, Acts xx. 35. (2.) It is to give meat, not to give law, that is Christ's work; but to deliver those doctrines to the church, which if duly digested will be nourishment to souls. They must give, not the poison of false doctrines, not the stones of hard and unprofitable doctrines, but the meat that is sound and wholesome. (3.) It must be given in due season, or else "while there is time for it," when eternity comes it will be too late; we must work while it is day; or in time, i. e. whenever any opportunity offers itself; or in the stated time, time after time, according as the duty of every day requires.

2. His right discharge of this office. The good servant, if thus preferred, will be a good steward; for,

1. He is faithful; stewards must be so, 1 Cor. iv. 2. He that is trusted must be trusty; and the greater the trust is, the more is expected from them. It is a great good thing that is committed to ministers, 2 Tim. ii. 2. and they must be faithful as Moses was, Heb. iii. 2. Christ counts those ministers, and those only, that are faithful, 1 Tim. i. 12. A faithful minister of Jesus Christ is one that sincerely designs his Master's honour, not his own; delivers the whole counsel of God, not his own fancies and conceits; follows Christ's institutions and adheres to them; regards the meanest, reproves the greatest, and doth not respect persons.

2. He is wise to understand his duty and the proper season of it ; and in guiding of the flock there is need, not only of the integrity of the heart, but the skilfulness of the hands. Honesty may suffice for a good servant, but wisdom is necessary to a good steward ; for it is profitable to direct.

3. He is doing, so doing as his office requires. The ministry is a good work, and they whose office it is have always something to do; they must not indulge themselves in ease, nor leave the work undone, or carelessly turn it off to others, but be doing, and doing to the purpose. So doing, giving meat to the household, minding their own business, and not meddling with that which is foreign. So doing as the Master has appointed, as the office imports, and as the case of the family doth require: not talking, but doing. It was the motto Mr. Perkins used, Minister verbi as, not only are, but hoc are.

4. He is found doing when his Master comes; which intimates, (1.) Constancy at his work. At what hour soever his Master comes, he is found busy at the work of the day. Ministers should not leave empty spaces in their time, lest their Lord should come in one of those empty spaces. As with a good God the end of one mercy is the beginning of another, so with a good man, a good minister, the end of one duty is the beginning of another. When Calvin was persuaded to remit his ministerial labours, he answered with some resentment, "What, would you have my Master find me idle?" (2.) Perseverance in his work till his Lord shall come. Hold fast till then, Rev. ii. 25. Continue in these things, 1 Tim. iv. 16.—vi. 14. endure to the end.

3. The recommence of reward intended him for this, in three things.

1. He shall be taken notice of. This is intimated in these words, Who then is that faithful and wise servant? Which supposes that there are but few who answer this character; such an interpreter is one of a thousand, such a faithful and wise servant. Those who thus distinguish themselves now by humility, diligence and sincerity in their work, Christ will in the great day both dignify and distinguish by the glory conferred on them.

2. He shall be blessed; Blessed is that servant; and Christ's pronouncing him blessed makes him so. All the dead that die in the Lord are blessed, Rev. xiv. 13. But there is a peculiar blessedness secured to them that approve themselves faithful stewards; and are found so doing. Next to the honour of those who die in the field of battle suffering for Christ as the martyrs, is the honour of those that die in the field of service, ploughing and sowing and reaping for Christ.

3. He shall be preferred, ver. 47. He shall make him ruler over all his goods. Alluding to the way of great men, who, if the stewards of their house carry themselves well in that place, commonly prefer them to be the managers of their estates; thus Joseph was preferred in the house of Potiphar, Gen. xxxix. 4-6. But the greatest honour which the kindest master ever did to his most tried servants in this world, is nothing to that weight of glory which the Lord Jesus will confer upon his faithful watchful servants in the world to come. What is here said by a similitude, is the same that is said more plainly, John xii. 26. Hea will my Father honour. And God's servants, when they are preferred, shall be perfect in wisdom and holiness to bear the weight of glory, so that there is no danger from these servants when they are preferred.

Secondly, $\lim_{n \rightarrow \infty} \alpha_n = 0$ in the critical situation. Here we have,

1. His description of a very her. Gen. 19 where we have the wretch drawn in his own coat, &c. The vilest of creatures is a wicked man, the vilest of men is a wicked Christian, and the vilest of them a wicked minister, Corruptio optima peior est. What he says of the prophets of Jerusalem is a tertium quid in a tertium Gen. 18. 11 is,

(1.) The name of his word does, and that is a practical disbelief of Christ's second coming. He hath said in his heart, My lord delays his coming, and he saith to himself, He will not come, never come, but has quite forsaken his Christ. On every day, Christ knows what they say in their hearts, who with their lips say, Lord, Lord, to this servant here. (2.) The delay of Christ's coming, though it is a patient endurance of his patience, yet it is greatly abused by wicked people, who submit to thereby hardened in their wicked ways. When Christ's coming is looked upon as doubtful, or a thing at a mighty distance, the hearts of men are fully set to do evil. Eccles. viii. 11. See Eccles. xii. 27. They that walk by sense are ready to say of the messenger, He is the messenger of God, when he is carried in the mount upon their errand, He is not what he saith, nor he is, and therefore up make us gods, the word is a god, the fury a god, any thing but he that should be.

(2.) The particulars of his wickedness, and they are sins of the first magnitude: he is a slave to his passions and his appetites.

1. Persecution is here charged upon him. It begins to smite his fellow-servants. Note, (1.) Even the stewards of the house are to look upon all the servants of the house as their fellow-servants, and therefore are to holden to lord it over them. If the angel call himself fellow-servant to John, Rev. xix. 10, no marvel if John have learned to call himself brother to the Christians of the churches of Asia, Rev. i. 9. (2.) It is no new thing to see relieve the afflicted, and to reward the good, support the Christian and nationalist ministers. He has a word of counsel for the virtuous and the wise, they will not bow and stoop to the leveling of a wicked society, and, as as he doth, against them he saith, Sanctus Dominus Deus Sabaoth, they smote the prophet, Jas. v. 18. And if he get power into his hand, he can press those into his service, and have, as he doth horns upon the head of the beast, it goes further, Ps. xlii. 13, cast stone down and put him in the stocks, Jas. ix. 1. The devil's have many times been of all others most professed to have strength, Job. x. 2. The steward, when he smites his fellow-servants, doth it under colour of his master's authority and in his name; he saith, Ecce the Lord be with me, 1st Cor. v. 5. But he shall know that he could not put a greater dignity on his master.

2. Profaneness and immorality. He begins to eat and drink with the drunken. (1.) He associates with the worst of sinners, holds fellowship with them, is intimate with them; he walks in their counsel, stands in their way, sits in their seat, and sings their songs. The drunken are the merry jovial company, and there he is for, and thus he harden them in their wickedness. (2.) He doth like them, eats and drinks and is drunken; so it is in Luke. And this is an inlet to all manner of sin. Drunkenness is a leading wickedness; they who are slaves to that, are never master of themselves in any thing else. The persecutors of God's people have commonly been the most vicious and immoral men. Persecuting consciences, whatever the pretensions be, are commonly the most profligate and debauched consciences. What will not they be drunk with, that will be drunk with the blood of the saints? Well, this is the description of a wicked minister, who yet may have the common gifts of learning and utterance above others; and, as hath been said of some, may preach so well in the pulpit, that it is pity he should ever come out, and yet live so ill out of the pulpit, that it is pity he should ever come in.

2. His doom read, ver. 50, 51. The coat and character of wicked ministers will not only not secure them from condemnation, but will greatly aggravate it. They can plead no exemption from Christ's judgment, whatever they pretend to in the church of Rome from that of the civil magistrate; no benefit of clergy at Christ's bar. Observe,

1. The surpriseness of his doom. ver. 50. The Lord of that day and that hour cometh. Note, (1.) Our putting off the thoughts of Christ's coming will not put off his coming. Whatever fancy he deceives himself with, his Lord will come. The unbeliever of man shall not make that great promise or threatening (call it which you will) of none effect. (2.) The coming of Christ will be a most dreadful surprise to secure and careless sinners, especially to wicked ministers. He shall come in a day when he looketh not for him. Note, Those that have slighted the warnings of the word, and silenced those of their own consciences concerning the judgment to come, cannot expect any other warnings; those will be accounted sufficient legal notices given, whether taken or no; and no unawares can be charged on Christ if he come suddenly, without giving other notice. Behold, he has told us before.

2. The severity of his doom, ver 51. It is not more severe than righteous, but it is a doom that carries in it utter ruin, wrapt up in two dreadful words, death and damnation.

1. Death, his Lord shall cut him asunder, לִכְרֹתוֹ מִתּוֹכָם, "he shall cut him off from the land of the living," from the congregation of the righteous, shall separate him unto evil; which is the definition of a curse, Deut. xxix. 21. shall cut him down, as a tree that cumbereth the ground; perhaps it alludes to the sentence often used in the law, That soul shall be cut off from his people; noting an utter extirpation. Death cut off a good man, as a choice nap is cut off to be grafted in a better stock; but it cuts off a wicked man as a withered branch is cut off for the fire. Cuts him off from this world which he set his heart so much upon, and was as it were one with. Or, as we read it, shall cut him asunder, i. e. part body and soul, send the body to the grave to be a prey for worms, and the soul to hell to be a prey for devils, and there is the sinner cut asunder. The soul and body of a godly man at death part fairly, the one cheerfully lifted up to God, the other left to the dust; but the soul and body of a wicked man at death are cut asunder, torn asunder, for to them death is the king of terrors, Job xiii. 14. The wicked servant divided himself between God and the world, Christ and Belial, his profession and his facts, justly therefore will he thus be divided.

2. Damnation. He shall appoint him his portion with the hypocrites, and a miserable portion it will be, for there shall be weeping. Note, (1.) There is a place and state of everlasting misery in the other world, where there is nothing but weeping and gnashing of teeth; which speaks the soul's tribulation and anguish under God's indignation and wrath. (2.) The divine sentence will appoint this place and state as the portion of those who by their own sin were fitted for it. Even he of whom he said, that he was his Lord, shall thus appoint him his portion. He that is now the Saviour, will then be the Judge, and the everlasting state of the children of men will be as he appoints. They that choose the world for their portion in this life, will have hell for their portion in the other life. This is the portion of a wicked man from God, Job xvi. 29. (3.) Hell is the proper place of hypocrites. This wicked servant has his portion with the hypocrites. They are, as it were, the freeholders, other sinners are but as inmates with them, and have but a portion of their misery. When Christ would express the most severe punishment in the other world, he calls it the portion of hypocrites. If there be any place in hell hotter than other, as it is like there is, it will be the allotment of those that have the form, but hate the power of godliness. (4.) Wicked ministers will have their portion in the other world with the worst of sinners, even with the hypocrites, and justly, for they are the worst of hypocrites. The blood of Christ, which they have by their profaneness trampled under their feet, and the blood of souls, which they have by their uncharitableness brought upon their heads, will bear hard upon them in that place of torment. See, remember, will be as cutting a word to a minister if he perish as to any other sinner whatsoever. Let them therefore who preach to others fear, lest they themselves should be cast away.

C H A P. XXV.

This chapter continues and concludes our Saviour's discourse, which began in the foregoing chapter, concerning his second coming and the end of the world. This was his farewell-sermon of caution, as that, John xiv. xv. and xvi. was of comfort to his disciples; and they had need of both in a world of so much temptation and trouble as this is. The application of that discourse was, Watch, therefore, and be also ready: Now in prosecution of these serious awakening cautions, in this chapter we have three parables, the scope of which is the same, to quicken us all with the utmost care and diligence to get ready for Christ's second coming, which in all his farewells to his church mention was made of, as that before he died, John xiv. 2. At his ascension, Acts i. 11. And at the shutting up of the canon of the scripture, Rev. xxii. 20. Now it concerns us to prepare for Christ's coming; (1.) That we may then be ready to attend upon him? and this is shewed in the parable of the ten virgins, ver. 1—13. (2.) That we may then be ready to give up our account to him, and this is shewed in the parable of the three servants, ver. 14—30. (3.) That we may then be ready to receive from him our final sentence, and that it may be to eternal life; and this is shewed in a more plain description of the process of the last judgment, ver. 31—46. These are things of awful consideration because of everlasting concern to every one of us.

1. THEN shall the kingdom of heaven be likened unto ten virgins, which took their lamps, and went forth to meet the bridegroom. 2. And five of them were wise, and five were foolish. 3. They that were foolish took their lamps, and took no oil with them: 4. But the wise took oil in their vessels with their lamps. 5. While the bridegroom tarried, they all slumbered and slept. 6. And at midnight there was a cry made, Behold, the bridegroom cometh; go ye out to meet him. 7. Then all those virgins arose, and trimmed their lamps. 8. And the foolish said unto the wise, Give us of your oil; for our lamps are gone out, 9. But the wise answered, saying, Not so; lest there be not enough for us and you: but go ye rather to them that sell, and buy for yourselves. 10. And while they went to buy, the bridegroom came: and they that were ready went in with him to the marriage: and the door was shut. 11. Afterward came also the other virgins, saying, Lord, Lord, open to us. 12. But he answered and said, Verily I say unto you, I know you not. 13. Watch therefore, for ye know neither the day nor the hour wherein the Son of man cometh.

Here, 1. That in general which is to be illustrated, is the kingdom of heaven, the state of things under the gospel, the external kingdom of Christ, and the administration and success of it. Some of Christ's parables had shewed us what it is like now in the present reception of it, as Matt. xiii. This tells us what it shall be like when the mystery of God shall be finished, and that kingdom delivered up to the Father. The administration of Christ's government towards the ready and the unready in the great day, may be illustrated by this similitude; or the kingdom is put for the subjects of the kingdom: The professors of Christianity shall then be likened to those ten virgins, and shall be thus distinguished.

2. That by which it is illustrated is a marriage solemnity: it was a custom sometimes used among the Jews on that occasion, that the bridegroom came, attended with his friends late in the night to the house of the bride, where she expected him attended with her bride-maids; who, upon notice given of the bridegroom's approach, were to go out with lamps in their hands, to light him into the house with ceremony and formality, in order to the celebrating of the nuptials with great mirth. And some think, on these occasions they had usually ten virgins; for the Jews never held a synagogue, circumcised, kept the passover, or contracted marriage, but ten persons at least were present. Boaz, when he married Ruth, had ten witnesses, Ruth iv. 2. Now in this parable,

First, The bridegroom is our Lord Jesus Christ; he is so represented in the xlvth Psalm, Solomon's Song, and often in the New Testament. It speaks his singular and superlative love to, and his faithful and inviolable covenant with his spouse the church. Believers are now betrothed to Christ, Hosea ii. 19. But the solemnizing of the marriage is reserved for the great day, when the bride, the Lamb's wife, will have made herself completely ready, Rev. xix. 7—9.

Secondly, The virgins are the professors of religion, members of the church, but here represented as her companions, Psalm xlv. 14. as elsewhere her children, Isa. liv. 1. her ornaments, Isa. xlix. 18. They that follow the Lamb are said to be virgins, Rev. xiv. 4. noting their beauty and purity; they are to be presented as chaste virgins to Christ, 2 Cor. xi. 2. The bridegroom is a king, so these virgins are maids of honour, virgins without number, Cant. vi. 8. yet here are said to be ten.

Thirdly, The office of these virgins is to meet the bridegroom, which is as much their happiness as their duty. They come to wait upon the bridegroom when he appears, and in the mean time to wait for him. See here the nature of Christianity. As Christians we profess ourselves to be, (1.) Attendants upon Christ to do him honour, as the glorious bridegroom, to be to him for a name and a praise, especially then when he shall come to be glorified in his saints. We must follow him as honorary servants do their masters, John xii. 26. Hold up the name, and hold forth the praise of the exalted Jesus, this is our business. (2.) Expectants of Christ's, and of his second coming. As Christians we profess, not only to believe and look for, but to love and long for the appearing of Christ, and to act in our whole conversation with a regard to it. The second coming of Christ is the centre in which all the lines of our religion meet, and to which the whole of the divine life hath a constant reference and tendency.

Fourthly, their chief concern is to have lights in their hands, when they attend the bridegroom, thus to do him honour and do him service. Note, Christians are children of light. The gospel is light, and they who receive it, must not only be enlightened by it themselves, but must shine as lights, must hold it forth, Phil. ii. 15, 16. This in general.

Now concerning these ten virgins, we may observe,

First, Their different character, with the proof and evidence of it.

1. Their character was, that five were wise, and five foolish, ver. 2. and wisdom excelleth folly, as far as light excelleth darkness, so saith Solomon, a competent judge, Eccles. ii. 13. Note, Those of the same profession and denomination among men, may yet be of characters vastly different in the sight of God. Sincere Christians are the wise virgins, and hypocrites the foolish ones, as in another parable, they are represented by wise and foolish builders. Note, Those are wise or foolish indeed that are so in the affairs of their souls. True religion is true wisdom; sin is folly, but especially the sin of hypocrisy, for those are the greatest fools that are wise in their own conceit, and those the worst of sinners, that feign themselves just men. Some observe from the equal number of the wise and foolish, what a charitable decorum (it is Archbishop Tillotson's expression) Christ observes, as if he would hope that the number of true believers were near equal to that of hypocrites, or at least teach us to hope the best concerning those that profess religion, and to think of them with a bias to the charitable side. Though in judging of ourselves we ought to remember, that the gate is strait, and few find it; yet in judging of others we ought to remember, that the Captain of our salvation brings many sons to glory.

2. The evidence of this character was in the very thing which they were to attend to; by that they are judged of.

1. It was the folly of the foolish virgins that they took their lamps, and took no oil with them, ver. 3. They had just oil enough to make their lamps burn for the present, to make a shew with, as if they intended to meet the bridegroom; but no cruse or bottle of oil with them for a recruit if the bridegroom tarried; thus hypocrites.

(1.) They have no principle within. They have a lamp of profession in their hands, but have not in their hearts that stock of sound knowledge, rooted dispositions and settled resolutions, which are necessary to carry them through the services and trials of the present state. They act under the influence of external inducements but are void of spiritual life, like a tradesman, that sets up without a stock, or the seed on the stony ground that wanted root.

(2.) They have no prospect of nor make provision for what is to come. They took lamps for a present shew, but not oil for after-use. This incontinency is the ruin of many professors; all their care is to recommend themselves to their neighbours, whom they now converse with, not to approve themselves to Christ, whom they must hereafter appear before: as if any thing will serve, provided it will but serve for the present. Tell them of things not seen as yet, and you are like Lot to his sons in law, as one that mocked. They do not provide for hereafter as the ant doth, nor lay up for the time to come, 2 Cor. iv. 18.

2. It was the wisdom of the wise virgins, that they took oil in their vessels with their lamps, ver. 4. They had a good principle within which would maintain and keep up their profession. (1.) The heart is the vessel, which it is our wisdom to get furnished; for out of a good treasure there good things must be brought; but if that root be rottenness, the blossom will be dust. (2.) Grace is the oil which we must have in this vessel; in the tabernacle there was constant provision made of oil for the light, Exod. xxxv. 24. Our light must shine before men in good works; but this cannot be, or not long, unless there be a fixed active principle in their heart, of faith in Christ and love to God and our brethren; from which we must act in every thing we do in religion with an eye to what is before us. They that took oil in their vessels, did it upon supposition that perhaps the bridegroom might tarry. Note, In looking forwards it is good to prepare for the worst, to lay in for a long siege. But remember that this oil which keeps the lamps burning, is derived to the candlestick from Jesus Christ, the great and good olive, by the golden pipes of the ordinances, as it is represented in that vision, Zeck. iv. 2, 3—12. which is explained, John i. 16. Of his fulness have all we received, grace for grace.

Secondly, Their common fault, during the bridegroom's delay, they all slumbered and slept, ver. 25. Observe here,

1. The bridegroom tarried, i.e. he did not come out so soon as they expected. What we look for as certain, we are apt to think is very near; many in the apostles times imagined that the day of the Lord was at hand, but it is not so; Christ as to us seems to tarry, and yet really doth not, Hab. ii. 3. There is good reason for the bridegroom's tarrying, there are many intermediate counsels and purposes to be accomplished, the elect must all be called in, God's patience must be manifested, and the saints patience tried, the harvest of the earth must be ripened, and so must the harvest of heaven too. But though Christ tarry past our time, he will not tarry past the due time.

2. While he tarried, those that waited for him grew careless, and forgot what they were attending, they all slumbered and slept; as if they had given over looking for him; for when the Son of man comes he will not find faith, Luke xviii. 8. Those that inferred the suddenness of it from its certainty, that what answered not their expectation, were apt from the delay to infer its uncertainty. The wise virgins slumbered, and the foolish slept, so some distinguish it; however, they were both faulty. The wise virgins kept their lamps burning, but did not keep themselves awake. Note, Too many good Christians, when they have been long in profession, grow remiss in their preparations for Christ's second coming; they intermit their care, abate their zeal, their graces are not lively, nor their works found perfect before God; and though all love be not lost, yet the first love is left. If it was hard to the disciples to watch with Christ one hour, much more to watch with him an age. I sleep, saith the spouse, but my heart wakes. Observe, first, they slumbered and then they slept. Note, One degree of carelessness and remissness makes way for another. Those that allow themselves in slumbering, will scarce keep themselves from sleeping; therefore dread the beginning of spiritual decays, venienti occurrere morbo. The ancients generally understood the virgins slumbering and sleeping of their dying; they all died, wise and foolish, (Psalm xlix. 20.) before judgment-day. So Ferus, Antequam veniat sponsus, omnibus obdormiscendum est, hoc est, moriendum, and so Calvin. But I think it is rather to be taken as we have opened it.

Thirdly, The surprising summons given them to attend the bridegroom, ver. 6. At midnight there was a cry made, Behold, the bridegroom cometh. Note, (1.) Though Christ tarry long he will come at last; though he seem slow he is sure. In his first coming he was thought long by those that waited for the consolation of Israel, yet in the fulness of time he came; so his second coming, though long deferred, is not forgotten; his enemies shall find to their cost that forbearance is no acquittance; and his friends shall find to their comfort, that the vision is for an appointed time, and at the end it shall speak, and not lie. The year of the redeemed is fixed, and it will come. (2.) Christ's coming will be at our midnight, when we least look for him, and are most disposed to take our rest. His coming for the relief and comfort of his people, often is when the good intended seems to be at the greatest distance: and his coming to reckon with his enemies, is when they put the evil day farthest from them. It was at midnight that the first-born of Egypt were destroyed, and Israel delivered, Erod. xii. 22. Death often comes when it is least expected: the soul required this night, Luke xii. 20. Christ will come when he pleaseth, to shew his sovereignty, and will not let us know when, to teach us our duty. (3.) When Christ comes, we must go forth to meet him. As Christians we are bound to attend all the motions of the Lord Jesus, and meet him in all his out-goings. When he comes to us at death, we must go forth out of the body, out of the world, to meet him with affections and workings of soul suitable to the discoveries we then expect him to make of himself. Go ye forth to meet him, is a call to those who are habitually prepared, to be actually ready. (4.) The notice given of Christ's approach and the call to meet him, will be awakening. There was a cry made. His first coming was not with any observation at all, nor did they say, Lo, here is Christ, or lo, he is there; he was in the world, and the world knew him not; but his second coming will be with the observation of all the world, every eye shall see him. There will be a cry from heaven, for he shall descend with a shout, Arise ye dead, and come to judgment; and a cry from the earth too, a cry to rocks and mountains, Rev. vi. 16.

Fourthly, The address they all made to answer this summons, ver. 7.

O o

They

They all arose and trimmed their lamps, snuffed them and supplied them with oil, and went about with all expedition to put themselves in a posture to receive the bridegroom. Now, (1.) This in the wise virgins speaks an actual preparation for the bridegroom's coming. Note, Those that are best prepared for death, yet upon the immediate arrests of it have work to do to get themselves actually ready that they may be found in peace, 2 Pet. iii. 14. found doing, Matt. xxiv. 46. and not found naked, 2 Cor. v. 3. It will be a day of search and enquiry, and it concerns us to think how we shall then be found. When we see the day approaching, we must address ourselves to our dying work with all seriousness, renewing our repentance for sin, our consent to the covenant, our farewells to the world, and our souls must be carried out towards God in suitable breathings. (2.) In the foolish virgins, it notes a vain confidence and conceit of the goodness of their state, and their readiness for another world. Note, Even counterfeit graces will serve a man to make a shew of when he comes to die, as well as they have done all his life long; the hypocrite's hopes blaze when they are just expiring, like a lightening before death.

Fifthly, The distress which the foolish virgins were in for want of oil, ver. 8, 9. This speaks, (1.) The apprehensions which some hypocrites have of the misery of their state, even on this side death, when God opens their eyes to see their folly, and themselves perishing with a lie in their right hand. Or, however, (2.) The real misery of their state on the other side death, and in the judgment; how far their fair but false profession of religion will be from availing them any thing in the great day; see what comes of it.

1. Their lamps are gone out. The lamps of hypocrites often go out in this life; when they who have begun in the spirit end in the flesh, and the hypocrisy breaks out in an open apostasy, 2 Pet. ii. 20. The profession withers, and the credit of it is lost; the hopes fail, and the comfort of them is gone; how often is the candle of the wicked thus put out? Job xxi. 17. Yet many an hypocrite keeps up his credit and the comfort of his profession, such as it is, to the last; but what is it when God takes away his soul? Job xxvii. 8. If his candle be not put out before him, it is put out with him, Job xviii. 5, 6. He shall lie down in sorrow, Isa. i. 11. The gains of an hypocritical profession will not follow a man to judgment, Matt. vii. 23, 24. The lamps are gone out when the hypocrite's hope proves like the spider's web, Job viii. 11, &c. and like the giving up of the ghost, Job xi. 20. like Absalom's raven that left him in the oak.

2. They wanted oil to supply them when they were going out. Note, Those that take up short of true grace, will certainly find the want of it one time or other. An external profession well humoured may carry a man far, but it will not carry him through, may light him along this world, but the damps of the valley of the shadow of death will put it out.

3. They would gladly be beholden to the wise virgins for a supply out of their vessels. Give us of your oil. Note, The day is coming when carnal hypocrites would gladly be found in the condition of true Christians. Those who now hate the strictness of religion, will at death and judgment wish for the solid comforts of it. Those who care not to live the life, yet would die the death of the righteous. The day is coming when those who now look with contempt upon humble contrite saints, would gladly get an interest in them, and would value those as their best friends and benefactors, whom now they set with the dogs of their flock. Give us of your oil; that is, speak a good word for us, so some; but there is no occasion for vouchers in the great day, the Judge knows what is every man's true character. But is it not well that they are brought to say, Give us of your oil! It is so; but, (1.) This request was extorted by sensible necessity. Note, Those will see their need of grace hereafter, when it should save them, that will not see their need of grace now, when it should sanctify and rule them. (2.) It comes too late, God would have given them oil had they asked in time; but there is no buying when the market is over, no bidding when the inch of candle is dropped.

4. They were denied a share of their companions oil. It is a sad presage of a repulse with God, when they were thus repulsed by good people. The wise answered, Not so; that peremptory denial is not in the original, but supplied by the translators: these wise virgins would rather give a reason without a positive refusal, than (as many do) give a positive refusal without a reason. They were well inclined to help their neighbours in distress, but we must not, we cannot, we dare not do it, lest there be not enough for us and you: charity begins at home; but go and buy for yourselves. Note, (1.) Those that would be saved must have grace of their own. Though we have benefit by the communion of saints, and the faith and prayers of others may now redound to our advantage, yet our own sanctification is indispensably necessary to our own salvation. The just shall live by his faith. Every man shall give account of himself, and therefore let every man prove his own work; for he cannot get another to muster for him in that day. (2.) Those that have most grace have none to spare; all we have is little enough for ourselves to appear before God in. The best have need to borrow from Christ, but they have none to lend to any of their neighbours. The church of Rome, that dreams of works of supererogation and the imputation of the righteousness of saints, forgets that it was the wisdom of the wise virgins to understand that they had but oil enough for themselves, and none for others. But observe, These wise virgins did not upbraid the foolish with their neglect, nor boast of their own forecast, nor torment them with suggestions tending to despair, but gave them the best advice the case will bear, Go ye rather to them that sell. Note, Those that deal foolishly in the affairs of their souls, are to be pitied and not insulted over; for who made thee to differ! When ministers attend such as have been mindless of God and their souls all their days, but are under death-bed convictions; and because true repentance is never too late, direct them to repent and turn to God, and close with Christ; yet because late repentance is seldom true, they do but as these wise virgins did by the foolish, even make the best of bad. They can but tell them what is to be done, if it be not too late; but whether the door may not be shut before it is done, is an unspeakable hazard. It is good advice now, if it be taken in time, Go to them that sell, and buy for yourselves. Note, Those that would have grace, must have recourse to and attend upon the means of grace. See Isa. lv. 1.

Sixthly, The coming of the bridegroom, and the issue of all this different character of the wise and foolish virgins. See what came of it.

1. While they went out to buy, the bridegroom came. Note, Those that put off their great work to the last, it is a thousand to one they have not time to do it then. Getting grace is a work of time, and cannot be done in a hurry. While the poor awakened soul addresseth itself upon a sick-bed to repentance and prayer, in a mighty confusion, it scarce knows which end to begin at or what to do first, and presently death comes, judgment comes, and the work is undone, and the poor sinner undone for ever. This comes of having oil to buy when we should burn it, and grace to get when we should use it.

The bridegroom came. Note, Our Lord Jesus will come to his people at the great day as a bridegroom, will come in pomp and rich attire, attended with his friends; now the bridegroom is taken away from us, we fast, Matt. ix. 15. but then will be an everlasting feast. Then the bridegroom will fetch home his bride, to be where he is, John xvii. 24. and will rejoice over his bride, Isa. lxii. 5.

2. They that were ready went in with him to the marriage. Note, (1.) To be eternally glorified is to go in with Christ to the marriage, to be in his immediate presence, and in the most intimate fellowship and communion with him in a state of eternal rest, joy and plenty. (2.) Those, and those only, shall go to heaven hereafter that are made ready for heaven here, that are wrought to the self-same thing, 2 Cor. v. 5. (3.) The suddenness of death and of Christ's coming to us then, will be no obstruction to our happiness, if we have been habitually prepared.

2. The door was shut, as is usual when all the company is come that are to be admitted. The door was shut, (1.) To secure those that were within; that being now made pillars in the house of our God, they may go no more out, Rev. iii. 12. Adam was put into Paradise, but the door was left open and so he went out again; but when glorified saints are put into the heavenly paradise they are shut in. (2.) To exclude those that were out. The state of saints and sinners will then be unalterably fixed; and those that are shut out then will be shut out for ever. Now the gate is strait, yet it is open, but then it will be shut and bolted, and a great gulf fixed. This was like the shutting of the door of the ark when Noah was in, as he was thereby preserved, so all the rest were finally abandoned.

4. The foolish virgins came when it was too late, ver. 11. Afterwards came also the other virgins. Note, 1. There are many that will seek admission into heaven when it is too late; as profane Esau, who afterwards would have inherited the blessing. God and religion will be glorified by those late solicitations, though sinners will not be saved by them; it is for the honour of Lord, Lord, that is, of fervent and importunate prayer, that those who slight it will flee to it shortly, and it will not be called wining and canting then. 2. The vain confidence of hypocrites will carry them very far in their expectations of happiness. They go to heaven-gate and demand entrance, and yet are shut out; lifted up to heaven in a fond conceit of the goodness of their state, and yet thrust down to hell.

5. They were rejected, as Esau was, ver. 12. I know you not. Note, We are all concerned to seek the Lord while he may be found; for there is a time coming when he will not be found. Time was then, Lord, Lord, open to us, would have sped well by virtue of that promise, Knock, and it will be opened to you; but now it comes too late. The sentence is solemnly bound on with, Verily I say unto you, which amounts to no less than swearing in his wrath that he shall never enter into his rest. It speaks him resolved, and them silenced by it.

Lastly, Here is a practical inference drawn from this parable, ver. 13. Watch therefore. We had it before, chap. xxiv. 42. and there it is repeated as the most needful caution. Note, 1. Our great duty is to watch, to attend to the business of our souls with the utmost diligence and circumspection. Be awake and be wakeful. 2. It is a good reason for our watching, that the time of our Lord's coming is very uncertain; we know neither the day nor the hour. Therefore every day and every hour we must be ready, and not off our watch any day in the year, or any hour in the day; be thou in the fear of the Lord every day and all the day long.

14. ¶ For the kingdom of heaven is as a man travelling into a far country, who called his own servants, and delivered unto them his goods: 15. And unto one he gave five talents, to another two, and to another one, to every man according to his several ability; and straightway took his journey. 16. Then he that had received the five talents went and traded with the same, and made them other five talents. 17. And likewise he that had received two, he also gained other two. 18. But he that had received one, went and digged in the earth, and hid his lord's money, 19. And after a long time the lord of those servants cometh, and reckoneth with them. 20. And so he that had received five talents came and brought other five talents, saying, Lord, thou deliveredst unto me five talents: behold, I have gained besides them five talents more. 21. His lord said unto him, Well done, thou good and faithful servant: thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things: enter thou into the joy of thy lord. 22. He also that had received two talents, came and said, Lord, thou deliveredst unto me two talents: behold, I have gained two other talents besides them. 23. His lord said unto him, Well done, good and faithful servant: thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things: enter thou into the joy of thy lord. 24. Then he which had received the one talent came and said, Lord, I knew thee that thou art an hard man, reaping where thou hast not sown, and gathering where thou hast not strawed: 25. And I was afraid, and went and hid thy talent in the earth: lo, there thou hast that is thine. 26. His lord answered and said unto him, Thou wicked and slothful servant, thou knewest that I reap where I sowed not, and gather where I have not strawed: 27. Thou oughtest therefore to have put my money to the exchangers, and then at my coming I should have received mine own with usury. 28. Take therefore the talent from him, and give it unto him which hath ten talents. 29. For unto every one that hath shall be given, and he shall have abundance: but from him that hath not shall be taken away even that which he hath. 30. And cast ye the unprofitable servant into outer darkness: there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth.

We have here the parable of the talents committed to three servants, and this speaks us in a state of work and business, as the former in a state of expectancy. That shewed the necessity of habitual preparations, this of actual diligence in our present work and service. In that we were stirred up to do well for our own souls: in this to lay out ourselves for the glory of God and the good of others.

In this parable, (1.) The master is Christ, who is the absolute owner and proprietor of all persons and things; and in a special manner of his church, into his hands all things are delivered. (2.) The servants are Christians, his own servants, so they are called; born in his own house, bought with his money, devoted to his praise, and employed in his work. It is likely ministers are especially intended here, who are more immediately attending on him and sent by him. St. Paul often calls himself a servant of Jesus Christ, See 2 Tim. ii. 24.

We have three things in general in this parable,

First, the trust committed to these servants: Their master delivered to them his goods; having appointed them to work, (for Christ keeps no servants to be idle) he left them something to work upon. Note, (1.) Christ's servants have and receive their all from him; for they are of themselves worth nothing, nor have they any thing they can call their own but sin. (2.) Our receiving from Christ is in order to our working for him. Our privileges are intended to find us with business. The manifestation of the Spirit is given to every man to profit withal. (3.) Whatever we receive to be made use of for Christ, still the property is vested in him; we are but tenants upon his land, stewards of his manifold grace, 1 Pet. iv. 10. Now observe here,

1. On what occasion this trust was committed to these servants; the master was travelling into a far country. This is explained, Eph. iv. 8. When he ascended on high he gave gifts unto men. Note, (1.) When Christ went to heaven, he was as a man travelling into a far country, i. e. He went with a purpose to be away a great while. (2.) When he went he took care to furnish his church with all things necessary for it during his personal absence. For and in consideration of his departure, he committed to his church, truths, laws, promises and powers: these were the comparatibus, the great depositum, as it is called, 1 Tim. vi. 20; 2 Tim. i. 14. The good thing that is committed to us; and he sent his Spirit to enable his servants to teach and profess those truths, to press and observe those laws, to improve and apply those promises, and to exercise and employ those powers, ordinary or extraordinary. Thus Christ at his ascension left his goods to his church.

2. In what proportion this trust was committed. (1.) He gave talents; a talent of silver is computed to be in our money, three hundred fifty-three pounds eleven shillings and ten pence halfpenny; so the learned Bishop Cumberland. Note, Christ's gifts are rich and valuable, the purchasers of his blood inestimable, and none of them mean. (2.) He gave to some more to others less; to one five talents, to another two, to another one; to every one according to his several ability. When divine providence has made a difference in men's ability, as to mind, body, estate, relation, interest, divine grace dispenseth spiritual gifts accordingly, but still the ability itself is from him. Observe, (1.) Every one had some, one talent at least, and that is not a despicable stock for a poor servant to begin with. A soul of our own is the one talent we are every one of us intrusted with, and it will find us with work. Hoc nempe ab homine extigitur, ut prosit hominibus; si fieri potest multis, si minus paucis, si minus proximis, si minus sibi, nam cum se utilem ceteris efficit, commune agit negotium. Et si quis bene de se meretur, hoc ipso aliis prodest quod aliis profuturum parat. Seneca de otio sapient. (2.) All had not alike, for they had not all like abilities and opportunities; God is a free agent dividing to every man severally as he will; some are cut out for service in one kind, others in another, as the members of the natural body. When the householder had thus settled his affairs, he straightway took his journey. Our Lord Jesus, when he had given commandments to his apostles, as one in haste to be gone, he went to heaven.

Secondly the different management and improvement of this trust which we have an account of, ver. 16, 17, 18.

1. Two of the servants did well,

(1.) They were diligent and faithful; they went and traded; they put the money they were entrusted with to the use for which it was intended, laid it out in goods and made returns of it; as soon as ever their master was gone they immediately applied themselves to their business. Those that have so much work to do, as every Christian has, have need to set about it quickly and lose no time. They went and traded. Note, A true Christian is a spiritual tradesman: trades are called mysteria, and without controversy great is the mystery of godliness; it is a manufactured trade; there is something to be done by us upon our own hearts and for the good of others. It is a merchant trade; things of less value to us are parted with for things of greater value; wisdom's merchandise, Prov. iii. 15. Matt. xiii. 45. A tradesman is one that having made his trade his choice, and taken pains to learn it, makes it his business to follow it, lays out all he hath for the advancement of it, makes all other affairs truckle to it, and lives upon the gain of it. Thus doth a true Christian in the work of religion; we have no stock of our own to trade with, but trade as factors with our master's stock. The endowments of the mind, reason, wit, learning, must be used in subserviency to religion; the enjoyments of the world, estate, credit, interest, power, preferment, must be improved for the honour of Christ. The ordinances of the gospel, and our opportunities of attending them, bibles, ministers, sabbaths, sacraments, must be improved for the end for which they were instituted, and communion with God kept up by them, and the gifts and graces of the Spirit must be exercised; and this is trading with our talents.

(2.) They were successful; they doubled their stock, and in a little time made cent. per cent. of it; he that had five talents soon made them other five. Trading with our talents is not always successful with others, but however it shall be so to ourselves, Isa. lxix. 4. Note, The hand of the diligent makes rich in graces and comforts, and treasures of good works. There is a great deal to be got by industry in religion.

Observe, The returns were in proportion to the receivings. (1.) From those to whom God hath given five talents, he expects the improvement of five; and to reap plentifully where he sows plentifully. The greater gifts any have, the more pains they ought to take, as those must that have a large stock to manage. (2.) From those to whom he has given but two talents, he expects only the improvement of two, which may encourage those who are placed in a lower and narrower sphere of usefulness, if they lay out themselves to do good according to the best of their capacity and opportunity, they shall be accepted, though they do not so much good as others.

2. The third did ill, ver. 18. He that had received one talent went and hid his lord's money. Though the parable represents but one in three-unfaithful, yet in a history that answers this parable, we find the disproportion quite the other way, when ten lepers were cleansed, nine of the ten hid the talent, and only one returned to give thanks, Luke xvii. 17, 18. The unfaithful servant was he that had but one talent; doubtless there are many that have five talents and bury them all, great abilities, great advantages; and yet do no good with them; but Christ would hint to us. (1.) That if he that had but one talent be reckoned with thus for burying that one, much more will they be counted offenders that have more, that have many and bury them. If he that was but of small capacity was cast into utter darkness because he did not improve what he had, as he might have done, of how much sorer punishment, suppose ye, shall he be thought worthy that tramples under foot the greatest advantages? (2.) That many times those who have least to do for God, do least of what they have to do. Some make it an excuse for their laziness, that they have not the opportunities of serving God that others have; and because they have not wherewithal to do what they say they would, they will not do what we are sure they can, and so sit down and do nothing: it is really an aggravation of their sloth, that when they have but one talent to take care about, they neglect that one.

He digged in the earth and hid the talent, for fear it should be stolen; he did not mispend or misemploy it, did not embezzle it or squander it away, but he hid it. Money is like muck, (so my Lord Bacon used to say) good for nothing in the heap, but it must be spread; yet it is an evil we have often seen under the sun, treasure heaped together, James v. 3. Eccles. vi. 1, 2. which doth good to no body; and so it is in spiritual gifts; many have them, and make no use of them for the end for which they were given them. Those that have estates, and do not lay them out in works of piety and charity, that have power and interest, and do not with it promote religion in the places where they live; ministers that have capacities and opportunities of doing good, but do not stir up the gift that is in them, are those slothful servants that seek their own things more than Christ's.

He hid his lord's money; had it been his own he might have done as he pleased; but whatever abilities and advantages we have, they are not our own, we are but stewards of them, and must give account to our Lord, whose goods they are: it was an aggravation of his slothfulness, that his fellow-servants were busy and successful in trading, and there zeal should have provoked his. Are others active, and shall we idle?

Thirdly, The account of this improvement, ver. 19. (1.) The account is deferred; it is not till after a long time that they are reckoned with; not that the master neglects his affairs, or that God is slack concerning his promise, 2 Pet. iii. 9. No, he is ready to judge, 1 Pet. iv. 5. but every thing must be done in its time and order. (2.) Yet the day of account comes at last. The Lord of those servants reckoneth with them. Note, The stewards of the manifold grace of God must shortly give account of their stewardship: We must all be reckoned with, what good we have done to our own souls, and what good we have done to others by the advantages we have enjoyed. See Rom. xiv. 10, 11. Now here is,

(1.) The good account of the faithful servants; and there observe, 1. The servants giving up the account, ver. 20—22. Lord, thou deliverest to me five talents, and to me two; behold, I have gained five talents, and I two talents more.

(1.) Christ's faithful servants acknowledge with thankfulness his vouchsafements to them; Lord, thou deliverest to me such and such things. Note, 1. It is good to keep a particular account of our receivings from God, to remember what we have received, that we may know what is expected from us, and may render according to the benefit. 2. We must never look upon our improvements but with a general mention of God's favour to us, and the honour he has put upon us, in intrusting us with his goods, and that grace which is the spring and fountain of all the good that is in us or is done by us: For the truth is, the more we do for God, the more we are indebted to him for making use of us and enabling us for his service.

(2.) They produce, as an evidence of their faithfulness, what they have gained. Note, God's good stewards have something to shew for their diligence; shew me thy faith by thy works: He that is a good man, let him shew it, James iii. 13. If we be careful in our spiritual trade, it will soon be seen by us, and our works will follow us, Rev. xiv. 13. Not that the saints will in the great day make mention of their own good deeds; no, Christ will do that for them, ver. 35. But it intimates, that they who faithfully improve their talents, shall have boldness in the day of Christ, 1 John ii. 28.—iv. 17. And it is observable that he that had but two talents, gave up his account as cheerfully as he that had five; for our comfort in the day of account, will be according to our faithfulness not according to our usefulness, our sincerity not our success, according to the uprightness of our hearts, not according to the degree of our opportunities.

2. The master's acceptance and approbation of their account, ver. 21—23.

(1.) He commended them; Well done good and faithful servants: Note, The diligence and integrity of those who approve themselves the good and faithful servants of Jesus Christ, will certainly be found to praise and honour and glory at his appearing, 1 Pet. i. 7. Those that own and honour God now, he will own and honour them shortly. (1.) Their persons will be accepted; thou good and faithful servant. He that knows the integrity of his servants now, will witness to it in the great day; and they that are found faithful shall be called so. Perhaps they were censured by men, as righteous over-much, but Christ will give them their just characters, of good and faithful. (2.) Their performances will be accepted, Well done: Christ will call those and those only, good servants that have done well, for it is by patient continuance in well-doing that we seek for this glory and honour, and if we seek we shall find; if we do that which is good, and do it well, we shall have praise of the same. Some masters are so morose, that they will not commend their servants, though they do their work never so well, it is thought enough not to chide; but Christ will commend his servants that do well, whether their praise be of men or no, it is of him; and if we have the good word of our Master, the matter is not great what our fellow-servants say of us; if he saith, Well done, we are happy, and it should be then a small thing to us to be judged of men's judgment; as on the contrary, not he that commendeth himself, or whom his neighbours commend, is approved, but whom the Lord commends.

(2.) He rewardeth them; the faithful servants of Christ shall not be put off with bare commendation, no, all their work and labour of love shall be rewarded.

Now this reward is here expressed two ways,

1. In one expression agreeable to the parable, Thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things. It is usual in the courts of princes and families of great men, to advance those to higher offices that have been faithful in lower. Note, Christ is a master that will prefer his servants who acquit themselves well. Christ has honour in store for those that honour him, a crown, 2 Tim. iv. 8. a throne, Rev. iii. 21. a kingdom, Matt. xxv. 34. Here they are beggars, in heaven they shall be rulers; the upright shall have dominion; Christ's servants are all princes.

Observe the disproportion between the work and the reward; there are but few things in which the saints are serviceable to the glory of God, but many things wherein they shall be glorified with God: What charge we receive from God, what work we do for God in this world is but little, very little, compared with the joy set before us: put together all our services, all our sufferings, all our improvements, all the good we do to others, all we get to ourselves, and they are but a few things, next to nothing, not worthy to be compared, not fit to be named the same day with the glory to be revealed.

2. In another expression, which slips out of the parable into the thing signified signified by it; Enter thou into the joy of thy Lord. Note, (1.) The state of the blessed is a state of joy, not only because all tears shall then be wiped away, but all the springs of comfort shall be opened to them, and the fountains of joy broken up; where there is the vision and fruition of God; a perfection of holiness, and the society of the blessed, there cannot but be a fulness of joy. (2.) This joy is the joy of our Lord; the joy which he himself has purchased and provided for them. The joy of the redeemed, bought with the sorrow of the Redeemer. It is the joy which he himself is in the possession of, and which he had his eye upon when he endured the cross, and despised the shame, Heb. xii. 2. It is the joy which he himself is the fountain and the centre of; it is the joy of our Lord, for it is joy in the Lord, who is our exceeding joy. Abraham was not willing that the steward of his house, though faithful, should be his heir, Gen. xv. 23. But Christ admits his faithful stewards into his own joy, to be joint-heirs with him. (3.) Glorified saints shall enter into this joy, i. e. shall have a full and complete possession of it, as the heir when he comes to age enters upon his estate, as they that were ready went in to the marriage-feast. Here the joy of our Lord enters into the saints, in the earnest of the Spirit, shortly they shall enter into it, shall be in it to eternity, as in their element.

(2.) The bad account of the slothful servant. Observe,

1. His apology for himself, ver. 24, 25. Though he had received but one talent, for that one he is called to account. The smallness of our receiving will not excuse us from a reckoning. None shall be called to an account for more than they have received, but for what we have we must all account.

Observe, 1. What he confides in: He comes to the account with a deal of assurance, relying on the plea he had to put in, that he was able to say, Lo, here thou hast that is thine; If I have not made it more as the others have done, yet this I can say, I have not made it less; and this he thinks may serve to bring him off, if not with praise, yet with safety.

Note, Many a one goes very securely to judgment, presuming upon the validity of a plea that will be over-ruled as vain and frivolous. Slothful professors that are afraid of doing too much for God, yet hope to come off, as well as those that take so much pains in religion. Thus the stuggard is wiser in his own conceit than seven men that can render a reason, Prov. xxvi. 16. This servant thought his account would pass well enough, because he could say, There thou hast that is thine; "Lord, I was no spendthrift of my estate, no prodigal of my time, no profaner of my sabbaths, no opposer of good ministers and good preaching; Lord, I never ridiculed my Bible, nor set my wits on work to banter religion, nor abuse my power to persecute any good man; I never drowned my parts, nor wasted God's good creatures in drunkenness and gluttony, nor ever to my knowledge did I injury to any body." Many that are called Christians build great hopes for heaven, upon their being able to make such an account; and yet all this amounts to no more but there thou hast that is thine, as if no more were required or could be expected.

2. What he confesseth. He owns the burying of his talent, I hid thy talent in the earth: He speaks as if that were no great fault; nay, as if he deserved praise for his prudence in putting it in a safe place, and running no hazards with it. Note, It is common for people to make a very light matter of that which will be their condemnation in the great day. Or, if he was conscious to himself that it was his fault, it intimates how easily slothful servants will be convicted in the judgment; there will need no great search for proof, for their own tongues shall fall upon them.

3. What he makes his excuse; I knew that thou wast a hard man, and I was afraid. Good thoughts of God would beget love, and that love would make us diligent and faithful; but hard thoughts of God beget fear, and that fear makes us slothful and unfaithful. His excuse speaks,

1. The sentiments of an enemy; I knew thee that thou art an hard man. This was like that wicked saying of the house of Israel, The way of the Lord is not equal, Ezek. xviii. 25. Thus the defence is his offence: The foolishness of man perverteth his way, and then as if that would mend the matter, his heart fretteth against the Lord. This is covering the transgression, as Adam, who implicitly laid the fault on God himself, The woman which thou gavest me. Note, Carnal hearts are apt to conceive false and wicked opinions concerning God, and with them to harden themselves in their evil ways. Observe how confidently he speaks, I knew thee to be so: How could he know him to be so? What iniquity have we or our fathers found in him? Jer. ii. 5. Wherein has he wearied us with his work or deceived us in his wages? Micah vi. 3. Hath he been a wilderness to us, or a land of darkness? Thus long God has governed the world, and may ask, with more reason than Samuel himself could, whom have I defrauded? or whom have I oppressed? Doth not all the world know the contrary, that he is so far from being a hard master, that the earth is full of his goodness? So far from reaping where he sowed not, that he sows a great deal where he reaps nothing; for he causeth the sun to shine, and his rain to fall upon the evil and unthankful, and fill their hearts with food and gladness, who say to the Almighty, Depart from us. This suggestion speaks the common reproach wicked people cast upon God, as if all the blame of their sin and ruin lay at his door, for denying them his grace; whereas it is certain, never any that faithfully improved the common-grace they had perished for want of special grace; nor can any shew what could in reason have been done more for an unfruitful vineyard, than God has done in it. God doth not demand brick and deny straw; no, whatever is required in the covenant, is promised in the covenant; so that if we perish it is long of ourselves.

2. The spirit of a slave; I was afraid. This ill affection towards God arose from his false notions of him; and nothing is more unworthy of God, nor more hinders our duty to him, than slavish fear: This has bondage and torment, and is directly opposite to that intire love which the great commandment requires. Note, Hard thoughts of God drive us from and cramp us in his service: Those who think it impossible to please him and in vain to serve him, will do nothing to purpose in religion.

2. His lord's answer to this apology: His plea will stand him in no stead, it is over-ruled, nay, it is made to turn against him, and he is struck speechless with it; for here is his conviction and condemnation.

1. His conviction, ver. 26, 27. Two things he is convicted of,

1. Slothfulness; Thou wicked and slothful servant. Note, Slothful servants are wicked servants, and will be reckoned with as such by their master; for he that is slothful in his work, and neglects the good that God has commended, is brother to him that is a great waster, by doing the evil that God has forbidden, Prov. xviii. 9. He that is careless in God's work is near akin to him that is busy in the devil's work; Satis est mali nihil fecisse boni. Omissions are sins, and must come into judgment; slothfulness makes way for wickedness, all become filthy, for there is none that doth good, Psal. xiv. 3. When the house is empty, the unclean spirit takes possession. Those that are idle in the affairs of their souls, are not only idle but something worse, 1 Tim. v. 13. When men sleep the enemy sows tares.

2. Self-contradiction, ver. 26, 27. Thou knewest that I reap where I sowed not: Thou oughtest therefore to have put my money to the exchangers. Note, The hard thoughts which sinners have of God, though false and unjust, will be so far from justifying their wickedness and slothfulness, that they will rather aggravate and add to their guilt. Three ways this may be taken: (1.) Suppose I had been so hard a master, shouldest not thou therefore have been the more diligent and careful to please me, if not for love, yet for fear, and for that reason thou oughtest to have minded thy work? If our God be a consuming fire, in consideration of that let us study how to serve him. (2.) Or thus; If thou didst think me to be a hard master, and therefore durst not trade with the money itself, for fear of losing by it, and being made to stand to the loss, yet thou mightest have put it into the hands of the exchangers or goldsmiths, might have brought it into the bank, and then at my coming, if I could not have had the greater improvement, by trade and merchandise, (as of the other talents) yet I might have had the lesser improvement of bare interest, and should have received my own with usury; which, it seems was a common practice at that time, and not disallowed by our Saviour. Note, If we could not, or durst not do what we would, yet that excuse will not serve, when it will be made to appear, that we did not do what we could and durst. If we could not find in our hearts to venture upon more difficult and hazardous services, yet will that justify us in balking those that were more safe and easy? Something is better than nothing; if we fail of shewing our courage in bold enterprises, yet we must not fail to testify our good-will in honest endeavours, and our Master will not despise the day of small things. Or thus, (3.) Suppose I did reap where I sowed not, yet that is nothing to thee, for I had sowed upon thee, and the talent was my money which thou wast intrusted with, not only to keep but to improve. Note, In the day of account, wicked and slothful servants will be left quite without excuse; frivolous pleas will be over-ruled, and every mouth will be stopped; and those who now stand so much upon their own justification will not have one word to say for themselves.

2. His condemnation. The slothful servant is sentenced,

1. To be deprived of his talent, ver. 28, 29. Take therefore the talent from him. The talents were first disposed of by the master, as an absolute owner, but this was now disposed of by him as a judge; he takes it from the unfaithful servant to punish him, and gives it to him that was eminently faithful to reward him. And the meaning of this part of the parable we have in the reason of the sentence, ver. 29. To every one that hath shall be given. This may be applied, (1.) To the blessings of this life, worldly wealth and possessions. These we are intrusted with to be used for the glory of God, and the good of those about us: Now he that hath these things, and useth them for these ends, he shall have abundance, perhaps abundance of the things themselves, however abundance of comfort in them, and of better things; but from him that hath not, i. e. that hath these things, and if he had them not, had not power to eat of them or to do good with them, (Avaro deest, tam quot habet, quam quod non habet) they shall be taken away. Solomon explains this, Prov. xi. 24. There is that scattereth, and yet increaseth; and there is that withholdeth more than is meet, and it tendeth to poverty. Giving to the poor is trading with what we have, and the returns will be rich, it will multiply the meal in the barrel and the oil in the cruse; but those that are sordid and niggardly and uncharitable, will find that those riches which are so got perish by evil travel, Eccles. v. 13, 14. Sometimes providence strangely transfers estates from those that do no good with them to those that do; they are gathered for him that will pity the poor, Prov. xxviii. 8. See Prov. xiii. 22. Job xxvii. 16, 17. Eccles. ii. 26. (2.) We may apply it to the means of grace: They who are diligent in improving the opportunities they have, God will enlarge them, will set before them an open door, Rev. iii. 8. But they who know not the day of their visitation, shall have the things that belong to their peace hid from their eyes. For proof of this go see what God did to Shiloh, Jer. vii. 12. (3.) We may apply it to the common gifts of the Spirit. He that hath these, and doth good with them, shall have abundance; these gifts improve by exercise, and brighten by being used: The more we do, the more we may do in religion; but those who stir not up the gift that is in them, who do not exert themselves according to their capacity, their gifts rust and decay, and go out like a neglected fire. From him that has not a living principle of grace in his soul, shall be taken away the common gifts which he hath, as the lamps of the foolish virgins went out for want of oil, ver. 8. Thus the arm of the idol-shepherd, which he had sluggishly folded up in his bosom, comes to be dried up, and his right eye which he had carelessly or wilfully shut, becomes utterly darkened, as it is threatened, Zech. xi. 17.

2. He is sentenced to be cast into outer darkness, ver. 30. Here, 1. His character is that of an unprofitable servant. Note, Slothful servants will be reckoned with as unprofitable servants, who do nothing to the purpose of their coming into the world, nothing to answer the end of their birth or baptism, who are no way serviceable to the glory of God, the good of others, or the salvation of their own souls: A slothful servant is a withered member in the body, a barren tree in the vineyard, an idle drone in the hive is good for nothing. In one sense we are all unprofitable servants, Luke xvii. 10. we cannot profit God, Job xxii. 2. But to others, and to ourselves it is required that we be profitable; if we be not, Christ will not own us as his servants: it is not enough not to do hurt, but we must do good, must bring forth fruit, and though thereby God is not profited, yet he is glorified, John xv. 8.

2. His doom is to be cast into outer darkness. Here, as in what was said to the faithful servants, our Saviour slides insensibly out of the parable into the thing intended by it, and it serves as a key to the whole; for outer darkness, where there is weeping and gnashing of teeth, is in Christ's discourses the common periphrasis of the miseries of the damned in hell. Their state is, (1.) Very dismal; it is outer darkness. Darkness is uncomfortable and frightful, it was one of the plagues of Egypt: In hell there are chains of darkness, 2 Pet. ii. 4. In the dark no man can work, a fit punishment for a slothful servant. It is outer darkness, out from the light of heaven, out from the joy of their Lord, into which the faithful servants were admitted; out from the feast. Compare Matt. xviii. 12—xxii. 13. (2.) Very doleful; there is weeping, which speaks great sorrow; and gnashing of teeth, which speaks great vexation and indignation. This will be the portion of the slothful servant.

31. ¶ When the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory: 32. And before him shall be gathered all nations: and he shall separate them one from another, as a shepherd divideth his sheep from the goats: 33. And he shall set the sheep on his right hand, but the goats on the left. 34. Then shall the King say unto them on his right hand, Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world: 35. For I was an hungered, and ye gave me meat: I was thirsty, and ye gave me drink: I was a stranger, and ye took me me in: 36. Naked, and ye clothed me: I was sick, and ye visited me: I was in prison, and ye came unto me. 37. Then shall the righteous answer him, saying, Lord, when saw we thee an hungered, and fed thee? or thirsty, and gave thee drink? 38. When saw we thee a stranger, and took thee in? or naked, and clothed thee? 39. Or when saw we thee sick, or in prison, and came unto thee? 40. And the King shall answer, and say unto them, Verily I say unto you, Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me. 41. Then shall he say also unto them on the left hand, Depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels: 42. For I was an hungered, and ye gave me no meat: I was thirsty, and ye gave me no drink. 43. I was a stranger, and ye took me not in: naked, and ye clothed me not: sick, and in prison, and ye visited me not. 44. Then shall they also answer him, saying, Lord, when saw we thee an hungered, or athirst, or a stranger, or naked, or sick, or in prison, and did not minister unto thee? 45. Then shall he answer them, saying, Verily I say unto you, Inasmuch as ye did it not to one of the least of these, ye did it not to me. 46. And these shall go away into everlasting punishment: but the righteous into life eternal.

We have here a description of the process of the last judgment in the great day: Some passages there are in it that are parabolical, as the separating between the sheep and the goats, and the dialogues between the judge and the persons judged: but there is no thread of similitude carried through the discourse, and therefore it is rather to be called a draught or delineation of the final judgment, than a parable; it is as it were the reddition of the former parables. And here we have,

First, The placing of the judge upon the judgment-seat, ver. 30. When the Son of man shall come. Observe here,

1. That there is a judgment to come, in which every man shall be determined to a state of everlasting happiness or misery in the world of recompense and retribution, according to what he did in this world of trial and probation, which is to be judged of by the rule of the everlasting gospel.

2. The administration of the judgment of the great day is committed to the Son of man, for by him God will judge the world, Acts xvii. 31. and to him all judgment is committed, and therefore the judgment of that day, which is the centre of all. Here, as elsewhere, when the last judgment is spoken of, Christ is called the Son of man, because he is to judge the sons of men; and being himself of the same nature, he is the more unexceptionable, and because his wonderful condescension to take upon him our nature, and to become the Son of man, will be recompensed by his exaltation in that day, and an honour put upon the human nature.

3. Christ's appearing to judge the world will be splendid and glorious. Agrippa and Bernice came to the judgment-seat with great pomp, Acts xxv. 23. but that was (as the original word is) great fancy; Christ will come to the judgment-seat in real glory: The Sun of righteousness shall then shine in his meridian lustre, and the Prince of kings of the earth shall shew the riches of his glorious kingdom, and the honours of his excellent majesty: and all the world shall see what the saints only do now believe, that he is the brightness of his Father's glory; he shall come not only in the glory of his Father, but in his own glory, as mediator: His first coming was under a black cloud of obscurity, his second will be in a bright cloud of glory. The assurance Christ gave his disciples of his future glory, might help to take off the offence of the cross, and his approaching disgrace and suffering.

4. When Christ comes in his glory to judge the world, he will bring all his holy angels with him. This glorious person will have a glorious retinue, his holy myriads, who will be not only his attendants but ministers of his justice; they shall come with him both for state and service. They must come to call the court, 1 Thess. iv. 16. to gather the elect, Matth. xxiv. 31. to bundle the tares, Matth. xiii. 40. to be witnesses of the saints glory, Luke xii. 8. and of the sinners misery, Rev. xix. 10.

5. He will then sit upon the throne of his glory; he is now set down with the Father upon his throne, and it is a throne of grace, to which we may come boldly; it is a throne of government, the throne of his father David; he is a priest upon that throne, but then he will sit upon the throne of glory; the throne of judgment. See Dan. vii. 9, 10. Solomon's throne, though there was not its like in any kingdom, was but a dunghill to it. Christ, in the days of his flesh, was arraigned as a prisoner at the bar, but at his second coming he will set a judge upon the bench.

Secondly, The appearing of all the children of men before him, ver. 32. Before him shall be gathered all nations. Note, The judgment of the great day will be a general judgment. All must be summoned before Christ's tribunal; all of every age of the world, from the beginning to the end of time; all of every place on earth, even from the remotest corners of the world, most obscure and distant from each other; all nations, all those nations of men that are made of one blood, to dwell all on the face of the earth.

Thirdly, The distinction that will then be made between the precious and the vile; he shall separate them one from another, as the tares and wheat are separated at the harvest, and good fish and bad at the shore, the corn and chaff in the floor. Wicked and godly here dwell together in the same kingdoms, cities, churches, families, and are not certainly distinguishable one from another: such are the infirmities of saints, such the hypocrisies of sinners, and one event to both; but in that day they will be separated and parted for ever: Then shall ye return and discern between the righteous and the wicked, Mal. iii. 18. They cannot separate themselves one from another in this world, 1 Cor. v. 10. nor can any one else separate them, Matth. xiii. 29. But the Lord knows them that are his, and he can separate them. This separation will be so exact, that the most inconsiderable saints shall not be lost in the croud of sinners, nor the most plausible sinner hid in the croud of saints, Psal. i. 5. but every one shall go to his own place.

This is compared to a shepherd's dividing between the sheep and the goats, it is taken from, Ezek. xxxiv. 17. Behold, I judge between cattle and cattle.

Note, 1. Jesus Christ is the great shepherd, he now feeds his flock like a shepherd, and will shortly distinguish between those that are his and those that are not, as Laban divided his sheep from Jacob's, and set three days journey between them, Gen. xxx. 35, 36. 2. The godly are like sheep, innocent, mild, patient, useful: The wicked are like goats, a baser kind of animal, unsavoury and unruly. These sheep and goats are here feeding all day in the same pasture, but will be coted at night in different folds.

VOL. III. NO. CLXVIII*.

Being thus divided, he will set the sheep on the right hand, and the goats on his left, ver. 33. Christ puts honour upon the godly, as we shew respect to those we set on our right hand, but the wicked shall rise to everlasting shame, Dan. xii. 2. It is not said, he shall put the rich on his right hand, and the poor on his left, the learned and noble on his right hand, and the unlearned and despised on his left: but the godly on his right hand, and the wicked on his left; all other divisions and subdivisions will then be abolished, but the great distinction of men into saints and sinners, sanctified and unsanctified, will remain for ever, and men's eternal state will be determined by it. The wicked took up with left-hand blessings, riches, and honour, and so shall their doom be.

Fourthly, The process of the judgment concerning each of these; 1. Concerning the godly, on the right hand. Their cause must be first dispatched, that they may be assessors with Christ in the judgment of the wicked, whose misery will be aggravated by their seeing Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob, admitted into the kingdom of heaven, Luke xiii. 28. Observe here,

(1.) The glory conferred upon them; the sentence by which they shall be not only acquitted, but preferred and rewarded, ver. 34. The king shall say unto them. He that was the shepherd, which speaks the care and tenderness wherewith he will make this disquisition, is here the King, which speaks the authority wherewith he will then pronounce the sentence, where the word of this King is there is power. Here are two things in this sentence:

1. The acknowledging of the saints to be the blessed of the Lord; Come, ye blessed of my Father. (1.) He pronounceth them blessed, and his saying they are blessed makes them so; the law curseth them for their many discontinuances, but Christ having redeemed them from the curse of the law, and purchased a blessing for them, commands a blessing on them. (2.) Blessed of his Father, reproached and cursed by the world, but blessed of God: As the Spirit glorifies the Son, John xvi. 14. so the Son glorifies the Father, by referring the salvation of the saints to him as the first cause; all our blessings in heavenly things flow to us from God, as the Father of the Lord Jesus Christ, Eph. i. 3. (3.) He calls them to come; this come is in effect welcome, ten thousand welcomes to the blessed of my Father; come to me, come to be for ever with me, you that followed me bearing the cross, now come along with me wearing the crown. The blessed of my Father are the beloved of my soul, that have been too long at a distance from me; come now, come into my bosom, come into my arms, come into my dearest embraces: O with what joy will this fill the hearts of the saints in that day! We now come boldly to the throne of grace, but we shall then come boldly to the throne of glory, and this word holds out the golden scepter, with an assurance that our request shall be granted to more than the half of the kingdom: Now the Spirit saith, Come in the word; and the bride saith, Come in prayer, and the result hereof is a sweet communion, but the perfection of bliss will be when the King shall say, Come.

2. The admission of the saints into the blessedness and kingdom of the Father; inherit the kingdom prepared for you.

(1.) The happiness they shall be possessed of is very rich; we are told what it is by him who had reason to know it, having purchased it for them, and possessed it himself.

1. It is a kingdom, which is reckoned the most valuable possession on earth, and includes the greatest wealth and honour. Those that inherit kingdoms were all the glories of the crown, enjoy all the pleasures of the court, and command the peculiar treasures of the provinces; yet this is but a faint resemblance of the felicities of the saints in heaven. They that here are beggars, prisoners, accounted as the off-scouring of all things, shall then inherit a kingdom, Psal. cxlii. 7. Rev. ii. 26, 27.

2. It is a kingdom prepared: The happiness must needs be great, for it is the product of the divine counsels. Note, There is great preparation made for the entertainment of the saints in the kingdom of glory. The Father designed it for them in his thoughts of love, and provided it for them in the greatness of his wisdom and power. The Son purchased it for them, and is entered as the forerunner to prepare a place, John xiv. 2. And the blessed Spirit in preparing for the kingdom, in effect is preparing it for them.

3. It is prepared for them. This speaks, (1.) The suitableness of this happiness, it is in all points adapted to the nature of a soul, and to the new nature of a sanctified soul. (2.) Their property and interest in it. It is prepared on purpose for them, not only for such as you, but for you, you by name, you personally and particularly; who were chosen to salvation through sanctification.

4. It is prepared from the foundation of the world. This happiness was designed for the saints, and they for it, before time began, from all eternity, Eph. i. 4. The end which is last in execution is first in intention, infinite wisdom had an eye to the eternal glorification of the saints from the first founding of the creation; All things are for your sakes, 2 Cor. iv. 15. or it notes the preparation of the place of this happiness, which is to be the seat and habitation of the blessed in the very beginning of the work of creation, Gen. i. 1. There in the heaven of heavens, the morning stars were singing together when the foundations of the earth were fastened, Job xxxviii. 4-6, 7.

(2.) The tenure by which they shall hold and possess it, is very good, they shall come and inherit it, what we come to by inheritance is not got by any procurement of our own, but purely, as the lawyers express it, "by the act of God." It is God that makes heirs, heirs of heaven. We come to an inheritance by virtue of our sonship, our adoption, if children, then heirs: A title by inheritance is the sweetest and surest title, it alludes to possessions in the land of Canaan, which passed by inheritance, and could not be alienated longer than till the year of jubilee: This is the heavenly inheritance indefeasible and unalienable. Saints in this world are as heirs under age, tutored and governed till the time appointed of the Father, Gal. iv. 1. and then they shall be put in full possession of that which now through grace they have a title to, come and inherit it.

(2.) The ground of this, ver. 35, 36. For I was an hungered, and ye gave me meat. We cannot hence infer that any good works of our's merit the happiness of heaven, by any intrinsic worth or excellency in them, our goodness extendeth not unto God; but it is plain that Jesus Christ will judge the world by the same rule by which he governs it, and therefore will reward those that have been obedient to that law, and mention will be made of their obedience, not as their title, but as their evidence of an interest in Christ and his purchase. This happiness will be adjudged to obedient believers, not upon a quantum meruit, which supposeth a proportion between the work and the reward, but upon the promise of God purchased by Jesus Christ, and the benefit of it secured under certain provisos and limitations; and it is the purchase and promise that give the title; the obedience is only the qualification of the person designed. An estate made by deed or will upon condition, when the condition is performed according to the true intent of the donor or testator, becomes absolute; and then though the title be built purely upon the deed or will, yet the performing of the condition must be given in evidence; and it comes in here, for Christ is the author of eternal salvation to those only that obey him, and who patiently continue in well-doing.

Now the good works here mentioned, are such as we commonly call works of charity to the poor; not but that many will be found on the right hand who never were in a capacity to feed the hungry, or clothe the naked, but were themselves fed and clothed by the charity of others; but one instance of sincere obedience is put for all the rest, and it teacheth us this in general, That faith working by love is all in all in Christianity; shew me thy faith by thy works; and nothing will abound to a good account hereafter, but the fruits of righteousness is a good conversation now. The good works here described do imply three things, which must be found in all that are saved.

1. Self-denial and contempt of the world; reckoning the things of the world no further good things, than as we are enabled to do good with them; and those who have not wherewithal to do good, must shew the same disposition, by being contentedly and cheerfully poor. Those are fit for heaven that are mortified to the earth.

2. Love to our brethren; which is the second great commandment, the fulfilling of the law, and an excellent preparative for the world of everlasting love. We must give proof of this love by our readiness to do good and to communicate; good wishes are but mockeries without good works, James ii. 15, 16. 1 John iii. 17. Those that have not to give must shew the same disposition some other way.

3. A believing regard to Jesus Christ. That which is here rewarded is their relieving the poor for Christ's sake, out of love to him, and with an eye to him. This puts an excellency upon the good work, when in it we serve the Lord Christ, which those may do that work for their own living, as well as those that help to keep others alive. See Eph. vi. 5, 6, 7. Those good works shall then be accepted which are done in the name of the Lord Jesus, Col. iii. 17.

I was hungry, i. e. my disciples and followers were so, either by the persecutions of enemies for well-doing, or by the common dispensations of providence; for in these things there is one event to the righteous and to the wicked; and you gave them meat. Note, 1. Providence doth so variously order and dispose of the circumstances of his people in this world, as that while some are in a condition to give relief, others need it. It is no new thing for those that are feasted with the dainties of heaven, to be hungry and thirsty, and to want daily food; for those that are at home in God to be strangers in a strange land; for those that have put on Christ to want clothes to keep them warm; for those that have healthful souls to have sickly bodies; and for those to be in prison that Christ has made free. 2. Works of charity and beneficence, according as our ability is, are necessary to salvation, and there will be more stress laid upon them in the judgment of the great day than is commonly imagined: these must be the proofs of our love, and of our professed subjection to the gospel of Christ, 2 Cor. ix. 13. But they that shew no mercy, shall have judgment without mercy.

Now this reason is modestly excepted against by the righteous, but is explained by the Judge himself.

1. It is questioned by the righteous, ver. 37, 38, 39. not as if they were loth to inherit the kingdom, or were ashamed of their good deeds, or had not the testimony of their own consciences concerning them. But, (1.) The expressions are parabolical, designed to introduce and impress these great truths, that Christ has a mighty regard to works of charity, and is especially pleased with kindnesses done to his people for his sake. Or, (2.) They speak the humble admiration which glorified saints will be filled with, to find such poor and worthless services as their's are, so highly celebrated and richly rewarded. Lord, when saw we thee an hungered, and fed thee? Note, Gracious souls are apt to think meanly of their own good deeds; especially as unworthy to be compared with the glory that shall be revealed. Far from this is the temper of those, who said, Wherefore have we fasted, and thou seest not, Isa. lviii. 3. Saints in heaven will wonder what brought them thither, and that God should so regard them and their services. It even put Nathanael to the blush, to hear Christ's encomium of him; Whence knowest thou me? John i. 47, 48. See Eph. iii. 20. When saw we thee an hungered? We have seen the poor in distress many a time, but when saw we thee? Note, Christ is more among us than we think he is; surely the Lord is in this place, by his word, his ordinances, his ministers, his Spirit, yea, and his poor, and we know it not; when thou wast under the fig-tree, I saw thee, John i. 48.

2. It is explained by the Judge himself, ver. 40. Inasmuch as you have done it to these my brethren; to the least, to one of the least of them, ye have done it unto me. The good works of the saints, when they are produced in the great day, (1.) Shall all be remembered, and not the least, not one of the least overlooked, no not a cup of cold water. (2.) They shall be interpreted most to their advantage, and the best construction that can be put upon them. As Christ makes the best of their infirmities, so he makes the most of their services.

We see what recompences Christ has for those that feed the hungry and clothe the naked; but what will become of the godly poor, that had not wherewithal to do so? Must they be shut out? No. (1.) Christ will own them, even the least of them, as his brethren; he will not be ashamed, nor think it any disparagement to him, to call them brethren, Heb. ii. 11. In the height of his glory he will not disown his poor relations; Lazarus is there laid in his bosom as a friend, as a brother. Thus he will confess them, Matt. x. 32. (2.) He will take the kindnesses done to them as done to himself; ye have done it unto me; which shews a respect to the poor that were relieved, as well as to the rich that did relieve them. Note, Christ espouseth his people's cause, and interests himself in their interests, and reckons himself received, and loved, and owned in them. If Christ himself were among us in poverty, how readily would we relieve him? In prison, how frequently would we visit him? We are ready to envy the honour they had who ministered to him of their substance, Luke viii. 3. Wherever poor saints and poor ministers are, there Christ is ready to receive our kindnesses in them, and they shall be put to his account.

2. Here is the process concerning the wicked, those on the left hand. And in that we have,

1. The sentence passed upon them, ver. 41. It was a disgrace to be set on the left hand, but that is not the worst of it, he shall say to them, Depart from me, ye cursed. Every word has terror in it, like that of the trumpet at mount Sinai, waxing louder and louder, every accent more and more doleful and exclusive of comfort.

(1.) To be so near to Christ was some satisfaction, though under his frowns, but that will not be allowed, Depart from me. In this world they were often called to come to Christ, to come for life and rest, but they turned a deaf ear to his calls; justly therefore are they bid to depart from Christ, that would not come to him. Depart from me the fountain of all good, from me the Saviour, and therefore from all hope of salvation! I will never have any thing more to say to you, or do with you. Here they said to the Almighty, Depart from us, then he will choose their delusions, and say to them, Depart from me. Note, It is the hell of hell to depart from Christ.

(2.) If they must depart, and depart from Christ, might not they be dismissed with a blessing? With one kind and compassionate word at least? No, Depart, ye cursed. They that would not come to Christ to inherit a blessing, must depart from him under the burden of a curse, that curse of the law on every one that breaks it, Gal. iii. 10. As they loved cursing, so shall it come unto them. But observe, the righteous are called the blessed of my Father; for their blessedness is owing purely to the grace of God and his blessing, but the wicked are called only ye cursed, for their damnation is of themselves. Hath God sold them? No, they have sold themselves, have laid themselves under the curse, Isa. l. 1.

(3.) If they must depart, and depart with a curse, may they not go into some place of ease and rest? Will it not be misery enough for them to bewail their loss? No, there is a punishment of sense as well as loss; they must depart into the fire, i. e. into a torrent as grievous as that of fire is to the body, and much more. This fire is the wrath of the eternal God fastening upon the guilty souls and consciences of sinners that have made themselves fuel for it. Our God is a consuming fire, and sinners fall immediately into his hands, Heb. x. 31. Rom. ii. 8, 9.

(4.) If into fire, may it not be some light or gentle fire? No, It is prepared fire; it is a torment ordained of old, Isa. xxx. 33. The damnation of sinners is often spoken of as an act of the divine power; he is able to cast into hell. In the vessels of wrath he makes his power known; it is a destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power. In it shall be seen what a provoked God can do to make a provoking creature miserable.

(5.) If into fire, prepared fire, O let it be but of short continuance, let them but pass through fire: no, the fire of God's wrath will be an everlasting fire; a fire that fastening and preying upon immortal souls, can never go out for want of fuel; and being kindled and kept burning by the wrath of an immortal God, can never go out for want of being blown and stirred up; and the streams of mercy and grace being for ever excluded, there is nothing to extinguish it. If a drop of water be denied to cool the tongue, buckets of water will never be granted to quench this flame.

(6.) If they must be doomed to such a state of endless misery, yet may they not have some good company there? No, none but the devil and his angels, their sworn enemies, that helped to bring them to this misery, and will triumph over them in it. They served the devil while they lived, and therefore are justly sentenced to be where he is, as those that served Christ are taken to be with him where he is. It is terrible to lie in a house haunted with devils, what will it be then to be companions with them for ever? Observe here, (1.) Christ intimates, that there is one that is the prince of the devils, the ringleader of the rebellion, and the rest are his angels, his messengers, by whose agency he supports his kingdom. Christ and his angels will in that day triumph over the dragon and his; Rev. xii. 7. (2.) The fire is said to be prepared, not primarily for the wicked, as the kingdom is prepared for the righteous; but it was originally intended for the devil and his angels. If sinners make themselves associates with Satan by indulging their lusts, they may thank themselves if they become sharers in that misery which was prepared for him and his associates. Calvin notes upon this, that therefore the torment of the damned is said to be prepared for the devil and his angels, to cut off all hopes of escaping it; the devil and his angels, are already made prisoners in that pit, and can worms of the earth think to escape?

2. The reasons of this sentence assigned. God's judgments are all just, and he will be justified in them. He is judge himself, and therefore the heavens shall declare his righteousness.

Now, 1. All that is charged upon them, on which the sentence is grounded, is omission; as before the servant was condemned not for wasting his talent, but for burying it; so here, he doth not say, I was hungry and thirsty, for you took my meat and drink from me. I was a stranger, for you banished me; naked, for you stripped me; in prison, for you laid me there; but when I was in these distresses, you were so selfish, so taken up with your own ease and pleasure, made so much of your labour, and were so loth to part with your money, that you did not minister as you might have done to my relief and succour. You were like those epicures that were at ease at Zion, and were not grieved for the afflictions of Joseph, Amos vi. 4, 5, 6. Note, Omissions are the ruin of thousands.

2. It is the omission of works of charity to the poor. They are not sentenced for omitting their sacrifices and burnt-offerings, they abounded in these, Psalm l. 8. but for omitting the weightier matters of the law, judgment, mercy, and faith. The Ammonites and Moabites were excluded the sanctuary, because they met not Israel with bread and water, Deut. xxiii. 3, 4. Note, Uncharitableness to the poor is a damning sin. If we will not be brought to works of charity by the hopes of reward, let us be influenced by fear of punishment; for they shall have judgment without mercy that have shewed no mercy. Observe, He doth not say, I was sick, and ye did not cure me; in prison, and ye did not release me; perhaps that was more than they could do; but you visited me not, which you might have done. Note, Sinners will be condemned at the great day for the omission of that good which it was in the power of their hand to do. But if the doom of the uncharitable be so dreadful, how much more intolerable will the doom of the cruel be, the doom of persecutors? Now this reason of the sentence is,

2. Objected against by the prisoners, ver. 44. Lord, when saw we thee an hungered, or athirst? Condemned sinners, though they have no plea that will bear them out, yet will in vain offer at excuses. Now, (1.) The manner of their pleading speaks their present precipitation. They cut it short, as men in haste; When saw we thee hungry, or thirsty, or naked? They care not to repeat the charge, as conscious to themselves of their own guilt, and unable to bear the terrors of the judgment. Nor will they have time allowed them to insist upon such frivolous pleas; for it is all (as we use to say) but "trifling with the court." (2.) The matter of their plea speaks their former inconsideration of that which they might have known, but would not till now that it was too late. They that had slighted and persecuted poor Christians, would not own that they had slighted and persecuted Christ; No, they never intended any affront to him, nor expected that so great a matter would have been made of it. They imagined it was only a company of poor, weak, silly, and contemptible people, who made more ado than needed about religion, that they put these slights upon; but they who do so, will be made to know, either in the day of their conversion, as Paul, or of their condemnation, as these here, that it was Jesus whom they persecuted. And, if they say, Behold, we know it not: doth not he that pondereth the heart consider it? Prov. xxiv. 11, 12.

2. Justified by the Judge, who will convince all the ungodly of the hard speeches spoken against him in those that are his, Jude 15. He goes by this rule, ver. 45. Inasmuch as ye did it not to one of the least of these, ye did it not to me. Note, What is done against the faithful disciples and followers of Christ, even the least of them, he takes as done against himself. He is reproached and persecuted in them, for they are reproached and persecuted for his sake, and in all their afflictions he is afflicted. He that touches them, touches him in a part no less tender than the apple of his eye.

Lastly, Here is the execution of both these sentences, ver. 46. Execution is the life of the law, and Christ will take care that that be done according to the sentence.

1. The wicked shall go away into everlasting punishment. Sentence will then be executed speedily, and no reprieve granted, nor any time allowed to move in arrest of judgment. The execution of the wicked is first mentioned: for first the tares are gathered and burned. Note, (1.) The punishment of the wicked in the future state will be an everlasting punishment, for the state is an unalterable state. It can neither be thought that sinners should change their own natures: nor that God should give his grace to change them, when in this world the day of grace was mispent, the Spirit of grace resisted, and the means of grace abused and baffled. (2.) The wicked shall be made to go away into that punishment; not that they will go voluntarily, no, they are driven from light into darkness; but it speaks an irresistible conviction of guilt, and a final despair of mercy.

2. The righteous shall go away into life eternal, i. e. they shall inherit the kingdom, ver. 34. Note, 1. Heaven is life, it is all happiness. The life of the soul results from its union with God by the mediation of Jesus Christ, as that of the body from its union with the soul by the animal spirits. The heavenly life consists in the vision and fruition of God, in a perfect conformity to him, and an immediate uninterrupted communion with him. There is no death to put a period to the life itself, nor old age to put a period to the comfort of it, or any sorrow to embitter it. Thus life and death, good and evil, the blessing and the curse, are set before us, that we may choose our way, and so shall our end be. Even the heathen had some notion of these different states of good and bad in the other world. Cicero in his Tusculan Questions, lib. 1. brings in Socrates thus speaking, Dux sunt via, duplicesque cursus & corpore exentium; nem qui se vitis humanis contaminarunt & libidinibus se tradiderunt, iis deum quoddam iterest, seclusum & consilio deorum: Qui autem se integros custodisse servarunt, quibusque fuerit minima cum corporibus contagio, suntque in corporibus humanis vitam imitati deorum, iis ad illos a quibus sunt profecti facile patet reditus.

C H A P. XXVI.

The story of the death and sufferings of Christ, is more particularly and fully recorded by all the four evangelists, than any other part of his story; for what should we determine, and desire to know, but Christ, and him crucified? And this chapter begins that famous story. The year of the redeemed was now come, the seventy weeks determined were now accomplished, when transgression must be finished, reconciliation made, and an everlasting righteousness brought in, by the cutting off of the Messiah the Prince, Dan. ix. 21—26. The awful scene is here introduced, to be read with reverence and holy fear. In this chapter we have, (1.) The preliminaries or prefaces to Christ's sufferings, 1. The previous notice given by him of it to his disciples, ver. 1, 2. 2. The rulers conspiracy against him, ver. 3—5. 3. The anointing of his head at a supper in Bethany, ver. 6—13. 4. Judah's bargain with the priests to betray him, ver. 14—16. 5. Christ's eating the passover with his disciples, ver. 17—25. 6. His instituting the Lord's Supper, and his discourse with his disciples after it, ver. 26—35. (2.) His entrance upon them, and some of the particulars of them. (1.) His agony in the garden, ver. 36—46. (2.) The seizing of him by the officers, with Judas's help, ver. 47—56. (3.) His arraignment before the chief priest, and his condemnation in his court, ver. 57—68. (4.) Peter's denying him, ver. 69—75.

1. AND it came to pass, when Jesus had finished all these sayings, he said unto his disciples, 2. Ye know that after two days is the feast of the passover, and the Son of man is betrayed to be crucified. 3. Then assembled together the chief priests, and the Scribes, and the elders of the people, unto the palace of the high priest, who was called Caiaphas. 4. And consulted that they might take Jesus by subtilty, and kill him. 5. But they said, Not on the feast day, lest there be an uproar among the people.

Here is, 1. The notice Christ gave his disciples of the near approach of his sufferings, ver. 1, 2. While his enemies were preparing trouble for him, he was preparing himself and his followers for it. He had often told them of his sufferings at a distance, now he speaks of them as at the door, after two days. Note, After many former notices of trouble we still have need of fresh ones. Observe,

1. The time when he gave this alarm, when he had finished all these sayings, (1.) Not till he had finished all he had to say. Note, Christ's witnesses die not till they have finished their testimony. When Christ had gone through his undertaking as a prophet, he entered upon the execution of his office as a priest. (2.) After he had finished these sayings, which go immediately before; he had bid his disciples expect sad times, bonds and afflictions, and then tells them the Son of man is betrayed; to intimate, that they should fare no worse than he should, and that his sufferings should take the sting out of theirs. Note, Thoughts of a suffering Christ are great supports to a suffering Christian, suffering with him and for him.

2. The thing itself he gave them notice of. The Son of man is betrayed. The thing was not only so sure, but so near, that it was as good as done. Note, It is good to make sufferings that are yet to come as present to us. He is betrayed, for Judas was then contriving and designing to betray him.

3. The plot of the chief priests, and Scribes, and elders of the people, against the life of our Lord Jesus, ver. 3, 4, 5. Many consults had been held against the life of Christ, but this plot was laid deeper than any yet; for the grandees were all engaged in it. The chief priests, who presided in ecclesiastical affairs, the elders that were judges in civil matters, and the Scribes, that as doctors of the law were directors to both. These composed the Sanhedrin, or great council, that governed the nation, and these were confederate against Christ. Observe, 1. The place where they met, in the palace of the high priest who was the centre of their unity in this wicked project. 2. The plot itself, to take Jesus by subtilty, and kill him; nothing less than his blood, his life-blood, would serve their turn. So cruel and bloody have been the designs of Christ's and his church's enemies.

3. The policy of the plotters. Not on the feast-day: Why not? Was it in regard to the holiness of the time, or because they would not be disturbed in the religious services of the day? no, but lest there should be an uproar among the people. They knew Christ had a great interest in the common people, of whom there was a great concourse on the feast-day, and they would be in danger of taking up arms against their rulers, if they should offer to lay violent hands on Christ, whom all held for a prophet. They were not awed by the fear of God, but by the fear of the people; all their concern was for their own safety, not God's honour. They would have done it at the feast; for it was a tradition of the Jews, that malefactors should be put to death at one of the three feasts, especially rebels and impostors, that all Israel might see and fear; but not on the feast day.

6. Now when Jesus was in Bethany, in the house of Simon the leper, 7. There came unto him a woman having an alabaster-box of very precious ointment, and poured it on his head, as he sat at meat. 8. But when his disciples saw it, they had indignation, saying, to what purpose is this waste? 9. For this ointment might have been sold for much, and given to the poor. 10. When Jesus understood it, he said unto them, Why trouble ye the woman? for she hath wrought a good work upon me. 11. For ye have the poor always with you: but me ye have not always. 12. For in that she hath poured this ointment on my body, she did it for my burial. 13. Verily I say unto you, Where soever this gospel shall be preached in the whole world there shall also this, that this woman hath done, be told for a memorial of her.

In this passage of story we have,

First, the singular kindness of a good woman to our Lord Jesus in anointing his head, ver. 6, 7. Is was in Bethany, a village hard by Jerusalem, and in the house of Simon the leper. Probably, he was one who had been miraculously cleansed from his leprosy by our Lord Jesus, and he would express his gratitude to Christ by entertaining him; nor did Christ disdain to converse with him, to come in to him and sup with him. Though he was cleansed, yet he was called Simon the leper. Those who are guilty of scandalous sins, though the sins be pardoned, yet the reproach will stick by them, and will hardly be wiped away. The woman that did this is supposed to have been Mary, the sister of Martha and Lazarus. And Dr. Lightfoot thinks it was the same that was called Mary Magdalen. She had a box of ointment very precious, which she poured upon the head of Christ as he sat at meat. This among us would be an odd sort of compliment. But it was then accounted the highest piece of respect; for the smell was very grateful, and the ointment itself refreshing to the head. David had his head anointed, Psalm xxiii. 5. Luke vii. 46. Now this may be looked upon,

1. As an act of faith in our Lord Jesus, the Christ, the Messiah, i. e. the Anointed. To signify that she believed in him as God's anointed, whom he had set King, she anointed him, and made him her King. They shall appoint themselves one head, Hosea i. 11. This is kissing the Son.

2. As an act of love and respect to him. Some think this was she that loved much at first, and washed Christ's feet with her tears, Luke vii. 47. and she had not left her first love; but was now as affectionate in the devotions of a grown Christian, as she was in those of a young beginner. Note, Where there is true love in the heart to Jesus Christ, nothing will be thought too good, no, nor good enough to bestow upon him.

Secondly, The offence which the disciples took at this. They had indignation, ver. 8, 9. were vexed to see this ointment thus spent, which they thought might have been better bestowed.

1. See how they expressed their offence at it. They said, To what purpose is this waste? Now this speaks,

1. Want of tenderness towards this good woman, in interpreting her over-kindness (suppose it was so) to be a wastefulness. Charity teacheth us to put the best construction upon every thing that it will bear, especially upon the words and actions of those that are zealously affected in a good thing; though we may think them not altogether so discreet in it as they might be. It is true there may be over-doing in well-doing; but thence we must learn to be cautious ourselves lest we run into extremes, but not to be censorious of others; because that which we may impute to the want of prudence, God may accept as an instance of abundant love. We must not say, those do too much in religion, that do more than we do, but rather aim to do as much as they.

2. Want of respect to their Master: The best we can make of it is, that they knew their Master was perfectly dead to all the delights of sense: he that was so much grieved for the affliction of Joseph, cared not for being anointed with the chief ointments, Amos vi. 6. And therefore they thought such pleasures ill bestowed upon one who took so little pleasure in them. But supposing that, it did not become them to call it waste, when they perceived that he admitted and accepted it as a token of his friend's love. Note, We must take heed of thinking any thing waste which is bestowed upon the Lord Jesus, either by others or by ourselves. We must not think that time waste that is spent in the service of Christ, or that money waste which is laid out in any work of piety; for though it seem to be cast upon the waters, to be thrown down the river, yet we shall find it again to advantage after many days, Eccles. xi. 1.

2. See how they excused their offence at it, and what pretence they made for it. This ointment might have been sold for much, and given to the poor. Note, It is no new thing for bad affections to shelter themselves under specious covers; for people to shift off works of piety under colour of works of charity.

Thirdly, The reproof Christ gave to his disciples for the offence at this good woman, ver. 10, 11. Why trouble ye the woman? Note, It is a great trouble to good people to have their works censured and misconstrued, and it is a thing that Jesus Christ takes very ill. He here took part with a good, honest, zealous, well-meaning woman, against all his disciples; though they seemed to have so much reason on their side, so heartily doth he espouse the cause of the offended little ones, Matt. xviii. 10.

Observe his reason, You have the poor always with you. Note, 1. There are some opportunities of doing and getting good which are constant, and which we must give constant attendance to the improvement of: Bibles we have always with us, sabbaths always with us, and so the poor we have always with us. Note, Those who have a heart to do good, never need to complain for want of opportunity. The poor never ceased even out of the land of Israel, Deut. xv. 41. Some or other we cannot but see in this world that call for our charitable assistance, who are as God's receivers, some poor members of Christ, to whom he will have kindness shewn as to himself.

2. There are other opportunities of doing and getting good, which come but seldom, which are short and uncertain, and require a more peculiar diligence in the improvement of them, and which ought to be preferred before the other: Me ye have not always, therefore use me while ye have me. Note, 1. Christ's constant bodily presence was not to be expected here in this world; it was expedient he should go away; his real presence in the eucharist is a fond and groundless conceit, and contradicts what he here said, Me ye have not always. 2. Sometimes special works of piety and devotion should take place of common works of charity. The poor must not rob Christ; we must do good to all, but especially to the household of faith.

Fourthly, Christ's approbation and commendation of the kindness of this good woman. The more his servants and their services are caviled at by by men, the more he manifests his acceptance of them. He calls it a good work, ver. 10. and saith more in praise of it than could have been imagined; particularly,

1. That the meaning of it was mystical, ver. 12. She did it for my burial. (1.) Some think she intended it so, and that the women better understood Christ's frequent predictions of his death and suffering than the apostles did; for which they were recompensed with the honour of being the first witnesses of his resurrection. (2.) However, Christ interpreted it so; and he is always willing to make the best, to make the most of his people's well-meant words and actions. This was as it were the embalming of his body: because the doing of that after his death would be prevented by his resurrection, it was therefore done before; for it was fit it should be done some time to shew that he was still the Messiah, even when he seemed to be triumphed over by death. The disciples thought the ointment wasted which was poured upon his head. But, saith he, if so much ointment were poured upon a dead body, according to the custom of your country, you would not grudge it or think it waste. Now this is in effect so; the body she anoints it as good as dead, and her kindness is very seasonable for that purpose; therefore rather than call it waste, put it upon that score.

2. That the memorial of it should be honourable, ver. 13. This shall be held for a memorial. This act of faith and love was so remarkable, that the preachers of Christ crucified, and the inspired writers of the history of his passion, could not choose but take notice of this passage, proclaim the notice of it, and perpetuate the memorial of it. And being once enrolled in these records, it was graven as with an iron pen and lead in the rock for ever, and could not possibly be forgotten. None of all the trumpets of fame sound so loud and so long as the everlasting gospel. Note, 1. The story of the death of Christ, though a tragical one, is gospel glad tidings, because he died for us. 2. This gospel was to be preached in the whole world, not in Judea only, but in every nation, to every creature. Let the disciples take notice of this for their encouragement, that their sound should go to the ends of the earth. 3. Though the honour of Christ is principally designed in the gospel, yet the honour of his saints and servants is not altogether overlooked. The memorial of this woman was to be preserved, not by dedicating a church to her, or keeping an annual feast in honour of her, or preserving a piece of her broken box for a sacred relic; but by mentioning her faith and piety in preaching of the gospel for example to others, Heb. vi. 12. And hereby honour redounds to Christ himself, who in this world, as well as in that to come, will be glorified in his saints, and admired in all that believe.

14. ¶ Then one of the twelve, called Judas Iscariot, went unto the chief priests. 15 And said unto them, What will ye give me, and I will deliver him unto you? And they covenanted with him for thirty pieces of silver. 16 And from that time he sought opportunity to betray him.

Immediately after an instance of the greatest kindness done to Christ, follows an instance of the greatest unkindness; such mixture is there of good and bad among the followers of Christ; he hath some faithful friends and some false and feigned ones. What could be more base than this agreement which Judas here made with the chief priests to betray Christ to them?

1. The traitor was Judas Iscariot: he is said to be one of the twelve, as an aggravation of his villainy. When the number of the disciples was multiplied, Acts vi. 1. no marvel if there were some among them that were a shame and trouble to them; but when there were but twelve, and one of them was a devil, surely we must never expect any society perfectly pure on this side heaven. The twelve were Christ's chosen friends, that had the privilege of his special favour, they were his constant followers, that had the benefit of his most intimate converse; that upon all accounts had reason to love him and be true to him, and yet one of them betrayed him. Note, No bonds of duty or gratitude will hold those that have a devil, Mark v. 3, 4.

2. Here is the proffer which he made to the chief priests, he went to them, and said, What will ye give me? ver. 15. They did not send for him nor make the proposal to him; they could not have any thought that one of Christ's own disciples should be false to him. Note, there are those, even among Christ's followers, that are worse than any one can imagine them to be, and want nothing but opportunity to shew it.

Observe, 1. What Judas promised, I will deliver him unto you, i. e. I will let you know where he is, and undertake to bring you to him, at such a convenient time and place that you may seize him without noise or danger of an uproar. In their conspiracy against Christ this was it they were at a loss about, ver. 4, 5. They durst not meddle with him in public, and knew not where to find him in private: Here the matter stuck, and the difficulty was insuperable, till Judas came and offered them his service. Note, Those that give up themselves to be led by the devil find him readier than they imagine to help them at a dead-lift, as Judas did the chief priests. Though the rulers by their power and interest, when they have him in their hands could kill him, yet none but a disciple could betray him. Note, The greater profession men make of religion, and the more they are employed in the study and service of it, the greater opportunity they have of doing mischief if their hearts be not right with God: If Judas had not been an apostle he could not have been a traitor; if men had not known the way of righteousness, they could not have abused it.

I will deliver him unto you; he did not offer himself nor did they tamper with him to be a witness against Christ, though they wanted evidence, ver. 59. And if there had been any thing to be alleged against him, which had but the colour of proof that he was an impostor, Judas was the likeliest person to have attested it; but this is an evidence of the innocency of our Lord Jesus, that his own disciple, who knew so well his doctrine and manner of his life, and was false to him, yet could not charge him with any thing criminal, though it would have served to justify his treachery.

2. What he asked in consideration of this undertaking; What will ye give me? This was the only thing that made Judas betray his Master, he hoped to get money by it; his Master had not given him any provocation, though he knew from the first that he had a devil: yet, for ought appears, he shewed the same kindness to him that he did to the rest, and put no mark of disgrace upon him that might disoblige him; he had placed him in a post that pleased him, had made him purse-bearer, and though he had embezzled the common stock, for he is called a thief, John xii. 6. yet we do not find he was in any danger to be called to account for it; nor doth it appear he had any suspicion that the gospel was a cheat: no, it was not the hatred of his Master, nor any quarrel with him, but purely the love of the money, that and nothing else made Judas a traitor.

What will ye give me? Why, what did he want? Neither bread to eat, nor raiment to put on, neither necessities nor conveniences; was he not welcome wherever his Master was? Did he not fare as he fared? Had he not been but just now nobly entertained at a supper in Bethany, in the house of Simon the leper, and a little before at another, where no less a person than Martha herself waited at table? and yet this covetous wretch could not be content, but comes basely cringing to the priests with, What will ye give me? Note, It is not the lack of money, but the love of money, that is the root of all evil, and particularly of apostasy from Christ; witness Demas, 2 Tim. iv. 10. Satan tempted our Saviour with this bait, All this will I give thee, Matt. iv. 9. but Judas offered himself to be tempted with it; he asks, What will ye give me? at if his Master was a commodity that stuck on his hands.

3. Here is the bargain which the chief priests made with him; they covenanted with him for thirty pieces of silver; thirty shekels, which in our money is about three pounds eight shillings, so some; three pounds fifteen shillings, so others. It should seem Judas referred himself to them, and was willing to take what they were willing to give; he catches at the first offer, lest the next should be worse. Judas had not been wont to trade high, and therefore a little money went a great way with him. By the law, Exod. xxi. 32. thirty pieces of silver was the price of a slave, a goodly price, at which Christ was valued, Lech. xi. 13. No wonder Sion's sons, though comparable to fine gold, are esteemed as earthen pitchers, when Sion's King himself was thus undervalued. They covenanted with him, ἐταβαν, appended-runt, "they paid it down," so some; gave him his wages in hand to secure him, and to encourage him.

4. Here is the industry of Judas, in pursuance of his bargain, ver. 16. he sought opportunity to betray him, his head was still working to find out how he might do it effectually. Note, 1. It is a very wicked thing to seek opportunity to sin, and to devise mischief; for it argues the heart fully set in them to do evil, and a malice prepense. 2. Those that are in think they must on, though the matter be never so bad. After he had made that wicked bargain, he had time to repent and to revoke it: but now by his covenant the devil has one hank more upon him than he had, and tells him he must be true to his word, though never so false to his Master, as Herod must behead John for his oath's sake.

17. ¶ Now the first day of the feast of unleavened bread the disciples came to Jesus, saying unto him, Where wilt thou that we prepare for thee to eat the passover? 18. And he said, Go into the city to such a man, and say unto him, The Master saith, My time is at hand; I will keep the passover at thy house with my disciples. 19. And the disciples did as Jesus had appointed them; and they made ready the passover. 20. Now when the even was come, he sat down with the twelve. 21. And as they did eat, he said, Verily I say unto you, that one of you shall betray me. 22. And they were exceeding sorrowful, and began every one of them to say unto him, Lord, is it I? 23. And he answered and said, He that dippeth his hand with me in the dish, the same shall betray me. 24. The Son of man goeth as it is written of him, but woe unto that man by whom the Son of man is betrayed! it had been good for that man if he had not been born. 25. Then Judas, which betrayed him, answered and said, Master, is it I? He said unto him, Thou hast said.

We have here an account of Christ's keeping the passover; being made under the law he submitted to all the ordinances of it, and to this among the rest; it was kept in remembrance of Israel's deliverance out of Egypt, the birth-day of that people; it was a tradition of the Jews, that in the days of the Messiah they should be redeemed on the very day of their coming out of Egypt; and it was exactly fulfilled, for Christ died the day after the passover, in which day they began their march.

1. The time when Christ eat the passover was the usual time appointed by God and observed by the Jews, ver. 17. The first day of the feast of unleavened bread, which that year happened on the fifth day of the week, which is our Thursday. Some have advanced a suggestion, that our Lord Jesus celebrated the passover at this time of day sooner than other people did; but the learned Dr. Whitby has largely disproved it.

2. The place where, was particularly appointed by himself to the disciples upon their enquiry, ver. 17. they asked, Where wilt thou that we prepare the passover? Perhaps Judas was one of those that asked this question, where he would eat the passover, that he might know the better how to lay his train; but the rest of the disciples asked it as usual, that they might do their duty.

1. They took it for granted that their Master would eat the passover, though he was at this time persecuted by the chief priests, and his life sought, they knew he would not be put by his duty, either by frightenings without or fears within. Those do not follow Christ's example, who make it an excuse for their not attending on the Lord's Supper, our gospel-passover, that they have many troubles and many enemies, are full of care and fear; and if so, they have the more need of that ordinance to help to silence their fears and comfort them under their troubles, to help them in forgiving their enemies and casting all their cares on God.

2. They knew very well there must be preparation made for it, and it was their business, as his servants, to make preparation; Where wilt thou that we prepare? Note, Before solemn ordinances there must be solemn preparation.

3. They knew he had no house of his own wherein to eat the passover; in this, as in other things, for our sakes he became poor; Among all Sion's palaces there was none for Sion's King, but his kingdom was not of the world. See John i. 11.

4. They would not pitch upon a place without direction from him, and from him they had direction; he sent them to such a man, ver. 18. who probably was a friend and follower of his, and to his house he invited himself and his disciples.

(1.) Tell him my time is at hand; he means the time of his death, elsewhere called his hour, John viii. 20.—xiii. 1. The time, the hour fixed in the counsel of God, and which his heart was upon, and which he had so often spoken of. He knew when it was at hand, and was busy accordingly; we know not our time, Eccles. ix. 12. and therefore must never be off our watch; our time is always ready, John vii. 6. and therefore we must be always ready. Observe, Because his time was at hand, he would keep the the passover. Note, The consideration of the near approach of death should quicken us to a diligent improvement of all our opportunities for our souls. Is our time at hand and an eternity just before us, let us then keep the feast with the unleavened bread of sincerity? Observe, When our Lord Jesus invited himself to this good man's house, he sent him this intelligence, that his time was at hand. Note, Christ's secret is with them that entertain him in their hearts. Compare John xiv. 21. with Rev. iii. 20.

(2.) Tell him, I will keep the passover at thy house: This was an instance of his authority, as the Master, which, it is likely, this man acknowledged, he did not beg but command the use of his house for this purpose. Thus, when Christ by his spirit comes into the heart, he demands admission, as one whose own the heart is and cannot be denied; and gains admission, as one who has all power in heart, and cannot be resisted; if he saith I will keep a feast in such a soul, he will do it, for he works and none can hinder; his people shall be willing, for he makes them so, I will keep the passover with my disciples. Note, Wherever Christ is welcome, he expects that his disciples should be welcome too: When we take God for our God, we take his people for our people.

3. The preparation was made by his disciples, ver. 19. They did as Jesus had appointed. Note, Those who would have Christ's presence with them in the gospel passover, must strictly observe his instructions and do as he directs; they made ready the passover: they got the lamb killed in the court of the temple, got it roasted, the bitter herbs provided, bread and wine, the cloth laid, and every thing set in readiness for such a sacred solemn feast.

4. They eat the passover according to the law, ver. 20. He sat down in the usual table gestures, not lying on one side, for it was not easy to eat nor possible to drink in that posture, but sitting upright, though perhaps sitting low. It is the same word that is used for his posture at other meals, Matt. ix. 10. Luke vii. 37. Matt. xxvi. 7. It was only the first passover in Egypt, as most think, that was eaten with their loins girded, shoes on their feet, and staff in their hand, though all that might be in a sitting posture. His sitting down denotes the composedness of his mind, when he addressed himself to this solemnity: He sat down with the twelve, Judas not excepted. By the law they were to take a lamb for a household, Exod. xii. 3, 4. which were to be not less than ten nor more than twenty; Christ's disciples were his household. Note, They whom God has charged with families, must have their houses with them in serving the Lord.

5. We have here Christ's discourse with his disciples at the passover supper: The usual subjects of discourse at that ordinance was the deliverance of Israel out of Egypt, Exod. xii. 26, 27. but the great passover is now ready to be offered, and the discourse of that swallows up all talk of the other, Jer. xvi. 14, 15. Here is,

1. The general notice Christ gives his disciples of the treachery that should be among them, ver. 21. One of you shall betray me. Observe, (1.) Christ knew it; we know not what troubles will befall us, nor whence they will arise, but Christ knew all his, which, as it proves his omniscience, so it magnifies his love, that he knew all things that should befall him, and yet did not draw back: He foresaw the treachery and baseness of a disciple of his own, and yet went on; took care of those that were given him, though he knew there was a Judas among them; would pay the price for our redemption, though he foresaw some would deny the Lord that bought them; and shed his blood, though he knew it would be trodden under foot as an unholy thing. (2.) When there was occasion he let those about him know it. He had often told them that the Son of man should be betrayed, now he tells them that one of them should do it, that when they saw it they might not only be the less surprised, but have their faith in him confirmed, John xiii. 10.—xiv. 29.

2. The disciples' resentment of this, ver. 22. How did they take it?

(1.) They were exceeding sorrowful. (1.) It troubled them much to hear that their Master should be betrayed: When Peter was first told of it he said, Be it far from thee, and therefore it must needs be a great trouble to him and the rest of them, to hear that it was very near to him. (2.) It troubled them more to hear that one of them should do it. It would be a reproach to the fraternity for an apostle to prove a traitor, and this grieved them; gracious souls grieve for the sins of others, especially of those that have made a more than ordinary profession of religion, 1 Cor. xi. 29. (3.) It troubled them most of all, that they were left at uncertainty which of them it was, and each of them was afraid for himself, lest, as Hazael speaks, 2 Kings viii. 13. he was the dog that should do this great thing. Those that know the strength and subtilty of the tempter and their own weakness and folly, cannot but be in pain for themselves, when they hear that the love of many will wax cold.

(2.) They began every one of them to say, Lord is it I?

(1.) They were not apt to suspect Judas, though he was a thief, yet it seems he had carried it so plausibly, that those who were intimate with him were not jealous of him: none of them so much as look upon him, much less said, Lord, is it Judas? Note, It is possible for an hypocrite to go through the world, not only undiscovered but unsuspected; like bad money so ingeniously counterfeited that no body questions it.

(2.) They were apt to suspect themselves; Lord, is it I? Though they were not conscious to themselves of an inclination that way, no such thought had ever entered into their mind, yet they feared the worst, and asked him who knows us better than we know ourselves, Lord, is it I? Note, It well becomes the disciples of Christ always to be jealous over themselves with a godly jealousy, especially in trying times. We know not how strongly we may be tempted, nor how far God may leave us to ourselves, and therefore have reason not to be high-minded, but fear. It is observable that our Lord Jesus, just before he instituted the Lord's Supper, put his disciples upon his trial and suspicion of themselves, to teach us to examine and judge ourselves, and so to eat that bread, and drink of that cup.

3. Further information given them concerning this matter, ver. 23, 24. where Christ tells them, (1.) That the traitor was a familiar friend; He that dipeth his hand with me in the dish, i. e. one of you that are now with me at the table. He mentions this to make the treachery appear the more exceeding sinful. Note, External communion with Christ in holy ordinances is a great aggravation of our falseness to him. It is base ingratitude to dip with Christ in the dish and yet betray him. (2.) That this was according to the scripture, which would take off the offence at it. Was Christ betrayed by a disciple? so it was written, Psal. xli. 2. He that did eat bread with me, has lift up the heel against me. The more we see of the fulfilling of the scripture in our troubles, the better we may bear them. (3.) That it would prove a very dear bargain to the traitor; Woe to that man by whom the Son of man is betrayed. This he said, not only to awaken the conscience of Judas, and bring him to repent and revoke his bargain, but for warning to all others to take heed of sinning like Judas; though God can serve his own purposes by the sins of men, that doth not make the sinner's condition the less woeful: It had been good for that man, if he had not been born. Note, The ruin that attends those who betray Christ is so great, that it were more eligible by far not to be at all than to be thus miserable.

4. The conviction of Judas, ver. 25. (1.) He asked, Is it I? to avoid coming under the suspicion of guilt by his silence: He knew very well it was he, and yet made thus strange of it. Note, Many whose consciences condemn them, yet are very industrious to justify themselves before men, and put a good face on it, with Lord, is it I? He could not but know that Christ knew, and yet trusted so much to his courtesy, because he had hitherto concealed it, that he had the impudence to challenge him to tell: or perhaps, he was so much under the power of infidelity, that he imagined Christ did not know it, as those who said, The Lord shall not see, Psal. xciv. 7. and asked, Can he judge through the dark clouds? (2.) Christ soon answered his question, Thou hast said, i. e. it is as thou hast said; this is not all spoken out so plain as Nathan's, Thou art the man, but it was enough to convict him; and, if his heart had not been wretchedly hardened, to have broke the neck of his plot, when he saw it discovered to his Master, and discovered by him. Note, They who are contriving to betray Christ, will some time or other betray themselves, and their own tongues will fall upon them.

26. ¶ And as they were eating, Jesus took bread, and blessed it, and brake it, and gave it to the disciples, and said, Take, eat; this is my body. 27. And he took the cup, and gave thanks, and gave it to them, saying, Drink ye all of it; 28. For this is my blood of the New Testament, which is shed for many for the remission of sins. 29. But I say unto you, I will not drink henceforth of this fruit of the vine, until that day when I drink it new with you in my Father's kingdom. 30. And when they had sung an hymn, they went out into the mount of Olives.

We have here the institution of the great gospel-ordinance of the Lord's Supper which was received of the Lord: Observe,

1. The time when it was instituted, as they were eating. At the latter end of the passover supper, before the table was drawn, because as a feast upon a sacrifice it was to come in the room of that ordinance. Christ is to us the passover sacrifice by which atonement is made, 1 Cor. v. 8. Christ our passover is sacrificed for us; this ordinance is to us the passover supper, by which application is made and commemoration celebrated of a much greater deliverance than that of Israel out of Egypt. All the legal sacrifices of propitiation being summed up in the death of Christ and so abolished, all the legal feasts of rejoicing were summed up in this sacrament, and so abolished.

2. The institution itself. A sacrament must be instituted, it is no part of moral worship, nor is it dictated by natural light, but has both its being and significance from the institution, from a divine institution: it is his prerogative who established the covenant to appoint the seals of it. Hence the apostle, 1 Cor. xi. 23, &c. in that discourse of his concerning this ordinance, all along calls Jesus Christ the Lord, because as Lord, as Lord of the covenant. Lord of the church, he appointed this ordinance. In which,

First, The body of Christ is signified and represented by bread; he had said formerly, John vi. 35. I am the bread of life, upon which metaphor this sacrament is built; as the life of the body is supported by bread, which is therefore put for all bodily nourishment, Matt. iv. 4.—vi. 11. so the life of the soul is supported and maintained by Christ's mediation.

1. He took bread, αἰς ἔσθην. "the loaf," some loaf that lay ready at hand fit for the purpose, it is likely it was unleavened bread, but that circumstance not being taken notice of, we are not to bind ourselves to that, as some of the Greek churches do. His taking the bread was a solemn action, and it is like was done in such a manner as to be observed by them that sat with him, that they might expect something more than ordinary to be done with it. Thus was the Lord Jesus set apart in the counsels of divine love for the working out of our redemption.

2. He blessed it, set it apart for this use by prayer and thanksgiving. We do not find any set form of words used by him upon this occasion, but what he said, no doubt was accommodated to the business in hand, that New Testament which by this ordinance was to be sealed and ratified. This was like God's blessing the seventh day, Gen. ii. 3. by which it was separated to God's honour, and made to all that duly observe it, a blessed day: Christ could command the blessing, and we in his name are emboldened to beg the blessing.

3. He brake it; which notes, (1.) The breaking of Christ's body for us that it might be fitted for our use; he was bruised for our iniquities, as bread corn is bruised, Isa. xxviii. 28. though a bone of him was not broken, for all his breaking did not weaken him, yet his flesh was broken with breach upon breach, and his wounds multiplied, John xix. 36.—xi. 17. and that pained him. God complains that he is broken with the whorish heart of sinners, Ezek. vi. 9. his law broken, our covenants with him broken, now justice requires breach for breach, Lev. xxiv. 20. and Christ was broken to satisfy that demand. (2.) The breaking of Christ's body to us, as the father of the family breaks the bread to the children: The breaking of Christ to us, is to facilitate the application: every thing is made ready to us by the grants of God's word and the operations of his grace.

4. He gave it to his disciples, as the master of the family, and the master of this feast; it is not said, he gave it to the apostles, though they were so, and had been often called so before this, but to the disciples, because all the disciples of Christ have a right to this ordinance; and those shall have the benefit of it who are his disciples indeed; yet he gave it to them as he did the multiplied loaves, by them to be handed to all other his followers.

5. He said, Take, eat, this is my body. He here tells them,

1. What they should do with it, Take, eat; accept of Christ as he is offered to you, receive the atonement, approve of it, consent to it, come up to the terms on which the benefit of it is proposed to you; submit to his grace and to his government: Believing on Christ is expressed by receiving him, John i. 12. and feeding upon him, John vi. 57, 58. Meat looked upon, or the dish never so well garnished, will not nourish us; it must be fed upon, so must the doctrine of Christ.

2. What they should have with it; This is my body, not ἐσθι, "this bread," but ἔσθω, this "eating and drinking," i. e. Believing carries all the efficacy of Christ's death to our souls, This is my body, i. e. spiritually and sacramentally; this signifies and represents my body, that is sacramental language, like that, Exod. xii. 11. It is the Lord's passover. Upon a carnal and much mistaken sense of these words the church of Rome builds the monstrous doctrine of Transubstantiation, which makes the bread to be changed into the substance of Christ's body, only the accidents of bread remaining; which affronts Christ, destroys the nature of a sacrament, and gives the lie to our senses. We partake of the sun not by having the bulk and body of the sun put into our hands, but the beams of it darted down upon us; so we partake of Christ by partaking of his grace, and the blessed fruits of the breaking of his body.

Secondly, The blood of Christ is signified and represented by the wine; to make it a complete feast, here is not only bread to strengthen, but wine to make glad the heart, ver. 27, 28: He took the cup, the grace-cup; which was set ready to be drank, after thanks returned, according to the custom of the Jews at the passover; this Christ took and made the sacramental-cup, and so altered the property. It was intended for a cup of blessing, so the Jews called it, and therefore St. Paul studiously distinguished between the cup of blessing which we bless, and that which they bless. He gave thanks, to teach us, not only in every ordinance, but in every part of the ordinance, to have our eyes up to God.

This cup he gave to the disciples.

1. With a command, Drink ye all of it. Thus he welcomes his guest to his table, obligeth them all to drink of his cup. Why should he so expressly command them all to drink, and to see that none let it pass them, and press that more expressly in this than in the other part of the ordinance? surely it was because he foresaw how in after-ages this ordinance would be dismembered by the prohibition of the cup to the laity, with an express non obstante to the command.

2. With an explication; For this is my blood of the New Testament. Therefore drink it with appetite, delight; because it is so rich a cordial. Hitherto, the blood of Christ had been represented by the blood of beasts, real blood; but after it was actually shed, it was represented by the blood of grapes, metaphorical blood; so wine is called in an Old Testament prophecy of Christ, Gen. xlix. 10, 11.

Now observe what Christ saith of his blood represented in the sacrament.

1. It is my blood of the New Testament; the Old Testament was confirmed by the blood of bulls and goats, Heb. ix. 16, 17. Exod. xxiv. 8. But the New Testament with the blood of Christ, which is here distinguished, from that, it is my blood of the New Testament. The covenant God is pleased to make with us, and all the benefits and privileges of it, are owing to the merits of Christ's death.

2. It is shed; it was not shed till next day, but it was now upon the point of being shed, it is as good as done. Before you come to repeat this ordinance yourselves, it will be shed; he was now ready to be offered, and his blood to be poured out, as the blood of the sacrifices which made atonement.

3. It is shed for many; Christ came to confirm a covenant with many, Dan. ix. 27. and the intent of his death agreed. The blood of the Old Testament was shed for a few, it confirmed a covenant, which, saith Moses, the Lord has made with you, Exod. xxiv. 8. The atonement was made only for the children of Israel, Lev. xvi. 34. but Jesus Christ is a propitiation for the sins of the whole world, 1 John ii. 2.

4. It is shed for the remission of sins, i. e. to purchase remission of sins for us. The redemption we have through his blood is the remission of sins, Ephes. i. 7. The new covenant which is procured and ratified by the blood of Christ, is a charter of pardon, an act of indemnity, in order to reconciliation between God and man; for sin was the only thing that made the quarrel, and without shedding of blood is no remission, Heb. ix. 22. The pardon of sin is that great blessing which is in the Lord's Supper conferred upon all true believers, it is the foundation of all other blessings, and the spring of everlasting comfort, Matt. ix. 2, 3. with a farewell to the fruit of the vine, ver. 29. Christ and his disciples had now feasted together with a deal of comfort, in both an Old Testament and a New Testament festival (Abula utriusque Testamenti). How amiable were these tabernacles! How good to be here! Never such a heaven upon earth, as was at this table, but was not intended for a perpetuity; he now told them, John xvi. 17. that yet a little while and they should not see him: and again, a little while and they should see him, which explains this here.

1. He takes leave of such communion; I will not drink henceforth of this fruit of the vine, that is, now that I am no more in the world, John xvii. 11. I have had enough of it, and am glad to think of leaving it, glad to think that this is the last meal. Farewell this fruit of the vine, this passover-cup, this sacramental wine; dying saints take their leave of sacraments, and other the ordinance of communion, which they enjoy in this world with comfort, for the joy and glory they enter into supersedes them all; when the sun riseth, farewell the candles.

2. He assures them of a happy meeting again at last. It is a long, but not an everlasting farewell, until that day when I drink it new with you. (1.) Some understand it of the interviews he had with them after his resurrection, which was the first step of his exaltation into the kingdom of his Father; and though during those forty days he did not converse with them so constantly as he had done, yet he did eat and drink with them, Acts x. 41. which as it confirmed their faith, so doubtless it greatly comforted their hearts, for they were overjoyed at it, Luke xxiv. 41. (2.) Others understand it of the joys and glories of the future state, which the saints shall partake of in everlasting communion with the Lord Jesus, represented here by the pleasures of a banquet of wine. That will be the kingdom of his Father, for unto him shall the kingdom be then delivered up, the wine of consolation, Jer. xvi. 7. will there be always new, never flat or sour, as wine with long keeping; never nauseous or unpleasant, as wine to those that have drunk much, but ever fresh. Christ will himself partake of those pleasures, it was the joy set before him, which he had in his eye, and all his faithful friends and followers shall partake with him.

Lastly, Here is the close of the solemnity with a hymn, ver. 30. They sang an hymn or psalm, whether the psalms which the Jews usually sung at the close of the passover-supper, which they called the great hallel, viz. Psalms cxiii. and the five that follow it; or whether some new hymn more closely adapted to the occasion, is uncertain, I rather think the former; had it been new, John would not have omitted to record it. Note, 1. Singing of psalms is a gospel ordinance; Christ's removing the hymn from the close of the passover to the close of the Lord's Supper, plainly speaks, that he intended that ordinance should continue in his church, that as it had not its birth with the ceremonial law, so it should not die with it. 2. It is very proper after the Lord's Supper, as an expression of our joy in God through Jesus Christ, and a thankful acknowledgment of that great love wherewith God has loved us in him. 3. It is not unseasonable, no, not in times of sorrow and suffering; the disciples were in sorrow, and Christ entering upon his sufferings, and yet they could sing a hymn together. Our spiritual joy should not be interrupted by outward afflictions.

When this was done, they went out into the mount of Olives; he would not stay in the house to be apprehended, lest he should bring the master of the house into trouble; nor would he stay in the city, lest it should occasion an uproar; but he retired into the adjacent country, the mount of Olives, the same mount that David in his distress went up the ascent of weeping, 2 Sam. xv. 30. They had the benefit of moon-light for this walk, for the passover was always at the full moon. Note, After we have received the Lord's Supper, it is good for us to retire for prayer and meditation, and to be alone with God.

31. Then saith Jesus unto him, All ye shall be offended because of me this night: for it is written, I will smite the shepherd, and the sheep of the flock shall be scattered abroad. 32. But after I am risen again, I will go before you into Galilee. 33. Peter answered and said unto him, Though all men shall be offended because of thee, yet will I never be offended. 34. Jesus said unto him, Verily I say unto thee, That this night, before the cock crow, thou shalt deny me thrice. 35. Peter said unto him, Though I should die with thee, yet will I not deny thee. Likewise also said all the disciples.

We have here Christ's discourse with his disciples upon the way, as they were going to the mount of Olives. Observe,

First, A prediction of the trial which both he and his disciples were now to go through. He here foretels,

1. A dismal scattering storm just arising, ver. 31.

(1.) That they should all be offended because of Christ that very night, i. e. they would all be so ill frightened with the sufferings, that they would not have the courage to stick to him in them, but would all basely desert him; Because of me this night, ἐνεκα μου ταυτη τη νυκτι, "because of me, even because of this night;" so it might be read, i. e. because of what happens to me this night. Note, (1.) Offences will come among the disciples of Christ in an hour of trial and temptation; it cannot be but they should, for they are weak, Satan is busy, God permits offences, even they whose hearts are upright may sometimes be overtaken with an offence. (2.) There are some temptations and offences, the effects of which are general and universal among Christ's disciples; All ye shall be offended. Christ had lately discovered to them the treachery of Judas, but let not the rest be secure, though there will be but one traitor, they will be all deserters: This he saith to alarm them all, that they might all watch. (3.) We have need to prepare for sudden trials, which may come to extremity in a very little time. Christ and his disciples had eaten their supper well together in peace and quietness, yet that very night proved such a night of offence. How soon may a storm arise? We know not what a day, or a night, may bring forth, nor what great event may be in the teeming womb of a little time, Prov. xxvii. 1. (4.) The cross of Christ is the great stumbling-block to many that pass for his disciples; both the cross he bore for us, 1 Cor. i. 23. and that which we are called out to bear for him, Matt. xiii. 21.

(2.) That herein the scripture would be fulfilled, I will smite the shepherd. It is quoted from Zech. xiii. 7. (1.) Here is the smiting of the shepherd in the sufferings of Christ. God awakens the sword of his wrath against the Son of his love, and he is smitten. (2.) The scattering of the sheep thereupon in the flight of his disciples. When Christ fell into the hands of his enemies, his disciples ran, one one way and another another: it was each one's care to shift for himself, and happy he that could get furthest from the cross.

2. He gives them the prospect of a comfortable gathering together again after this storm, ver. 32. After I am risen again, I will go before you. Though you will forsake me, I will not forsake you; though you fall, I will take care you shall not fall finally, we shall have a meeting again in Galilee, I will go before you, as the shepherd before the sheep. Some make the last words of that prophecy, Zech. xiii. 7. a promise equivalent to this here; and I will bring my hand again to the little ones. There is no bringing them back but by bringing his hand to them. Note, The Captain of our salvation knows how to rally his troops, when through their cowardice they have been put into disorder.

Secondly, The presumption of Peter, that he should keep his integrity whatever happened, ver. 33. Though all men be offended, yet will I never be offended. Peter had a great stock of confidence, and was upon all occasions forward to speak, especially to speak for himself; and sometimes it did him a kindness, but at other times it betrayed him, as it did here. Where observe,

1. How he bound himself with a promise, that he would never be offended in Christ; not only not this night, but at no time: And if this promise had been made in an humble dependence upon the grace of Christ, it had been an excellent good word. Before the Lord's Supper, Christ's discourse led his disciples to examine themselves with Lord, Is it I? For this is our preparatory duty; after the ordinance, his discourse led them to an engaging of themselves to close walking, for that is the subsequent duty.

2. How he fancied himself better armed against temptation than any one else, and this was his weakness and folly; though all men shall be offended, yet will not I. This was worse than Hazael's, What? Is thy servant a dog? for he supposed the thing so ill, that no man would do it. But Peter supposeth it possible that some, nay that all men might be offended, and yet he escape better than any. Note, It argues a great degree of self-conceit and self-confidence, to think ourselves either safe from the temptations, or free from the corruptions that are common to men. We should rather say, if it be possible others may be offended, there is danger that I may be so. But it is common for those that think too well of themselves, easily to admit suspicions of others. See Gal. vi. 1.

Thirdly, The particular warning Christ gave Peter of what he would do, ver. 34. He imagined that in the hour of temptation he should come off better than any of them, and Christ tells him he should come off worse. The warning is introduced with a solemn asseveration, Verily, I say unto thee, take my word for it, who know thee better than thou knowest thyself. He tells him,

1. That he should deny him. Peter promised that he would not be so much as offended in him, nor desert him; but Christ tells him he will go further, he will disown him. He said, Though all men, yet not I, and he did it sooner than any.

2. How quickly he should do it, this night before to-morrow, nay, before cock-crowing. Satan's temptations are compared to darts, Eph. vi. 16. which wound ere we are aware, suddenly doth he shoot. As we know not how near we may be to trouble, so we know not how near we may be to sin; if God leave us to ourselves we are always in danger.

3. How often he should do it, thrice. He thought he should never once do such a thing, but Christ tells him, he would do it again and again; for when once our feet begin to slip, it is hard to recover our standing again. The beginnings of sin are as the letting forth of water.

Fourthly, Peter's repeated assurances of his fidelity, ver. 35. Though I should die with thee. He supposed the temptation strong, when he said, Though all men do it, yet will not I: But here he supposeth it stronger when he puts it to the peril of life, though I should die with thee. He knew what he should do, rather die with Christ than deny him, it was the condition of discipleship, Luke xiv. 26: and he thought what he would do; never be false to his Master whatever it cost him, yet it proved he was. It is easy to talk boldly and carelessly of death at a distance; I will rather die than do such a thing. But it is not so soon done as said, when it comes to the setting to, and death shews itself in its own colours.

What Peter said the rest subscribed to; likewise also said all the disciples. Note, 1. There is a proneness in good men to be over-confident of their own strength and stability. We are ready to think ourselves able to grapple with the strongest temptations, to go through the hardest and most hazardous services, and to bear the greatest afflictions for Christ; but it is because we do not know ourselves. 2. Those often fall soonest and foulest that are most confident of themselves. Those are least safe that are most secure. Satan is most active to seduce such, they are most off their guard, and God leaves them to themselves to humble them. See 1 Cor. x. 12.

36. Then cometh Jesus with them unto a place called Gethsemane, and saith unto the disciples, Sit ye here, while I go and pray yonder. 37. And he took with him Peter and the two sons of Zebedee, and began to be sorrowful and very heavy. 38. Then saith he unto them, My soul is exceeding sorrowful, even unto death: tarry ye here, and watch with me. 39. And he went a little farther, and fell on his face, and prayed, saying, O my Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass from me: nevertheless, not as I will, but as thou wilt. 40. And he cometh unto the disciples, and findeth them asleep, and saith unto Peter, What, could ye not watch with me one hour? 41. Watch and pray, that ye enter not into temptation: The spirit indeed is willing, but the flesh is weak. 42. He went away again the second time, and prayed, saying, O my Father, if this cup may not pass away from me, except I drink it, thy will be done. 43. And he came and found them asleep again: for their eyes were heavy. 44. And he left them, and went away again, and prayed the third time, saying the same words. 45. Then cometh he to his disciples, and saith unto them, Sleep on now, and take your rest: behold, the hour is at hand, and the Son of man is betrayed into the hands of sinners. 46. Rise, let us begone: behold, he is at hand that doth betray me.

Hitherto were the preparatives for Christ's sufferings, now we enter upon the bloody scene. In these verses we have the story of his agony in the garden. This was the beginning of sorrows to our Lord Jesus. Now the sword of the Lord began to awake against the man that was his fellow, and how should it be quiet when the Lord had given it a charge? The clouds had been gathering a good while, and looked back: He had said some days before, Now is my soul troubled, John xii. 27. But now the storm began in good earnest. He put himself into this agony, before his enemies gave him any trouble, to shew that he was a free-will offering, that his life was not forced from him, but he laid it down of himself, John x. 18. Observe,

1. The place where he underwent this mighty agony; it was in a place called Gethsemane. The name signifies, torcul olei, an olive-mill, a press for olives, like a wine-press, where they trod the olives, Micah vi. 12. And this was the proper place for such a thing, at the foot of the mount of olives. There our Lord Jesus began his passion, there it pleased the Lord to bruise him, and crush him, that fresh oil might flow to all believers from him; that we might partake of the root and fatness of that good olive. There he trod the wine-press of his Father's wrath, and trod it alone.

2. The company he had with him, when he was in this agony.

(1.) He took all the eleven disciples with him to the garden, except Judas, who was at this time otherwise employed. Though it was late in the night, near bed-time, yet they stuck to him, and took this walk by moon-light with him, as Elisha, who, when he was told that his master should shortly be taken from his head, professed he would not leave him, though he led him about; so these follow the Lamb wheresoever he goes.

(2.) He took only Peter and James and John with him into that corner of the garden where he suffered his agony. He left the rest at some distance, perhaps at the garden door, with this charge, Sit ye here, while I go pray yonder; like that of Abraham to his young men, Gen. xxii. 5. Abide ye here, and I will go yonder and worship. (1.) Christ went to pray alone, though he had lately prayed with his disciples, John xvii. 1. Note, Our prayers with our families must not excuse us from our secret devotions. (2.) He ordered them to sit here. Note, We must take heed of giving any disturbance or interruption to those who retire for secret communion with God. He took these three with him, because they had been the witnesses of his glory in his transfiguration, Matt. xvii. 1, 2. and that would prepare them to be the witnesses of his agony. Note, These are best prepared to suffer with Christ, that have by faith beheld his glory, and have conversed with the glorified saints upon the holy mount. If we suffer with Christ, we shall reign with him, and if we hope to reign with him, why should we not expect to suffer with him?

3. The agony itself that he was in. He began to be sorrowful, and very heavy. It is called an agony, Luke xxii. 44. a conflict. It was not any bodily pain or torment that he was in, nothing occurred to hurt him; but whatever it was, it was from within; he troubled himself, John xi. 33. The words here used are very emphatical, he began λυπεῖσθαι καὶ ἀδυνατεῖν, "to be sorrowful, and in a consternation." The latter word signifies such a sorrow as makes a man neither fit for company nor desirous of it. He had like a weight of lead upon his spirits. Physicians use a word near akin to it, to signify the disorder a man is in, a fit of an ague or beginning of a fever. Now was fulfilled Psal. xxii. 14. I am poured out like water, my heart is like wax, it is melted; and all those passages in the Psalms where David complains of the sorrow of his soul, Psal. xviii. 4-6. —xiii. 7. lv. 4, 5. —lxxxix. 1, 2, 3. —lxxxviii. 3. —cxvi. 3. and Jonah's complaint, chap. ii. 4, 5.

But what was the cause of all this? What was it that put him into this agony? Why art thou cast down, blessed Jesus? And why disquieted? Certainly it was nothing of despair or distrust of his Father, much less any conflict or struggle with him. As the Father loved him because he laid down his life for the sheep, so he was entirely subject to his Father's will in it. But,

1. He engaged in an encounter with the powers of darkness; so he intimates, Luke xxii. 52. This is your hour, and the power of darkness: and he spoke of it just before, John xiv. 30, 31. The prince of this world comes, I see him rallying his forces and preparing for a general assault; but he has nothing in me, no garrisons in his interests, none that secretly hold correspondence with him; and therefore his attempts, though fierce, will be fruitless;

but as the Father gave me commandment, so I do; however it be, I must have a struggle with him, the field must be fairly fought; and therefore arise, let us go hence, let us hasten to the field of battle, and meet the enemy. Now is the close engagement in single combat between Michael and the dragon, hand to hand; Now is the judgment of this world; the great cause is now to be determined, and the decisive battle fought, in which the prince of this world will certainly be beaten and cast out, John xii. 31. Christ when he works salvation, is described like a champion taking the field, Isa. lix. 16, 17, 18. Now the serpent makes his fiercest onset on the seed of the woman, and directs his sting, the sting of death, to his very heart; animamque in vulnere ponit.

2. He was now bearing the iniquities which the Father laid upon him, and by his sorrow and amazement, he accommodated himself to his undertaking. The sufferings he was entering upon were for our sins, they were all made to meet upon him, and he knew it. And therefore, as we are obliged to be sorry for our particular sins, so was he grieved for the sins of us all. So Bishop Pearson, page 191. Now, in the valley of Jehosaphat, where Christ now was, God gathered all nations, and pleaded with them in his Son, Joel iii. 2-12. He knew the malignity of the sins that were laid upon him, how provoking to God, how ruining to man; and these being all set in order before him, and charged upon him, he was sorrowful and very heavy. Now it was that iniquities took hold on him; so that he was not able to look up, as was foretold concerning him, Psal. xl. 7-12.

3. He had a full and clear prospect of all the sufferings that were before him. He foresaw the treachery of Judas, the unkindness of Peter, the malice of the Jews, and their base ingratitude. He knew that he should now in a few hours be scourged, spit upon, crowned with thorns, nailed to the cross; death in its most dreadful appearances, death in pomp attended with all its terrors, looked him in the face; and this made him sorrowful, especially because it was the wages of our sin, which he had undertaken to satisfy for. It is true, the martyrs that have suffered for Christ, have entertained the greatest torments, and the most terrible deaths, without any such sorrow and consternation, have called their prisons their delectable orchards, and a bed of flames a bed of roses. But then, (1.) Christ was now denied the supports and comforts which they had, i. e. he denied them to himself, and his soul refused to be comforted, not in passion, but in justice to his undertaking. Their cheerfulness under the cross was owing to the divine favour, which for the present was suspended from the Lord Jesus. (2.) His sufferings were of another nature from theirs. St. Paul, when he is to be offered upon the sacrifice and service of the saints' faith, can joy and rejoice with them all; but to be offered a sacrifice to make atonement for sin, is quite a different case. On the saints' cross there is a blessing pronounced, which enables them to rejoice under it, Matt. v. 10-12. But to Christ's cross there was a curse annexed, which made him sorrowful and very heavy under it. And his sorrow under the cross was the foundation of their joy under it.

4. His complaint of this agony. Finding himself under the arrests of his passion he goes to his disciples, ver. 38. and,

I. He acquaints them with his condition, My soul is exceeding sorrowful, even unto death. It gives some little ease to a troubled spirit to have a friend ready to unburden itself to and give vent to its sorrows. Christ here tells them, (1.) What was the seat of his sorrow: it was his soul that was now in an agony. This proves, that Christ had a true human soul; for he suffered, not only in his body but in his soul: we had sinned both against our own bodies, and against our souls, both used in sin, and both wronged by it, and therefore Christ suffered in soul as well as in body. (2.) What was the degree of his sorrow. He was exceeding sorrowful, ὑπερβαλόντα, "compassed about with sorrow on all hands." It was sorrow in the highest degree, even unto death; it was a killing sorrow, such sorrow as no mortal man could bear and live. He was ready to die for grief, they were sorrows of death. (3.) The duration of it, it will continue even unto death. My soul will be sorrowful as long as it is in this body; I see no other outlet but death. He now began to be sorrowful, and never ceased to be so till he said, It is finished; that grief is now finished which began in the garden. It was prophesied of Christ, that he should be a man of sorrows, Isa. liii. 3. he was so all along, we never read that he laughed; but all his sorrows hitherto were nothing to this.

2. He bespeaks their company and attendance. Tarry ye here, and watch with me. Sure he was destitute indeed of help, when he intreated theirs, who he knew would be but miserable comforters; but he would hereby teach us the benefit of the communion of saints. It is good to have, and therefore good to seek the assistance of our brethren, when at any time we are in an agony; for two are better than one. What he said to them, he saith to all, watch, Mark xiii. 37. not only watch for him, in expectation of his future coming, but watch with him, in application to our present work.

3. What passed between him and his Father when he was in this agony. Being in an agony, he prayed. Prayer is never out of season, but especially seasonable in an agony.

1. Observe, The place where he prayed. He went a little farther, withdrew from them, that the scripture might be fulfilled, I have trod the wine-press alone; he retired for prayer; a troubled soul finds most ease when it is alone with God, who understands the broken language of sighs and groans. Calvin's devout remark upon this is worth transcribing, Utile est seorsim orare, tunc enim magis familiariter sese denudat fidelis animus, & simplicius sua vota, gemitus, curas, poenores, spes, et gaudia in Deum exonerat. Christ had hereby taught us that secret prayer must be made secretly. Yet some think that even the disciples whom he left at the garden door over-heard him; for it is said, Ileb. v. 7. they were strong cries.

2. His posture in prayer. He fell on his face; his lying prostrate notes, (1.) The agony he was in, and the extremity of his sorrow. Job in great grief fell on the ground, and great anguish is expressed by rolling in the dust, Mich. i. 10. (2.) His humility in prayer. This posture was an expression of his ὑποταγή, "his reverential fear," spoken of Ileb. v. 7. with which he offered up these prayers: and it was in the days of his flesh, in his estate of humiliation, to which hereby he accommodated himself.

3. The prayer itself; wherein we may observe three things.

1. The title he gives to God; O my Father. As thick as the cloud was, he could see God as a father through it. Note, In all our addresses to God, we should eye him as a father, as our father, and it is in a special manner comfortable to do so when we are in an agony. It is a pleasing string to harp upon at such a time, my Father; whither should the child go when any thing grieves him but to his father?

2. The favour he begs; If it be possible, let this cup pass from me. He calls his sufferings a cup, not a river, not a sea, but a cup, which we shall soon see the bottom of. When we are under troubles, we should make the best, the least of them, and not aggravate them. A cup, because allotted him, as at feasts a cup was set to every mess. He begs this cup might pass from him, i. e. that he might avoid the sufferings now at hand; or at least that they might be shortened. This speaks no more but that he was really and truly man, and as a man he could not but be averse to pain and suffering.

And here, The blood of Christ is signified and represented by the wine: in this sacramental feast, there is not only bread to strengthen, but wine to quicken the heart, ver. 27, 28. He took the cup, the grace-cup, which was so ready to be drunk, after thanks returned, according to the custom of the Jews at the passover; this Christ took and made the sacramental-cup, and so called it properly. It was intended for a cup of blessing, so the Jews call it, and therefore St. Paul suitably distinguished between the cup of blessing which we bless, and that which they bless. He gave thanks, to teach us, not only in every ordinance, but in every part of the ordinance, to have our eyes up to God.

This cup he gave to the disciples.

1. With a command, Drink ye all of it. Thus he welcomes his guest to his table, obligeth them all to drink of his cup. Why should he so expressly command them all to drink, and to see that none let it pass them, and press that more expressly in this than in the other part of the ordinance? surely it was because he fore-saw how in after ages this ordinance would be dismembered by the prohibition of the cup to the laity, with an express non oblige to the command.

2. With an explication; For this is my blood of the New Testament. Therefore drink it with appetite, delight, because it is so rich a cordial. Hitherto, the blood of Christ had been represented by the blood of beasts, real blood; but after it was actually shed, it was represented by the blood of grapes, metaphorical blood; so wine is called in an Old Testament prophecy of Christ, Gen. xlix. 10, 11.

Now observe what Christ saith of his blood represented in the sacrament.

1. It is my blood of the New Testament; the Old Testament was confirmed by the blood of bulls and goats, Heb. ix. 16, 17. Exod. xxiv. 8. But the New Testament with the blood of Christ, which is here distinguished, from that, it is my blood of the New Testament. The covenant God is pleased to make with us, and all the benefits and privileges of it, are owing to the merits of Christ's death.

2. It is shed; it was not shed till next day, but it was now upon the point of being shed, it is as good as done. Before you come to partake of this ordinance yourselves, it will be shed; he was now ready to be offered, and his blood to be poured out, as the blood of the sacrifices which made atonement.

3. It is shed for many; Christ came to confirm a covenant with many, Dan. ix. 27, and the merit of his death agreed. The blood of the Old Testament was shed for a few, it confirmed a covenant, which, saith Moses, the Lord has made with you, Exod. xxiv. 8. The atonement was made only for the children of Israel, Lev. xvi. 34 but Jesus Christ is a propitiation for the sins of the whole world, 1 John ii. 2.

4. It is shed for the remission of sins, i. e. to purchase remission of sins for us. The redemption we have through his blood is the remission of sins, Ephes. i. 7. The new covenant which is procured and ratified by the blood of Christ, is a charter of pardon, an act of indemnity, in order to reconciliation between God and man; for sin was the only thing that made the quarrel, and without shedding of blood is no remission, Heb. ix. 22. The pardon of sin is that great blessing which is in the Lord's Supper conferred upon all true believers, it is the foundation of all other blessings, and the spring of everlasting comfort, Matt. ix. 2, 3. with a farewell to the fruit of the vine, ver. 29. Christ and his disciples had now feasted together with a deal of comfort, in both an Old Testament and a New Testament festival (Abba utriusque Testamenti). How amiable were these tabernacles! How good to be here! Never such a heaven upon earth, as was at this table, but was not intended for a perpetuity; he now told them, John xvi. 17, that yet a little while and they should not see him: and again, a little while and they should see him, which explains this here.

1. He takes leave of such communion; I will not drink henceforth of this fruit of the vine, that is, now that I am no more in the world, John xv. 11. I have had enough of it, and am glad to think of leaving it, glad to think that this is the last meal. Farewell, this fruit of the vine, this passover-cup, this sacramental wine; dying saints take their leave of sacraments, and other the ordinance of communion, which they enjoy in this world with comfort, for the joy and glory they enter into supersedes them all; when in sin resteth, farewell the candles.

2. He assures them of a happy meeting again at last. It is a long, but not an everlasting farewell, until that day when I drink it new with you. (1.) Some understand it of the interviews he had with them after his resurrection, which was the first step of his exaltation into the kingdom of his Father; and though during those forty days he did not converse with them so constantly as he had done, yet he did eat and drink with them, Acts x. 41, which as a confirmed their faith, so doubtless it greatly comforted their hearts, for they were overjoyed at it, Luke xxiv. 41. (2.) Others understand it of the joys and glories of the future state, which the saints shall partake of in everlasting communion with the Lord Jesus, represented here by the pleasures of a banquet of wine. That will be the kingdom of his Father, for unto him shall the kingdom be then delivered up, the wine of consolation, Jer. xvi. 7. will there be always new, never flat or sour, as wine with long keeping; never nauseous or unpleasant, as wine to those that have drank much, but ever fresh. Christ will himself partake of those pleasures, it was the joy set before him, which he had in his eye, and all his faithful friends and followers shall partake with him.

Lastly, Here is the close of the solemnity with a hymn, ver. 30. They sang an hymn or psalm, whether the psalms which the Jews usually sang at the close of the passover-supper, which they called the great hallel, viz. Psalm cxiii. and the five that follow it; or whether some new hymn more closely adapted to the occasion, is uncertain, I rather think the former; had it been new, John would not have omitted to record it. Note, 1. Singing of psalms is a gospel ordinance; Christ's removing the hymn from the close of the passover to the close of the Lord's Supper, plainly speaks, that he intended that ordinance should continue in his church, that as it had not its birth with the ceremonial law, so it should not die with it. 2. It is very proper after the Lord's Supper, as an expression of our joy in God through Jesus Christ, and a thankful acknowledgment of that great love wherewith God has loved us in him. 3. It is not unseasonable, no, not in times of sorrow and suffering; the disciples were in sorrow, and Christ entering upon his sufferings, and yet they could sing a hymn together. Our spiritual joy should not be interrupted by outward afflictions.

When this was done, they went out into the mount of Olives; he would not stay in the house to be apprehended, lest he should bring the master of the house into trouble; nor would he stay in the city, lest it should occasion an uproar; but he retired into the adjacent country, the mount of Olives, the same mount that David in his distress went up the ascent of weeping, 2 Sam. xv. 30. They had the benefit of moon-light for this walk, for the passover was always at the full moon. Note, After we have received the Lord's Supper, it is good for us to retire for prayer and meditation, and to be alone with God.

31. Then saith Jesus unto them, All ye shall be offended because of me this night: for it is written, I will smite the shepherd, and the sheep of the flock shall be scattered abroad. 32. But after I am risen again, I will go before you into Galilee. 33. Peter answered and said unto him, Though all men shall be offended because of thee, yet will I never be offended. 34. Jesus said unto him, Verily I say unto thee, That this night, before the cock crow, thou shalt deny me thrice. 35. Peter said unto him, Though I should die with thee, yet will I not deny thee. Likewise also said all the disciples.

We have here Christ's discourse with his disciples upon the way, as they were going to the mount of Olives. Observe,

First, A prediction of the trial which both he and his disciples were now to go through. He here foretells,

1. A dismal entering storm just arising, ver. 31.

(1.) That they should all be offended because of Christ that very night, i. e. they would all be so ill frightened with the sufferings, that they would not have the courage to stick to him in them, but would all be so ill desert him; Because of me this night, I shall be offended. (2.) "because of me, even because of this night," so it might be read, i. e. because of what happens to me this night. Note, (1.) Offences will come among the disciples of Christ in an hour of trial and temptation; it cannot be but they should, for they are weak, Satan is busy, God permits offence, even they whose hearts are upright may sometimes be overtaken with an offence. (2.) There are some temptations and offences, the effects of which are general and universal among Christ's disciples; All men shall be offended. Christ had lately discovered to them the treachery of Judas, but let not the rest be secure, though there was but one traitor, they will be all deserters: Thus he saith to alarm them all, that they might all watch. (3.) We have need to prepare for sudden trials, which may come to extremity in a very little time. Christ and his disciples had eaten their supper well together in peace and quietness, yet that very night proved such a night of offence. How soon may a storm arise? We know not what a day, or a night, may bring forth, not what great event may be in the fleeting words of a little time, Prov. xxvii. 1. (4.) The cross of Christ is the great stumbling-block to many that pass for his disciples; both the cross he bore for us, 1 Cor. i. 23, and that which we are called out to bear for him, Matt. xiii. 21.

(2.) That he would see scripture would be fulfilled, I will smite the shepherd. It is quoted from Zech. xiii. 7. (1.) Here is the smiting of the shepherd in the sufferings of Christ. God awakens the sword of his wrath against the Son of his love, and he is smitten. (2.) The scattering of the sheep thereupon in the flight of his disciples. When Christ fell into the hands of his enemies, his disciples ran, one one way and another another; it was each one's care to shift for himself, and happy he that could get furthest from the cross.

2. He gives them the prospect of a comfortable gathering together again after this storm, ver. 32. After I am risen again, I will go before you. Though you will forsake me, I will not forsake you; though you fall, I will take care you shall not fall finally, we shall have a meeting together at last, I will go before you, as the shepherd before the sheep. Some note the first words of that prophecy, Zech. xiii. 7, a promise equivalent to the latter; and I will bring my hand again to the little ones. There is no bringing them back but by bringing his hand to them. Note, The Captain of our salvation knows how to rally his troops, when through ill conduct they have been put into disorder.

Secondly, The presumption of Peter, that he should keep his integrity when never happened, ver. 33. Though all men be offended, yet will I never be offended. Peter had a great stock of confidence, and was upon all occasions forward to speak, especially to speak for himself; and sometimes it did him a kindness, but at other times it betrayed him, as it did here. Where observe,

1. How he bound himself with a promise, that he would never be offended in Christ; not only not this night, but at no time: And if this promise had been made in an humble dependence upon the grace of Christ, it had been an excellent good word. Before the Lord's Supper, Christ's discourse led his disciples to examine themselves with Lord, is it I? For this is our preparatory duty; after the ordinance, his discourse led them to an engaging of themselves to close walking, for that is the subsequent duty.

2. How he fancied himself better armed against temptation than any one else, and this was his weakness and folly; though all men shall be offended, yet will not I. This was worse than Hazeel's, What? Is thy servant a dog? or he supposed the thing so ill, that no man would do it. But Peter supposed it possible that some, nay that all men might be offended, and yet he escape better than any. Note, It argues a great degree of self-conceit and self-confidence, to think ourselves either safe from the temptations, or free from the corruptions that are common to men. We should rather say, if it be possible others may be offended, there is danger that I may be so. But it is common for those that think too well of themselves, easily to admit suspicions of others. See Gal. vi. 1.

Thirdly, The particular warning Christ gave Peter of what he would do, ver. 34. He imagined that in the hour of temptation he should come off better than any of them, and Christ tells him he should come off worse. The warning is introduced with a solemn asseveration, Verily, I say unto thee, take my word for it, who know thee better than thou knowest thyself. He tells him,

1. That he should deny him. Peter promised that he would not be so much as offended in him, nor desert him; but Christ tells him he will go further, he will disown him. He said, Though all men, yet not I, and he did it sooner than any.

2. How quickly he should do it, this night before to-morrow, nay, before cock-crowing. Satan's temptations are compared to darts, 1 Th. v. 16, which wound ere we are aware, suddenly doth he shoot. As we know not how near we may be to trouble, so we know not how near we may be to sin; if God leave us to ourselves we are always in danger.

3. How often he should do it, thrice. He thought he should never once do such a thing, but Christ tells him, he would do it again and again; for when once our feet begin to slip, it is hard to recover our standing again. The beginnings of sin are as the letting forth of water.

Fourthly, Peter's repeated assurances of his fidelity, ver. 35. Though I should die with thee. He supposed the temptation strong, when he said, Though all men do it, yet will not I; but here he supposed it stronger when he puts it to the peril of life, though I should die with thee. He knew what he should do, rather die with Christ than deny him, it was the conclusion of discipleship, Luke xiv. 26, and he thought what he would do; never he fable to his Master whatever it cost him, yet it proved he was. It is easy to talk boldly and carelessly of death at a distance; I will rather die than do such a thing. But it is not so soon done as said, when it comes to the setting to, and death shews itself in its own colours.

What Peter said the rest subscribed to; likewise also said all the disciples. Note, 1. There is a proneness in good men to be over-confident of their own strength and stability. We are ready to think ourselves able to grapple with the strongest temptations, to go through the hardest and most hazardous services, and to bear the greatest afflictions for Christ; but it is because we do not know ourselves. 2. Those often fall soonest and foulest that are most confident of themselves. Those are least safe that are most secure. Satan is most active to seduce such, they are most off their guard, and God leaves them to themselves to humble them. See 1 Cor. x. 12.

36. Then cometh Jesus with them unto a place called Gethsemane, and saith unto the disciples, Sit ye here, while I go and pray yonder. 37. And he took with him Peter and the two sons of Zebedee, and began to be sorrowful and very heavy. 38. Then saith he unto them, My soul is exceeding sorrowful, even unto death: tarry ye here, and watch with me. 39. And he went a little farther, and fell on his face, and prayed, saying, O my Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass from me: nevertheless, not as I will, but as thou wilt. 40. And he cometh unto the disciples, and findeth them asleep, and saith unto Peter, What, could ye not watch with me one hour? 41. Watch and pray, that ye enter not into temptation: The spirit indeed is willing, but the flesh is weak. 42. He went away again the second time, and prayed, saying, O my Father, if this cup may not pass away from me, except I drink it, thy will be done. 43. And he came and found them asleep again: for their eyes were heavy. 44. And he left them, and went away again, and prayed the third time, saying the same words. 45. Then cometh he to his disciples, and saith unto them, Sleep on now, and take your rest: behold, the hour is at hand, and the Son of man is betrayed into the hands of sinners. 46. Rise, let us be going: behold, he is at hand that doth betray me.

Hitherto were the preparatives for Christ's sufferings, now we enter upon the bloody scene. In these verses we have the story of his agony in the garden. This was the beginning of sorrows to our Lord Jesus. Now the sword of the Lord began to awake against the man that was his fellow, and how should it be quiet when the Lord had given it a charge? The clouds had been gathering a good while, and looked back: He had said some days before, Now is my soul troubled, John xii. 27. But now the storm began in good earnest. He put himself into this agony, before his enemies gave him any trouble, to shew that he was a free-will offering, that his life was not forced from him, but he laid it down of himself, John x. 18. Observe,

1. The place where he underwent this mighty agony: it was in a place called Gethsemane. The name signifies, torrenti olei, an olive-mill, a press for olives, like a wine-press, where they trod the olives. Micah vi. 15. And this was the proper place for such a thing, at the foot of the mount of olives. There our Lord Jesus began his passion, there it pleased the Lord to bruise him, and crush him, that fresh oil might flow to all believers from him; that we might partake of the root and fatness of that good olive. There he trod the wine-press of his Father's wrath, and trod it alone.

2. The company he had with him, when he was in this agony.

(1.) He took all the eleven disciples with him to the garden, except Judas, who was at this time otherwise employed. Though it was late in the night, near bed-time, yet they stuck to him, and took this walk by moon-light with him, as Elisha, who, when he was told that his master should shortly be taken from his head, professed he would not leave him, though he led him about; so these follow the Lamb wheresoever he goes.

(2.) He took only Peter and James and John with him into that corner of the garden where he suffered his agony. He left the rest at some distance, perhaps at the garden door, with this charge, Sit ye here, while I go pray yonder; like that of Abraham to his young men, Gen. xxii. 5. Abide ye here, and I will go yonder and worship. (1.) Christ went to pray alone, though he had lately prayed with his disciples, John xvii. 1. Note, Our prayers with our families must not excuse us from our secret devotions. (2.) He ordered them to sit here. Note, We must take heed of giving any disturbance or interruption to those who retire for secret communion with God. He took these three with him, because they had been the witnesses of his glory in his transfiguration, Matt. xvii. 1, 2. and that would prepare them to be the witnesses of his agony. Note, These are best prepared to suffer with Christ, that have by faith beheld his glory, and have conversed with the glorified saints upon the holy mount. If we suffer with Christ, we shall reign with him, and if we hope to reign with him, why should we not expect to suffer with him?

3. The agony itself that he was in. He began to be sorrowful, and very heavy. It is called an agony, Luke xxii. 44. a conflict. It was not any bodily pain or torment that he was in, nothing occurred to hurt him; but whatever it was, it was from within; he troubled himself, John xi. 33. The words here used are very emphatical, he began ἀγωνίζεσθαι καὶ ὀδυρόμενός, "to be sorrowful, and in a consternation." The latter word signifies such a sorrow as makes a man neither fit for company nor desirous of it. He had like a weight of lead upon his spirits. Physicians use a word near akin to it, to signify the disorder a man is in, a fit of an ague or beginning of a fever. Now was fulfilled Psal. xxii. 14. I am poured out like water, my heart is like wax, it is melted; and all those passages in the Psalms where David complains of the sorrow of his soul, Psal. xviii. 4—6.—xiii. 7. lv. 4, 5.—lxi. 1, 2, 3.—lxxxviii. 3.—cxvi. 3. and Jonah's complaint, chap. ii. 4, 5.

But what was the cause of all this? What was it that put him into this agony? Why art thou cast down, blessed Jesus? And why disquieted? Certainly it was nothing of despair or distrust of his Father, much less any conflict or struggle with him. As the Father loved him because he laid down his life for the sheep, so he was entirely subject to his Father's will in it. But,

1. He engaged in an encounter with the powers of darkness; so he intimates, Luke xxii. 52. This is your hour, and the power of darkness: and he spoke of it just before, John xiv. 30, 31. The prince of this world comes, I see him rallying his forces and preparing for a general assault; but he has nothing in me, no garrisons in his interests, none that secretly hold correspondence with him; and therefore his attempts, though fierce, will be fruitless;

but as the Father gave me commandment, so I do; however it be, I must have a struggle with him, the field must be fairly fought; and therefore arise, let us go hence, let us hasten to the field of battle, and meet the enemy. Now is the close engagement in single combat between Michael and the dragon, hand to hand; Now is the judgment of this world; the great cause is now to be determined, and the decisive battle fought, in which the prince of this world will certainly be beaten and cast out, John xii. 31. Christ when he works salvation, is described like a champion taking the field, Isa. lix. 16, 17, 18. Now the serpent makes his fiercest onset on the seed of the woman, and directs his sting, the sting of death, to his very heart; animamque in vulnere ponit.

2. He was now bearing the iniquities which the Father laid upon him, and by his sorrow and amazement, he accommodated himself to his undertaking. The sufferings he was entering upon were for our sins, they were all made to meet upon him, and he knew it. And therefore, as we are obliged to be sorry for our particular sins, so was he grieved for the sins of us all. So Bishop Pearson, page 191. Now, in the valley of Jehosaphat, where Christ now was, God gathered all nations, and pleaded with them in his Son, Joel iii. 2—12. He knew the malignity of the sins that were laid upon him, how provoking to God, how ruining to man; and these being all set in order before him, and charged upon him, he was sorrowful and very heavy. Now it was that iniquities took hold on him; so that he was not able to look up, as was foretold concerning him, Psal. xl. 7—12.

3. He had a full and clear prospect of all the sufferings that were before him. He foresaw the treachery of Judas, the unkindness of Peter, the malice of the Jews, and their base ingratitude. He knew that he should now in a few hours be scourged, spit upon, crowned with thorns, nailed to the cross; death in its most dreadful appearances, death in pomp attended with all its terrors, looked him in the face; and this made him sorrowful, especially because it was the wages of our sin, which he had undertaken to satisfy for. It is true, the martyrs that have suffered for Christ, have entertained the greatest torments, and the most terrible deaths, without any such sorrow and consternation, have called their prisons their delectable orchards, and a bed of flames a bed of roses: But then, (1.) Christ was now denied the supports and comforts which they had, i. e. he denied them to himself, and his soul refused to be comforted, not in passion, but in justice to his undertaking. Their cheerfulness under the cross was owing to the divine favour, which for the present was suspended from the Lord Jesus. (2.) His sufferings were of another nature from theirs. St. Paul, when he is to be offered upon the sacrifice and service of the saints' law, enjoy and rejoice with them all; but to be offered as a sacrifice to make atonement for sin, is quite a different case. On the saints' cross there is a blessing pronounced, which enables them to rejoice under it, Matt. v. 10—12. But to Christ's cross there was a curse annexed, which made him sorrowful and very heavy under it. And his sorrow under the cross was the foundation of their joy under it.

4. His complaint of this agony. Finding him-self under the arrests of his passion he goes to his disciples, ver. 38. and,

1. He acquaints them with his condition, My soul is exceeding sorrowful, even unto death. It gives some little ease to a troubled spirit to have a friend ready to sympathize itself to and give vent to its sorrows. Christ here tells them, (1.) What was the seat of his sorrow: it was his soul that was now in an agony. This proves, that Christ had a true human soul; for he suffered, not only in his body but in his soul: we had sinned both against our own bodies, and against our souls, both used in sin, and both wronged by it, and therefore Christ suffered in soul as well as in body. (2.) What was the degree of his sorrow. He was exceeding sorrowful, ἐκστατικός, "compassed about with sorrow on all hands." It was sorrow in the highest degree, even unto death: it was a killing sorrow, such sorrow as no mortal man could bear and live. He was ready to die for grief, they were sorrows of death. (3.) The duration of it, it will continue even unto death. My soul will be sorrowful as long as it is in this body; I see no other outlet but death. He now began to be sorrowful, and never ceased to be so till he said, It is finished; that grief is now finished which began in the garden. It was prophesied of Christ, that he should be a man of sorrows, Isa. liii. 3. he was so all along, we never read that he laughed; but all his sorrows hitherto were nothing to this.

2. He bespeaks their company and attendance. Tarry ye here, and watch with me. Sure he was desolate indeed of help, when he intreated theirs, who he knew would be but miserable comforters; but he would hereby teach us the benefit of the communion of saints. It is good to have, and therefore good to seek the assistance of our brethren, when at any time we are in an agony; for two are better than one. What he said to them, he saith to all, watch, Mark xiii. 37. not only watch for him, in expectation of his future coming, but watch with him, in application to our present work.

3. What passed between him and his Father when he was in this agony. Being in an agony, he prayed. Prayer is never out of season, but especially seasonable in an agony.

1. Observe, The place where he prayed. He went a little farther, withdrew from them, that the scripture might be fulfilled, I have trod the wine-press alone; he retired for prayer; a troubled soul finds most ease when it is alone with God, who understands the broken language of sighs and groans. Calvin's devout remark upon this is worth transcribing, Utile est seorsim orare, tunc enim magis familiariter sese denudat fidelis animus, & simplicius sua vota, gemitus, curas, poeniores, spes, et gaudia in Deum exonerat. Christ had hereby taught us that secret prayer must be made secretly. Yet some think that even the disciples whom he left at the garden door over-heard him; for it is said, Heb. v. 7. they were strong cries.

2. His posture in prayer. He fell on his face; his lying prostrate notes, (1.) The agony he was in, and the extremity of his sorrow. Job in great grief fell on the ground, and great anguish is expressed by rolling in the dust, Mich. i. 10. (2.) His humility in prayer. This posture was an expression of his ἐκστασις, "his reverential fear," spoken of Heb. v. 7. with which he offered up these prayers: and it was in the days of his flesh, in his estate of humiliation, to which hereby he accommodated himself.

3. The prayer itself; wherein we may observe three things.

1. The title he gives to God; O my Father. As thick as the cloud was, he could see God as a father through it. Note, In all our addresses to God, we should eye him as a father, as our father, and it is in a special manner comfortable to do so when we are in an agony. It is a pleasing string to harp upon at such a time, my Father; whither should the child go when any thing grieves him but to his father?

2. The favour he begs; If it be possible, let this cup pass from me. He calls his sufferings a cup, not a river, not a sea, but a cup, which we shall soon see the bottom of. When we are under troubles, we should make the best, the least of them, and not aggravate them. A cup, because allotted him, as at feasts a cup was set to every mess. He begs this cup might pass from him, i. e. that he might avoid the sufferings now at hand; or at least that they might be shortened. This speaks no more but that he was really and truly man, and as a man he could not but be averse to pain and suffering; fering: This is the first and simple act of man's will, to start back from that which is sensibly grievous to us, and to desire the prevention and removal of it. The law of self-preservation is impressed upon the innocent nature of man, and rules there till over-ruled by some other law; therefore Christ admitted, and expressed a reluctance to sufferings, to shew that he was taken from among men, Heb. v. 1. was touched with the feeling of our infirmities, Heb. iv. 15. and tempted as we are, yet without sin. Note, A prayer of faith against an affliction, may very well consist with the patience of hope under an affliction. When David had said, I was dumb, I opened not my mouth, because thou didst it; yet his very next words were, Remove thy stroke away from me, Psal. xxxix. 9, 10. But observe the proviso, if it be possible. If God may be glorified, man saved, and the ends of his undertaking answered, without his drinking of this bitter cup, he desires to be excused, otherwise not. What we cannot do with the securing our great end, we must reckon to be in effect impossible, Christ did so. Id possumus quod jure possumus. We can do nothing, not only we may do nothing against the truth.

3. His intire submission to and acquiescence in the will of God however. Nevertheless, not as I will, but as thou wilt. Not that the human will of Christ was adverse or averse to the divine will, only in its first act diverse from it; to which in the second act of the will, which compares and chooseth, he freely submits himself. Note, (1.) Our Lord Jesus, though he had a quick sense of the extreme bitterness of the sufferings he was to undergo, yet was freely willing to submit to them for our redemption and salvation, and offered himself and gave himself for us. (2.) The reason of Christ's submission to his sufferings, was his Father's will, as thou wilt; as thou wilt, ver. 39. He grounds his own willingness upon the Father's will, and resolves the matter wholly into that; therefore he did what he did, and did it with delight, because it was the will of God, Psal. xl. 7. This he had often referred to, as that which put him upon, and carried him through his whole undertaking; this is the Father's will, John vi. 39, 40. This he sought, John v. 30. it was his meat and drink to do it, John vi. 39. (3.) In conformity to this example of Christ, we must drink of the bitter cup which God puts into our hands, be it never so bitter; though nature struggle, grace must submit. We then are spirited as Christ was, when our wills are in every thing melted into the will of God, though never so displeasing to flesh and blood; the will of the Lord be done, Acts xxi. 14.

4. The repetition of the prayer. He went away again the second time, and prayed, ver. 42. and again the third time, ver. 43. and all to the same purpose; only, as it is related here, he did not in the second and third prayer expressly ask that the cup might pass from him, as he had done in the first. Note, Though we may pray to God to prevent and remove an affliction; yet our chief errand, and that which we should most insist upon, must be, that he will give us grace to bear it well. It should be more our care to get our troubles sanctified, and our hearts satisfied under them, than to get them taken away. He prayed saying, Thy will be done. Note, Prayer is the offering up, not only of our desires, but of our resignations to God. It amounts to an acceptable prayer, when at any time we are in distress, to refer ourselves to God, and to commit our way and work to him, Thy will be done. The third time he said the same words, τὸ αὐτὸ λέγων, "The same word," i. e. the same matter or argument; he spoke to the same purpose; we have reason to think this was not all he said, for it should seem by verse 40. that he continued an hour in his agony and prayer; but whatever more he said, it was to this effect, resenting his approaching sufferings, and yet resigning himself to God's will in them. In the expressions of which we may be sure he was not straitened.

But what answer had he to this prayer? for certain it was not made in vain; he that heard him always did not deny him now. It is true the cup did not pass from him, for he withdrew that partition and did not insist upon it, (if he had, for ought I know, the cup had passed away) but he had an answer to his prayer; for, (1.) He was strengthened with strength in his soul, in the day when he cried, Psalm cxxxviii. 3. and that was a real answer, Luke xxii. 43. (2.) He was delivered from that which he feared, which was, lest by impatience and distrust he should offend his father, and so disable himself to go on with his undertaking, Heb. v. 7. In answer to his prayer God provided that he should not fail or be discouraged.

5. What passed between him and his three disciples at this time; and there we may observe,

1. The fault they were guilty of; that when he was in his agony, sorrowful and heavy, sweating and wrestling and praying, they were so little concerned that they could not keep awake; he comes and finds them asleep, ver. 40. The strangeness of the thing should have roused their spirits to turn aside now and see this great sight, the bush burning and yet not consumed; much more should their love to their Master, and their care concerning him, have obliged them to a more close and vigilant attendance on him; yet they were so dull that they could not keep their eyes open. What had become of us if Christ had been now as sleepy as his disciples were? It is well for us that our salvation is in the hand of one who neither slumbers nor sleeps. Christ bespoke them to watch with him, as if he expected some succour from them, and yet they slept; surely it was the unkindest thing that could be. When David wept at this mount of Olives, all his followers wept with him, 2 Sam. xv. 30. but when the Son of David was here in tears, his followers were asleep. His enemies that watched for him were wakeful enough, Mark xiv. 23. but his disciples that should have watched with him were asleep. Lord, what is man? what are the best of men when God leaves them to themselves? Note, Carelessness and carnal security, especially when Christ is in his agony, is a great fault in any, but especially in those who profess to be nearest in relation to him. The church of Christ, which is his body, is often in an agony, fighting without and fears within, and shall we be asleep then? like Gallio, that cared for none of these things; or those, Amos vi. 6. that lay at ease, and were not grieved for the affliction of Joseph.

2. Christ's favour to them notwithstanding. Persons in sorrow are too apt to be cross and peevish with those about them, and take it very heinously if they but seem to neglect them; but Christ in his agony is as meek as ever, and carries it as patiently towards his followers as towards his Father, and is not apt to take things ill.

When Christ's disciples put this slight upon him,

1. He came to them, as if he expected to receive some comfort from them; and if they had put him in mind of what they had heard from him concerning his resurrection and glory, perhaps it might have been some help to him; but instead of that they added grief to his sorrow, and yet he came to them; more careful for them than they were for themselves; when he was most engaged, yet he came to look after them; for those that were given him were upon his heart living and dying.

2. He gave them a gentle reproof, for as many as he loves he rebukes; he directed it to Peter, who used to speak for them; let him now hear for them. The reproof was very melting; What! could ye not watch with me one hour? He speaks as one amazed to see them so stupid; every word is aggravating if it were prosecuted. Consider, (1.) Who they were, could not ye watch? ye my disciples and followers; no wonder if others neglect me, if the earth sit still, and be at rest, Zech. i. 11. But from you I expected better things. (2.) Who he was; watch with me; If one of yourselves were ill in an agony, it would be very unkind not to watch with him; but it is undutiful not to watch with your Master, who has long watched over you for good, has led you, and fed you, and taught you, borne you, and borne with you; do ye thus requite him? He awoke out of his sleep to help them when they were in distress, Matt. viii. 26. and could not they keep awake, at least to shew their good-will to him? especially considering that he was now suffering for them, in an agony for them; I am tua res agitur. (3.) How small a thing it was that he expected from them, only to watch with him. If he had bid them do some great thing, had bid them be in an agony with him, or die with him, they thought they could have done it, and yet they could not do it when he only desired them to watch with him, 2 Kings v. 13. (4.) How short a time it was that he expected it, but one hour; they were not set upon the guard whole nights, as the prophet was, Isa. xxi. 8. only one hour. Sometimes he continued all night in prayer to God, but did not then expect his disciples should watch with him; only now, when he had but one hour to spend in prayer.

3. He gave them good counsel; Watch and pray that ye enter not into temptation, ver. 41. (1.) There was an hour of temptation drawing on and very near; the troubles of Christ were temptations to his followers to disbelieve and distrust him, to deny and desert him, and renounce all relation to him. (2.) There was danger of their entering into the temptation, as into a snare or trap; of their entering into a parley with it or a good opinion of it, of their being influenced by it and inclining to comply with it; which is the first step towards being overcome by it. (3.) He therefore exhorts them to watch and pray. Watch with me, and pray with me; while they were sleeping they lost the benefit of joining in Christ's prayer. Watch yourselves, and pray yourselves. Watch and pray against this present temptation to drowsiness and security; pray that you may watch; bcs of God by his grace to keep you awake now there is occasion. When we are drowsy in the worship of God we should pray, as a good Christian once did, "The Lord deliver me from this sleepy devil!" Lord, quicken thou me in thy way. Or watch and pray against the further temptation you will be assaulted with; watch and pray lest this sin prove the inlet of many more. Note, When we find ourselves entering into temptation, we have need to watch and pray.

4. He kindly excused them. The spirit indeed is willing but the flesh is weak. We do not read of one word they had to say for themselves, the sense of their own weakness stopped their mouth; but when he had a tender word to say on their behalf, for it is his office to be an advocate; in this he sets us an example of that love which covers a multitude of sins. He considered their frame, and did not chide them, for he remembered that they were but flesh; and the flesh is weak, though the spirit be willing, Psalm lxxviii. 38. Note, (1.) Christ's disciples, as long as they are here in this world, have bodies as well as souls, and a principle and remaining corruption as well as of reigning grace, like Jacob and Esau in the same womb, Canaanites, and Israelites in the same land, Gal. v. 17—24. (2.) It is the unhappiness and burden of Christ's disciples, that their bodies cannot keep pace with their souls in works of piety and devotion, but are many a time a cloud and clog to them. That when the spirit is free and disposed to that which is good, the flesh is averse and indisposed. This St. Paul laments, Rom. vii. 22. With my mind I serve the law of God, but with my flesh the law of sin. Our impotency in the service of God is the great iniquity and infidelity of our nature, and it ariseth from the sad remainders of corruption, which are the constant grief and burden of God's people. (3.) Yet it is for our comfort that our Master graciously considers this, and accepts the willingness of the spirit, and pities and pardons the weakness and infirmity of the flesh; for we are under grace, and not under the law.

5. Though they continued dull and sleepy, he did not further rebuke them for it; for though we daily offend, yet he will not always chide. (1.) When he came to them the second time, we do not find that he said any thing to them, ver. 43. he findeth them asleep again. One would have thought he had said enough to them to keep them awake; but it is hard to recover from a spirit of slumber. Carnal security, when once it prevails, is not easily shaken off. Their eyes were heavy, which intimates that they strove against it as much as they could, but were overcome by it, like the spouse; I sleep, but my heart wakes, Cant. v. 2. and therefore their Master looked upon them with compassion. (2.) When he came the third time, he left them to be alarmed with the approaching danger, ver. 45, 46. Sleep on now and take your rest. This is spoken ironically, now sleep if you can, sleep if you dare; I would not disturb you, if Judas and his band of men would not. See here how Christ deals with those that suffer themselves to be overcome by security, and will not be awakened out of it. (1.) Sometimes he gives them up to the power of it; Sleep on now. He that will sleep, let him sleep still. The curse of spiritual slumber is the just punishment of the sin of it, Rom. xi. 8. Hosea iv. 17. (2.) Many times he sends some startling judgment to awaken those that would not be wrought upon by the word; and those who will not be alarmed by reasons and arguments, had better be alarmed by swords and spears than left to perish in their security. Let those that would not believe be made to feel.

As to the disciples here, (1.) Their Master gave them notice of the near approach of his enemies, who it is likely were now within sight or hearing, for they came with candles and torches, and it is likely made a great noise. The Son of man is betrayed into the hands of sinners. And again, He is at hand that doth betray me. Note, Christ's sufferings were no surprise to him, he knew what and when he was to suffer. By this time the extremity of his agony was pretty well over, or at least diverted; while with an undaunted courage he addresseth himself to the next encounter as a champion to the combat. (2.) He called them to rise and be going; not rise and let us flee from the danger, but rise and let us go meet it; before he had prayed he feared his sufferings, but now has got over his fears, Eph. iv. 16. But, (3.) He intimates to them their folly in sleeping away the time which they should have spent in preparation, and now it found them unready, and was a terror to them.

47. ¶ And while he yet spake, lo, Judas, one of the twelve, came, and with him a great multitude, with swords and staves, from the chief priests and elders of the people. 48. Now he that betrayed him, gave them a sign, saying, Whomsoever I shall kiss, that same is he: hold him fast. 49. And forthwith he came to Jesus, and said, Hail, master; and kissed him. 50. And Jesus said unto him, Friend, wherefore art thou come? Then came they, and laid hands on Jesus, and took him. 51. And, behold, one of them which were with Jesus stretched out his hand, and drew his sword, and struck a servant of the high priest, and smote off his his ear. 52. Then said Jesus unto him, Put up again thy sword into his place: for all they that take the sword shall perish with the sword. 53. Thinkest thou that I cannot now pray to my Father, and he shall presently give me more than twelve legions of angels? 54. But how then shall the scriptures be fulfilled, that thus it must be? 55. In that same hour said Jesus to the multitudes, Are you come out as against a thief with swords and staves for to take me? I sat daily with you teaching in the temple, and ye laid no hold on me. 56. But all this was done, that the scriptures of the prophets might be fulfilled. Then all the disciples forsook him, and fled.

We are here told how the blessed Jesus was seized and taken into custody; this followed immediately upon his agony, while he yet spake; for from the beginning to the close of his passion he had not the least intermission or breathing-time, but deep called unto deep. His trouble hitherto was raised within himself; but now the scene is changed, now the Philistines are upon thee, thou blessed Samson; the breath of our nostrils, the anointed of the Lord is taken in their pits, Lam. iv. 20.

Now concerning the apprehending of the Lord Jesus: Observe,

1. Who the persons were that were employed in it. (1.) Here was Judas, one of the twelve, at the head of these black-guards: he was guide to them that took Jesus, Acts i. 16. without his help they could not have found him in this retirement. Behold and wonder; the first that appeared with his enemies is one of his own disciples, that an hour or two ago was eating bread with him. (2.) Here was with him a great multitude; that the scripture might be fulfilled, Lord, how are they increased that trouble me? Psalm iii. 1. This multitude was made up partly of a detachment out of the guards, that were posted in the tower of Antonia by the Roman governor; these were Gentiles, sinners, as Christ calls them, ver. 45. partly of the servants and officers of the high-priest, and they were Jews; they that were at variance with each other agreed against Christ.

2. How they were armed for this enterprise.

1. What weapons they were armed with; they came with swords and staves. The Roman soldiers no doubt had swords; the servants of the priests, those of them that had not swords, brought staves or clubs. Furor arma ministrat. They were not regular troops, but a tumultuous rabble. But wherefore is this ado? If they had been ten times as many, they could not have taken him had he not yielded himself; and his hour being come for him to give up himself, all this force was needless. When a butcher goes into the field to take out a lamb for the slaughter, doth he use to raise the militia and come armed? No, he needs not; yet is there all this force used to seize the Lamb of God.

2. What warrant they were armed with; they came from the chief priests, and elders of the people; this armed multitude was sent by them upon this errand. He was taken up by a warrant from the great Sanhedrin, as a person obnoxious to them. Pilate the Roman governor gave them no warrant to search for him; he had no jealousy of him; but they were men who pretended to religion, and presided in the affairs of the church, that were active in this prosecution, and were the most spiteful enemies Christ had. It was a sign he was supported by a divine power, for by all earthly powers he was not only deserted but opposed; Pilate upbraided him with it, Thine own nation and the chief priests delivered thee to me, John xviii. 34.

3. The manner how it was done, and what passed at that time.

1. How Judas betrayed him: he did his business effectually, and his resolution in this wickedness may shame us who fail in that which is good. Observe,

1. The instructions he gave to the soldiers, ver. 43. He gave them a sign: as commander of the party in this action he gives the word or signal. He gave them a sign, lest by mistake they should seize one of the disciples instead of him who had so lately said in Judas's hearing, they would be willing to die for him. What abundance of caution was here not to miss him; that same is he; and when they had him in their hands, not to lose him; hold him fast; for he had sometimes escaped from those who thought to secure them; as Luke iv. 30. Though the Jews who frequented the temple could not but know him, yet the Roman soldiers perhaps had never seen him, and the sign was to direct them; and Judas by his kiss intended not only to distinguish him but to detain him, while they came behind him and laid hands on him.

2. The dissembling compliment he gave his Master. He came close up to Jesus; sure now if ever his wicked heart will relent, sure when he comes to look him in the face, he will either be awed by the majesty or charmed by the beauty of it. Dare he come into his very sight and presence to betray him? Peter denied Christ, but when the Lord turned and looked upon him, he relented presently; but Judas comes up to his Master's face and betrays him. Me mihi (perfidem) prodas? me mihi prodas? He said, Hail, master, and kissed him. It should seem our Lord Jesus had been wont to admit his disciples to such a degree of familiarity with him, as to give them his cheek to kiss after they had been any while absent, which Judas villainously used to facilitate his treason. A kiss is a token of allegiance and friendship, Psalm ii. 12. But Judas, when he broke all the laws of love and duty, profaned this sacred sign to serve his purpose. Note, There are many that betray Christ with a kiss, and Hail, master: who, under pretence of doing him honour, betray and undermine the interests of his kingdom. Mei in ore, sed in corde. Καταφύλας ἐν ὀφθαλμοῖς, Philo Judæus. Jacob's kiss and Judas's were much alike.

3. The entertainment his Master gave him, ver. 50.

1. He calls him friend. If he had called him villain and traitor, raca and thou fool, and child of the devil, he had not mis-called him; but he would teach us under the greatest provocation to forbear bitterness and evil-speaking, and to shew all meekness. Friend, for a friend he had been, and should have been, and seemed to be. Thus he upbraids him, as Abraham, when he called the rich man in hell son. He calls him friend, because he furthered his sufferings and so befriended him; whereas he called Peter Satan for attempting to hinder them.

2. He asked, Wherefore art thou come? Is it peace, Judas? explain thyself; if thou come as an enemy, what means this kiss? If as a friend, what mean these swords and staves? Wherefore art thou come? What harm have I done thee? Wherein have I wearied thee? ἵνα ὁ παῖς σου, "Wherefore art thou present?" Why hadst thou not so much shame left thee as to keep out of sight, which thou mightest have done, and yet have given the officers notice where I was? This was an instance of great impudence for him to be so forward and barefaced in this ill thing. But it is usual for apostates from religion to be the most bitter enemies to it; witness Julian. Thus Judas did his part.

2. How the officers and soldiers secured him. Then came they and laid Vol. III. No. CLXVIII*.

hands on Jesus, and took him; they made him their prisoner. How were they not afraid to stretch forth their hands against the Lord's anointed? We may well imagine what rude and cruel hands they were which this barbarous multitude laid on Christ; and now it is probable they handled him the more roughly for their being so often disappointed when they sought to lay hands on him. They could not have taken him if he had not surrendered himself and been delivered by the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God, Acts ii. 23. He who said concerning his anointed servants, Touch them not and do them no harm, Psalm cv. 14, 15. spared not his anointed Son, but delivered him up for us all; and again, gave his strength into captivity, his glory into the enemies hands, Psalm lxxviii. 61. See what was the complaint of Job, chap. xvi. 11. God hath delivered me to the ungodly, and apply that and other passages in that book of Job as a type of Christ.

Our Lord Jesus was made a prisoner, because he would in all things be treated as a malefactor, punished for our crime, and as a surety under arrest for our debt. The yoke of our transgressions was bound by the Father's hand upon the neck of the Lord Jesus, Lam. i. 14. He became a prisoner that he might set us at liberty; for he said, If ye seek me, let these go their way, John xviii. 8. And those are free indeed whom he makes so.

3. How Peter sought for Christ, and was checked for his pains. It is here only said to be one of them that was with Jesus in the garden; but John xviii. 10. we are told it was Peter who signalized himself upon this occasion. Observe,

1. Peter's rashness, ver. 51. He drew his sword. They had but two swords among them all, Luke xxii. 38. and one of them it seems fell to Peter's share; and now he thought it was time to draw it, and he laid about him as if he would have done some great matters, but all the execution he did was the cutting off an ear from a servant of the high-priest; designing it is likely, to cleave him down the head, because he saw him more forward than the rest in laying hands on Christ, he missed his blow. But if he would be striking, in my mind he should rather have aimed at Judas, and have marked him for a rogue. Peter had talked much, and more what he would do for his Master, he would lay down his life for him: yea, that he would; and now he would be as good as his word, and venture his life to rescue his Master; and thus far was commendable, that he had a great zeal for Christ and his honour and safety; but it was not according to knowledge, nor guided by discretion; for, (1.) He did it without warrant; some of the disciples asked indeed, Shall we smite with the sword? Luke xxii. 49. but Peter struck before they had an answer. We must see not only our cause good, but our call clear before we draw the sword, and be able to shew by what authority we do it, and who gave us that authority. (2.) He indiscreetly exposed himself and his fellow-disciples to the rage of the multitude: for what could they with two swords do against a band of men?

2. The rebuke which our Lord Jesus gave him, ver. 52. put up again thy sword into his place: He doth not command the officers and soldiers to put up their swords that were drawn against him, he left them to the judgment of God, who judges them that are without, but commands Peter to put up his sword, doth not chide him for what he had done, because done out of good will, but stops the progress of his arms, and provides that it should not be drawn into a precedent. Christ's errand into the world was to make peace. Note, The weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but spiritual, and Christ's ministers, though they are his soldiers, yet do not war after the flesh, 2 Cor. x. 3, 4. Not that the law of Christ overthrows either the law of nature or the law of nations, as far as those warrant subjects to stand up in defence of their civil rights and liberties, and their religion, when it is incorporated with them, but it provides for the preservation of public peace and order, by forbidding private persons, qua tales, to resist the powers that be; nay, we have a general precept that we resist not evil, Matt. v. 30. nor will Christ have his ministers propagate his religion by force of arms, religio cogit non potest, & defendendum non occidendo sed moriendo, Lanctantii Institut. As Christ forbade his disciples the sword of justice, Matt. xx. 25, 26. so here the sword of war. Christ bid Peter put up his sword, and never bid him draw it again; yet that which Peter is here blamed for, is his doing it unreasonably; the hour was come for Christ to suffer and die, he knew Peter knew it, the sword of the Lord was drawn against him, Zech. xiii. 7. and for Peter to draw his sword for him, was like, Master, spare thyself.

Three reasons Christ gives to Peter for this rebuke.

(1.) His drawing the sword would be dangerous to himself, to his fellow-disciples: They that take the sword shall perish with the sword; they that use violence fall by violence, and men hasten and increase their own troubles by blustering bloody methods of self-defence: They that take the sword before it is given them, that use it without warrant or call, expose themselves to the sword of war or public justice. Had it not been for the special care and providence of the Lord Jesus, Peter and the rest of them had, for ought I know, been cut in pieces presently. Grotius gives another, and a probable sense of this blow, making those that take the sword to be not Peter, but the officers and soldiers that come with swords to take Christ, they shall perish with the sword: Peter, thou needest not draw thy sword to punish them, God will certainly, shortly, and severely reckon with them. They took the Roman sword to seize Christ with, and by the Roman sword, not longer after, they and their place and nation were destroyed. Therefore we must not avenge ourselves, because God will repay, Rom. xii. 19. and therefore suffer with faith and patience, because persecutors will be paid in their own coin. See Rev. xiii. 10.

(2.) It was needless for him to draw his sword in defence of his Master, who if he pleased could summon into his service all the hosts of heaven, ver. 53. Thinkest thou that I cannot now pray to my Father, and he shall send from heaven effectual succours? Peter, if I would put by these sufferings, I could easily do it without thy hand or thy sword. Note, God has no need of us, of our services, much less of our sins, to bring about his purposes; and it argues our distrust and disbelief of the power of Christ, when we go out of the way of our duty to serve his interests. God can do his work without us; if we look into the heavens and see how he is attended there, we may easily infer, that though we be righteous, he is not beholden to us, Job xxxv. 5-7. Though Christ was crucified through weakness, it was a voluntary weakness, he submitted to death, not because he could not, but because he would not contend with it. This takes off the offence of the cross, and proves Christ crucified the power of God; even now in the depth of his sufferings he could call in the aid of legions of angels. Now, etiam, yet, though the business is so far gone, I could yet with a word speaking turn the scale. Christ here lets us know,

(1.) What a great interest he had in his Father; I can pray to my Father, and he will send me help from the sanctuary. I can, παρακαλέωμαι, "demand of my Father these succours;" Christ prayed as one having authority. Note, It is a great comfort to God's people, when they are surrounded with enemies on all hands, that they have a way open heaven-wards; if they can do nothing else, they can pray to him that can do every thing: And they who are much in prayer at other times, have most comfort in prayer when troublesome times come. Observe, Christ saith, not only that that God could send him such a number of angels, but that if he insisted upon it, he would do it: Though he had undertaken the work of our redemption, yet if he had desired to be released, it should seem by this the Father would not have held him to it: He might yet have gone out free from the service, but he loved it, and would not; so that it was only with the cords of his own love that he was bound to the altar.

(2.) What a great interest he had in the heavenly hosts; he shall presently give me more than twelve legions of angels, amounting to about seventy-two thousand. Observe here, (1.) There is an innumerable company of angels, Heb. xii. 22. A detachment of more than twelve legions might be spared for our service, and yet no miss of them from about the throne. See Dan. vii. 10. They are marshalled in exact order, like the well disciplined legions; not a confused multitude, but regular troops; all know their post and observe the word of command. (2.) This innumerable company of angels are at all the dispose of our heavenly Father, and do his pleasure, Psal. ciii. 20, 21. (1.) These angelic hosts were ready to come in to the assistance of our Lord Jesus in his sufferings, if he had needed or desired it. See Heb. i. 6—14. They would have been to him as they were to Elisha, chariots of fire, not only to secure him, but to consume those that set upon him. (4.) Our heavenly Father is to be eyed and acknowledged in all the services of the heavenly host; He shall give them me: Therefore angels are not to be prayed to, but the Lord of the angels, Psal. xci. 11. (5.) It is matter of comfort to all that wish well to the kingdom of Christ, that there is a world of angels always at the service of the Lord Jesus, that can do wonders. He that has the armies of heaven at his beck, can do what he pleases among the inhabitants of the earth; he shall presently give them me. See how ready his Father was to hear his prayer, and how ready the angels were to observe his orders; they are willing servants, winged messengers, they fly swiftly. This is very encouraging to those that have the honour of Christ, and the welfare of his church much at heart: Think they that they have more care and concern for Christ and his church, than God and the holy angels have?

(3.) It was no time to make any defence at all, or to offer to put by the stroke, for how then shall the scriptures be fulfilled, that thus it must be? ver. 54. It was written that Christ should be led as a lamb to the slaughter, Isa. liii. 7. Should he summon the angels to his assistance, he would not be led to the slaughter at all; should he permit his disciples to fight, he would not be led as a lamb quietly and without resistance; therefore he and his disciples must yield to the accomplishment of the predictions. Note, in all difficult cases the word of God must be conclusive against our own counsels, and nothing must be done, nothing attempted, against the fulfilling of the scripture. If the easing of our pains, the breaking of our bonds, the saving of our lives, will not consist with the fulfilling of the scripture, we ought to say, let God's word and will take place, let his law be magnified and made honourable, whatever becomes of us. Thus Christ checked Peter when he set up for his champion and captain of his life-guard.

4. We are next told how Christ argued the case with them that came to take him, ver. 55. though he did not resist them, yet he did reason with them. Note, It will consist with Christian patience under our sufferings, calmly to expostulate with our enemies and persecutors, as David with Saul, 1 Sam. xxiv. 14—xxvi. 18. Are ye come out, (1.) With rage and enmity, as against a thief, as if I were an enemy to the public safety, and deservedly suffered this? Thieves draw upon themselves the common odium, every one will lend a hand to stop a thief: and thus they fell upon Christ as the off-scouring of all things. If he had been the plague of his country, he could not have been prosecuted with more heat and violence. (2.) With all this power and force, as against the worst of thieves, that dare the law, bid defiance to public justice, and add rebellion to their sin; you are come out as against a thief, with swords and staves, as if there were danger of resistance; whereas ye have killed the just One, and he doth not resist you, James v. 6. If he had not been willing to suffer, it was folly to come with swords and staves, for they could not conquer him; had he been minded to resist, he would have esteemed their iron as straw, and their swords and staves would have been as briars before a consuming fire; but being willing to suffer, it was folly to come thus armed, for he would not contend with them.

He further expostulates with them, by minding them how he had behaved himself hitherto towards them, and they towards him. (1.) Of his public appearance; I sat daily with you in the temple teaching. And, (2.) Of their public countenance, ye laid no hold on me; How comes then this change? They were very unreasonable in treating him as they did; (1.) He had given them no occasion to look upon him as a thief, for he had taught in the temple: And such was the matter and such the manner of his teaching, that he was manifested in the consciences of all that heard him, not to be an ill man. Such gracious words as came from his mouth, were not the words of a thief or of one that had a devil. (2.) Nor had he given them occasion to look upon him as one that absconded or fled from justice, that they should come in the night to seize him; if they had any thing to say to him they might find him every day in the temple, ready to answer all challenges, all charges, and there they might do as they pleased with him; for the chief priests had the custody of the temple, and the command of the guards about it: but to come upon him thus clandestinely in the place of his retirement, was base and cowardly. Thus the greatest hero may be villainously assassinated in a corner, by one that in open field would tremble to look him in the face.

But all this was done (so it follows, ver. 56.) that the scriptures of the prophets might be fulfilled. It is hard to say, whether these are the words of the sacred historian, as a comment upon this story, and a direction to the Christian reader to compare it with the scriptures of the Old Testament, which pointed at it! or whether they are the words of Christ himself, as a reason why, though he could not but resent this base treatment yet he submitted to it, that the scriptures of the prophets might be fulfilled, to which he had just now referred himself, ver. 54. Note, The scriptures are in the fulfilling every day; and all those scriptures which spake of the Messiah, had their full accomplishment in our Lord Jesus.

5. How he was in the midst of this distress shamefully deserted by his disciples; They all forsook him and fled.

1. This was their sin, and it was a great sin for them who had left all to follow him, now to leave him for they know not what: There was unkindness in it, considering the relation they stand in to him, the favours they had received from him, and the melancholy circumstances he was now in. There was unfaithfulness in it, for they had solemnly promised to stick to him, and never to forsake him. He had indented for their safe-conduct, John xviii. 18. yet they could not rely upon that, but shifted for themselves by an inglorious flight. What folly was this, for fear of death to flee from him, whom they themselves knew and had acknowledged to be the fountain of life? John vi. 67, 68. Lord, what is man!

2. It was a part of Christ's suffering, it added affliction to his bonds, to be thus deserted, as it did to Job, chap. xix. 13. He hath put my brethren far from me: and to David, Psal. xxxviii. 11. Lovers and friends stand aloof from my sore: They should have staid with him to minister to him, to countenance him, and if need were to be witnesses for him at his trial, but they treacherously deserted him, as at St. Paul's first answer, no man stood with him: But there was a mystery in this; 1. Christ as a sacrifice for sin stood thus abandoned. The deer that by the keeper's arrow is marked out to be hunted and run down, is immediately deserted by the whole herd. In this he was made a curse for us, being left as one separated to evil. 2. Christ as the Saviour of souls stood thus alone; as he needed not, so he had not the assistance of any other in working out our salvation; he bore all, and did all himself: He trod the wine press alone, and when to admiration there was none to uphold, then his own arm wrought salvation, Isa. lxiii. 3—5. So the Lord alone did lead his Israel, and they stand still, and only see this great salvation, Deut. xxxii. 12.

57. ¶ And they that had laid hold on Jesus led him away to Caiaphas the high priest, where the Scribes and the elders were assembled. 58. But Peter followed him afar off unto the high priest's palace, and went in, and sat with the servants, to see the end. 59. Now the chief priests, and elders, and all the counsel, sought false witness against Jesus, to put him to death: 60. But found none: yea, though many false witnesses came, yet found they none. At the last came two false witnesses, 61. And said, This fellow said, I am able to destroy the temple of God, and to build it in three days. 62. And the high priest arose, and said unto him, Answerest thou nothing; what is it which these witness against thee? 63. But Jesus held his peace. And the high priest answered and said unto him, I adjure thee by the living God, that thou tell us whether thou be the Christ, the son of God. 64. Jesus saith unto him, Thou hast said, Nevertheless I say unto you, Hereafter shall ye see the Son of man sitting on the right hand of power, and coming in the clouds of heaven. 65. Then the high priest rent his clothes, saying, He hath spoken blasphemy; what further need have we of witnesses? behold, now ye have heard his blasphemy. 66. What think ye? They answered and said, He is guilty of death. 67. Then did they spit in his face, and buffeted him; and others smote him with the palms of their hands. 68. Saying, Prophecy unto us, thou Christ, Who is he that smote thee?

We have here the arraignment of our Lord Jesus in the ecclesiastical court, before the great sanhedrin. Observe,

First, The sitting of the court; the Scribes and the elders were assembled, though it was in the dead time of the night, when other people were fast asleep in their beds, yet to gratify their malice against Christ, they denied themselves that natural rest, and sat up all night to be ready to fall upon the prey which Judas and his men they hoped would seize.

See, 1. Who they were that were assembled; the Scribes, the principal teachers, and elders, the principal rulers of the Jewish church: these were the most bitter enemies to Christ our great teacher and ruler, on whom therefore they had a jealous eye, as one that eclipsed them; perhaps some of the Scribes and elders were not so malicious at Christ, as some others of them were, yet in concurrence with the rest they made themselves guilty. Now the scriptures were fulfilled, Psal. xxii. 16. The assembly of the wicked have inclosed me. Jeremiah complains of an assembly of treacherous men; and David of his enemies gathering themselves together against him, Psalm xxxv. 15.

2. Where they were assembled, in the palace of Caiaphas the high priest; there they assembled two days before to lay the plot, ver. 3. and there they now convened again to prosecute it. The high priest was Ab-beth-din, "the father of the house of judgment," but is now the patron of wickedness; his house should have been the sanctuary of oppressed innocency, but is become the throne of iniquity; and no wonder, when even God's house of prayer was made a den of thieves.

Secondly, The setting of the prisoner to the bar; they that had laid hold on Jesus led him away, hurried him no doubt with violence, led him as a trophy of their victory, led him as a victim to the altar; he was brought into Jerusalem through that which was called the sheep-gate, for that was the way into town from the mount of Olives: and it was so called, because the sheep appointed for sacrifice were brought that way to the temple; very fitly therefore is Christ led that way, who is the Lamb of God that takes away the sin of the world. Christ was led first to the high priest, for by the law all sacrifices were to be first presented to the priest, and delivered into his hand, Lev. xvii. 5.

Thirdly, The cowardice and faint-heartedness of Peter, ver. 58. But Peter followed afar off: This comes in here with an eye to the following story of his denying him. He forsook him as the rest did when he was seized, and what is here said of his following him is easy reconcileable with his forsaking him; such following was no better than forsaking him; for,

1. He followed him, but it was afar off: Some sparks of love and concern for his Master there were in his breast, and therefore he followed him, but fear and concern for his own safety prevailed, and therefore he followed afar off. Note, It looks ill, and bodes worse when those that are willing to be Christ's disciples, yet are not willing to be known to be so. Here began Peter's denying him, for to follow him afar off, is by little and little to go back from him. There is danger in drawing back, nay in looking back.

2. He followed him, but he went in and sat with the servants: He should have gone up to the court and attended on his Master, and appeared for him; but he went in where there was a good fire, and sat with the servants, not to silence their reproaches, but to screen himself. It was presumption in Peter thus to thrust himself into temptation; he that doth so throws himself out of God's protection. Christ had told Peter he could not follow him now, and had particularly warned him of his danger this night, and yet he would venture into the midst of this wicked crew; it helped David to walk in his integrity, that he hated the congregation of evil doers, and would not sit with the wicked.

3. He followed him, but it was only to see the end, led more by his curiosity than by his conscience; he attended as an idle spectator rather than as a disciple, a person concerned: He should have gone in to do Christ some service, or to get some wisdom and grace to himself, by observing Christ's behaviour under his sufferings; but he went in only to look about him; it is not unlikely that Peter went in, expecting that Christ would have made his escape miraculously out of the hands of his persecutors; that having so lately struck them down who came to seize him, he would now have struck them dead who sat to judge him, and this he had a mind to see; if so, it was folly for him to think of seeing any other end than what Christ had foretold, that he should be put to death. Note, It is more our concern to prepare for the end, whatever it may be, than curiously to inquire what the end will be. The event is God's but the duty is ours.

Fourthly, The trial of our Lord Jesus in this court.

1. They examined witnesses against him, though they were resolved right or wrong to condemn him; yet to put the better colour upon it, they would produce evidence against him. The crimes properly cognisable in their court were false doctrine and blasphemy: these they endeavoured to prove upon him. And observe here,

(1.) Their search for proof; They sought false witnesses against him; they had seized him, abused him, and after all are to seek for something to lay to his charge, and can shew no cause for his commitment: They tried if any of them could alledge seemingly from their own knowledge any thing against him; and suggested one calumny and then another, which if true, might touch his life. Thus evil men dig up mischief, Prov. xvi. 27. Here they trod in the steps of their predecessors, who devised devices against Jeremiah, Jer. xvii. 18.—xx. 10. They made proclamation, that if any one could give information against the prisoner at the bar, they were ready to receive it; and presently many bare false witness against him, ver. 60. for if a ruler hearken to lies, all his servants are wicked, and will carry false stories to him, Prov. xxix. 12. This is an evil often seen under the sun, Eccles. x. 5. If Naboth must be taken off, there are sons of Belial to swear against him.

(2.) Their success in this search; in several attempts they were baffled, they sought false testimonies among themselves, others came in to help them, and yet they found none; they could make nothing of it, could not tack the evidence together; or give any colour of truth or consistency with itself, no not they themselves being judges. The matters alledged were such palpable lies, as carried their own confutation along with them. This redounded much to the honour of Christ now, when they were loading him with disgrace.

But at last they met with two witnesses, who it seems agreed in their evidence, and therefore were hearkened to, in hopes that now the point was gained: The words they swore against him were, that he should say, I am able to destroy the temple of God, and to build it in three days, ver. 61. Now by this they designed to accuse him. (1.) As an enemy to the temple, and one that sought for the destruction of it, which they could not bear to hear of; for they valued themselves by the temple of the Lord, Jer. vii. 4. and when they abandoned other idols, made a perfect idol of that. Stephen was accused for speaking against this holy place, Acts vi. 13, 14. (2.) As one that dealt in witchcraft, or some such unlawful arts, by the help of which he could rear such a building in three days. They had often suggested that he was in league with Beelzebub; now as to this, (1.) The words were mis-recited, he said, Destroy ye this temple, John ii. 19. plainly intimating, that he spoke of a temple which his enemies would seek to destroy; they come and swear that he said I am able to destroy this temple, as if the design against it were his: He said, In three days I will raise it up, ἡγιστάριον, a word properly used of a living temple, "I will raise it to life." They come and swear that he said I am able, δυναμίζομαι, "to build it;" which is properly used of a house-temple. (2.) The words were misunderstood, he spake of the temple of his body, John ii. 21. And perhaps when he said this temple, pointed to or laid his hand upon his own body; but they swear that he said the temple of God, meaning this holy place. Note, There have been and still are, such as wrest the sayings of Christ to their own destruction, 2 Pet. iii. 16. (3.) Make the worst they could of it, it was no capital crime, even by their own law; if it had no question but he had been prosecuted for it when he spoke the words, in a public discourse some yeass ago, nay the words were capable of a laudable construction, and such as spoke a kindness for the temple; if it were destroyed he would exert himself to the utmost to rebuild it. But any thing that looked criminal, would serve to give colour to their malicious prosecution. Now the scriptures were fulfilled, which said, False witnesses are risen up against me, Psal. cxvii. 12. and see Psal. xxxv. 11. Though I have redeemed them they have spoken lies against me, Hos. vii. 13. We stand justly accused, the law accuseth us, Deut. xxvii. 26. John v. 45. Satan and our own consciences accuses us, 1 John iii. 20. The creatures cry against us: Now to discharge us from all these just accusations, our Lord Jesus submitted to this, to be unjustly and falsely accused, that in the virtue of his sufferings we may be enabled to triumph over all challenges, Who shall lay any thing to the charge of God's elect? Rom. viii. 33, 34. He was accused, that he might not be condemned; and if at any time we suffer thus, have all manner of evil, not only said, but swore against us falsely; let us remember that we cannot expect to fare better than our Master.

(5.) Christ's silence under all these accusations, to the amazement of the court, ver. 62. The high priest, the judge of the court, arose in some heat and said, Answerest thou nothing? Come, you prisoner at the bar, you hear what is sworn against you, what have you now to say for yourself? What defence can you make? or what pleas have you to offer in answer to this charge? But Jesus held his peace, ver. 63. not as one sullen; or as one self-condemned, or as one astonished and in confusion: not because he wanted something to say, or knew not how to say it, but that the scripture might be fulfilled, Isa. liii. 7. as the sheep is dumb before the shearer, and before the butcher, so he opened not his mouth; and that he might be the Son of David, who, when his enemies spake mischievous things against him, was as a deaf man that heard not, Psal. xxxviii. 12, 13, 14. He was silent, because his hour was come; he would not deny the charge, because he was willing to submit to the sentence, otherwise he could as easily have put them to silence and shame now, as he had done many a time before. If God had entered into judgment with us, we had been speechless, Matt. xxii. 12. not able to answer for one of a thousand, Job ix. 3. Therefore when Christ was made sin for us he was silent, and left it to his blood to speak, Heb. xii. 24. He stood mute at this bar, that we might have something to say at God's bar.

Well, this way will not do, aliā aggrēdiendum est viā.

2. They examined our Lord Jesus himself upon an oath like that ex officio, and since they could not accuse him, they will try, contrary to the law of equity, to make him accuse himself.

1. Here is the interrogatory put to him by the high priest. Observe, (1.) The question itself, Whether thou be the Christ, the son of God? i. e. Whether thou pretend to be so, for they will by no means admit it into consideration, whether he really be so or no; though the Messiah was to be the consolation of Israel, and glorious things were spoken concerning him in the Old Testament; yet so strangely besotted were they with a jealousy of any thing that threatened their exorbitant power and grandeur, that they would never enter into the examination of the matter, whether Jesus were the Messiah or no, never once put the case, suppose he should be so, only would have him confess that he called himself so, that they might on that indict him as a deceiver. What will not pride and malice carry men to.

(2.) The solemnity of the proposal of it; I adjure thee by the living God that thou tell us: Not that he had any regard to the living God, but took his name in vain, only thus he hoped to gain his point with our Lord Jesus; if thou hast any value for the blessed name of God, and reverence for his Majesty, tell us this: If he should refuse to answer when he was thus adjured, they would charge him with contempt of the blessed name of God. Thus the persecutors of good men often take advantage against them by their consciences, as Daniel's enemies did against him in the matter of his God.

2. Christ's answer to this interrogatory, ver. 64. in which,

1. He owns himself to be the Christ the Son of God. Thou hast said, i. e. it is as thou hast said, for in St. Mark it is, I am. Hitherto he seldom professed himself expressly to be the Christ, the Son of God: the tenor of his doctrine spoke it, and his miracles proved it, but now he would not omit to make a confession of it. (1.) Because that would have looked like a disowning of that truth which he came into the world to bear witness to. (2.) It would have looked like declining his sufferings, when he knew the acknowledgment of this would give his enemies all the advantage they desired against him. He thus confessed himself, for example and encouragement to his followers when they are called to it to confess him before men, whatever hazards they run by it. And according to this pattern the martyrs readily confessed themselves Christians, though they knew they must die for it, as the martyrs at Thebais, Euseb. Hist. l. 8. c. 9. That Christ answered out of a regard to the adjuration which Caiaphas had profanely used by the living God, I cannot think, any more than that he had any regard to the like adjuration in the devil's mouth, Mark v. 7.

2. He refers himself to the proof of this to his second coming, and indeed to his whole estate of exaltation: It is probable they looked upon him with a scornful disdainful smile, when he said, I am; a likely fellow, thought they, to be the Messiah, who is expected to come in so much pomp and power; and to that this nevertheless refers. Though now you see me in this low and abject state, and think it a ridiculous thing for me to call myself the Messiah, nevertheless the day is coming when I shall appear otherwise. Hereafter, ἄρτι, à modo, "shortly;" for his exaltation began in a few days, now shortly his kingdom began to be set up; and hereafter ye shall see the Son of man sitting on the right hand of power, to judge the world; of which his coming shortly to judge and destroy the Jewish nation would be a type and earnest. Note, The terrors of the judgment day will be a sensible conviction to the most obstinate infidelity, not in order to conversion, that will be then too late, but in order to an eternal confusion. Observe, (1.) Whom they should see, the Son of man. Having owned himself the Son of God, even now in his estate of humiliation, he speaks of himself as the Son of man, even in his estate of exaltation? for he had these two distinct natures in one person. The incarnation of Christ has made him Son of God and Son of Man, for he is Immanuel, God with us. (2.) In what posture they should see him, (1.) Sitting on the right hand of power, according to the prophecy of the Messiah, Psal. xc. 1. Sit thou at my right hand; which notes both the dignity and the dominion he is exalted to: Though now he stood at the bar, they should shortly see him sit on the throne. (2.) Coming in the clouds of heaven; this refers to another prophecy concerning the Son of man, Dan. vii. 13, 14. which is applied to Christ, Luke i. 33. when he came to destroy Jerusalem: so terrible was the judgment, and so sensible the indications of the wrath of the Lamb in it, that it might be called a visible appearance of Christ; but doubtless it has reference to the general judgment: to this day he appeals, and summons them to an appearance then and there to answer for what they were now doing: He had spoken of this day to his disciples a while ago for their comfort, and had bid them lift up their heads for joy in the prospect of it, Luke xxi. 27, 28. Now he speaks of it to his enemies for their terror; for nothing more comfortable to the righteous, nor more terrible to the wicked, than Christ's judging the world at the last day.

Fifthly, His conviction upon this trial: The high priest rent his clothes, according to the custom of the Jews, when they heard or saw any thing done or said which they looked upon to be a reproach to God, as Isa. xxxvi. 22.—xxxvii. 1. Acts xiv. 14. Caiaphas would be thought extremely tender of the glory of God. Come, see his zeal for the Lord of hosts; but while he pretended an abhorrence of blasphemy, he was himself the greatest blasphemer; he now forgot the law which forbade the high priest in any case to rent his clothes, unless we will suppose this an excepted case.

Observe, 1. The crime he was found guilty, blasphemy, He hath spoken blasphemy, i. e. he hath spoken reproachfully of the living God; that is the notion we have of blasphemy; because we by sin had reproached the Lord, therefore Christ, when he was made sin for us, was condemned as a blasphemer for the truth he told.

2. The evidence upon which they found him guilty, Ye have heard the blasphemy, what need we trouble ourselves to examine witnesses any further? He owned the fact, that he did profess himself the Son of God, and then they made blasphemy of it, and convicted him upon his confession. The high priest triumphs in the success of the snare he had laid; now I think I have done his business for him, Aha, so would we have it. Thus was he judged out of his own mouth at their bar, because we are liable to be so judged at God's bar. No need of witnesses against us, our own consciences are against us instead of a thousand witnesses.

Sixthly, His sentence passed upon this conviction, ver. 66.

Here is, 1. Caiaphas's appeal to the bench; What think ye? See his base hypocrisy and partiality, when he had already prejudged the cause, and pronounced him a blasphemer, then as if he were willing to be advised he asks the judgment of his brethren; but hide malice never so cunningly under the robe of justice, some way or other it will break out: If he would have dealt fairly, he should have collected the votes of the bench seriatim, and begun with the junior, and have delivered his own opinion last; but he knew by the authority of his place he could sway the rest, and therefore declares his judgment, and presumes they are all of his mind; he takes the crime, as to Christ, pro confesso, and the judgment, as the court, pro concessio.

2. Their concurrence with him: they said, He is guilty of death; perhaps they did not all concur, it is certain Joseph of Arimathea, if he was present, dissented, Luke xxiii. 51. so did Nicodemus, and it is likely others with them; however the majority carried it that way: but perhaps this being an extraordinary council, or cabal rather, none had notice to be present but such as they knew would concur, and so it might be voted nemine contradicente. The judgment was, He is guilty of death; by the law he deserves to die. Though they had not power now to put any man to death, yet by such a judgment as this they made a man an outlaw among his people, (qui caput gerit lupinum, so our old law describes an outlaw) and so exposed him to the fury either of a popular tumult, as Stephen was, or to be clamoured against before the governor, as Christ was. Thus was the Lord of life condemned to die, that through him there may be no condemnation to us.

Seventhly, The abuses and indignities done to him after sentence passed, ver.

ver. 67, 68. Then, when he was found guilty, they spat in his face. Because they had not power to put him to death, and could not be sure they should prevail with the governor to be their executioner, they would do him all the mischief they could, now they had him in their hands. Condemned prisoners are taken under the special protection of the law, which they are to make satisfaction to, and by all civilized nations have been treated with tenderness; sufficient is this punishment. But when they had passed sentence upon our Lord Jesus, he was treated as if hell had broke loose upon him, as if he were not only worthy of death, but that were too good for him, and he were unworthy of the compassion shewed to the worst malefactors. Thus he was made a curse for us. But who were they that were thus barbarous? It should seem the very same that had passed sentence upon him. They said, he is guilty of death, and then did they spit in his face. The priests began, and then no wonder if the servants, who would do any thing to make sport to themselves, and curry favour with their wicked masters, carried on the humour. See how they abused him.

1. They spat in his face. Thus the scripture was fulfilled, Isa. 1. 6. He hid not his face from shame and spitting. Job complained of this indignity done to him, and herein was a type of Christ, Job iii. 10. they spare not to spit in my face; it is an expression of the greatest contempt and indignation possible; looking upon him as more despicable than the very ground they spit upon. When Miriam was under the leprosy, it was looked upon as a disgrace to her, like that of her father spitting in her face, Numb. xii. 14. He that refused to raise up seed to his brother was to undergo this dishonour, Deut. xxv. 9. Yet Christ, when he was repairing the decays of the great family of mankind, submitted to it. That face which was fairer than the children of men, which was white and ruddy, and which angels reverence, was thus filthily abused by the basest and vilest of the children of men. Thus was confusion poured upon his face, that ours might not be filled with everlasting shame and contempt. They who now profane his blessed name, abuse his word, and hate his image on his sanctified ones: what do they better than spit in his face? and would do that if it were in their reach.

2. They buffeted him, and smote him with the palms of their hands. This added pain to the shame, for both came in with sin. Now the scripture was fulfilled, Isa. 1. 6. I gave my cheek to them that plucked off the hair; and Lam. iii. 30. He giveth his cheek to him that smiteth him, he is filled with reproach, and yet keepeth silence, ver. 28. and Micah v. 1. They shall smite the judge of Israel with a rod upon the cheek; and here the margin reads it, they "smote him with rods;" for so ἔκταναν signifies, and this he submitted to.

3. They challenged him to tell who struck him, having first blindfolded him; Prophecy unto us, thou Christ, who is he that smote thee? (1.) They made sport with him, as the Philistines did with Samson; it is grievous to those that are in misery, for people to make merry about them, but much more to make merry with them and their misery. Here was an instance of the greatest depravity and degeneracy of the human nature that could be, to shew that there was need of a religion that should recover men to humanity. (2.) They made a sport with his prophetic office. They had heard him called a prophet, and that he was famed for wonderful discoveries; this they upbraided him with, and pretended to make trial of; as if the divine omniscience must lackey it to a piece of children's play. They put a like affront upon Christ, who profanely jest with the scripture, and make themselves merry with holy things; like Belshazzar's revels in the temple-bowls.

69. ¶ Now Peter sat without in the palace: and a damsel came unto him, saying, Thou also wast with Jesus of Galilee. 70. But he denied before them all, saying, I know not what thou sayest. 71. And when he was gone out into the porch, another maid saw him, and said unto them that were there, This fellow was also with Jesus of Nazareth. 72. And again he denied with an oath, I do not know the man. 73. And after a while came unto him they that stood by, and said to Peter, Surely thou also art one of them; for thy speech bewrayeth thee. 74. Then began he to curse and to swear, saying, I know not the man. And immediately the cock crew. 75. And Peter remembered the words of Jesus, which said unto him, Before the cock crow, thou shalt deny me thrice. And he went out, and wept bitterly.

We have here the story of Peter's denying his Master, and it comes in as a part of Christ's sufferings. Our Lord Jesus was now in the high-priest's hall, not to be tried but baited rather, and then it would have been some comfort to him to see his friends near him: But we do not find any friend he had about the court, save Peter only, and better he had been at a distance. Observe how he fell, and how he got up again by repentance.

First, His sin, which is here impartially related, to the honour of the penman of scripture, who dealt faithfully. Observe,

1. The immediate occasion of Peter's sin. He sat without in the palace, among the servants of the high-priest. Note, Bad company is to many an occasion of sin; and those who needlessly thrust themselves into it, go upon the devil's ground, venture into his crouds, and may expect either to be tempted and ensnared, as Peter was, or to be ridiculed and abused as his Master was; and scarce can come out of such company without guilt or grief, or both. He that would keep God's commandments and his own covenants, must say to evil-doers, Depart from me, Psalm cxix. 115. Peter spoke from his own experience, when he warned his new converts to save themselves from that untoward generation; for he had like to have ruined himself but by going once among them.

2. The temptation to it. He was challenged as a retainer to Jesus of Galilee; first one maid, and then another, and then the rest of the servants charged it upon him. Thou also wast with Jesus of Galilee, ver. 69. And again, This fellow was with Jesus of Nazareth, ver. 71. And again, ver. 73. Thou also art one of them, for thy speech bewrayeth thee to be a Galilean; whose dialect and pronunciation differed from that of the other Jews. Happy he whose speech bewrays him to be a disciple of Christ, by the holiness and seriousness of whose discourse it appears that he has been with Jesus; Observe how scornfully they speak of Christ, Jesus of Galilee, and of Nazareth, upbraiding him with the country he was of; and how disdainfully they speak of Peter, This fellow; as if they thought it a reproach to them to have such a man in their company, and he was well enough served for coming among them; yet they had nothing to accuse him of, but that he was with Jesus, which they thought was enough to render him both a scandalous and a suspected person.

3. The sin itself. When he was charged as one of Christ's disciples he denied it, was ashamed and afraid to own himself so, and would have all about him to believe that he had no knowledge of him, nor any kindness or concern for him.

1. Upon the first mention of it, he said, I know not what thou sayest. This was a shuffling answer, he took on him he did not understand the charge, that he knew not who she meant by Jesus of Galilee, or what she meant by being with him: so making strange of that which his heart was now as full of as it could be. (1.) It is a fault thus to misrepresent our own apprehensions, thoughts and affections, to serve a turn; to take on us, we do not understand, or did not think of or remember, that which yet we do apprehend, and did think of and remember; this is a species of lying which we are more prone to than any other, because in this a man is not easily disproved; for who knows the spirit of a man, save he himself? But God knows it, and we must be restrained from this wickedness by a fear of him, Prov. xxiv. 12. (2.) It is yet a greater fault to be shy of Christ, to dissemble our knowledge of him, and to shift off a confession of him, when we are called to it; it is in effect to deny him.

2. Upon the next attack he said flat and plain, I know not the man, and backed it with an oath, ver. 72. This was in effect to say, I will not own him, I am no Christian; for Christianity is the knowledge of Christ, Why, Peter? Canst thou look upon yonder prisoner at the bar, and say thou dost not know him? Didst thou not quit all to follow him? And hast thou not been the man of his counsel? Hast thou not known him better than any one else? Didst thou not confess him to be the Christ the Son of the Blessed? Hast thou forgot all the kind and tender looks thou hast had from him, and all the intimate fellowship thou hast had with him? Canst thou look him in the face and say, thou dost not know him?

3. Upon the third assault he began to curse and to swear, saying, I know not the man, ver. 74. This was worst of all, for the way of sin is down-hill. He cursed and swore, (1.) To back what he said, and to gain credit to it, that they might not any more call it in question; he did not only say it but swear it, and yet what he said was false. Note, We have reason to suspect the truth of that which is backed with rash oaths and imprecations, None but the devil's sayings need the devil's proofs. He that will not be restrained by the third commandment from mocking his God, will not be kept by the ninth from deceiving his brother. (2.) He designed it to be an evidence for him that he was none of Christ's disciples, for this was none of their language. Cursing and swearing is enough to prove a man no disciple of Christ; for it is the language of his enemies thus to take his name in vain.

This is written for warning to us, that we sin not after the similitude of Peter's transgression; that we never, either directly or indirectly, deny Christ the Lord that bought us, by rejecting his offers, resisting his Spirit, dissembling our knowledge of him, and being ashamed of him and his word, or afraid of suffering for him and with his suffering people.

4. The aggravations of this sin, which may be of use to take notice of, that we may observe the like transgressions in our own sins. Consider, (1.) Who he was, an apostle, one of the first three, that had been upon all occasions the most forward to speak to the honour of Christ. The greater profession we make of religion, the greater is our sin if in any thing we walk unworthily. (2.) What fair warning his Master had given him of his danger; which, if he had regarded as he ought to have done, he would not have run himself into the temptation. (3.) How solemnly he had promised to adhere to Christ in this night of trial; he had said again and again, I will never deny thee; no, I will die with thee first; yet he broke these bonds in sunder, and his word was yea and nay. (4.) How soon he fell into this sin after the Lord's Supper. There to receive such an inestimable pledge of redeemed love, and yet the same night, before morning, to disown his Redeemer, was indeed turning aside quickly. (5.) How weak comparatively the temptation was; it was not the judge or any of the officers of the court that charged him with being a disciple of Jesus, but a silly maid or two, that probably designed him no hurt, nor would have done him any if he had owned it. This was but running with the footmen, Jer. xii. 5. (6.) How often he repeated it; even after the cock had crowed once he continued in the temptation, and a second and a third time relapsed into the sin. Is this Peter? How art thou fallen?

Thus was his sin aggravated; but on the other hand there is this to extenuate it, that what he said he said in his haste, Psalm cxvi. 11. He fell into the sin by surprise, not as Judas with design; his heart was against it; he spoke very ill, but it was unadvisedly and before he was aware.

Secondly, Peter's repentance for this sin, ver. 75. The former is written for our admonition, that we may not sin; but if at any time we be overtaken, this is written for our imitation, that we may make haste to repent. Now observe,

1. What it was that brought Peter to repentance.

(1.) The cock crew, ver. 74. a common contingency; but Christ having mentioned the crowing of the cock in the warning he gave him, that made it a means of bringing him to himself. The word of Christ can put a significance upon whatever sign he shall please to choose, and by virtue of that word he can make it very beneficial to the souls of his people. The crowing of a cock is to Peter instead of a John Baptist, the voice of one calling to repentance. Conscience should be to us as the crowing of a cock, to put us in mind of what we had forgotten. When David's heart smote him, the cock crew. Where there is a living principle of grace in the soul, though for the present overpowered by temptation, a little hint will serve, only for a memorandum, when God sets in with it to recover it from a by-path. Here was the crowing of a cock, made a happy occasion of the conversion of a soul. Christ comes sometimes in mercy at cock-crowing.

(2.) He remembered the words of the Lord; this was it that brought him to himself, and melted him into tears of godly sorrow; a sense of his ingratitude to Christ, and the slight regard he had had to the gracious warning Christ had given him. Note, A serious reflection upon the words of the Lord Jesus will be a powerful inducement to repentance, and will help to break the heart for sin. Nothing grieves a penitent more, than that he has sinned against the grace of the Lord Jesus and the tokens of his love.

2. How his repentance was expressed; He went out and wept bitterly. 1. His sorrow was secret, he went out, out of the high-priest's hall, vexed at himself that ever he came into it, now he found what a snare he was in, and got out of it as fast as he could. He went out into the porch before, ver. 71. and if he had gone quite off then, his second and third denial had been prevented; but then he came in again, now he went out and came in no more. He went out to some place of solitude and retirement where he might bemoan himself, like the doves of the valleys, Ezek. vi. 9. Jer. ix. 1, 2. He went out that he might not be disturbed in his devotions on this sad occasion. We may then be most free in our communion with God, when we are most free from the converse and business of this world. In mourning for sin we find the families apart, and their wives apart, Zech. xii. 11, 12.

3. His sorrow was serious. He wept bitterly. Sorrow for sin must not be slight, but great and deep, like that for an only son. Those that have sinned sinned sweetly must weep bitterly; for sooner or later sin will be bitterness. This deep sorrow is requisite, not to satisfy divine justice, a sea of tears would not do that, but to evidence that there is a real change of mind, which is the essence of repentance, to make the pardon the more welcome, and sin for the future the more loathsome. Peter that wept so bitterly for denying Christ, never denied him again, but confessed him often and openly, and in the mouth of danger; so far from ever saying, I know not the man, that he made all the house of Israel know, assuredly that this same Jesus was Lord and Christ. True repentance for any sin will be best evidenced by our abounding in the contrary grace and duty; that is a sign of our weeping, not only bitterly but sincerely. Some of the ancients say, that as long as Peter lived, he never heard a cock crow but it set him a weeping. Those that have truly sorrowed for sin, will sorrow upon every remembrance of it; yet not so as to hinder, but rather to increase their joy in God and in his mercy and grace.

C H A P. XXVII.

It is a very affecting story which is recorded in this chapter concerning the sufferings and death of our Lord Jesus. Considering the thing itself, there cannot be a more tragical story told us; common humanity would melt the heart to find an innocent and excellent person thus mis-used. But considering the design and fruit of Christ's sufferings, it is gospel, it is good news that Jesus Christ was thus delivered for our offences, and there is nothing we have more reason to glory in than the cross of Christ. In this chapter observe, 1. How he was prosecuted. (1.) The delivering of him to Pilate, ver. 1, 2. (2.) The despair of Judas, ver. 3—10. (3.) The arraignment and trial of Christ before Pilate, ver. 11—14. (4.) The clamours of the people against him, ver. 15—25. (5.) Sentence passed, and the warrant signed for his execution, ver. 26. 2. He was executed. (1.) He was barbarously used, ver. 27—30. (2.) Led to the place of execution, ver. 31—33. (3.) There he had all possible indignities done him, and reproaches cast upon him, ver. 34—44. (4.) Heaven frowned upon him, ver. 45—49. (5.) Many remarkable things attended his death, ver. 50—56. (6.) He was buried, and a watch set over his grave, ver. 57—66.

1. WHEN the morning was come, all the chief priests and elders of the people took counsel against Jesus to put him to death: 2. And when they had bound him, they led him away, and delivered him to Pontius Pilate the governor. 3. ¶ Then Judas, which had betrayed him, when he saw that he was condemned, repented himself, and brought again the thirty pieces of silver to the chief priests and elders, 4. Saying, I have sinned in that I have betrayed the innocent blood. And they said, What is that to us? see thou to that. 5. And he cast down the pieces of silver in the temple, and departed, and went and hanged himself. 6. And the chief priests took the silver pieces, and said, It is not lawful for to put them into the treasury, because it is the price of blood. 7. And they took counsel, and bought with them the potter's field, to bury strangers in. 8. Wherefore that field was called, The field of blood unto this day. 9. (Then was fulfilled that which was spoken by Jeremy the prophet, saying, And they took the thirty pieces of silver, the price of him that was valued, whom they of the children of Israel did value; 10. And gave them for the potter's field, as the Lord appointed me:).

We left Christ in the hands of the chief priests and elders, condemned to die, but they could only show their teeth; about two years before this the Romans had taken from the Jews the power of capital punishment, they could put no man to death, and therefore early in the morning another council is held to consider what is to be done. And here we are told what was done in that morning council, after they had been for two or three hours consulting with their pilows.

1. Christ is delivered up to Pilate, that he might execute the sentence they had passed upon him. Judea having been almost one hundred years before this conquered by Pompey, had ever since been tributary to Rome, and was lately made part of the province of Syria, and subject to the government of the president of Syria, under whom there were several procurators, who chiefly attended the business of the revenues; but sometimes, as Pilate particularly, had the whole power of the president lodged in them. This was a plain evidence that the sceptre was departed from Judah, and therefore now the Shiloh must come, according to Jacob's prophecy, Gen. xlix. 10. Pilate is characterised by the Roman writers of that time to be a man of a rough and haughty spirit, willful and implacable, and extremely covetous and oppressive; the Jews had a great enmity to his person, and were weary of his government, and yet they made use of him as a tool of their malice against Christ.

(1.) They bound Jesus. He was bound when he was first seized; but either they took off these bonds when he was before the council, or now they added to them. Having found him guilty, they tied his hands behind him, as they usually do with convicted criminals. He was already bound with the bonds of love to man and of his own undertaking, else he had soon broke these bonds, as Samson did his. We were fettered with the bond of iniquity, held in the cords of our sins, Prov. v. 22. but God had bound the yoke of our transgressions upon the neck of our Lord Jesus, Lam. i. 14. that we might be loosed by his bonds, as we are healed by his stripes.

(2.) They led him away in a sort of triumph, led him as a lamb to the slaughter, so was he taken from prison and from judgment, Isa. liii. 7, 8. It was near a mile from Caiaphas's house to Pilate's. All that way they led him through the streets of Jerusalem, when in the morning they began to kill, to make him a spectacle to the world.

(3.) They delivered him to Pontius Pilate; according to that which Christ had often said, that he should be delivered to the Gentiles. Both Jews and Gentiles were obnoxious to the judgment of God, and concluded under sin, and Christ was to be the Saviour both of Jews and Gentiles, and therefore Christ was brought into the judgment both of Jews and Gentiles, and both had a hand in his death. See how these corrupt church-rulers abused the civil magistrate, making use of him to execute their unrighteous decrees, and inflict the grievance which they had prescribed, Isa. x. 1. Thus have the kings of the earth been wretchedly imposed upon by the papal powers, and condemned to the drudgery of extirpating with the sword of war as well as that of justice those whom they have marked for heretics, right or wrong, to the great prejudice of their own interests.

2. The money which they had paid to Judas for betraying Christ, is by him delivered back to them, and Judas in despair hangs himself. The chief priests and elders supported themselves with this in prosecuting Christ, that his own disciples betrayed him to them; but now in the midst of the prosecution that string failed them, and even he is made to them a witness of Christ's innocency and a monument of God's justice; which served, (1.) For glory to Christ in the midst of his sufferings, and a specimen of his victory over Satan who had entered into Judas. (2.) For warning to his persecutors, and to leave them the more inexcusable. If their heart had not been fully set in them to do this evil, what Judas said and did, one would think should have stopped the prosecution.

1. See here how Judas repented, not like Peter, who repented, believed, and was pardoned; no, he repented, despaired, and was ruined. Now observe here,

(1.) What induced him to repent. It was when he saw that he was condemned. It is very likely Judas expected that either Christ would have made his escape out of their hands, or would so have pleaded his own cause at their bar as to have come off, and then Christ would have had the honour, the Jews the shame, and he the money, and no harm done. This he had no reason to expect, because he had so often heard his Master say, he must be crucified; yet it is probable he did expect it, and when the event did not answer his vain fancy, then he fell into this horror, when he saw the stream strong against Christ and him yielding to it. Note, Those who measure actions by the consequences of them rather than by the divine law, will find themselves mistaken in their measures. The way of sin is downhill; and if we cannot easily stop ourselves, much less can we stop others whom we have set a going in a sinful way. He repented himself, i. e. he was filled with grief, anguish, and indignation at himself, in reflexion upon what he had done. When he was tempted to betray his Master, the thirty pieces of silver looked very fine and glittering, like the wine when it is red, and gives its colour in the cup. But when the thing was done, and the money paid, the silver was become dross, it bit like a serpent, and stung like an adder. Now his conscience flew in his face; "What have I done? What a fool? What a wretch am I to sell my Master, and all my comfort and happiness in him, for such a trifle? All these abuses and indignities done him are chargeable upon me; it is long of me that he is bound and condemned, spit upon and buffeted. I little thought it would have come to this when I made that wicked bargain; so foolish was I, and ignorant, and so like a beast." Now he curseth the bag he carried, the money he coveted, the priests he dealt with, and the day that he was born. The remembrance of his Master's goodness to him, which he had so basely requited; the bowels of mercy he had spurned at, and the fair warnings he had slighted steeled his convictions, and made them the more piercing. Now he found his Master's words true: It were better for that man he had never been born. Note, Sin will soon change its taste. Though it be rolled under the tongue as a sweet morsel, in the bowels it will be turned into the gall of asps, Job xx. 12, 13, 14. like John's book, Rev. x. 9.

(2.) What were the indications of his repentance?

1. He made restitution. He brought again the thirty pieces of silver to the chief priests, when they were all together publicly. Now the money burned in his conscience, and he was as sick of it as ever he had been fond of it. Note, That which is ill gotten will never do good to those that get it, Jer. xiii. 10. Job xx. 15. If he had repented and brought the money back before he had betrayed Christ, he might have done it with comfort, then he had agreed while yet in the way; but now it was too late, now he cannot do it without horror, wishing ten thousand times he had never meddled with it. See James v. 3. He brought it again. Note, What is unjustly gotten must not be kept; for that is a continuance in the sin by which it was got, and such an avowing of it as is not consistent with repentance. He brought it to those from whom he had it, to let them know that he repented his bargain. Note, Those who have served and hardened others in their sin, when God gives them repentance, should let them know it whose sins they have been partakers in, that it may be a means to bring them to repentance.

2. He made confession, ver. 4. I have sinned in that I have betrayed innocent blood. (1.) To the honour of Christ he pronounced his blood innocent. If he had been guilty of any ill practices, Judas as his disciple would certainly have known it, and as his betrayer would certainly have discovered it; but he freely and without being urged to it, pronounces him innocent to the face of those who had now pronounced him guilty. (2.) To his own shame he confesseth that he had sinned in betraying this blood. He doth not lay the blame on any one else; doth not say, you have sinned in hiring me to do it, but takes it all to himself, I have sinned in doing it. Thus far Judas went towards his repentance, yet it was not to salvation. He confessed, but not to God, did not go to him, and say, I have sinned Father, against heaven. He confessed the betraying of innocent blood, but did not confess that wicked love of money which was the root of this evil. Yet there are those who betray Christ and yet justify themselves in it, and so come short of Judas.

2. See here how the chief priests and elders entertained Judas's penitential confession; they said, What is that to us? see thou to that. He made them his confessors, and that was the absolution they gave him; more like the priests of devils than like the priests of the holy living God.

1. See here how carelessly they speak of the betraying of Christ. Judas had told them that the blood of Christ was innocent blood, and they say, What is that to us? Was it nothing to them that they had thirsted after this blood and hired Judas to betray it, and had now condemned it to be shed unjustly? Is this nothing to them? Doth it give no check to the violence of their prosecution, no warning to take heed what they do to this just man? Thus do fools make a mock at sin, as if no harm were done, no hazard run by the commission of the greatest wickedness. Thus light do many make of Christ crucified, what is it to them that he suffered such things?

2. See how carelessly they speak of the sin of Judas; he said, I have sinned, and they said, What is that to us? What are we concerned in thy sin, that thou tellest us of it? Note, It is folly for us to think that the sins of others are nothing to us, especially those sins that we are any way accessory to or partakers in. Is it nothing to us that God is dishonoured, souls wounded, Satan gratified, and his interests served? and that we have aided and abetted it? If the elders of Jezreel, to please Jezebel, murder Naboth, is that nothing to Ahab? Yes, he has killed, for he has taken possession, 1 Kings xxi. 19. The guilt of sin is not so easily transferred as some people think it is. If there were guilt in the matter, they tell Judas he must look to it, he must bear it. (1.) Because he had betrayed him to them. His was indeed the greater sin, John xix. 11, but it did not therefore follow that theirs was no sin. It is a common instance of the deceitfulness of our hearts to extenuate our own sin by the aggravation of other people's people's sins. But the judgment of God is according to truth, not according to comparison. (2.) Because he knew and believed him to be innocent. If he be innocent, see thou to it, that is more than we know, we have adjudged him guilty, and therefore may justly prosecute him as such. Wicked practices are buoyed up by wicked principles, and particularly by this, That sin is sin only to those that think it to be so; that it is no harm to persecute a good man if we take him to be an ill man; but those who thus think to mock God, will but deceive and destroy themselves.

3. See how carelessly they speak of the conviction, terror, and remorse that Judas was under. They were glad to make use of him in the sin, and were then very fond of him, none more welcome to them than Judas, when he said, What wilt thou give me, and I will betray him unto you? They did not say, What is that to us? But now his sin had put him into a fright, now they slighted him, had nothing to say to him, but turned him over to his own terrors; what did he come to trouble them with his melancholy fancies? they had something else to do than to heed him. But why so shy? (1.) Perhaps they were in some fear lest the sparks of his conviction brought too near should kindle a fire in their own consciences, and lest his moans listened to should give an alarm to their own convictions. Note, Obstinate sinners stand upon their guard against convictions; and those that are resolutely impenitent, look with disdain upon the penitent. (2.) However they were in no concern to succour Judas; when they had brought him into the snare, they not only left him but laughed at him. Note, Sinners under convictions will find their old companions in sin, but miserable comforters. It is usual for those that love the treason to hate the traitor.

3. Here is the utter despair that Judas was hereby driven into. If the chief priests had promised him to stay the prosecution, it would have been some comfort to him, but seeing no hopes of that he grew desperate, ver. 5.

1. He cast down the pieces of silver in the temple. The chief priests would not take the money, for fear of taking thereby the whole guilt to themselves, which they were willing Judas should bear the load of; Judas would not keep it, it was too hot for him to hold, he therefore threw it down in the temple, that whether they would or no, it might fall into the hands of the chief priests. See what a drug money was, when the guilt of sin was tacked to it, or was thought to be so.

2. He went and hanged himself. (1.) "He retired," ἀνεῖσθαι, he withdrew into some solitary place, like the possessed man that was drawn by the devil in the wilderness, Luke viii. 29. Woe to him that is in despair, and is alone. If Judas had gone to Christ, or to some of the disciples, perhaps he might have had relief, as bad as the case was; but missing of it with the chief priests, he abandoned himself to despair. And the same devil that with the help of the priests drew him to the sin, with their help drove him to despair. (2.) He became his own executioner; he hanged himself, he was suffocated with grief; so Dr. Hammond: but Dr. Whitby is clear that our translation is right. Judas had a sight and sense of sin, but no apprehension of the mercy of God in Christ, and so he pined away in his iniquity. His sin, we may suppose, was not in its own nature unpardonable, there were some of those saved that had been Christ's betrayers and murderers; but he concluded, as Cain, that his iniquity was greater than could be forgiven, and would rather throw himself on the devil's mercy than God's. And some have said, that Judas sinned more in despairing of the mercy of God, than in betraying his Master's blood. Now the terrors of the Almighty set themselves in array against him. All the curses written in God's book now come into his bowels like water, and like oil into his bones, as was foretold concerning him, Psal. cix. 18, 19, and drove him to this desperate shift, for the escaping of a hell within him to leap into that before him, which was but the perfection and perpetuity of this horror and despair. He throws himself into the fire to avoid the flame; but miserable is the case when a man must go to hell for ease.

Now in this story, (1.) We have an instance of the wretched end of those into whom Satan enters, and particularly those that are given up to the love of money. This is the destruction in which many are drowned by it, 1 Tim. vi. 9, 10. Remember what came of the swine into which, and of the traitor into whom, the devil entered, and gave not place to the devil. (2.) We have an instance of the wrath of God revealed from heaven against the ungodliness and unrighteousness of men, Rom. i. 18. As in the story of Peter, we behold the goodness of God, and the triumphs of Christ's grace in the conversion of some sinners; so in the story of Judas, we behold the severity of God, and the triumphs of Christ's power and justice in the confusion of other sinners. When Judas, into whom Satan entered, was thus hung up, Christ made an open shew of the principalities and powers he undertook the spoiling of, Col. ii. 15. (3.) We have an instance of the direful effects of despair, it often ends in self-murder. Sorrow, even that for sin, if not according to God, worketh death, 2 Cor. vii. 10. the worst kind of death; for a wounded spirit, who can bear? Let us think as bad as we can of sin, provided we do not think it unpardonable, and despair of help in ourselves but not of help in God. He that thinks to ease his conscience by destroying his life, doth in effect dare God Almighty to do his worst: And self-murder, though prescribed by some of the Heathen moralists, is certainly a remedy worse than the disease, how bad soever the disease may be. Let us watch against the beginnings of melancholy, and pray, Lord, lead us not into temptation.

4. The disposal of the money which Judas brought back, ver. 6—10. It was laid out in the purchase of a field, called the potter's field; because some potter either had owned it, or occupied it, or lived near it, or because broken potters vessels were thrown into it. And this field was to be a burying-place for strangers, i. e. proselytes to the Jewish religion, who were of other nations, and coming to Jerusalem to worship happened to die there. (1.) It looks like an instance of their humanity, that they took care for the burying of strangers; and it intimates that they themselves allowed, as St. Paul saith, Acts xxiv. 15. That there shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and of the unjust; for we therefore take care of the dead body, not only because it has been the habitation of a rational soul, but because it must be so again. But, (2.) It was no instance of their humility that they would bury strangers in a place by themselves, as if they were not worthy to be laid in their burying-places; strangers must keep their distance alive and dead, and that principle must go down to the grave, Stand by thyself, come not near me, I am holier than thou, Isa. lxv. 5. The sons of Heth were better affected towards Abraham, though a stranger among them, when they offered him the choicest of their own sepulchres, Gen. xxii. 6. But the sons of the stranger that have joined themselves to the Lord, though buried by themselves, shall rise with all that are dead in Christ.

This buying of the potter's field was not done that day that Christ died, they were then too busy to mind any thing else but hunting him down, yet it was done not long after; for Peter speaks of it soon after Christ's ascension; yet it is here recorded,

1. To shew the hypocrisy of the chief priests and elders: They were maliciously persecuting the blessed Jesus, and now,

(1.) They scruple to put that money into the treasury or corban of the temple, with which they had hired the traitor. Though perhaps they had taken it out of the treasury, pretending it was for the public good, and though they were great sticklers for the corban, and laboured to draw all the wealth of the nation into it, yet they would not put that money into it which was the price of blood. The hire of a traitor they thought parallel to the hire of a whore, and the price of a malefactor, (such a one they made Christ to be) equivalent to the price of a dog, neither of which was to be brought into the house of the Lord, Deut. xxiii. 18. They would thus save their credit with the people, by possessing them with an opinion of their great reverence for the temple. Thus they that swallowed a camel, ruined at a knot.

(2.) They think to atone for what they had done by this public good act of providing a burying-place for strangers, though not at their own charge. Thus in times of ignorance people were made to believe that building churches and endowing monasteries would make amends for immoralities.

2. To signify the favour intended by the blood of Christ to strangers, and sinners of the Gentiles. Through the price of his blood a resting-place is provided for them after death. Thus many of the ancients apply this passage. The grave is the potter's field, where the bodies are thrown as despised broken vessels; but Christ by his blood purchased it, for those who by confessing themselves strangers on earth seek the better country; he has altered the property of it, (as a purchaser doth) so that now death is ours, the grave is ours, a bed of rest for us. The Germans in their language, call burying-places God's fields, for in them God sows his people as a corn of wheat, John xii. 24. See Hosea ii. 23. Isa. xxvi. 19.

3. To perpetuate the infamy of those that bought and sold the blood of Christ. This field was commonly called Aceldama, the field of blood; not by the chief priests, they hoped in this burying-place to bury the remembrance of their own crime; but by the people, who took notice of Judas's acknowledgment that he had betrayed the innocent blood, though the chief priests made nothing of it. They fastened this name upon the field in perpetuum rei memoriam. Note, Divine providence has many ways of entailing disgrace upon the wicked practices even of great men, who, though they seek to cover their shame, are put to a perpetual reproach.

4. That we may see how the scripture was fulfilled, ver. 9, 10. Then was fulfilled that which was spoken by Jeremy the prophet. The words quoted are found in the prophecy of Zechary, chap. xi. 12. how they are here said to be spoken by Jeremy, is a difficult question; but the credit of Christ's doctrine doth not depend upon it; for that proves itself perfectly divine, though there should appear something human as to small circumstances in the penmen of it. The Syriac version, which is ancient, reads only it was spoken by the prophet, not naming any, whence some thought Jeremy was added by some scribe; some think the whole volume of the prophets, being in one book, and the prophecy of Jeremiah put first, it might not be improper, currente calamo, to quote any passage out of that volume under his name. The Jews used to say, The spirit of Jeremiah was in Zechariah, and so they were as one prophet? Some suggest that it was spoken by Jeremiah, but written by Zechariah; or that Jeremiah wrote the ninth, tenth, and eleventh chapters of Zechariah. Now this passage in the prophet, is a representation of the great contempt of God that was found among the Jews, and the poor returns they made to him for rich receivings from him. But here that is really acted, which was there but figuratively expressed. The sum of money is the same, thirty pieces of silver, this they weighed for his price, at this rate they valued him; a goodly price; and this cast to the potter in the house of the Lord; which was here literally accomplished. Note, We should better understand the events of providence, if we were better acquainted even with the language and expressions of scripture; for even those also are sometimes written upon the dispensations of providence so plain, that he that runs may read them. What David spoke figuratively, Psal. xlii. 7. Jonah made a literal application of, All thy waves and thy billows are gone over me, Jonah ii. 3.

The giving the price of him that was valued, not for him, but for the potter's field, speaks, (1.) The high value that ought to be put upon Christ. The price was given, not for him, no, when it was given for him it was soon brought back again with disdain, as infinitely below his worth; he cannot be valued with the gold of Ophir, nor this unspeakable gift bought with money. (2.) The low value that was put upon him. They of the children of Israel did strangely undervalue him, when his price did but reach to buy a potter's field, a pitiful sorry spot of ground, not worth looking upon. It added to the reproach of his being bought and sold, that it was at so low a rate. Cast it to the potter, so it is in Zechary, a contemptible petty chapman, not the merchant that deals in things of value. And observe, they of the children of Israel thus undervalued him. They that were his own people, that should have known better what estimate to put upon him. They to whom he was first sent, whose glory he was, and whom he had valued so highly, and bought so dear. He gave a king's ransom for them, and the richest countries, so precious were they in his sight, Isa. xlii. 3, 4. Egypt, and Ethiopia, and Seba; but they gave a slave's ransom for him, (see Exod. xxi. 32.) and valued him but at the rate of a potter's field; so was that blood trodden under foot, which bought the kingdom of heaven for us. But all this was as the Lord appointed; so the prophetic vision was which typified this event, and so the event itself, as other the instances of Christ's sufferings, was by the determinate counsel and fore-knowledge of God.

11. And Jesus stood before the governor: and the governor asked him, saying, Art thou the King of the Jews? And Jesus said unto him, Thou sayest. 12. And when he was accused of the chief priests, and elders, he answered nothing. 13. Then saith Pilate unto him, Hearst thou not how many things they witness against thee? 14. And he answered him to never a word; insomuch that the governor marvelled greatly. 15. Now at that feast the governor was wont to release unto the people a prisoner, whom they would. 16. And they had then a notable prisoner, called Barabbas. 17. Therefore when they were gathered together, Pilate said unto them, Whom will ye that I release unto you? Barabbas, or Jesus which is called Christ? 18. For he knew that for envy they had delivered him. 19. ¶ When he was set down on the judgment seat, his wife sent unto him, saying, Have thou nothing to do with that just man: for I have suffered many things this day in a dream because of him. 20. But the chief priests and elders persuaded the multitude that they should ask Barabbas, and destroy Jesus. 21. The governor answered and said unto them, them, Whether of the twain will ye that I release unto you? They said, Barabbas. 22. Pilate saith unto them, What shall I do then with Jesus which is called Christ? They all say unto him, Let him be crucified. 23. And the governor said, Why, what evil hath he done? But they cried out the more, saying, Let him be crucified. 24. ¶ When Pilate saw that he could prevail nothing, but that rather a tumult was made, he took water, and washed his hands before the multitude, saying, I am innocent of the blood of this just person: see ye to it. 25. Then answered all the people, and said, His blood be on us, and on our children.

We have here an account of what passed in Pilate's judgment-hall, when the blessed Jesus was brought thither betimes in the morning: Though it was no court-day, Pilate immediately took his case before him. We have here,

First, The trial Christ had before Pilate.

1. His arraignment. Jesus stood before the governor, as the prisoner before the judge. We could not stand before God because of our sins, nor lift up our face in his presence, if Christ had not been thus made sin for us. He was arraigned that we might be discharged. Some think this speaks his courage and boldness, he stood undaunted, unmoved by all their rage. He thus stood in this judgment, that we might stand in God's judgment. He stood for a spectacle, as Naboth, when he was arraigned, was set on high among the people.

2. His indictment, Art thou the king of the Jews? The Jews were now not only under the government, but under the very jealous inspection of the Roman powers; which they were themselves to the highest degree disaffected to, and yet now pretend a concern for to serve this turn; accusing Jesus as an enemy to Cæsar, Luke xxiii. 2. which they could produce no other proof of, but that he himself had newly owned he was the Christ. Now they thought that whoever was the Christ must be the king of the Jews, and must deliver them from the Roman power, and restore to them a temporal dominion, and enable them to trample upon all their neighbours. And according to this chimera of their own they accused our Lord Jesus, as making himself king of the Jews, in opposition to the Roman yoke; whereas, though he said he was the Christ, he meant not such a Christ as this. Note, Many oppose Christ's holy religion upon a mistake of the nature of it; they dress it up in false colours, and then fight against it. They assuring the governor that if he made himself Christ, he made himself king of the Jews; the governor takes it for granted, that he goes about to subvert the nation, and subvert the government. Art thou a king? It was plain he was not so de facto, but dost thou lay any claim to the government, or pretend a right to rule the Jews? Note, It has often been the hard fate of Christ's holy religion unjustly to fall under the suspicions of the civil powers, as if it were hurtful to kings and provinces, whereas it tends mightily to the benefit of both.

3. His plea. Jesus said unto him, Thou sayest, i. e. It is as thou sayest, though not as thou meanest; I am a king, but not such a king as thou dost suspect me to be. Thus before Pilate he witnessed a good confession, and was not ashamed to own himself a king, though it looked ridiculous, nor afraid, though at this time it was dangerous.

4. The evidence, ver. 12. He was accused of the chief priests. Pilate found no fault in him; whatever was said, nothing was proved, and therefore what was wanting in matter they made up in noise and violence, and followed him with repeated accusations, the same as they had given in before; but by the repetition they thought to force a belief from the governor. They had learned, not only calumniari, but fortiter calumniari. The best men have often been accused of the worst crimes.

5. The prisoners silence as to the prosecutors accusations. He answered nothing, (1.) Because it did not need, nothing was alledged but what carried its own confutation along with it. (2.) He was now taken up with the great concern that lay between him and his Father, to whom he was offering up himself a sacrifice, to answer the demands of his justice, which he was so intent upon that he minded not what they said against him. (3.) His hour was come, and he submitted to his Father's will: not as I will, but as thou wilt; he knew what his Father's will was, and therefore silently committed himself to him that judgeth righteously. We must not thus by our silence throw away our lives, because we are not lords of our lives, as Christ was of his; nor can we know as he did when our hour is come. But hence we must learn, not to render railing for railing, 1 Pet. ii. 23.

Now, (1.) Pilate pressed him to make some reply, ver. 13. Hearst thou not how many things they witness against thee? What these things were may be gathered from Luke xxiii. 3—5. and John xix. 7. Pilate having no malice at all against him, was desirous he should clear himself, urgeth him to it, and believes he could do it. Hearst thou not? Yes, he did hear, and still he hears all that is witnessed unjustly against his truths and ways; but he keeps silence, because it is the day of his patience, and doth not answer, as he will shortly, Psalm l. 3. (2.) He wondered at his silence; which was not interpreted so much a contempt of the court, as a contempt of himself. And therefore Pilate is not said to be angry at it, but to have marvelled greatly at it, as a thing very unusual. He believed him to be innocent, and had heard perhaps that never man spake like him, and therefore thought it strange that he had not one word to say for himself. Now, Secondly, The outrage and violence of the people, in pressing the governor to crucify Christ. The chief priests had a great interest in the people, they called them Rabbi, Rabbi, made idols of them, and oracles of all they said, and they made use of this to incense them against him, and by the power of the mob gained the point which they could not otherwise carry. Now here are two instances of their outrage.

1. Their preferring Barabbas before him, and choosing to have him released rather than Jesus.

(1.) It seems it was grown into a custom with the Roman governors, for the humouring of the Jews, to grace the feast of the passover with the release of a prisoner, ver. 15. This they thought did honour to the feast, and was agreeable to the commemoration of their deliverance; but it was an invention of their own, and no divine institution; though some think it was ancient, and kept up by the Jewish princes, before they became a province of the empire. However, it was an ill custom, an obstruction to justice, and an encouragement to wickedness. But our gospel-passover is celebrated with the release of prisoners, by him who hath power on earth to forgive sins.

(2.) The prisoner put in competition with our Lord Jesus, was Barabbas, a notable prisoner, he is here called, ver. 16. Either because by birth and breeding he was of some note and quality, or because he had signalized himself by something remarkable in his crimes; whether he was so notable as to recommend himself the more to the favours of the people, and so the more likely to be begged: or whether so notable as to make himself more liable to their rage, is uncertain. Some think the latter, and therefore Pilate mentioned him, as taking it for granted, they would have desired any one's release rather than his. Treason, murder, and felony, are the three most enormous crimes that are usually punished by the sword of justice, and Barabbas was guilty of them all three, Luke xxiii. 17. John xviii. 40. A notable prisoner indeed, whose crimes were so complicated.

(3.) The proposal was made by Pilate the governor, ver. 17. Whom will ye that I release unto you? It is probable, the judge had the nomination of two, one of which the people were to choose: Pilate proposed to them to have Jesus released; he was convinced of his innocency, and that the prosecution was malicious, yet had not the courage to acquit him, as he ought to have done by his own power; but would have him released by the people's election, and so he hoped to satisfy both his own conscience, and the people too; whereas finding no fault in him, he ought not to have put him upon the country, or brought him into peril of his life. But such little tricks and artifices as these to trim the matter, and to keep in with conscience and the world too, are the common practice of those that seek more to please men than God. What shall I do, saith Pilate, with Jesus, which is called Christ? He puts the people in mind of this, that this Jesus, whose release he proposed, was looked upon by some among them as the Messiah, and had given pregnant proofs of his being so; do not reject one whom your nation has professed such an expectation of.

The reason why Pilate laboured thus to get Jesus discharged, was, because he knew that for envy the chief priests had delivered him up, ver. 18. That it was not his guilt, but his goodness that they were provoked at; and for this reason he hoped to bring him off by the people's act, and that they would be for his release. When David was envied by Saul, he was the darling of the people, and any one that heard the hosannas with which Christ was but a few days ago brought into Jerusalem, would have thought that he had been so, and that Pilate might safely have referred this matter to the commonalty, especially when so notorious a rogue was set up as a rival with him for their favours. But it proved otherwise.

(4.) While Pilate was thus labouring the matter, he was confirmed in his unwillingness to condemn Jesus, by a message sent him from his wife, ver. 19. by way of caution. Have thou nothing to do with that just man, together with the reason, for I have suffered many things this day in a dream because of him. Probably this message was delivered to Pilate publicly, in the hearing of all that were present, for it was intended to be a warning not to him only, but to the prosecutors. Observe,

1. The special providence of God in sending this dream to Pilate's wife; it is not likely that she had heard any thing before concerning Christ, at least, not so as to occasion her dreaming of him, but it was immediately from God! perhaps she was one of the de-vout and honourable women, and had some sense of religion; yet God revealed himself by dreams to some that had not, as to Nebuchadnezzar. She suffered many things in this dream; whether she dreamed of the cruel usage of an innocent person, or of the judgments that would fall upon those that had any hand in his death, or both, it seems it was a frightful dream, and her thoughts troubled her, as Dan. ii. 1—iv. 5. Note, The Father of spirits has many ways of access to the spirits of men, and can seal their instruction in a dream, or vision of the night, Job xxxiii. 15. yet to those who have the written word, God more ordinarily speaks by conscience on a waking bed, than by dreams, when deep sleep falls upon men.

2. The tenderness and care of Pilate's wife in sending this caution there-upon to her husband. Have nothing to do with that just man. (1.) This was an honourable testimony to our Lord Jesus, witnessing for him that he was a just man, even then when he was persecuted as the worst of malefactors; when his friends were afraid to appear in defence of him, God made even those that were strangers and enemies to speak in his favour: when Peter denied him, Judas confessed him, when the chief priests pronounced him guilty of death, Pilate declared he found no fault in him; when the women that loved him stood afar off, Pilate's wife that knew little of him, shewed a concern for him. Note, God will not leave himself without witnesses to the truth and equity of his cause, even then when it seems to be most spitefully run down by its enemies, and most shamefully deserted by its friends. (2.) It was a fair warning to Pilate, Have nothing to do with him. Note, God has many ways of giving checks to sinners in their sinful pursuits, and it is a great mercy to have such checks from providence, from faithful friends, and from our own consciences, and our great duty to hearken to them. O do not this abominable thing which the Lord hates, is what we may hear said to us, when we are entering into temptation, if we will but regard it. Pilate's lady sent him this warning, out of the love she had to him, she feared not a rebuke from him for meddling with that which belonged not to her; but let him take it how he would, she would give him the caution. Note, It is an instance of true love to our friends and relations, to do what we can to keep them from sin; and the nearer any are to us, and the greater affection we have for them, the more solicitous we should be not to suffer sin to come or lie upon them, Lev. xix. 17. The best friendship is friendship to the soul: We are not told how Pilate turned this off, it is like with a jest, but by his proceeding against this just man, it appears he did not regard it. Thus faithful admonitions are made light of, when they are given as warnings against sin, but will not be so easily made light of, when they shall be reflected upon as aggravations of sin.

(5.) The chief priests and the elders were busy all this while to influence the people in favour of Barabbas, ver. 20. They persuaded the multitude, both by themselves and their emissaries, whom they sent abroad among them, that they should ask Barabbas, and destroy Jesus; suggesting that this Jesus was a deceiver, in league with Satan, an enemy to their church and temple; that if he were let alone, the Romans would come and take away their place and nation; that Barabbas, though an ill man, yet having not the interest that Jesus had, could not do so much mischief. Thus they managed the mob, who otherwise were well affected to Jesus, and if they had not been so much at the beck of their priests, would never have done such a preposterous thing, as to prefer Barabbas before Jesus. Here, (1.) We cannot but look upon these wicked priests with indignation; by the law, in matters of controversy between blood and blood, the people were to be guided by the priests, and to do as they informed them, Deut. xvii. 8. This great power put into their hands they wretchedly abused, and the leaders of the people caused them to err. (2.) We cannot but look upon the deluded people with pity; I have compassion on the multitude, to see them hurried thus violently to so great wickedness, to see them thus priest-ridden, and falling into the ditch with their blind leaders.

(6.) Being thus over-ruled by the priests, at length they made their choice, ver. 21. Whether of the twain (saith Pilate) will ye that I release unto you? hoping he had gained his point to have Jesus released. But to his great surprise they said Barabbas; as if his crimes were less, and therefore he less deserv'd to die; or as if his merits were greater, and therefore he better deserv'd to live: The cry for Barabbas was so universal, one and all, that there was no colour to demand a poll between the candidates. Be astonished O heavens, at this, and, thou earth, be horribly afraid! Were ever men that pretended pretended to reason or religion guilty of such prodigious madness, such horrid wickedness! This was it that Peter charged so home upon them, Acts iii. 14. He desired a murderer to be granted you; yet multitudes who choose the world, rather than God for their ruler and portion, thus choose their own delusions.

2. Their pressing earnestly to have Jesus crucified, ver. 22, 23. Pilate being amazed at the choice of Barabbas, was willing to hope it was rather from a fondness for him, than from an enmity to Jesus, and therefore puts it to them, What shall I do then with Jesus? Shall I release him likewise for the greater honour of your feast? or will you leave it to me? No, they all said, Let him be crucified. That death they desired he might die, because it was looked upon as the most scandalous and ignominious; and they hoped thereby to make his followers ashamed to own him, and their relation to him. It was absurd for them to prescribe to the judge what sentence he should pass, but their malice and rage made them forget all rules of order and decency, and turned a court of justice into a riotous tumultuous, and seditious assembly. Now was truth fallen in the street, and equity could not enter; where one looked for judgment, behold oppression, the worst kind of oppression; for righteousness, behold a cry, the worst cry that ever was, Crucify, crucify the Lord of glory; though they that cried thus, perhaps, were not the same persons that the other day had cried Hosanna, yet see what a change was made upon the face of the populace in a little time: when he rode in triumph into Jerusalem, so general were the acclamations of praise, that one would have thought he had no enemies; but now when he was led in triumph to Pilate's judgment-seat, so general were the outcries of enmity, that one would think he had no friends. Such revolutions are there in this changeable world, through which our way to heaven lies, as our master's did, by honour and dishonour, by evil report, and good report, counter-changed, 2 Cor. vi. 8. that we may not be lifted up by honour, as if when we were applauded and caressed, we had made our nest among the stars, and should die in that nest; nor yet be dejected or discouraged by dishonour, as it when we were despised and trampled upon, we were trodden to the lowest hell, from which there is no redemption. Fides tu istos qui te laudant; omnes aut sunt hostes, aut (quod in aquo est) esse possunt. Seneca de Vita beat.

Now as to this demand we are further told,

1. How Pilate objected against it; Why, What evil has he done? A proper question to ask before we censure any in common discourse, much more for a judge to ask before he pass a sentence of death. Note, It is much for the honour of the Lord Jesus, that though he suffered as an evil-doer, yet neither his judge nor his prosecutors could find that he had done any evil. Had he done any evil against God? No, he always did those things that pleased him: Had he done any evil against the civil government? No, as he did himself, so he taught others to render to Caesar the things that were Caesar's: Had he done any evil against the public peace? No, he did not stir or cry, nor did his kingdom come with observation: Had he done any evil to particular persons? Whose ox had he taken, or whom had he defrauded? No, so far from that, that he went about doing good. This repeated assertion of his unspotted innocency, plainly intimates that he died to satisfy for the sins of others; for if it had not been for our transgressions that he was thus wounded and for our offences that he was delivered up, and that upon his own voluntary undertaking to atone for them, I see not how these extraordinary sufferings of a person that had never thought, said or done, any thing amiss, could be reconciled with the justice and equity of that providence that governs the world, and at least permitted this to be done in it.

2. How they insisted upon it; They cried out the more, let him be crucified. They do not go about to shew any evil he had done, but right or wrong he must be crucified; quitting all pretensions to the proof of the promises, they resolve to hold the conclusion, and what was wanting in evidence to make up in clamour; this unjust judge was wearied by importunity into an unjust sentence, as he in the parable into a just one, Luke xviii. 4. and the cause carried purely by noise.

Thirdly, Here is the devolving of the guilt of Christ's blood upon the people and priests.

1. Pilate endeavours to transfer it from himself, ver. 24.

1. He sees it to no purpose to contend: What he said, (1.) Would do no good, he could prevail nothing; he could not convince them what an unjust unreasonable thing it was for him to condemn a man whom he believed innocent, and whom they could not prove guilty. See how strong the stream of lust and rage sometimes is, neither authority nor reason will prevail to give check to it. Nay, (2.) It was more likely to do hurt, he saw that rather a tumult was made; this rude and brutish people fell to high words, and began to threaten Pilate what they would do if he did not gratify them; and how great a matter might this fire kindle, especially when the priests, those great incendiaries, blew the coals. Now this turbulent tumultuous temper of the Jews, by which Pilate was awed to condemn Christ against his conscience, contributed more than any thing to the ruin of that nation not long after; for their frequent insurrections provoked the Romans to destroy them, though they had reduced them, and their inveterate quarrels among themselves made them an easy prey to the common enemy: Thus their sin was their ruin.

Observe how easily we may be mistaken in the inclination of the common people; the priests were apprehensive that their endeavours to seize Christ would have caused an uproar, especially on the feast day, but it proved Pilate's endeavours to save him caused an uproar, and that on the feast day; so uncertain are the sentiments of the crowd.

2. This puts him into a great strait, betwixt the peace of his own mind and the peace of the city; he is loth to condemn an innocent man, and yet loth to disoblige the people, and raise a devil that would not be soon laid; had he steadily and resolutely adhered to the sacred laws of justice, as a judge ought to do, he had not been in any perplexity, the matter was plain and past dispute, that a man in whom was found no fault, ought not to be crucified upon any pretence whatsoever, nor must an unjust thing be done to gratify any man or company of men in the world? the cause is soon decided, let justice be done, though heaven and earth come together, Fiat justitia, ruat cælum; if wickedness proceed from the wicked, though they be priests, yet my hand shall not be upon him.

3. Pilate thinks to trim the matter, and to pacify both the people and his own conscience too, by doing it and yet disowning it, acting the thing, and yet acquitting himself from it at the same time. Such absurdities and self-contradictions do they run upon, whose convictions are strong, but their corruptions stronger: hujus est he (saith the apostle, Rom. xiv. 22.) that condemneth not himself in that which he allows, or which is all one, that allows not himself in that thing which he condemns.

Now Pilate endeavours to clear himself from the guilt,

1. By a sign: He took water and washed his hands before the multitude, not as if he thought thereby to cleanse himself from any guilt contracted before God, but to acquit himself before the people, from so much as contracting any guilt in this matter; q. d. If it be done, bear witness it is none of my doing; he borrowed the ceremony from that law which appointed it to be used for the clearing of the country from the guilt of an undiscovered murder, Deut. xxi. 6, 7. and he used it the more to affect the people with the conviction he was under of the prisoner's innocency, and probably such was the noise of the rabble, that if he had not used some such surprising sign, in the view of them all, he could not have been heard.

2. By a saying; in which, (1.) He clears himself, I am innocent of the blood of this just person: What nonsense was this to condemn him, and yet protest he is innocent of his blood; but for men to protest against a thing, and yet to practise it, is only to proclaim that they sin against their consciences; but though Pilate professed his innocency, God chargeth him with guilt, Acts iv. 27. Some think to justify themselves, by pleading that their hands were not in the sin; but David kills by the sword of the children of Ammon, and Ahab by the elders of Jezreel; Pilate here thinks to justify himself, by pleading that his heart was not in the action; but that is an averment which will never be admitted; Protestatio non valet contra factum. (2.) He cast it upon the priests and people, See ye to it; if it must be done, I cannot help it, do you answer it before God and the world. Note, Sin is a brat that nobody is willing to own; and many deceive themselves with this, that they shall bear no blame if they can but find any to lay the blame upon; but it is not so easy a thing to transfer the guilt of sin as many think it is. The condition of him that is infected with the plague is not less dangerous, either for his catching the infection from others, or his communicating the infection to others; we may be tempted to sin, but cannot be forced. The priests threw it upon Judas, See thou to it; and now Pilate throws it upon them, See ye to it; for with what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you.

2. The priests and people consented to take the guilt upon themselves; they all said, His blood be on us, and on our children; we are so well assured that there is neither sin nor danger in putting him to death, that we are willing to run the hazard of it; as if the guilt would do no harm to them or theirs: They saw that it was the dread of guilt that made Pilate hesitate, and that he was getting over this difficulty by a fancy of transferring it; to prevent the return of his hesitation, and to confirm him in that fancy, they in the heat of their rage agreed to it, rather than lose the prey they had, in their hands, and cried, His blood be upon us. Now,

1. By this they designed to indemnify Pilate, that is, to make him think himself indemnified, by becoming bound to divine justice to save him harmless. But those that are themselves bankrupts and beggars will never be admitted security for others, nor taken as a bail for them. None could bear the sin of others, but he that had none of his own to answer for; it is a bold undertaking, and too big for any creature to become bound for a sinner to Almighty God.

2. But they did really imprecate wrath and vengeance upon themselves and their posterity; what a desperate word was this, and how little did they think what was the direful import of it; nor to what an abyss of misery it would bring them and theirs? Christ had lately told them, that upon them would come all the righteous blood shed upon the earth, from that of righteous Abel; but as if that were too little, they here imprecate upon themselves the guilt of that blood which was more precious than all the rest, and the guilt of which would lie heavier. O the daring presumption of wilful sinners, that run upon God, upon his neck, and defy his justice? John xv. 25, 26. Observe,

1. How cruel they were in their imprecation; they not only imprecated the punishment of this sin upon themselves, but upon their children too, even those that were yet unborn, without so much as limiting the entail of the curse, as God himself had been pleased to limit it to the third and fourth generation. It was madness to pull it upon themselves, but the height of barbarity to entail it on their posterity. Sure they were like the ostrich, hardened against their young ones, as though they were not theirs: What a dreadful conveyance was this of guilt and wrath to them and their heirs for ever, and this delivered by joint-consent, nemine contradicente, as their own act and deed, which certainly amounted to a forfeiture and defeasance of that ancient charter, I will be a God to thee, and to thy seed. Their entailing the curse of the Messiah's blood upon their nation, cut off the entail of the blessings of that blood from their families, that according to another promise made to Abraham, in him, all the families of the earth might be blessed. See what enemies wicked men are to their own children and families; those that damn their own souls care not how many they take to hell with them.

2. How righteous God was in his retribution according to this imprecation; they said, His blood be on us, and on our children; and God said Amen to it, so shall thy doom be; as they loved cursing, so it came upon them. The wretched remains of that abandoned people feel it to this day; from the time they imprecated this blood upon them, they were followed with one judgment after another till they were quite laid waste, and made an astonishment, a hissing, and a by-word; yet on some of them, and some of theirs this blood came not to condemn them, but to save them; divine mercy, upon their repenting and believing, cut off this entail, and then the promise was again to them, and to their children: God is better to us and ours than we are.

26. ¶ Then released he Barabbas unto them: and when he had scourged Jesus, he delivered him to be crucified. 27. Then the soldiers of the governor took Jesus into the common hall, and gathered unto him the whole band of soldiers. 28. And they stripped him, and put on him a scarlet robe. 29. ¶ And when they had platted a crown of thorns, they put it upon his head, and a reed in his right hand: and they bowed the knee before him, and mocked him, saying, Hail, king of the Jews! 30. And they spit upon him, and took the reed, and smote him on the head. 31. ¶ And after that they had mocked him, they took the robe off from him, and put his own raiment on him, and led him away to crucify him. 32. And as they came out, they found a man of Cyrene, Simon by name: him they compelled to bear his cross.

In these verses we have the preparatives for, and prefaces to, the crucifixion of our Lord Jesus. Here is,

First, The sentence passed, and the warrant signed for his execution, and this immediately, the same hour.

1. Barabbas was released, that notorious criminal; if he had not been put in competition with Christ for the favour of the people, it is likely he had died for his crimes, but that proved the means of his escape to intimate that Christ was condemned for this purpose, that sinners, even the chief of sinners might be released; he was delivered up that we might be delivered; whereas the common instance of divine providence is, that the wicked wicked is ransom for the righteous, and the transgressor for the upright, Prov. xxi. 18.—xi. 18. In this unparalleled instance of divine grace the upright is a ransom for the transgressors, the just for the unjust.

2. Jesus was scourged; this was an ignominious cruel punishment, especially as it was inflicted by the Romans, who were not under the moderation of the Jewish law, which forbade scourgings above forty stripes, and most unreasonably inflicted on one that was sentenced to die; the rods were not to introduce the axes, but supersede them. Thus the scripture was fulfilled, The ploughers ploughed on my back, Psalm cxxix. 3. and Isa. l. 6. I gave my back to the smiters; and Isa. liii. 5. by his stripes we are healed; he was chastised with whips, that we might not be for ever chastised with scorpions.

3. He was then delivered to be crucified, though his chastisement was in order to our peace, yet there is no peace made but by the blood of his cross, Col. i. 20. therefore the scourging is not enough, he must be crucified: a kind of death used only among the Romans; the manner of it is such, as that it seems to be the result of wit and cruelty in combination, each putting forth itself to the utmost to make death in the highest degree terrible and miserable. A cross was set up in the ground, to which the hands and feet were nailed, on which nails the weight of the body hung, till it died of the pain. This was the death to which Christ was condemned, that he might answer the type of the brazen serpent lifted upon a pole: It was a bloody death, a painful, shameful, cursed death; it was so miserable a death, that merciful princes appointed those who were condemned to it by the law, to be strangled first, and then nailed to the cross, so Julius Cæsar did by some pirates, Sueton. lib. 1. Constantine the first Christian emperor, by an edict abolished the use of that punishment among the Romans, Sueton. Hist. lib. 1. chap. 8. Ne salutare signum subserviret ad perniciem.

Secondly, The barbarous treatment which the soldiers gave him, while things were getting ready for his execution. When he was condemned he ought to have had some time allowed him to prepare for death; there was a law made by the Roman senate in Tiberius's time, perhaps upon complaint of this and the like precipitation, that the execution of criminals should be deferred at least ten days after sentence. Sueton. in Tiber. cap. 25. but there were scarce allowed so many minutes to our Lord Jesus; nor had he any breathing time during those minutes; it was a crisis, and there were no lucid intervals allowed him, deep called unto deep, and the storm continued without any intermission.

When he was delivered to be crucified; that was enough; they that kill the body, yield there is no more that they can do, but Christ's enemies will do more, and, if it be possible, wrap up a thousand deaths in one. Though Pilate pronounced him innocent, yet his soldiers, his guards, set themselves to abuse him, being swayed more by the fury of the people against him, than by their master's testimony for him; the Jewish rabble infected the Roman soldiery, or perhaps it was not so much in spite to him, as to make sport for themselves that they thus abused him. They understood that he pretended to a crown, and to taunt him with that, gave them some diversion, and an opportunity to make themselves and one another merry. Note, It is an argument of a base, servile, sordid spirit, to insult over those that are in misery, and to make the calamities of any matter sport and merriment.

Observe, 1. Where this was done, in the common hall. The governor's house, which should have been a shelter to the wronged and abused, is made the theatre of this barbarity. I wonder the governor, who was so desirous to acquit himself from the blood of this just person, would suffer this to be done in his house. Perhaps he did not order it to be done, but he connived at it; and those in authority will be accountable, not only for the wickedness which they do or appoint, but for that which they do not restrain, when it is in the power of their hands. Masters of families should not suffer their houses to be places of abuse to any, nor their servants to make sport with the sins or miseries or religion of others.

2. Who were concerned in it: They gathered the whole band, the soldiers that were to attend the execution, would have the whole regiment (at least five hundred, some think twelve or thirteen hundred) to share in the diversion. If Christ was thus made a spectacle, let none of his followers think it strange to be so used, 1 Cor. iv. 9. Heb. x. 33.

3. What particular indignities were done him.

1. They stripped him, ver. 28. The shame of nakedness came in with sin, Gen. iii. 7. and therefore Christ, when he came to satisfy for sin and take it away, was made naked, and submitted to that shame, that he might prepare for us white raiment to cover us, Rev. iii. 18.

2. They put on him a scarlet robe, some old red cloke, such as the Roman soldiers wore, in imitation of the scarlet robes, which kings and emperors wore; thus upbraiding him with his being called a king. This sham of majesty they put upon him in his dress, when nothing but meanness and misery appeared in his countenance, only to expose him to the spectators, as the more ridiculous; yet there was something of mystery in it: this was he that was red in his apparel, Isa. lxiii. 1, 2. that washed his garments in wine, Gen. xlix. 10. therefore he was dressed in a scarlet robe. Our sins were as scarlet and crimson: Christ being clad in a scarlet robe, signified his bearing our sins, to his shame, in his own body upon the tree; that we might wash our robes and make them white in the blood of the Lamb.

3. They platted a crown of thorns and put it upon his head, ver. 29. This was to carry on the humour of making him a mocking; yet had they intended it only for a reproach, they might have platted a crown of straw or rushes, but they designed it to be painful to him, and to be literally, what crowns are said to be figuratively, lined with thorns; he that invented this abuse, it is likely, valued himself upon the wit of it, but there was a mystery in it. (1.) Thorns came in with sin, and were part of the curse that was the product of sin, Gen. iii. 18. Therefore Christ being made a curse for us, and dying to remove the curse from us, felt the pain and smart of those thorns, nay, and binds them as a crown to him, Job xxxi. 36. for his sufferings for us were his glory. (2.) Now he answered the type of Abraham's ram that was caught in the thicket, and so offered up instead of Isaac, Gen. xxii. 13. (3.) Thorns signify afflictions, 2 Chron. xxxiii. 11. These Christ put into a crown, so much did he alter the property of them to them that are his, and give them cause to glory in tribulation, and make it to work for them a weight of glory. (4.) Christ was crowned with thorns, to shew that his kingdom was not of this world, nor the glory of it worldly glory, but is attended here with bonds and afflictions, while the glory of it is to be revealed. (5.) It was the custom of some heathen nations to bring their sacrifices to the altars crowned with garlands; these thorns were the garlands with which this great sacrifice was crowned. (6.) These thorns, it is likely, fetched blood from his blessed head, which trickled down his face, like the precious ointment (typifying the blood of Christ with which he consecrated himself) upon the head, which ran down upon the beard, even Aaron's beard, Psalm cxxxiii. 2. Thus when he came to espouse to himself his love, his dove, his undefiled church, his head was filled with dew, and his locks with the drops of the night, Cant. v. 2.

4. They put a reed in his right hand; this was intended for a mock-sceptre, another of the insignia of the majesty they jeered him with; as if this were a sceptre good enough for such a king, it was like a reed shaken with the wind, Matt. xi. 7. like sceptre, like kingdom, both weak and wavering and withering and worthless; but they were quite mistaken, for his throne is for ever and ever, and the sceptre of his kingdom is a right sceptre, Psalm xlv. 6.

5. They bowed the knee before him, and mocked him, saying, Hail. King of the Jews. Having made him a sham king, they thus make a jest of doing homage to him, thus ridiculing his pretensions to sovereignty, as Joseph's brethren, Gen. xxxvii. 8. Shalt thou indeed reign over us? But as they were afterwards compelled to do obeisance to him, and enrich his dreams, so these here bowed the knee in scorn to him, who was soon after this exalted to the right hand of God, that in his name every knee might bow or break before him; it is ill jesting with that which sooner or later will come in earnest.

6. They spit upon him; thus he had been abused in the high priest's hall, chap. xxvi. 27. In doing homage the subject kissed the sovereign in token of his allegiance; thus Samuel kissed Saul, and we are bid to kiss the Son; but they in this mock-homage instead of kissing him, spit in his face; that blessed face which outshines the sun, and before which the angels cover theirs, was thus polluted. It is strange that the sons of men should ever do such a piece of villainy, and that the Son of God should ever suffer such a piece of ignominy.

7. They took the reed and smote him on the head. That which they had made the mock ensign of his loyalty, they now make the real instrument of their cruelty, and his pain: They smote him, it is probable, upon the crown of thorns, and so struck them into his head, that they might wound it the deeper, which made the more sport for them, to whom his pain was the greatest pleasure. Thus was he despised and rejected of men, a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief. All this misery and shame he underwent, that he might purchase for us everlasting life and joy and glory.

Thirdly, The conveying of him to the place of execution; after they had mocked and abused him, as long as they thought fit, they then took the robe off from him; to signify their divesting him of all that kingly authority they had invested him with, by putting it on him; and they put his own raiment on him, because that was to fall to the soldiers share that were employed in the execution. They took off the robe, but no mention is made of their taking off the crown of thorns, whence it is commonly supposed (though there is no certainty of it) that he was crucified with that on his head; for as he is a priest upon his throne, so he was a king upon his cross. Christ was led to be crucified in his own raiment, because he himself was to bear our sins in his own body upon the tree. And here,

1. They led him away to be crucified; he was led as a lamb to the slaughter, as a sacrifice to the altar; we may well imagine how they hurried him on, and dragged him along with all the speed possible, lest any thing should intervene to prevent the glutting of their cruel rage with his precious blood. It is likely, they now loaded him with taunts and reproaches, and treated him as the off-scouring of all things. They led him away out of the city; for Christ; that he might sanctify the people with his own blood, suffered without the gate, Heb. xiii. 12. as it be that was the glory of them that waited for redemption in Jerusalem, were not worthy to live among them. To this he himself had an eye, when in the parable he speaks of his being cast out of his vineyard, Matt. xxii. 39.

2. They compelled Simon of Cyrene to bear his cross, ver. 30. It seems at first he carried the cross himself, as Isaac carried the wood for the burnt-offering, which was to burn him. And this was intended as other things, both for pain and shame to him. But after a while they took the cross off from him, either, (1.) In compassion to him, because they saw it was too great a load for him. We can hardly think they had any consideration of that, yet it teaches us that God considers the frame of his people, and will not suffer them to be tempted above what they are able; he gives them some breathing-time, but they must expect that the cross will return, and the lucid intervals only give them space to prepare for the next fit. But, (2.) Perhaps it was because he could not, with the cross on his back, go forward so fast as they would have him. Or, (3.) They were afraid, lest he should faint away under the load of his cross and die, and so prevent what their malice further intended to do against him: Thus even the tender mercies of the wicked, which seem to be so, are really cruel; taking the cross off from him, they compelled one Simon of Cyrene, pressing him to the service by the authority of the governor or the priests. It was a reproach, and none would do it but by compulsion. Some think, this Simon was a disciple of Christ, at least a well-wisher to him, and they knew it, and therefore put this upon him. Note, All that will approve themselves disciples indeed must follow Christ, bearing his cross, Matt. xiv. 14. Bearing his reproach, Heb. xiii. 13. we must know the fellowship of his sufferings for us, and patiently submit to all the sufferings for him we are called out to; for those only shall reign with him that suffer with him, shall sit with him in his kingdom that drink of his cup, and are baptized with his baptism.

33. And when they were come unto a place called Golgotha, that is to say, a place of a skull, 34. ¶ They gave him vinegar to drink mingled with gall: and when he had tasted thereof, he would not drink. 35. And they crucified him, and parted his garments, casting lots: that it might be fulfilled which was spoken by the prophet, They parted my garments among them, and upon my vesture did they cast lots. 36. And sitting down they watched him there; 37. And set up over his head his accusation written, THIS IS JESUS THE KING OF THE JEWS. 38. Then were there two thieves crucified with him, one on the right hand, and another on the left. 39. ¶ And they that passed by reviled him, wagging their heads, 40. And saying, Thou that destroyest the temple, and buildest it in three days, save thyself. If thou be the Son of God, come down from the cross. 41. Likewise also the chief priests mocking him, with the Scribes and elders, said, 42. He saved others; himself he cannot save. If he be the King of Israel, let him now come down from the cross, and we will believe him. 43. He trusted in God; let him deliver him now, if he will have him: for he said, I am the Son of God. 44. The thieves also which were crucified with him, cast the same in his teeth. 45. Now from the sixth hour there was darkness over all the land unto the ninth ninth hour. 46. And about the ninth hour JESUS cried with a loud voice, saying, Eli, Eli, sabachthani? that is to say, My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me? 47. Some of them that stood there, when they heard that, said, This man calleth for Elias. 48. And straightway one of them ran, and took a sponge, and filled it with vinegar, and put it on a reed, and gave him to drink. 49. The rest said, Let be, let us see whether Elias will come to save him.

We have here the crucifixion of our Lord Jesus.

First, The place where our Lord Jesus was put to death.

1. They came to a place called Golgotha, near adjoining to Jerusalem, probably the common place of execution. If he had had a house of his own in Jerusalem, probably, for his greater disgrace, they would have crucified him before his own door. But now in the same place where criminals were sacrificed to the justice of the government, was our Lord Jesus sacrificed to the justice of God. Some think it is called the place of a skull, because it was the common charnel-house where the bones and skulls of dead men were laid together out of the way, lest people should touch them and be defiled thereby. Here lays the trophies of death's victory over multitudes of the children of men; and when by dying Christ would destroy death, he added this circumstance of honour to his victory, that he triumphed over death upon his own dunghill.

2. There they crucified him, ver. 35, nailed his hands and feet to the cross, and then reared it up and him hanging on it; for so the manner of the Romans was to crucify. Let our hearts be touched with the feeling of that exquisite pain which our blessed Saviour now endured, and let us look upon him who was thus pierced, and mourn. Was ever sorrow like unto his sorrow? And when we behold what manner of death he died, let us in that behold with what manner of love he loved us.

Secondly, The barbarous and abusive treatment they gave him, in which their wit and malice vied which should excel. As if death, so great a death, were not bad enough, they contrived to add to the bitterness and terror of it.

1. By the drink they provided for him before he was nailed to the cross, ver. 34. It was usual to have a cup of spiced wine for those to drink that were to be put to death, according to Solomon's direction, Prov. xxxi. 6, 7. Give strong drink to him that is ready to perish; but with that cup which Christ was to drink of they mingled wormwood and gall, to make it sour and bitter. This signified, (1.) The sin of man, which is a root of bitterness, bearing gall and wormwood, Deut. xxix. 18. The sinner perhaps rolls it under his tongue as a sweet morsel, but to God it is grapes of gall, Deut. xxxii. 32. It was so to the Lord Jesus when he bore our sins, and sooner or later it will be so to the sinner himself, bitterness at the latter end, more bitter than death, Eccles. vii. 26. (2.) It signified the wrath of God, that cup which his Father put into his hand, a bitter cup indeed, like the bitter water which caused the curse, Numb. v. 18. This drink they offered him, as was literally foretold, Psalm lxxix. 21. And, (1.) He tasted thereof, and so had the worst of it, took the bitter taste into his mouth; he let no bitter cup go by him untasted, when he was making atonement for all our sinful tasting of forbidden fruit, now he was tasting death in its full bitterness. (2.) He would not drink it, because he would not have the best of it; would have nothing like an opiate to lessen his sense of pain, for he would die so as to feel himself die, because he had so much work to do as our high priest in his suffering work.

2. By the dividing of his garments, ver. 35. When they nailed him to the cross, they stripped him of his garments, at least his upper garments; for by sin we were made naked to our shame, and thus he purchased for us white raiment to cover us. If we be at any time stripped of our comforts for Christ, let us bear it patiently; he was stripped for us. Enemies may strip us of our clothes, but cannot strip us of our best comforts; cannot take from us the garments of praise. The clothes of those that are executed are the executioners' fee; four soldiers were employed in crucifying Christ, and they must each of them have a share. His upper garment, if it were divided, would be of no use to any of them, and therefore they agreed to cast lots for it. (1.) Some think the garment was so fine and rich, that it was worth contending for; but that agreed not with the poverty Christ appeared in. (2.) Perhaps they had heard of those that had been cured by touching the hem of his garment, and they thought it valuable for some magic virtue in it. Or, (3.) They hoped to get money of his friends for such a sacred relic. Or, (4.) Because in derision they would seem to put a value upon it, as a royal clothing. Or, (5.) It was for diversion, to pass away the time while they waited for his death, they would play a game at dice for the clothes; but whatever they designed, the word of God is herein accomplished. In that famous psalm, the first words of which Christ made use of upon the cross, it was said, They parted my garments among them, and cast lots upon my vesture, Psalm xxii. 18. Which was never true of David, but looks primarily at Christ, of whom David in spirit spake: Then is the offence of this part of the cross ceased; for it appears to have been by the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God. Christ stripped himself of his glories, to divide them among us.

They now sat down and watched him, ver. 36. The chief priests were careful, no doubt, in setting this guard, lest the people, whom they still stood in awe of, should rise and rescue him. But providence so ordered it, that those who were appointed to watch him, thereby became unexceptionable witnesses for him; having the opportunity to see and hear that which extorted from them this noble confession, ver. 54. Truly this was the Son of God.

3. By the title set up over his head, ver. 37. It was usual for the vindicating of public justice, and putting the greater shame upon malefactors that were executed, not only by a crier to proclaim before them, but by a writing also over their heads to notify what was the crime for which they suffered; so they set up over Christ's head his accusation written, to give public notice of the charge against him, This is Jesus the king of the Jews. This they designed for his reproach, but God so over-ruled it, that even his accusation redounded to his honour. For, (1.) Here was no crime alleged against him. It is not said that he was a pretended saviour, or an usurping king, though they would have it thought so, John xix. 21. But this is Jesus, a Saviour, to be sure that was no crime, and this is the King of the Jews, nor was that a crime; for they expected that the Messiah should be so; so that his enemies themselves being judges, he did no evil. Nay, (2.) Here was a very glorious truth asserted concerning him, that he is Jesus the King of the Jews, that King whom the Jews expected, and ought to have submitted to; so that his accusation amounts to this. That he was the true Messiah and Saviour of the world; as Balaam, when he was sent for to curse Israel, blessed them all altogether, and that three times, Numb. xxiv. 10. so Pilate, instead of accusing Christ as a criminal, proclaimed him a king, and that three times, in these inscriptions. Thus God makes men to serve his purposes quite beyond their own.

4. By his companions with him in suffering, ver. 38. There were two thieves crucified with him at the same time, in the same place, under the same guard. Two highway-men or robbers upon the road, as the word properly signifies. It is probable, that was appointed to be execution day, and therefore they hurried the prosecution of Christ in the morning, that they might have him ready to be executed with the other criminals. Some think Pilate ordered it thus, that this piece of necessary justice, in executing these thieves, might atone for his injustice in condemning Christ; others, that the Jews contrived it to add to the ignominy of the sufferings of our Lord Jesus; however it was, the scripture was fulfilled in it, Ihu. liii. 12. He was numbered with the transgressors.

1. It was a reproach to him that he was crucified with them. Though while he lived he was separate from sinners, yet in their deaths they were not divided; but he was made to partake with the vilest malefactors in their plagues, as if he had been a partaker with them in their sins; for he was made sin for us, and took upon him the likeness of sinful flesh. He was at his death numbered among the transgressors, and had his lot with the wicked, that we at our death might be numbered among the saints, and have our lot among the chosen.

2. It was an additional reproach that he was crucified in the midst between them, as if he had been the worst of the three, the principal malefactor; for among three the middle is the place for the chief. Every circumstance was contrived to his dishonour, as if the great Saviour were of all others the greatest sinner. It was also intended to ruffle and discompose him in his last moments with the shrieks, and groans, and blasphemies of these malefactors, who, it is likely, made an hideous outcry when they were nailed to the cross; but thus would Christ affect himself with the miseries of sinners, when he was suffering for their salvation. Some of Christ's apostles were afterwards crucified, as Peter, and Andrew, but none of them were crucified with him, lest it should have looked as if they had been joint-undertakers with him in satisfying for man's sin, and joint-purchasers of life and glory; therefore he was crucified between two malefactors, who could not be supposed to contribute any thing to the merit of his death; for he himself bore our sins in his own body.

5. By the blasphemies and revilings, with which they loaded him when he was hanging upon the cross; though we read not that they cast any reflections on the thieves that were crucified with him. One would have thought when they had nailed him to the cross, they had done their worst, and malice itself had been exhausted: indeed if a criminal be put in the pillory or carted, because it is a punishment less than death, it is usually attended with such expressions of abuse; but a dying man, though an ill man, should be treated with compassion. It is an insatiable revenge indeed which will not be satisfied with death, so great a death. But to complete the humiliation of the Lord Jesus, and to shew that when he was dying he was bearing iniquity, he was then loaded with reproach, and, for ought appears, not one of his friends, who the other day cried hosanna to him, durst be seen to shew him any respect.

1. The common people that passed by reviled him. His extreme misery and exemplary patience under it did not mollify them, or make them to relent; but they who by their outcries brought them to this, now think to justify themselves in it by their reproaches, as if they did well to condemn him. They reviled him; ἔβλασφημουν, they blasphemed him. and blasphemy it was in the strictest sense, speaking evil of him who thought it not robbery to be equal with God. Observe here,

1. The persons that reviled him. They that passed by, the travellers that went along the road, and it was a great road, leading from Jerusalem to Gibeon; they were possessed with prejudices against him by the reports and clamours of the high priest's creatures. It is a hard thing, and requires more application and resolution than is ordinarily met with, to keep up a good opinion of persons and things that are everywhere run down and spoken against. Every one is apt to say as the most say, and to throw a stone at that which is put into an ill name. Turba Remi sequitur fortunam semper & odit damnatos. Juv.

2. The gesture they used in contempt of him. Wagging their heads, which signifies their triumph in his fall, and their insulting over him, Ipsi. xxxvii. 22. Jer. xviii. 16. Lam. ii. 15. The language of it was Aha, so would we have it, Psalm xxxv. 25. Thus they insulted over him that was the saviour of their country, as the Philistines did over Samson the destroyer of their country. This very gesture was prophesied of, Psalm xxii. 8. They shake the head at me. And Psalm cix. 25.

3. The taunts and jeers they uttered. These are here recorded.

(1.) They upbraided him with his destroying the temple. Though the judges themselves were sensible, and what he had said of that was misrepresented, as appears Mark xiv. 19. yet they industriously spread it among the people, to bring an odium upon him, that he had a design to destroy the temple; than which nothing would more incense the people against him. And this was not the only time that the enemies of Christ had laboured to make others believe that ill of religion and the people of God which they themselves have known to be false, and the charge unjust. Thou that destroyest the temple, that vast and strong fabric, try thy strength now in plucking up that cross, and drawing those nails, and so save thyself; if thou hast the power thou hast boasted of, this is a proper time to exert it and give proof of it; for it is supposed every man will do his utmost to save himself. This made the cross of Christ such a stumbling-block to the Jews, that they looked upon it to be inconsistent with the power of the Messiah; he was crucified in weakness, 2 Cor. xiii. 4. So it seemed to them, but indeed crucified in the power of God.

(2.) They upbraided him with his saying that he was the Son of God; if thou be so, say they, come down from the cross. Now they take the devil's words out of his mouth, with which he tempted him in the wilderness, Matt. iv. 3-6. and renew the same assault, If thou be the Son of God. They think now or never he must prove himself to be the Son of God; forgetting that he had proved it by the miracles he wrought, particularly his raising the dead; nor willing to wait for the complete proof of it by his own resurrection, to which he had so often referred himself and them; which, if they had observed it, would have anticipated the offence of the cross. This comes of judging things by the present aspect of them, without a due remembrance of what is past, and a patient expectation of what may further be produced.

2. The chief priests and scribes, the church rulers, and the elders, the state-rulers, they mocked him, ver. 41. They did not think it enough to invite the rabble to do it, but gave Christ the dishonour and themselves the diversion of reproaching him in their own proper persons. They should have been in the temple at their devotion; for it was the first day of the feast of unleavened bread, when there was to be a holy convocation, Lev. xxiii. 7. but they were here at the place of execution spitting their venom at the Lord Jesus. How much below the grandeur and gravity of their character was this? Could any thing tend more to make them contemptible, and base before the people? One would have thought, though they neither feared God nor regarded regarded man, yet common prudence should have taught them, who had so great a hand in Christ's death, to keep as much as might be behind the curtain, and to play least in sight; but nothing is so mean as that malice may stick at it. Did they disparage themselves thus to do despite to Christ, and shall we be afraid of disparaging ourselves by joining with the multitude to do him honour, and not rather to say, If this be to be vile, I will be yet more vile?

Two things the priests and elders upbraided him with,

(1.) That he could not save himself, ver. 42. He had been before abused in his prophetic and kingly office, and now in his priestly office as a Saviour, (1.) They take it for granted, he could not save himself, and therefore had not the power he pretended to, when really he would not save himself, because he would die to save us. They should have argued, he saved others, therefore he could save himself, and if he did not, it is for some good reason. But, (2.) They would insinuate, that because he did not now save himself, therefore all his pretence to save others was but sham and delusion, and was never really done; though the truth of his miracles was demonstrated beyond contradiction. (3.) They upbraided him with being the King of Israel. They dreamed of the external pomp and power of the Messiah, and therefore thought the cross altogether disagreeable to the King of Israel, and inconsistent with that character. Many people could like the King of Israel well enough, if he would but come down from the cross, if they could have his kingdom without the tribulation, through which they must enter into it. But the matter is settled, if no cross, then no Christ, no crown: Those that would reign with him, must be willing to suffer with him, for Christ and his cross are nailed together in this world. (4.) They challenged him to come down from the cross. And what had become of us then, and the work of our redemption and salvation? If he had been provoked by these scoffs to come down from the cross, and so to have left his undertaking unfinished, we had been for ever undone. But his unchangeable love and resolution set him above and fortified him against this temptation, so that he did not fail, nor was discouraged. (5.) They promised, that if he would come down from the cross they would believe him. Let him give them that proof of his being the Messiah and they would own him to be so. When they had formerly demanded a sign, he told them the sign he would give them, should be not his coming down from the cross, but which was a greater instance of his power, his coming up from the grave, which they had not patience to wait two or three days for. If he had come down from the cross, they might with as much reason have said that the soldiers had juggled in nailing him to it, as they said, when he was raised from the dead, that the disciples came by night and stole him away. But to promise ourselves, that we would believe, if we had such and such means and motives of faith as we ourselves would prescribe, when we do not improve what God has appointed, is not only a gross instance of the deceitfulness of our hearts, but the sorry refuge, or subterfuge rather, of an obstinate destroying infidelity.

(2.) That God his father would not save him, ver. 43. He trusted in God, i. e. he pretended to do so; for he said, I am the Son of God. Those who call God father, and themselves his children, thereby profess to put a confidence in him, Psal. ix. 10. Now they suggest, that he did but deceive himself and others, when he made himself so much the darling of heaven; for if he had been the Son of God, (as Job's friends argued concerning him) he would not have been abandoned to all this misery, much less abandoned in it. This was a sword in his bones, as David complains of the like, Psal. xlii. 10, and it was a two-edged sword, for it was intended, (1.) To vilify him, and to make the standers-by think him a deceiver and an impostor; as if his saying that he was the Son of God were now effectually disproved. (2.) To terrify him, and drive him to distrust and despair of his Father's power and love; which some think was the thing he feared, religiously feared, prayed against, and was delivered from, Heb. v. 7. David complained more of the endeavour of his persecutors to shake his faith, and drive him from his hope in God, than of their attempts to shake his throne, and drive him from his kingdom: their saying there is no help for him in God, Psal. ii. 2, and God has forsaken him, Psal. lxxi. 11. In this as in other things he was a type of Christ. Nay, these very words David, in that famous prophecy of Christ, mentions, as spoken by his enemies, Psal. xxii. 8. He trusted in the Lord that he would deliver him. Sure these priests and Scribes had forgot their psalter, or they would not have used these same words, so exactly to answer the type and prophecy. But the scriptures must be fulfilled.

3. To complete the reproach, the thieves also that were crucified with him, were not only not reviled as he was, as if they had been saints compared with him; but though fellow sufferers with him joined in with his prosecutors, and cast the same in his teeth; that is, one of them did, who said, If thou be the Christ save thyself and us, Luke xxiii. 39. One would think of all people, this thief had least cause, and should have had least mind to banter Christ. Partners in suffering, though for different causes, usually commiserate one another; and few, whatever they have done before, will breathe their last in revilings: But it seems the greatest mortifications of the body, and the most humbling rebukes of providence, will not of themselves mortify the corruptions of the soul, nor suppress the wickedness of the wicked without the grace of God.

Well, thus our Lord Jesus having undertaken to satisfy the justice of God for the wrong done him in his honour by sin, he did it by suffering in his honour; not only by divesting him of that which was due to him as the Son of God; but by submitting to the utmost indignity that could be done to the worst of men; because he was made sin for us, he was thus made a curse for us, to make reproach easy to us, if at any time we suffer it, and have all manner of evil said against us falsely for righteousness sake.

Thirdly, We have here the frowns of heaven which our Lord Jesus was under, in the midst of all these injuries and indignities from men. Concerning which observe,

1. How this was signified, by an extraordinary and miraculous eclipse of the sun, which continued for three hours, ver. 45. There was darkness, ἐπὶ ὅλην τὴν γῆν, over all the earth; so most interpreters understand it, though our translation confines it to that land: Some of the ancients appealed to the annals of the nations concerning this extraordinary eclipse at the death of Christ, as a thing well known, and which gave notice to those parts of the world, of something great then in doing; as the sun's going back in Hezekiah's time did. It is reported that Dionysius at Heliopolis in Egypt took notice of this darkness, and said, Aut Deus natura patitur, aut mundi machina dissolvitur. An extraordinary light gave intelligence of the birth of Christ, Mat. ii. 2, and therefore it was proper an extraordinary darkness should notify his death, for he is the light of the world. The indignities done to our Lord Jesus made the heavens astonished, and horribly afraid, and even put them into disorder and confusion; such wickedness as this the sun never saw before, and therefore withdrew and would not see this. This surprising, amazing darkness was designed to stop the mouth; of those blasphemers who were reviling Christ as he hung on the cross, and it should seem for the present to have struck such a terror upon them, that though their hearts were not changed, yet they were silent and stood doubting what this should mean, till after three hours the darkness scattered, and then, as appears by ver. 47. like Pharaoh when the plague was over, they hardened their hearts. But that which was principally intended in this darkness, was, (1.) Christ's present conflict with the powers of darkness: Now the prince of this world, and his forces, the rulers of the darkness of this world, were to be cast out to be spoiled and vanquished; and to make his victory the more illusory, he fights them on their own ground; gives them all the advantage they could have against him by this darkness, lets them take the wind and sun, and yet baffles them, and so becomes more than a conqueror. (2.) His present want of heavenly comforts. This darkness signified that dark cloud which the human soul of our Lord Jesus was now under. God makes his sun to shine upon the just and upon the unjust, but even the light of the sun was withheld from our Saviour, when he was made sin for us. A pleasant thing it is for the eyes to behold the sun; but because now his soul was exceeding sorrowful, and the cup of divine displeasure was filled to him without mixture, even the light of the sun was suspended. When earth denied him a drop of cold water, heaven denied him a beam of light; being to deliver us from utter darkness, he did himself in the depth of his suffering walk in darkness and had no light, Isa. l. 10. During the three hours that this darkness continued, we do not find that he said one word, but passed this time in a silent retirement into his own soul, which was now in an agony, wrestling with the powers of darkness, and taking in the impressions of his Father's displeasure, not against himself, but the sin of man, which he was now making his soul an offering for. Never were there three such hours since the day that God created man upon the earth, never such a dark and awful scene; the crisis of that great affair of man's redemption and salvation.

2. How he complained of it, ver. 46. About the ninth hour, when it began to clear up, after a long and silent conflict, Jesus cried, Eli, Eli, lama sabachthani? The words are related in the Syriac tongue, in which they were spoken, because worthy of double remark, and for the sake of the perverse construction which his enemies put upon them, in putting Eli for Eli. Now observe here,

1. Whence he borrowed this complaint, from Psal. xxii. 1. It is likely he did not (as some have thought) repeat the whole psalm; yet hereby he intimated, that the whole was to be applied to him, and that David in spirit there spake of his humiliation and exaltation. This and that other word, Into thy hands, I commit my spirit, he fetched from David's psalms (though he could have expressed himself in his own words) to teach us of what use the word of God is to us to direct us in prayer, and to recommend us to the use of scripture-expressions in prayer, which will help our infirmities.

2. How he uttered it, with a loud voice; which speaks, the extremity of his pain and anguish, the strength of nature remaining in him and the great earnestness of his spirit in this expostulation. Now the scripture was fulfilled, Joel iii. 15, 16. The sun and the moon shall be darkened, The Lord shall also roar out of Zion, and utter his voice from Jerusalem. David often speaks of his crying aloud in prayer, Psal. lv. 17.

3. What the complaint was; My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me? A strange complaint to come from the mouth of our Lord Jesus, who we are sure was God's elect in whom his soul delighted, Isa. xlii. 1, and one in whom he was always well pleased. The Father now loved him, nay, he knew that therefore he loved him, because he laid down his life for the sheep; what, and yet forsaken of him; and in the midst of his sufferings too! Sure never sorrow was like unto that sorrow, which extorted such a complaint as this from one who being perfectly free from sin, could never be a terror to himself; but the heart knows its own bitterness: No wonder that such a complaint as this made the earth to quake, and rent the rocks; for it is enough to make both the curs of every one that hears it to tingle, and ought to be spoken of with great reverence.

Note, (1.) That our Lord Jesus was in his sufferings for a time forsaken by his Father. So he saith himself, who, we are sure, was under no mistake concerning his own case. Not that the union between the divine and human nature was in the least weakened or shocked; no, he was now by the eternal Spirit offering himself. Not as if there were any abatement of his Father's love to him, or his to his Father; we are sure there was upon his mind no horror of God or despair of his favour, nor any thing of the torments of hell; but his Father forsook him, that is, (1.) He delivered him up into the hands of his enemies, and did not appear to deliver him out of their hands. He let loose the powers of darkness against him, and suffered them to do their worst, worse than against Job. Now was that scripture fulfilled, Job xvi. 9. God has turned me over into the hands of the wicked, and no angel is sent from heaven to deliver him, no friend on earth raised up to appear for him. (2.) He withdrew him from the present comfortable sense of his complacency in him. When his soul was first troubled he had a voice from heaven to comfort him, John xii. 27, 28. When he was in his agony in the garden, there appeared an angel from heaven strengthening him, but now he had neither the one nor the other, God hid his face from him, and for a while withdrew his rod and staff in the darksome valley. God forsook him, not as he forsook Saul, leaving him to an endless despair; but as sometimes he forsook David, leaving him to a present despondency: (3.) He let out upon his soul an afflicting sense of his wrath against man for sin: Christ was made sin for us, a curse for us; and therefore though God loved him as a son, he frowned upon him as a surety: These impressions he was pleased to admit, and to wave that resistance of them which he could have made; because he would accommodate himself to this part of his undertaking, as he had done to all the rest, when it was in his power to have avoided it.

(2.) That Christ's being forsaken of his Father was the most grievous of his sufferings, and that which he complained most of. Here he laid the most doleful accents; he did not say, Why am I scourged? And why spit upon? And why nailed to the cross? Nor did he say to his disciples when they turned their back upon him, Why have ye forsaken me? But when his Father stood at a distance, he cried out thus; for this was it that put worm-wood and gall into the afflictions and misery. This brought the waters into the soul, Psal. lxxix. 1, 2, 3.

(3.) That our Lord Jesus, even when he was thus forsaken of his Father, yet he kept hold of him as his God notwithstanding; My God, my God; though forsaking me, yet mine. Christ was God's servant in carrying on the work of redemption, to him he was to make satisfaction, and by him to be carried through and crowned, and upon that account he calls him his God; for he was now doing his will. See Isa. xlix. 4—9. This supported him, and bore him up, that even in the depth of his sufferings God was his God, and this he resolves to keep fast hold of.

3. See how his enemies impiously bantered and ridiculed this complaint, ver. 47. They said, This man calleth for Elias. Some think this was the ignorant mistake of the Roman soldiers, who had heard talk of Elias, and the Jews expectation of the coming of Elias, but knew not the signification of Eli; Eli, and so made this blundering comment upon these words of Christ, perhaps not hearing the latter part of what he said for the noise of the people. Note, Many of the reproaches cast upon the word of God and the people of God, take rise from gross mistakes. Divine truths are often corrupted by ignorance of the language and stile of the scripture. Those hat hear by the halves, pervert what they hear. But others think it was the wilful mistake of some of the Jews, who knew very well what he said, but were minded to abuse him, and make themselves and their companions merry, and to misrepresent him as one that being forsaken of God, was driven to trust in creatures; perhaps hinting also, that he who had pretended to be himself the Messiah, would now be glad to be beholden to Elias, who was expected to be only the harbinger and forerunner of the Messiah. Note, It is no new thing for the most pious devotions of the best men to be ridiculed and abused by profane scoffers; nor are we to think it strange, if what is well said in praying and preaching be misconstrued, and turned to our reproach; Christ's words were so, though he spake as never man spake.

Fourthly, The cold comfort which his enemies ministered to him in this agony, which was like all the rest.

1. Some gave him vinegar to drink, ver. 48. instead of some cordial-water to revive and refresh him under this heavy burden, they tantalized him with that which did not only add to the reproach they were loading him with, but did too sensibly represent that cup of trembling which his Father had put into his hand. One of them ran to fetch it, seeming to be officious to him, but really glad of an opportunity to abuse and affront him, and afraid lest any one should take it out of his hands.

2. Others with the same purpose of disturbing and abusing him, refer him to Elias, ver. 49. Let be, let us see whether Elias will come to save him. Come let him alone, his case is desperate, neither heaven nor earth can help him; let us do nothing either to hasten his death or to retard it; he has appealed to Elias, and to Elias let him go.

50. ¶ JESUS, when he had cried again with a loud voice, yielded up the ghost. 51. And, behold, the veil of the temple was rent in twain from the top to the bottom; and the earth did quake, and the rocks rent; 52. And the graves were opened; and many bodies of saints, which slept arose. 53. And came out of the graves after his resurrection, and went into the holy city, and appeared unto many. 54. Now when the centurion, and they that were with him, watching Jesus, saw the earthquake, and those things that were done, they feared greatly, saying, Truly this was the Son of God. 55. And many women were there beholding afar off, which followed Jesus from Galilee, ministering unto him: 56. Among which was Mary Magdalene, and Mary the mother of James and Joses, and the mother of Zebedee's children.

We have here at length an account of the death of Christ, and several remarkable passages that attended it.

First, The manner how he breathed his last, ver. 50. between the third and the sixth hour, that is, between nine and twelve o'clock, as we reckon, he was nailed to the cross, and soon after the ninth hour, that is, between three and four o'clock in the afternoon he died. That was the time of the offering of the evening sacrifice, and the time when the paschal lamb was killed, and Christ our passover is sacrificed for us, and offered himself in the evening of the world a sacrifice to God of a sweet smelling savour. It was at that time of the day that the angel Gabriel delivered to Daniel that glorious prediction of the Messiah, Dan. ix. 21—24. And some think, that from that very time when the angel spoke it, to this time when Christ died, was just seventy weeks, that is, four hundred and ninety years, to a day, to an hour; as the departure of Israel out of Egypt was at the end of the four hundred and thirty years, even the self-same day, Exod. xii. 41.

Two things are here noted concerning the manner of Christ's dying.

1. That he cried with a loud voice, as before, ver. 46. Now,

(1.) This was a sign, that after all his pains and fatigues, yet his life was whole in him, and nature strong. The voice of dying men is one of the first things that fails; with a panting breath and a faultering tongue, a few broken words are hardly spoken, and more hardly heard: But Christ just before he expired spoke like a man in his full strength, to shew that his life was not forced from him, but was freely delivered by him into his Father's hands, as his own act and deed. He that had strength to cry thus when he died, could have got loose from the arrest he was under, and have bid defiance to the powers of death; but to shew that by the eternal Spirit he offered himself, being the priest as well as the sacrifice, he cried with a loud voice.

(2.) It was significant. This loud voice shews that he attacked our spiritual enemies with an undaunted courage, and such a bravery of resolution, as speaks him hearty in the cause and daring in the encounter. He was now spoiling principalities and powers, and in this loud voice he did as it were shout for mastery, as one mighty to save, Isa. lxiii. 1. and compare with this, Isa. xliiii. 13, 14. He now bowed himself with all his might, as Samson did, when he said, Let me die with the Philistines, Judg. xvi. 30. Animamque in vulnere ponit. His crying with a loud voice when he died, signified that his death should be published and proclaimed to all the world: all mankind being concerned in it, and obliged to take notice of it. Christ's loud cry was like a trumpet blown over the sacrifices.

2. That then he yielded up the ghost. This is the usual periphrasis of dying; to shew that the Son of God upon the cross did truly and properly die by the violence of the pain he was put to. His soul was separated from his body, and so his body was left really and truly dead. It was certain he did die, for it was requisite he should die; thus it was written, both in the close rolls of the divine counsels, and in the letters patent of the divine predictions, and therefore thus it behoved him to suffer. Death being the penalty for the breach of the first covenant, Thou shalt surely die; the mediator of the new covenant must make atonement by means of death, otherwise no remission, Heb. ix. 15. He had undertaken to make his soul an offering for sin, and he did it when he yielded up the ghost, and voluntarily resigned it.

Secondly, The miracles that attended his death. So many miracles being wrought by him in his life, we might well expect some to be wrought concerning him at his death, for his name was called Wonderful. Had he been fetched away as Elijah in a fiery chariot, that had itself been miracle enough; but being sent for away by an ignominious cross, it was requisite that his humiliation should be attended with some signal emanations of the divine glory.

1. Behold, the veil of the temple was rent in twain. This relation is ushered in with behold, turn aside and see this great sight, and be astonished at it. Just as our Lord Jesus expired, at the time of the offering of the evening sacrifice, and upon a solemn day, when the priests were officiating in the temple, and might themselves be eye-witnesses of it, the veil of the temple was rent by an invisible power; that veil which parted between the holy place and the most holy. They had condemned him for saying, I will destroy this temple, understanding it literally; now by this specimen of his power he let them know, that if he had pleased he could have made his words good. In this, as in other of Christ's miracles, there was a mystery.

1. It was in correspondence with the temple of Christ's body, which was now in the dissolving. This was the true temple, in which dwelt the fulness of the Godhead; when Christ cried with a loud voice, and gave up the ghost, and so dissolved that temple; the literal temple did as it were echo to that cry, and answer the stroke by rending its veil. Note, Death is the rending of the veil of flesh which interposeth between us and the holy of holies; the death of Christ was so, the death of true Christians is so.

2. It signified the revealing and unfolding of the mysteries of the Old Testament. The veil of the temple was for concealment, as was that on the face of Moses, therefore it was called the veil of the covering; for it was highly penal for any person to see the furniture of the most holy place, except the high priest, and he but once a year, with great ceremony and through a cloud of smoke; all which signified the darkness of that dispensation, 2 Cor. iii. 13. But now at the death of Christ all was laid open, the mysteries unveiled, so that now he that runs may read the meaning of them. Now we see that the mercy-seat signified Christ the great propitiation, the pot of manna signified Christ the bread of life. Thus we all with open face behold as in a glass, which helps the sight as the veil hindered it, the glory of the Lord, our eyes see the justification.

(1.) It signified the uniting of Jew and Gentile by the removing of the partition wall between them, which was the ceremonial law, by which the Jews were distinguished from all other people, as a garden inclosed, were brought near to God, whilst others were made to keep their distance. Christ in his death repealed the ceremonial law, cancelled that hand-writing of ordinances, took it out of the way, nailed it to his cross, and so broke down the middle wall of partition; and by abolishing those institutions abolished the enmity, and made in himself of twain one new man (as two rooms are made one, and that large and lightsome, by taking down the partition) so making peace, Eph. ii. 14, 15, 16. Christ died to rend all dividing veils, and to make all his one, John xvii. 21.

4. It signified the consecrating and laying open of a new and living way to God. The veil kept people off from drawing near to the most holy place, where the Shekinah was. But the rending of it signified, that Christ by his death opened a way to God, (1.) For himself. This was the great day of atonement, when our Lord Jesus as the great high priest, not by the blood of goats and calves, but by his own blood entered once for all into the holy place; in token of which the veil was rent, Heb. ix. 7, &c. Having offered his sacrifice in the outer court, the blood of it was now to be sprinkled upon the mercy-seat within the veil; wherefore lift up your heads, O ye gates, and be ye lift up, ye everlasting doors; for the King of glory, the Priest of glory shall come in. Now was he caused to draw near, and made to approach, Jer. xxxi. 21. Though he did not personally ascend into the holy place not made with hands till above forty days after, yet he immediately acquired a right to enter, and had a virtual admission, (2.) For us in him. So the apostle applies it, Heb. x. 19, 20. We have boldness to enter into the holiest by that new and living way which he has consecrated for us through the veil. He died to bring us to God, and in order thereunto to rend that veil of guilt and wrath which interposed between us and him, to take away the cherubim and flaming sword, and to open the way to the tree of life. We have free access through Christ to the throne of grace, or mercy-seat now, and to the throne of grace hereafter, Heb. iv. 20.—vi. 16. The rending of the veil signified (as that ancient hymn excellently expresses it) that when Christ had overcome the sharpness of death, he opened the kingdom of heaven to all believers. Nothing can obstruct or discourage our access to heaven, for the veil is rent; a door is opened in heaven, Rev. iv. 1.

2. The earth did quake; not only mount Cavalry, where Christ was crucified; but the whole land, and the adjacent countries. This earthquake, signified two things,

(1.) The horrible wickedness of Christ's crucifiers. The earth by trembling under such a load, bore its testimony to the innocency of him that was persecuted, and against the impiety of those that persecuted him. Never did the whole creation before groan under such a burden as the Son of God crucified, and the guilty wretches that crucified him. The earth quaked, as it it feared to open its mouth, to receive the blood of Christ, so much more precious than that of Abel, which it had received, and was cursed for it, Gen. iv. 11, 12. And as if it said would open its mouth to swallow up those rebels that put him to death, as it had swallowed up Dathan and Abiram for a much less crime. When the prophet would express God's great displeasure against the wickedness of the wicked; he asks, shall not the land tremble for this? Amos viii. 8.

(2.) The glorious achievements of Christ's cross. This earthquake signified the mighty shock; nay, the fatal blow now given to the devil's kingdom. So vigorous was the assault Christ now made upon the infernal powers; (that as of old, when he went out of Seir, when he marched through the field of Edom) the earth trembled, Judges v. 4. Psal. lxxviii. 7, 8. God shakes all nations, when the desire of all nations is to come, and there is a yet once more, which perhaps refers to this shaking, Hag. ii. 7—21.

3. The rocks rent; the hardest and firmest part of the earth was made to feel this mighty shock. Christ had said, that if the children should cease to cry halleluia, the stones would immediately cry out, and now in effect they did so, proclaiming the glory of suffering Jesus, and themselves more sensible of the wrong done him than the hard-hearted Jews were, who yet will shortly be glad to find a hole in the rocks, and a cleft in the ragged rocks, to hide them from the face of him that sitteth on the throne. See Rev. vi. 16. Isa. ii. 22. But when God's fury is poured out like fire, the rocks are thrown down by him, Nah. i. 6. Jesus Christ is the rock, and the rending of these rocks, signified the rending of that rock: (1.) That in the clefts of it we may behold the glory of the Lord, as he did, Exod. xxxiii. 22. Christ's dove is said to be hid in the clefts of the rock, Cant. ii. 14. that is, as some make the allusion, sheltered in the wounds of our Lord Jesus, the rock rent. (2.) That from the clefts of it rivers of living waters may flow, and follow us in this wilderness, as from the rock which Moses smote, Exod. xvii. 6. and which God clave. Psal. lxxviii. 15. and that rock was Christ, 1 Cor. x. 4. When we celebrate the memorial of Christ's death, our hard and rocky hearts must be rent, the heart and not the garments. That heart is harder than a rock that will not yield, that will not melt, where Jesus Christ is evidently set forth crucified.

4. The graves were opened. This matter is not related so fully as our curiosity could wish; for the scripture was not intended to gratify that; it should seem, the same earthquake that rent the rocks opened the graves, and many bodies of saints which slept arose; death to the saints is but the sleep of the Lord Jesus, and, ver. 53. came out of the graves after his resurrection, and went into Jerusalem the holy city, and appeared unto many. Now here,

1. We may raise many enquiries concerning it, which we cannot resolve: As, (1.) Who these saints were that did arise. Some think the ancient patriarchs, that were in such care to be buried in the land of Canaan, perhaps in the believing foresight of the advantage of this early resurrection. Christ had lately proved the doctrine of the resurrection from the instance of the patriarchs, Matt. xxii. 32. and here was a speedy confirmation of his argument. Others think, these that arose were modern saints, such as had seen Christ in the flesh, but died before him; as his father Joseph, Zecharias, Simeon, John Baptist, and others, that had been known to the disciples while they lived, and therefore were the fitter to be witnesses to them in an apparition after. What if we should suppose that they were the martyrs, who in the Old Testament times had sealed the truths of God with their blood, that were thus dignified and distinguished? Christ particularly points at them as his forerunners, Matt. xxiii. 35. And we find, Rev. xx. 4, 5. that those who were beheaded for the testimony of Jesus, rose before the rest of the dead. Sufferers with Christ shall first reign with him. (2.) It is uncertain whether, (as some think) they rose to life, now at the death of Christ and disposed of themselves elsewhere, but did not go into the city till after his resurrection; or whether, (as others think) though their sepulchres (which the Pharisees had built and garnished, Matt. xxiii. 29. and so made remarkable) were shattered now by the earthquake, (so little did God matter that hypocritical respect) yet they did not revive and rise till after his resurrection; only for brevity sake it is mentioned here, upon the mention of the opening of the graves, which seems more probable. (3.) Some think they arose only to bear witness of Christ's resurrection to those to whom they appeared, and having finished their testimony, retired to their graves again. But it is more agreeable, both to Christ's honour and theirs, to suppose, though we cannot prove, that they arose as Christ did, to die no more, and therefore ascended with him to glory. Sure they who did partake of this first resurrection, on them a second death had no power. (4.) To whom they appeared, (not to all the people it is certain, but to many) whether enemies or friends, in what manner they appeared, how often, what they said and did, and now they disappeared, are secret things which belong not to us; we must not covet to be wise above what is written. The relating of this matter so briefly, is a plain intimation to us, that we must not look that way for the confirmation of our faith, we have a more sure word of prophecy. See Luke xvi. 31.

2. Yet we may learn many good lessons from it. (1.) That even those who lived and died before the death and resurrection of Christ had saving benefit thereby, as well as those that have lived since: for he was the same yesterday that he is to day, and will be for ever, Heb. xiii. 8. (2.) That Jesus Christ by dying conquered, disarmed, and disabled death. These saints that arose were the present trophies of the victory of Christ's cross over the powers of death, which he thus made a show of openly. Having by death destroyed him that had the power of death, he thus led captivity captive, and gloried in those re-taken prizes, in them fulfilling that scripture, I will ransom them from the power of the grave. (3.) That in virtue of Christ's resurrection the bodies of all the saints, shall in the fulness of time, rise again. This was an earnest of the general resurrection at the last day, when all that are in the graves shall hear the voice of the Son of God. And perhaps Jerusalem is therefore called here the holy city, because the saints at the general resurrection shall enter into the new Jerusalem; which will be indeed what the other was in name, a type only, the holy city, Rev. xxi. 2. (4.) That all the saints do, by the influence of Christ's death and in conformity to it, rise from the death of sin to the life of righteousness. They are raised up with him to a divine and spiritual life: they go into the holy city, become citizens of it, have their conversation in it, and appear to many, as persons not of this world.

Thirdly, The conviction of his enemies that were employed in the execution, ver. 54. which some make no less than another miracle, all things considered. Observe,

1. The persons convinced; the centurion, and they that were with him watching Jesus; a captain and his company, that were set on the guard on this occasion. (1.) They were soldiers, whose profession it commonly hardening, and whose breasts are commonly not so susceptible as some others, of the impressions either of fear or pity. But there is no spirit too big, too bold, for the power of Christ to break and humble. (2.) They were Romans, Gentiles, who knew not the scriptures which were now fulfilled, yet they only were convinced. A sad presage of the blindness that should happen to Israel, when the gospel should be sent to the Gentiles to open their eyes. Here were the Gentiles softened, and the Jews hardened. (3.) They were the persecutors of Christ, and those that just before had reviled him, as appears Luke xxiii. 36. How soon can God, by the power he has over men's consciences, alter their language, and fetch confessions of his truths, to his own glory, out of the mouths of those that have breathed nothing but threatenings and slaughter and blasphemies?

2. The means of their conviction; they perceived the earthquake, which frightened them, and saw the other things that were done. These were designed to assert the honour of Christ in his sufferings, and had their end in these soldiers, whatever they had on others. Note, The dreadful appearances of God in his providence sometimes work strangely for the conviction and awakening of sinners.

3. The expressions of this conviction, in two things:

1. The terror that was struck upon them, they feared greatly; feared lest they should have been buried in the darkness, or swallowed up in the earthquake. Note, God can easily frighten the most daring of his adversaries, and make them know themselves to be but men. Guilt puts men into fear. He that when iniquity abounds, doth not fear always with a fear of caution, when judgments are abroad, cannot but fear greatly, with a fear of amazement; whereas there are those who will not fear though the earth be removed, Psal. xlvii. 1, 2.

2. The testimony that was extorted from them. They said, Truly this was the Son of God; a noble confession; Peter was blessed for it, Matt. xvi. 16, 17. It was the great matter now in dispute, the point upon which he and his enemies had joined issue, Matt. xxvi. 63, 64. His disciples believed it, but at this time durst not confess it; our Saviour himself was tempted to question it, when he said, Why hast thou forsaken me? The Jews, now he was dying upon the cross, looked upon it as plainly determined against him, that he was not the Son of God, because he did not come down from the cross. And yet now this centurion and the soldiers make this voluntary confession of the Christian faith, Truly this was the Son of God. The best of his disciples could not have said more at any time, and at this time they had not faith and courage enough to say thus much. Note, God can maintain and assert the honour of a truth then, when it seems to be crushed, and run down; for great is the truth, and will prevail.

Fourthly, The attendance of his friends, that were witnesses of his death, ver. 55, 56. Observe,

1. Who they were; many women which followed him from Galilee. Not his apostles (only elsewhere we find John by the cross, John xix. 26.) their hearts failed them, they durst not appear for fear of coming under the same condemnation. But here were a company of women, some would have called them silly women, that boldly stuck to Christ, when the rest of his disciples had basely deserted him. Note, Even those of the weaker sex are often, by the grace of God, made strong in faith, that Christ's strength may be made perfect in weakness. There have been women martyrs, famous for courage and resolution in Christ's cause. Now of these women it is said, (1.) That they had followed Jesus from Galilee, out of the great love they had to him, and a desire to hear him preach: otherwise the males only were obliged to come up to worship at the feast. Now having followed him such a long journey as from Galilee to Jerusalem, eighty or an hundred miles, they resolved not to forsake him now. Note, Our former services and sufferings for Christ should be an argument with us, faithfully to persevere to the end in our attendance on him. Have we followed him so far and so long, done so much, and laid out so much for him, and shall we forsake him now? Gal. iii. 3, 4. (2.) That they ministered to him of their substance, for his necessary subsistence. How gladly would they have ministered to him now, if they might have been admitted, but being forbidden that, they resolved to follow him. Note, When we are restrained from doing what we would, we must do what we can in the service of Christ. Now he is in heaven, though he is out of the reach of our ministration, yet he is not out of the reach of our believing views. (3.) Some of them are particularly named; for God will honour those that honour Christ. They were such as we have several times met with before, and it was their praise that we meet with them to the last.

2. What they did they were beholding afar off.

1. They stood afar off. Whether their own fear or their enemies fury kept them at a distance, is not certain; however, it was an aggravation of the sufferings of Christ, that his lovers and friends stood aloof from his sore. Psal. xxxviii. 11. Job xix. 13. Perhaps they might have come nearer if they would; but good people when they are in sufferings must not think it strange, if some of their best friends be shy of them. When Paul's danger was imminent, no man stood by him, 2 Tim. iv. 16. If we be thus looked strangely upon, remember our Master was so before us.

2. They were there beholding; in which they shewed a concern and kindness for Christ, when they were debarred from doing any other office of love to him, they looked a look of love towards him. (1.) It was a sorrowful look they looked unto him who was now pierced, and mourned, no doubt, were in bitterness for him. We may well imagine how it cut them to the heart to see him in his torment; and what floods of tears it fetched from their eyes: Let us with an eye of faith behold Christ and him crucified, and be affected with that great love wherewith he loved us. Bur. (2.) It was no more but a look; they beheld him, but they could not help him. Note, When Christ was in his sufferings, the best of his friends were but spectators, and lookers on, even the Angelic guards stood trembling by, saith Mr. Norris, for he trod the wine-press alone, and of the people there was none with him; so his own arm wrought salvation.

57. When the even was come, there came a rich man of Arimathea, named Joseph, who also himself was Jesus' disciple: 58. He went to Pilate, and begged the body of Jesus. Then Pilate commanded the body to be delivered. 59. And when Joseph had taken the body, he wrapped it in a clean linen cloth, 60. And laid it in his own new tomb, which he had hewn out in the rock: and he rolled a great stone to the door of the sepulchre, and departed. 61. And there was Mary Magdalene, and the other Mary, sitting over against the sepulchre. 62. ¶ Now the next day, that followed the day of the preparation, the chief priests and Pharisees came together unto Pilate, 63. Saying, Sir, we remember that that deceiver said, while he was yet alive, After three days I will rise again. 64. Command therefore that the sepulchre be made sure until the third day, lest his disciples come by night, and steal him away, and say unto the people, He is risen from the dead; so the last error shall be worse than the first. 65. Pilate said unto them, Ye have a watch: go your way, make it as sure as ye can. 66. So they went, and made the sepulchre sure, sealing the stone, and setting a watch.

We have here an account of Christ's burial and the manner and circumstances of it, concerning which observe, (1.) The kindness and good-will of his friends that laid him in the grave. (2.) The malice and ill will of his enemies that were very solicitous to keep him there.

First, His friends gave him a decent burial. Observe,

1. In general, that Jesus Christ was buried; when his precious soul was gone to Paradise, his blessed body was deposited in the chambers of the grave, that he might answer the type of Jonas, and fulfil the prophecy of Isaiah, he made his grave with the wicked. Thus in all things he must be made like unto his brethren, sin only excepted, and like us unto dust he must return: He was buried to make his death the more certain, and his resurrection the more illustrious. Pilate would not deliver his body to be buried till he was well assured he was really dead; while the witnesses lay unburied, there were some hopes concerning them, Rev. xi. 8. But Christ the great witness is as one free among the dead, like the slain that lie in the grave. He was buried, that he might take off the terror of the grave, and make it easy to us, might warm and perfume that cold noisome bed for us, and that we might be buried with him.

2. The particular circumstances of his burial here related.

1. The time when he was buried; when the even was come, the same evening that he died, before sun-set, as is usual in burying malefactors. It was not deferred till the next day, because it was the sabbath; for burying the dead is not proper work either for a day of rest or for a day of rejoicing, as the sabbath is.

2. The person that took care of the funeral was Joseph of Arimathea. The apostles were all fled, and none of them appeared to show this respect to their master, which the disciples of John shewed to him after he was beheaded, they took up his body and buried it, Matt. xiv. 12. The women that followed him durst not move in it, then did God stir up this good man to do it; for what work God has to do, he will find out instruments to do it, Joseph was a fit man, for, (1.) He had wherewithal to do it; being a rich man; most of Christ's disciples were poor men, such were most fit to go about the country to preach the gospel; but here was one that was a rich man, ready to be employed in a piece of service which required a man of estate. Note, Worldly wealth, though it is to many an obstruction in religion's ligion's way, yet in some services to be done for Christ, it is an advantage and an opportunity, as it is well for those who have it, if withal they have a heart to use it for God's glory. (2.) He was well affected to our Lord Jesus, for he was himself his disciple, believed in him, though he did not openly profess it. Note, Christ has more secret disciples than we are aware of; seven thousand in Israel, Rom. xi. 4.

3. The grant of the dead body procured from Pilate, ver. 58. Joseph went to Pilate, the proper person to be applied to on this occasion, who had the disposal of the body; for in things wherein the power of the magistrate is concerned, due regard must be had to that power, and nothing done to break in upon it. What we do that is good must be done peaceably, and not tumultuously. Pilate was willing to give the body to one that would inter it decently, that he might do something towards atoning for the guilt his conscience charged him with in condemning an innocent person. In Joseph's petition, and Pilate's ready grant of it, honour was done to Christ, and a testimony borne to his integrity.

The dressing of the body in its grave-clothes, ver. 59. though he was an honourable counsellor, yet he himself took the body, as it should seem, into his own arms, from the infamous and accursed tree, (Acts xiii. 29.) for where there is true love to Christ, no service will be thought too mean to stoop to for him: Having taken it, he wrapped it in a clean linen cloth, for burying in linen was then the common usage, which Joseph complied with. Note, Care is to be taken of the dead bodies of good men, for there is a glory intended for them at the resurrection, which we must hereby testify our belief of, and wind up the dead body as designed for a better place. This common act of humanity, if done after a godly sort, may be made an acceptable piece of Christianity.

5. The depositing of it in the sepulchre, ver. 60. Here was nothing of that pomp and solemnity, with which the grandees of the world are brought to the grave and laid in the tomb, Job xxi. 32. A private funeral did best befit him whose kingdom came not with observation.

(1.) He was laid in a borrowed tomb, in Joseph's burying place; as he had not a house of his own wherein to lay his head while he lived, so he had not a grave of his own wherein to lay his body when he was dead, which was an instance of his poverty, yet in this there might be somewhat of a mystery: The grave is a peculiar heritage of a sinner, Job xxiv. 19. There is nothing we can truly call our own but our sins and our grave; he returneth to his earth, Psal. cxlvi. 4. When we go to the grave, we go to our own place; but our Lord Jesus, that had no sin of his own; dying under imputed sin, it was fit he should be buried in a borrowed grave; the Jews designed that he should have made his grave with the wicked, should have been buried with the thieves with whom he was crucified, but God over-ruled it, so as that he should make it with the rich in his death, Isa. liii. 9.

(2.) He was laid in a new tomb, which Joseph, it is likely, designed for himself, but it would be never the worse for his lying in it, who was to rise so quickly; but a great deal the better for his lying in it, who has altered the property of the grave, made it new indeed, by turning it into a bed of rest, nay into a bed of spices for all the saints.

(3.) In a tomb that was hewn out of a rock; the ground about Jerusalem was generally rocky. Shebna had his sepulchre hewn out thereabouts in a rock, Isa. xxii. 16. Providence ordered it that Christ's sepulchre should be in a solid entire rock, that no room might be left to suspect his disciples to have had access to it by some under-ground passage, or to have broke through the back wall of it to steal the body; for there was no access to it but by the door which was watched.

(4.) A great stone was rolled to the door of his sepulchre; this also was according to the custom of the Jews in burying their dead, as appears by the description of the grave of Lazarus, John xi. 38. signifying that those who are dead are separated and cut off from all the living; if the grave were his prison, now was the prison door locked and bolted. The rolling of the stone to the grave's mouth, was with them as filling up the grave is with us, it completed the funeral. Having thus in silence and sorrow deposited the precious body of our Lord Jesus in the grave, the house appointed for all the living, they departed without any further ceremony. It is the most melancholy circumstance in the funerals of our Christian friends, when we have laid their bodies in the dark and silent grave, to go home and leave them behind; but alas, it is not we that go home and leave them behind, no, it is they that are gone to the better home, and have left us behind.

6. The company that attended the funeral, and that was very small and mean: Here were none of the relations in mourning to follow the corps, no formalities to grace the solemnity, but some good women that were true mourners, Mary Magdalene, and the other Mary, ver. 6. These, as they had attended him to the cross, so they followed him to the grave, as if they composed themselves to sorrow, they sat over against the sepulchre, not so much to fill their eyes with the sight of what was done, as to empty them in rivers of tears. Note, True love to Christ will carry us through to the utmost in following him. Death itself cannot quench that divine fire, Cant. viii. 6, 7.

Secondly, His enemies did what they could to prevent his resurrection; what they did herein was the next day that followed the day of the preparation, ver. 62. That was the seventh day of the week, the Jewish sabbath, yet not expressly called so, but described by this periphrasis, because it was now shortly to give way to the Christian sabbath, which began the day after. Now, (1.) All that day Christ lay dead in the grave, having for six days laboured and done all his work, on the seventh day he rested, and was refreshed. (2.) On that day the chief priests and Pharisees, when they should have been at their devotions, asking pardon for the sins of the week past, were dealing with Pilate about securing the sepulchre, and so adding rebellion to their sin. They that had so often quarreled with Christ for works of the greatest mercy on that day, were themselves busied in a work of the greatest malice. Observe here,

1. Their address to Pilate; they were vexed that the body was given to one that would bury it decently; but since it must be so, they desire a guard may be set on the sepulchre.

(1.) Their petition sets forth, that that deceiver (so they call him who is truth itself) had said, after three days I will rise again: He had said so, and his disciples remembered those very words, for the confirmation of their faith, but his persecutors remember them for the provocation of their rage and malice. Thus the same word of Christ to the one was a savour of life unto life, to the other of death unto death. See how they compliment Pilate with the title of Sir, while they reproach Christ with the title of deceiver: Thus the most malicious slanderers of good men are commonly the most sordid flatterers of great men.

(2.) It further sets forth their jealousy; lest his disciples come by night, and steal him away, and say, He is risen.

1. That which really they were afraid of was his resurrection; that which is most Christ's honour and his people's joy, is most the terror of his enemies. That which exasperated Joseph's brethren against him was the presages of his rise, and of his having dominion over them, Gen. xxxvii. 8. and all they aimed at in what they did against him was to prevent that. Come, say they, let us slay him, and see what will become of his dreams; so the chief priests and Pharisees here laboured to defeat the predictions of Christ's resurrection, saying, as David's enemies of him, Psal. xli. 8. Now that he lieth, he shall rise up no more, if he should, that would break all their measures. Note, Christ's enemies, even when they have gained their point, yet are still in fear of losing it again. Perhaps the priests were surprised at the respect shewed to Christ's dead body by Joseph and Nicodemus, two honourable counsellors, and looked upon it as an ill presage; nor can they forget his raising Lazarus from the dead, which so confounded them.

2. That which they took on them to be afraid of was, lest his disciples should come by night and steal him away, which was a very improbable thing for, (1.) They had not the courage to own him while he lived, when they might have done him and themselves real service, and it was not likely that his death should put courage into such cowards. (2.) What could they promise themselves by stealing away his body, and making people believe he was risen; when if he should not rise, and so prove himself a deceiver, his disciples that had left all for him in this world, in dependence upon a recompence in the other world, would of all others suffer most by the imposture, and would have had reason to throw the first stone at his name? What good would it do them to carry on a cheat upon themselves, to steal away his body, and say, He is risen; when, if he were not risen, their faith was vain, and they were of all men the most miserable? The chief priests apprehend, that if the doctrine of Christ's resurrection be once preached and believed, the last error will be worse than the first; a proverbial expression speaking no more than this, that we shall all be routed, all undone; they think it was their error that they had so long connived at his preaching and miracles, which error they thought they had rectified by putting him to death; but if people should be persuaded of his resurrection, that would spoil all again, his interest would revive with him, and theirs must needs sink who had so barbarously murdered him. Note, Those that oppose Christ and his kingdom, will see not only their attempts baffled, but themselves miserably plunged and embarrassed, their errors each worse than other, and the last worst of all, Psal. ii. 4, 5.

(3.) In consideration thereof, they humbly move to have a guard set upon the sepulchre till the third day; command that the sepulchre be made sure. Pilate must still be their drudge, his civil and military power must both be engaged to serve their malice; one would think death's prisoner needed no other guard, and that the grave were security enough to itself; but what will not those fear that are conscious to themselves both of guilt and impotency, in opposing the Lord and his anointed?

2. Pilate's answer to this address, ver. 65. Ye have a watch, make it sure, as sure as you can; he was ready to gratify Christ's friends, in allowing them the body, and his enemies in setting a guard upon it, being desirous to please all sides, while perhaps he laughed in his sleeve at both for making such ado, pro and con about the dead body of a man, looking upon the hopes of one side and the fears of the other to be alike ridiculous. You have a watch; he means the constant guard that was kept in the tower of Antonia, out of which he allows them to detach as many as they pleased for that purpose, but as if ashamed to be himself seen in such a thing, he leaves the management of it wholly to them. Methinks that word, Make it sure as you can, looks like a banter, either, (1.) Of their fears; be sure to set a strong guard upon the dead man; or rather, (2.) Of their hopes; do your worst, try your wit and strength to the utmost, but if he be of God, he will rise in spite of you and all your guards. I am apt to think, that by this time Pilate had some talk with the centurion, his own officer, of whom he would be apt to enquire how that just man died, whom he had condemned with such reluctancy; and he would give him an account of those things, which made him conclude that truly he was the Son of God, and Pilate would give more credit to him than to a thousand of those spiteful priests that called him a deceiver; and if so, no marvel that he tacitly derides their project, in thinking to secure the sepulchre upon him, that had so lately rent the rocks and made the earth to quake. Tertullian speaking of Pilate, saith, Ipse jam pro sua conscientia Christianus; and it was possible he might be under such convictions at this time, upon the centurion's report, and yet never be thoroughly persuaded, no more than Agrippa or Felix was, to be a Christian.

3. The wonderful care they took hereupon to secure the sepulchre, ver. 66. They sealed the stone, probably with the great seal of their sanhedrim, whereby they interposed their authority, for who durst break the public seal? But not trusting too much to that, withal they set a watch, to keep his disciples from coming to steal him away, and if possible to hinder him from coming out of the grave. So they intended, but God brought this good out of it, that they who were set to oppose his resurrection, thereby had an opportunity to observe it, and did so, and told the chief priests what they observed, who were thereby rendered the more inexcusable. Here was all the power of earth and hell combined to keep Christ a prisoner, but all in vain, when his hour was come; death, and all those sons and heirs of death, could then no longer hold him, no longer have dominion over him. To guard the sepulchre against the poor weak disciples was folly, because needless, but to think to guard it against the power of God was folly, because fruitless and to no purpose, and yet they thought they had dealt wisely.

C H A P. XXVIII.

In the foregoing chapters we saw the Captain of our salvation engaged with the powers of darkness, attacked by them, and vigorously attacking them; victory seemed to hover between the combatants; nay, at length it inclined to the enemies side, and our Champion fell before them; behold, God has delivered his strength into captivity, and his glory into the enemies hand. Christ in the grave is like the ark in Dagon's temple; the powers of darkness seemed to ride master, but then the Lord awaked as one out of sleep, and like a mighty man that shoneth by reason of wine, Psal. lxxviii. 61—65. The Prince of our peace is in this chapter rallying again, coming out of the grave a conqueror, yea, more than a conqueror, leading captivity captive; though the ark be a prisoner, Dagon falls before it, and it proves that none is able to stand before the holy Lord God. Note the resurrection of Christ being one of the main foundations of our religion, it is requisite that we should have infallible proofs of it; four of which proofs we have in this chapter, which are but a few of many, for Luke and John give a larger account of the proofs of Christ's resurrection than Matthew and Mark do. Here is, (1.) The testimony of the angel to Christ's resurrection, ver. 1—8. (2.) His appearance himself to the women, ver. 9, 10. (3.) The confession of the adversaries that were upon the guard, ver. 11—15. (4.) Christ's appearance to the disciples in Galilee, and the commission he gave them, ver. 16—20.

1. IN the end of the sabbath, as it began to dawn toward the first day of the week, came Mary Magdalene and the other Mary to see the sepulchre

2. And

2. And, behold, there was a great earthquake: for the angel of the Lord descended from heaven, and came and rolled back the stone from the door, and sat upon it. 3. His countenance was like lightning, and his raiment white as snow: 4. And for fear of him the keepers did shake, and became as dead men. 5. And the angel answered and said unto the women, Fear not ye: for I know that ye seek Jesus, which was crucified. 6. He is not here: for he is risen, as he said. Come, see the place where the Lord lay. 7. And go quickly, and tell his disciples that he is risen from the dead; and, behold, he goeth before you into Galilee; there shall ye see him: lo, I have told you. 8. And they departed quickly from the sepulchre with fear and great joy; and did run to bring his disciples word. 9. ¶ And as they went to tell his disciples, behold, Jesus met them, saying, All hail. And they came and held him by the feet, and worshipped him. 10. Then said Jesus unto them, Be not afraid: go tell my brethren, that they go into Galilee, and there shall they see me.

For the proof of Christ's resurrection, we have here the testimony of the angel, and of Christ himself, concerning his resurrection. Now we may think it would have done better, if the matter had been so ordered, that a competent number of witnesses should have been present, and have seen the stone rolled away by the angel, and the dead body reviving, as people saw Lazarus come out of the grave, and then the matter had been past dispute; but let not us prescribe to infinite wisdom, which ordered that the witnesses of his resurrection should see him risen, but not see him rise. His incarnation was a mystery, so was this second incarnation, (if we may so call it) this new making of the body of Christ for his exalted state, it was therefore made in secret; Blessed are they that have not seen, and yet have believed. Christ gave such proofs of his resurrection as were corroborated by the scriptures, and by the word which he had spoken, Luke xxiv. 6, 7—11. Mark xvi. 7. for here we must walk by faith, not by sight. We have here,

First, The coming of the good women to the sepulchre.

Observe, 1. When they came. In the end of the sabbath, as it began to dawn downwards the first day of the week, ver. 1. This fixeth the time of Christ's resurrection.

1. He rose the third day after his death, that was the time which he had often prefixed, and he kept within it: He was buried in the evening of the sixth day of the week, and rose in the morning of the first day of the following week, so that he lay in the grave about thirty-six or thirty-eight hours. He lay so long to shew he was really and truly dead, and no longer, that he might not see corruption. He rose the third day to answer the type of the prophet Jonas, Matt. xii. 40. and to accomplish that prediction, Hos. vi. 2. The third day he will raise us up, and we shall live in his sight.

2. He arose after the Jewish sabbath, and it was the passover-sabbath, all that day he lay in the grave, to signify the abolishing of the Jewish feasts and the other parts of the ceremonial law, and that his people must be dead to such observances, and take no more notice of them than he did when he lay in the grave. Christ on the sixth day finished his work, he said, It is finished, on the seventh day he rested, and then on the first day of the next week did as it were begin a new world, and enter upon a new work. Let no man therefore judge us in respect of the new moons or of the Jewish sabbaths, which were indeed a shadow of good things to come, but the substance is of Christ. We may further observe, that the time of the saints lying in the grave, is a sabbath to them (such as the Jewish sabbath was, which consisted chiefly in bodily rest) for there they rest from their labours, Job iii. 17. and it is owing to Christ.

3. He rose upon the first day of the week; on the first day of the first week God commanded the light to shine out of darkness; on this day therefore did he who was to be the light of the world, shine out of the darkness of the grave; and the seventh-day sabbath being buried with Christ, it rose again in the first-day sabbath, called the Lord's day, Rev. i. 10. and no other day of the week is from henceforward mentioned in all the New Testament but this, and this often, as the day which Christians religiously observed in solemn assemblies to the honour of Christ, John xx. 19—26. Acts xx. 7. 2 Cor. xvi. 2. If the deliverance of Israel out of the land of the north superseded the remembrance of that out of Egypt, Jer. xlii. 7, 8. much more doth our redemption by Christ eclipse the glory of God's former works. The sabbath was instituted in remembrance of the perfecting of the works of creation, Gen. ii. 1. Man by his revolt made a breach upon that perfect work, which was never perfectly repaired till Christ rose from the dead, and the heavens and the earth were again finished, and the disordered hosts of them modelled anew, and the day on which this was done was justly blessed and sanctified, and the seventh day from that. He who on that day rose from the dead, is the same by whom, and for whom all things were at first created, and now anew created.

4. He rose as it began to dawn towards that day; as soon as it could be said that the third day was come, the time prefixed for his resurrection, he rose; after his withdrawals from his people, he returns with all convenient speed, and cuts the work as short in righteousness as may be. He had said to his disciples, that though within a little while they should not see him, yet again a little while, and they should see him, and accordingly he made it as little a while as possible, 1 Ju. liv. 7, 8. Christ rose when the day began to dawn, because then the day-spring from on high did again visit us, Luke i. 78. His passion began in the night, when he hung on the cross the sun was darkened, he was laid in the grave in the dusk of the evening, but he rose from the grave when the sun was near rising, for he is the bright and morning star, Rev. xxii. 16. the true light. Those who address themselves early in the morning to the religious services of the Christian sabbath, that they may take the day before them, therein follow this example of Christ, and that of David, early will I seek thee.

2. Who they were that came to the sepulchre, Mary Magdalene, and the other Mary, the same that attended the funeral, and sat over against the sepulchre, as before they sat over against the cross; still they studied to express their love to Christ, still they were enquiring after him. Then shall we know, if we thus follow on to know. No mention is made of the virgin Mary being with them, it is likely the beloved disciple who had taken her to his own home, hindered her from going to the grave to weep there. Their attendance on Christ not only to the grave, but in the grave, represents his like care for those that are his, when they have made their bed in the darkness. As Christ in the grave was beloved of the faints, so the saints in the grave are beloved of Christ, for death and the grave cannot slacken that bond of love which is between them.

3. What they came to do; the other evangelists say they came to anoint the body; Matthew saith they came to see the sepulchre, whether it was as they left it; hearing perhaps, but not being sure, that the chief priests had set a guard upon it. They went, to shew their good-will in another visit to the dear remains of their beloved Master, and perhaps not without some thoughts of his resurrection, for they could not have quite forgot all he had said of it. Note, Visits to the grave are of great use to Christians, and will help to make it familiar to them, and to take off the terror of it, especially visits to the grave of our Lord Jesus, where we may see sin buried out of sight, the pattern of our sanctification, and the great proof of redeeming love shining illustriously even in that land of darkness.

Secondly, The appearance of an angel of the Lord to them, ver. 2, 3, 4. We have here an account of the manner of the resurrection of Christ, as far as it was fit we should know.

1. There was a great earthquake; when he died the earth that received him shook for fear; now he rose, the earth that resigned him leaped for joy in his exaltation. This earthquake did as it were loose the bond of death, and shake off the fetters of the grave, and introduced the desire of all nations, Hag. ii. 6, 7. It was the signal of Christ's victory, notice was hereby given of it, that when the heavens rejoiced, the earth also might be glad. It was a specimen of the shake that will be given to the earth at the general resurrection, when mountains and islands shall be removed, that the earth may no longer cover her slain. There was a noise and a shaking in the valley, when the bones were come to together, bone to his bone, Ezek. xxxvii. 7. The kingdom of Christ which was now to be set up made the earth to quake, and terribly shook it; Those that are sanctified, and thereby raised to a spiritual life, while it is in the doing find an earthquake in their own bosoms, as Paul who trembled and was astonished.

2. The angel of the Lord descended from heaven: The angels frequently attended our Lord Jesus, at his birth, in his temptation, in his agony, but upon the cross we find no angel attending him; when his Father forsook him, the angels withdrew from him; but now he is resuming the glory he had before the foundation of the world, now behold the angels of God worship him.

3. He came and rolled back the stone from the door, and sat upon it: Our Lord Jesus could have rolled back the stone himself by his own power, but he chose to have it done by an angel, to signify that having undertaken to make satisfaction for our sin, as such was imputed to him, and being under arrest pursuant to that imputation, he did not break prison, but had a fair and legal discharge, obtained from heaven; he did not break prison, but an officer was sent on purpose to roll away the stone, and so to open the prison-door, which would never have been done, if he had not made a full satisfaction. But being delivered for our offences, to complete the deliverance he was raised again for our justification, he died to pay our debt, and rose again to take out our acquaintance. The stone of our sins was rolled to the door of the grave of our Lord Jesus, (and we find the rolling of a great stone to signify the contracting of guilt, 1 Sam. xiv. 33. But to demonstrate that divine justice was satisfied, an angel was commissioned to roll back the stone, not that the angel raised him from the dead, no more than those that took away the stone from Lazarus's grave raised him, but thus he intimated the consent of heaven to his release, and the joy of heaven in it. The enemies of Christ had sealed the stone, resolving, like Babylon, not to open the house of his prisoners; shall the prey be taken from the mighty? For this was their hour, but all the powers of death and darkness are under the control of the God of light and life. An angel from heaven has power to break the seal, though it were the great seal of Israel, and is able to roll away the stone, though never so great: Thus the captives of the mighty are taken away. The angel's sitting upon the stone when he had rolled it away, is very observable, and speaks a secure triumph over all the obstructions of Christ's resurrection. There he sat defying all the powers of hell to roll the stone to the grave again. Christ erects his seat of rest and seat of judgment upon the opposition of his enemies; the Lord sitteth upon the floods: The angel sat as a guard to the grave, having frightened away the enemies black guard; he sat expecting the women, and ready to give them an account of his resurrection.

4. That his countenance was like lightning, and his raiment white as snow, ver. 3. This was a visible representation, by that which we call splendid and illustrious, of the glories of the invisible world which know no difference of colours. His look upon the keepers was like flashes of lightning, he cast forth lightning, and scattered them, Psal. cxliv. 6. The whiteness of his raiment was an emblem not only of purity, but of joy and triumph. When Christ died, the court of heaven went into deep mourning, signified by the darkening of the sun; but when he rose, they again put on the garments of praise; the glory of this angel represented the glory of Christ, to which he was now risen, for it is the same description that was given of him in his transfiguration, Matt. xvii. 2. but when he conversed with his disciples after his resurrection, he drew a veil over it, and it spoke the glory of the saints in their resurrection, when they shall be as the angels of God in heaven.

5. That for fear of him the keepers did shake, and became as dead men, ver.

4. They were soldiers, that thought themselves hardened against fear, yet the very sight of an angel struck them with terror. Thus when the Son of God arose to judgment, the stout-hearted were spoiled, Psal. lxxvi. 5—9. Note, The resurrection of Christ, as it is the joy of his friends, so it is the terror and confusion of his enemies. They did shake; the word ἐκταράσσειν, is the same with that which was used for the earthquake, ver. 2. ἐκταράσσειν, when the earth shook, these children of the earth that had their portion in it, shook too; whereas those that have their happiness in things above, though the earth be removed, yet are without fear. The keepers became as dead men, when he whom they kept guard upon became alive, and they, whom they kept guard against, revived with him. It struck a terror upon them, to see themselves baffled in that which was their business here. They were posted here to keep a dead man in his grave, as easy a piece of service sure as ever was assigned them, and yet it proves too hard for them. They were told that they must expect to be assaulted by a company of feeble faint-hearted disciples, who for fear of them would soon shake and become as dead men, but are amazed when they find themselves attacked by a mighty angel, whom they dare not look in the face. Thus doth God frustrate his enemies by frightening them, Psal. ix. 20.

Thirdly, The message which this angel delivered to the women, ver. 5, 6, 7.

1. He encourageth them against their fears, ver. 5. To come near to graves and tombs, especially in silence and solitude, has something in it frightful, much more was it so to those women, to find an angel at the sepulchre; but he soon makes them easy with the word, Fear not ye: The keepers shook, and became as dead men, but fear not ye. Let the sinners in Zion be afraid, for there is cause for it, but fear not Abraham, nor any of the faithful seed of Abraham, why should the daughters of Sarah, that do well, be afraid with any amazement? 1 Pet. iii. 6. Fear not ye. Let not the news I have to tell you, be any surprise to you, for you were told before your Master would rise, let it be no terror to you, for his resurrection will be your consolation; fear not any hurt, that I will do you, nor any evil tidings I have to tell you. Fear not ye, for I know that ye seek Jesus: I know you are friends to the cause; I do not come to frighten you, but to encourage you. Note, Those that seek Jesus have no reason to be afraid, for if they seek him diligently they shall find him, and shall find him their bountiful rewarder. All our believing enquiries after the Lord Jesus are observed, and taken notice of in heaven. I know that ye seek Jesus; and shall certainly be answered as these were, with good words, and comfortable words: Ye seek Jesus that was crucified. He mentioned his being crucified, the more to commend their love to him; ye seek him still, though he was crucified; you retain your kindness for him notwithstanding. Note, True believers love and seek Christ, not only though he was crucified, but because he was so.

2. He assures them of the resurrection of Christ, and there was enough in that to silence their fears, ver. 6. He is not here, for he is risen. To be told, He is not here, would have been no welcome news to those who sought him, if it had not been added, He is risen. Note, It is matter of comfort to those who seek Christ, and miss of finding him where they expected, that He is risen: If we find him not in sensible comfort, yet he is risen. We must not hearken to those who say, Lo here is Christ, or lo, he is there, for he is not here, he is not there, he is risen. In all our enquiries after Christ, we must remember that he is risen; and we must seek him as one risen, (1.) Not with any gross, carnal thoughts of him: There were those that knew Christ after the flesh, but now henceforth know we him so no more, 2 Cor. v. 16. It is true, he had a body, but it is now a glorified body: They that make pictures and images of Christ, forget that he is not here, he is risen; our communion with him must be spiritual, by faith in his word, Rom. x. 6, 7, 8. (2.) We must seek him with great reverence and humility, and an awful regard to his glory, for he is risen; God has highly exalted him, and given him a name above every name, and therefore every knee and every soul must bow before him. (3.) We must seek him with a heavenly mind, when we are ready to make this world our home, and to say, It is good to be here, let us remember our Lord Jesus is not here, he is risen, and therefore let not our hearts be here, but let them rise too, and seek the things that are above, Col. iii. 1, 2, 3. Phil. iii. 20.

Two things the angel refers these women to for the confirmation of their faith, touching Christ's resurrection.

(1.) To his word now fulfilled, which they might remember; He is risen, as he said. This he voucheth as the proper object of faith; he said he would rise, and you know he is the truth itself, and therefore have reason to expect he should rise; why should you be backward to believe that which he told you would be? Let us never think strange at that which the word of Christ has raised our expectations of, whether the sufferings of this present time, or the glory that is to be revealed. If we remember what Christ hath said to us, we shall be the less surprised at what he doth with us. This angel, when he said, He is not here, he is risen, makes it to appear, that he preaches no other gospel than what they had already received, for he refers himself to the word of Christ as sufficient to bear him out; He is risen, as he said.

(2.) To his grave now empty, which they might look into; Come, see the place where the Lord lay. Compare what you have heard, with what you see, and putting both together you will believe. You see he is not here, and remembering what ye said, you may be satisfied, he is risen; come see the place, and you will see he is not there, you will see he could not be stolen thence, and therefore must conclude he is risen. Note, It may be of use to affect us, and may have a good influence upon us, to come, and with an eye of faith see the place where the Lord lay. See the marks he has here left of his love in condescending so low for us; see how easy he has made that bed, and how lightsome for us, by lying in it himself, when we look into the grave where we expect we must lie, to take off the terror of it, let us look into the grave where the Lord lay; the place where our Lord lay, so the Syriac. The angels own him for their Lord, as well as we; for the whole family, both in heaven and earth, is named from him.

3. He directs them to go carry the tidings of it to his disciples, ver. 7. Go quickly, and tell his disciples; it is probable, they were for entertaining themselves with the sight of the sepulchre and discourse with the angels: It was good to be here, but they have other work appointed them; this is a day of good tidings, and though they have the premier jetin of the comfort, the first taste of it, yet they must not have the monopoly of it, must not hold their peace, no more than those lepers, 2 Kings vii. 9. They must go tell the disciples. Note, Public usefulness to others must be preferred before the pleasure of secret communion with God ourselves; for it is more blessed to give than receive. Observe,

1. The disciples of Christ must first be told the news, not go tell the chief priests and the Pharisees that they may be confounded; but tell the disciples that they may be comforted. God anticipates the joy of his friends, more than the shame of his enemies, though the perfection of both is reserved for hereafter. Tell his disciples, it may be they will believe your report, however tell them, (1.) That they may encourage themselves under their present sorrows and dispersions. It was a dismal time with them, between grief and fear, what a cordial would this be to them now, to hear their Master is risen. (2.) That they may enquire further into it themselves. This alarm was sent them to awaken them from that strange stupidity which had seized them, and to raise their expectations: This was to set them on seeking him, and to prepare them for his appearance to them. General hints excite to closer searches. They now hear of him, but shall very shortly see him. Christ discovers himself gradually.

2. The women are sent to tell it them, and so are made, as it were, the apostles of the apostles. This was an honour put upon them, and a recompence for their constant affectionate adherence to him, at the cross, and in a grave, and a rebuke to the disciples who forsook him. Still God chooseth the weak things of the world to confound the mighty, and puts the treasure, not only into earthen vessels, but here into the weaker vessels; as the woman, being deceived by the suggestions of an evil angel, was first in the transgression, 1 Tim. ii. 14. so these women being duly informed by the instructions of a good angel, were first in the belief of the redemption from transgression by Christ's resurrection, that that reproach of their sex might be rolled away, by putting this in the balance against it, which is their perpetual praise.

3. They were bid to go quickly upon this errand: Why, what haste was there? Would not the news keep cold, and be welcome to them at any time? Yes, but they were now overwhelmed with grief, and Christ would have this cordial hastened to them; when Daniel was humbling himself before God for sin, the angel Gabriel was caused to fly swiftly with a message of comfort, Dan. ix. 21. We must always be ready and forward; (1.) To obey the commands of God, Psalm cxix. 60. (2.) To do good to our brethren, and to carry comfort to them, as those that felt from their afflictions; Say not, go and come again, and to-morrow I will give; but now quickly.

4. They were directed to appoint the disciples to meet him in Galilee. There were other appearances of Christ to them before that in Galilee, which were sudden and surprising, but he would have one to be solemn and public, and gave them notice of it before. Now this general rendezvous was appointed in Galilee, eighty or a hundred miles from Jerusalem; (1.) In kindness to those of his disciples that remained in Galilee, and did not, perhaps they could not come up to Jerusalem, and therefore into that country he would go, to manifest himself to his friends there; I know thy works, and where thou dwellest; Christ knows where his disciples dwell, and will visit there. Note, The exaltation of Christ doth not make him forget the meaner and poorer sort of his disciples, but even to them that are at a distance from the plenty of the means of grace he will graciously manifest himself. (2.) In consideration of the weakness of his disciples that were now at Jerusalem, who as yet were afraid of the Jews, and durst not appear publicly, and therefore this meeting was adjourned to Galilee. Christ knows our fears, and considers our frame, and made his appointment where there was least danger of disturbance.

Lastly, The angel solemnly affirms upon his word the truth of what he had related to them, Lo, I have told you, you may be assured of it, and depend upon it. I have told you, who dare not tell a lie. The words spoken by angels was steadfast, Heb. ii. 2. God had been wont formerly to make known his mind to his people, by the ministration of angels, as at the giving of the law, but intending in gospel times to lay aside that way of communication, (for unto the angels hath he not put in subjection the world to come, nor appointed them to be the preachers of the gospel) this angel was now sent to certify the resurrection of Christ to the disciples, and so leave it in their hands to be published to the world, 2 Cor. iv. 7. In saying, Lo, I have told you, he doth, as it were, discharge himself from the blame of their unbelief, if they should not receive this record, and throw it upon them; I have done my errand, I have faithfully delivered my message, now look you to it, believe it at your peril, whether you will hear or whether you will forbear, I have told you. Note, These messengers from God that discharge their trust faithfully, may take the comfort of that, whatever the success be, Acts xx. 26, 27.

Fourthly, The women's departure from the sepulchre, to bring notice to the disciples, ver. 8. And observe,

1. What frame and temper of spirit they were in; they departed with fear and great joy; a strange mixture, fear and joy at the same time, in the same soul. To hear that Christ was risen, was matter of joy; but to be led into his grave, and to see, and talk with an angel about it, could not but cause fear. It was good news, but they were afraid it was too good to be true. But observe, it is said of their joy, it was great joy, it is not said so of their fear. Note, (1.) Holy fear has joy attending it. They that serve the Lord with reverence, serve him with gladness. (2.) Spiritual joy is mixed with trembling, Psalm ii. 11. It is only perfect love and joy that will cast out all fear.

2. What haste they made, they did run. The fear and joy together quickened their pace and added wings to their motion; the angel bid them go quickly, and they ran. Those that are sent on God's errand; must not loiter or lose the time where the heart is enlarged with the glad tidings of the gospel, the feet will run the way of God's commandments.

3. What errand they went upon. They did run to bring his disciples word. Not doubting but it would be joyful news to them, they ran to comfort them with the same comforts wherewith they themselves were comforted of God. Note, The disciples of Christ should be forward to communicate to each other their experiences of sweet communion with heaven; should tell others what God has done for their souls, and spoken to them. Joy in Christ Jesus, like the ointment of the right-hand, will betray itself, and fill all the places within the limits of its communication with its odours. When Samson found honey, he brought it to his parents.

Fifthly, Christ's appearing to the women to confirm the testimony of the angel, ver. 9, 10. These zealous good women not only heard the first tidings of him, but had the first sight of him after his resurrection. The angel directed those that would see him to go to Galilee, but before that time came, even here also they looked after him that lives and sees them. Note, Jesus Christ is often better than his word, but never worse; often anticipates, but never frustrates the believing expectations of his people.

Here is, 1. Christ's surprising appearance to the women. As they went to tell his disciples, behold, Jesus met them. Note, God's gracious visits usually meet us in the way of duty, and to those who use what they have for others benefit, more shall be given. This interview with Christ was unexpected, or ever they were aware, Cant. vi. 12. Note, Christ is nearer to his people than they imagine. They needed not descend into the deep to fetch Christ thence; he was not there, he was risen; nor go up to heaven, for he was not yet ascended: But Christ was nigh them, and still in the word is nigh us.

2. The salutation wherewith he accosted them; All hail; χαίρετε. We use the old English form of salutation, wishing all health to those we meet; for so All hail signifies, and is expressive of the Greek form of salutation here used, answering to that of the Hebrew, Peace be unto you. And it speaks, (1.) That good-will of Christ to us and our happiness, even since he entered upon his estate of exaltation. Though he be advanced, he wisheth us as well as ever, and is as much concerned for our comfort.

(2.) The freedom and holy familiarity which he used in his fellowship with his disciples; for he called them friends. But the Greek word signifies, Rejoice ye. They were affected both with fear and joy; what he said to them tended to encourage their joy, ver. 9. Rejoice ye, and to silence their fear, ver. 10. Be not afraid. Note, It is the will of Christ that his people should be a cheerful joyful people, and his resurrection furnisheth them with abundant matter of joy.

3. The affectionate respect they paid him. They came and held him by the feet, and worshipped him. Thus they expressed, (1.) The reverence and honour they had for him, they threw themselves at his feet, put themselves into a posture of adoration, and worshipped him with humility and godly fear, as the Son of God, and now exalted. (2.) The love and affection they had to him; they held him, and would not let him go, Cant. iii. 4. How beautiful were the feet of the Lord Jesus to them, Isa. lii. 7. (3.) The transport of joy they were in, now they had this further assurance of his resurrection; they welcomed it with both arms. Thus we must embrace Jesus Christ offered us in the gospel, with reverence cast ourselves at his feet, by faith take hold of him, and with love and joy lay him near our hearts.

4. The encouraging words Christ said to them, ver. 10. We do not find they said any thing to him, their affectionate embraces and adorations spoke plainly enough; and what he said to them was no more than what the angel had said, ver. 5-7. for he will confirm the word of his messengers; Isa. xlv. 26. and his way of comforting his people is by his Spirit, to speak over again to their hearts the same that they had heard before from his angels the ministers. Now observe here,

How he rebukes their fear. Be not afraid. They must not fear being imposed upon by these repeated notices of his resurrection, not fear any hurt by the appearance of one from the dead; for the news though strange, was both true and good. Note, Christ rose from the dead to silence his peoples fears, and there is enough in that to silence them.

2. How he repeats their message. Go tell thy brethren, that they must prepare for a journey into Galilee, and there they shall see me. If there be any communion between our souls and Christ, is he that appoints the meeting, and he will observe the appointment. Jerusalem had forfeited the honour of Christ's presence, it was a tumultuous city, therefore he adjourns the meeting to Galilee. Come, my beloved, let us go forth, Cant. vii. 11. But that which is especially observable here is, that he calls his disciples his brethren. Go tell my brethren, not only those of them that were akin to him, but all the rest, for they are all his brethren, Matt. xii. 50. but he never called them so till after his resurrection, here and John xx. 17. Being by the resurrection himself declared to be the Son of God with power, all the children of God were hereby declared to be his brethren. Being the first-begotten from the dead, he is become the first-born among his brethren, even of all that are planted together in the likeness of his resurrection. Christ did not now converse so constantly and familiarly with his disciples as he had done before his death; but lest they should think him grown strange to them, he gives them this endearing title, Go to my brethren, that the scripture might be fulfilled, which, speaking of his entrance upon his exalted state, saith, I will declare thy name unto my brethren. They had shamefully deserted him in his sufferings; but to shew that he could forgive and forget, and to teach us to do so, he not only continues his purpose to meet them, but calls them brethren. Being all his brethren, they were brethren one to another, and must love as brethren. His owning them for his brethren put a great honour upon them, but withal gave them an example of humility in the midst of that honour.

11. ¶ Now when they were going, behold, some of the watch came into the city, and shewed unto the chief priests all the things that were done. 12. And when they were assembled with the elders, and had taken counsel, they gave large money unto the soldiers, 13. Saying, Say ye, His disciples came by night, and stole him away while we slept. 14. And if this come to the governor's ears, we will persuade him, and secure you. 15. So they took the money, and did as they were taught: and this saying is commonly reported among the Jews until this day.

For the further proof of the resurrection of Christ, we have here the confession of the adversaries that were upon the guard; and there are two things which strengthen this testimony; that they were eye-witnesses, and did themselves see the glory of the resurrection, which none else did, and that they were enemies, set there to oppose and obstruct his resurrection. Now observe here,

1. How this testimony was given in to the chief priests, ver. 11. when the women were going to bring that news to the disciples, which would fill their hearts with joy; the soldiers went to bring the same news to the chief priests, which would fill their faces with shame. Some of the watch, probably those of them that commanded in chief, they came into the city, and brought to those who employed them, the report of their disappointment. They shewed to the chief priests all the things that were done; told them of the earthquake, the descent of the angel, the rolling of the stone away, and the coming of the body of Jesus alive out of the grave. Thus the sign of the prophet Jonas was brought to the chief priests with the most clear and incontestible evidence that could be; and so the utmost means of conviction were afforded them; we may well imagine what a mortification it was to them, and that, like the enemies of the Jews, they were much cast down in their own eyes, Neh. vi. 16. It might justly have been expected that they should now have believed in Christ, and repented their putting him to death; but they were obstinate in their infidelity, and therefore sealed up under it.

2. How it was baffled and flitted by him. They called an assembly, and considered what was to be done. For their own parts they were resolved not to believe that Jesus was risen; but their care was to keep others from believing, and themselves from being quite ashamed from their disbelief of it. They had put him to death, and there was no way of standing to what they had done, but by confronting the evidence of his resurrection. Thus they who have sold themselves to work wickedness, find that one sin draws on another, and they have plunged themselves into a wretched necessity of adding iniquity to iniquity, which is a part of the curse of Christ's persecutors, Psal. lxi. 27.

The result of their debate was, that those soldiers must by all means be bribed off, and hired not to tell tales.

1. They put money into their hands; and what wickedness is it which men will not be brought to by the love of money? They gave large money, it is likely a great deal more than they gave to Judas, unto the soldiers. These chief priests loved their money as well as most people did, and were as loth to part with it, and yet to carry on a malicious design against the gospel of Christ, they were very prodigal of it: they gave the soldiers it is likely as much as they asked, and they knew how to improve their advantages. Here was large money given for the advancing of that which they knew to be a lie, yet many grudge a little money for the advancement of that which they know to be the truth, though they have a promise of being re-imbursed in the resurrection of the just. Let us never starve a good cause, when we see a bad one so liberally supported.

2. They put a lie into their mouths, ver. 13. Say ye, his disciples came by night and stole him away while we slept; a sorry shift is better than none, but this is a sorry one indeed. (1.) The sham was ridiculous, and carried along with it its own confutation; if they slept, how could they know any thing of the matter, or say who came? If any one of them were awake to observe it, no doubt, he would awake them all to oppose it, for that was the only thing they had in charge. It was altogether improbable that a company of poor, weak, cowardly, dispirited men should expose themselves for so inconsiderable an achievement as the rescue of the dead body. Why were not the houses where they lodged diligently searched, and other means used to discover the dead body; but this was so thin a lie as one might easily see through. But had it been never so plausible, (2.) It was a wicked thing for these priests and elders to hire these soldiers to tell a deliberate lie (if it had been in a matter of never so small importance) against their consciences: Those know not what they do, that draw others to commit one wilful sin; for that may debauch conscience, and be an inlet to many. But, (3.) Considering this as intended to overthrow the great doctrine of Christ's resurrection, this was a sin against the law remedy, and was in effect a blasphemy against the Holy Ghost, imputing that to the roguery of the disciples which was done by the power of the Holy Ghost.

But lest the soldiers should object the penalty they incurred by the Roman law for sleeping upon the guard, which was very severe, Acts xii. 19. they promised to interpose with the governor, we will persuade him, and secure you. We will use our own interest in him to get him not to take notice of it, and they had lately found how easily they could manage him.

VOL. III. No. CLXX.

If really these soldiers had slept, and so suffered the disciples to steal him away, as they would have the world believe; it is certain the priests and elders would have been the forwardest to solicit the governor to punish them for their treachery; so that their care for the soldiers safety plainly gives the lie in the story. They undertook to secure the sword of Pilate's justice, but could not secure them from the sword of God's justice, which hangs over the head of those that love and make a lie. They promise more than they can perform, who undertake to save a man harmless in the commission of a wilful sin.

Well, thus was the plot laid; now what success had it?

1. Those that were willing to deceive took the money, and did as they were taught. They cared as little for Christ and his religion, as the chief priests and elders did; and men that have no religion at all can be very well pleased to see Christianity run down, and lend a hand to it, if need be, to serve a turn. They took the money, that was it they aimed at, and nothing else. Note, Money is a bait for the blackest temptation; mercenary tongues will sell the truth for it.

The great argument to prove Christ to be the Son of God, is his resurrection, and none could have more convincing proofs of the truth of that than these soldiers had; they saw the angel descend from heaven, saw the stone rolled away, saw the body of Christ come out of the grave, unless the consternation they felt hindered them; and yet was so far from being convinced by it themselves, that they were hired to bely him and to hinder others from believing in him. Note, The most sensible evidence will not convince men without the concurring operation of the holy Spirit.

2. Those that were willing to be deceived, not only credited, but propagated the story. This saying is commonly reported among the Jews until this day. The sham took well enough, and answered the end. The Jews, who persisted in their infidelity, when they were pressed with the argument of Christ's resurrection, had this still ready to reply, His disciples came and stole him away. To this purpose was the solemn narrative, which (as Justin Martyr relates in this dialogue with Trypho the Jew) the great Sanhedrim sent to all the Jews of the dispersion concerning this affair, exciting them to a vigorous resistance of Christianity, that when they had crucified, and buried him, the disciples came by night and stole him out of the sepulchre, designing thereby not only to overthrow the truth of Christ's resurrection, but to render his disciples odious to the world, as the greatest villains in nature. When once a lie is raised, none knows how far it will spread, nor how long it will last, nor what mischief it will do. Some give another sense of this passage, this saying commonly reported, i. e. notwithstanding the artifice of the chief priests, thus to impose upon the people; yet the conclusion that was between them and the soldiers, and the money that was given to support the cheat, was commonly reported and whispered among the Jews; for one way or other truth will out.

16. ¶ Then the eleven disciples went away into Galilee, into a mountain where Jesus had appointed them. 17. And when they saw him, they worshipped him: but some doubted. 18. And Jesus came, and spake unto them, saying, All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth. 19. ¶ Go ye therefore and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost: 20. Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world. Amen.

This evangelist passeth over several other appearances of Christ recorded by Luke and John, and hastens to this, which was of all other the most solemn, as being promised and appointed again and again before his death, and after his resurrection.

Observe, (1.) How the disciples attended his appearance, according to the appointment, ver. 16. They went into Galilee, a long journey to go for one sight of Christ, but it was worth while. They had seen him several times at Jerusalem, and yet they went into Galilee to see him there.

(1.) Because he appointed them to do so. Though it seemed a needless thing to go into Galilee, to see him whom they might see at Jerusalem, especially when they must so soon come back again to Jerusalem, before his ascension, yet they had learned to obey Christ's commands and not object against them. Note, Those who would maintain communion with Christ, must attend him there where he has appointed. Those that have met him in one ordinance must attend him in another, that have seen him at Jerusalem must go to Galilee.

(2.) Because that was to be a public and general meeting. They had seen him themselves, and conversed with him in private, but that should not excuse their attendance in a solemn assembly, where many were to be gathered together to see him. Note, Our communion with God in secret must not supersede our attendance on public worship, as we have opportunity; for God loves the gates of Zion, and so must we. The place was a mountain in Galilee, probably the same mountain on which he was transfigured. There they met for privacy, and perhaps to signify the exalted state, into which he was entered, and his advances towards the upper world.

(3.) How they were affected with the appearance of Christ to them, ver. 17. Now was the time that he was seen of above five hundred brethren at once, 1 Cor. xv. 6. Some think they saw him at first at some distance, above in the air, 1 Th. iv. 16. He was seen of above five hundred brethren, so they read it: which gave occasion to some to doubt, till he came nearer, ver. 18. and then they were satisfied. We are told,

1. That they worshipped him; many of them did so, nay, it should seem they all did that, they gave divine honour to him, which was signified by some outward expressions of adoration. Note, All that see the Lord Jesus with an eye of faith are obliged to worship him.

But some doubted, some of those that were then present. Note, Even among those that worship, there are some that doubt. The faith of those that are sincere may yet be very weak and wavering. They doubted, ver. 18. they hung in suspense, as the scales of the balance, when it is hard to say which preponderates. These doubts were afterwards removed, and their faith grew up to a full assurance, and it tended much to the honour of Christ, that the disciples doubted before they believed; so that they cannot be said to be credulous, and willing to be imposed upon; for they first questioned, and proved all things, and then held fast that which was true, and they found to be so.

(3.) What Jesus Christ said to them, ver. 19, 20. Jesus came and spake unto them. Though there were those that doubted, yet he did not therefore reject them; for he will not break the bruised reed. He did not stand at a distance, but came near, and gave them such convincing proofs of his resurrection as turned the wavering scale, and made their faith to triumph over their doubts, He came and spake familiarly to them, as one friend speaks of another, that they might be fully satisfied in the commission he was about to give them. He that drew near to God, to speak for us to him, draws near to us, to speak from him to us. Christ now delivered to his apostles the great charter of his kingdom in the world, was sending them out as his ambassadors, and here gives them their credentials.

In opening this great charter we may observe two things :

First, The commission which our Lord Jesus received himself from the Father; being about to authorize his apostles, if any ask by what authority he doth it, and who gave him that authority? here he tells us, All power is given unto me in heaven, and in earth: a very great word, and which none but he could say. Hereby he asserts his universal dominion as Mediator, which is the great foundation of the Christian religion. He has all power. Observe, 1. Whence he hath this power. He did not assume it or usurp it, but it was given him, he was legally entitled to it and invested in it by a grant from him who is the fountain of all-being, and consequently of all power. God set him King, Psal. ii. 6. inaugurated and enthroned him, Luke i. 32. As God, equal with the Father, all power was originally, and essentially his; but as Mediator, as God-man, all power was given him; partly in recompence of his work, because he humbled himself, therefore God thus exalted him, and partly in pursuance of his design; he had this power given him over all flesh, that he might give eternal life to as many as were given him, John xvii. 2. for the more effectual carrying on and completing our salvation. This power he was now more signally invested in upon his resurrection, Acts xiii. 33. He had power before, power to forgive sins, Matt. ix. 6, but now all power is given him. He is now going to receive for himself a kingdom, Luke xix. 12. to sit down at the right hand, Psal. cx. 1. Having purchased it, nothing remains but to take possession, it is his own for ever.

2. Where he has this power, in heaven and earth, comprehending the universe. Christ is the sole universal monarch, he is Lord of all, Acts x. 36. He has all power in heaven; he has power of dominion over the angels, they are all his humble servants, Eph. i. 20, 21. He has power of intercession with his Father, in the virtue of his satisfaction and atonement; he intercedes, not as a suppliant but as a demandant, Father, I will. He hath all power on earth too; having prevailed with God, by the sacrifice of atonement, he prevails with men, and deals with them as one having authority by the ministry of reconciliation. He is indeed, in all causes and over all persons, supreme moderator and governor. By him kings reign. All souls are his, and to him every heart and knee must bow, and every tongue confess him to be the Lord. This our Lord Jesus tells them, not only to satisfy them of the authority he had to commission them, and to bring them out in the execution of their commission, but to take off the offence of the cross; they had no reason to be ashamed of Christ crucified, when they saw him thus glorified.

Secondly, The commission he gives to those whom he sent forth. Go ye therefore. This commission is given, (1.) To the apostles primarily, the chief ministers of state in Christ's kingdom, the architects that laid the foundation of the church. Now those that had followed Christ in the regeneration were set on thrones, Luke xxii. 30. Go ye. It is not only a word of command, like that, Son, go work, but a word of encouragement, Go, and fear not. Have not I sent you? Go and make a business of this work. They must not take state, and issue out summons to the nations to attend upon them; but they must go and bring the gospel to their doors. Go ye. They had doted on Christ's bodily presence, and hung upon that, and built all their joys and hopes upon that; but now Christ dischargeth them from further attendance on his person, and sends them abroad about other work. As an eagle stirs up her nest, flutters over her young, to excite them to fly, Deut. xxxii. 11. so Christ stirs up his disciples to disperse themselves into all the world. (2.) It is given to their successors, the ministers of the gospel, whose business it is to transmit the gospel from age to age, to the end of the world in time, as it was theirs to transmit it from nation to nation, to the end of the world in place, and no less necessary. The Old Testament promise of a gospel ministry is made to a succession, Isa. lix. 21. and this here must be understood, otherwise how could Christ be with them always to the consummation of the world? Christ at his ascension gave not only apostles and prophets; but pastors and teachers, Eph. iv. 11. Now observe,

1. How far his commission is extended, to all nations. Go and disciple all nations; not that they must go all together into every place, but by consent disperse themselves in such manner as might best diffuse the light of the gospel. Now this plainly signifies it to be the will of Christ, (1.) That the covenant of peculiarity, made with the Jews, should now be cancelled and dissannulled. This word broke down the middle wall of partition, which had so long excluded the Gentiles from a visible church-state; and whereas the apostles, when first sent out, were forbidden to go into the way of the Gentiles, now they were sent to all nations. (2.) That salvation by Christ should be offered to all, and none excluded that did not by their unbelief and impenitence exclude themselves. The salvation they were to preach is a common salvation, whoever will, let him come and take the benefit of the act of indemnity; for there is no difference of Jew or Greek in Christ Jesus. (3.) That Christianity should be twisted in with national constitutions, that the kingdoms of the world should become Christ's kingdoms, and their kings the church's nursing-fathers.

2. What is the principal intention of this commission to disciple all nations. Make them disciples. Admit them disciples, do your utmost to make the nations Christian nations; not go to the nations and denounce the judgments of God against them, as Jonah against Nineveh, and the Old Testament prophets, though they had reason enough to expect it for their wickedness, but go and disciple them. Christ the Mediator in setting up a kingdom in the world, brings the nations to be his subjects; setting up a school, bring the nations to be his scholars; raising an army for the carrying on of the war against the powers of darkness, list the nations of the earth under his banner. The work which the apostles had to do, was to set up the Christian religion in all places, and it was honourable work; the achievements of the mighty heroes of the world was nothing to it. They conquered the nations for themselves, and made them miserable; the apostles conquered them for Christ, and made them happy.

3. Their instructions for executing this commission :

1. They must admit disciples by the sacred rite of baptism; Go into all nations, preach the gospel to them, work miracles among them, and persuade them to come in themselves, and bring their children with them into the church of Christ, and then admit them and theirs into the church, by washing them with water; either dipping them in the water, or by pouring or sprinkling water upon them, which seems the more proper, because the thing is most frequently expressed so, as Isa. xlv. 3. I will pour my Spirit on thy seed. And, Tit. iii. 5, 6. Which he shed on us abundantly. And, Ezek. xxxvi. 25. I will sprinkle clean water upon you. And, Isa. lii. 15. So shall he sprinkle many nations: which seems a prophecy of this commission to baptize the nations.

2. This baptism must be administered in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. That is, (1.) By authority from the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost; the baptism of Jesus is from heaven, and not of man; for his ministers act by authority from the three Persons in the Godhead, who all concur, as to our creation, so to our redemption; they have their commission under the great seal of heaven, which puts an honour upon the ordinance, though to a carnal eye, like him that instituted it, it has no form or comeliness. (2.) Calling upon the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost. Every thing is sanctified by prayer, and particularly the waters of baptism. The prayer of faith obtains the presence of God with the ordinance, which is its lustre and beauty, its life and efficacy. But, (3.) It is into the name (τις τό ὄνομα) of Father, Son, and Holy Ghost; this was intended as the summary of the first principles of the Christian religion, and of the new covenant, and according to it the ancient creeds were drawn up. By our being baptized, we solemnly profess, (1.) Our assent to the scripture revelation concerning God, the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost. We confess our belief, that there is a God, that there is but one God; that in the Godhead there is a Father that begets, a Son that is begotten, and a holy Spirit of both. We are baptized, not into the names, but into the name of Father, Son, and Spirit, which plainly speaks, that these Three are One, and their name One. The distinct mentioning of the Three Persons in the Trinity, both in the Christian baptism here, and in the Christian blessing, 2 Cor. xiii. 13. as it is a full proof of the doctrine of the Trinity, so it has done much towards the preserving of it pure and entire through all ages of the church; for nothing is more great and awful in Christian assemblies than these two. (2.) Our consent to a covenant relation to God, the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost. Baptism is a sacrament, that is, it is an oath (super sacramentum dicere, is to say upon oath.) It is an oath of abjuration, by which we renounce the world and the flesh, as rivals with God for the throne in our hearts: And an oath of allegiance, by which we resign, and give up ourselves to God to be his, our own selves, our whole selves, body, soul, and spirit, to be governed by his will, and made happy in his favour; we become his men; so the form of homage in our law runs. Therefore baptism is applied to the person, as livery and feign is given of the premises, because it is the person that is dedicated to God. (1.) It is into the name of the Father, believing him to be the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, (for that is principally intended here) by eternal generation, and our Father, as our Creator, Preserver, and Benefactor to whom therefore we resign ourselves, as our absolute Owner, and Proprietor, to act us and dispose of us; as our supreme Rector and Governor, to rule us as free agents by his law, and as our chief good, and highest end. (2.) It is into the name of the Son, the Lord Jesus Christ, the Son of God, and correlate to the Father. Baptism was in a particular manner administered in the name of the Lord Jesus, Acts viii. 16.—xix. 5. In baptism we assent as Peter did, Thou art Christ the Son of the living God, Matt. xvi. 16. and consent, as Thomas did, My Lord, and my God, John xx. 28. We take Christ to be our Prophet, Priest, and King, and give up ourselves to be taught, and saved, and ruled by him. (3.) It is into the name of the Holy Ghost. Believing the Godhead of the Holy Spirit, and his agency in carrying on our redemption, we give up ourselves to its conduct and operation, as our sanctifier, teacher, guide, and comforter.

3. Those that are thus baptized, and enrolled among the disciples of Christ, must be taught, ver. 20. Teaching them to observe all things, whatsoever, I have commanded you. This speaks two things;

1. The duty of disciples, of all baptized Christians; they must observe all things whatsoever Christ has commanded, and in order to that, must submit to the teaching of those whom he sends. Our admission into the visible church, is in order to something further; when Christ hath disciplined us, he hath not done with us, he lists soldiers, that he may train them up for his service.

All that are baptized are thereby obliged (1.) To make the command of Christ their rule; there is a law of faith, and we are said to be under the law of Christ; we are by baptism bound, and must obey. (2.) To observe what Christ has commanded. Due obedience to the commands of Christ, requires a diligent observation; we are in danger of missing, if we take not good heed. And in all our obedience, we must have an eye to the command, and do what we do as unto the Lord. (3.) To observe all things that he hath commanded without exception; all the moral duties, and all the instituted ordinances. Our obedience to the laws of Christ is not facere, if it be not universal; we must stand complete in his whole will. (4.) To confine themselves to the commands of Christ, and as not to diminish from them, so not to add to them. (5.) To learn their duty according to the law of Christ, from those whom he has appointed to be teachers in his school, for therefore we were entered into his school.

2. The duty of the apostles of Christ, and his ministers; and that is to teach the commands of Christ, to expound them to his disciples, to press upon them the necessity of obedience, and to assist them in applying the general commands of Christ to particular cases. They must teach them, not their own inventions, but the institutions of Christ; to them they must religiously adhere, and in the knowledge of them Christians must be trained up. A standing ministry is hereby settled in the church, for the edifying of the body of Christ, till we all come to the perfect man, Eph. iv. 11, 12, 13. The heirs of heaven, till they come to age, must be under tutors and governors.

Thirdly, Here is the assurance he gives them of his spiritual presence with them in the execution of this commission. And lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world. This exceeding great and precious promise is ushered in with a behold, to strengthen their faith, and engage their observation of it. Take notice of this, it is what you may assure yourselves and venture upon. Observe here,

1. The favour promised them, I am with you. Not, I will be with you but I am, ἐγώ εἰμι. As God sent Moses, so Christ sent his apostles, by this name, I am; for he is God, to whom past, present, and to come, are the same, see Rev. i. 3. He was now about to leave them, his bodily presence was now to be removed from them, and this grieved them; but he assures them of his spiritual presence, which was more expedient for them than his bodily presence could be. I am with you, i. e. my Spirit is with you, the Comforter shall abide with you, John xvi. 7. I am with you, and not against you; with you to take your part, to be on your side, and to hold with you, as Michael our prince is said to do, Dan. x. 21. I am with you, and not absent from you, not at a distance; I am a very present help, Psalm xlv. 1. Christ was now sending them to set up his kingdom in the world, which was a great undertaking. And then doth he seasonably promise them his presence with them. (1.) To carry them on through the difficulties they were likely to meet with. I am with you to bear you up, to plead your cause; with you in all your services, in all your sufferings, to bring you through them with comfort and honour. When you go through the fire or water I will be with you. In the pulpit, in the prison, lo, I am with you. (2.) To succeed this great undertaking; lo, I am with you, to make your ministry effectual for the disciplining of the nations, for the pulling down of the strong-holds of Satan, and the setting up of stronger for the Lord Jesus. It was an unlikely thing that they should unhinge national constitutions in religion, and turn the stream of so long a usage; that they should establish a doctrine so directly contrary to the genius of the age, and persuade people to become the disciples of a crucified Jesus; but lo, I am with you, and therefore you shall gain your point.

2. The continuance of the favour, always, even unto the end of the world.

1. They shall have his constant presence, always, παντα τοιαυτα ημερας, all days, every day; I will be with you on sabbath days, on week days, fair days and foul days, winter days and summer days. There is no day, no hour of the day, in which our Lord Jesus is not present with his churches and with his ministers; if there were, that day, that hour they were undone. Since his resurrection he had appeared to them now and then, once a week it may be, and scarce that. But he assures them they shall have his spiritual presence continued to them without intermission. Wherever we are the word of Christ is nigh us, even in our mouth, and the Spirit of Christ nigh us, even in our hearts. The God of Israel, the Saviour, is sometimes a God that hideth himself, Isa. l. 15. but never a God that absenteth himself; sometimes in the dark, but never at a distance.

2. They shall have his perpetual presence, even to the end of the world. There is a world before us that will never have an end, but this is hastening towards its period; and even till then the Christian religion shall, in one part of the world or other, be kept up, and the presence of Christ continued with his ministers. I am with you to the end of the world, not with your persons, they died quickly, but (1.) Wish you and your writings: There is a divine power going along with the scriptures of the New Testament, not only preserving them in being, but producing strange effects by them, which will continue to the end of time. (2.) With you and your successors; with you and all the ministers of the gospel in the several ages of the church; with all to whom this commission extends, with all that being duly called and sent, thus baptize, and thus teach. When the end of the world is come, and the kingdom delivered up to God, even the Father; there will then be no further need of ministers and their ministration, but till then they shall continue, and the great intentions of the institution shall be answered. This is an encouraging word to all the faithful ministers of Christ, that what was said to the apostles, was said to them all, I will never leave thee, nor forsake thee.

Two solemn farewells we find our Lord Jesus giving to his church, and his parting word at both of them is very encouraging; one was here, when he closed up his personal converse with them, and then his parting word was, Lo, I am with you always; I leave you, and yet still I am with you; the other was, when he closed up the canon of the scripture by the pen of his beloved disciple, and then his parting word was, Surely, I come quickly. I leave you for a while, but I will be with you again shortly, Rev. xxii. 20. By this it appears he did not part in anger but in love, and that it is his will we should keep up both our communion with him and our expectation of him.

There is one word more remaining, which must not be over-looked, and that is Amen; which is not a cypher, intended only for a concluding word, like finis at the end of a book, but it has its significancy: (1.) It speaks Christ's confirmation of this promise, Lo, I am with you. It is his Amen, in whom all the promises are Yea and Amen. Verily I am and will be with you; I the Amen, the faithful witness, do assure you of it. Or, (2.) It speaks the church's concurrence with it in their desire, and prayer, and expectation. It is the evangelist's Amen, so be it, blessed Lord. Our Amen to Christ's promises turns them into prayers. Hath Christ promised to be present with his ministers, present in his word, present in the assemblies of his people, though but two or three are gathered together in his name, and this always, even to the end of the world? Let us heartily say Amen to it; believe that it shall be so, and pray that it may be so: Lord, Remember this word unto thy servants, upon which thou hast caused us to hope.

THE END OF THE GOSPEL ACCORDING TO ST. MATTHEW.

AN EXPOSITION, WITH PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS, Of the GOSPEL according to St. MARK.

We have heard the evidence given in by the first witness to the doctrine and miracles of our Lord Jesus; and now here is another witness produced, who calls for our attention. The second living creature saith, Come and see, Rev. vi. 3. Now let us enquire a little (1.) Concerning this witness. His name is Mark. Marcus was a Roman name, and a very common one, and yet we have no reason to think, but that he was by birth a Jew; but as Saul when he went among the nations took the Roman name of Paul, so he of Mark; his Jewish name, perhaps, being Mardocai, so Grotius. We read of John, whose surname was Mark, sister's son to Barnabas, whom Paul was displeased with, Acts xv. 37, 38. but afterwards had a great kindness for, and not only ordered the churches to receive him, Col. iv. 10. but sent for him to be his assistant, with this encomium, He is profitable to me for the Ministry, 2 Tim. iv. 11. and he reckons him among his fellow-labourers, Phil. 24. We read of Marcus whom Peter calls his son, he having been an instrument of his conversion, 1 Pet. v. 13. whether that was the same with the other, and if not which of them was the penman of this gospel, is altogether uncertain. It is a tradition very current among the Ancients, that St. Mark wrote this gospel under the direction of St. Peter, and that it was confirmed by his authority; so Hieron. Catal. Script. Eccles. Marcus discipulus & interpretis Petri, juxta quod Petrum referentem audierat, legatus Romæ à fratribus, breve scripsit evangelium; and Tertullian saith, Adv. Marcion. lib. 4. cap. 5. Marcus quod edidit, Petri affirmetur, cujus interpretis Marcus. But as Dr. Whitby very well suggests, What need we have recourse to the authority of Peter for the support of this gospel, or to say with St. Jerom, that Peter approved of it, and recommended it by his authority to the church to be read, when, though it is true, Mark was no apostle, yet we have all the reason in the world to think, that both he and Luke were of the number of the seventy disciples, who accompanied with the apostles all along, Acts i. 21. who had a commission like that of the apostles, Luke x. 19. compared with Mark xvi. 18. and who, it is highly probable, received the Holy Ghost when they did, Acts i. 15.—ii. 1. So that it is no diminution at all to the validity or value of this gospel, that Mark was not one of the twelve, as Matthew and John were. St. Jerom saith, that after the writing of this gospel he went into Egypt, and was the first that preached the gospel at Alexandria, where he founded a church, to which he was a great example of holy living. Constituit ecclesiam tantâ doctrinâ & vitâ continentia, ut omnes sectatores Christi ad exemplum sui cogeret.

(2.) Concerning this testimony. Mark's gospel, (1.) Is but short, much shorter than Matthew's, not giving so full an account of Christ's sermons as that did, but insisting chiefly on his miracles. (2.) It is very much a repetition of what we had in Matthew, many remarkable circumstances being added to the stories there related, but not many new matters. When many witnesses are called to prove the same fact, upon which a judgment is to be given, it is not thought tedious, but highly necessary, that they should each of them relate it in their own words, again and again, that by the agreement of the testimony the thing may be established; and therefore we must not think this book of scripture needless, for it is written not only to confirm our belief that Jesus is the Christ the Son of God, but to put us in mind of things which we have read in the foregoing gospel, that we may give the more earnest heed to them, lest at any time we let them slip: and even pure minds have need to be thus stirred up by way of remembrance. It was fit that such great things as these should be spoken and written, once, yea twice, because man is so unapt to perceive them, and so apt to forget them. There is no ground for the tradition, that this gospel was written first in Latin, though it was written at Rome; it was written in Greek, as was St. Paul's epistle to the Romans, the Greek being the more universal language.

CHAP. I.

Mark's narrative takes not rise so early as those of Matthew and Luke do, from the birth of our Saviour, but from John's baptism, from which he presently passeth to Christ's public ministry. Accordingly in this chapter we have, (1.) The office of John Baptist illustrated by the prophecy of him, ver. 1—3. and the history of him, ver. 4—8. (2.)

Christ's baptism, and his being owned from heaven, ver. 9—11. (3.) His temptation, ver. 12, 13. (4.) His preaching, ver. 14, 15—21, 22—33, 39. (5.) His calling disciples, ver. 16—20. (6.) His praying, ver. 35. (7.) His working miracles. (1.) His rebuking an unclean spirit, ver. 23—28. (2.) His curing Peter's mother-in-law that was ill of a fever, ver. 29—31. (3.) His healing all that came to him ver. 32—34, 35. (4.) His cleansing a leper, ver. 40—45.

I. THE

1. THE beginning of the gospel of Jesus Christ, the Son of God; 2. As it is written in the prophets, Behold, I send my messenger before thy face, which shall prepare thy way before thee. 3. The voice of one crying in the wilderness, Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make his paths straight. 4. John did baptize in the wilderness, and preach the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins. 5. And there went out unto him all the land of Judea, and they of Jerusalem, and were all baptized of him in the river of Jordan, confessing their sins. 6. And John was clothed with camel's hair, and with a girdle of a skin about his loins; and he did eat locusts and wild honey: 7. And preached, saying, There cometh one mightier than I after me, the latchet of whose shoes I am not worthy to stoop down and unloose. 8. I indeed have baptized you with water: but he shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost.

We may observe here,

First, what the New Testament is; the divine testament to which we adhere above all that is human. The New Testament, which we advance above that which was old. It is the gospel of Jesus Christ the Son of God, ver. 1. (1.) It is gospel; it is God's word, and is faithful and true; see Rev. xix. 9.—xxi. 3.—xxii. 6. It is a good word, and well worthy of all acceptation, it brings us glad tidings. (2.) It is the gospel of Jesus Christ, the anointed Saviour, the Messiah promised and expected. The foregoing gospel began with the generation of Jesus Christ, that was but preliminary, this comes immediately to the business, the gospel of Christ. It is called his, not only because he is the author of it, and it comes from him, but because he is the subject of it, and it treats wholly concerning him. (3.) This Jesus is the Son of God. That truth is the foundation on which the gospel is built, and which it is written to demonstrate; for if Jesus be not the Son of God, our faith is vain.

Secondly, What the reference of the New Testament is to the Old, and its coherence with it. The gospel of Jesus Christ begins, and so we shall find it goes on, just as it is written in the prophets, ver. 2. for it saith no other things, than those which the prophets and Moses said shall come, Acts xxvi. 22 which was most proper and powerful for the conviction of the Jews, that believed the Old Testament prophets to be sent of God, and ought to evidence, that they did so by welcoming the accomplishment of their prophecies in his person; but it is of use to us all for the confirmation of our faith both in the Old Testament and in the New, for the exact harmony that there is between both shews that they both have the same divine original.

Quotations are here borrowed from two prophecies, that of Isaiah, which was the longest, and that of Malachi, which was the latest, and there were above three hundred years between them) that both spoke to the same purpose concerning the beginning of the gospel of Jesus Christ, in the ministry of John.

1. Malachi, in whom we had the Old Testament farewell, spake very plainly, chap. iii. 1. concerning John Baptist, who was to give the New Testament welcome. Behold, I send my messenger, before thy face, ver. 2. Christ himself had taken notice of this, and applied it to John, Matt. xi. 10. who was God's messenger, sent to prepare Christ's way.

2. Isaiah, the most evangelical of all the prophets, begins the evangelical part of his prophecy with this, which points to the beginning of the gospel of Christ, Isa. xl. 3. The voice of him that crieth in the wilderness, ver. 3. Matthew, had taken notice of this and applied it to John, chap. iii. 3. But from these two put together here, we may observe, (1.) That Christ in his gospel comes among us, bringing with him a treasure of grace, and a sceptre of government. (2.) Such is the corruption of the world, that it is something to do to make room for him, and to remove that which gives not only obstruction, but opposition to his progress. (3.) When God sent his Son into the world he took care, and when he sends him into the heart, takes care, effectual care to prepare his way before him; for the designs of his grace shall not be frustrated; nor may any expect the comforts of that grace, but such as, by conviction of sin and humiliation for it, are prepared for those comforts and disposed to receive them. (4.) When the paths that were crooked are made straight, the mistakes of the judgment rectified, and the crooked ways of the affections, then way is made for Christ's comforts. (5.) It is in a wilderness, for such this world is, that Christ's way is prepared and theirs that follow him, like that which Israel passed through to Canaan. (6.) The messengers of conviction and terror, that come to prepare Christ's way, are God's messengers, whom he sends and will own, and must be received as such. (7.) They that are sent to prepare the way of the Lord, in such a vast howling wilderness as this is, have need to cry aloud and not spare, and to lift up their voice like a trumpet.

Thirdly, What the beginning of the New Testament was. The gospel began in John Baptist; for the law and the prophets were until John the only divine revelation, but then the kingdom of God began to be preached, Luke xvi. 16. Peter begins from the baptism of John, Acts i. 22. The gospel did not begin so soon as the birth of Christ, for he took time to increase in wisdom and stature, not so late as his entering upon his public ministry, but half a year before, when John began to preach the same doctrine that Christ afterwards preached. His baptism was the dawning of the gospel-day; for,

1. In John's way of living there was the beginning of a gospel spirit; for it spoke great self-denial, mortification of the flesh, a holy contempt of the world, and nonconformity to it, which may truly be called the beginning of the gospel of Christ in any soul, ver. 6. He was clothed with camel's hair, not with soft raiment; was girt not with a golden but a leathern girdle; and, in contempt of dainties and delicate things, his meat was locusts and wild honey. Note, The more we sit loose to the body, and live above the world, the better we are prepared for Jesus Christ.

2. In John's preaching and baptizing there was the beginning of the gospel doctrines and ordinances, and the first-fruits of them. (1.) He preached the remission of sins, which is the great gospel privilege, shewed people their need of it, that they were undone without it, and that it might be obtained. (2.) He preached repentance in order to it; he told people that there must be a renovation of their hearts and a reformation of their lives, that they must forsake their sins and turn to God, and upon these terms and no other their sins should be forgiven. Repentance for the remission of sins, was what the apostles were commissioned to preach to all nations, Luke xxiv. 47. (3.) He preached Christ, and directed his hearers to expect him speedily to appear, and to expect great things from him. The preaching of Christ is pure gospel, and that was John Baptist's preaching, ver. 7, 8. Like a true gospel minister he preacheth, (1.) The great pre-eminence Christ is advanced to; so high, so great is Christ, that John, though one of the greatest that was born of women, yet thinks himself unworthy to be employed in the meanest office about him, even to stoop down and untie his shoes. Thus industrious is he to give honour to him, and brings others to do so too. (2.) The great power Christ is invested in. He comes after me in time, but he is mightier than I, mightier than the mightiest ones of the earth, for he is able to baptize with the Holy Ghost, he can give the Spirit of God, and by him govern the spirits of men. (3.) The great promise Christ makes in his gospel to those who have repented, and have had their sins forgiven them; they shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost, shall be purified by his graces, and refreshed by his comforts. And lastly, all those who received his doctrine and submitted to his institution he baptized with water, as the manner of the Jews was to admit proselytes, in token of their cleansing themselves by repentance and reformation, which was the duty required, and of God's cleansing them both by remission and by sanctification, which were the blessings promised. Now this was afterwards to be advanced into a gospel ordinance, which John's using it was a preface to.

3. In the success of John's preaching, and the disciples he admitted by baptism, there was the beginning of a gospel-church. He baptized in the wilderness, and declined going into the cities; but there went out unto him all the land of Judea, and they of Jerusalem, inhabitants both of city and country, families of them, and were all baptized of him; They entered themselves his disciples, and bound themselves to his discipline; and in token of that they confessed their sins; he admitted them his disciples, and in token of that baptized them. Here were the stamina of the gospel church, the dew of its youth from the womb of the morning, Psalm cx. 3. Many of these afterwards became followers of Christ, and preachers of his gospel, and this grain of mustard-seed became a tree.

9. And it came to pass in those days, that Jesus came from Nazareth of Galilee, and was baptized of John in Jordan. 10. And straightway coming up out of the water, he saw the heavens opened, and the Spirit like a dove descended upon him: 11. And there came a voice from heaven, saying, Thou art my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased. 12. And immediately, the Spirit driveth him into the wilderness. 13. And he was there in the wilderness forty days, tempted of Satan; and was with the wild beasts; and the angels ministered unto him.

We have here a brief account of Christ's baptism and temptation, which were largely related, Matt. iii. and iv.

First, His baptism, which was his first public appearance, after he had long lived obscurely in Nazareth. O how much hidden worth is there, which in this world is either lost in the dust of contempt and cannot be known, or wrapped up in the vail of humility and will not be known! But sooner or later it shall be known, as Christ's was.

1. See how humbly he owned God, by coming to be baptized of John, and thus it became him to fulfil all righteousness. Thus he took upon him the likeness of sinful flesh, that though he was perfectly pure and unspotted, yet he was washed as if he had been polluted; and thus for our sakes he sanctified himself, that we also might be sanctified, and he baptized with him, John xvii. 19.

2. See how honourably God owned him, when he submitted to John's baptism. Those who justify God, as they are said to do who were baptized with the baptism of John, he will glorify them, Luke vii. 29, 30.

1. He saw the heavens opened; thus he was owned to be the Lord from heaven, and had a glimpse of the glory and joy that was set before him, and secured to him, as the recompence of his undertaking. Matthew saith, the heavens were opened to him. Mark saith, he saw them opened; many have the heavens opened to receive them, but they do not see it; Christ had not only a clear foresight of his sufferings, but of his glory too.

2. He saw the Spirit like a dove descending upon him. Note, Then we may see heaven opened to us when we perceive the Spirit descending and working upon us. God's good work in us is the surest evidence of his good-will towards us, and his preparations for us. Justin Martyr saith, that when Christ was baptized a fire was kindled in Jordan: And it is an ancient tradition, that a great light shone round the place, for the Spirit brings both light and heat.

3. He heard a voice which was intended for his encouragement to proceed in his undertaking, and therefore is here expressed as directed to him, Thou art my beloved Son. God lets him know, (1.) That he loved him never the less for that low and mean estate to which he had now humbled himself; though thus emptied and made of no reputation, yet my beloved Son still. (2.) That he loved him much the more for that glorious and kind undertaking, in which he had now engaged himself. God is well pleased in him, as referee of all matters in controversy between him and man; and so well pleased in him, as to be well pleased with us in him.

Secondly, His temptation. The good Spirit that descended upon him led him into the wilderness, ver. 12. Paul mentions it as a proof that he had his doctrine from God, and not from man, that as soon as he was called he went not to Jerusalem, but went into Arabia, Gal. i. 17. Retirement from the world is an opportunity of more free converse with God, and therefore must sometimes be chosen for a while, even by those that are called to the greatest business. Mark observes this circumstance of his being in the wilderness, that he was with the wild beasts. It was an instance of his Father's care of him, that he was preserved from being torn in pieces by the wild beasts, which encouraged him the more, that his Father would provide for him when he was hungry. Special protections are earnestness of seasonable supplies. It was likewise an intimation to him of the inhumanity of the men of that generation, whom he was to live among, no better than wild beasts in the wilderness, nay abundantly worse. In that wilderness,

1. The evil spirits were busy with him; he was tempted of Satan; not by any inward injection, the prince of this world had nothing in him to fasten upon, but by outward solicitations. Solitude often gives advantage to the tempter, therefore two is better than one. Christ himself was tempted not only to teach us, that it is no sin to be tempted, but to direct us whither to go for succour when we are tempted, even to him that suffered being tempted; that he might experimentally sympathize with us when we are tempted.

2. The good spirits were busy about him; the angels ministered to him, supplied him with what he needed, and dutifully attended him. Note, The ministration of the good angels about us, is matter of great comfort in reference to the malicious designs of the evil angels against us; but much more doth it befriender us to have the indwelling of the Spirit in our hearts, which they that have are so born of God, that, as far as they are so, the evil one toucheth them not, much less shall he triumph over them.

14. Now after that John was put in prison, Jesus came into Galilee, preaching the gospel of the kingdom of God. 15. And saying, The time is fulfilled, and the kingdom of God is at hand: repent ye, and believe the gospel. 16. Now as he walked by the sea of Galilee, he saw Simon and Andrew his brother casting a net into the sea: (for they were fishers.) 17. And Jesus said unto them, Come ye after me, and I will make you to become fishers of men. 18. And straightway they forsook their nets, and followed him. 19. And when he had gone a little further thence, he saw James the son of Zebedee, and John his brother, who also were in the ship mending their nets. 20. And straightway he called them: and they left their father Zebedee in the ship with the hired servants, and went after him. 21. And they went into Capernaum: and straightway on the sabbath-day he entered into the synagogue, and taught. 22. And they were astonished at his doctrine: for he taught them as one that had authority, and not as the Scribes.

Here is, 1. A general account of Christ's preaching in Galilee. John gives an account of his preaching in Judea before this, chap. ii. and iii. which the other evangelists had omitted, who chiefly relate what occurred in Galilee, because that was least known at Jerusalem. Observe,

2. What he preached; The gospel of the kingdom of God. Christ came to set up the kingdom of God among them, that they might be brought into subjection to it, and might obtain salvation in it; and he set it up by the preaching of his gospel, and a power going along with it.

Observe, (1.) The great truths Christ preached. The time is fulfilled, and the kingdom of God is at hand. This refers to the Old Testament, in which the kingdom of the Messiah was promised, and the time fixed for the introducing of it; they were not so well versed in those prophecies, nor did they so well observe the signs of the times, as to understand it themselves, and therefore Christ gives them notice of it. The time prefixed is now at hand: glorious discoveries of divine light, life, and love, are now to be made, a new dispensation far more spiritual and heavenly, than that which you have hitherto been under, is now to commence. Note, God keeps time; when the time is fulfilled, the kingdom of God is at hand, for the vision is for an appointed time, which will be punctually observed, though it tarry past our time.

(2.) The great duties inferred from thence; Christ gave them to understand the times, that they might know what Israel ought to do; they fondly expected the Messiah to appear in external pomp and power, not only to free the Jewish nation from the Roman yoke, but to make it have dominion over all its neighbours, and therefore when that kingdom of God was at hand, they must prepare for war, and for victory and pre-eminence, and great things in the world; but Christ tells them, in the prospect of that kingdom approaching, they must repent, and believe the gospel. They had broken the moral law, and could not be saved by a covenant of innocence, for both Jew and Gentile are concluded under guilt: They must therefore take the benefit of a covenant of grace, must submit to a remedial law, and this is it, repentance towards God, and faith towards our Lord Jesus Christ. They had not made use of the prescribed preservatives, and therefore must have recourse to the prescribed restoratives. By repentance we must lament and forsake our sins, and by faith we must receive the forgiveness of them. By repentance we must give glory to our Creator whom we have offended; by faith we must give glory to our Redeemer who came to save us from our sins. Both these must go together; we must not think either that reforming our lives will save us, without trusting in the righteousness and grace of Christ; nor that trusting in Christ will save us without the reformation of our hearts and lives. Christ has joined these two together, and let no man think to put them asunder. They will mutually assist and befriend each other. Repentance will quicken faith, and faith will make repentance evangelical; and the sincerity of both together must be evidenced by a diligent conscientious obedience to all God's commandments. Thus the preaching of the gospel began, and thus it continues; still the call is, Repent and believe, and live a life of repentance, and a life of faith.

3. Christ appearing as a teacher, here is next his calling of disciples, ver. 16—20. Observe, (1.) Christ will have followers. If he set up a school, he will have scholars; if he set up his standard, he will have soldiers; if he preach, he will have hearers. He has taken an effectual course to secure this, for all that the Father has given him shall, without fail, come to him. (2.) The instruments Christ chose to employ in setting up his kingdom, were the weak and foolish things of the world, not called from the great Sanhedrin, or the schools of the rabbins, but picked up from among the tarpaulins by the sea-side, that the excellency of the power might appear to be wholly of God, and not at all of them. (3.) Though Christ needs not the help of man, yet he is pleased to make use of it in setting up his kingdom, that he might deal with us not in a formidable but a familiar way, and that in his kingdom the nobles and governors may be of ourselves, Jer. xxx. 21. (4.) Christ puts honour upon those, who, though mean in the world, are diligent in their business, and loving to one another; so those were whom Christ called. He found them employed, and employed together. Industry and unity are good and pleasant, and there the Lord Jesus commands the blessing, even this blessing, Follow me. (5.) The business of ministers is to fish for souls, and win them to Christ. The children of men in their natural condition are lost, and wander endlessly in the great ocean of this world, and are carried down the stream of its course and way, they are unprofitable. Like leviathan in the waters, they play therein; and often like the fishes of the sea, they devour one another. Ministers in preaching the gospel cast the net into the waters, Matt. xiii. 47. Some are included and brought to shore, but far the greater number escape. Fishermen take great pains, and expose themselves to great perils, so do ministers; and they have need of wisdom. If many a draught brings home nothing, yet they must go on. (6.) Those whom Christ calls, must leave all to follow him; and by his grace he inclines them to do so. Not that we must needs go out of the world presently, but we must sit loose to the world, and forsake every thing that is inconsistent with our duty to Christ, and which cannot be kept without prejudice to our souls. Mark takes notice of James and John, that they left not only their father, which we had in Matthew, but the hired servants, whom perhaps they loved as their own brethren, being their fellow-labourers, and pleasant comrades; not only relations but companions must be left for Christ, an old acquaintance. Perhaps it is an intimation of their care for their father, they did not leave him without assistance, they left the hired servants with him. Grotius thinks it is mentioned as an evidence that their calling was gainful to them, for it was worth while to keep servants in pay to help them in it, and their hands would be much missed, and yet they left it.

3. Here is a particular account of his preaching in Capernaum, one of the cities of Galilee; for though John Baptist chose to preach in a wilderness, and did well, and did good, yet it doth not therefore follow that Jesus must do so too; the inclinations and opportunities of ministers may very much differ, and yet both be in the way of their duty, and both useful. Observe, (1.) When Christ came into Capernaum, he straightway applied himself to his work there, and took the first opportunity of preaching the gospel. Those will think themselves concerned not to lose time, who consider what a deal of work they have to do, and what a little time to do it in. (2.) Christ religiously observed the sabbath-day, though not by tying himself up to the tradition of the elders, in all the niceties of the sabbath-rest, yet (which was far better) by applying himself to, and abounding in, the sabbath-work, in order to which the sabbath-rest was instituted. (3.) Sabbaths are to be sanctified in religious assemblies, if we have opportunity; it is a holy day, and must be honoured with a holy convocation; this was the good old way, Acts xiii. 27.—xv. 21. On the sabbath-day, τοις σαββάτοις, on the sabbath days; every sabbath-day, as duly as it returned, he went into the synagogue. (4.) In religious assemblies on sabbath days, the gospel is to be preached, and those to be taught, who are willing to learn the truth as it is in Jesus.

(5.) Christ was a non-such preacher; he did not preach as the Scribes, who expounded the law of Moses by rote, as a school-boy saith his lesson, but were neither acquainted with it (Paul himself, when a Pharisee, was ignorant of the law) nor affected with it; it came not from the heart, and therefore came not with authority. But Christ taught as one that had authority, as one that knew the mind of God, and was commissioned to declare it. (6.) There is much in the doctrine of Christ that is astonishing; the more we hear it, the more cause we shall see to admire it.

23. And there was in their synagogue a man with an unclean spirit; and he cried out, 24. Saying, Let us alone; what have we to do with thee, thou Jesus of Nazareth? art thou come to destroy us? I know thee who thou art, the Holy One of God. 25. And Jesus rebuked him, saying, Hold thy peace, and come out of him. 26. And when the unclean spirit had torn him, and cried with a loud voice, he came out of him. 27. And they were all amazed, insomuch that they questioned among themselves, saying, What thing is this? What new doctrine is this? for with authority commandeth he even the unclean spirits, and they do obey him. 28. And immediately his fame spread abroad throughout all the region round about Galilee.

As soon as Christ began to preach, he began to work miracles for the confirmation of his doctrine; and they were such as intimated the design and tendency of his doctrine, which was to conquer Satan, and cure sick souls.

In these verses we have,

First, Christ's casting the devil out of a man that was possessed, in the synagogue at Capernaum. This passage was not related in Matthew, but is afterwards in Luke iv. 33. There was in the synagogue a man with an unclean spirit, ἐν ἑνὶ ἀνθρώπῳ, in an unclean spirit; for the spirit had the man in his possession, and led him captive at his will. So the whole world is said to lie in the wicked one. And some have thought it more proper to say the body is in the soul, because it is governed by it, than the soul in the body. He was in the unclean spirit, as a man is said to be in a fever, or in a frenzy, quite overcome by it. Observe, The devil is here called an unclean spirit, because he has lost all the purity of his nature, because he acts in direct opposition to the holy Spirit of God, and because with his suggestions he pollutes the spirits of men. This man was in the synagogue, he did not come either to be taught or to be healed, but, as some think, to confront Christ and oppose him, and hinder people from believing on him. Now here we have,

1. The rage which the unclean spirit expressed at Christ. He cried out, as one in an agony, at the presence of Christ, and afraid of being dislodged; thus the devils believe and tremble, have a horror of Christ, but no hope in him, nor reverence for him. We are told what he said, ver. 24. where he doth not go about to capitulate with him or make terms, so far was he from being in league or compact with him, but speaks as one that knew his doom. (1.) He calls him Jesus of Nazareth, and for ought appears he was the first that called him so, and he did it with design to possess the minds of people with low thoughts of him, because no good thing was expected out of Nazareth; and with prejudices against him as a deceiver, because every body knew the Messiah must be of Bethlehem. (2.) Yet a confession is extorted from him, that he is the holy One of God, as was from the damsel that had the spirit of divination concerning the apostles, that they were the servants of the most high God, Acts xvi. 16, 17. Those who have only a notion of Christ, that he is the Holy One of God, and have no faith in him, or love to him, go no farther than the devil doth. (3.) He in effect acknowledgeth that Christ was too hard for him, and that he could not stand before the power of Christ; let us alone, for if thou take us to task we are undone, thou canst destroy us. This is the misery of those wicked spirits, that they persist in their rebellion, and yet know it will end in their destruction. (4.) He desires to have nothing to do with Jesus Christ, for he despaired of being saved by him, and dreads being destroyed by him. What have we to do with thee? If thou wilt let us alone, we will let thee alone. See whose language they speak, that say to the Almighty, Depart from us. This being an unclean spirit, therefore hated and dreaded Christ, because he knew him to be a Holy One; for the carnal mind is enmity against God, especially against his holiness.

2. The victory which Jesus Christ obtained over the unclean spirit; for this purpose was the Son of God manifested, that he might destroy the works of the devil, and so he makes it to appear; nor will he be turned back from prosecuting this war, either by his flatteries or by his menaces. It is in vain for Satan to beg and pray, Let us alone, his power must be broken, and the poor man must be relieved; and therefore, (1.) Jesus commands: As he taught, so he healed with authority. Jesus rebuked him, he chid him and threatened him, imposed silence upon him. Hold thy peace; φησὶν, be muzzled; Christ has a muzzle for that unclean spirit when he fawns, as well as when he barks; such acknowledgments of him as this was, Christ disdains, so far is he from accepting them. Those that confess Christ to be the Holy One of God, that under the cloak of that profession they may carry on malicious mischievous designs, their confession is doubly an abomination to the Lord Jesus, as it sues in his name for a licence to sin, and shall therefore be put to silence and shame. But this is not all, he must not only hold his peace, but he must come out of the man; this was it he dreaded, his being restrained from doing farther mischief. But, (2.) The unclean spirit yields, for there is no remedy, ver. 26. He tore him, put him into a strong convulsion; that one could have thought he had been pulled in pieces; when he would not touch Christ, in fury at him he grievously disturbed this poor creature. Thus, when Christ by his grace delivers poor souls out of the hands of Satan, it is not without a grievous toss and tumult in the soul; for that spiteful enemy will disquiet those whom he cannot destroy. He cried with a loud voice to frighten the spectators, and make himself seem terrible, as if he would have it thought, that though he was conquered, he was but just conquered, and that he hoped to rally again and recover his ground.

Secondly, The impressions which this miracle made upon the minds of the people, ver. 27, 28.

1. It astonished them that saw it. They were all amazed. It was evident beyond contradiction, that the man was possessed, witness the tearing of him, and the loud voice with which the spirit cried; it was evident he was forced out by the authority of Christ; this was surprising to them, and put them upon considering with themselves, and enquiring of one another, What is this new doctrine? For it must certainly be of God, which is thus confirmed. He hath certainly an authority to command us, who hath ability to command even the unclean spirits, and they cannot resist him, but are forced to obey him. The Jewish exorcists pretended by charm or invocation, to drive away evil spirits; but this was quite another thing, with authority he commands them. Surely it is our interest to make him our friend, who has the control of infernal spirits.

2. It raised his reputation among all that heard it. Immediately his fame spread abroad into the whole adjacent region of Galilee, which was a third part of the land of Canaan. The story was presently got into every one's mouth, and people wrote it to their friends all the country over, together with the remark made upon it, What new doctrine is this? So that it was universally concluded, that he was a teacher come from God, and under that character he shone more bright, than if he had appeared in all the external pomp and power, which the Jews expected their Messiah to appear in; and thus he prepared his own way, now John who was his harbinger, was clapped up; and the fame of this miracle spread the further, because as yet the Pharisees who envied his fame and laboured to eclipse it, had not advanced their blasphemous suggestion, that he cast out devils, by compact with the prince of the devils.

29. And forthwith, when they were come out of the synagogue, they entered into the house of Simon and Andrew, with James and John. 30. But Simon's wife's mother lay sick of a fever, and anon they tell him of her. 31. And he came and took her by the hand, and lifted her up; and immediately the fever left her, and she ministered unto them. 32. And at even, when the sun did set, they brought unto him all that were diseased, and them that were possessed with devils. 33. And all the city was gathered together at the door. 34. And he healed many that were sick of divers diseases, and cast out many devils; and suffered not the devils to speak, because they knew him. 35. And in the morning, rising up a great while before day, he went out, and departed into a solitary place, and there prayed. 36. And Simon, and they that were with him, followed after him. 37. And when they had found him, they said unto him, All men seek for thee. 38. And he said unto them, Let us go into the next towns, that I may preach there also: for therefore came I forth. 39. And he preached in their synagogues throughout all Galilee, and cast out devils.

In these verses we have,

First, A particular account of one miracle that Christ wrought in the cure of Peter's wife's mother, that was ill of a fever. This passage we had before in Matthew. Observe,

1. When Christ had done that which spread his fame throughout all parts, he did not then sit still, as some think they may lie in bed when their name is up. No, he continued to do good, for that was it he aimed at, and not his own honour. Nay, those who are in reputation had need be busy and careful to keep it up.

2. When he came out of the synagogue, where he had taught and healed with a divine authority, yet he conversed familiarly with the poor fishermen that attended him, and did not think it below him. Let the same mind, the same lowly mind, be in us, that was in him.

3. He went into Peter's house, probably invited thither to such entertainment as a poor fisherman could give him, and he accepted of it. The apostles left all for Christ, so far as that what they had should not hinder them from him, yet not so, but that they might use it for him.

4. He cured his mother-in-law that was sick; wherever Christ comes he comes to do good, and will be sure to pay richly for his entertainment. Observe, How complete the cure was, when the fever left her, it did not as usual leave her weak, but the same hand that healed her, strengthened her, so that she was able to minister to them: the cure is in order to that, to fit for action, that we may minister to Christ and to those that are his for his sake.

Secondly, A general account of many cures he wrought. Diseases healed; devils expelled, it was at the even of the sabbath, when the sun did set, or was set; perhaps many scrupled bringing their sick to him, till the sabbath was over, but their weakness therein was no prejudice to them in applying to Christ. Though he proved it lawful to heal on the sabbath days, yet if any stumbled at it, they were welcome at another time. Now observe,

1. How numerous the patients were; all the city was gathered at the door, as beggars at a dole. That one cure in the synagogue occasioned this crouding after him. Others speeding well with Christ should quicken us in our enquiries after him. Now the son of righteousness riseth with healing under his wings; to him shall the gathering of the people be. Observe, How Christ was flocked after in a private house, as well as in the synagogue; wherever he is, there let his servants, his patients, be. And in the evening of the sabbath, when the public worship is over, we must continue our attendance upon Jesus Christ; he healed, as Paul preached publicly, and from house to house.

2. How powerful the physician was; he healed all that were brought to him, though never so many. Nor was it some one particular disease, that Christ set up for the cure of, but he healed those that were sick of divers diseases, for his word was a panpharmakon, a salve for every sore. And that miracle particularly which he wrought in the synagogue, he repeated in the house at night, for he cast out many devils, and suffered not the devils to speak, for he made them know who he was, and that silenced them. Or, he suffered them not to say that they knew him, so it may be read, he would not permit any more of them to say as they did, ver. 24. I know thee, who thou art.

Thirdly, His retirement to his private devotion, ver. 35. He prayed, prayed alone; to set us an example of secret prayer. Though as God he was prayed to, as man he prayed. Though he was glorifying God and doing good in his public work, yet he found time to be alone with his Father; and thus it became him to fulfil all righteousness. Now observe,

1. The time when Christ prayed. (1.) It was in the morning, the morning after the sabbath day. Note, When a sabbath day is over and past, we must not think that we may intermit our devotion till the next sabbath: no, though we go not to the synagogue, we must go to the throne of grace, every day in the week; and the morning after the sabbath particularly, that we preserve the good impressions of the day. This morning was the morning of the first day of the week, which afterwards he sanctified, and made remarkable by another sort of rising early. (3.) It was early, a great while before day. When others were asleep in their beds he was praying, as a genuine son of David who seeks God early, and directs his prayer in the morning; nay, and at midnight will rise to give thanks. It has been said that the morning is a friend to the Muses (Aurora Muses amica) and it is no less so to the Graces. When our spirits are most fresh and lively, then we should take time for devout exercises. He that is the first and best, ought to have the first and best.

2. The place where he prayed: he departed into a solitary place, either out of town or some remote garden or out-building. Though he was in no danger of distraction or of temptation to vain-glory, yet he retired to set us an example to his own rule, when thou prayest enter into thy closet. Secret prayer must be made secretly. Those that have the most business in public and of the best kind, yet must sometimes be alone with God; must retire into solitude, there to converse with God, and keep up communion with him.

Fourthly, His return to his public work. The disciples thought they were up early, but found their Master was up before them, and they enquired which way he went, followed him to his solitary place and there found him at prayer, ver. 36, 37. And told him he was much wanted, there were a great many patients waiting for him; All men seek for thee. They were proud that their master was become so popular already, and would have him appear in public, yet more in that place, because it was their own city; and we are apt to be partial to the places we know and are interested in. No, saith Christ, Capernaum must not have the monopoly of the Messiah's preaching and miracles. Let us go into the next towns, the villages that lie about here, that I may preach there also, and work miracles there, for therefore came I forth, not to be constantly resident in one place but to go about doing good. Even the inhabitants of the villages in Israel, shall rehearse the righteous acts of the Lord, Judg. v. 11. Observe, Christ had still an eye to the end wherefore he came forth, and closely pursued that; nor will he be drawn by importunity or the persuasions of his friends to decline from that; for ver. 39, he preached in their synagogues throughout all Galilee, and to illustrate and confirm his doctrine, he cast out devils. Note, Christ's doctrine is Satan's destruction.

40. And there came a leper to him, beseeching him, and kneeling down to him, and saying unto him, If thou wilt, thou canst make me clean. 41. And Jesus, moved with compassion, put forth his hand, and touched him, and saith unto him, I will, be thou clean. 42. And as soon as he had spoken, immediately the leprosy departed from him, and he was cleansed. 43. And he straightly charged him, and forthwith sent him away; 44. And saith unto him, See thou say nothing to any man: but go thy way, shew thyself to the priest, and offer for thy cleansing those things which Moses commanded for a testimony unto them. 45. But he went out, and began to publish it much, and to blaze abroad the matter, insomuch that Jesus could no more openly enter into the city, but was without in desert places: and they came to him from every quarter.

We have here the story of Christ's cleansing of a leper, which we had before, Matt. viii. 2. And it teaches us,

1. How to apply ourselves to Christ; come as this leper did, (1.) With great humility; this leper came beseeching him and kneeling down to him, ver. 40. whether giving divine honour to him as God, or rather a less degree of respect as a great prophet, it teaches us that those who would receive grace and mercy from Christ must ascribe honour and glory to Christ, and approach to him with humility and reverence. (2.) With a firm belief of his power; thou canst make me clean. Though Christ's outward appearance was but mean, yet he had this faith in his power, which implies his belief that he was sent of God. He believes it with application, not only in general, thou canst do every thing, as John xi. 22. but thou canst make me clean. Note, What we believe of the power of Christ we must bring home to our particular case; thou canst do this for me. (3.) With submission to the will of Christ; Lord, if thou wilt. Not as if he had any doubt of Christ's readiness in general to help the distressed, but with the modesty that became a poor petitioner, he refers his own particular case to him.

2. What to expect from Christ; that according to our faith it shall be to us. His address is not in the form of prayer, yet Christ answered it as a request. Note, Affectionate professions of faith in Christ and resignations to him are the most prevailing petitions for mercy from him, and shall speed accordingly. (1.) Christ was moved with compassion. This is added here in Mark to shew that Christ's power is employed by his pity for the relief of poor souls: That his reasons are fetched from within himself, and we have nothing in us to recommend us to his favour, but our misery makes us the object of his mercy. And what he doth for us he doth with all possible tenderness. (2.) He put forth his hand and touched him. He exerted his power and directed it to this creature. In healing souls Christ toucheth them, 1 Sam. xx. 26. When the queen toucheth for the evil, she saith, I touch, God heals, but Christ toucheth and heals too. (3.) He said, I will, be thou clean. Christ's power was put forth in and by a word, to signify in what way Christ would ordinarily work spiritual cures, He sends his word and heals, Psal. cxvii. 20. John xvii. 17.—xv. 3. The poor leper put an if upon the will of Christ, if thou wilt; but that doubt is soon put out of doubt, I will. Christ most readily wills favours to those that most readily refer themselves themselves to his will. He was confident of Christ's power, thou canst make me clean, and Christ will shew how much his power is drawn out into act by the faith of his people, and therefore speaks the word as one having authority, be thou clean. And power accompanied this word, and the cure was perfect in an instant, immediately his leprosy vanished, and there remained no more sign of it, ver. 42.

3. What to do when we have received mercy from Christ; We must with his favours receive his commands. When Christ had cured him, he strictly charged him, the word here is very significant, ἐπιμνησάμενος, gravisiter in-terminatus. I am apt to think this refers not to the directions he gave him to conceal it, ver. 41, for those are mentioned by themselves; but that this was such a charge as he gave to the impotent man whom he cured, John v. 14. Go, sin no more, lest a worse thing come to thee; for the leprosy was ordinarily the punishment of some particular sinners, in Miriam's, Gehazi's, and Uzziah's case; now when Christ healed him he warned him, he threatened him with the fatal consequence of it if he should return to sin again. He also appointed him, (1.) To shew himself to the priest, that the priest by his own judgment of this leper might be a witness for Christ that he was the Messiah, Matt. xi. 5. (2.) Till he had done that, not to say any thing of it to any man: this is an instance of the humility of Christ and his self-denial, that he did not seek his own honour, did not strive or cry, Isa. xlii. 2. And it is an example to us not to seek our own glory, Prov. xxv. 27. He must not proclaim it, because that would much increase the crowd that followed Christ, which he thought was too great already; not as if he were unwilling to do good to all, to as many as came; but he would do it with as little noise as might be, would have no offence given to the government, no disturbance of the public peace, not any thing done that looked like ostentation or an affectation of popular applause. What to think of the leper's publishing it and blazing it abroad I know not; the concealment of the good characters and good works of good men better become them than their friends; nor are we always bound by the modest commands of humble men. The leper ought to have observed his orders, yet no doubt it was with a good design that he proclaimed the cure, and it had no other ill effect but that it increased the multitudes that followed Christ to that degree, that he could no more openly enter into the city; not upon the account of persecution, there was no danger of that yet; but because the crowd was so great that the streets would not hold them, which obliged him to go into desert places, to a mountain, chap. iii. 13. to the sea-side, chap. iv. 1. This shews how expedient it was for us that Christ should go away and send the Comforter, for his bodily presence could be but in one place at a time; and those that came to him from every quarter could not get near him; but by his spiritual presence he is with his people wherever they are, and comes to them to every quarter.

C H A P. II.

In this chapter we have, (1.) Christ's healing a man that was sick of a palsy, ver. 1—12. (2.) His calling Matthew from the receipt of custom, and his eating upon that occasion with publicans and sinners, and justifying himself in so doing, ver. 13—17. (3.) His justifying his disciples in not fasting so much as those of the Pharisees did, ver. 18—21. (4.) His justifying them in plucking the ears of corn on the sabbath-day, ver. 23—28. All which passages we had before, Matt. ix. and xii.

1. AND again he entered into Capernaum, after some days, and it was noised that he was in the house. 2. And straightway many were gathered together, in-somuch that there was no room to receive them, no not so much as about the door: and he preached the word unto them. 3. And they come unto him, bringing one sick of the palsy, which was borne of four. 4. And when they could not come nigh unto him for the press, they uncovered the roof where he was: and when they had broken it up, they let down the bed wherein the sick of the palsy lay. 5. When Jesus saw their faith, he said unto the sick of the palsy, Son, thy sins be forgiven thee. 6. But there were certain of the Scribes sitting there, and reasoning in their hearts. 7. Why doth this man thus speak blasphemies! who can forgive sins but God only? 8. And immediately, when Jesus perceived in his spirit that they so reasoned within themselves, he said unto them, Why reason ye these things in your hearts? 9. Whether is it easier to say to the sick of the palsy, Thy sins be forgiven thee: or to say, Arise, and take up thy bed and walk? 10. But that ye may know that the Son of man hath power on earth to forgive sins, (he saith to the sick of the palsy) 11. I say unto thee, Arise, and take up thy bed, and go thy way into thine house. 12. And immediately he arose, took up the bed, and went forth before them all, in-somuch that they were all amazed, and glorified God, saying, We never saw it on this fashion.

Christ having been for some time preaching about in the country here returns to Capernaum his head-quarters, and makes his appearance there, in hopes by this time the talk and crowd would be somewhat abated. Now observe,

1. The great resort there was to him. Though he was in the house, either Peter's house or some lodgings of his own which he had taken, yet people came to him as soon as it was noised that he was in town; they did not stay till he appeared in the synagogue, which they might be sure he would do on the sabbath-day, but straightway many were gathered together to him. Where the king is there is the court; where Shiloh is there shall the gathering of the people be. In improving opportunities for our souls we must take care not to lose time. One invited another, come let us go see Jesus, so that his house could not contain his visitants. There was no room to receive them, they were so numerous, not so much as about the door. A blessed sight to see people thus flying like a cloud to Christ's house, though it was but a poor one, and as the doves to their windows!

2. The good entertainment Christ gave them, the best his house would afford, and better than any other could, he preached the word unto them, ver. 2. Many of them perhaps came only for cures, and many perhaps only for curiosity, to get a sight of him; but when he had them together he preached to them: Though the synagogue door was open to him at proper times he thought it not at all amiss to preach in a house on a week day; though some might reckon it both an improper place and an improper time. Blessed are ye that sow besides all waters, Isa. xxxii. 20.

3. The presenting of a poor cripple to him to be helped by him. The patient was one sick of the palsy, it should seem not as that, Matt. viii. 6, grievously tormented, but perfectly disabled, so that he was borne of four, was carried upon a bed, as if he had been upon a bier by four persons: It was his misery that he needed to be so carried, and it speaks the calamitous state of human life; it was their charity who did so carry him, and speaks the compassion that it is justly expected should be in the children of men towards their fellow-creatures in distress, because we know not how soon the distress may be our own. These kind relations or neighbours thought if they could but carry this poor man once to Christ they should not need to carry him any more; and therefore made hard shift to get him to him; and when they could not otherwise get to him they uncovered the roof where he was, ver. 4. I see no necessity to conclude that Christ was preaching in an upper room, though in such the Jews that had stately houses had their oratories; for then to what purpose should the crowd stand before the door? as wisdom's clients used to do, Prov. viii. 34. But I rather conjecture that the house he was in was so little and mean, (agreeable to his present state) that it had no upper room, but the ground-floor was open to the roof: and these petitioners for the poor paralytic resolving not to be balked when they could not get through the crowd at the door, get their friend by some means or other to the roof of the house, took off some of the tiles, and so let him down upon his bed with cords into the house where Christ was preaching. This spoke both their faith and their fervency in this address to Christ. Hereby it appeared they were in earnest and would not go away, nor let Christ go without a blessing, Gen. xxxii. 26.

4. The kind word of Christ said to this poor patient. He saw their faith; perhaps not so much his, for his distemper hindered him from the exercise of faith, but theirs that brought him. In curing the centurion's servant Christ took notice of it as an instance of his faith, that he did not bring him to Christ, but believed he could cure him at a distance; here he commended their faith, because they did bring their friend through so much difficulty. Note, True faith and strong faith may work variously, conquering sometimes the objections of reason, sometimes those of sense, but it shall be accepted and approved by Jesus Christ however. Christ said, Son, thy sins be forgiven thee. The compellation is very tender, son, intimating a fatherly care of him and concern for him; Christ owns true believers as his sons: son, and yet sick of the palsy. Herein God deals with you as with sons. The cordial is very rich; thy sins be forgiven thee. Note, (1.) Sin is the procuring cause of all our pains and sicknesses. The word of Christ was to take his thoughts off from the disease which was the effect, and to lead them to the sin the cause, that he might be more concerned about that, to get that pardoned. (2.) God doth then graciously take away the sting and malignity of sickness when he forgives sin; recovery from sickness is then a mercy indeed when way is made for it by the pardon of sin. See Isa. xxxviii. 17. Psal. ciii. 3. The way to remove the effect is to take away the cause. Pardon of sin strikes at the root of all diseases, and either cures them or alters their property.

5. The cavil of the Scribes at that which Christ said, and a demonstration of the unreasonableness of their cavil. They were expositors of the law and their doctrine was true, that it is blasphemy for any creature to undertake the pardon of sin; and it is God's prerogative, Isa. xliii. 25. But, as is usual with such teachers, their application was false, and was the effect of their ignorance and enmity to Christ. It is true, none can forgive sins but God only; but it is false, that therefore Christ cannot, who had abundantly proved himself to have a divine power. But Christ perceived in his spirit, that they so reasoned within themselves; this proves him to be God, and therefore confirmed what was to be proved, that he had authority to forgive sins; for he searched the heart and knew what was in man, Rev. ii. 23, God's royalties are inseparable, and he that could know thoughts could forgive sins. And this magnifies the grace of Christ, in pardoning the sin, that he knew men's thoughts, and therefore knows more than any other can know, both of the sinfulness of their sins and the particulars of them, and yet is ready to pardon. Now he proves his power to forgive sin, by demonstrating his power to cure the man sick of the palsy, ver. 9, 10, 11. He would not have pretended to do the one if he could not have done the other. That ye may know that the Son of man, the Messiah, has power on earth to forgive sin, that I have that power, Thou that art sick of the palsy, arise, take up thy bed. Now, (1.) This was a suitable argument in itself. He could not have cured the disease, which was the effect, if he could not have taken away the sin, which was the cause. And besides, his curing diseases was a figure of his pardoning sin, for sin is the disease of the soul; when it is pardoned, it is healed. He that could by a word accomplish the sign, could doubtless perform the thing signified. (2.) It was suited to them. These carnal Scribes would be more affected, with such a sensible effect of a pardon, as the cure of the disease, and be sooner convinced by it, than by any other more spiritual consequences; therefore it was proper enough to appeal, whether it is easier to say, Thy sins be forgiven thee, or to say, Arise and walk? The removing of the punishment as such, was the remitting of the sin; he that could go so far in the cure, no doubt could perfect it. See Ihu. xxxiii. 24.

2. The cure of the sick man, and impression it made upon the people, ver. 12. He not only arose out of his bed, perfectly well, but to shew that he had perfect strength restored to him, he took up his bed, because it lay in the way, and went forth before them all; and they were all amazed, as well they might; and glorified God, as indeed they ought; saying, we never saw it on this fashion; never were such wonders as these done before in our time. Note, Christ's works were without precedent. When we see what he doth in healing souls, we must own we never saw the like.

13. And he went forth again by the sea-side, and all the multitude resorted unto him, and he taught them. 14. And as he passed by, he saw Levi the son of Alphaeus sitting at the receipt of custom, and said unto him, Follow me. And he arose and followed him. 15. And it came to pass, that as Jesus sat at meat in his house, many publicans and sinners sat also together with Jesus and his disciples: for there were many, and they followed him. 16. And when the Scribes and Pharisees saw him eat with publicans and sinners, they said unto his disciples, How is it that he eateth and drinketh with publicans and sinners? 17. When Jesus heard it, he saith unto them, They that are whole, have have no need of the physician, but they that are sick : I came not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance.

Here is, 1. Christ preaching by the sea-side, ver. 3. whither he went for room, because he found, upon second trial, no house or street large enough to contain his auditory ; but upon the strand there might come as many as would. It should seem by this that our Lord Jesus had a strong voice, and could and did speak loud ; for wisdom crieth without in the places of concourse. Wherever he goes, though it be to the sea-side, multitudes resort to him. Wherever the doctrine of Christ is faithfully preached, though it be driven into corners or into deserts, we must follow it.

2. His calling Levi, the same with Matthew, who had a place in the custom-house at Capernaum, from which he was denominated a publican ; his place fixed him by the water-side, and thither Christ went to meet with him and to give him an effectual call. This Levi is here said to be the son of Alphaeus or Cleophas, husband to that Mary who was sister or near kinswoman to the virgin Mary ; and if so, he was own brother to James the Less, and Jude and Simon the Canaanite, so that there were four brothers of them apostles. It is probable that Matthew was but a loose extravagant young man, or else, being a Jew, he would never have been a publican. However, Christ called him to follow him. Paul, though a Pharisee, had been one of the chief of sinners, and yet was called to be an apostle. With God, through Christ, there is mercy to pardon the greatest sins, and grace to sanctify the greatest sinners. Matthew, that had been a publican, became an evangelist, the first that put pen to paper, and the fullest in writing the life of Christ. Great sin and scandal before conversion, is no bar to great gifts, graces, and advancements after ; nay, God may be the more glorified, Gal. i. 6. Christ prevented him with his call ; in bodily cures ordinarily he was sought unto, but in these spiritual cures, he was found of them that sought him not. For this is the great evil and peril of the disease of sin, that those that are under it desire not to be made whole.

3. His familiar converse with publicans and sinners, ver. 15. We are here told, (1.) That Christ sat at meat in Levi's house, who invited him and his disciples to the farewell-feast he made to his friends, when he left all to attend on Christ : such a feast he made, as Elisha did, 1 Kings xix. 21. to shew, not only with what cheerfulness in himself, but with what thankfulness to God, he quitted all in compliance with Christ's call. Fitly did he make the day of his espousals to Christ a festival day. This was also to testify his respects to Christ, and the grateful sense he had of his kindness in snatching him from the receipt of custom as a brand out of the burning. (2.) That many publicans and sinners sat with Christ in Levi's house ; for there were many belonging to that custom-house, and they followed him. They followed Levi, so some understand it, supposing that like Zaccheus he was chief among the publicans and was rich ; and for that reason, the inferior sort of them attended him for what they could get. I rather take it, that they followed Jesus because of the report they had heard of him. They did not, for conscience sake, leave all to follow him, but for curiosity sake they came to Levi's feast to see him ; whatever brought them there, they were sitting with Jesus and his disciples. The publicans are here and elsewhere ranked with sinners, the worst of sinners : (1.) Because commonly they were such ; so general were the corruptions in the execution of that office, oppressing, exacting, and taking bribes or fees to extortion, and accusing falsely, Luke iii. 13—19. A faithful fair-dealing publican was so rare, even at Rome, that one Sabinus, who kept a clean reputation in that office was after his death honoured with this inscription, καλὸς τιμωροῦντι, here lies an honest publican. (2.) Because the Jews had a particular antipathy to them and their office, as an affront to the liberty of their nation, and a badge of their slavery, and therefore put them into an ill name ; and thought it scandalous to be seen in their company. Such as these our blessed Lord was pleased to converse with, when he appeared in the likeness of sinful flesh.

4. The offence which the Scribes and Pharisees took at this, ver. 16. They would not come to hear him preach, which they might have been convinced and edified by, but they would come themselves to see him sit with publicans and sinners, which they would be provoked by. They endeavoured to put the disciples out of conceit with their Master, as a man not of that sanctity and severe morals that became his character ; and therefore put the question to them, How is it that he eateth and drinketh with publicans and sinners ? Note, It is no new thing for that which is both well done and well designed, to be misrepresented and turned to the reproach of the wisest and best of men.

5. Christ's justification of himself in it, ver. 17. He stood to what he did, and would not withdraw, though the Pharisees were offended ; as Peter afterwards did, Gal. ii. 12. Note, Those are too tender of their own good name, who, to preserve it with some nice people, will decline a good work. Christ would not do so. They thought the publicans were to be hated : No, saith Christ, they are to be pitied, they are sick and need a physician ; they are sinners and need a saviour. They thought Christ's character should separate him from them ; no, saith Christ, my commission directs me to them ; I came not to call the righteous but sinners to repentance. If the world had been righteous, there had been no occasion for my coming, either to preach repentance or to purchase remission. It is to a sinful world that I am sent, and therefore my business lies most with those that are the greatest sinners in it. Or thus ; I am not come to call the righteous, the proud Pharisees that think themselves righteous, that ask, wherein shall we return ? Mal. iii. 7. of what shall we repent ? but poor publicans, that own themselves to be sinners, and are glad to be invited and encouraged to repent. It is good dealing with those that there is hopes of ; now there is more hope of a fool, than of one that is wise in his own conceit, Prov. xxvi. 12.

18. And the disciples of John and of the Pharisees used to fast : and they come and say unto him, Why do the disciples of John and of the Pharisees fast, but thy disciples fast not ? 19. And Jesus said unto them, Can the children of the bridechamber fast, while the bridegroom is with them ? as long as they have the bridegroom with them, they cannot fast. 20. But the days will come, when the bridegroom shall be taken away from them, and then shall they fast in those days. 21. No man also seweth a piece of new cloth on an old garment : else the new piece that filled it up taketh away from the old, and the rent is made worse. 22. And no man putteth new wine into old bottles : else the new wine doth burst the bottles, and the wine is spilled, and the bottles will be marred ; but new wine must be put into new bottles. 23. And it came to pass, that he went through the corn-fields on the sabbath-day : and his disciples began, as they went, to pluck the ears of corn. 24. And the Pharisees said unto him, Behold, why do they on the sabbath-day that which is not lawful ? 25. And he said unto them, Have ye never read what David did, when he had need, and was an hungred, he, and they that were with him ? 26. How he went into the house of God in the days of Abiathar the high priest, and did eat the shew-bread, which is not lawful to eat but for the priests, and gave also to them which were with them ? 27. And he said unto them, The sabbath was made for man, and not man for the sabbath : 28. Therefore the Son of man is Lord also of the sabbath.

Christ had been put to justify himself in conversing with publicans and sinners : Here he is put to justify his disciples ; and in what they do according to his will he will justify them and bear them out.

First, He justifies them in their not fasting, which was turned to their reproach by the Pharisees ; why do the Pharisees and the disciples of John fast ? They use to fast, the Pharisees fasted twice in the week, Luke xviii. 12. and probably the disciples of John did so too ; and it should seem this very day, when Christ and his disciples were feasting in Levi's house, was their fast-day, for the word is ἡμέραν, they do fast or are fasting, which aggravated the offence. Thus apt are strict professors to make their own practice a standard, and to censure and condemn all that do not fully come up to it. They invidiously suggest that if Christ went among sinners to do them good, as he had pleaded, yet the disciples went to indulge their appetites, for they never knew what it was to fast or to deny themselves. Note, Ill-will always suspects the worst.

Two things Christ pleads in excuse of his disciples not fasting.

1. That these were easy days with them, and fasting was not so seasonable now as it would be hereafter, ver. 19, 20. There is a time for all things. Those that enter into the married state, must expect care and trouble in the flesh, and yet during the nuptial solemnity they are merry, and think it becomes them to be so ; it was very absurd for Samson's bride to weep before him, during the days that the feast lasted, Judges xiv. 17. Christ and his disciples were but newly married, the bridegroom was yet with them, the nuptials were yet in the celebrating ; Matthew's particularly : when the bridegroom should be removed from them, to the far country about his business, then would be a proper time to sit as a widow, in solitude and fasting.

2. That these were early days with them, and they were not so able for the severe exercises of religion, as hereafter they would be. The Pharisees had long accustomed themselves to such austerities ; and John Baptist himself, neither eating nor drinking. His disciples from the first inured themselves to hardships, and came the easier to bear strict and frequent fasting, but it was not so with Christ's disciples ; their Master came eating and drinking, and had not bred them up to the difficult services of religion as yet, for it was all in good time. To put them upon such frequent fasting at first, would be a discouragement to them, and perhaps drive them off from following Christ ; would be of as ill consequence as putting new wine into old casks, or sewing new cloth to that which is worn thin and thread-bare, ver. 21, 22. Note, God graciously considers the frame of young Christians, that are weak and tender, and so must we ; nor must we expect more, but the work of the day in its day, and that day according to the strength, because it is not in our hands to give strength according to the day. Many contract an antipathy to some kind of food, otherwise good, by being surfeited with it when they are young ; so many entertain prejudices against the exercises of devotion by being burdened with them, and made to serve with an offering, at their setting out. Weak Christians must take heed of over-tasking themselves, and of making the yoke of Christ otherwise than as it is, easy and sweet and pleasant.

Secondly, He justifies them in plucking the ears of corn on the sabbath-day, which, I will warrant you, a disciple of the Pharisees would not dare to have done ; for it was contrary to an express tradition of their elders. In this instance, as in that before, they reflect upon the discipline of Christ's school, as if it were not so strict as that of theirs : so common it is for those that deny the power of godliness to be jealous for the form, and censorious of those who affect not their form.

Observe, 1. What a poor breakfast Christ's disciples had on a sabbath-day morning, when they were going to church, ver. 23. they plucked the ears of corn, and that was the best they had. They were so intent upon spiritual dainties, that they forgot even their necessary food ; and the word of Christ was to them instead of that ; and their zeal for it even eat them up. The Jews made it a piece of religion to eat dainty food on sabbath-days, but the disciples were content with any thing.

2. How even this was grudged them by the Pharisees, upon supposition that it was not lawful to pluck the ears of corn on the sabbath-day, that that was as much a servile work as reaping, ver. 24. Why do they on the sabbath-day that which is not lawful ? Note, If Christ's disciples do that which is unlawful, Christ will be reflected upon and upbraided with it, as he was here, and dishonour will redound to his name. It is observable, that when the Pharisees thought Christ did amiss, they told the disciples, ver. 16. and now when they thought the disciples did amiss, they spoke to Christ ; as make-bates, that did what they could to sow discord between Christ and his disciples ; and make a breach in the family.

3. How Christ defended them in what they did :

1. By example. They had a good precedent for it in David's eating the shew-bread, when he was hungry, and there were no other bread to be had, ver. 25, 26. Have ye never read ? Note, Many of our mistakes would be rectified, and our unjust censures of others corrected, if we would but recollect what we have read in the scripture : appeals to that are most convincing. You have read that David, the man after God's own heart, when he was hungry, made no difficulty of eating the shew-bread, which by the law none might eat of but the priest and their families. Note, Ritual observances might give way to moral obligations ; and that may be done in a case of necessity, which otherwise may not be done. This it is said David did in the days of Abiathar the high-priest, or just before the days of Abiathar, who immediately succeeded Abimelech his father in the pontificate ; and it is probable was at that time his father's deputy or assistant in the office ; and he it was that escaped the massacre, and brought the ephod to David.

2. By argument. To reconcile them to the disciples plucking the ears of corn, let them consider,

1. Whom the sabbath was made for, ver. 27. It was made for man, and not man for the sabbath. This we had not in Matthew. The sabbath is a sacred and divine institution, but we must receive and embrace it as a privilege, vilege and a benefit, not as a task and a drudgery. (1.) God never designed it to be an imposition upon us, and therefore we must not make it so to ourselves; man was not made for the sabbath, for he was made a day before the sabbath was instituted. Man was made for God, and for his honour and service, and he must rather die than deny him; but he was not made for the sabbath, so as to be tied up by the law of it, from that which is necessary to the support of this life. (2.) God did design it to be an advantage to us, and so we must make it, and improve it. He made it for man. 1. He had some regard to our bodies in the institution, that they might rest and not be tired out with the constant business of this world, Deut. v. 14. That thy man-servant and thy maid-servant may rest. Now he that intended the sabbath-rest for the repose of our bodies, certainly never intended it should restrain us in a case of necessity, from fetching in the necessary supports of the body; it must be construed so as not to contradict itself, for edification and not for destruction. 2. He had much more regard to our souls; the sabbath was made a day of rest, only in order to its being a day of holy work, a day of communion with God, a day of praise and thanksgiving; and the rest from worldly business is therefore necessary, that we may closely apply ourselves to this work, and spend the whole time in it, in public, private and secret; but then time is allowed us for that which is necessary to the fitting of our bodies for the service of our souls in God's service, and the enabling of them to keep pace with them in that work. See here, (1.) What a good master we serve, all whose institutions are for our own benefit, and if we be so wise as to observe them, we are wise for ourselves; it is not he but we that are gainers by our service. (2.) What we should aim at in our sabbath-work, even the good of our own souls. If the sabbath was made for man, we should then ask ourselves at night, what am I the better for this sabbath-day? (3.) What care we ought to take not to make those exercises of religion burdens to ourselves or others, which God ordained to be blessings; not only not by unreasonable strictness added to the command, but not by indulging those corruptions which are adverse to the command, for thereby we make those devout exercises a penance to ourselves, which otherwise would be a pleasure.

2. Who the sabbath was made by, ver. 28. The Son of man is Lord also of the sabbath; and therefore he will not see the kind intentions of the institution of it frustrated by your impositions. Note, The sabbath-days are days of the Son of man; he is the Lord of the day, and to his honour it must be observed; by him God made the worlds, and so it was by him that the sabbath was first instituted; by him God gave the law at mount Sinai, and so the fourth commandment was his law; and that little alteration that was shortly to be made by the shifting of it, one day forward to the first day of the week, was to be in remembrance of his resurrection, and therefore the Christian sabbath was to be called the Lord's day, Rev. i. 10. the Lord Christ's day; and the Son of man. Christ, as Mediator, is always to be looked upon as Lord of the sabbath. This argument he largely insists upon in his own justification, when he was charged with having broken the sabbath, John v. 18.

C H A P. III.

In this chapter we have. (1.) Christ's healing a man that had a withered hand on the sabbath day, and the combination of his enemies against him for it, ver. 1—6. (2.) The universal resort of people to him from all parts to be healed, and the relief they all found with him, ver. 7—12. (3.) His ordaining his twelve apostles to be attendants on him, and the preachers of his gospel, ver. 13—21. (4.) His answer to the blasphemous evil of the Scribes, who imputed his power to cast out devils, to a conspiracy with the prince of the devils, ver. 22—30. (5.) His owning his disciples for his nearest and dearest relations, ver. 31—35.

1. AND he entered again into the synagogue: and there was a man there which had a withered hand. 2. And they watched him, whether he would heal him on the sabbath-day: that they might accuse him. 3. And he saith unto the man which had the withered hand, Stand forth. 4. And he saith unto them, Is it lawful to do good on the sabbath-days, or to do evil? to save life, or to kill? but they held their peace. 5. And when he had looked round about on them with anger, being grieved for the hardness of their hearts, he saith unto the man, Stretch forth thine hand. And he stretched it out: and his hand was restored whole as the other. 6. And the Pharisees went forth, and straightway took counsel with the Herodians against him, how they might destroy him. 7. But Jesus withdrew himself with his disciples to the sea: and a great multitude from Galilee followed him, and from Judea, 8. And from Jerusalem, and from Idumea, and from beyond Jordan; and they about Tyre and Sidon, a great multitude, when they had heard what great things he did, came unto him. 9. And he spake to his disciples, that a small ship should wait on him, because of the multitude, lest they should throng him. 10. For he had healed many; insomuch that they pressed upon him for to touch him, as many as had plagues. 11. And unclean spirits, when they saw him, fell down before him, and cried, saying, Thou art the Son of God. 12. And he straitly charged them that they should not make him known.

Here, as before, we have our Lord Jesus busy at work in the synagogue first, and then by the sea-side, to teach us that his presence should not be confined either to the one or to the other; but wherever any are gathered together in his name, whether in the synagogue or any where else, there is he in the midst of them. In every place where he records his name, he will meet his people and bless them; it is his will that men pray every where. Now here we have some account of what he did.

First, When he entered again into the synagogue, he improved the opportunity he had there of doing good, and having no doubt preached a sermon there, he wrought a miracle for the confirmation of it, or at least for the confirmation of this truth, that it is lawful to do good on the sabbath-day. We had the story, Matt. xii. 9.

1. The patient's case was piteous; he had a withered hand, by which he was disabled to work for his living, and those that are so are the most proper objects of charity; let those be helped that cannot help themselves.

2. The spectators were very unkind both to the patient and to the physician, who, instead of interceding for a poor neighbour, did what they could to hinder his cure. For they intimated, that if Christ cured him now on the sabbath-day, they would accuse him as a sabbath-breaker; it had been very unreasonable, if they should have opposed a physician or surgeon in helping any poor body in misery by ordinary methods; but much more absurd was it to oppose him that cured without any labour, but by a word's speaking.

3. Christ dealt very fairly with the spectators, and dealt with them first, if possible to prevent the offence. (1.) He laboured to convince their judgment. He bid the man stand forth, ver. 3. that by the sight of him they might be moved with compassion towards him, and might not for shame account his cure a crime. And then he appeals to their own consciences; though the thing speaks itself, yet he is pleased to speak it. Is it lawful to do good on the sabbath-days, as I design to do, or to do evil, as you design to do? Whether is it better to save life or to kill? What fairer question could he put? And yet because they saw it would turn against them, they held their peace. Note, Those are obstinate indeed in their infidelity, who when they can say nothing against a truth, will say nothing to it; and when they cannot resist, yet will not yield.

(2.) When they rebelled against the light he lamented their stubbornness, ver. 5. He looked round about on them with anger, being grieved for the hardness of their hearts. The sin he had an eye to was the hardness of their hearts, their insensibleness of the evidence of his miracles, and their inflexible resolution to persist in unbelief. We hear what is said amiss, and see what is done amiss, but Christ looks at the root of bitterness in the heart; the blindness and hardness of that. Observe, (1.) How he was provoked by the sin. He looked round upon them, for they were so many, and had so placed themselves that they surrounded him. And he looked with anger; it is likely his anger appeared in his countenance; his anger was like God's without the least perturbation to himself, but not without great provocation from us. Note, The sin of sinners is very displeasing to Jesus Christ; and the way to be angry and not to sin, is to be angry as Christ was at nothing but sin. Let hard-hearted sinners tremble, to think of the anger with which he will look round upon them shortly when the great day of his wrath comes. (2.) How he pitied the sinners; he was grieved for the hardness of their hearts; as God was grieved forty years for the hardness of the hearts of their fathers in the wilderness. Note, It is a great grief to our Lord Jesus to see sinners bent upon their own ruin, and obstinately set against the methods of their conviction and recovery, for he would not that any should perish. This is a good reason why the hardness of our own hearts and of the hearts of others, should be a grief to us.

4. Christ dealt very kindly with the patient. He bid him stretch forth his hand, and it was immediately restored. Now, (1.) Christ has hereby taught us to go on with resolution in the way of our duty, how violent soever the opposition is that we meet with in it. We must deny ourselves sometimes in our ease, pleasure and convenience, rather than give offence even to those who causelessly take it; but we must not deny ourselves the satisfaction of serving God and doing good, though offence may unjustly be taken at it. None could be more tender of giving offence than Christ; yet rather than send this poor man away uncured, he would venture offending all the Scribes and Pharisees that compassed him about. (2.) He hath hereby given us a specimen of the cures wrought by his grace upon poor souls; our hands are spiritually withered; the powers of our souls weakened by sin, and disabled for that which is good. The great healing-day is the sabbath, and the healing-place the synagogue; the healing-power is that of Christ. The gospel command is like this here; and the command as rational and just as this; though our hands are withered, and we cannot of ourselves stretch them forth, we must attempt it, must as well as we can lift them up to God in prayer, lay hold on Christ and eternal life, and employ them in good works; and if we do our endeavour, power goes along with the word of Christ, he effects the cure. Though our hands be withered, yet if we will not offer to stretch them out, it is our own fault that we are not healed; but if we do and are healed, Christ and his power and grace must have all the glory.

5. The enemies of Christ dealt very barbarously with him. Such a work of mercy should have engaged their love to him, and such a work of wonder their faith in him. But instead of that, the Pharisees that pretended to be oracles in the church, and the Herodians that pretended to be the supporters of the state, though of opposite interests one to another, yet took counsel together against him, how they might destroy him. Note, They that suffer for doing good do but suffer as their Master did.

Secondly, When he withdrew to the sea, he did good there. Whilst his enemies sought to destroy him, he quitted the place; to teach us in troublous times to shift for our own safety; but, see here,

1. How he was followed into his retirement. When some had such an enmity to him that they drove him out of their country, others had such a value for him that they followed him wherever he went; and the enmity of their leaders to Christ did not cool their respects to him. Great multitudes followed him from all parts of the nation; as far north, as from Galilee; as far south, as from Judea and Jerusalem; nay, and from Idumea; as far east, as from beyond Jordan; and west, as from Tyre and Sidon, ver. 7, 8. Observe, (1.) What induced them to follow him; it was the report they heard of the great things he did for all that applied themselves to him; some wished to see one that had done such great things, and others hoped he would do great things for them. Note, The consideration of the great things Christ has done should engage us to come to him. (2.) What they followed him for, ver. 10. They pressed upon him for to touch him, as many as had plagues. Diseases are here called plagues, μάρτυρες; corrections, chastisements so they are designed to be, to make us smart for our sins, that thereby we may be made sorry for them, and may be warned not to return to them. Those that were under these scourgings came to Jesus; this is the errand on which sickness is sent, to quicken us to enquire after Christ, and apply ourselves to him as our physician. They pressed upon him, each striving which should get nearest him, and which should be first served. They fell down before him, so Dr. Hammond, as petitioners for his favour; they desired leave but to touch him, having faith to be healed, not only by his touching them, but by their touching him; which no doubt they had many instances of. (3.) What provision he made to be ready to attend them, ver. 9. he spake to his disciples, who were fishermen, and had fisher-boats, at command, that a small ship should constantly wait on him, to carry him from place to place on the same coast; that when he had dispatched the necessary business he had to do in one place, he might easily remove to another, where his presence was requisite, without pressing through the crowds of people that followed him for curiosity. Wise men, as much as they can, decline a crowd.

2. What abundance of good he did in his retirement; he did not with draw to be idle, nor did he send back those who rudely crowded after him when he withdrew, but took it kindly, and gave them what they came for; for he never said to any that sought him diligently, seek ye me in vain. (1.) Diseases were effectually cured. He healed many; divers sorts of patients; ill of divers sorts of diseases, though numerous, though various, he healed them. (2.) Devils were effectually conquered. Those whom unclean spirits had got possession of, when they saw him, trembled at his presence, and they also fell down before him, not to supplicate his favour but to deprecate his wrath, and by their own terrors were compelled to own, that he was the Son of God, ver. 11. It is sad that this great truth should be denied by any of the children of men, who may have the benefit of it, when a confession of it has so often been extorted from devils, who are excluded from having benefit by it. (3.) Christ sought not applause to himself in doing those great things, for he strictly charged those for whom he did them, that they should not make him known, ver. 12. That they should not be industrious to spread the notice of his cures, as it were by advertisements in the news-papers, but let them leave his own works to praise him, and let the report of them diffuse itself and make its own way. Let not those that were cured be forward to divulge it lest it should feed their pride who were so highly favoured, but let the standards be carry away the intelligence of it. When we do that which is praise-worthy and yet covet not to be praised of men for it, then the same mind is in us which was in Christ Jesus.

13. And he goeth up into a mountain, and calleth unto him whom he would; and they came unto him. 14. And he ordained twelve, that they should be with him, and that he might send them forth to preach; 15. And to have power to heal sicknesses, and to cast out devils. 16. And Simon, he surnamed Peter. 17. And James the son of Zebedee, and John the brother of James (and he surnamed them Boanerges, which is the sons of thunder.) 18. And Andrew, and Philip, and Bartholomew, and Matthew, and Thomas, and James the son of Alphaeus, and Thaddeus, and Simon the Canaanite, 19. And Judas Iscariot, which also betrayed him; and they went into an house. 20. And the multitude cometh together again, so that they could not so much as eat bread. 21. And when his friends heard of it, they went out to lay hold on him: for they said, He is beside himself.

In these verses we have,

First, The choice Christ made of the twelve apostles to be his constant followers and attendants, and to be sent abroad as there was occasion to preach the gospel. Observe,

1. The introduction to this call, or promotion of disciples. He goes up into a mountain, and his errand thither was to pray. Ministers must be set apart with solemn prayer for the pouring out of the Spirit upon them; though Christ has authority to confer the gifts of the Holy Ghost, yet to set us an example, he prayed for them.

2. The rule he went by in his choice, and that was his own good pleasure; he called unto him whom he would. Not such as we would have thought fittest to be called, looking upon the countenance and the height of the stature; but such as he thought fit to call, and determined to make fit for the service to which he called them: even so, blessed Jesus, because it seemed good in thine eyes. Christ calls whom he will, for he is a free agent, and his grace is his own.

3. The efficacy of the call. He called them to separate themselves from the crowd and stand by him, and they came unto him; Christ calls those who were given him, John xvii. 6, and all that the Father gave him shall come to him, John vi. 37. Those whom it was his will to call, he made willing to come; his people shall be willing in the day of his power. Perhaps they came to him readily enough, because they were in expectation of reigning with him in temporal pomp and power; but when afterwards they were undeceived in that matter, yet they had such a prospect given them of better things, that they would not say they were deceived in their Master, nor repented their leaving all to be with him.

4. The end and intention of this call; he ordained them (probably by the imposition of hands, which was a ceremony used among the Jews) that they should be with him constantly, to be witnesses of his doctrine, manner of life, and patience, that they might fully know it, and be able to give an account of it; and especially that they might attest the truth of his miracles; they must be with him, to receive instructions from him, that they might be qualified to give instructions to others. It would require time to fit them for that which he designed them for; for they must be sent forth to preach; not to preach till they were sent, and not to be sent till by a long and intimate acquaintance with Christ they were fitted. Note, Christ's ministers must be much with him.

5. The power he gave them to work miracles; and hereby he put a very great honour upon them beyond that of the great men of the earth. He ordained them to heal sicknesses, and to cast out devils. They shewed that the power which Christ had to work these miracles, was an original power; that he had it not as a servant, but as a son in his own house, in that he could confer it upon others, and invest them with it: they have a rule in the law, deputatus non potest deputare, he that is only deputed himself, cannot depute another; but our Lord Jesus had life in himself, and the Spirit without measure; for he could give this power even to the weak and foolish things of the world.

6. Their number and names; he ordained twelve, according to the number of the twelve tribes of Israel. They are here named not just in the same order as they were in Matthew, nor by couples as they were there; but as there, so here Peter is put first, and Judas last. Here Matthew is put before Thomas; it is likely, being called in that order, but in that catalogue which Matthew himself drew up, he puts himself after Thomas; so far was he from insisting upon the precedency of his consecration. But that which Mark only takes notice of in this list of the apostles is, that Christ called James and John Boanerges, which is, The sons of Thunder; perhaps they were remarkable for a loud commanding voice, they were thundering preachers; or rather, it notes the zeal and fervency of their spirits, which would make them active for God above their brethren. These two (saith Dr. Hammond) were to be special eminent ministers of the gospel, which is called a voice shaking the earth, Heb. xii. 26. Yet John, one of those sons of thunder, was full of love and tenderness, as appears by his epistles, and was the beloved disciple.

7. Their retirement with their Master, and close adherence to him, they went into an house. Now this jury was impannelled, they stood together to hearken to their evidence. They went together into the house, to settle the orders of their infant college; and now, it is likely, the bag was given to Judas, which pleased him, and made him easy.

Secondly, The continual crowds that attended Christ's motions, ver. 20. The multitude cometh together again unsent for, and unseasonably pressing upon him, some with one errand and some with another; so that he and his disciples could not get time so much as to eat bread, much less for a set and full meal. Yet he did not shut his doors against the petitioners, but hid them welcome, and gave to each of them an answer of peace. Note, They whose hearts are enlarged in the work of God, can easily bear with great inconveniences to themselves in the prosecution of it, and will rather lose a meal's meat at any time than slip an opportunity of doing good. It is happy when zealous hearers and zealous preachers thus meet, and encourage one another. Now the kingdom of God was preached, and men pressed into it, Luke xvi. 16. This was a gale of opportunity worth improving, and the disciples might well afford to adjourn their meals to lay hold on it. It is good striking while the iron is hot.

Thirdly, The care of his relations concerning him, ver. 21. When his friends in Capernaum heard how he was followed, and what pains he took, they went out to lay hold on him, and fetch him home, for they said, He is beside himself. (1.) Some understand it of an absurd preposterous care, which had more in it of reproach to him than of respect; and so we must take it as we read it, he is beside himself; either they suspected it themselves, or it was suggested to them, and they gave credit to the suggestion, that he was gone distracted, and therefore his friends ought to bind him and put him in a dark room, to bring him to his right mind again. His kindred, many of them, had mean thoughts of him, John vi. 4.—vii. 5. and were willing to hearken to this ill construction which some put upon his great zeal, and to conclude him crazed in his intellectuals, and under that pretence to take him off from his work. The prophets were called mad fellows, 2 Kings ix. 11. (2.) Others understand it of a well-meaning care, and then they read isim, he fainteth; he has no time to eat bread, and therefore his strength will fail him; he will be stifled with the crowd of people, and will have his spirits quite exhausted with constant speaking, and the virtue that goes out of him in his miracles; and therefore let us use a friendly violence with him, and get him a little breathing time. In his preaching-work, as well as his suffering-work, he was attacked with, Master, spare thyself. Note, They who go on with vigour and zeal in the work of God must expect to meet with hindrances, both from the groundless disaffection of their enemies, and the mistaken affections of their friends, and they have need to stand upon their guard against both.

22. ¶ And the Scribes which came down from Jerusalem, said, He hath Beelzebub, and by the prince of the devils casteth he out devils. 23. And he called them unto him, and said unto them in parables, How can Satan cast out Satan? 24. And if a kingdom be divided against itself, that kingdom cannot stand, 25. And if a house be divided against itself, that house cannot stand. 26. And if Satan rise up against himself, and be divided, he cannot stand, but hath an end. 27. No man can enter into a strong man's house, and spoil his goods, except he will first bind the strong man, and then he will spoil his house. 28. Verily I say unto you, All sins shall be forgiven unto the sons of men, and blasphemies wherewith soever they shall blaspheme: 29. But he that shall blaspheme against the Holy Ghost, hath never forgiveness, but is in danger of eternal damnation: 30. Because they said, he hath an unclean spirit.

Here is, 1. The impudent impious brand which the scribes fastened upon Christ's casting out devils, that they might evade and invalidate the conviction of it, and have a poor excuse for not yielding to it. These scribes came down from Jerusalem, ver. 22. It should seem they came this long journey on purpose to hinder the progress of the doctrine of Christ; such pains did they take to do mischief; and coming from Jerusalem, where were the most polite and learned Scribes, and where they had opportunity of consulting together against the Lord and his anointed, they were in the greater capacity to do mischief; the reputation of Scribes from Jerusalem would have an influence not only upon the country people but upon the country Scribes; they had never thought of this base suggestion concerning Christ's miracles till the Scribes from Jerusalem put it in their heads. They could not deny but that he cast out devils, which plainly spoke him sent of God; but they insinuated he had Beelzebub on his side, and was in league with him, and by the prince of the devils cast out devils. There is a trick in the case; Satan is not cast out, he only goes out by consent. There was nothing in the manner of Christ's casting out devils, that gave any cause to suspect this; he did it as one having authority; but so they will have it who resolve not to believe him.

2. The rational answer which Christ gave to this objection, demonstrating the absurdity of it.

(1.) Satan is so subtil that he will never voluntarily quit his possession. If Satan cast out Satan, his kingdom is divided against itself and it cannot stand, ver. 23, 24, 25. He called them to him, as one desirous they should be convinced, he treats them with all the freedom, friendliness and familiarity that could be; he vouchsafes to reason the case with them, that every mouth may be stopped. It was plain that the doctrine of Christ made war upon the devil's kingdom, and had a direct tendency to break his power and crush his interest in the souls of men; and it was as plain that the casting of him out of the bodies of people confirmed that doctrine, and gave it the setting on; and therefore it cannot be imagined that he should come into such a design; every one knows Satan is no fool, nor will act so directly against his own interest.

(2.) Christ is so wise that being engaged in war with him, he will attack his forces wherever he meets them, whether in the bodies or souls of people, ver. 27. It is plain, Christ's design is to enter into the strong man's house, to take possession of the interest he has in the world, and to spoil his goods, and convert them to his own service, and therefore it is natural to suppose that he will thus bind the strong man; will forbid him to speak when he would, and to stay where he would, and thus shew that he has gained a victory over him.

3. The awful warning Christ gave them to take heed how they spoke such dangerous words as these; however they might make light of them, as only conjectures and the language of free thinking, if they persisted in it, it would be of fatal consequence to them; it would be found as in against the

the last remedy, and consequently unpardonable; for what could be imagined possible to bring them to repentance for their sin in blaspheming Christ, that would set aside such a strong conviction with such a weak evasion. It is true, the gospel promiseth, because Christ hath purchased forgiveness for the greatest sins and sinners, ver. 28. Those who reviled Christ on the cross, which was blaspheming of the Son of man, aggravated to the highest degree, yet many of them found mercy, and Christ himself prayed, Father, forgive them; but this was blaspheming the Holy Ghost, for it was by the holy Spirit that he cast out devils, and they said, it was by the unclean spirit, ver. 30. And by this method they would outface the conviction of all the gifts of the Holy Ghost after Christ's ascension, and defeat them all, after which there remained no more proof, and therefore they should never have forgiveness, but were liable to eternal damnation. They were in imminent danger of that everlasting punishment, from which there was no redemption, and in which there was no intermission, no remission.

31. ¶ There came then his brethren and his mother, and, standing without, sent unto him, calling him. 32. And the multitude sat about him, and they said unto him, Behold, thy mother and thy brethren without seek for thee. 33. And he answered them, saying, Who is my mother, or my brethren? 34. And he looked round about on them which sat about him, and said, Behold my mother and my brethren! 35. For whosoever shall do the will of God, the same is my brother, and my sister, and mother.

Here is, 1. The disrespect which Christ's kindred, according to the flesh, shewed to him when he was preaching, (and they knew very well that he was then in his element) they not only stood without, having no desire to come in and hear him, but they sent in a message to call him out to them, ver. 31, 32. as if he must leave his work to hearken to their impertinences; it is likely, they had no business with him, only sent for him on purpose to oblige him to break off, lest he should kill himself. He knew how far his strength would go, and preferred the salvation of souls before his own life, and soon after made it to appear with a witness; it was therefore an idle thing for them, under pretence of his sparing himself to interrupt him; and it was worse, if really they had business with him, when they knew he preferred his business as a Saviour, so much before any other business.

2. The respect which Christ shewed to his spiritual kindred upon this occasion. Now, as at other times, he put a comparative neglect upon his mother, which seemed purposely designed to obviate and prevent the extravagant respect, which men in after-times would be apt to pay her. Our respects ought to be guided and governed by Christ; now the virgin Mary, or Christ's mother; is not equalled with, but postponed to ordinary believers, on whom Christ here puts a superlative honour. He looked upon those who sat about him, and pronounced those of them that not only heard, but did the will of God, to be to him as his brother, and sister, and mother; as much esteemed, loved and cared for, as his nearest relations, ver. 33, 34, 35. This is a good reason why we should honour those that fear the Lord, and choose them for our people; why we should not be hearers of the word only, but doers of the work, that we may share with the saints in this honour. Surely it is good to be akin to those who are thus nearly allied to Christ, and to have fellowship with those that have fellowship with Christ; and woe to those who hate and persecute Christ's kindred, that are his bone and his flesh, every one resembling the children of a king, see Judges viii. 18, 19. for he will with jealousy plead their cause, and avenge their blood.

C H A P. IV.

In this chapter we have, (1.) The parable of the seed, and the four sorts of ground, ver. 1—9. with the exposition of it, ver. 10—20. and the application of it, ver. 21—25. (2.) The parable of the seed growing gradually, but insensibly, ver. 26—29. (3.) The parable of the grain of mustard seed, and a general account of Christ's parables, ver. 29—34. (4.) The miracle of Christ's sudden stilling a storm at sea, ver. 35—41.

1. AND he began again to teach by the sea side: and there was gathered unto him a great multitude, so that he entered into a ship, and sat in the sea; and the whole multitude was by the sea on the land. 2. And he taught the many things by parables, and said unto them in his doctrine, 3. Hearken; Behold, There went out a sower to sow: 4. And it came to pass, as he sowed, some fell by the way side, and the fowls of the air came and devoured it up. 5. And some fell on stony ground, where it had not much earth, and immediately it sprang up, because it had no depth of earth: 6. But when the sun was up, it was scorched; and because it had no root, it withered away. 7. And some fell among thorns, and the thorns grew up, and choked it, and it yielded no fruit. 8. And other fell on good ground, and did yield fruit that sprang up and increased; and brought forth, some thirty, and some sixty, and some an hundred. 9. And he said unto them, He that hath ears to hear, let him hear. 10. And when he was alone, they that were about him with the twelve asked of him the parable. 11. And he said unto them, Unto you it is given to know the mystery of the kingdom of God: but unto them that are without, all these things are done in parables: 12. That seeing they may see, and not perceive; and hearing they may hear, and not understand; lest at any time they should be converted, and their sins should be forgiven them. 13. And he said unto them, Know ye not this parable? and how then will ye know all parables? 14. ¶ The sower soweth the word. 15. And these are they by the way side, where the word is sown; but when they have heard, Satan cometh immediately, and taketh away the word that was sown in their hearts. 16. And these are they likewise which are sown on stony ground; who, when they have heard the word immediately receive it with gladness; 17. And have no root in themselves, and so endure but for a time: afterward, when affliction or persecution ariseth for the word's sake, immediately they are offended. 18. And these are they which are sown among thorns; such as hear the word. 19. And the cares of this world, and the deceitfulness of riches, and the lusts of other things entering in, choke the word, and it becometh unfruitful. 20. And these are they which are sown on good ground; such as hear the word, and receive it, and bring forth fruit, some thirty-fold, some sixty, and some an hundred.

The foregoing chapter began with Christ's entering into the synagogue, ver. 1. This chapter begins with Christ's teaching again by the sea-side. Thus he changed his method, that if possible all might be reached and wrought upon. To gratify the nice and more genteel sort of people that had seats, chief seats in the synagogue, and did not care for hearing a sermon any where else, he did not preach always by the sea-side, but having liberty went often into the synagogue and taught there; yet to gratify the poor; the mob, that could not get room in the synagogue, he did not always preach there, but began again to teach by the sea-side, where they could come within hearing. Thus are we debtors both to the wise and to the unwise, Rom. i. 14.

Here seems to be a new convenience found out which had not been used before, though he had before preached by the sea-side, chap. ii. 13. and that was his standing in a ship while his hearers stood upon the land, and that inland sea of Tiberias having no tide there was no ebbing and flowing of the waters to disturb them. Methinks Christ's carrying his doctrine into a ship, and preaching it thence, was a presage of his sending of the gospel to the isles of the Gentiles, and the shipping off of the kingdom of God (that rich cargo) from the Jewish nation to be sent to a people that would bring forth more of the fruit of it. Now observe here,

1. The way of teaching that Christ used with the multitude, ver. 2. He taught them many things, but it was by parables or similitudes, which would tempt them to hear, for people loved to be spoken to in their own language, and careless hearers will catch at a plain comparison borrowed from common things, and will retain and repeat that when they have left, and perhaps never took, the truth which it was designed to explain and illustrate: But unless they would take pains to search into it, it would but amuse them, seeing they would see, and not perceive, ver. 12. and so while it gratified their curiosity, it was the punishment of their stupidity; they wilfully shut their eyes against the light, and therefore justly did Christ put it into the dark lantern of a parable, which had a bright side towards those who applied it to themselves, and were willing to be guided by it; but to those who were only willing for a season to play with it, it only gave a flash of light now and then, but sent them away in the dark. It is just with God to say of those that will not see, that they shall not see, and to hide from their eyes, who only look about them with a great deal of carelessness, and never look before them with any concern upon the things that belong to their peace.

2. The way of expounding that he used with his disciples. When he was alone by himself, not only the twelve, but others that were about him with the twelve, took the opportunity to ask him the meaning of the parables, ver. 10. They found it good to be about Christ; the nearer him the better; good to be with the twelve, to be conversant with those that are intimate with him: And he told them what a distinguishing favour it was to them, that they were made acquainted with the mystery of the kingdom of God, ver. 11. The secret of the Lord was with them. That instructed them which others were only amazed with, and they were made to increase in knowledge by every parable, and understood more of the way and method in which Christ designed to set up his kingdom in the world, while others were dismissed never the wiser. Note, Those who know the mystery of the kingdom of heaven, must acknowledge that is given to them; they receive both the light and the sight from Jesus Christ, who, after his resurrection both opened the scriptures, and opened the understanding, Luke xxiv. 27—45.

In particular, we have here,

1. The parable of the sower, as we had it, Matt. xiii. 3. &c. He begins, ver. 3. with hearken, and concludes, ver. 9. with he that hath ears to hear, let him hear. Note, The words of Christ demand attention, and those who speak from him may command it, and should stir it up; even that, which as yet we do not thoroughly understand, or not rightly, yet we must carefully attend to it, believing it to be both intelligible and weighty, that at length we may understand it; we shall find more in Christ's sayings than at first there seemed to be.

2. The exposition of it to the disciples. Here is a question Christ put to them before he expounded it, which we had not in Matthew, ver. 13. Know ye not this parable? Know ye not the meaning of it? How then will ye know all parables? (1.) If ye know not this which is so plain, how will ye understand other parables that will be more dark and obscure? If you are gruelled and run aground with this which speaks so plainly, the different success of the word preached upon those that hear it, which you yourselves may see easily, how will you understand the parables which hereafter will speak of the rejection of the Jews, and the calling of the Gentiles, which is a thing you have yet no idea of? Note, This should quicken us both to prayer and pains, that we may get knowledge, that there are a great many things we are concerned to know; and if we understand not the plain truths of the gospel, how shall we master those that are more difficult? Vita brevis ars longa. If we have run with the footmen, and they have wearied us, and run us down, then how shall we contend with horses? Jer. xii. 5. (2.) If you know not this, which is intended for your direction in hearing the word, that ye may profit by it; how shall ye profit by what you are further to hear? This parable is to teach you to be attentive to the word, and affected with it that you may understand it. If you receive not this, you will not know how to use the key by which you must be let into all the rest. If we understand not the rules we are to observe in order to our profiting by the word, how shall we profit by any other rules? Observe, before Christ expounds the parable, (1.) He shews them how sad their case was, who were not let into the meaning of the doctrine of Christ. To you it is given, but not to them. Note, It will help us to put a value upon the privileges we enjoy as disciples of Christ; to consider the deplorable state of those who want such privileges; especially that they are out of the ordinary way of conversion, lest they should be converted, and their sins should be forgiven them, ver. 12. Those only who are converted have their sins forgiven

given them: And it is the misery of unconverted souls, that they lie under unpardoned guilt. (2.) He shews them what a shame it was that they needed such particular explanations of the word they heard, and did not apprehend it at first. Those that would improve in knowledge must be made sensible of their ignorance.

Having thus prepared them for it, he gives them the reddition of the parable of the sower, as we had it before in Matthew. Let us only observe here,

1. That in the great field of the church, the word of God is dispensed to all promiscuously. The sower soweth the word, ver. 11. sows it at a venture, beside all waters, upon all sorts of ground, Isa. xxii. 20. not knowing where it will light, or what fruit it will bring forth. He scatters it in order to the increase of it. Christ was a while sowing himself when he went about teaching and preaching; now he sends his ministers, and sows by their hand: Ministers are sowers; they have need of the skill and discretion of the husbandmen, Isa. xxviii. 21, 25, 26. they must not observe winds and clouds, Ecc. xi. 4—6. and must look up to God, who gives seed to the sower, 2 Cor. ix. 10.

2. That of the many that hear the word of the gospel, and read it, and are conversant with it, there are comparatively, but few that receive it, so as to bring forth the fruits of it; here is but one in four that comes to good. It is sad to think, how much of the precious seed of the word of God is lost, and sown in vain; but there is a day coming when lost sermons must be accounted for: Many that have heard Christ himself preach in their streets, yet will hereafter be bidden to depart from him: those therefore who place all their religion in hearing, as if that alone would save them, do but deceive themselves, and build their hope upon the sand, James i. 22.

3. Many are much affected with the word for the present, that yet receive no abiding benefit by it. The motions of soul they have, answerable to what they hear, are but a mere flash, like the crackling of thorns under a pot. We read of hypocrites, that delight to know God's ways, Isa. lviii. 2. of Herod, that he heard John gladly, Mark vi. 20. and of others, that they rejoiced in his light, John v. 35. and of those to whom Ezekiel was a lovely song, Ezek xxxii. 32. and those represented here by the stony ground, received the word with gladness, and yet came to nothing.

4. The reason why the word doth not leave commanding, abiding impressions upon the minds of people, is because their hearts are not duly disposed and prepared to receive it: the fault is in themselves, not in the word; some are careless forgetful hearers, and these get no good at all by the word; it comes in at one ear, and goes out at the other; others have their convictions overpowered by their corruptions, and they lose the good impressions the word has made upon them, so that they get no abiding good by it.

5. The devil is very busy about loose, careless hearers; as the fowls of the air go about the seed that lies above ground; when the heart, like the highway, is unploughed, unhumbled, when it lies common, to be trodden on by every passenger, as theirs that are great company-keepers, then the devil is like the fowls, he comes swiftly, and carries away the word ere we are aware: When therefore these fowls come down upon the sacrifices, we should take care, as Abraham did, to drive them away, Gen. xv. 21. that though we cannot keep them from hovering over our heads, we may not let them nestle in our hearts.

6. Many that are not openly scandalized, so as to throw off their profession, as they on the stony ground did, yet have the efficacy of it secretly choked and stifled, so that it comes to nothing: they continue in a barren, hypocritical profession, which brings nothing to pass, and so go down as certainly, though more plausibly, to hell.

7. Impressions that are not deep, will not be durable, but will wear off in suffering, trying times; like footsteps, on the sand of the sea, which are gone the next high tide of persecution; when that iniquity doth abound, the love of many to the ways of God waxeth cold; many that keep their profession in fair days, lose it in a storm, and do as those that go to sea only for pleasure, come back again when the wind rises. It is the ruin of hypocrites, that they have no root; they do not act from a living, fixed principle; they do not mind heart-work, and, without that, religion is nothing; for he is the Christian, that is one inwardly.

8. Many are hindered from profiting by the word of God, by their abundance of the world: Many a good lesson of humility, charity, self-denial, and heavenly mindedness, is choked and lost by that prevailing complacency in the world, which they are apt to have on whom it smiles. Thus many professors, that otherwise might have come to something, prove like Pharaoh's lean kine, and thin cars.

9. Those that are not encumbered with the cares of the world, and the deceitfulness of riches, yet may lose the benefit of their profession by the lusts of other things; this is added here in Mark. by the desires which are about other things; so Dr. Hammond; an inordinate appetite towards those things that are pleasing to sense, or to the fancy. Those that have but little of the world, may yet be ruined by an indulgence of the body.

10. Fruit is the thing that God expects and requires from those that enjoy the gospel: fruit according to the seed; a temper of mind, and a course of life agreeable to the gospel; Christian graces daily exercised, Christian duties daily performed. This is fruit, and it will abound to our account.

Lastly, No good fruit is to be expected but from good seed. If the seed be sown on good ground; if the heart be humble, and holy, and heavenly, there will be good fruit, and it will abound; sometimes even to an hundred-fold, such a crop as Isaac reaped, Gen. xxvii. 12.

21. ¶ And he said unto them, Is a candle brought to be put under a bushel, or under a bed? and not to be set on a candlestick? 22. For there is nothing hid, which shall not be manifested; neither was any thing kept secret, but that it should come abroad. 23. If any man have ears to hear, let him hear. 24. And he saith unto them, Take heed what ye hear: with what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you: and unto you that hear shall more be given. 25. For he that hath, to him shall be given: and he that hath not, from him shall be taken even that which he hath. 26. ¶ And he said, So is the kingdom of God, as if a man should cast seed into the ground; 27. And should sleep, and rise night and day, and the seed should spring and grow up, he knoweth not how. 28. For the earth bringeth forth fruit of herself; first the blade, then the ear, after that the full corn in the ear. 29. But when the fruit is brought forth, immediately he putteth in the sickle, because the harvest is come. 30. ¶ And he said, Whereunto shall we liken the kingdom of God? or with what comparison shall we compare it? 31. It is like a grain of mustard seed, which, when it is sown in the earth, is less than all the seeds that be in the earth: 32. But when it is sown, it groweth up, and becometh greater than all herbs, and shooteth out great branches; so that the fowls of the air may lodge under the shadow of it. 33. And with many such parables spake he the word unto them, as they were able to hear it. 34. But without a parable spake he not unto them: and when they were alone, he expounded all things to his disciples.

The lesson which our Saviour designs to teach us here by parables, and figurative expressions, are these,

First, That those that are good, ought to consider the obligations they are under to do good; that is, as in the parable before, to bring forth fruit. God expects a grateful return of his gifts to us, and a useful improvement of his gifts in us; for, ver. 21. Is a candle brought to be put under a bushel, or under a bed? No, but that it may be set on a candlestick. The apostles were ordained to receive the gospel, not for themselves only, but for the good of others, to communicate it to them. All Christians, as they have received the gift, must minister the same. Note, (1.) Gifts and graces make a man as a candle; the candle of the Lord, Prov. xx. 27. lighted by the Father of lights; the most eminent are but candles, poor lights, compared with the Sun of righteousness. A candle gives light but a little way, and but a little while, and is easily blown out, and continually burning down, and wasting. (2.) Many that are lighted as candles, put themselves, under a bed, or under a bushel: they do not manifest grace themselves, nor minister grace to others; they have estates and do no good with them; have their limbs and senses, wit and learning perhaps, but nobody is the better for them: they have spiritual gifts, but do not use them; like a taper in an urn, they burn to themselves. (3.) Those who are lighted as candles, should set themselves on a candlestick; that is, should improve all opportunities of doing good, as those that were made for the glory of God, and the service of the communities they are members of; we are not born for ourselves.

And the reason given for this is, because there is nothing hid which shall not be manifested, which should not be made manifest, so it might better be read, ver. 22. There is no treasure of gifts and graces lodged in any but with design to be communicated; nor was the gospel made a secret to the apostles to be concealed, but that it should come abroad, and be divulged to all the world. Though Christ expounded the parables to his disciples privately, yet it was with design to make them the more publicly useful; they were taught that they might teach; and it is a general rule, that the ministration of the Spirit is given to every man to profit withal, not himself only but others also.

Secondly, It concerns those who hear the word of the gospel to mark what they hear, and to make a good use of it, because their weal or woe depends upon it; what he had said before, he saith again, If any man hath ears to hear, let him hear, ver. 23. Let him give the gospel of Christ a fair hearing; but that is not enough, it is added, ver. 24. Take heed what you hear, and give a due regard to that which you do hear, consider what you hear, so Dr. Hammond reads it. Note, What we hear doth us no good, unless we consider it; those especially that are to teach others, must themselves be very observant of the things of God; must take notice of the message they are to deliver, that they may be exact. We must likewise take heed what we hear, by proving all things, that we may hold fast that which is good: We must be cautious, and stand upon our guard, lest we be imposed upon. To enforce this caution, consider,

1. As we deal with God, God will deal with us. So Dr. Hammond explains these words, with what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you. If you be faithful servants to him, he will be a faithful master to you: with the upright he will shew himself upright.

2. As we improve the talents we are intrusted with, we shall increase them; if we make use of the knowledge we have for the glory of God, and the benefit of others, it shall sensibly grow as stock in trade doth by being turned. Unto you that hear, shall more be given; to you that have, it shall be given, ver. 25. If the disciples deliver that to the church, which they have received of the Lord, they shall be led more into the secret of the Lord. Gifts and graces multiply by being exercised; and God has promised to bless the hand of the diligent.

3. If we do not use, we lose what we have, from him that hath not, that doth no good with what he has, and so has it in vain, is as if he had it not, shall be taken even that he has. Burying a talent is the betraying of a trust, and amounts to forfeiture; and gifts and graces rust for want of wearing.

Thirdly, The good seed of the gospel sown in the world, and sown in the heart, doth by degrees produce wonderful effects, but without noise, ver. 26, &c. So is the kingdom of God; so is the gospel when it is sown, and received as seed in good ground.

(1.) It will come up; though it seem lost and buried under the clods, it will find or make its way through them. The seed cast into the ground will spring. Let but the word of Christ have the place it ought to have in a soul, and it will shew itself, as the wisdom from above doth in a good conversation. After a field is sown with corn, how soon is the surface of it altered, how gay and pleasant doth it look when it is covered with green?

(2.) The husbandmen cannot describe how it comes up; it is one of the mysteries of nature; it springs up, and grows he knows not how, ver. 27. He sees it is grown, but he cannot tell in what manner it grew, or what was the cause and method of its growth. Thus we know not how the Spirit, by the word makes a change in the heart, no more than we can account for the blowing of the wind which we hear the sound of, but cannot tell whence it comes, or whither it goes. Without controversy, great is the mystery of godliness; how God manifested in the flesh came to be believed on in the world, 1 Tim. iii. 16.

(3.) The husbandman, when he hath sown the seed, doth nothing towards the springing up of it. He sleeps and rises night and day; goes to sleep at night, gets up in the morning, and perhaps never so much as thinks of the corn he hath sown, or ever looks upon it, but follows his pleasures, or other business, and yet the earth brings forth fruit of itself, according to the ordinary course of nature, and by the concurring power of the God of nature. Thus the word of grace, when it is received in faith, is in the heart a work of grace, and the preachers contribute nothing to it. The Spirit of God is carrying it on when they sleep, and can do no business, Job xxxiii. 15, 16. or when they rise to go about other business. The prophets do not live for ever, but the word which they preached is doing its work, when they are in their graves; Zecl. i. 5, 6. The dew by which the seed is brought up tarrieth not for man, nor waiteth for the sons of men, Mic. 5.—7.

(1.) It grows gradually, first the blade, then the ear, after that the full corn in the ear, ver. 28. When it is springing up, it will go forward, nature will have its course, and so will grace; Christ's interest, both in the world and in the heart, is and will be a growing interest; and though the beginning be small, the latter end will greatly increase. Though thou sowest not that body that shall be, but bare grain, yet God will give to every seed its own body; though at first it is but a tender blade, which the frost may nip, or the foot may crush, yet it will increase to the ear, to the full corn in the ear. Natura nil facit per saltum. God carries on his work insensibly, and without noise, but insuperably, and without fail.

(5.) It comes to perfection at last, ver. 29. When the fruit is brought forth, i. e. when it is ripe, and ready to be delivered into the owner's hand, then he puts in the sickle. This intimates, (1.) That Christ now accepts the services which are done to him by an honest heart, from a good principle; from the fruit of the gospel taking place, and working in the soul, Christ gathers in a harvest of honour to himself. See John iv. 35. (2.) That he will reward them in eternal life. When those that receive the gospel aright, have finished their course, the harvest comes when they shall be gathered as wheat into God's barn, Matt. xiii. 30. as a shock of corn in his season.

Fourthly, The work of grace is small in its beginnings, but comes to be great and considerable at last, ver. 30, 31, 32. Whereunto shall I liken the kingdom of God, as now to be set up by the Messiah? How shall I make you to understand the designed method of it? Christ speaks as one considering and consulting with himself, how to illustrate it with an apt similitude. With what comparison shall we compare it? Shall we fetch it from the motions of the sun, or the revolutions of the moon? No, the comparison is borrowed from this earth, it is like a grain of mustard-seed; he had compared it before to seed sown, here to that seed, intending thereby to shew,

1. That the beginnings of the gospel kingdom would be very small, like that which is one of the least of all seeds. When a Christian church was sown in the earth for God, it was all contained in one room, and the number of the names was but 120, Acts i. 15, as the children of Israel, when they went down into Egypt, were but seventy souls. The work of grace in the soul, is at first but the day of small things; a cloud no bigger than a man's hand. Never were there such great things undertaken by such an inconsiderable handful, as that of the discipling of the nations by the ministry of the apostles; nor a work that was to end in such great glory, as the work of grace, raised from such weak and unlikely beginnings. Who hath begotten me these?

2. That the perfection of it will be very great. When it grows up, it becomes greater than all herbs. The gospel kingdom in the world shall increase, and spread to the remotest nations of the earth, and shall continue to the latest ages of time. The church hath shot out great branches, strong ones, spreading far, and fruitful. The work of grace in the soul has mighty products, now while it is in its growth; but what will it be, when it is perfected in heaven? The difference between a grain of mustard-seed, and a great tree, is nothing to that between a young convert on earth, and a glorified saint in heaven. See John xii. 24.

After these parables thus instanced in, the historian concludes with this general account of Christ's preaching, that with many such parables he spake the word unto them, ver. 33, probably designing to refer us to the larger account of the parables of this kind which we had before, Matt. xiii. He spake in parables, as they were able to hear them; he fetched his comparisons from those things that were familiar to them, and level to their capacity, and delivered them in plain expressions, in condescension to their capacity; though he did not let them into the mystery of the parables, yet his manner of expression was easy, and such as they might hereafter recollect to their edification. But for the present, without a parable spake he not unto them, ver. 34. The glory of the Lord was covered with a cloud, and God speaks to us in the language of the sons of men, that though not at first, yet by degrees, we may understand his meaning; the disciples themselves understood those sayings of Christ afterwards, which at first they did not rightly take the sense of. But these parables he expounded to them, when they were alone. We cannot but wish we had had that exposition, as we had of the parable of the sower; but it was not so needful; because, when the church should be enlarged, that would expound these parables to us without any more ado.

35. And the same day, when the even was come, he saith unto them, Let us pass over unto the other side. 36. And when they had sent away the multitude, they took him even as he was in the ship. And there were also with him other little ships. 37. And there arose a great storm of wind, and the waves beat into the ship, so that it was now full. 38. And he was in the hinder part of the ship, asleep on a pillow: and they awake him, and say unto him, Master, carest thou not that we perish? 39. And he arose, and rebuked the wind, and said unto the sea, Peace, be still. And the wind ceased, and there was a great calm. 40. And he said unto them, Why are ye so fearful, how is it that ye have no faith? 41. And they feared exceedingly, and said one to another, What manner of man is this, that even the wind and the sea obey him?

This miracle which Christ wrought for the relief of his disciples, in stilling the storm, we had before, Matt. viii. 23, &c. but it is here more fully related. Observe,

1. It was the same day that he had preached out of a ship, when the even was come, ver. 35. When he had been labouring in the word and doctrine all day, instead of reposing himself, he exposeth himself, to teach us not to think of a constant remaining rest till we come to heaven. The end of a toil may perhaps be but the beginning of a toss. But observe, the ship that Christ made his pulpit is taken under his special protection, and though in danger, cannot sink. What is used for Christ, he will take particular care of.

2. He himself proposed putting to sea at night, because he would lose no time. Let us pass over to the other side, for we shall find, in the next chapter, he has work to do there. Christ went about doing good, and no difficulties in his way should hinder him; thus industrious we should be in serving him, and our generation, according to his will.

3. They did not put to sea till they had sent away the multitude, i. e. had given to each of them that which they came for, and answered all their requests; for he sent none home complaining that they had attended him in vain. Or, they sent them away with a solemn blessing, for Christ came into the world not only to pronounce, but to command, and to give the blessing.

4. They took him: even as he was, i. e. in the same dress that he was in when he preached, without any cloke to throw over him, which he ought to have had to keep him warm, when he went to sea at night, especially after preaching. We must not from hence infer that we may be careless of our health, but we may learn hence, not to be over-nice and solicitous about the body.

5. The storm was so great, that the ship was full of water, ver. 37. not by springing a leak, but perhaps partly with the shower, for the word here used signifies a tempest of wind with rain; however, the ship being little, the waves beat into it so that it was full. Note, It is no new thing for that ship to be greatly hurried and endangered, in which Christ and his disciples, Christ and his name and gospel, are embarked.

6. There were with him other little ships, who, no doubt, shared in the distress and danger. Probably those little ships carried those who were desirous to go along with Christ, for the benefit of his preaching and miracles on the other side. The multitude went away when he put to sea, but some there were that would venture upon the water with him. Those follow the Lamb aright, that follow him wherever he goes. And those that hope for a happiness in Christ, must be willingly to take their lot with him, and run the same risks that he runs. One may boldly and cheerfully put to sea in Christ's company, yea though we foresee a storm.

7. Christ was asleep in this storm, and here we are told that it was in the hinder part of the ship, the pilot's place; he lay at the helm, to imitate that, as Mr. George Herbert expresses it,

*When winds and waves assault my keel,
He doth preserve it, he doth steer,
Even when the boat seems most to reel.
Storms are the triumphs of his art;
Though he may close his eyes, yet not his heart.*

He had a pillow there, such a one as a fisherman's ship would furnish him with. And he slept, to try the faith of his disciples, and to stir up prayer: and upon the trial, their faith appeared weak, and their prayers strong. Note, Sometimes, when the church is in a storm, Christ seems as if he were asleep, unconcerned in the troubles of his people, and regardless of their prayers, and doth not presently appear for their relief. Verily he is a God that hideth himself, Isa. xlv. 15. But as when he tarrys, he doth not tarry, Job. ii. 3. So when he sleeps he doth not sleep; the keeper of Israel doth not so much as slumber, Psalm cxxi. 3, 4. he slept, but his heart was awake, as the spouse, Cant. v. 2.

8. His disciples encouraged themselves with their having his presence, and thought it the best way to improve that, and appeal to that, and ply the ear of prayer, rather than their other ours. Their confidence lay in this, that they had their Master with them; and the ship that was Christ in it, though it may be tossed, it cannot sink; the bush that has God in it, though it may burn, shall not consume. Caesar encouraged the master of the ship, that had him on board, with Cæsarem vehis & fortunam Cæsaris. They awoke Christ. Had not the necessity of the case called for it, they would not have stirred up, or awoke their Master till he had pleased, Cant. ii. 7. but they knew he would forgive them this wrong. When Christ seems as if he slept in a storm, he is awaked by the prayers of his people; when we know not what to do, our eye must be to him, 2 Chron. xx. 12. at our wit's end, but not at our faith's end, while we have such a Saviour to go to. Their address to Christ is here expressed very emphatically, Master, carest thou not that we perish? I confess this sounds somewhat harsh rather like chiding him for sleeping, than begging him to awake; I know no excuse for it, but the great familiarity which he was pleased to admit them into, and the freedom he allowed them; and the present distress they were in, which put them into such a fright that they knew not what they said. They do Christ a deal of wrong, who suspect him to be careless of his people in distress. The matter is not so; he is not willing that any should perish, much less any of his little ones, Matt. xviii. 14.

9. The word of command with which Christ rebuked the storm we have here, and had not in Matthew, ver. 39. He says, Peace, be still, ὤψῃσθε, be silent, be dumb, let not the wind any longer roar, nor the sea rage. Thus he stills the noise of the sea, the noise of her waves; a particular emphasis is laid upon the noisiness of them, Psalm lxxv. 7. and Psalm xciii. 3, 4. The noise is threatening and terrifying, let us hear no more of it. This is, (1.) A word of command to us; when our wicked hearts are like the troubled sea, which cannot rest, Isa. lvii. 20. When our passions are up, and are unruly, think we hear the law of Christ saying, be silent, be dumb. Think not confusedly, speak not unadvisedly; but be still. (2.) A word of comfort to us, that be the storm of trouble never so loud, never so strong, Jesus Christ can lay it with a word's speaking. When without are fightings, and within are fears, and the spirits are in tumult, Christ can create the fruit of the lips, peace. If he say, Peace, be still, there is a great calm presently. It is spoken of as God's prerogative to command the seas, Isa. lvii. 15. Jer. xxxi. 35. By this therefore Christ proves himself to be God. He that made the seas, can make them quiet.

10. The reproof Christ gave them for their fears, is here carried further than in Matthew; there it is, Why are ye fearful? Here, Why are ye so fearful? Though there may be cause for some fear, yet not for fear to such a degree as this. There it is, O ye of little faith, here it is, How is it that you have no faith? Not that the disciples were without faith. No, they believed that Jesus is the Christ the Son of God; but at this time their fears prevailed so that they seemed to have no faith at all. It was out of the way when they had occasion for it, and so it was as if they had not had it. How is it, that in this matter ye have no faith? That you think I would not come in with seasonable and effectual relief? Those may suspect their faith, who can entertain such a thought as that Christ cureth not though his people perish, and Christ justly takes it ill.

Lastly, The impression this miracle made upon the disciples is here differently expressed. In Matthew it is said, the men marvelled; here it is said, they feared greatly. They feared a great fear; so the original reads it. Now their fear was rectified by their faith. When they feared the winds and the seas, it was for want of the reverence they ought to have for Christ: But now they saw a demonstration of his power over them, they feared them less, and him more. They feared lest they had offended Christ by their unbelieving fears, and therefore studied now to give him honour. They had feared the power and wrath of the Creator in the storm, and that fear had torment and amazement in it; but now they feared the power and grace of the Redeemer in the calm, they feared the Lord and his goodness, and it had pleasure and satisfaction in it; and by it they gave glory to Christ, as Jonah's mariners, who, when the sea ceased from her raging, feared the Lord exceedingly, and offered a sacrifice unto the Lord, Jon. i. 16. This sacrifice they offered to the honour of Christ, they said, What manner of man is this? Surely more than a man, for even the winds and the seas obey him.

CHAP. V.

In this chapter we have, (1.) Christ's casting the legion of devils out of the man possessed, and suffering them to enter into the swine, ver. 1—20. (2.) Christ's healing the women with the bloody issue in the way as he was going to raise Jairus's daughter to life, v. 21—43. These three miracles we had the story of before, Matt. viii. 28, &c. and Matt. ix. 18, &c. but more fully related here.

1. AND they came over unto the other side of the sea, into the country of the Gadarenes. 2. And when he was come out of the ship, immediately there met him out of the tombs, a man with an unclean spirit, 3. Who had his dwelling among the tombs; and no man could bind him, no, not with chains: 4. Because that he had been often bound with fetters and chains, and the chains had been plucked asunder by him, and the fetters broken in pieces; neither could any man tame him. 5. And always, night and day, he was in the mountains, and in the tombs, crying and cutting himself with stones. 6. But when he saw Jesus afar off, he ran and worshipped him, 7. And cried with a loud voice, and said, What have I to do with thee, Jesus, thou Son of the most high God? I adjure thee by God, that thou torment me not. 8. (For he said unto him, Come out of the man, thou unclean spirit.) 9. And he asked him, What is thy name? And he answered, saying, My name is Legion: for we are many. 10. And he besought him much, that he would not send them away out of the country. 11. Now there was there nigh unto the mountains, a great herd of swine feeding. 12. And all the devils besought him, saying, Send us into the swine, that we may enter into them. 13. And forthwith Jesus gave them leave. And the unclean spirits went out, and entered into the swine: and the herd ran violently down a steep place into the sea, (they were about two thousand) and were choked in the sea. 14. And they that fed the swine fled, and told it in the city, and in the country. And they went out to see what it was that was done. 15. And they come to Jesus, and see him that was possessed with the devil, and had the legion, sitting and clothed, and in his right mind: and they were afraid. 16. And they that saw it told them how it befel to him that was possessed with the devil, and also concerning the swine. 17. And they began to pray him to depart out of their coasts. 18. And when he was come into the ship, he that had been possessed with the devil prayed him that he might be with him. 19. Howbeit Jesus suffered him not, but saith unto him, Go home to thy friends, and tell them how great things the Lord hath done for thee, and hath had compassion on thee. 20. And he departed, and began to publish in Decapolis how great things Jesus had done for him: and all men did marvel.

We have here an instance of Christ's dispossessing the strong man armed, and dispossessing of him as he pleased, to make it appear he was stronger than he. This he did when he was come to the other side, whither he went through a storm, and his business there was to rescue this poor creature out of the hands of Satan, and when he had done that he returned. Thus he came from heaven to earth, and returned in a storm to redeem a remnant of mankind out of the hands of the devil, though but a little remnant, and did not think his pains ill bestowed.

In Matthew they were said to be two possessed with devils, here it is said to be a man possessed with an unclean spirit. If there were two there was one, and Mark doth not say there was but one, so that this difference cannot give us any just offence; it is likely one of them was much more remarkable than the other, and said what was said. Now observe here,

1. The miserable condition that this poor creature was in; he was under the power of an unclean spirit, the devil got possession of him, and the effect of it was not, as in many, a silent melancholy, but a raging frenzy; he was raving mad; his condition seems to have been worse than any of those that were possessed that were Christ's patients.

1. He had his dwelling among the tombs, among the graves of dead people. Their tombs were out of the cities, in desolate places, Job iii. 14, which gave the devil great advantage: For near to him that is alone. Perhaps the devil drove him to the tombs, to make people fancy that the souls of the dead were turned into demons, and did what mischief was done, so to excuse themselves from it. The touch of a grave was polluting, Numb. xix. 16. The unclean spirit drives people into that company that is defiling, and so keeps possession of them. Christ, by rescuing souls out of Satan's power, saves the living from among the dead.

2. He was very strong and ungovernable. No man could bind him, as it is requisite both for their own good and for the safety of others that those who are distracted should be. Not only corals would not hold him, but chains and fetters of iron would not, ver. 3, 4. The case of such is very deplorable that need to be thus bound, and of all miserable people in this world they are most to be pitied; but his case was worst of all in whom the devil was so strong that he could not be bound. This sets forth the sad condition of those souls in which the devil has dominion; those children of disobedience in whom that unclean spirit works: some notoriously wilful sinners are like this madman: all are herein like the horse and the mule, that they need to be held in with bit and bridle, but some are like the wild ass, that will not be so held. The commands and curses of the law are as chains and fetters to restrain sinners from their wicked courses, but they break those bands in sunder, and it is an evidence of the power of the devil in them.

3. He was a terror and torment to himself, and to all about him, ver. 5. The devil is a cruel master to those that are led captive by him, a perfect tyrant; this wretched creature was night and day in the mountains and in the tombs, crying, and cutting himself with stones, either bemoaning his own deplorable case, or in a rage and indignation against heaven. Men in rages often wound and destroy themselves; what is a man when reason is dethroned and Satan enthroned? The worshippers of Baal in their fury cut themselves, like this madman in his. The voice of God is, Do thyself no harm; the voice of Satan is, Do thyself all the harm thou canst; yet God's word is despised and Satan's regarded. Perhaps his cutting himself with stones was only cutting his feet with the sharp stones, he ran barefoot upon.

2. His application to Christ, ver. 6. When he saw Jesus afar coming ashore, he ran and worshipped him. He usually ran upon others with rage, but he ran to Christ with reverence. This was done by an invisible hand of Christ which could not be done with chains and fetters, his fury was all on a sudden curbed: Even the devil, in this poor creature, was forced to tremble before Christ and bow to him: or rather, the poor man came and worshipped Christ in a sense of the need he had of his help, the power of Satan in and over him being for this instant suspended.

3. The word of command Christ gave to the unclean spirit to quit his possession, ver. 8. Come out of him thou unclean spirit. He made the man desirous to be relieved, when he enabled him to run and worship him, and then put forth his power for his relief: If Christ work in us heartily to pray for a deliverance from Satan, he will work for us that deliverance. Here is an instance of that power and authority with which Christ commanded the unclean spirits, and they obeyed him, chap. i. 27. He said, Come out of the man. The design of Christ's gospel is to expel unclean spirits out of the souls of people; come out of the man, thou unclean spirit, that the holy Spirit may enter, may take possession of the heart and have dominion in it.

4. The dread which the devil had of Christ. The man ran and worshipped Christ, but it was the devil in the man that cried with a loud voice, (making use of the poor man's tongue) What have I to do with thee? ver. 7. just as that other unclean spirit, chap. i. 24. (1.) He calls God the most high God, above all other gods. By the name of Elian, the most High, God was known among the Phenicians and the other nations that bordered upon Israel, and by that name the devil calls him. (2.) He owns Jesus to be the Son of God. Note, It is no strange thing to hear the best words drop from the worst mouths. There is such a way of saying this as none can attain to but by the Holy Ghost, 1 Cor. xii. 3, yet it may be said after a sort by the unclean spirit. There is no judging of men by their loose sayings, but by their fruits ye shall know them. Piety from the teeth outward is an easy thing. The most fair-spoken hypocrite cannot say better than to call Jesus the Son of God, and yet that the devil did. (3.) He disowns any design against Christ; What have I to do with thee? I have no need of thee, I pretend to none; I desire to have nothing to do with thee; I cannot stand before thee, and would not fall. (4.) He deprecates his wrath. I adjure thee, that is, I earnestly beseech thee, by all that is sacred, I beg of thee for God's sake, by whose permission I have got possession of this man, that though thou drive me out hence, yet that thou torment me not, that thou do not restrain me from doing mischief somewhere else: though I know I am sentenced, yet let me not be sent to the chains or darkness, or hindered from going to and fro to devour.

5. The account Christ took from this unclean spirit of his name. This we had not in Matthew. Christ asked him, What is thy name? not but that Christ could call all the fallen stars as well as the morning stars by the names; but he demands this, that the standers-by might be affected with the vast numbers and power of those malignant infernal spirits, as they had reason to be, when the answer was, My name is Legion, for we are many; a legion of soldiers among the Romans consisted, some say, of six thousand men, others of twelve thousand and five hundred; but the number of a legion with them, no more than of a regiment with us, was not always the same. Now this intimates that the devils, the infernal powers, are, (1.) Military powers; a legion is a number of soldiers in arms. The devils war against God and his glory, Christ and his gospel, men and their holiness and happiness. They are such as we are to resist and wrestle against, Eph. vi. 12. (2.) That they are numerous he owns, or rather he boasts that we are many, as if he hoped to be too many for Christ himself to deal with. What multitudes of apostate spirits were there, and all enemies to God and man; when here were a legion posted to keep garrison in one poor wretched creature against Christ? Many there be that rise up against us. (3.) That they are unanimous; they are many devils, and yet but one legion engaged in the same wicked cause; and therefore that evil of the Pharisees which supposed Satan to cast out Satan, and to be divided against himself, was altogether groundless. It was not one of this legion that betrayed the rest, for they all said as one man, What have I to do with thee? (4.) That they are very powerful; who can stand before a legion? We are not a match for our spiritual enemies in our own strength; but in the Lord, and in the power of his might, we shall be able to stand against them, though there are legions of them. (5.) That there is order among them, as there is in a legion; there are principalities and powers, and rulers of the darkness of this world, which supposeth there are those of a lower rank: the devil and his angels, the dragon and his. The prince of the devils and his subjects: which makes those enemies the more formidable.

6. The request of this legion, that Christ would suffer them to go into a herd of swine that was feeding nigh unto the mountains, ver. 11. those mountains which the demons haunted, ver. 5. Their request was, (1.) That he would not send them away out of the country, ver. 10. Not only that he would not commit them or confine them to their infernal prison, and so torment them before the time; but that he would not banish them that country, as justly he might, because in this poor man they had been such a terror to it and done so much mischief. They seem to have had a particular affection for that country, or rather a particular spite to it; and to have liberty to walk to and fro through the rest of the earth will not serve, (Job i. 7.) unless the range of those mountains be allowed them for their pasture, (Job xxxix. 8.) but why would they abide in that country? Grotius saith, because in that country there were many apostate Jews who had thrown themselves out of the covenant of God, and had thereby given Satan power over them. And some suggest, that having by experience got the knowledge of the dispositions and manners of the people of that country, they could the more effectually do them mischief by their temptations. (2.) That he would suffer them to enter into the swine; by destroying which they hoped to do more mischief to the souls of all the people in the country, than they could by entering into the body of any particular person, which therefore they did not ask leave to do, for they knew Christ would not grant it.

7. The permission Christ gave them to enter into the swine, and their immediate destruction thereby. He gave them leave, ver. 13. he did not forbid or restrain them, let them do as they had a mind. Thus he would let the Gadarenes see what powerful spiteful enemies devils are, that they might thereby be induced to make him their friend, who alone was able to control and conquer them, and had made it appear he was so. Immediately the unclean spirits entered into the swine, which by the law were unclean creatures, and naturally love to wallow in the mire, and therefore the fittest place for them. Those that, like the swine, delight in the mire of sensual lusts are fit habitations for Satan, and are like Babylon, the hold of every foul spirit, and a cage of every unclean and hateful bird, Rev. xviii. 2, as pure souls are habitations of the holy Spirit. The consequent of the devils entering into the swine was, that they all ran mad presently, and ran headlong into the adjoining sea, where they were all drowned, to the number of two thousand. The man they possessed did only cut himself, for God had said, He is in your hands, only save his life. But thereby it appeared, that if he had not been so restrained the poor man would have drowned himself. See how much we are indebted to the providence of God, and the ministration of good angels, for our preservation from malignant spirits.

8. The report of all this dispersed through the country immediately. They that led the swine hastened to the owners to give an account of their charge, ver. 14. This drew the people together to see what was done; And, (1.) When they saw how wonderfully the poor man was cured, they from thence conceived a veneration for Christ, ver. 15. They saw him that was possessed with the devil, and knew him well enough by the same token, that they had many a time been frightened at the sight of him; and were now as much surprised to see him sitting clothed and in his right mind; when Satan was cast out, he came to himself and was his own man presently. Note, those who are grave and sober, and live by rule and with consideration, thereby make it appear that by the power of Christ the devil's power is broken in their souls. The sight of this made them afraid, i. e. it astonished them and forced them to own the power of Christ, and that he is worthy to be feared. But, (2.) When they found that their swine were lost, they thence conceived a dislike of Christ, and wished to have rather his room than his company; they prayed him to depart out of their coasts, for they think not any good he can do them sufficient to make them amends for the loss of so many swine, fat swine it may be, and ready for the market. Now the devils had what they would have, for by no handle do those evil spirits more effectually manage sinful souls than by that of the love of the world. They were afraid of some further punishment if Christ should tarry among them, whereas if they would but part with their sins he had life and happiness for them; but being loth to quit either their sins or their swine, they chose rather to abandon their Saviour. Thus they do who rather than let go a base lust will throw away their interest in Christ and their expectations from him. They should rather have argued, if he has such power as this over devils and all creatures, it is good having him our friend; if the devils have leave to tarry in our country, (ver. 10.) let us entreat him to tarry in it too, who alone can control them. But instead of this they wished him further off; such strange misconstructions do carnal hearts make of the just judgments of God; instead of being by them driven to him as they ought, they set him at so much a greater distance; though he that said, Proxime me not, and I will do you no hurt, Jer. xxv. 6.

9. An account of the cure of the poor man that was delivered after his recovery. (1.) He desired that he might go along with Christ, ver. 18, perhaps, not for fear lest the evil spirit should again seize him; or rather that he might receive instruction from him, being unwilling to stay among those heathenish people that desired him to depart. Those that are freed from the evil spirit cannot but covet acquaintance and fellowship with Christ. (2.) Christ would not suffer him to go with him lest it should savour of ostentation, and to let him know that he could both protect and instruct him at a distance. And besides he had other work for him to do, he must go home to his friends and tell them what great things the Lord had done for him, the Lord Jesus had done; that Christ might be honoured, and his neighbours and friends might be edified, and invited to believe in Christ. He must take particular notice rather of Christ's pity than of his power, for that is it which especially he glories in; he must tell them what compassion the Lord had on him in his misery. (3.) The man in a transport of joy proclaimed it all the country over what great things Jesus had done for him, ver. 20. This is a debt we owe both to Christ and to our brethren, that he may be glorified and they edified. And see what was the effect of it, all men did marvel, but few went any further. Many that cannot choose but wonder at the works of Christ, yet do not as they ought, wonder after him.

21. ¶ And when Jesus was passed over again by ship unto the other side, much people gathered unto him: and he was nigh unto the sea. 22. And, behold, there cometh one of the rulers of the synagogue, Jairus by name; and when he saw him, he fell at his feet, 23. And besought him greatly, saying, My little daughter lieth at the point of death: I pray thee, come and lay thy hands on her, that she may be healed, and she shall live. 24. And Jesus went with him; and much people followed him, and thronged him. 25. And a certain woman, which had an issue of blood twelve years, 26. And had suffered many things of many physicians, and had spent all that she had, and was nothing bettered, but rather grew worse, 27. When she heard of Jesus, came in the press behind, and touched his garment. 28. For she said, If I may touch but his clothes, I shall be whole. 29. And straightway the fountain of her blood was dried up; and she felt in her body that she was healed of that plague. 30. And Jesus, immediately knowing in himself that virtue had gone out of him, turned him about in the press, and said, Who touched my clothes? 31. And his disciples said unto him, Thou seest the multitude thronging thee, and sayest thou, Who touched me? 32. And he looked round about to see her that had done this thing. 33. But the woman fearing and trembling, knowing what was done in her, came and fell down before him, and told him all the truth. 34. And he said unto her, Daughter, thy faith hath made thee whole; go in peace, and be whole of thy plague.

The Gadarenes having desired Christ to leave their country, he did not stay to trouble them long, but presently went by water, as he came, back to the other side, ver. 21. and there much people gathered to him. Note, if there be some that reject Christ, yet there are others that receive him and did him welcome. A despised gospel will cross the water, and go where it will have better entertainment. Now among the many that applied themselves to him,

1. Here is one that comes openly to beg a cure for a sick child; and it is no less a person than one of the rulers of the synagogues, one that presided in the synagogue-worship, or as some think one of the judges of the consistory court, which was in every city, consisting of twenty-three. He was not named in Matthew, he is here, Jairus, or Jair, (Judg. vi. 33.) He addressed himself to Christ, though a ruler, with great humility and reverence; when he saw him he fell at his feet, giving honour to him as one really greater than he appeared to be; and with great importunity, he besought him greatly, as one in earnest, as one that not only valued the mercy he came for, but that knew he could obtain it no where else. The case is this, he has a little daughter about twelve years old, the darling of the family, and she lies a dying; but he believes if Christ will but come and lay his hands upon her, she will return even from the gates of the grave. He said at first when he came, she lies a dying, so Mark, but afterwards upon fresh information sent him, he saith, she is even now dead, so Matthew; but still prosecutes his suit; see Luke viii. 42-49. Christ readily agreed and went with him, ver. 24.

2. Here is another that comes clandestinely to steal a cure (if I may so say) for herself, and she got the relief she came for. This cure was wrought by the way, as he was going to raise the ruler's daughter, and was followed by a crowd. See how Christ improved his time, and lost none of the precious moments of it. Mark, of his discourses, and some of his miracles are dated by the way side; we should be doing good, not only when we sit in the house, but when we walk by the way, Deut. i. 7. Now observe,

1. The piteous case of this poor woman. She had a constant issue of blood upon her for twelve years, which had thrown her, no doubt, into great weakness, had imbibed the comfort of her life, and threatened to be her death in a little time, she had had the best advice of physicians she could get, and had made use of the many medicines and motions they prescribed; as long as she had any thing to give them, they had kept her in hopes they could cure her, but now she had spent all she had among them, they gave her up as incurable. See here, (1.) That skin for skin, and all that a man has will he give for life and health; she spent all she had upon physicians. (2.) It is ill with those patients, whose physicians are their worst disease; that suffer by their physicians, instead of being relieved by them. (3.) Those that are not bettered by medicines, commonly grow worse, and the disease gets the more ground. (4.) It is usual that people do not apply themselves to Christ, till they have tried in vain all other helps; and if of them, as certainly they will, physicians of no value. And he will be found a sure refuge, even to those who make him their last refuge.

2. The strong faith that she had in the power of Christ to heal her; she said within herself, though it did not appear she was encouraged by any preceding instance to it, If I may but touch his clothes, I shall be whole, ver. 28. She believed that it was a property by virtue derived from God, but as the Son of God by a virtue inherent in himself. Her case was such, as she could not in modesty tell him publicly, as others did their grievances, and therefore a private cure was what she wished for, and her faith was suited to her case.

3. The wonderful cure effected by it. She came in the crowd behind him, and with much ado got to touch his garment, and immediately she felt the cure wrought, ver. 29. The flux of blood was dried up, and she felt herself perfectly well all over her, as well as ever she was in her life, in an instant; by this it appears, that the cure was altogether miraculous; for those that in such cases are cured by natural means recover their strength slowly and gradually, and not per saltum, but as for God his work is perfect. Note, Those whom Christ heals of the disease of sin, that bloody issue, cannot but experience in themselves an universal change for the better.

4. Christ's inquiry after his concealed patient, and the encouragement he gave her upon the discovery of her. Christ knew in himself that virtue had gone out of him, ver. 30. He knew it not by any deficiency of spirits through the exhausting of this virtue, but rather by an agility of spirits in the exerting of it, and the minute and inseparable pleasure he had in doing good. And being desirous to see his patient, he asked not in displeasure as one affronted, but in tenderness as one concerned, who touched my clothes? The disciples, not without a shew of rudeness and indecency, almost ridiculed his question, ver. 31. The multitude thronged thee, and sayest thou, Who touched me? As if it had been an impertinent question. Christ passed by the affront, and looks round to see her that had done this thing, not that he might blame her for her presumption, but that he might commend and encourage her faith; and by his own act and deed might warrant and confirm the cure; and ratify to her that which he had surreptitiously obtained. He needed not that any should inform him, for he had presently his eye upon her. Note, As secret acts of sin, so secret acts of faith are known to the Lord Jesus and are under his eye. If believers derive virtue from Christ never so closely, he knows it and is pleased with it. The poor woman here-upon presented herself to the Lord Jesus, ver. 33, fearing and trembling, not knowing how he would take it. Note, Christ's patients are often trembling, when they have reason to be triumphing. She might have come boldly, knowing what was done in her, yet knowing that, she fears and trembles. It was a surprise and was not yet, as it should have been, a pleasing surprise. However, she fell down before him. Note, There is nothing better for those that fear and tremble, than to throw themselves at the feet of the Lord Jesus; to humble themselves before him, and refer themselves to him. And she told him all the truth. Note, We must not be ashamed to own the secret transactions between Christ and our souls; but when called to it, mention to his praise, and others' encouragement, what he has done for our souls, and the experience we have had of healing virtue derived from him. And the consideration of this, that nothing can be hid from Christ, should engage us to confess all to him. And see what an encouraging word he gave her, ver. 34. Daughter, thy faith hath made thee whole. Note, Christ puts honour upon faith, because faith gives honour to Christ. But see how, what is done by faith, on earth, is ratified in heaven: Christ saith, Be whole of thy disease. Note, If our faith sets the seal of its amen to the power and promise of God, saying, so it is, and so let it be to me; God's grace will set the seal of its amen to the prayers of faith, saying, so be it, and so it shall be to thee. And therefore, go in peace; be well satisfied that thy cure is honestly come by, is effectually wrought, and take the comfort of it. Note, They that by faith are healed of their spiritual diseases, have reason to go in peace.

35. ¶ While he yet spake, there came from the ruler of the synagogue's house, certain which said, Thy daughter is dead: why troublest thou the Master any further? 36. As soon as Jesus heard the word that was spoken, he saith unto the ruler of the synagogue, Be not afraid, only believe. 37. And he suffered no man to follow him, him, save Peter, and James, and John the brother of James. 38. And he cometh to the house of the ruler of the synagogue, and seeth the tumult, and them that wept and wailed greatly. 39. And when he was come in, he saith unto them, Why make ye this ado, and weep? the damsel is not dead, but sleepeth. 40. And they laughed him to scorn. But when he had put them all out, he taketh the father and the mother of the damsel, and them that were with him, and entereth in where the damsel was lying. 41. And he took the damsel by the hand, and said unto her, Talitha cumi; which is, being interpreted, Damsel, (I say unto thee) arise. 42. And straightway the damsel arose and walked; for she was of the age of twelve years. And they were astonished with a great astonishment. 43. And he charged them straitly that no man should know it; and commanded that something should be given her to eat.

Diseases and deaths came into the world by the sin and disobedience of the first Adam; but by the grace of the second Adam both are conquered; Christ having healed an incurable disease, here goes on to triumph over death, as in the beginning of the chapter he had triumphed over an outrageous devil.

1. The melancholy news is brought to Jairus, that his daughter is dead, and therefore if Christ be as other physicians, he comes too late; while there is life there is hope, and room for the use of means, but when life is gone it is past recall; Why troublest thou the Master any further? ver. 35. Ordinarily the proper thought in this case is, the matter is determined, the will of God is done, and I submit, I acquiesce; The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away. While the child was alive, I fasted and wept; for I said, Who can tell but God will yet be gracious to me, and the child shall live; but now it is dead, wherefore should I weep? I shall go to it, but it shall not return to me: and with such words we should quiet ourselves at such a time, that our souls may be as a child that is weaned from his mother; but here the case was extraordinary; the death of the child doth not as usually put an end to the narrative.

2. Christ encourageth the afflicted father yet to hope, that his application to Christ on the behalf of his child should not be in vain. Christ had staid to work a cure by the way, but he shall be no sufferer by that, nor loser by others gain. Be not afraid, only believe. We may suppose Jairus at a pause, whether he should ask Christ to go on or no; but have we not as much occasion for the grace of God, and his consolations, and consequently of the prayers of our ministers and Christian friends, when death is in the house, and when sickness is. Christ therefore soon determines this matter, be not afraid that my coming will be to no purpose, only believe that I will make it turn to a good account. Note, (1.) We must not despair concerning our relations that are dead, nor sorrow for them as those that have no hope. See what is said to Rachel that refused to be comforted concerning her children upon presumption that they were not; Refrain thy voice from weeping, and thine eyes from tears, for there is hope in thine end that thy children shall come again. Jer. xxxi. 16, 17. Therefore fear not, faint not. (2.) Faith is the only remedy against disquieting grief and fear at such a time: let that silence them, only believe. Keep up a confidence in Christ, and a dependence upon him, and he will do what is for the best. Believe the resurrection, and then be not afraid.

3. He went with a select company to the house where the dead child was. He had, by the crowd that attended him, given advantage to the poor women he last healed, and having done that, now he shook off the crowd; and suffered no man to follow him, to follow with him, so the word is, but his three bosom disciples, Peter, and James, and John; a competent number to be witnesses of the miracle, but not such a number as that his taking them with him might look like vain-glory.

4. He raised the dead child to life; the circumstances of the narrative here, are much the same as we had them in Matthew; only here we may observe,

1. That the child was extremely well beloved, for the relations and neighbours wept and wailed greatly. It is very afflictive when that which is come forth like a flower is so soon cut down, and withereth before it is grown up; when that grieves us of which we said, This same shall comfort us.

2. That it was evident beyond dispute that the child was really and truly dead. Their laughing Christ to scorn, for saying, She is not dead but sleepeth, though an ill thing, serves for the proof of this.

3. That Christ put those out as unworthy to be witnesses of the miracle who were noisy in their sorrow, and were so ignorant in the things of God, as not to understand him when he spoke of death as a sleep, or so scornful as to ridicule him for it.

4. That he took the parents of the child to be witnesses of the miracle, because in it he had an eye to their faith, and designed it for their comfort who were the true, for they were the silent mourners.

5. That Christ raised the child to life by a word of power, which is recorded here, and recorded in Syriac, the language in which Christ spoke, for the greater certainty of the thing; Talitha cumi: Damsel I say unto thee, arise. Dr. Lightfoot saith, it was customary with the Jews when they gave physic to one that was sick, they said, Arise from thy disease, meaning we wish thou mayest arise; but to one that was dead, Christ said, Arise from the dead, meaning I command that thou arise; nay, there is more in it, the dead have not power to arise, therefore power goes along with this word to make it effectual. Da quod jubes, & jube quod vis. Christ works while he commands, and works by the command, and therefore may command what he pleaseth, even the dead to arise. Such is the gospel-call to those who are by nature dead in trespasses and sins, and can no more rise from that death by their own power, than this child could; and yet that word, Awake and arise from the dead, is neither vain, nor in vain, when it follows immediately, Christ shall give thee life, Ephes. v. 14. It is by the word of Christ that spiritual life is given, I said unto thee, Live; Ezek. xvi. 6.

6. That the damsel, as soon as life returned, arose and walked, ver. 42. Spiritual life will appear by our rising from the bed of sloth and carelessness, and our walking in a religious conversation; our walking up and down in Christ's name and strength; even from those that are of the age of twelve years, it may be expected that they should walk as those whom Christ has raised to life, otherwise than in the native vanity of their minds.

7. That all who saw it, and heard of it, admired the miracle and him that wrought it; They were astonished with a great astonishment. They could not but acknowledge that there was something in it extraordinary and very great, and yet they knew not what to make of it, or to infer from it. Their wonder should have worked forward to a lively faith, but it rested in a stupor or astonishment.

8. That Christ endeavoured to conceal it. He charged them straitly that no man should know it: It was sufficiently known to a competent number, but he would not have it as yet proclaimed any further; because his own resurrection was to be the great instance of his power over death, and therefore the divulging of other instances must be reserved till that great proof was given: let one part of the evidence be kept private, till the other part on which the main stress lies be made ready.

9. That Christ took care something should be given her to eat. By this it appeared that she was raised not only to life, but to a good state of health, that she had an appetite to her meat: even the new-born babes in Christ's house desire the sincere milk, 1 Pet. ii. 1, 2. And it is observable, that as Christ, when at first he had made man, presently provided food for him, and food out of the earth of which he was made, Gen. i. 29. So now when he had given a new life, he took care that something should be given to eat; for if he have given life, he may be trusted to give livelihood, because the life is more than meat, Matt. vi. 25. Where Christ hath given spiritual life, he will provide food for the support and nourishment of it unto life eternal, for he will never forsake, or be wanting to the work of his own hands.

C H A P. VI.

A great variety of observable passages we have in this chapter concerning our Lord Jesus, the substance of all which we had before in Matthew, but differs circumstances we have, which we did not there meet with. Here is, (1.) Christ contemned by his countrymen, because he was one of them, and they knew, or thought they knew his original, ver. 1—6. (2.) The just power he gave his apostles over unclean spirits, and an account given of their negotiation, ver. 7—13. (3.) A strange notion which Herod and others had of Christ, upon which occasion, we have the story of the martyrdom of John Baptist, ver. 14—29. (4.) Christ's retirement into a desert place with his disciples; the crowds that followed him thither to receive instruction from him, and his feeding five thousand of them with five loaves and two fishes, ver. 30—44. (5.) Christ's walking upon the sea to his disciples, and the abundance of curse he wrought on the other side the water, ver. 45—56.

1. AND he went out from thence, and came into his own country; and his disciples follow him. 2. And when the sabbath-day was come, he began to teach in the synagogue: and many hearing him were astonished, saying, From whence hath this man these things? and what wisdom is this which is given unto him, that even such mighty works are wrought by his hands? 3. Is not this the carpenter, the son of Mary, the brother of James, and Joses, and of Juda, and Simon? and are not his sisters here with us? And they were offended at him. 4. But Jesus said unto them, A prophet is not without honour, but in his own country, and among his own kin, and in his own house. 5. And he could there do no mighty work, save that he laid his hands upon a few sick folk, and healed them. 6. And he marvelled because of their unbelief. And he went round about the villages, teaching.

Here, 1. Christ makes a visit to his own country, the place not of his birth, but of his education; that was Nazareth, where his relations were. He had been in danger of his life among them, Luke iv. 29. and yet he came among them again; so strangely doth he wait to be gracious, and seek the salvation of his enemies; whither he went, though it was into danger, his disciples followed him, ver. 1. for they had left all to follow him whithersoever he went.

2. There he preached in their synagogue on the sabbath-day, ver. 2. It seems, there was not such flocking to him there as in other places, so that he had no opportunity of preaching till they came together on the sabbath-day; and then he expounded a portion of Scripture with great clearness. In religious assemblies on sabbath-days, the word of God is to be preached according to Christ's example. We give glory to God by receiving instruction from him.

3. They could not but own that which was very honourable concerning him. (1.) That he spoke with great wisdom, and that wisdom was given to him, for they knew he had no learned education. (2.) That he did mighty works, did them with his own hands for the confirming of the doctrine he taught; they acknowledged the two great proofs of the divine original of his gospel, the divine wisdom that appeared in the contrivance of it, and the divine power that was exerted for the ratifying and recommending of it; and yet, though they could not deny the premises, they would not admit the conclusion.

4. They studied to disparage him, and to raise prejudices in the minds of people against him notwithstanding: All this wisdom, and all these mighty works, shall be of no account, because he had had a home education, had never travelled, nor been at any university, or bred up at the feet of any of their doctors, ver. 3. Is not this the carpenter? In Matthew they upbraided him with being the carpenter's son, his supposed father Joseph being of that trade: But it seems they could say further, Is not this the carpenter? Our Lord Jesus, it is probable, employing himself in that business with his father, before he entered upon his public ministry, at least sometimes in journey-work. (1.) He would thus humble himself, and make himself of no reputation, as one that had taken upon him the form of a servant, and came to minister. Thus low did our Redeemer stoop, when he came to redeem us out of our low estate. (2.) He would thus teach us to abhor idleness, and to find ourselves something to do in this world; and rather to take up with mean and laborious employments, and such as no more is to be got by but a bare livelihood, than indulge ourselves in sloth. Nothing is more pernicious for young people, than to get a habit of sauntering. The Jews had a good rule for this, that their young men who were designed for scholars, yet were bred up to some trade, as Paul was a tent-maker, that they might have some business to fill up their time with; and, if need were, to get their bread with. (3.) He would thus put an honour upon despised mechanics, and encourage those who eat the labour of their hands, though great men look upon them with contempt.

Another thing they upbraided him with, was the meanness of his relations, he is the son of Mary; his brethren and sisters are here with us; we know his family and kindred; and therefore, though they were astonished at his doctrine, ver. 2. yet they were offended at his person, ver. 2. were prejudiced prejudiced against him, and looked upon him with contempt: and for that reason would not receive his doctrine, though never so well recommended. May we think that if they had not known his pedigree, but he had dropped among them from the clouds without father, without mother, and without descent, they would have entertained him with any more respect? Truly, no; for in Judea, where this was not known, that was made an objection against him, John ix. 29. As for this fellow we know not from whence he is. Obdurate unbelief will never want excuses.

5. Let us see how Christ bore this contempt.

1. He partly excused it, as a common thing, and what might be expected, though not reasonably or justly, ver. 4. A prophet is not despised any where but in his own country. Some exception there may be to this rule; doubtless many have got over this prejudice, but ordinarily it holds good, that ministers are seldom so acceptable and successful in their own country as among strangers; familiarity in the younger years breeds a contempt, and the advancement of one that was an inferior begets envy, and men will hardly set those among the guides of their souls, whose fathers they were ready to set with the dogs of their flock; in such a case therefore it must not be thought hard; it is common treatment, it was Christ's, and wisdom is profitable to direct to other foil.

2. He did some good among them, notwithstanding the slights they put upon him, for he is kind even to the evil and unthankful: he laid his hands upon a few sick folks and healed them. Note, It is generous, and becoming the followers of Christ, to content themselves with the pleasure and satisfaction of doing good, though they be unjustly denied the praise of it.

3. Yet he could there do no such a mighty work, at least not so many as in other places, because of the unbelief that prevailed among the people, by reason of the prejudices which their leaders instilled into them against Christ, ver. 5. It is a strange expression, as if unbelief tied the hands of omnipotence itself; he would have done as many miracles there as he had done elsewhere, but he could not, because people would not make application to him, nor sue for his favours; he could have wrought them, but they forfeited the honour of having them wrought for them. Note, By unbelief and contempt of Christ men stop the current of his favours to them, and put a bar in their own door.

4. He marvelled because of their unbelief. ver. 6. We never find Christ wondering but at the faith of the Gentiles that were strangers, as the centurion, Matt. viii. 10. and the woman of Samaria, and at the unbelief of Jews that were his own countrymen. Note, The unbelief of those that enjoy the means of grace is a most amazing thing.

5. He went round about the villages, teaching. If we cannot do good where we would, we must do it where we can, and be glad if we may have any opportunity, though but in the villages, of serving Christ and souls. Sometimes the gospel of Christ finds better entertainment in the country villages, where there is less wealth and pomp, and mirth, and subtilty, than in the populous cities.

7. ¶ And he called unto him the twelve, and began to send them forth by two and two; and gave them power over unclean spirits: 8. And commanded them that they should take nothing for their journey, save a staff only; no scrip, no bread, no money in their purse; 9. But be shod with sandals; and not put on two coats. 10. And he said unto them, In what place soever ye enter into an house, there abide till ye depart from that place. 11. And whosoever shall not receive you, nor hear you, when ye depart thence, shake off the dust under your feet for a testimony against them. Verily I say unto you, It shall be more tolerable for Sodom and Gomorrah in the day of judgment, than for that city. 12. And they went out, and preached that men should repent. 13. And they cast out many devils, and anointed with oil many that were sick, and healed them.

Here is, 1. The commission given to the twelve apostles, to go preach and work miracles; it is the same which we had more largely, Matth. x. Mark doth not name them here, as Matthew doth, because he had named them before, when they were first called into fellowship with him, chap. iii. 16. Hitherto they had been conversant with Christ, and had sitted at his feet, had heard his doctrine and seen his miracles; and now he determines to make some use of them; they received that they might give, had learned that they might teach; and therefore now he began to send them forth. They must not always be studying in the academy to get knowledge, but they must go preach in the country, to do good with the knowledge they have got. Though they were not as yet so well accomplished as they will be hereafter, yet according to their present ability and capacity they must be set to work, and make further improvements afterwards. Now observe here,

1. That Christ sent them forth by two and two; This Mark takes notice of: They went two and two to a place, that out of the mouth of two witnesses every word might be established; and that they might be company for one another when they were among strangers, and might strengthen the hands and encourage the hearts one of another; might help one another if any thing should be amiss, and keep one another in countenance: Every common soldier has his comrade; and it is an approved maxim, Two are better than one. Christ would thus teach his ministers to associate, and both lend and borrow help.

2. That he gave them power over unclean spirits: He commissioned them to attack the devil's kingdom, and impowered them as a specimen of their breaking his interest in the souls of men by their doctrine, to cast him out of the bodies of those that were possessed. Dr. Lightfoot suggests, that they cured diseases and cast out the devils by the Spirit, but preached that only which they had learned from the mouth of Christ.

3. That he commanded them not to take provisions along with them, neither ricals nor money, that they might appear wherever they came to be poor men, men not of this world, and therefore might with the better grace call people off from it to another world. When afterwards he bade them take purse and scrip, Luke xxii. 35. that did not intimate (as Dr. Lightfoot observes) that his care of them was abated to what it had been; but that they should meet with worse times and worse entertainment than they met with at their first mission. In Matthew and Luke they are forbidden to take slaves with them, i. e. fighting slaves; but here in Mark they are bid to take nothing save a staff only, i. e. a walking staff, such as pilgrims carried. They must not put on shoes, but sandals only, which were only the soles of shoes tied under their feet, or like pumps or slippers: they must go in the readiest plainest dress they could, and must not so much as have treasures; for their stay abroad would be short, they must return before winter, and what they wanted, those they preached to would cheerfully do to supply them with.

4. He directed them whatever city they came to, to make that to be their head-quarters, which had proved to be their first quarters, ver. 10. there abide till ye depart from that place. And since you know you come on an errand sufficient to make you welcome, have that civility for your friend that first invited you, as to believe they do not think you backstome.

5. He pronounceth a very heavy doom upon those that rejected the gospel they preached, ver. 11. Whosoever shall not receive you, or will not so much as hear you, depart thence, if one will not, another will, and shake off the dust under your feet for a testimony against them. Let them know that they have had a fair offer of life and happiness made them, which if they had but that since they have refused it, they cannot expect ever to have another; let them take up with their own dust, for so shall their doom be. That dust, like the dust of Egypt, (Exod. ix. 9.) shall turn into a plague to them: and their condemnation in the great day will be more intolerable than that of Sodom; for the angels were sent to Sodom and were abused there, yet that would not bring on so great a guilt and so great a ruin as the contempt and abuse of the apostles of Christ, that bring with them the offers of gospel grace.

2. The apostles acting in pursuance of their commission: Though they were conscious to themselves of great weakness, and needed no peculiar advantage by it, yet in obedience to their Master's order, and in dependence upon his strength, they went out as Men, not knowing whether they went. Observe here,

1. The doctrine they preached: they preached that men should repent, ver. 12. That they should change their minds and reform their lives, in consideration of the near approach of the kingdom of the Messiah. Note, The great design of gospel-preachers, and the great tendency of gospel-preaching, should be to bring people to repentance, to a new heart, and a new way. They did not amaze people with curious speculations, nor told them they must repent of their sins and turn to God.

2. The miracles they wrought. The power Christ gave them over unclean spirits was not inefficual, nor did they receive it in vain but used it, for they cast out many devils, ver. 13. And they anointed with oil many that were sick, and healed them: Some think this oil was used medicinally, according to the custom of the Jews: but I rather think it was used as a sign of miraculous healing, by the appointment of Christ, though not mentioned; and it was afterwards used by those elders of the church, to whom by the Spirit was given the gift of healing, James v. 14. It is our duty, here and therefore probable there, that anointing the sick with oil, is approved to that extraordinary power which is long ceased, and therefore that sign should cease with it.

14. And king Herod heard of him; (for his name was spread abroad:) and he said, That John the Baptist was risen from the dead, and therefore mighty works do shew forth themselves in him. 15. Others said, that it is Elias. And others said, That it is a prophet, or as one of the prophets. 16. But when Herod heard thereof, he said, it is John, whom I beheaded: he is risen from the dead. 17. For Herod himself hath sent forth and laid hold upon John, and bound him in prison for Herodias' sake, his brother Philip's wife: for he had married her. 18. For John had said unto Herod, It is not lawful for thee to have thy brother's wife. 19. Therefore Herodias had a quarrel against him, and would have killed him; but she could not: 20. For Herod feared John, knowing that he was a just man and an holy, and observed him; and when he heard him, he did many things, and heard him gladly. 21. And when a convenient day was come, that Herod on his birth-day made a supper to his lords, high captains, and chief estates of Galilee: 22. And when the daughter of the said Herodias came in, danced, and pleased Herod and them that sat with him, the king said unto the damsel, Ask of me whatsoever thou wilt, and I will give it thee. 23. And he sware unto her, Whatsoever thou shalt ask of me, I will give it thee, unto the half of my kingdom. 24. And she went forth, and said unto her mother, What shall I ask? And she said, The head of John the Baptist. 25. And she came in straightway with haste unto the king, and asked, saying, I will that thou give me by and by in a charger the head of John the Baptist. 26. And the king was exceeding sorry; yet for his oath's sake, and for their sakes which sat with him, he would not reject her. 27. And immediately the king sent an executioner, and commanded his head to be brought: and he went and beheaded him in the prison, 28. And brought his head in a charger, and gave it to the damsel: and the damsel gave it to her mother. 29. And when his disciples heard of it, they came and took up his corpse, and laid it in a tomb.

Here is, 1. The wild notions that the people had concerning our Lord Jesus, ver. 15. His own countrymen could believe nothing great concerning him, because they knew his poor kindred; but others that were not under the power of that prejudice against him, yet were willing to believe any thing rather than the truth, that he was the Son of God and the true Messiah: They said, he is Elias whom they expected, or he is a prophet, one of the Old Testament prophets raised to life, and returned to this world; Or, as one of the prophets, a prophet now newly raised up equal to those under the Old Testament.

2. The opinion of Herod concerning him. He heard of his name and fame, of what he said and what he did; and he said, It is certainly John Baptist, ver. 14. As sure as we are here, It is John whom I beheaded. ver. 16. He is risen from the dead; and though while he was with us he did no miracle, yet having removed for a while to another world, he is come again with greater power, and now mighty works do shew forth themselves in him.

Note, (1.) Where there is an idle faith, there is commonly a working fancy. The people said, it is a prophet risen from the dead; Herod said it is John Baptist risen from the dead. It seems by this, that the rising of a prophet from the dead, to do mighty works was a thing expected, and was thought neither impossible nor improbable, and it was now readily suspected when it was not true; but afterwards when it was true concerning Christ, and a truth undeniably evidenced, yet then it was obstinately gainsaid and denied. Those who most wilfully disbelieve the truth, are commonly, most credulous of errors and fancies.

(2.) They who fight against the cause of God, will find themselves baffled, even when they think themselves conquerors; they cannot gain their point, for the word of the Lord endures for ever. They who rejoiced when the witnesses were slain, fretted as much, when in three or four days they rose again in their successors, Rev. xi. 10, 11. The impatient, unreformed sinner, that escapeth the sword of Jehu, shall Elisha slay.

(3.) A guilty conscience needs no accuser or tormenter but itself. Herod charges himself with the murder of John, which perhaps no one else dare charge him with, I beheaded him; and the terror of it made him imagine that Christ was John risen: He feared John while he lived, and now when he thought he had got clear of him, fears him ten times worse when he is dead: One had as good be haunted with ghosts and furies, as with the horrors of an accusing conscience; those therefore who would keep an undisturbed peace, must keep an undefiled conscience, Acts xxiv. 16.

(4.) There may be the terrors of strong conviction, where there is not the truth of a saving conversion. This Herod that had this notion concerning Christ, afterwards sought to kill him, Luke xiii. 31. and did set him at nought, Luke xxiii. 11. So that he will not be persuaded, though it be by one risen from the dead; no, not by a John the Baptist risen from the dead.

3. A narrative of Herod's putting John Baptist to death, which is brought in upon this occasion, as it was in Matthew: And here we may observe,

1. The great value and veneration which Herod had sometimes had for John Baptist, which is related only by this evangelist, ver. 20. Where we see what a great way a man may go towards grace and glory, and yet come short of both and perish eternally.

(1.) He feared John, knowing that he was a just man, and an holy. It is possible that a man may have a great reverence for good men, and especially for good ministers; yea, and for that in them that is good, and yet himself be an ill man. Observe, (1.) John was a just man and an holy; to make a complete good man there is necessary both justice and holiness.

(2.) Herod knew this, not only by common fame but by personal acquaintance with him. Those that have but little justice and holiness themselves may yet discern it with respect in others. And (3.) He therefore feared him, he honoured him. Holiness and justice command veneration, and many that are not good themselves, yet have respect for those that are.

(2.) He observed him; he sheltered him from the malice of his enemies; so some understand it: Or rather he had a regard to his exemplary conversation, and took notice of that in him that was praise-worthy, and commended it in the hearing of those about him; he made it appear that he observed what John said and did.

(3.) He heard him preach; which was great condescension, considering how mean John's appearance was. To hear Christ himself preach in our streets, will be but a poor plea in the great day, Luke xiii. 26.

(4.) He did many of those things which John in his preaching taught him. He was not only a hearer of the word, but in part a doer of the work. Some sins which John in his preaching reproveth, he forsook, and some duties he bound himself to; but it will not suffice to do many things, unless we have respect to all the commandments.

(5.) He heard him gladly. He did not hear him with terror, as Felix heard Paul, but heard him with pleasure. There is a fleshy joy, which an hypocrite may have in hearing the word; Ezekiel was to his hearers a lovely song, Ezek. xxxiii. 32. and the stony ground received the word with joy, Luke viii. 13.

2. John's faithfulness to Herod in telling him of his faults. Herod had married his brother Philip's wife, ver. 17. All the country no doubt cried shame on him for it, and reproveth him for it; but John reproveth him, told him plainly, It is not lawful for thee to have thy brother's wife. This was Herod's own iniquity which he could not leave, when he did many things that John taught him; and therefore John tells him of this particularly. Though he were a king he would not spare him, no more than Elijah did Ahab when he said, Hast thou killed, and also taken possession? Though John had an interest in him, and he might fear this plain-dealing would lose him his interest, yet he reproveth him; for faithful are the wounds of a friend, Prov. xxvii. 6. and though there are some swine that will turn again and rend those that cast pearls before them, yet ordinarily, he that rebuketh a man (if the person reproveth has any thing of the understanding of a man) afterwards shall find more favour than he that flattereth with his tongue, Prov. xxviii. 23. Though it was dangerous to offend Herod, and much more to offend Herodias, yet John would run the hazard rather than be wanting in his duty. Note, Those ministers that would be found faithful in the work of God, must not be afraid of the face of man. If we seek to please men, further than is for their spiritual good, we are not the servants of Christ.

(3.) The malice which Herodias bore to John for this, ver. 19. She had a quarrel with him, and would have killed him; but when she could not obtain that, she got him committed to prison, ver. 17. Herod respected him, till he touched him in his Herodias. Many that pretend to honour prophesying are for smooth things only, and love good preaching, if it keeps far enough from their beloved sin: but if that be touched they cannot bear it. No marvel if the world hate those who testify of it that its works are evil. But ministers had better that sinners should persecute them now for their faithfulness, than curse them eternally for their unfaithfulness.

4. The plot laid to take off John's head; and I am apt to think Herod was himself in the plot, notwithstanding his pretences to be displeased and surprised, and that the thing was concerted between him and Herodias; for it is said to be, when a convenient day was come, ver. 21. fit for such a purpose. (1.) There must be a ball at court upon the king's birth-day, and a supper prepared for his lords, high captains, and chief estates of Galilee. (2.) To grace the solemnity the daughter of Herodias must dance publicly, and Herod must take on him to be wonderfully charmed with her dancing, and if he be, they that sit with him cannot but in compliment to him be so too. (3.) The king hereupon must make her an extravagant promise to give her whatever she would ask, even to the half of the kingdom; and yet that if rightly understood, would not have reached the end designed, for John Baptist's head was worth more than his whole kingdom. This promise is bound with an oath, that no room might be left to fly off from it: He saure to her, whatsoever thou shalt ask, I will give. I can scarce think he would have made such an unlimited promise but that he knew what she would ask. (4.) She being instructed by Herodias her mother, asked the head of John Baptist; and she must have it brought her in a charger, as a pretty thing for her to play with, ver. 24, 25. And there must be no delay, no time lost, she must have it by and by. (5.) Herod granted it, and the execution was done immediately while the company were together, which we can scarce think the king would have done if he had not determined the matter before. But he takes on him, (1.) To be very backward to it, and that he would not for all the world have done it if he had not been surprised into such a promise. The king was exceeding sorry, that is, he seemed to be so, he said he was so, he looked as if he had been so; but it was all sham and grimace, he was really pleased that he had found a pretence to get John out of the way. Qui nescit dissimulare, nescit regnare. And yet he was not without sorrow for it; he could not do it but with great regret and reluctancy; natural conscience will not suffer men to sin easily; the very commission of it is vexatious, what then will the reflection of it be? (2.) He takes on him to be very sensible of the obligation of his oath; whereas if the damsel had asked but a fourth part of his kingdom, I doubt not but he would have found out a way to evade his oath. The promise was rashly made, and could not bind him to do an unrighteous thing. Sinful oaths must be repented of, and therefore not performed, for repentance is the undoing of what we have done amiss as far as is in our power. When Theodosius the emperor was urged by a suitor with a promise: he answered, I said it, but did not promise it if it be unjust. If we may suppose that Herod knew nothing of the design when he made that rash promise, it is likely he was hurried into the doing of it by those about him only to carry on the humour; for he did it for their sakes who sat with him, whose company he was proud of, and therefore would do any thing to gratify them. Thus do princes make themselves slaves to those whose respects they covet, and both value and secure themselves by. None of Herod's subjects stood in more awe of him than he did of his lords, high captains, and chief estates. The king sent an executioner, a soldier of his guard. Bloody tyrants have executioners ready to obey their most cruel and unrighteous decrees. Thus Saul has a Doeg at hand, to fall upon the priests of the Lord, when his own footmen declined it.

5. The effect of this is, (1.) That Herod's wicked court is all in triumphs, because this prophet tormented them; the head is made a present of to the damsel, and by her to her mother, ver. 28. (2.) That John Baptist's sacred college is all in tears, the disciples of John little thought of this; but when they heard of it, they came and took up the neglected corpse, and laid it in a tomb; where Herod, if he had pleased might have found it, when he frightened himself with the fancy that John Baptist was risen from the dead.

30. And the apostles gathered themselves together unto Jesus, and told him all things, both what they had done, and what they had taught. 31. And he said unto them, Come ye yourselves apart into a desert place, and rest a while; for there were many coming and going, and they had no leisure so much as to eat. 32. And they departed into a desert place by ship privately. 33. And the people saw them departing and many knew him, and ran a foot thither out of all cities, and outwent them, and came together unto him. 34. And Jesus when he came out saw much people, and was moved with compassion towards them, because they were as sheep not having a shepherd: and he began to teach them many things. 35. And when the day was now far spent, his disciples came unto him and said, This is a desert place, and now the time is far passed: 36. Send them away, that they may go into the country round about, and into the villages, and buy themselves bread: for they have nothing to eat. 37. He answered and said unto them, Give ye them to eat. And they say unto him, Shall we go and buy two hundred penny-worth of bread, and give them to eat? 38. He saith unto them, How many loaves have ye; go and see. And when they knew, they say, Five, and two fishes. 39. And he commanded them to make all sit down by companies upon the green grass. 40. And they sat down in ranks by hundreds and by fifties. 41. And when he had taken the five loaves, and the two fishes, he looked up to heaven, and blessed, and brake the loaves, and gave them to his disciples, to set before them: and the two fishes divided he among them all. 42. And they did all eat, and were filled. 43. And they took up twelve baskets full of the fragments, and of the fishes. 44. And they that did eat of the loaves were about five thousand men.

In these verses we have,

First, The return of the apostles to Christ whom he had sent, ver. 7. to preach and work miracles. They had dispersed themselves into several quarters of the country for some time, but when they had made good their several appointments, by consent they gathered themselves together to compare notes, and came to Jesus, the centre of their unity, to give him an account of what they had done pursuant to their commission; as the servant that was sent to invite to the feast, and had received answers from the guests, came and shewed his lord all these things, so did the apostles here, they told him all things, both what they had done, and what they had taught. Ministers are unaccountable both for what they do and for what they teach, and must both watch over their own souls, and watch for the souls of others, as those that must give account, Heb. xiii. 17. Let them not either do any thing, or teach any thing but what they are willing should be related and repeated to the Lord Jesus. It is a comfort to faithful ministers when they can appeal to Christ concerning their doctrine and manner of life both which perhaps have been misrepresented by men; and he gives them leave to be free with with him, and to lay open their case before him, to tell him all things, what treatment they have met with, what success and what disappointment.

Secondly, The tender care Christ took for their repose, after the fatigue they had, ver. 31. He said unto them, perceiving them to be almost spent, and out of breath, Come ye yourselves apart, into a desert place, and rest a while. It should seem that John's disciples came to Christ with the mournful tidings of their master's death, much about the same time that his own disciples came to him with the report of their negociation. Note, Christ takes cognizance of the frights of some, and the toils of others of his disciples, and provides suitable relief for both, rest for those that are tired, and refuge for those that are terrified. With what kindness and compassion doth Christ say to them, come and rest! Note, The most active servants of Christ cannot be always upon the stretch of business, but have bodies that require some relaxation, some breathing-time; we shall not be able to serve God without ceasing day and night, till we come to heaven, where they never rest from praising him, Rev. iv. 8. And the Lord is for the body, considers its frailty, and not only allows it time for rest, but puts it in mind of resting. Come, my people, enter thou into thy chambers. Return to thy rest. And those that work diligently and faithfully may cheerfully retire to rest. The sleep of the labouring man is sweet. But observe, (1.) Christ calls them to come themselves apart, for if they had any body with them they would have something to say or something to do for their good; if they must rest they must be alone. (2.) He invites them not to some pleasant country-seat, where there were fine buildings and fine gardens, but into a desert place, where the accommodations were very poor, and which was fitted by nature only, not by art for quietness and rest. But it was of a piece with all the other circumstances he was in; no wonder that he who had but a ship for his preaching place had but a desert for his resting place. (3.) He calls them only to rest a while, they must not expect to rest long, only to get breath, and then go to work again. There is no remaining rest for the people of God till they come to heaven. (4.) The reason given for this is not so much because they had been in constant work, but because they now were in a constant hurry; so that they had not their work in any order; for there were many coming and going, and they had no leisure so much as to eat. Let but proper time be set and kept for every thing, and a great deal of work may be done with a great deal of ease; but if people are continually coming and going, and no rule or method be observed, a little work will not be done without a great deal of trouble. (5.) They withdrew accordingly by ship, not crossing the water, but making a coasting voyage to the desert of Bethsaida, ver. 32. Going by water was much less toilsome than going by land would have been. They went away privately that they might be by themselves. The most public persons cannot but wish to be private sometimes.

Thirdly, The diligence of the people to follow him. It was rude to do so, when he and his disciples were desirous for such good reasons to retire, and yet they are not blamed for it, nor bid to go back, but bid welcome: Note, A failure in good manners will easily be excused in those who follow Christ, if it be but made up in a fulness of good affections. They followed him of their own accord, without being called upon. Here is no time set, no meeting appointed, no bell tolled, yet they thus fly like a cloud, and as the doves to their windows. They followed him out of the cities, quitted their houses and shops, their callings and affairs to hear him preach. They followed him afoot, though he was gone by sea; and so to try them, seemed to put a slight upon them and to endeavour to shake them off, yet they stuck to him. They ran afoot and made such haste, as that they out-went the disciples, and came together to him with an appetite to the word of God. Nay they followed him, though it were into a desert place, despicable and inconvenient. The presence of Christ will turn a wilderness into a paradise.

Fourthly, The entertainment Christ gave them, ver. 34. When he saw much people, instead of being moved with displeasure, because they disturbed him when he desired to be private, as many a man, many a good man would have been, he was moved with compassion towards them, and looked upon them with concern, because they were as sheep having no shepherd, they seemed to be well inclined and manageable as sheep, and willing to be taught, but they had no shepherd, none to lead and guide them in the right way, none to feed them with good doctrine; and therefore in compassion to them he not only healed their sick, as it is in Matthew, but he taught them many things, and we may be sure they were all true and good, and fit for them to learn.

Fifthly, The provision he made for them all: all his hearers he generously made his guests, and treated them at a splendid entertainment: so it might truly be called, because a miraculous one.

1. The disciples moved that they should be sent home. When the day was now far spent and night drew on, they said this is a desert place, and much time is now passed: send them away to buy bread, ver. 35, 36. This the disciples suggested to Christ, but we do not find that the multitude themselves did. They did not say send us away, no not though they could not but be angry; for they esteemed the words of Christ's mouth, more than their necessary food, and forgot themselves when they were hearing him; but the disciples thought it would be a kindness to them to dismiss them. Note, Willing minds will do more and hold out longer in that which is good than one would expect from them.

2. Christ ordered that they should all be fed, ver. 37. Give ye them to eat. Though their crowding after him and his disciples hindered them from eating, ver. 31. yet he would not therefore to be even with them send them away fasting, but to teach us to be kind to those who are rude to us, he ordered provision to be made for them; that bread which Christ and his disciples took with them into the desert, that they might make a quiet meal of it for themselves, he will have them to partake of. Thus was he given to hospitality. They attended on the spiritual food of his word, and then he took care they should not want corporeal food. The way of duty, as it is the way of safety, so it is the way to supply. Let God alone to fill the pools with rain from heaven, and so to make a well even in the valley of Baca, for those that are going Zion-wards, from strength to strength, Psal. lxxxiv. 6, 7. Providence not tempted but duly trusted, never yet failed any of God's faithful servants, but has refreshed many with seasonable and surprising relief. It has often been seen in the mount of the Lord; Jehovah's Jireh, that the Lord will provide for those that wait on him.

3. The disciples objected against it as impracticable! Shall we go and buy two hundred penny-worth of bread, and give them to eat? Thus through the weakness of their faith, instead of waiting for directions from Christ, they perplex the cause with projects of their own. It was a question, whether they had two hundred pence with them, and whether the country would of a sudden afford so much bread, if they had, and whether that would suffice for so great a company; but thus Moses objected, Numb. xi. 22. Shall the flocks or herds be slain for them? Christ would let them see their folly in fore-casting for themselves, that they might put the greater value upon his provision for them.

4. Christ effected it to universal satisfaction. They had brought with them five loaves, for the victualling of their ship, and two fishes perhaps they had caught as they came along, and that is the bill of fare. This was but a little for Christ and his disciples, and yet this they must give a way as the widow her two mites, and the churches of Macedonia's deep poverty abounded in the riches of their liberality. We often find Christ entertained at other peoples' tables, dining with one friend and supping with another, but here we have him supping a great many at his own charge, which shews that when others ministered to him for their substance it was not because he could not supply himself otherwise: if he were hungry he needed not tell them, but it was a piece of humiliation he was pleased to submit to, nor was it agreeable to the intention of miracles that he should work them for himself. Observe,

1. The provision was ordinary. Here were no rarities, no varieties, though Christ if he had pleased could have furnished his table with them; but thus he would teach us to be content with food convenient for us, and not to be desirous of dainties. If we have for necessity, it is no matter though we have not for delicacy and curiosity. God in love gives meat for our hunger, but in wrath gives meat for our lusts, Psal. lxxviii. 18. The promise to them that fear the Lord is, that verily they shall be fed; he doth not say they shall be feasted. If Christ and his disciples took up with mean things, sure we may.

2. The guests were orderly: for they sat down by companies upon the green grass, ver. 39. they sat down in ranks by hundreds and by fifties, ver. 40. that the provision might the more easily and readily be distributed among them: for God is the God of order, and not of confusion. Thus care was taken that every one should have enough, and none be over-looked, nor any have more than was sitting.

3. A blessing was craved upon the meat. He looked up to heaven, and blessed. Christ did not call one of his disciples to crave a blessing but did it himself, ver. 41. And by virtue of this blessing the bread strangely multiplied, and so did the fishes, for they did all eat and were filled, though they were to the number of five thousand, ver. 42—44. This miracle was significant, and shews that Christ came into the world to be the great feeder, as well as the great healer; not only to restore, but to preserve, and nourish spiritual life: and in him there is enough for all that come to him, enough to fill the soul, to fill the treasures; none are sent empty away from Christ, but those that come to him fall of themselves.

4. Care was taken of the fragments that remained, with which they filled twelve baskets. Though Christ had bread enough at command, he would hereby teach us, not to make waste of any of God's good creatures; remembering how many there are that do want, and that we know not but we may some time or other want such fragments as we throw away.

45. And straightway he constrained his disciples to get into the ship, and to go to the other side before unto Bethsaida, while he sent away the people. 46. And when he had sent them away, he departed into a mountain to pray. 47. And when even was come, the ship was in the midst of the sea, and he alone on the land. 48. And he saw them toiling in rowing: (for the wind was contrary unto them) and about the fourth watch of the night he cometh unto them, walking upon the sea, and would have passed by them. 49. But when they saw him walking upon the sea, they supposed it had been a spirit, and cried out. 50. (For they all saw him and were troubled) And immediately he talked with them, and said unto them, Be of good cheer it is I; be not afraid. 51. And he went up unto them into the ship, and the wind ceased: and they were sore amazed in themselves beyond measure, and wondered. 52. For they considered not the miracle of the loaves, for their heart was hardened. 53. And when they had passed over, they came into the land of Genesareth, and drew to the shore. 54. And when they were come out of the ship, straightway they knew him. 55. And ran through that whole region round about, and began to carry about in beds those that were sick, where they heard he was. 56. And whithersoever he entered, into villages, or cities, or country, they laid the sick in the streets, and besought him that they might touch, if it were but the border of his garment: and as many as touched him were made whole.

This passage of story we had Matt. xiv. 22, &c. only what was there related concerning Peter is omitted here. Here we have,

First, The dispersing of the assembly. Christ constrained his disciples, to go before by ship to Bethsaida, intending to follow them, as they supposed by land. The people were loth to scatter, so that it cost him some time and pains to send them away. For now they had got a good supper, they were in no haste to leave him. But as long as we are here in this world, we have no continuing city, no not in communion with Christ. The everlasting feast is reserved for the future state.

Secondly, Christ departed into a mountain to pray. Observe, (1.) He prayed; though he had so much preaching work upon his hands yet he was much in prayer, he prayed often and prayed long, which is an encouragement to us to depend upon that intercession he is making for us at the right hand of the Father, that continual intercession. (2.) He went alone to pray; though he need not to retire for the avoiding either of distraction or of ostentation, yet to set us an example and to encourage us in our secret addresses to God he prayed alone; and for want of a closet went up into a mountain to pray. A good man is never less alone than when alone with God.

Thirdly, The disciples were in distress at sea; the wind was contrary, ver. 48. so that they toiled in rowing, and could not get forward. This was a specimen of the hardships they were to expect, when hereafter he should send them abroad to preach the gospel; it would be like sending them to sea at this time with the wind in their teeth, they must expect to toil in rowing, they must work hard to strive against so strong a stream; they must likewise expect to be tossed with waves, to be persecuted by their enemies, and by exposing them now he intended to train them up for such difficulties that they might learn to endure hardness. The church is often like a ship at sea, tossed with tempests, and not comforted; we may have Christ for us, and yet yet wind and tide against us; but it is a comfort to Christ's disciples in a storm, that their master is in the heavenly mount interceding for them.

Fourthly, Christ made them a kind visit upon the water. He could have checked the wind where he was, or have sent an angel to their relief, but he chose to help them in the most endearing manner possible, and therefore came to them himself.

1. He did not come till the fourth watch of the night, not till after three o'clock in the morning; but then he came. Note, If Christ's visits of his people be deferred long, yet at length he will come; and their extremity is his opportunity to appear for them so much the more seasonably. Though the salvation tarry yet we must wait for it, at the end it shall speak, in the fourth watch of the night, and not lie.

2. He came walking upon the waters. The sea was now tossed with waves, and yet Christ came walking upon it: for though the floods lift up their voice, the Lord on high is mightier; Psal. xciii. 3, 4. No difficulties can obstruct Christ's gracious appearances for his people when the set time is come. He will either find or force a way through the most tempestuous sea for their deliverance, Psal. xlii. 7, 8.

3. He would have passed by them; i. e. He set his face and steered his course as if he would have gone forth, and took no notice of them; this he did to awaken them to call to him. Note, Providence when it is acting designly and directly for the success of God's people, yet sometimes seems as if it were giving them the go-by, and regarding not their case. They thought he would, but we may be sure he would not have passed by them.

3. They were frightened at the sight of him, supposing him to have been an apparition; they all saw him and were troubled, ver. 50. thinking it had been some demon or evil genius that haunted them and raised this storm. We often perplex and frighten ourselves with phantasms, the creatures of our own fancy and imagination.

5. He encouraged them and silenced their fears by making himself known to them: he talked familiarly with them, saying, Be of good cheer, it is I; be not afraid. Note, 1. We know not Christ till he is pleased to reveal himself to us. It is I; I your master, I your friend, I your redeemer and saviour. It is I that came to a troublesome earth, and now to a tempestuous sea to look after you. 2. The knowledge of Christ, as he is in himself and near to us, is enough to make the disciples of Christ cheerful even in a storm and no longer fearful. If it be so, why am I thus? If it is Christ that is with thee, be of good cheer, be not afraid. Our fears are soon satisfied if our mistakes be but rectified, especially our mistakes concerning Christ. See Gen. xxi. 19. 2 Kings vi. 15, 16, 17. Christ's presence with us in a stormy day is enough to make us of good cheer, though clouds and darkness be round about us. He said It is I. He doth not tell them who he was, that needed not, they knew his voice, as the sheep knows the voice of their own shepherd, John x. 4. How readily doth the spouse say once and again, It is the voice of my beloved, Cant. ii. 8.—v. 2. He said, ego eipai, I am he; or I am; it is God's name, when he comes to deliver Israel. Exod. iii. 14. So it is Christ's, now he comes to deliver his disciples. When Christ said to those that came to apprehend him by force, I am he, they were struck down by it, John xviii. 6. When he saith to those that come to apprehend him by faith, I am he, they are raised up by it and comforted.

6. He went up to them into the ship, embarked in the same bottom with them, and so made them perfectly easy. Let them but have their Master with them and all is well. And as soon as he was come into the ship the wind ceased. In the former storm that they were in it is said, He arose and rebuked the winds, and said to the sea, Peace, be still, chap. iv. 39. but here we read of no such formal command given, only the wind ceased all of a sudden. Note, Our Lord Jesus will be sure to do his own work always effectually, though not always alike solemnly and with observation. Though we hear not the command given, yet if thus the wind cease, and we have the comfort of a calm, say, it is because Christ is in the ship, and his decree is gone forth or ever we are aware, Cant. vi. 12. When we come with Christ to heaven the wind ceaseth presently; there are no storms in the upper region.

7. They were more surprised and astonished at this miracle than did become them, and there was that of the bottom of their astonishment which was really culpable. They were fore amazed in themselves, were in perfect celesty; as if it were a new and unaccountable thing, as if Christ had never done the like before, and they had no reason to expect he should do it now; they ought to admire the power of Christ, and to be confirmed hereby in their belief of his being the Son of God: but what needed all this confusion about it? It was because they considered not the miracle of the loaves; had they given that its due weight they would not have been so much surprised at this; for his multiplying the bread was as great an instance of his power as his walking on the water. They were strangely stupid and unthinking, and their heart was hardened, or else they would not have thought it a thing incredible that Christ should command a calm. It is for want of a right understanding of Christ's former works that we are transported at the thought of his present works, as if there never were the like before.

Fifthly, When they came to the land of Genesareth, which lay between Bethsaida and Capernaum, the people bid them very welcome. The men of that place presently knew Jesus, ver. 54, and knew what mighty works he did wherever he came, what an universal healer he was; they knew likewise that he used to stay but a little while at a place, and therefore they were concerned to improve the opportunity of this kind visit he made them; they ran through that whole region round about, with all possible expedition, and began to carry about in beds those that were sick and not able to go themselves: there was no danger of their getting cold when they hoped to get a cure, ver. 55. Let him go where he would he was crowded with patients in the towns, in the cities, in the villages about the cities: they laid their sick in the streets to be in his way, and begged leave for them to touch if it were but the border of his garment, as the woman with the bloody issue did; by whom it should seem this method of application was first brought in, and as many as touched were made whole. We do not find that they were desirous to be taught by him, only to be healed. If ministers could now cure people's bodily diseases what multitudes would attend them? but it is sad to think how much more concerned the most of men are about their bodies than about their souls.

C H A P. VII.

In this chapter we have, (1.) Christ's dispute with the Scribes and Pharisees about eating meat with unwashed hands, ver. 1—13. And the needful instructions he gave to the people upon that occasion, and further explained to his disciples, ver. 14—23. (2.) His curing the woman of Canaan's daughter that was possessed, ver. 24—30. (3.) The relief of a man that was deaf and had an impediment in his speech, ver. 31—37.

1. THEN came together unto him the Pharisees, and certain of the Scribes, which came from Jerusalem. 2. And when they saw some of his disciples eat bread with defiled (that is to say, with unwashed) hands they found fault. 3. For the Pharisees, and all the Jews, except they wash their hands oft, eat not, holding the tradition of the elders. 4. And when they come from the market, except they wash, they eat not. And many other things there be, which they have received to hold, as the washing of cups, and pots, brazen vessels, and of tables. 5. Then the Pharisees and Scribes asked him, Why walk not thy disciples according to the tradition of the elders, but eat bread with unwashed hands? 6. He answered and said unto them, Well hath Esaias prophesied of you hypocrites, as it is written, This people honoureth me with their lips, but their heart is far from me. 7. Howbeit in vain do they worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men. 8. For laying aside the commandment of God, ye hold the tradition of men, as the washing of pots and cups: and many other such like things ye do. 9. And he said unto them, Full well ye reject the commandment of God, that ye may keep your own tradition. 10. For Moses said, Honour thy father and thy mother; and, Whoso curseth father or mother, let him die the death: 11. But ye say, If a man shall say to his father or mother, It is Corban, that is to say, a gift, by whatsoever thou mightest be profited by me; he shall be free. 12. And ye suffer him no more to do ought for his father or his mother: 13. Making the word of God of none effect through your tradition, which ye have delivered: and many such like things do ye. 14. ¶ And when he had called all the people unto him, he said unto them, Harken unto me every one of you, and understand: 15. There is nothing from without a man, that entering into him can defile him: but the things which come out of him, those are they that defile the man. 16. If any man have ears to hear, let him hear. 17. And when he was entered into the house from the people, his disciples asked him concerning the parable. 18. And he saith unto them, Are ye so without understanding also? Do ye not perceive, that whatsoever thing from without entereth into the man, it cannot defile him; 19. Because it entereth not into his heart, but into the belly, and goeth out into the draught, purging all meats? 20. And he said, That which cometh out of the man, that defileth the man. 21. For from within, out of the heart of men, proceed evil thoughts, adulteries, fornications, murders. 22. Thefts, covetousness, wickedness, deceit, lasciviousness, an evil eye, blasphemy, pride, foolishness: 23. All these evil things come from within, and defile the man.

One great design of Christ's coming was to set aside the ceremonial law which God made, and to put an end to it; to make way for which he begins with the ceremonial law which men had made, and added to the law of God's making, and discharge his disciples from the obligation of that: which here he doth fully upon occasion of the offence which the Pharisees took at them for the violation of it. These Pharisees and Scribes with whom he had this argument are said to come from Jerusalem down to Galilee; fourscore or a hundred miles to pick quarrels with our Saviour there, where they supposed him to have the greatest interest and reputation. Had they come so far to be taught by him their zeal had been commendable, but to come so far to oppose him and to check the progress of his gospel, was great wickedness. It should seem that the Scribes and Pharisees at Jerusalem pretended not only to a pre-eminence above, but to an authority over the country clergy, and therefore kept up their visitations and sent inquisitors among them, as they did to John when he appeared, John i. 19.

Now in this passage we may observe,

First, What the tradition of the elders was; by it all were enjoined to wash their hands before meat: a cleanly custom and no harm in it, and yet as such to be over-nice in it discovers too great a care about the body which is of the earth; but they placed religion in it and would not leave it indifferent, as it was in its nature; people were not at their liberty to do it or not to do it; but they interposed their authority, and commanded all to do it upon pain of excommunication. This they kept up as a tradition of the elders; the Papists pretend a zeal for the authority and antiquity of the church and its canons, and talk much of councils and fathers, when really it is nothing but a zeal for their own wealth, interest, and dominion, that governs them; and so it was with the Pharisees.

We have here an account of the practice of the Pharisees and all the Jews, ver. 3, 4. (1.) They washed their hands oft; they washed them, οἰον; the critics find a great deal of work about that work, some making it to note the frequency of their washing, so we render it; others think it signifies the pains they took in washing their hands; they washed with great care, they washed their hands to their wrists, so some; they lifted up their hands when they were wet that the water might run to their elbows. (2.) They particularly washed before they eat bread, i. e. before they sat down to a solemn meal; for that was the rule; they must be sure to wash before they eat the bread on which they begged a blessing. Whosoever eats the bread over which they recite the benediction, Blessed be he that produceth bread, must wash his hands before and after, or else he was thought to be defiled. (3.) They took special care when they came in from the markets to wash their hands; from the judgment-halls, so some; it signifies any place of concourse where where there were people of all sorts; and it might be supposed some heathens or Jews under a ceremonial pollution, by coming near to whom they thought themselves polluted; saying, Stand by thyself, come not near me, I am holier than thou, Isa. lxxv. 5. They say the rule of the rabbins was, that if they washed their hands well in the morning the first thing they did, that would serve for all day, provided they kept alone; but if they went into company, they must not at their return either eat or pray till they had washed their hands, thus the elders gained a reputation among the people for sanctity, and thus they exercised and kept up an authority over their consciences. (4.) They added to this the washing of cups and pots and brasen vessels, which they suspected had been made use of by heathens or persons polluted; nay, and the very tables on which they eat their meat. There were many cafes, in which, by the law of Moses, washings were appointed, but they added to them, and enforced the observation of their own impositions as much as of God's institutions.

Secondly, What the practice of Christ's disciples was; they knew what the law was and the common usage; but they understood themselves so well that they would not be bound up by it: they eat bread with defiled, that is, with unwashed hands, ver. 2. Eating with unwashed hands they called eating with defiled hands; thus men keep up their superstitious vanities by putting every thing into an ill name that contradicts them. The disciples knew (it is probable) that the Pharisees had their eye upon them, and yet they would not humour them by a compliance with their traditions, but took their liberty as at other times, and eat bread with unwashed hands; and herein their righteousness, however it might seem to come short, did really exceed that of the Scribes and Pharisees, Matt. v. 20.

Thirdly, the offence which the Pharisees took at this. They found fault, ver. 2. They censured them as profane, and men of a loose conversation, or rather as men that would not submit to the power of the church to decree rites and ceremonies, and were therefore rebellious, factious and schismatical. They brought a complaint against them to their Master, expecting that he should check them and order them to conform; for they that are fond of their own inventions and impositions are commonly ready to appeal to Christ, as if he should countenance them, and as if his authority must interpose for the enforcing of them, and the rebuking of those that do not comply with them. They do not ask, Why do not thy disciples do as we do? Though that was it they meant, coveting to make themselves the standard; but why do not they walk according to the tradition of the elders, ver. 5. To which it was easy to answer, that by the receiving the doctrine of Christ, they had more understanding than all their teachers, yea, more than the ancients, Psalm cxix. 99, 100.

Fourthly, Christ's vindication of them; in which,

1. He argues with the Pharisees concerning the authority by which this ceremony was imposed; and they were the fittest to be discoursed with concerning that, who were the great sticklers for it; but this he did not speak of publicly to the multitude, (as appears by his calling the people to him, ver. 14.) lest he should have seemed to stir them up to faction and discontent at their governors, but addressed it as a reproof to the persons concerned, for the rule is, Suum cuique.

(1.) He reproves them for their hypocrisy in pretending to honour God, when really they had no such design in their religious observances, ver. 6, 7. They honour me with their lips, they pretend it is for the glory of God that they impose those things, to distinguish themselves from the heathen, but really their heart is far from God, and is governed by nothing but ambition and covetousness. They would be thought hereby to appropriate themselves as a holy people to the Lord their God, when really it is the farthest thing in their thoughts. They rested in the outside of all their religious exercises, and their hearts were not right with God in them, and this was worshipping God in vain, for neither was he pleased with such sham-devotions, nor were they profited by them.

(2.) He reproves them for placing religion in the inventions and injunctions of their elders and rulers. They taught for doctrines the traditions of men, when they should have been pressing upon people the great principles of religion; they were enforcing the canons of their church, and judged of people's being Jews or no, according as they did or did not conform to them, without any consideration had, whether they lived in obedience to God's laws or no. It was true, there were divers washings imposed by the law of Moses, Heb. ix. 10. which were intended to signify that inward purification of the heart from worldly fleshly lusts, which God requires as absolutely necessary to our communion with him; but instead of providing the substance they presumptuously added to the ceremony, and were very nice in washing pots and cups, and observe he adds, many other such like things ye do, ver. 8. Note, Superstition is an endless thing. If one human invention and institution be admitted, though seemingly never so innocent, as this of washing hands, behold, a troop comes, a door is opened for many other such things.

(3.) He reproves them for laying aside the commandment of God, and overlooking that, not urging that in their preaching, and in their discipline conniving at the violation of that, as if that were no longer of force, ver. 8. Note, It is the mischief of impositions, that too often they who are zealous for them have little zeal for the essential duties of religion, but can contentedly see them laid aside. Nay, they rejected the commandment of God, ver. 9. You do fairly disannul and abolish the commandment of God; and even by your traditions make the word of God of none effect, ver. 13. God's statutes shall not only lie forgotten, as antiquated obsolete laws, but they shall in effect stand repealed, that their traditions may take place. They were intrusted to expound the law, and to enforce it; and under pretence of using that power they violated the law, and dissolved the bonds of it; destroying the text with the comment.

This he gives them a particular instance of, and a flagrant one: God commanded children to honour their parents, not only by the law of Moses, but antecedent to that by the law of nature; and who so revileth, or speaketh evil of father or mother, let him die the death, ver. 4. From whence it is easy to infer, that it is the duty of children, if their parents be poor, to relieve them according to their ability; and if those children are worthy to die that curse their parents, much more those that starve them. But if a man will but conform himself in all points to the tradition of the elders, they will find him out an expedient by which he may be discharged from this obligation, ver. 11. If his parents be in want, and he has wherewithal to help them, but has no mind to do it, let him swear by the Corban, that is, by the gold of the temple, and the gift upon the altar, that his parents shall not be profited by him, that he will not relieve them; and if they asked any thing of him, let him tell them this, and it is enough; as if by the obligation of this wicked vow he had discharged himself from the obligation of God's holy law; thus Dr. Hammond understands it: And it is said to be an ancient canon of the rabbins, That vows take place in things commanded by the law, as well as in things indifferent; so that if a man makes a vow which cannot be ratified without breaking a commandment, the vow must be ratified, and the commandment violated; so Dr. Whitby. Such doctrine as this the Papists teach, discharging children from all obligation to their parents by their monastical vows, and their entrance into religion, as they call it: He concludes, and many such like things do ye. Where will men stop when once they have made the word of God give way to their tradition? These eager imposers of such ceremonies, at first only made light of God's commandments in comparison with their traditions, but afterwards made void God's commandments, if they stood in competition with them. And all this in effect Isaiah prophesied of them; what he said of the hypocrites of his own day, was applicable to the Scribes and Pharisees, ver. 6. Note, When we see and complain of the wickedness of the present times, yet we do not enquire wisely of that matter, if we say that all the former days were better than these, Eccles. vii. 10. The worst of hypocrites and evil doers have had their predecessors.

2. He instructs the people concerning the principles upon which this ceremony was grounded: And it was requisite that this part of his discourse should be public, for it related to daily practice, and was designed to rectify a great mistake which the people were led into by their elders; he therefore called the people unto him, ver. 14. and bid them hear and understand. Note, It is not enough for the common people to hear, but they must understand what they hear. When Christ would run down the tradition of the Pharisees about washing before meat, he strikes at the opinion which was the root of it. Note, Corrupt customs are best cured by rectifying corrupt notions.

Now that which he goes about to set them right in is, what the pollution is which we are in danger of being damaged by, ver. 15. (1.) Not by the meat we eat though it be eaten with unwashed hands, that is but from without, and goes through a man. But, (2.) It is by the breaking out of the corruption that is in our hearts; the mind and conscience is defiled, guilt is contracted, and we become odious in the sight of God by that which comes out of us; our wicked thoughts and affections, words and actions, these defile us, and these only: our care must therefore be to wash our hearts from wickedness.

(3.) He gives his disciples in private an explication of the instructions he gave the people. They asked him, when they had him by himself, concerning the parable, ver. 17. for to them it seems it was a parable. Now in answer to their enquiry, (1.) He reproves their dullness. Are ye so without understanding also? Are you dull also? as dull as the people that cannot understand, as dull as the Pharisees that will not? Are ye so dull? He doth not expect they should understand every thing, but are you so weak as not to understand this? (2.) He explains this truth to them, that they might perceive it, and then they would believe it, for it carried its own evidence along with it. Some truths prove themselves, if they be but rightly explained and apprehended. If we understand the spiritual nature of God and of his law, and what it is that is offensive to him, and dis-its us for communion with him, we shall soon perceive, (1.) That that which we eat and drink cannot defile us, so as to call for any religious washing; it goes into the stomach, and pisseth the several digestions and secretions that nature has appointed, and what there may be in it that is defiling, it is voided and gone; meats for the belly, and the belly for meats, but God shall destroy both it and them. But, (2.) It is that which comes out from the heart, the corrupt heart, that defiles us: As by the ceremonial law, whatsoever (almost) comes out of a man defiles him, Lev. xv. 2. Deut. xxiii. 13. so what comes out from the mind of a man, is that which defiles him before God, and calls for a religious washing, ver. 21. from within, out of the heart of men, which they boast of the goodness of, and think is the best part of them; thence that which defiles doth proceed, thence comes all the mischief; as a corrupt fountain sends forth corrupt streams, so doth a corrupt heart send forth corrupt reasonings, corrupt appetites and passions, and all those wicked words and actions which are produced by them. Divers particulars are instanced in, as in Matthew, we had one there which is not here, and that is false witness-bearing, but here are seven mentioned here to be added to those we had there. (1.) Covetousness, for it is plural covetousness, immoderate desires, of more of the wealth of the world, and the gratifications of sense, and still more, still crying give give. Hence we read of a heart exercised with covetous practices, 2 Pet. ii. 14. (2.) Wickedness, impiety, malice and hatred, and ill-will, a desire to do mischief, and a delight in mischief done. (3.) Deceit, which is wickedness covered and disguised, that it may be the more securely and effectually committed. (4.) Lasciviousness, that filthiness and foolish talking which the apostle condemns: the eye full of adultery, and all wanton dalliances. (5.) The evil eye, i. e. the envious eye, and the covetous eye, grudging others the good we give them or do for them, Prov. xxiii. 6. or grieving at the good they do or enjoy. (6.) Pride; superbity, exalting ourselves in our own conceit above others, and looking down with scorn and contempt upon others. (7.) Foolishness; imprudence, inconsideration: some understand it especially of vain-glorious boasting, which St. Paul calls foolishness, 2 Cor. xi. 1—19. because it is here joined with pride; I rather take it for that rashness in speaking and acting, which is the cause of so much evil. Ill-thinking, is put first as that which is the spring of all our commissions, and unthinking put last as that which is the spring of all our omissions. Of all these he concludes, ver. 23. (1.) That they come from within, from the corrupt nature, the carnal mind, the evil treasure in the heart; justly it is said, that the inward part is very wickedness, it must needs be so when all this comes from within. (2.) That they defile the man, they render a man unfit for communion with God, they bring a stain upon the conscience; and if not mortified and rooted out will shut men out of the New Jerusalem, into which no unclean thing shall enter.

24 ¶ And from thence he arose, and went into the borders of Tyre and Sidon, and entered into an house, and would have no man know it: but he could not be hid. 25. For a certain woman, whose young daughter had an unclean spirit, heard of him, and came and fell at his feet: 26. (The woman was a Greek, a Syrophenician by nation) and she besought him that he would cast forth the devil out of her daughter. 27. But Jesus said unto her, Let the children first be filled: for it is not meet to take the children's bread, and to cast it unto the dogs. 28. And she answered and said unto him, Yes, Lord: yet the dogs under the table eat of the children's crumbs. 29. And he said unto her, For this saying go thy way: the devil is gone out of thy daughter. 30. And when she was come to her house, she found the devil gone out, and her daughter laid upon the bed.

See here, 1. How humbly Christ was pleased to conceal himself. Never man was so cried up as he was in Galilee, and therefore to teach us, though not to decline any opportunity of doing good, yet not to be fond of popular pular applause, he arose from thence and went into the borders of Tyre and Sidon, where he was little known: and there he entered not into a synagogue or place of concourse, but into a private house, and he would have no man know it; because it was foretold concerning him, he shall not strive nor cry, neither shall his voice be heard in the streets. Not but that he was willing to preach and heal here as well as in other places, but for this he would be sought unto. Note, As there is a time to appear, so there is a time to retire. Or he would not be known, because he was upon the borders of Tyre and Sidon, among Gentiles, to whom he would not be so forward to shew himself as to the tribe of Israel, whose glory he was to be.

2. How graciously he was pleased to manifest himself, notwithstanding. Though he would not carry a harvest of miraculous cures into those parts, yet it should seem he came on purpose to drop a handful, to let fall this one which we have here an account of. He could not be hid; for though a candle may be put under a bushel, the sun cannot. Christ was too well known to be long incognito any where; the oil of gladness which he was anointed with, like the ointment of the right hand, would betray itself, and fill the house with its odours. Those that had only heard his fame could not converse with him, but they would soon say, This must be Jesus. Now observe,

1. The application made to him by a poor woman in distress and trouble. She was a Gentile, a Greek, a stranger to the commonwealth of Israel, and alien to the covenant of promise; she was by extraction a Syrophenician, and not in any degree proselyted to the Jewish religion; she had a daughter, a young daughter, that was possessed with the devil. How many and grievous are the calamities that young children are subject to! Her address was, (1.) Very humble, pressing, and importunate; she heard of him, and came and fell at his feet. Note, Those that would obtain mercy from Christ, must throw themselves at his feet, i. e. must refer themselves to him, must humble themselves before him, and give up themselves to be ruled by him. Christ never put any from him that fell at his feet, which a poor trembling soul may do that has not boldness and confidence to throw itself into his arms. (2.) It was very particular, she tells him what she wanted. Christ gave poor supplicants leave to be thus free with him, she besought him that he would cast forth the devil out of her daughter, ver. 26. Note. The greatest blessing we can ask of Christ for our children is, that he would break the power of Satan, that is, the power of sin in their souls, and particularly, that he would cast forth the unclean spirit, that they may be temples of the Holy Ghost, and he may dwell in them.

2. The discouragement he gave to this address, ver. 27. He said unto her, Let the children first be filled; let the Jews have all the miracles wrought for them that they have occasion for, who are in a particular manner God's chosen people; and let not that which was intended for them, be thrown to those who are not of God's family, and who have not that knowledge of him, and interest in him which they have; and who are as dogs in comparison of them, vile and profane, and who are as dogs to them, snarling at them, spiteful towards them, and ready to worry them. Note, Where Christ knows the faith of poor supplicants to be strong, he sometimes delights to try it, and put it to the stretch. But his saying, Let the children first be filled, intimates that there was mercy in reserve for the Gentiles, and not far off; for the Jews began already to be surfeited with the gospel of Christ, and some of them had desired him to depart out of their coasts. The children begin to play with their meat, and their leanings, their loathings, would be a feast for the Gentiles. The apostles went by this rule, Let the children first be filled, let the Jews have the first offer, and if their full souls loathe this honeycomb, Lo, we turn to the Gentiles!

3. The turn he gave to this word of Christ which made against her, and her improvement of it to make for her, ver. 28. She said Yes, Lord, I own it is true that the children's bread ought not to be cast to the dogs, but they were never denied the crumbs of that bread; nay, it belongs to them, and they are allowed a place under the table, that they may be ready to receive them: I ask not for a loaf, no, not for a morsel, only for a crumb, do not refuse me that. This she speaks not as undervaluing the mercy, or making light of it in itself, but magnifying the abundance of miraculous cures with which she heard the Jews were sealed, in comparison with which a single cure was but as a crumb. Gentiles do not come in crowds, as the Jews do; I come alone. Perhaps she had heard of Christ's feeding five thousand lately at once, after which, even when they had gathered up the fragments, there could not but be some crumbs left for the dogs.

4. The grant Christ thereupon made of her request: Is she thus humble, thus earnest? for this saying, go thy way, thou shalt have what thou camest for, the devil is gone out of thy daughter, ver. 29. This encourageth us to pray and not to faint, to continue instant in prayer, not doubting but to prevail at last; the vision at the end shall speak and not lie. Christ saying it was done, did it effectually, as at other times his saying, Let it be done; for ver. 30. she came to her house, depending upon the word of Christ that her daughter was healed; and so she found it, the devil was gone out. Note, Christ can conquer Satan at a distance; and it was not only when the dæmoniacs saw him that they yielded to his power, as chap. iii. 11. but when they saw him not, for the spirit of the Lord is not bound or bounded. She found her daughter not in any toss or agitation, but very quietly laid on the bed, and reposing herself; waiting for her mother's return to rejoice with her, that she was so finely well.

31. ¶ And again, departing from the coasts of Tyre and Sidon, he came unto the sea of Galilee through the midst of the coasts of Decapolis. 32. And they bring unto him one that was deaf, and had an impediment in his speech: and they beseech him to put his hand upon him. 33. And he took him aside from the multitude, and put his fingers into his ears, and he spit, and touched his tongue. 34. And looking up to heaven, he sighed, and saith unto him, Ephphatha, that is, Be opened. 75. And straightway his ears were opened, and the string of his tongue was loosed, and he spake plain. 36. And he charged them that they should tell no man: but the more he charged them, so much the more a great deal they published it. 37. And were beyond measure astonished, saying, He hath done all things well: he maketh both the deaf to hear, and the dumb to speak.

Our Lord Jesus seldom staid long in a place, for he knew where his work lay, and attended the change of it. When he had cured the woman of Canaan's daughter, he had done what he had to do in that place, and therefore presently left those parts and returned to the sea of Galilee, where-about his usual residence was; yet did not come directly thither, but fetched a compass through the midst of the coasts of Decapolis, which lay mostly on the other side Jordan; such long walks did our Lord Jesus take, when he went about doing good.

Now here we have the story of a cure that Christ wrought which is not recorded by any other of the Evangelists; it is of one that was deaf and dumb.

1. His case was sad, ver. 32. There were those that brought to him one that was deaf, some think, born deaf, and then he must be dumb of course; others think by some distemper or disaster he was become deaf, or at least thick of hearing; and he had an impediment in his speech. He was μωρανός; some think he was quite dumb; others that he could not speak but with great difficulty to himself, and so as scarcely to be understood by those that heard him: He was tongue-tied, so that he was perfectly unfit for conversation, and deprived both of the pleasure and of the profit of it; he had not the satisfaction either of hearing other people talk, or of telling his own mind. Let us take occasion from hence to give thanks to God for preserving to us the sense of hearing, especially that we may be capable of hearing the word of God; and the faculty of speech, especially that we may be capable of speaking God's praises; and let us look with compassion upon those that are deaf or dumb, and treat them with great tenderness. They that brought this poor man to Christ, besought him that he would put his hand upon him, as the prophets did upon those whom they blessed in the name of the Lord. It is not said, they besought him to cure him, but to put his hand upon him, to take cognizance of his case, and put forth his power to do to him as he pleased.

2. His cure was solemn, and some of the circumstances of it very singular.

1. Christ took him aside from the multitude, ver. 33. ordinarily he wrought his miracles publicly before all the people, to shew that they would bear the strictest scrutiny and inspection; but this he did privately, to shew that he did not seek his own glory, and to teach us to avoid every thing that favours of ostentation; Let us learn of Christ to be humble, and to do good where no eyes see, but he that is all eye.

2. He used more significant actions in the doing this cure than usual. (1.) He put his fingers into his ears, as if he would syringe them, and fetch out that which stopped them up. (2.) He spit upon his own finger, and then touched his tongue, as if he would moisten his mouth, and so loosen that with which his tongue was tied; these were no causes that could in the least contribute to his cure, but only signs of the exerting of that power which Christ had in himself to cure him, for the encouraging his faith and theirs that brought him. The application was all from himself, it was his own fingers that he put into his ears, and his own spittle that he put upon his tongue; for he alone heals.

3. He looked up to heaven, to give his Father the praise of what he did; for he sought his praise and did his will, and as Mediator acted in dependence on him and with an eye to him. Thus he signified that it was by a divine power, a power he had as the Lord from heaven, and brought with him thence; that he did this; for the hearing ear and the seeing eye the Lord has made, and can re-make even both of them. He also hereby directed his patient who could see, though he could not hear, to look up to heaven for relief. Moses with his stammering tongue is directed to look that way, Exod. iv. 11. Who hath made man's mouth? Or who maketh the dumb or deaf, or the seeing or blind? Have not I the Lord?

4. He sighed; not as if he found any difficulty in working this miracle, or obtaining power to do it from his Father; but thus he expresseth his pity of the miseries of human life, and his sympathy with the afflicted in their afflictions, as one that was himself touched with the feeling of their infirmities. And as to this man he sighed, not because he was loth to do him this kindness, or did it with reluctance; but because of the many temptations which he would be exposed to, and the sins he would be in danger of, the tongue-sins, after the restoring of his speech to him, which before he was free from. He had better be tongue-tied still, unless he have grace to keep his tongue as with a bridle, Psalm xxxix. 1.

5. He said Ephphatha, that is Be opened. This was nothing that looked like spell or charm, such as they used that had familiar spirits, who peeped and muttered, Isa. viii. 10. Christ speaks as one having authority, and power went along with the word. Be opened served both parts of the cure; let the ears be opened, let the lips be opened, let him hear and speak freely, and lest the restraint be taken off, and the effect was unanswerable, ver. 35. Straightway his ears were opened; and the string of his tongue was loosed, and all was well: and happy he who, as soon as he had his hearing and speech had the blessed Jesus so near him to converse with.

Now this cure was, (1.) A proof of Christ's being the Messiah; for it was foretold that by his power the ears of the deaf should be unstopped, and the tongue of the dumb should be made to sing, Isa. xxxv. 5; 6. (2.) It was a specimen of the operations of his gospel upon the minds of men. The great command of the gospel, and grace of Christ to poor sinners, is epiphatha, be opened. Grotius applies it thus, that the internal impediments of the mind are removed by the Spirit of Christ, as those bodily impediments were by the word of his power. He opens the heart, as he did Lydia's, and thereby opens the ear to receive the word of God, and opens the mouth in prayer and praises.

6. He ordered it to be kept very private, but it was made very public.

(1.) It was his humility, that he charged them they should tell no man, ver. 36. Most men will proclaim their own goodness, or at least desire that others should proclaim it; but Christ, though he was himself in no danger of being puffed up with it, yet knowing that we are would thus set us an example of self-denial, as in other things, so especially in praise and applause. We should take pleasure in doing good, but not in its being known. (2.) It was their zeal, that though he charged them to say nothing of it, yet they published it, before Christ would have had it published: But they meant honestly, and therefore it is to be reckoned rather an act of indigestion than an act of disobedience, ver. 37. But they that told it, and they that heard it, were beyond measure astonished, ἐκπλησμένοι, more than above measure; they were exceedingly affected with it, and this was said by every body, it was the common verdict. He has done all things well, ver. 37. whereas there were those that hated and persecuted him as an evil doer; they are ready to witness for him, not only that he has done no evil, but that he has done a great deal of good, and has done it well, modestly and humbly, and very devoutly, and all gratis, without money, and without price, which addeth much to the lustre of his good work. He maketh both the deaf to hear, and the dumb to speak; and that is well, it is well for them, it is well for their relations, to whom they had been a burden; and therefore they are inextinguishable who speak ill of him.

C H A P. VIII.

In this chapter we have, (1.) Christ's miraculous feeding four thousand with seven loaves and a few small fishes, ver. 1---9. (2.) His refusing to give the Pharisees a sign from heaven, ver. 10---13. (3.) His cautioning tioning his disciples to take heed of the leaven of Pharisaism and Herodianism, ver. 14---21. (4.) His giving sight to a blind man at Bethsaida, ver. 22---26. (5.) Peter's confession of him, ver. 27---30. (6.) The notice he gave his disciples of his own approaching sufferings, ver. 31, 32, 33. and the warning he gave them to prepare for sufferings likewise, ver. 34---38.

1. IN those days the multitude being very great, and having nothing to eat, Jesus called his disciples unto him, and saith unto them, 2. I have compassion on the multitude, because they have now been with me three days, and have nothing to eat: 3. And if I send them away fasting to their own houses, they will faint by the way: for divers of them came from far. 4. And his disciples answered him, From whence can a man satisfy these men with bread here in the wilderness? 5. And he asked them, How many loaves have ye? And they said, Seven. 6. And he commanded the people to sit down on the ground: and he took the seven loaves, and gave thanks, and brake, and gave to his disciples to set before them; and they did set them before the people. 7. And they had a few small fishes and he blessed, and commanded to set them also before them. 8. So they did eat, and were filled: and they took up of the broken meat that was left seven baskets. 9. And they that had eaten were about four thousand: and he sent them away.

We had the story of a miracle very like this before in this gospel, chap. vi. 35. and of his same miracle, Matth. xv. 32. and here is little or no addition or alteration as to the circumstances. Yet observe,

1. That our Jesus was mightily followed. The multitude was very great, ver. 1. notwithstanding the wicked arts of the Scribes and Pharisees to blemish him and to blast his interest, the common people, who had more honesty, and therefore more true wisdom than their leaders, kept up their high thoughts of him. We may suppose this multitude were generally of the meaner sort of people, with such Christ conversed and was familiar; for thus he humbled himself, and made himself of no reputation, and thus encouraged the meaneest to come to him for life and grace.

2. Those that followed him underwent a great deal of difficulty in following him. They were with him three days, and had nothing to eat, that was hard service: Never let the Pharisee say, that Christ's disciples fast not. It is likely there were those that brought some food with them from home; but by this time it was all spent, and they had a great way home: and yet they continued with Christ, and did not speak of leaving him till he spoke of dismissing them. Note, True zeal makes nothing of hardships in the way of duty. They that have a full feast for their souls may be content with slender provisions for their bodies. It was an old saying among the Puritans, Brown bread, and the gospel is good fare.

3. As Christ has a compassion for all that are in wants and straits, so he has a special concern for those that are reduced to straits by their zeal and diligence in attending on him. Christ said, I have compassion on the multitude; whom the proud Pharisees looked upon with disdain, the humble Jesus looked upon with pity and tenderness, and thus must we honour all men: But that which he chiefly considers is, They have been with me three days and have nothing to eat. Whatever losses we sustain or hardships we go through, for Christ's sake and in love to him, he will take care they shall be made up to us one way or other. They that seek the Lord, shall not long want any good thing, Psalm xxxiv. 10. Observe with what sympathy Christ saith, ver. 3. If I send them away fasting to their own houses, they will faint by the way for hunger. Christ knows and considers our frame; and he is for the body, if with it we glorify him, verily we shall be fed. He considered that many of them came from afar, and had a great way home. When we see multitudes attending upon the word preached, it is comfortable to think that Christ knows whence they all come, though we do not. I know thy works and where thou dwellest, Rev. ii. 13. Christ would by no means have them go home fasting, for he doth not use to send those empty away from him that in a right manner attended on him.

4. The doubts of Christians are sometimes made to work for the magnifying of the power of Christ. The disciples could not imagine whence so many men should be satisfied with bread here in this wilderness, ver. 4. That therefore must needs be wonderful, and appear so much the more so, which the disciples looked upon as impossible.

5. Christ's time to act for the relief of his people is when things are brought to the last extremity, when they were ready to faint, Christ provided for them; that he might not invite them to follow him for the loaves, he did not supply them but when they were utterly reduced, and then he sent them away.

6. The bounty of Christ is inexhaustible, and, to evidence that, Christ repeated this miracle, to shew that he is still the same for the succour and supply of his people that attend upon him. His favours are renewed, as our wants and necessities are. In the former miracle Christ used all the bread he had, which were five loaves, and fed all the guests he had, which were five thousand, and so he did now, though he might have said, If five loaves would feed five thousand, four may feed four thousand: he took all the seven loaves, and fed with them the four thousand, for he would teach us to take things as they are, and accommodate ourselves to them; to use what we have, and make the best of that which is: Here it was as in the dispensing of the manna, he that gathered much had nothing over, and he that gathered little had no lack.

7. In our father's house, in our Master's house there is bread enough and to spare; there is a fulness in Christ, which he communicates to all that passeth through his hands; so that from it we receive, and grace for grace, John i. 16. Those need not fear wanting that have a Christ to live upon.

8. It is good for those that follow Christ to keep together; these followers of Christ continued in a body, four thousand of them together, and Christ fed them all; Christ's sheep must abide by the flock, and go forth by their footsteps, and verily they shall be fed.

10. ¶ And straightway he entered into a ship with his disciples, and came into the parts of Dalmanutha. 11. And the Pharisees came forth, and began to question with him, seeking of him a sign from heaven, tempting him. 12. And he sighed deeply in his spirit, and saith, Why doth this generation seek after a sign? verily I say unto you, There shall no sign be given unto this generation. 13. And he left them, and entering into the ship again departed to the other side. 14. ¶ Now the disciples had forgotten to take bread, neither had they in the ship with them more than one loaf. 15. And he charged them, saying, Take heed, beware of the leaven of the Pharisees, and of the leaven of Herod. 16. And they reasoned among themselves, saying, It is because we have no bread. 17. And when Jesus knew it, he saith unto them, Why reason ye, because ye have no bread? perceive ye not yet, neither understand? have ye your heart yet hardened? 18. Having eyes, see ye not? and having ears, hear ye not? and do ye not remember? 19. When I break the five loaves among five thousand, how many baskets full of fragments took ye up? They say unto him, Twelve. 20. And when the seven among four thousand, how many baskets full of fragments took ye up? And they said, Seven. 21. And he said unto them, How is it that ye do not understand?

Still Christ is upon motion; now he visits the parts of Dalmanutha, that no corner of the land of Israel might say that they had his presence with them. He came thither by ship, ver. 13. but meeting with occasions of dispute there, and not with opportunities of doing good, he entered into the ship again, ver. 13. and came back. In these verses we are told,

1. How he refused to gratify the Pharisees, who challenged him to give them a sign from heaven. They came forth on purpose to question with him, not to propose questions to him, that they might learn of him, but to cross questions with him, that they might enslave him. (1.) They demanded of him a sign from heaven, as if the signs he gave them on earth, which were more familiar to them, and were more capable of being examined and enquired into, were not sufficient. There was a sign from heaven at his baptism, in the descent of the dove, and the voice, Matth. iii. 16, 17. it was public enough; and if they had attended John's baptism as they ought to have done, they might themselves have seen it. Afterwards, when he was nailed to the cross, they prescribed a new sign, Let him come down from the cross and we will believe him; thus obstinate infidelity will still have something to say, though never so unreasonable. They demanded this sign, tempting him; not in hopes he would give it them that they might be satisfied, but in hopes he would not, that they might imagine themselves to have a pretence for their infidelity.

(2.) He denied them their demand. He sighed deeply in his spirit, ver. 12. He groaned, so some, being grieved for the hardness of their hearts, and the little influence that his preaching and miracles had had upon them. Note, The infidelity of those that have long enjoyed the means of conviction, is a great grief to the Lord Jesus; it troubles him that sinners should thus stand in their own light, and put a bar in their own door. (1.) He expostulates with him upon this demand; Why doth this generation seek after a sign? This generation, that is so unworthy to have the gospel brought to it, and to have any sign accompanying it; this generation, that so greedily swallows the traditions of the elders, without the confirmation of any sign at all. This generation, into which, by the calculating of the times prefixed in the Old Testament, they might easily perceive that the coming of the Messiah must fall: This generation, that has had such plenty of sensible and merciful signs given them in the cure of their sick, what an absurdity is it for them to desire a sign? (2.) He refuseth to answer their demand: Verily I say unto you, there shall no sign, no such sign, be given to this generation. When God spoke to particular persons, in a particular case, out of the road of his common dispensation, they were encouraged to ask a sign, as Gideon and Ahaz; but when he speaks in general to all, as in the law and gospel, sending each with their own evidence, it is presumption to prescribe other signs than what he has given. Shall any teach God knowledge? He denied them, and then left them, as men not fit to be talked with; if they will not be convinced, they shall not; leave them to their strong delusions.

2. How he warned his disciples against the leaven of the Pharisees and of Herod. Observe here,

1. What the caution was, ver. 15. Take heed, beware, lest you partake of the leaven of the Pharisees, lest ye embrace the tradition of the elders, which they are so wedded to, lest you be proud, and hypocritical, and ceremonious like them: Matthew adds, and of the Sadducees; Mark adds, and of Herod; whence some gather, that Herod and his courtiers were generally Sadducees, that is, Deists, men of no religion. Others give this sense, the Pharisees demanded a sign from heaven; and Herod, he was long desirous to see some miracles wrought by Christ; Luke xiii. 7. such as he should prescribe, so that the leaven of both was the same; they were unsatisfied with the signs they had, and would have others of their own devising; take heed of this leaven, saith Christ, be convinced by the miracles you have seen, and covet not to see more.

2. How they misunderstood this caution. It seems at their putting to sea this time they had forgotten to take bread, and had not in their ship more than one loaf, ver. 14. When therefore Christ bid them beware of the leaven of the Pharisees, they understood it as an intimation to them, not to apply themselves to any of the Pharisees for relief when they came to the other side, for they had lately been offended at them for eating with unclean hands. They reasoned among themselves, what should be the meaning of this caution, and concluded, it is because we have no bread; he saith this to reproach us for being so careless as to go to sea, and go among strangers with but one loaf of bread; he doth in effect tell us, we must be brought to short allowance, and must eat our bread by weight. They reasoned it, and disputed about it; one said it was long of you, and the other said, it was long of you, that we are so ill provided for this voyage; thus distrust of God makes Christ's disciples quarrel among themselves.

3. The reproof Christ gave them for their uneasiness in this matter; as it argued a disbelief of his power to supply them, notwithstanding the abundant experience they had had of it. The reproof is given with some warmth, for he knew their hearts, and knew they needed to be thus firmly chidden; Perceive ye not yet, neither understand, that which you have had so many demonstrations of? Have ye your hearts yet hardened, so as nothing will make any impression upon them, or bring them to compliance with our Master's designs? Having eyes, see ye not that which is plain before your eyes? Having ears, hear ye not that which you have been so often told? How strangely stupid and senseless are you? Do ye not remember that which was done but the other day, when I brake the five loaves among the fivethousand, and soon after, the seven loaves among the four thousand? Do ye not remember how many baskets full ye took up of the fragments? Yes, they did remember, and could tell that they took up twelve baskets-full one time, and seven another; why then, saith he, How is it that ye do not understand? As if he that multiplied five loaves, and seven, could not multiply one. They seemed to suspect that that one was not matter enough to work upon, if he should have a mind to entertain his hearers a third time. And if that was their thought, it was indeed a very senseless one, as if it were not all alike to the Lord to save by many or few, and as easy to make one loaf to feed five thousand, as five. It was therefore proper to mind them, not only of the sufficiency, but of the overplus of the former meals; and justly were they chidden for not understanding what Christ therein designed, and what they from thence might have learned. (1.) The experiences we have had of God's goodness to us in the way of duty, greatly aggravate our distrust of him, which is therefore very provoking to the Lord Jesus. (2.) Our not understanding the true intent and meaning of God's favours to us, is equivalent to our not remembering them. (3.) We are therefore overwhelmed with present cares and distrusts, because we do not understand, and remember, what we have known and seen of the power and goodness of our Lord Jesus. It would be a great support to us to consider the days of old, and we are wanting both to God and ourselves if we do not. (4.) When we thus forget the works of God and distrust him, we should chide ourselves severely for it, as Christ doth his disciples here: Am I thus without understanding? How is it that my heart is thus hardened?

22. ¶ And he cometh to Bethsaida; and they bring a blind man unto him, and besought him to touch him. 23. And he took the blind man by the hand, and led him out of the town; and when he had spit on his eyes, and put his hands upon him, he asked him if he saw ought. 24. And he looked up, and said, I see men as trees walking. 25. After that, he put his hands again upon his eyes, and made him look up: and he was restored, and saw every man clearly. 26. And he sent him away to his house, saying, Neither go into the town, nor tell it to any in the town.

This cure is related only by this evangelist, and there is something singular in the circumstances.

1. Here is a blind man brought to Christ by his friends, with a desire that he would touch him, ver. 22. Here appears the faith of those that brought him, they doubted not but one touch of Christ's hand would recover him his sight; but the man himself showed not that earnestness for or expectation of a cure that other blind men did. If those that are spiritually blind do not pray for themselves, yet let their friends and relations pray for them that Christ would be pleased to touch them.

2. Here is Christ leading this blind man, ver. 23. He did not bid his friends lead him, but (which speaks his wonderful condescension) he himself took him by the hand and led him, to teach us to be as Job was, eyes to the blind, Job xxix. 15. Never had poor blind men such a leader. He led him out of the town: Had he herein only designed privacy, he might have led him into a house, into an inner chamber, and have cured him there; but he intended hereby to upbraid Bethsaida with the mighty works that had in vain been done in her, Mat. xi. 21. and was telling her, in effect, she was unworthy to have any more done within her walls. Perhaps Christ took the blind man out of the town, that he might have a larger prospect in the open fields, to try his sight with, than he could have in the close streets.

3. Here is the cure of the blind man, by that blessed Oculist who came into the world to preach the recovery of sight to the blind, Luke iv. 18. and to give what he preached. In this cure we may observe, (1.) That Christ used a sign: he spat on his eyes (spat into them, so some) and put his hand upon him. He could have cured him, as he did others, with a word speaking, but thus he was pleased to assist his faith, which was very weak, and to help him against his unbelief. And this spittle signified the eye-salve wherewith Christ anoints the eyes of those that are spiritually blind, Rev. iii. 18. (2.) That the cure was wrought gradually, which was not usual in Christ's miracles. He asked him if he saw ought, ver. 23. Let him tell what condition his sight was in, for the satisfaction of those about him. And he looked up; so far he recovered his sight that he could open his eyes, and he said, I see men as trees walking, he could not distinguish men from trees, otherwise than that he could discern them to move. He had some glimmerings of sight, and betwixt him and the sky could perceive a man erect like a tree, but could not discern the form thereof, Job iv. 16. But, (3.) It was soon completed; Christ never doth his work by the halves, nor leaves it till he can say, It is finished. He put his hands again upon his eyes to disperse the remaining darkness, and then bade him look up again, and he saw every man clearly, ver. 25. Now Christ took this way, (1.) Because he would not tie himself to a method, but would shew with what liberty he acted in all he did. He did not cure by rote as I may say, and in a road, but varied as he thought fit. Providence gains the same end in different ways, that men may attend its motions with an implicit faith. (2.) Because it should be to the patient according to his faith; and perhaps this man's faith was at first very weak but afterwards gathered strength, and accordingly his cure was. Not that Christ always went by this rule, but thus he would sometimes put a rebuke upon those who came to him doubting. (3.) Thus Christ would shew how, and in what method, those are healed by his grace, who by nature are spiritually blind; at first their knowledge is confused, they see men as trees walking, but, like the light of the morning, it shines more and more to the perfect day, and then they see all things clearly, Prov. iv. 18. Let us enquire then, if we see ought of those things which faith is the substance and evidence of; and if through grace we see any thing of them, we may hope that we shall see yet more and more, for Jesus Christ will perfect for ever those that are sanctified.

4. The directions Christ gave the man he had cured not to tell it to any in the town of Bethsaida, nor so much as to go into the town, where probably there were some expecting him to come back, who had seen Christ lead him out of the town; but having been eye-witnesses of so many miracles, had not so much as the curiosity to follow him: let not such be gratified with the sight of him when he was cured, that would not shew so much respect to Christ as to go a step out of town to see this cure wrought. Christ doth not forbid him to tell it to others, but he must not tell it to any in the town. Slighting Christ's favours is forfeiting them; and Christ will make those know the worth of their privileges by the want of them, that would not know them otherwise. Bethsaida in the day of her visitation would not know the things that belonged to her peace, and now they are hid from her eyes. They will not see, and therefore shall not see.

27. ¶ And Jesus went out, and his disciples, into the towns of Cesarea-Philippi: and by the way he asked his disciples, saying unto them, Whom do men say that I am? 28. And they answered, John the Baptist: but some say, Elias; and others, One of the prophets. 29. And he saith unto them, But whom say ye that I am? And Peter answereth and saith unto him, Thou art the Christ. 30. And he charged them that they should tell no man of him. 31. And he began to teach them, that the Son of man must suffer many things, and be rejected of the elders, and of the chief priests, and Scribes, and be killed, and after three days rise again. 32. And he spake that saying openly. And Peter took him, and began to rebuke him. 33. But when he had turned about and looked on his disciples, he rebuked Peter, saying, Get thee behind me, Satan: for thou savourest not the things that be of God, but the things that be of men. 34. ¶ And when he had called the people unto him with his disciples also, he said unto them, Whosoever will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow me. 35. For whosoever will save his life, shall lose it; but whosoever shall lose his life for my sake and the gospel's, the same shall save it. 36. For what shall it profit a man, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul? 37. Or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul? 38. Whosoever therefore shall be ashamed of me, and of my words, in this adulterous and sinful generation, of him also shall the Son of man be ashamed, when he cometh in the glory of his Father, with the holy angels.

We have read a great deal of the doctrine that Christ preached, and the miracles he wrought, which were many and strange, and well attested, of various kinds, wrought in several places, to the astonishment of the many that were eye-witnesses of them. It is now time for us to pause a little, and to consider what these things mean; the wondrous works which Christ then forbade the publishing of being recorded in these sacred writings, are thereby published to all the world, to us, to all ages; now what shall we think of them? Is the record of those things designed only for an amusement, or to furnish us with matter for discourse? No, certainly, these things are written that we may believe that Jesus is the Christ the Son of God, John xx. 31. and this discourse Christ had with his disciples, will assist us in making the necessary reflections upon the miracles of Christ, and a right use of them. Three things we are here taught to infer from the miracles Christ wrought.

First, They prove that he is the true Messiah, the Son of God, the Saviour of the world: this the works he did witnessed concerning him: and this his disciples, who were the eye-witnesses of those works, here profess their belief of; which cannot but be a satisfaction to us in making the same inference from them.

1. Christ enquired of them what the sentiments of the people were concerning him. Whom do men say that I am? ver. 27. Note, Though it is a small thing for us to be judged of man's day, yet it may sometimes do us good to know what people say of us, not that we may seek our own glory, but may hear of our faults. Christ asked them, not that he might be informed, but that they might observe it themselves, and inform one another.

2. The account they gave him was such as plainly speaks the high opinion the people had of him. Though they came short of the truth, yet they were convinced by his miracles that he was an extraordinary person, sent from the invisible world with a divine commission. It is probable, they would have acknowledged him to be the Messiah, if they had not been possessed by their teachers with a notion that the Messiah must be a temporal prince, appearing in external pomp and power, which the figure Christ made would not comport with; yet (whatever the Pharisees said, whose copyhold was touched by the strictness and spirituality of his doctrine) none of the people said he was a deceiver, but some said he was John Baptist, others Elias, others one of the prophets, ver. 28. All agree he is one risen from the dead.

3. The account they gave him of their own sentiments concerning him, speak their abundant satisfaction in him, and in their having left all to follow him, which now, after some time of trial, they see no reason to repent, But whom say ye that I am? To this they have an answer ready, Thou art the Christ, the Messiah often promised and long expected, ver. 29. To be a Christian indeed is sincerely to believe that Jesus is the Christ, and to act accordingly; and that he is so, plainly appears by his wondrous works. This they knew, and must shortly publish and maintain, but for the present they must keep it secret, ver. 30. till the proof of it, was completed, and they were completely qualified to maintain it by the pouring out of the Holy Ghost, and then let all the house of Israel know assuredly that God has made this same Jesus, whom ye crucified, both Lord and Christ, Acts ii. 36.

Secondly, These miracles of Christ take off the offence of the cross, and assure us that Christ was in it not conquered, but a conqueror. Now the disciples are convinced that Jesus is the Christ, they may bear to hear of his sufferings, which Christ now begins to give them notice of, ver. 31.

1. Christ taught his disciples that he must suffer many things; though they had got over the vulgar error of the Messiah's being a temporal prince, so far as to believe their Master to be the Messiah, notwithstanding his present meanness, yet still they retained it so far as to expect that he would shortly appear in outward pomp and grandeur, and restore the kingdom to Israel; and, therefore to rectify that mistake, Christ here gives them a prospect of the contrary, that he must be rejected of the elders, and the chief priests, and the Scribes, who they expected should be brought to own and prefer him; that instead of being crowned, he must be killed, he must be crucified, and after three days he must rise again to a heavenly life, and to be no more in this world. This he spake openly, ver. 32. expone. He said it freely and plainly, and did not wrap it up in ambiguous expressions. The disciples might easily understand it, if they had not been very much under the power of prejudice: or, it intimates that he spoke it cheerfully and without any terror, and would have them to bear it so; he spake that saying boldly, as one that not not only knew he must suffer and die, but was resolved he would, and made it his own act and deed.

2. Peter opposed it: he took him, and began to rebuke him. Here Peter shewed more love than discretion, a zeal for Christ and his safety, but not according to knowledge. He took him, ἀπαρξάμενος αὐτόν. He took hold of him, as it were to stop and hinder him, took him in his arms and embraced him, so some understand it; he fell on his neck as impatient to hear that his dear Master should suffer such hard things; or he took him aside privately, and began to rebuke him. This was not the language of the least authority, but of the greatest affection, of that jealousy for the welfare of those we love, which is strong as death. Our Lord Jesus allowed his disciples to be free with him, but Peter here took too great a liberty.

3. Christ checked him for his opposition, ver. 33. He turned about as one offended, and looked on his disciples to see if the rest of them were of the same mind; and concurred with Peter in this, that if they did, they might take the reproof to themselves, which he was now about to give to Peter; and he said, Get thee behind me, Satan. Peter little thought to have had such a sharp rebuke for such a kind dissuasive, but perhaps expected as much commendation now for his love as he had lately had for his faith. Note, Christ sees that amiss in what we say and do which we ourselves are not aware of, and knows what manner of spirit we are of, when we ourselves do not. (1.) Peter spoke as one that did not rightly understand, nor had duly considered the purposes and counsels of God. When he saw such proofs, as he every day saw of the power of Christ, he might conclude that he could not be compelled to suffer, the most potent enemies could not overpower him, whom diseases and death, whom winds and waves and devils themselves were forced to obey and yield to: and when he saw so much of the wisdom of Christ every day, he might conclude that he would not chuse to suffer, but for some very great and glorious purposes; and therefore he ought not thus to have contradicted him, but to have acquiesced. He looked upon his death only as a martyrdom, like that of the prophets, which he thought might be prevented, if either he would take a little care not to provoke the chief priests, or to keep out of the way; but he knew not that the thing was necessary for the glory of God, the destruction of Satan, and the salvation of man, that the Captain of our salvation must be made perfect through sufferings, and so must bring many sons to glory. Note, The wisdom of man is perfect folly, when it pretends to give measures to the divine counsels: the cross of Christ, the greatest instance of God's power and wisdom, was to some a stumbling block, and to others foolishness. (2.) Peter spoke as one that did not rightly understand, nor had duly considered the nature of Christ's kingdom: he took it to be temporal and human, whereas it is spiritual and divine. Thou savourest not the things that be of God, but those that be of men; 'a σαρὰς, thou mindest not, so the word is rendered, Rom. viii. 5. Peter seemed to mind more the things that relate to the lower world and the life that now is, than those which relate to the upper world and the life to come. Minding the things of men more than the things of God; our own credit, ease and safety, more than the things of God and his glory, and his kingdom, is a very great sin, and the root of much sin, and very common among Christ's disciples: and it will appear in suffering times, those times of temptation, when those in whom the things of men have the ascendant, are in danger of falling off. Non sapis, thou art not wise (so it may be read) in the things of God, but in the things of men. It is considerable what generation we appear wise in, Luke xvi. 8. It seems policy to shun trouble, but if with that we shun duty, it is fleshly wisdom, 2 Cor. i. 12. and it will be folly in the end.

Thirdly, These miracles of Christ should engage us all to follow him whatever it cost us, not only as they were confirmations of his mission, but as they were explications of his design, and the tendency of that grace which he came to bring; plainly intimating, that by his Spirit he would do that for our blind, deaf, lame, leprous, diseased, possessed souls, which he did for the bodies of those many who in those distresses applied themselves to him. Frequent notice had been taken of the great flocking that there was to him for help in various cases: now this is written that we may believe that he is the great physician of souls, and may become his patients, and submit to his regimen; and here he tells us upon what terms we may be admitted; and he called all the people to him to hear this, who modestly stood at some distance when he was in private conversation with his disciples. This is that which all are concerned to know, and consider, if they expect Christ should heal their souls.

1. They must not be indulgent of the ease of the body, for, ver. 34. Whoever will come after me for spiritual cures, as these people do for bodily cures, let him deny himself and live a life of self-denial, mortification, and contempt of the world; let him not pretend to be his own physician, but renounce all confidence in himself and his own righteousness and strength, and let him take up his cross, comforting himself to the pattern of a crucified Jesus, and accommodating himself to the will of God in all the afflictions he lies under; and thus let him continue to follow me, as many of those did whom Christ healed: those that will be Christ's patients must attend on him, converse with him, receive instruction and reproof from him, as those did that followed him, and must resolve they will never forsake him.

2. They must not be solicitous, no not for the life of the body, when they cannot keep it without quitting Christ, ver. 35. Are we invited by the words and works of Christ; to follow him, let us sit down and count the cost, whether we can prefer our advantages by Christ before life itself, whether you can bear to think of losing our life for Christ's sake and the Gospel's. When the devil is drawing away disciples and servants after him, he conceals the worst of it, tells them only of the pleasure, but nothing of the peril in the service of Christ he tells us of it before, tells us we shall suffer, perhaps we shall die in the cause; and represents the discouragements not less but greater than commonly they prove, that it may appear he deals fairly with us; and he is not afraid we should know the worst; because the advantages of his service abundantly suffice to balance the discouragements, if we will but impartially set the one over against the other. In short,

1. We must not dread the loss of our lives, provided it be in the cause of Christ, ver. 35. Whosoever will save his life by declining Christ, and refusing to come to him, or by disowning and denying him, after he has in profession come to Christ, he shall lose it, shall lose the comfort of his natural life, the root and fountain of his spiritual life, and all his hopes of eternal life, such a bad bargain will he make for himself: but whosoever shall lose his life, shall be truly willing to lose it, shall venture it, shall lay it down when he cannot keep it without denying Christ, he shall save it, i. e. he shall be an unspeakable gainer; for the loss of his life shall be made up to him in a better life. It is looked upon to be some kind of recompence to those who lose their lives in the service of their prince and country to have their memories honoured and their families provided for; but what is that to the recompence which Christ makes in eternal life to all that die for him?

2. We must dread the loss of our souls, yea, though we should gain the whole world by it, ver. 36, 37. For what shall it profit a man if he should gain the whole world, and all the wealth, honour, and pleasure in it, by denying Christ, and lose his own soul. True it is, said Bishop Hooper the night before he suffered martyrdom, that life is sweet, and death is bitter, but eternal death is more bitter, and eternal life is more sweet; so that as the happiness of heaven with Christ is enough to countervail the loss of life itself for Christ, so the gain of all the world in sin, is not sufficient to countervail the ruin of the soul by sin.

What that is that men do to save their lives and gain the world, he tells us, ver. 38. and of what fatal consequence it will be to them: Whosoever therefore shall be ashamed of me, and of my words, in this adulterous and sinful generation, of him shall the Son of man be ashamed. Something like this we had, Matt. x. 33. but is here expressed more fully. Note. (1.) The disadvantage that the cause of Christ labours under in this world is, that it is to be owned and professed in an adulterous and sinful generation, such the generation of mankind is, gone a whoring from God, in the impure embraces of the world and the flesh, lying in wickedness; some ages, some places are more especially adulterous and sinful, as that was in which Christ lived; in such a generation the cause of Christ is opposed and run down, and those that own it are exposed to reproach and contempt, and every where ridiculed and spoken against. (2.) There are many, who though they cannot but own that the cause of Christ is a righteous cause, yet are ashamed of it because of the reproach that attends the professing of it; they are ashamed of their relation to Christ, and ashamed of the credit they cannot but give to his words; they cannot bear to be frowned upon and despised, and therefore throw off their profession, and go down the stream of a prevailing apostacy. (3.) There is a day coming when the cause of Christ will appear as bright and illustrious as now it appears mean and contemptible; when the Son of man comes in the glory of his Father, with his holy angels, as the true Shechinah, the brightness of his Father's glory, and the Lord of angels. (4.) Those that are ashamed of Christ in this world where he is despised, he will be ashamed of them in that world where he is eternally adored. They shall not share with him in his glory then, that were not willing to share with him in his disgrace now.

C H A P. IX.

In this chapter we have, (1.) Christ's transfiguration upon the mount, ver. 1—13. 2. His casting the devil out of a child, where the disciples could not do it, ver. 14—21. 3. His prediction of his own sufferings, and death, ver. 30, 31, 32. (4.) The check he gave to his disciples for disputing who should be greatest, ver. 33—37. And to John for rebuking one who cast out devils in Christ's name, and did not follow with them, ver. 38—41. (2.) Christ's discourse with his disciple of the danger of offending one of his little ones, ver. 42 and of indulging that in ourselves which is an offence and an occasion of sin to us, ver. 43—50. most of which passages we had before, Matt. xxii. and xxiii.

1. AND he said unto them, Verily I say unto you, That there be some of them that stand here, which shall not taste of death, till they have seen the kingdom of God come with power. 2. ¶ And after six days Jesus taking with him Peter, and James, and John, and leadeth them up into an high mountain apart by themselves: and he was transfigured before them. 3. And his raiment became shining, exceeding white as snow; so as no fuller on earth can white them. 4. And there appeared unto them Elias with Moses: and they were talking with Jesus. 5. And Peter answered and said to Jesus, Master, is it good for us to be here: and let us make three tabernacles; one for thee, and one for Moses, and one for Elias. 6. For he wist not what to say; for they were sore afraid. 7. And there was a cloud that overshadowed them: and a voice came out of the cloud, saying, This is my beloved son: hear him. 8. And suddenly, when they had looked round about, they saw no man any more, save Jesus only with themselves. 9. And as they came down from the mountain he charged them that they should tell no man what things they had seen, till the Son of man were risen from the dead. 10. And they kept that saying with themselves, questioning one with another what the rising from the dead should mean. 11. ¶ And they asked him, saying, Why say the Scribes that Elias must first come? 12. And he answered and told them, Elias verily cometh first, and restoreth all things; and how it is written of the Son of man, that he must suffer many things, and be set at nought. 13. But I say unto you, That Elias is indeed come, and they have done unto him whatsoever they listed, as it is written of him.

Here is, 1. A prediction of Christ's kingdom now near approaching, ver. 1. That which is foretold is, (1.) That the kingdom of God would come, and would come so as to be seen; the kingdom of the Messiah shall be set up in the world by the utter destruction of the Jewish polity, which stood in the way of it; this was the restoring of the kingdom of God among men, which had been in a manner lost by the woful degeneracy both of Jews and Gentiles. (2.) That it would come with power; so as to make its own way, and bear down the opposition that was given to it. It came with power when vengeance was taken on the Jews for crucifying Christ, and when it conquered the idolatry of the Gentile world. (3.) That it would come while some now present were alive. There are some standing here that shall not taste of death till they see it; this speaks the same with Matt. xxiv. 34. This generation shall not pass, till all those things be fulfilled. Those that were standing here with Christ should see it, when the others could not discern it to be the kingdom of God, for it came not with observation.

2. A specimen of that kingdom in the transfiguration of Christ, six days after Christ spoke that. He had begun to give notice to his disciples of his death and sufferings; and to prevent their offence at that, he gives them this glimpse of his glory, to shew that his sufferings were voluntary, which was done but the other day, when I brake the five loaves among the five thousand, and soon after, the seven loaves among the four thousand? Do ye not remember how many baskets full ye took up of the fragments? Yes, they did remember, and could tell that they took up twelve baskets full one time, and seven another; why then, saith he, How is it that ye do not understand? As if he that multiplied five loaves, and seven, could not multiply one. They seemed to suspect that that one was not matter enough to work upon, if he should have a mind to entertain his hearers a third time. And if that was their thought, it was indeed a very senseless one, as if it were not all alike to the Lord to save by many or few, and as easy to make one loaf to feed five thousand, as five. It was therefore proper to mind them, not only of the sufficiency, but of the overplus of the former meals; and justly were they chidden for not understanding what Christ therein designed, and what they from thence might have learned. (1.) The experiences we have had of God's goodness to us in the way of duty, greatly aggravate our distrust of him, which is therefore very provoking to the Lord Jesus. (2.) Our not understanding the true intent and meaning of God's favours to us, is equivalent to our not remembering them. (3.) We are therefore overwhelmed with present cares and distrusts, because we do not understand, and remember, what we have known and seen of the power and goodness of our Lord Jesus. It would be a great support to us to consider the days of old, and we are wanting both to God and ourselves if we do not. (4.) When we thus forget the works of God and distrust him, we should chide ourselves severely for it, as Christ doth his disciples here: Am I thus without understanding? How is it that my heart is thus hardened?

22. ¶ And he cometh to Bethsaida; and they bring a blind man unto him, and besought him to touch him. 23. And he took the blind man by the hand, and led him out of the town; and when he had spit on his eyes, and put his hands upon him, he asked him if he saw ought. 24. And he looked up, and said, I see men as trees walking. 25. After that, he put his hands again upon his eyes, and made him look up: and he was restored, and saw every man clearly. 26. And he sent him away to his house, saying, Neither go into the town, nor tell it to any in the town.

This cure is related only by this evangelist, and there is something singular in the circumstances.

1. Here is a blind man brought to Christ by his friends, with a desire that he would touch him, ver. 22. Here appears the faith of those that brought him, they doubted not but one touch of Christ's hand would recover him his sight; but the man himself shewed not that earnestness for or expectation of a cure that other blind men did. If those that are spiritually blind do not pray for themselves, yet let their friends and relations pray for them that Christ would be pleased to touch them.

2. Here is Christ leading this blind man, ver. 23. He did not bid his friends lead him, but (which speaks his wonderful condescension) he himself took him by the hand and led him, to teach us to be as Job was, eyes to the blind, Job xxix. 15. Never had poor blind men such a leader. He led him out of the town: Had he herein only designed privacy, he might have led him into a house, into an inner chamber, and have cured him there; but he intended hereby to upbraid Bethsaida with the mighty works that had in vain been done in her, Mat. xi. 21. and was telling her, in effect, she was unworthy to have any more done within her walls. Perhaps Christ took the blind man out of the town, that he might have a larger prospect in the open fields, to try his sight with, than he could have in the close streets.

3. Here is the cure of the blind man, by that blessed Oculist who came into the world to preach the recovery of sight to the blind, Luke iv. 18. and to give what he preached. In this cure we may observe, (1.) That Christ used a sign: he spat on his eyes (spat into them, so some) and put his hand upon him. He could have cured him, as he did others, with a word speaking, but thus he was pleased to assist his faith, which was very weak, and to help him against his unbelief. And this spittle signified the eye-salve where-with Christ anoints the eyes of those that are spiritually blind, Rev. iii. 18. (2.) That the cure was wrought gradually, which was not usual in Christ's miracles. He asked him if he saw ought, ver. 23. Let him tell what condition his sight was in, for the satisfaction of those about him. And he looked up; so far he recovered his sight that he could open his eyes, and he said, I see men as trees walking, he could not distinguish men from trees, otherwise than that he could discern them to move. He had some glimmerings of sight, and betwixt him and the sky could perceive a man erect like a tree, but could not discern the form thereof, Job iv. 16. But, (3.) It was soon completed; Christ never doth his work by the halves, nor leaves it till he can say, It is finished. He put his hands again upon his eyes to perfect the remaining darkness, and then bade him look up again, and he saw every man clearly, ver. 25. Now Christ took this way, (1.) Because he would not tie him, if to a method, but would shew with what liberty he acted in all he did. He did not cure by rote as I may say, and in a road, but varied as he thought fit. Providence gains the same end in different ways, that men may attend its motions with an implicit faith. (2.) Because it should be to the patient according to his faith; and perhaps this man's faith was at first very weak but afterwards gathered strength, and accordingly his cure was. Not that Christ always went by this rule, but thus he would sometimes put a rebuke upon those who came to him doubting. (3.) Thus Christ would shew how, and in what method, those are healed by his grace, who by nature are spiritually blind; at first their knowledge is confused, they see men as trees walking, but, like the light of the morning, it shines more and more to the perfect day, and then they see all things clearly, Prov. iv. 18. Let us enquire then, if we see ought of those things which faith is the substance and evidence of; and if through grace we see any thing of them, we may hope that we shall see yet more and more, for Jesus Christ will perfect for ever those that are sanctified.

4. The directions Christ gave the man he had cured not to tell it to any in the town of Bethsaida, nor so much as to go into the town, where probably there were some expecting him to come back, who had seen Christ lead him out of the town; but having been eye-witnesses of so many miracles, had not so much as the curiosity to follow him: let not such be gratified with the sight of him when he was cured, that would not shew so much respect to Christ as to go a step out of town to see this cure wrought. Christ doth not forbid him to tell it to others, but he must not tell it to any in the town. Slighting Christ's favours is forfeiting them; and Christ will make those know the worth of their privileges by the want of them, that would not know them otherwise. Bethsaida in the day of her visitation would not know the things that belonged to her peace, and now they are hid from her eyes. They will not see, and therefore shall not see.

27. ¶ And Jesus went out, and his disciples, into the towns of Cæsarea-Philippi: and by the way he asked his disciples, saying unto them, Whom do men say that I am? 28. And they answered, John the Baptist: but some say, Elias; and others, One of the prophets. 29. And he saith unto them, But whom say ye that I am? And Peter answereth and saith unto him, Thou art the Christ. 30. And he charged them that they should tell no man of him. 31. And he began to teach them, that the Son of man must suffer many things, and be rejected of the elders, and of the chief priests, and Scribes, and be killed, and after three days rise again. 32. And he spake that saying openly. And Peter took him, and began to rebuke him. 33. But when he had turned about and looked on his disciples, he rebuked Peter, saying, Get thee behind me, Satan: for thou savourest not the things that be of God, but the things that be of men. 34. ¶ And when he had called the people unto him with his disciples also, he said unto them, Whosoever will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow me. 35. For whosoever will save his life, shall lose it; but whosoever shall lose his life for my sake and the gospel's, the same shall save it. 36. For what shall it profit a man, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul? 37. Or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul? 38. Whosoever therefore shall be ashamed of me, and of my words, in this adulterous and sinful generation, of him also shall the Son of man be ashamed, when he cometh in the glory of his Father, with the holy angels.

We have read a great deal of the doctrine that Christ preached, and the miracles he wrought, which were many and strange, and well attested, of various kinds, wrought in several places to the astonishment of the many that were eye-witnesses of them. It is now time for us to pause a little, and to consider what these things mean; the wondrous works which Christ then forbade the publishing of being recorded in these sacred writings, are thereby published to all the world, to us, to all ages; now what shall we think of them? Is the record of those things designed only for an amusement, or to furnish us with matter for discourse? No, certainly, these things are written that we may believe that Jesus is the Christ the Son of God, John xx. 31. and this discourse Christ had with his disciples, will assist us in making the necessary reflections upon the miracles of Christ, and a right use of them. Three things we are here taught to infer from the miracles Christ wrought.

First, They prove that he is the true Messiah, the Son of God, the Saviour of the world: this the works he did witnessed concerning him; and this his disciples, who were the eye-witnesses of those works, here profess their belief of; which cannot but be a satisfaction to us in making the same inference from them.

1. Christ enquired of them what the sentiments of the people were concerning him. Whom do men say that I am? ver. 27. Note, Though it is a small thing for us to be judged of man's day, yet it may sometimes do us good to know what people say of us, not that we may seek our own glory, but may hear of our faults. Christ asked them, not that he might be informed, but that they might observe it themselves, and inform one another.

2. The account they gave him was such as plainly speaks the high opinion the people had of him. Though they came short of the truth, yet they were convinced by his miracles that he was an extraordinary person, sent from the invisible world with a divine commission. It is probable, they would have acknowledged him to be the Messiah, if they had not been possessed by their teachers with a notion that the Messiah must be a temporal prince, appearing in external pomp and power, which the figure Christ made would not comport with; yet (whatever the Pharisees said, whose copyhold was touched by the strictness and spirituality of his doctrine) none of the people said he was a deceiver, but some said he was John Baptist, others Elias, others one of the prophets, ver. 28. All agree he is one risen from the dead.

3. The account they gave him of their own sentiments concerning him, speak their abundant satisfaction in him, and in their having left all to follow him, which now, after some time of trial, they see no reason to repent, But whom say ye that I am? To this they have an answer ready, Thou art the Christ, the Messiah often promised and long expected, ver. 29. To be a Christian indeed is sincerely to believe that Jesus is the Christ, and to act accordingly; and that he is so, plainly appears by his wondrous works. This they knew, and must shortly publish and maintain, but for the present they must keep it secret, ver. 30. till the proof of it was completed, and they were completely qualified to maintain it by the pouring out of the Holy Ghost, and then let all the house of Israel know assuredly that God has made this same Jesus, whom ye crucified, both Lord and Christ, Acts ii. 36.

Secondly, These miracles of Christ take off the offence of the cross, and assure us that Christ was in it not conquered, but a conqueror. Now the disciples are convinced that Jesus is the Christ, they may bear to hear of his sufferings, which Christ now begins to give them notice of, ver. 31.

1. Christ taught his disciples that he must suffer many things; though they had got over the vulgar error of the Messiah's being a temporal prince, so far as to believe their Master to be the Messiah, notwithstanding his present meanness, yet still they retained it so far as to expect that he would shortly appear in outward pomp and grandeur, and restore the kingdom to Israel; and therefore to rectify that mistake, Christ here gives them a prospect of the contrary, that he must be rejected of the elders, and the chief priests, and the Scribes, who they expected should be brought to own and prefer him; that instead of being crowned, he must be killed, he must be crucified, and after three days he must rise again to a heavenly life, and to be no more in this world. This he spake openly, ver. 32. expone. He said it freely and plainly, and did not wrap it up in ambiguous expressions. The disciples might easily understand it, if they had not been very much under the power of prejudice: or, it intimates that he spoke it cheerfully and without any terror, and would have them to bear it so; he spake that saying boldly, as one that not not only knew he must suffer and die, but was resolved he would, and made it his own act and deed.

2. Peter opposed it: he took him, and began to rebuke him. Here Peter shewed more love than discretion, a zeal for Christ and his safety, but not according to knowledge. He took him, πειράζοντες αὐτόν. He took hold of him, as it were to stop and hinder him, took him in his arms and embraced him, so some understand it; he fell on his neck as impatient to hear that his dear Master should suffer such hard things: or he took him aside privately, and began to rebuke him. This was not the language of the least authority, but of the greatest affection, of that jealousy for the welfare of those we love, which is strong as death. Our Lord Jesus allowed his disciples to be free with him, but Peter here took too great a liberty.

3. Christ checked him for his opposition, ver. 33. He turned about as one offended, and looked on his disciples to see if the rest of them were of the same mind; and concurred with Peter in this, that if they did, they might take the reproof to themselves, which he was now about to give to Peter; and he said, Get thee behind me, Satan. Peter little thought to have had such a sharp rebuke for such a kind dissuasive, but perhaps expected as much commendation now for his love as he had lately had for his faith. Note, Christ sees that amiss in what we say and do which we ourselves are not aware of, and knows what manner of spirit we are of, when we ourselves do not. (1.) Peter spoke as one that did not rightly understand, nor had duly considered the purposes and counsels of God. When he saw such proofs, as he every day saw of the power of Christ, he might conclude that he could not be compelled to suffer, the most potent enemies could not overpower him, whom diseases and death, whom winds and waves and devils themselves were forced to obey and yield to: and when he saw so much of the wisdom of Christ every day, he might conclude that he would not chuse to suffer, but for some very great and glorious purposes; and therefore he ought not thus to have contradicted him, but to have acquiesced. He looked upon his death only as a martyrdom, like that of the prophets, which he thought might be prevented, if either he would take a little care not to provoke the chief priests, or to keep out of the way; but he knew not that the thing was necessary for the glory of God, the destruction of Satan, and the salvation of man, that the Captain of our salvation must be made perfect through sufferings, and so must bring many sons to glory. Note, The wisdom of man is perfect folly, when it pretends to give measures to the divine counsels: the cross of Christ, the greatest instance of God's power and wisdom, was to some a stumbling block, and to others foolishness. (2.) Peter spoke as one that did not rightly understand, nor had duly considered the nature of Christ's kingdom: he took it to be temporal and human, whereas it is spiritual and divine. Thou savourest not the things that be of God, but those that be of men; ἐσθλὰς, thou mindest not, so the world is rendered. Rom. viii. 5. Peter seemed to mind more the things that relate to the lower world and the life that now is, than those which relate to the upper world and the life to come. Minding the things of men more than the things of God; our own credit, ease and safety, more than the things of God and his glory, and his kingdom, is a very great sin, and the root of much sin, and very common among Christ's disciples: and it will appear in suffering times, those times of temptation, when those in whom the things of men have the ascendant, are in danger of falling off. Non sapis, thou art not wise (so it may be read) in the things of God, but in the things of men. It is considerable what generation we appear wise in, Luke xvi. 8. It seems policy to shun trouble, but if with that we shun duty, it is fleshy wisdom, 2 Cor. i. 12. and it will be folly in the end.

Thirdly, These miracles of Christ should engage us all to follow him whatever it cost us, not only as they were confirmations of his mission, but as they were explications of his design, and the tendency of that grace which he came to bring; plainly intimating, that by his Spirit he would do that for our blind, deaf, lame, leprous, diseased, possessed souls, which he did for the bodies of those many who in those distresses applied themselves to him. Frequent notice had been taken of the great flocking that there was to him for help in various cases: now this is written that we may believe that he is the great physician of souls, and may become his patients, and submit to his regimen; and here he tells us upon what terms we may be admitted; and he called all the people to him to hear this, who modestly stood at some distance when he was in private conversation with his disciples. This is that which all are concerned to know, and consider, if they expect Christ should heal their souls.

1. They must not be indulgent of the ease of the body, for, ver. 34. Whoever will come after me for spiritual cures, as these people do for bodily cures, let him deny himself and live a life of self-denial, mortification, and contempt of the world; let him not pretend to be his own physician, but renounce all confidence in himself and his own righteousness and strength, and let him take up his cross, comforting himself to the pattern of a crucified Jesus, and accommodating himself to the will of God in all the afflictions he lies under; and thus let him continue to follow me, as many of those did whom Christ healed: those that will be Christ's patients must attend on him, converse with him, receive instruction and reproof from him, as those did that followed him, and must resolve they will never forsake him.

2. They must not be solicitous, no not for the life of the body, when they cannot keep it without quitting Christ, ver. 35. Are we invited by the words and works of Christ, to follow him, let us sit down and count the cost, whether we can prefer our advantages by Christ before life itself, whether you can bear to think of losing our life for Christ's sake and the Gospel's. When the devil is drawing away disciples and servants after him, he conceals the worst of it, tells them only of the pleasure, but nothing of the peril in the service of Christ he tells us of it before, tells us we shall suffer, perhaps we shall die in the cause; and represents the discouragements not less but greater than commonly they prove, that it may appear he deals fairly with us; and he is not afraid we should know the worst; because the advantages of his service abundantly suffice to balance the discouragements, if we will but impartially set the one over against the other. In short,

1. We must not dread the loss of our lives, provided it be in the cause of Christ, ver. 35. Whoever will save his life by declining Christ, and refusing to come to him, or by disowning and denying him, after he has in profession come to Christ, he shall lose it, shall lose the comfort of his natural life, the root and fountain of his spiritual life, and all his hopes of eternal life, such a bad bargain will he make for himself: but whosoever shall lose his life, shall be truly willing to lose it, shall venture it, shall lay it down when he cannot keep it without denying Christ, he shall save it, i. e. he shall be an unspeakable gainer; for the loss of his life shall be made up to him in a better life. It is looked upon to be some kind of recompence to those who lose their lives in the service of their prince and country to have their memories honoured and their families provided for; but what is that to the recompence which Christ makes in eternal life to all that die for him?

2. We must dread the loss of our souls, yea, though we should gain the whole world by it, ver. 36, 37. For what shall it profit a man if he should gain the whole world, and all the wealth, honour, and pleasure in it, by denying Christ, and lose his own soul. True it is, said Bishop Hooper the night before he suffered martyrdom, that life is sweet, and death is bitter, but eternal death is more bitter, and eternal life is more sweet; so that as the happiness of heaven with Christ is enough to countervail the loss of life itself for Christ, so the gain of all the world in sin, is not sufficient to countervail the ruin of the soul by sin.

What that is that men do to save their lives and gain the world, he tells us, ver. 38. and of what fatal consequence it will be to them: Whoever therefore shall be ashamed of me, and of my words, in this adulterous and sinful generation, of him shall the Son of man be ashamed. Something like this we had, Matt. x. 33. but is here expressed more fully. Note, (1.) The disadvantage that the cause of Christ labours under in this world is, that it is to be owned and professed in an adulterous and sinful generation, such the generation of mankind is, gone a whoring from God, in the lure embraces of the world and the flesh, lying in wickedness: some ages, some places are more especially adulterous and sinful, as that was in which Christ lived; in such a generation the cause of Christ is opposed and run down, and those that own it are exposed to reproach and contempt, and every where ridiculed and spoken against. (2.) There are many, who though they cannot but own that the cause of Christ is a righteous cause, yet are ashamed of it because of the reproach that attends the professing of it; they are ashamed of their relation to Christ, and ashamed of the credit they cannot but give to his words; they cannot bear to be frowned upon and despised, and therefore throw off their profession, and go down the stream of a prevailing apostasy. (3.) There is a day coming when the cause of Christ will appear as bright and illustrious as now it appears mean and contemptible; when the Son of man comes in the glory of his Father, with his holy angels, as the true Simeonah, the brightness of his Father's glory, and the Lord of angels. (4.) Those that are ashamed of Christ in this world where he is despised, he will be ashamed of them in that world where he is eternally adored. They shall not share with him in his glory then, that were not willing to share with him in his disgrace now.

CHAP. IX.

In this chapter we have, (1.) Christ's transfiguration upon the mount, ver. 1—13. 2. His casting the devil out of a child, where the disciples could not do it, ver. 14—21. 3. His prediction of his own sufferings, and death, ver. 30, 31, 32. (4.) The check he gave to his disciples for disputing who should be greatest, ver. 33—37. And to John for rebuking one who cast out devils in Christ's name, and did not follow with them, ver. 38—41. (5.) Christ's discourse with his disciples of the danger of offending one of his little ones, ver. 42 and of indulging that in ourselves which is an offence and an occasion of sin to us, ver. 43—50. most of which passages we had before, Matt. xvii. and xxiii.

1. AND he said unto them, Verily I say unto you, That there be some of them that stand here, which shall not taste of death, till they have seen the kingdom of God come with power. 2. ¶ And after six days Jesus taking with him Peter, and James, and John, and leadeth them up into an high mountain apart by themselves: and he was transfigured before them. 3. And his raiment became shining, exceeding white as snow; so as no fuller on earth can white them. 4. And there appeared unto them Elias with Moses: and they were talking with Jesus. 5. And Peter answered and said to Jesus, Master, is it good for us to be here: and let us make three tabernacles; one for thee, and one for Moses, and one for Elias. 6. For he wist not what to say; for they were sore afraid. 7. And there was a cloud that overshadowed them: and a voice came out of the cloud, saying, This is my beloved son: hear him. 8. And suddenly, when they had looked round about, they saw no man any more, save Jesus only with themselves. 9. And as they came down from the mountain he charged them that they should tell no man what things they had seen, till the Son of man were risen from the dead. 10. And they kept that saying with themselves, questioning one with another what the rising from the dead should mean. 11. ¶ And they asked him, saying, Why say the Scribes that Elias must first come? 12. And he answered and told them, Elias verily cometh first, and restoreth all things; and how it is written of the Son of man, that he must suffer many things, and be set at nought. 13. But I say unto you, That Elias is indeed come, and they have done unto him whatsoever they listed, as it is written of him.

Here is, 1. A prediction of Christ's kingdom now near approaching, ver. 1. That which is foretold is, (1.) That the kingdom of God would come, and would come so as to be seen; the kingdom of the Messiah shall be set up in the world by the utter destruction of the Jewish polity, which stood in the way of it; this was the restoring of the kingdom of God among men, which had been in a manner lost by the woeful degeneracy both of Jews and Gentiles. (2.) That it would come with power, so as to make its own way, and bear down the opposition that was given to it. It came with power when vengeance was taken on the Jews for crucifying Christ, and when it conquered the idolatry of the Gentile world. (3.) That it would come while some now present were alive. There are some standing here that shall not taste of death till they see it; this speaks the same with Matt. xxiv. 34. This generation shall not pass, till all those things be fulfilled. Those that were standing here with Christ should see it, when the others could not discern it to be the kingdom of God, for it came not with observation.

2. A specimen of that kingdom in the transfiguration of Christ, six days after Christ spoke that. He had begun to give notice to his disciples of his death and sufferings; and to prevent their offence at that, he gives them this glimpse of his glory, to shew that his sufferings were voluntary, and what a virtue the dignity and glory of his person would put into them, and to prevent the offence of the cross.

1. It was on the top of a high mountain, like the converse Moses had with God, which was on the top of mount Sinai, and his prospect of Canaan from the top of mount Pisgah: Tradition saith it was on the top of mount Tabor that Christ was transfigured; and if so, the scripture was fulfilled. Tabor and Hermon shall rejoice in thy name, Psalm lxxxix. 12, 13. Dr. Lightfoot observing that the last place where we find Christ, was in the coasts of Cæsarea Philippi, which was far from mount Tabor, rather thinks it was a high mountain which Josephus speaks of near Cæsarea.

2. The witnesses of it were Peter, James and John; these were three that were to bear record on earth, answering to Moses, Elias, and the voice from heaven, the three that were to bear record from above. Christ did not take all the disciples with him, because the thing was to be kept very private. As there are distinguishing favours which are given to disciples, and not to the world, so there are to some disciples and not to others. All the saints are a people near to Christ, but some lie in his bosom. James was the first of all the twelve that died for Christ, and John survived them all to be the last eye witness of this glory; he bore record, John i. 14. We saw his glory: and so did Peter, 2 Pet. i. 16, 17, 18.

3. The manner of it. He was transfigured before them; he appeared in another manner than he used to do. This was a change of the accidents, the substance remaining the same, as it was a miracle: But transubstantiation, the change of the substance, all the accidents remaining the same, is not a miracle, but a fraud and imposture, such a work as Christ never wrought. See what a great change human bodies are capable of when God is pleased to put an honour upon them, as he will upon the bodies of the saints at the resurrection. He was transfigured before them; it is likely the change was gradual, from glory to glory, so that the disciples, who had their eye upon him all the while, had the clearest and most certain evidence they could have, that this glorious appearance was no other than the blessed Jesus himself, and there was no illusion in it. John seems to refer to this, 1 John i. 1. when he speaks of the word of life, as that which they had seen with their eyes, and looked upon. His raiment became shining; so that though probably it was sad coloured, if not black, yet it was now exceeding white as snow, beyond what the fuller's art could do towards whitening it.

4. His companions in this glory were Moses and Elias, ver. 4. They appeared talking with him, not to teach him but to testify to him and to be taught by him: by which it appears there is converse and intercourse between glorified saints, they have ways of talking with one another which we understand not. Moses and Elias lived at a great distance of time one from another, but that breaks no squares in heaven, where the first shall be last, and the last first, that is, all one in Christ.

5. The great delight that the disciples took in seeing this sight, and hearing this discourse is expressed by Peter, the mouth of the rest. He said Master, it is good for us to be here, ver. 5. Though Christ was transfigured, and was in discourse with Moses and Elias, yet he gave Peter leave to speak to him, and to be as free with him as he used to be. Note, Our Lord Jesus in his exaltation and glory, doth not at all abate of his condescending kindness to his people. Many when they are in their greatness oblige their friends to keep their distance; but even to the glorified Jesus true believers have access with boldness, and freedom of speech with him. Even in this heavenly discourse there was room for Peter to put in a word; and this is it, Lord, It is good to be here, it is good for us to be here; here let us make tabernacles; let this be our rest for ever. Note, Gracious souls reckon it good to be in communion with Christ, good to be near him, good to be in the mount with him, though it be a cold and solitary place; it is good to be here retired from the world, and alone with Christ; and if it is good to be with Christ transfigured only upon a mountain with Moses and Elias, how good will it be to be with Christ glorified in heaven with all the saints! But observe, while Peter was for staying here, he forgot what need there was of the presence of Christ, and the preaching of his apostles among the people. At this very time the other disciples wanted them greatly, ver. 14. Note, When it is well with us, we are apt to be mindless of others, and in the fulness of our enjoyments to forget the necessities of our brethren; it was a weakness in Peter to prefer private communion with God before public usefulness. Paul is willing to abide in the flesh, rather than depart to the mountain of glory (though that be far better), when he sees it needful for the church, Phil. i. 24, 25. Peter talking of making three distinct tabernacles for Moses, Elias, and Christ, which was not well contrived: for such a perfect harmony there is between the law, the prophets, and the gospel, that one tabernacle will hold them all; they dwell together in unity. But whatever was incongruous in what he said, he may be excused, for they were all sore afraid; and he for his own part wist not what to say, ver. 6. not knowing what would be the end thereof.

6. The voice that came from heaven was an attestation of Christ's mediatorship, ver. 7. There was a cloud that overshadowed them, and was a shelter to them: Peter had talked of making tabernacles for Christ and his friends, but while he yet spake, see how his project was superseded; this cloud was unto them instead of tabernacles for their shelter, Isa. iv. 5. while he spake of his tabernacles, God created his tabernacle not made with hands. Now out of this cloud (which was but a shade to the excellent glory Peter speaks of, from whence this voice came) it was said, This is my beloved son, hear him. God owns him, and accepts him as his beloved Son, and is ready to accept of us in him; we must then own and accept him as our beloved Saviour, and must give up ourselves to be ruled by him.

7. The vision being designed only to introduce this voice, when that was delivered disappeared, ver. 8. Suddenly when they had looked round about, as men amazed to see where they were, all was gone, they saw no man any more: Elias and Moses were vanished out of sight, and Jesus only remained with them, and he not transfigured, but as he used to be. Note, Christ doth not leave the soul, when extraordinary joys and comforts leave it. Though more sensible and ravishing communions may be withdrawn, Christ's disciples have, and shall have his ordinary presence with them always, even to the end of the world, and that is it we must depend upon. Let us thank God for daily bread, and not expect a continual feast on this side heaven.

8. We have here the discourse between Christ and his disciples, as they came down from the mount.

1. He charged them to keep this matter very private till he was risen from the dead, which would complete the proof of his divine mission, and then this must be produced with the rest of the evidence, ver. 9. and besides, he being now in a state of humiliation, would have nothing publicly taken notice of that might seem disagreeable to such a state: for to that he would in every thing accommodate himself. This enjoining of silence to the disciples, would likewise be of use to them to prevent their boasting of the intimacy they were admitted to, that they might not be puffed up with the abundance of the revelations. It is a mortification to a man to be tied up from telling of his advancements, and may help to hide pride from him.

2. The disciples were at a loss what the rising of the dead should mean; they could not form any notion of the Messiah's dying, Luke xviii. 31. and therefore were willing to think that the rising he speaks of was figurative, his rising from his present mean and low estate to the dignity and dominion they were in expectation of. But if so, here is another thing that embarrassed them, ver. 11. Why say the scribes that before the appearing of the Messiah in his glory, according to the order settled in the prophecies of the Old Testament Elias must first come? but Elias was gone, and Moses too: Now that which raised this difficulty was, that the Scribes taught them to expect the person of Elias, whereas the prophecy intended one in the spirit and power of Elias. Note, The misunderstanding of scripture is a great prejudice to the entertainment of truth.

3. Christ gave them a key to the prophecy concerning Elias, ver. 17, 18. It is indeed prophesied that Elias will come, and will restore all things, and set them to rights: and (though you will not understand it) it is also prophesied of the Son of man that he must suffer many things, and be set at nought, must be a reproach of men, and despised of the people; And though the Scribes do not tell you so, the scriptures do, and you have as much reason to expect that as the other, and should not make so strange of it; but as to Elias, I tell you, he is come; and if you consider a little, you will understand who I mean, it is one to whom they have done whatsoever they listed, which was very applicable to the ill usage they had given John Baptist. Many of the ancients, and the Popish writers generally, think, that besides the coming of John Baptist in the spirit of Elias, himself in his own person is to be expected, with Enoch, before the second appearance of Christ, wherein the prophecy of Malachi will have a more full accomplishment than it had in John Baptist. But it is a groundless fancy: the true Elias, as well as the true Messiah promised is come, and we are to look for no other. These words, as it is written of him, refer not to their doing to him whatsoever they listed, that comes in a parenthesis, but only to his coming: He is come, and hath been, and done according as it was written of him.

14. ¶ And when he came to his disciples, he saw a great multitude about them, and the Scribes questioning with them. 15. And straightway all the people, when they beheld him, were greatly amazed, and running to him saluted him. 16. And he asked the Scribes, what question ye with them? 17. And one of the multitude answered and said, Master, I have brought unto thee my son, which hath a dumb spirit; 18. And wheresoever he taketh him he teareth him: and he foameth, and gnasheth with his teeth, and pineth away: and I spake to thy disciples that they shouldst cast him out; and they could not. 19. He answereth him, and saith, O faithless generation, how long shall I be with you? how long shall I suffer you? bring him unto me. 20. And they brought him unto him: and when he saw him, straightway the spirit tare him; and he fell on the ground, and wallowed foaming. 21. And he asked his father, How long is it ago since this came unto him? And he said, Of a child. 22. And oft-times it hath cast him unto the fire, and into the waters to destroy him: but if thou canst do any thing, have compassion on us, and help us. 23. Jesus said unto him, If thou canst believe, all things are possible to him that believeth. 24. And straightway the father of the child cried out, and said with tears, Lord, I believe; help thou mine unbelief. 25. When Jesus saw that the people came running together, he rebuked the foul spirit, saying unto him, Thou dumb and deaf spirit, I charge thee, come out of him, and enter no more into him. 26. And the spirit cried, and rent him sore, and came out of him: and he was as one dead; insomuch that many said, He is dead. 27. But Jesus took him by the hand, and lifted him up; and he arose. 28. And when he was come into the house, his disciples asked him privately, Why could not we cast him out? 29. And he said unto them, This kind can come forth by nothing, but by prayer and fasting.

We have here the story of Christ's casting the devil out of a child, somewhat more fully related than it was, Matt. xvii. 14. &c. Observe here,

1. Christ's return to his disciples, and the perplexity he found them in. He laid aside his robes of glory, and came to look after his family, and to enquire what was become of them. Christ's glory above doth not make him forget the concerns of his church below, which he visits in great humility, ver. 14. And he came very seasonably, when the disciples were embarrassed and run a-ground; the scribes, who were sworn enemies both to him and them, had gained an advantage against them: A child possessed with a devil was brought to them, and they could not cast out the devil, whereupon the scribes insulted over them, and reflected upon their Master, and triumphed as if the day were his own. He found the scribes questioning with them, in the hearing of the multitude, some of whom perhaps began to be shocked by it. Thus Moses went, when he came down from the mount found the camp of Israel in great disorder, so soon were Christ and Moses missed. Christ's return was very welcome, no doubt, to the disciples, and unwelcome to the Scribes. But particular notice is taken of its being very surprising to the people, who perhaps were ready to say, As for this Jesus, we wot not what is become of him; but when they beheld him coming, to them again, they were greatly amazed; some copies add, καὶ ἐξέστησαν, and they were afraid, and running to him; some copies for ἐκπληκτοὶ read ἐκχαρίσθησαν, congratulating him, or bidding him welcome they saluted him. It is easy to give a reason why they should be glad to see him; but why were they amazed, greatly amazed, when they beheld him? Probably, there might remain something unusual in his countenance; as Moses's face shone when he came down from the mount, which made the people afraid to come nigh him, Exod. xxxiv. 30. So perhaps did Christ's face in some measure; at least instead of seeming fatigued, there appeared a wonderful briskness and sprightliness in his looks, which amazed them.

2. The case which perplexed the disciples brought before him. He asked asked the Scribes, who he knew were always vexatious to his disciples, and teasing them upon every occasion, What question ye with them? What is the quarrel now? The scribes made no answer, for they were confounded at his presence; the disciples made none, for they were comforted, and now left all to him. But the father of the child opened the cause, ver. 17, 18. (1.) His child is possessed with a dumb spirit. He has the falling-sickness, and in his fits is speechless; his case is very sad, for wheresoever the fit takes him, the spirit tears him, throws him into such violent convulsions as almost pull him to pieces; and, which is very grievous to himself, and frightful to those about him, he foams at the mouth, and gnasheth with his teeth, as one in pain and great misery; and though the fits go off presently, yet they leave him so weak that he pines away, is worn to a skeleton; his flesh is dried away, so the word signifies, Psal. cii. 3, 4, 5. This was a constant affliction to a tender father. (2.) The disciples cannot give him any relief. I desired they would cast him out, as they had done many, and they would willingly have done it, but they could not; and therefore thou couldest never have come in better time, Master, I have brought him to thee.

3. The rebuke he gave to them all, ver. 19. O faithless generation, how long shall I be with you? How long shall I suffer you? Dr. Hammond understands this as spoken to the disciples, reproving them for not exerting the power he had given them, and because they did not fast and pray, as in some cases he had directed them to do. But Dr. Whitby takes it as a rebuke to the Scribes, who gloried in this balk that the disciples met with, and hoped to run them down with it. Then he calls a faithless generation, and speaks as one weary of being with them, and of bearing with them. We never here him complaining how long shall I be in this low condition, and suffer that? But how long shall I be among these faithless people, and suffer them?

4. The deplorable condition that the child was actually in, when he was brought to Christ, and the doleful representation which the father made of it. When the child saw Christ, he fell into a fit, the spirit straightway tore him, boiled within him, troubled him, so Dr. Hammond; as if the devil would set Christ at defiance, and hoped to be too hard for him too, and to keep possession in spite of him. The child fell on the ground and wallowed foaming. We may put another construction upon it, that the devil raged; and had so much the greater wrath, because he knew that his time was short, Rev. xii. 12. Christ asked, How long since this came to him? And it seems the disease was so long standing, it came to him of a child, ver. 21. which made the case the more sad, and the cure the more difficult. We are all by nature children of disobedience, and in such the evil spirit works, and has done so from our childhood; for foolishness is bound in the heart of a child, and nothing but the mighty grace of Christ can cast it out.

5. The pressing instances which the father of the child makes with Christ for a cure, ver. 22. Oft-times it has cast him into the fire, and into the waters to destroy him. Note, The devil aims at the ruin of those in whom he rules and works, and seeks whom he may devour. But if thou canst do any thing, have compassion on us, and help us. The leper was confident of Christ's power, but put an if upon his will, Matt. viii. 2. If thou wilt, thou canst. This poor man referred himself to his good-will, put an if upon his power, because his disciples, who cast out devils in his name, had been non-plussed in this case. Thus Christ suffers in his honour by the difficulties and follies of his disciples.

6. The answer Christ gave to this address, ver. 23. If thou canst believe, all things are possible to him that believeth. Here, (1.) He tacitly checks the weakness of his faith. He put it upon Christ's power, If thou canst do any thing, and reflected on the want of power in the disciples; but Christ turns it upon him, and puts him upon questioning his own faith, and will have him impute the disappointment to the want of that: if thou canst believe. (2.) He graciously encourageth the strength of his desire; all things are possible, i. e. will appear possible to him that believes the almighty power of God, to which all things are possible: or that shall be done by the grace of God, for them that believe in the promise of God, which seemed utterly impossible. Note, In dealing with Christ very much is put upon our believing, and very much promised to it. Canst thou believe? i. e. darest thou believe? Art thou willing to venture thy all in the hands of Christ? To venture all thy spiritual concerns with him, and all thy temporal concerns for him? Canst thou find in thy heart to do this? If so, it is not possible but that though thou hast been a great sinner thou mayest be reconciled; though thou art very mean and unworthy, thou mayest get to heaven. If thou canst believe, it is possible that thy hard heart may be softened, thy spiritual diseases may be cured; and that weak as thou art, thou mayest be able to hold out to the end.

7. The profession of faith which the poor man made hereupon, ver. 24. He cried out, Lord, I believe, I am fully persuaded both of thy power and of thy pity; it shall never stick at that, Lord, I believe; And the prayer he made for grace to enable him more firmly to rely upon the assurances he had of the ability and willingness of Christ to save, Help thou my unbelief. Note, 1. Even those who through grace can say, Lord, I believe, yet have reason to complain of their unbelief; that they cannot so readily apply to themselves and their own case, the word of Christ as they should, nor so cheerfully depend upon it. 2. Those that complain of unbelief, must look up to Christ for grace to help them against it, and his grace shall be sufficient for them. Help mine unbelief, help me to a pardon for it, help me with power against it, help out what is wanting in my faith with thy grace, the strength of which is perfected in our weakness.

8. The cure of the child, and the conquest of this raging devil in the child. Christ saw the people come running together, expecting to see the issue of this trial of skill, and therefore kept them in suspense no longer, but rebuked the foul spirit, the unclean spirit, so it should be rendered as in other places. Observe, (1.) What the charge was which Christ gave to this unclean spirit. Thou dumb and deaf spirit, that makest the poor child dumb and deaf, but shalt thyself be made to hear thy doom, and not be able to say any thing against it, Come out of him immediately, and enter no more into him. Let him not only be brought out of this fit, but let his fits never return. Note, Whom Christ cures he cures effectually. Satan may go out himself and yet recover possession; but if Christ cast him out he will keep him out. (2.) How the unclean spirit took it; he grew yet more outrageous, he cried and rent him sore, gave him such a twitch at parting that he was as one dead; so loth was he to quit his hold, and so exasperated at the superior power of Christ; and so malicious to the child, and so vain he would have killed him, Many said, He is dead. Thus the toss that a soul is in at the breaking of Satan's power in it, may perhaps be frightful for the present, but opens the door to lasting comfort. (3.) How the child was perfectly restored, ver. 27. Jesus took him by the hand, ἐκράναεν, took fast hold of him, and strongly bore him up, and he arose and recovered, and all was well.

9. The reason he gave to the disciples why they could not cast out this devil: They enquired of him privately why they could not, that wherein they were defective might be made up another time, and they might not be again thus publicly shamed; and he told them, ver. 29. This kind can come forth by nothing but by prayer and fasting. Whatever other difference there really might be, none appears between this and other kinds, but that the unclean spirit had had possession of this poor patient from a child, and that strengthened his interest and confirmed his hold. When vicious habits are rooted by long usage, and begin to plead prescription, like chronic diseases they are hardly cured. Can the Aethiopian change his skin? The disciples must not think to do their work always with a like ease; some services call them to take more than ordinary pains; but Christ can do that with a word's speaking which they must prevail for the doing of by prayer and fasting.

30. ¶ And they departed thence, and passed through Galilee; and he would not that any man should know it. 31. For he taught his disciples, and said unto them, The Son of man is delivered into the hands of men, and they shall kill him; and after that he is killed, he shall rise the third day. 32. But they understood not that saying, and were afraid to ask him. 33. ¶ And he came to Capernaum: and being in the house he asked them, What was it that ye disputed among yourselves by the way? 34. But they held their peace: for by the way they had disputed among themselves, who should be the greatest. 35. And he sat down, and called the twelve, and saith unto them, If any man desire to be first, the same shall be last of all, and servant of all. 36. And he took a child, and set him in the midst of them: and when he had taken him in his arms, he said unto them, 37. Whosoever shall receive one of such children in my name, receiveth me: and whosoever shall receive me, receiveth not me, but him that sent me. 38. ¶ And John answered him, saying, Master, we saw one casting out devils in thy name, and he followeth not us: and we forbid him, because he followeth not us. 39. But Jesus said, Forbid him not: and there is no man which shall do a miracle in my name, that can lightly speak evil of me. 40. For he that is not against us is on our part.

Here, 1. Christ foretells his own approaching sufferings. He passed through Galilee with more expedition than usual, and would not that any man should know it, ver. 30. because he had done many mighty and good works among them in vain, they shall not be invited to see them and have the benefit of them as they have been. The time of his sufferings drew nigh, and therefore he was willing to be private a while; and to converse only with his disciples, to prepare them for the approaching trial, ver. 31. He said to them, the Son of man is delivered by the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God into the hands of men, ver. 31. and they shall kill him. Had he been delivered into the hands of the devils, and they had worried him it had not been so strange; but that men, who have reason, and should have love, that they should be thus spiteful to the Son of man, who came to redeem and save them, is unaccountable. But still it is observable that when Christ spoke of his death he always spoke of his resurrection, which took away the reproach of it from himself, and should take away the grief of it from his disciples. But they understood not that saying, ver. 32. The words were plain enough, but they could not be reconciled to the thing, and therefore would suppose them to have some mystical meaning which they did not understand, and they were afraid to ask him; not because he was difficult of access, or stern to those who consulted him, but either because they were loth to know the truth, or because they expected to be chidden for their backwardness to receive it. Many remain ignorant because they are ashamed to enquire.

2. He rebukes his disciples for magnifying themselves. When he came to Capernaum, he privately asked his disciples what it was that they disputed among themselves by the way? ver. 33. He knew very well what the dispute was, but he would know it from them, and would have them to confess their fault and folly in it. Note, (1.) We must all expect to be called to an account by our Lord Jesus, concerning what passed while we are in the way in this state of passage and probation. (2.) We must in a particular manner be called to an account about our discourses among ourselves, for by our words we must be justified or condemned. (3.) As often our discourses among ourselves by the way, so especially our disputes will be all called over again, and we shall be called to an account about them. (4.) Of all disputes, Christ will be sure to reckon with his disciples for their disputes about precedency and superiority; That was the subject of the debate here, who should be the greatest, ver. 34. Nothing could be more contrary to the two great laws of Christ's kingdom, lessons of his school, and instructions of his example, which are humility and love, than desiring preferment in the world and disputing about it. This ill temper he took all occasions to check, both because it arose from a mistaken notion of his kingdom, as if it were of this world; and because it tended so directly to the debasing of the honour and the corrupting of the purity of his gospel, and he foresaw would be so much the bane of the church.

Now, 1. They were willing to cover this fault, ver. 34. they held their peace. As they would not ask, ver. 32. because they were ashamed to own their ignorance, so here they would not answer because they were ashamed to own their pride. (2.) He was willing to amend his fault in them, and to bring them to a better temper; and therefore sat down that he might have a solemn and full discourse with them about this matter: he called the twelve to him, and told them, (1.) That ambition and affectation of dignity and dominion instead of gaining them preferment in his kingdom would but postpone their preferment; If any man desire and aim to be first, he shall be last: he that exalteth himself shall be abased, and men's pride shall bring them low. (2.) That there is no preferment to be had under him, but an opportunity for, and an obligation to so much the more labour and condescension. If any man desire to be first, when he is so, he must be so much the more busy and serviceable to every body: he that desires the office of a bishop desires a good work, for he must as St. Paul did, labour the more abundantly and make himself the servant of all. (3.) That those who are most humble and self-denying do most resemble Christ, and shall be more tenderly owned by him. This he taught them by a sign, he took a child in his arms, that had nothing of pride and ambition in it. Look you, saith he, whosoever shall receive one like this child receives me. Those of a humble, meek, mild disposition, are such as I will own and countenance, and encourage every body else to do so too, and will take what is done to them as done to myself; and so will my Father too, for he who thus receives me, receiveth him that sent me, and it shall be placed to his account and repaid with interest.

3. He rebukes them for vilifying all but themselves; while they are striving which of them should be greatest, they will not allow those who are not in communion with them to be any thing. Observe,

1. The account which John gave him of the restraint they had laid upon one from making use of the name of Christ, because he was not of their society. Though they were ashamed to own their contests for preferment, they seem to boast of this exercise of their authority, and expected their Master could not only justify them in it, but commend them for it; and hoped he would not blame them for desiring to be great, when they would thus use their power for the maintaining of the honour of the sacred college: Master, said John, we saw one casting out devils in thy name, but he followed not us, ver. 38. (1.) It was strange that one that was not a professed disciple and follower of Christ, should yet have power to cast out devils in his name, for that seemed to be peculiar to those whom he called, chap. vi. 7. But some think that he was a disciple of John, who made use of the name of the Messiah, not as come, but as near at hand, not knowing that Jesus was he: it should rather seem he made use of the name of Jesus, believing him to be the Christ, as the other apostles did: and why might not he receive that the power of Christ, whose Spirit like the wind blows where it listeth, without such an outward call as the apostles had, and perhaps there were many more such? Christ's grace is not tied to the visible church. (2.) It was strange that one who cast out devils in the name of Christ, did not join himself to the apostles and follow Christ with them, but should continue to act in separation from them. I know of nothing that could hinder him from following them, unless because he was loth to leave all and follow them, and if so that was an ill principle. The thing did not look well, and therefore the disciples forbade him to make use of Christ's name as they did, unless he would follow him as they did. This was like the motion Joshua made concerning Eldad and Medad that prophesied in the camp, and went not up with the rest to the door of the tabernacle, My Lord Moses forbid them, Numb. xi. 28. Restrain them, silence them, for it is a schism. Thus apt are we to imagine that those do not follow Christ at all that do not follow him with us, and that those do nothing well who do not just as we do. But the Lord knows them that are his however they are dispersed; and this instance gives us a needful caution, to take heed lest we be carried by an excess of zeal for the unity of the church, and for that which we are sure is right and good, to oppose that which yet may tend to the enlargement of the church, and the advancement of its true interest another way.

2. The rebuke he gave to them for this, ver. 39. Jesus said, forbid him not, nor any other that do likewise. This was like the check Moses gave to Joshua, enviest thou for my sake? Note, that which is good, and doth good must not be prohibited, though there may be some defect or irregularity in the manner of doing it. Casting out devils, and so destroying Satan's kingdom, doing this in Christ's name, and so owning him to be sent of God, and giving honour to him as the fountain of grace, preaching down sin, and preaching up Christ, are good things, very good things, which ought not to be forbidden to any, merely because they follow not with us. If Christ be preached, Paul therein doth and will rejoice though he be eclipsed by it, Phil. i. 18. Two reasons Christ gives why such should not be forbidden. (1.) Because we cannot suppose that any man that makes use of Christ's name in working miracles should blaspheme his name, as the Scribes and Pharisees did. There were those indeed that did in Christ's name cast out devils, and yet in other respects were workers of iniquity, but they did not speak evil of Christ. (2.) Because those that differed in communion, while they agreed to fight against Satan under the banner of Christ ought to look upon one another as on the same side notwithstanding that difference. He that is not against us, is on our part. As to the great controversy between Christ and Beelzebub, he had said, He that is not with me is against me, Matt. xii. 30. He that will not own Christ owns Satan. But among those that own Christ, though not in the same circumstances, that follow him, though not with us, we must reckon that though they differ from us, they are not against us, and therefore are on our part, and we must not be any hindrance to their usefulness.

41. For whosoever shall give you a cup of water to drink in my name, because ye belong to Christ, verily I say unto you, ye shall not lose his reward. 42. And whosoever shall offend one of these little ones that believe in me, it is better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck, and he were cast into the sea. 43. And if thy hand offend thee, cut it off: it is better for thee to enter into life maimed, than having two hands to go into hell, into the fire that never shall be quenched: 44. Where their worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched. 45. And if thy foot offend thee, cut it off: it is better for thee to enter halt into life, than having two feet to be cast into hell, into the fire that never shall be quenched: 46. Where their worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched. 47. And if thine eye offend thee, pluck it out: it is better for thee to enter into the kingdom of God with one eye, than having two eyes to be cast into hell fire. 48. Where their worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched. 49. For every one shall be salted with fire, and every sacrifice shall be salted with salt. 50. Salt is good: but if the salt have lost his saltness, wherewith will ye season it? Have salt in yourselves, and have peace one with another.

Here, 1. Christ promiseth a reward to all those that are any way kind to his disciples, ver. 41. Whosoever shall give you a cup of water when you need it, and it will be a refreshment to you, because ye belong to Christ and are of his family, he shall not lose his reward. Note, (1.) It is the honour and happiness of Christians that they belong to Christ, they have joined themselves to him and are owned by him; they wear his livery as retainers to his family; nay, they are more nearly related, they are members of his body. (2.) They who belong to Christ may sometimes be reduced to such straits as to be glad of a cup of cold water. (3.) The relieving of Christ's poor in their distresses is a good deed, and will turn to a good account; he accepts it and will reward it. (4.) What kindness is done to Christ's poor, must be done them for his sake, and because they belong to him; for that is it that sanctifies the kindness and puts a value upon it in the sight of God. (5.)

This is a reason why we must not discountenance and discourage those who are serving the interests of Christ's kingdom, though they are not in every thing of our mind and way. It comes in here as a reason why those must not be hindered that cast out devils in Christ's name, though they did not follow him: for (as Dr. Hammond paraphraseth it) "It is not only the great eminent performances which are done by you my constant attendants and disciples that are accepted by me, but every the least degree of sincere faith and Christian performance, proportionable but to the expressing the least kindness, as giving a cup of water to a disciple of mine for being such shall be accepted and rewarded." If Christ reckons kindnesses to us services to him, we ought to reckon services to him kindnesses to us, and to encourage them, though done by those that follow not with us.

2. He threatens those that offend his little ones, that wilfully are the occasion of sin or trouble to them, ver. 42. whosoever shall grieve any true Christians, though they be of the weakest, shall oppose their entrance into the ways of God, or discourage and obstruct their progress in those ways, shall either restrain them from doing good, or draw them in to commit sin, it were better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck, and he were cast into the sea: his punishment will be very great, and the death and ruin of his soul, more terrible than such a death and ruin of his body would be. See Matt. xviii. 6.

3. He warns all his followers to take heed of ruining their own souls. This charity must begin at home; if we must take heed of doing any thing to hinder others from good, and to occasion their sin; much more careful must we be to avoid every thing that will take us off from our duty or lead us to sin; and that which doth so we must part with it though it be never so dear to us. This we had twice in Matthew, chap. v. 29, 30. and chap. xviii. 8, 9. It is here urged somewhat more largely and pressingly; certainly this requires our serious regard, which is so much insisted upon. Observe,

1. The case supposed, that our own hand or eye, or foot offend us, that the impure corruption we indulge is as dear to us as an eye or a hand; or that that which is to us as an eye or a hand, is become an invincible temptation to sin or occasion of it. Suppose the beloved is become a sin, or the sin a beloved. Suppose we cannot help that which is dear to us, but it will be a share and a stumbling-block; suppose we must part with it, or part with Christ and a good conscience.

2. The duty prescribed in that case; pluck out the eye, cut off the hand and foot, mortify the darling lust, kill it, crucify it, starve it, make no provision for it. Let the idols that have been delectable things be cast away as detestable things; keep at a distance from that which is a temptation though never so pleasing. It is necessary the part that is gangrened should be taken off for the preservation of the whole. Immedicabile vulnus ense recidendum est, ne pars sincera trahatur. We must put ourselves to pain, that we may not bring ourselves to ruin; self must be denied, that it may not be destroyed.

3. The necessity of doing this. The flesh must be mortified, that we may enter into life, ver. 43—45. into the kingdom of God, ver. 47. Though by abandoning sin, we may for the present feel ourselves, as if we were halt and maimed, it may seem to be a force put upon ourselves, and may create us some uneasiness, yet it is for life, and all that men have they will give for their lives: It is for a kingdom, the kingdom of God, which we cannot otherwise obtain; these halts and maims will be the marks of the Lord Jesus, will be in that kingdom scars of honour.

4. The danger of not doing this. The matter is brought to this issue, that either sin must die or we must die; if we will lay this Delilah in our bosom it will betray us; if we be ruled by sin we shall inevitably be ruined by it. If we must keep our two hands, and two eyes, and two feet, we must with them be cast into hell. Our Saviour often pressed our duty upon us from the consideration of the torments of hell, which we run ourselves into if we continue in sin. With what an emphasis of terror are those words repeated three times here, Where their worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched? which is quoted from Isa. lxi. 24. (1.) The reflections and reproaches of the sinner's own conscience are the worm that dieth not; which will cleave to the damned soul as the worms do to the dead body, and prey upon it, and never leave it till it is quite devoured. Son, remember, will set this worm a gnawing, and how terribly will it bite with that word, Prov. v. 22—23. How have I hated instruction! The soul that is food to this worm dies not, and the worm is bred in it and one with it, and therefore neither doth that die. Damned sinners will be to eternity accusing, condemning, and upbraiding themselves with their own follies, which, how much soever they are now in love with them, will at the last bite like a serpent, and sting like an adder. (2.) The wrath of God fastening upon a guilty and polluted conscience, is the fire that is not quenched; for it is the wrath of the living God, the eternal God, into whose hands it is a fearful thing to fall. There are no operations of the Spirit of grace upon the souls of damned sinners, and therefore there is nothing to alter the nature of the fuel, which must remain for ever combustible: nor is there any application of the merit of Christ to them, and therefore there is nothing to appease or quench the violence of the fire. Dr. Whitby shews, that the eternity of the torments of hell was not only the constant faith of the Christian church, but had been so of the Jewish church. Josephus saith, that the Pharisees held that the souls of the wicked were to be punished with perpetual punishment; and that there was appointed for them a perpetual prison. And Philo saith the punishment of the wicked is to live for ever dying, and to be for ever in pains and griefs that never cease.

The two last verses are somewhat difficult, and interpreters agree not in the sense of them; for every one in general, or rather every one of them that are cast into hell shall be salted with fire, and every sacrifice shall be salted with salt. Therefore have salt in yourselves. (1.) It was appointed by the law of Moses, that every sacrifice should be salted with salt, not to preserve it, for it was to be immediately consumed, but because it was the food of God's table, and no flesh is eaten without salt; it is therefore particularly required in the meat-offerings, Lev. ii. 12. (2.) The nature of man being corrupt, and as such being called flesh, (Gen. vi. 3. Psalm lxxviii. 39.) some way or other must be salted, in order to its being a sacrifice of God. The salting of fish (and I think of other things) they call the curing of it. (3.) Our chief concern is, to present ourselves living sacrifices to the grace of God, Rom. xii. 1. and in order to our acceptableness we must be salted with salt, i. e. our corrupt affections must be subdued and mortified; and we must have in our souls a favour of grace. Thus the offering up, or sacrificing of the Gentiles, is said to be acceptable, being sanctified by the Holy Ghost, as the sacrifices were salted, Rom. xv. 16. (4.) Those that have the salt of grace must make it appear that they have it; that they have salt in themselves, a living principle of grace in their hearts, which works out all corrupt dispositions, and every thing in the soul that tends to putrefaction, and would offend our God, to our own consciences, as unsavoury meat doth. Our speech must be always with grace seasoned with this salt, that no corrupt communication may proceed out of our mouth, but we may loathe it as much as we would to put stinking meat into our mouths. (5.) As this gracious salt will keep our own consciences void of offence, so it will keep our our conversation with others so, that we may not offend any of Christ's little ones, but may be at peace one with another. (6.) We must not only have this salt of grace, but we must always retain the relish and savour of it, for if this salt lose its saltness; if a Christian revolt from his Christianity, if he lose the savour of it, and be no longer under the power and influence of it, what can recover him? or wherewith will you season him? This was said, Matt. v. 13. (7.) Those that present not themselves living sacrifices to God's grace, shall be made for ever dying sacrifices to his justice, and since they would not give honour to him, he will get him honour upon them; they would not be salted with the salt of divine grace, would not admit that to subdue their corrupt affections, no, they would not submit to the operation, could not bear the corrosives that were necessary to eat out the proud flesh, it was to them like cutting off a hand, or plucking out an eye; and therefore in hell they shall be salted with fire; coals of fire shall be scattered upon them, Ezek. x. 2. as salt upon the meat, and brimstone, Job xviii. 15. as fire and brimstone were rained on Sodom; the pleasures they have lived in, shall eat their flesh, as it were fire, James v. 3. The pain of mortifying the flesh now is no more to be compared with the punishment for not mortifying it, than salting with burning. And since he had said, that the fire of hell shall not be quenched, but it might be objected that the fuel will not last always, he here intimates, that by the power of God it shall be made to last always, for those that are cast into hell will find the fire to have not only the corroding quality of salt, but its preserving quality; from whence it is used to signify that which is lasting; a covenant of salt is a perpetual covenant. And Lot's wife being turned into a pillar of salt, made her a remaining monument of divine vengeance. Now since this will certainly be the doom of those that do not crucify the flesh with its affections and lusts, let us, knowing this terror of the Lord, be persuaded to do it.

CHAP. X.

In this chapter we have, (1.) Christ's dispute with the Pharisees concerning divorce, ver. 1—12. (2.) The kind entertainment he gave to the little children that were brought to him to be blessed, ver. 13—16. (3.) His trial of the rich man, that enquired what he must do to get to heaven, ver. 17—22. (4.) His discourse with his disciples upon that occasion, concerning the peril of riches, ver. 23—27. and the advantage of being impoverished for his sake, ver. 28—31. (5.) The repeated notice he gave his disciples of his sufferings and death approaching, ver. 32—34. (6.) The counsel he gave to James and John to think of suffering with him, rather than of reigning with him, ver. 35—48. (7.) The cure of Bartimeus, a poor blind man, ver. 46—52. All which passages of story we had the substance of before, Matt. xix. and xx.

1. AND he arose from thence, and cometh into the coasts of Judea by the farther side of Jordan: and the people resort unto him again; and, as he was wont, he taught them again. 2. ¶ And the Pharisees came to him, and asked him, Is it lawful for a man to put away his wife? tempting him; 3. And he answered and said unto them, What did Moses command you? 4. And they said, Moses suffered to write a bill of divorcement, and to put her away. 5. And Jesus answered and said unto them, For the hardness of your heart he wrote you this precept. 6. But from the beginning of the creation God made them male and female. 7. For this cause shall a man leave his father and mother, and cleave to his wife; 8. And they twain shall be one flesh: So then they are no more twain, but one flesh. 9. What therefore God hath joined together, let no man put asunder. 10. And in the house his disciples asked him again of the same matter. 11. And he said unto them, Whosoever shall put away his wife, and marry another, committeth adultery against her. 12. And if a woman shall put away her husband, and be married to another, she committeth adultery.

Our Lord Jesus was an itinerant preacher; did not continue long in a place, for the whole land of Canaan was his parish or diocese, and therefore he would visit every part of it, and give instructions to those in the remotest corners of it. Here we have him in the coasts of Judea, by the farther side of Jordan eastward, as we found him not long since, in the utmost borders westward, near Tyre and Sidon. Thus was his circuit like that of the sun, from whose light and heat nothing is hid. Now here we have him,

1. Resorted to by the people, ver. 1. wherever he was, they flocked after him in crowds: they came to him again, as they had done, when he had formerly been in these parts, and, as he was wont, he taught them again. Note, Preaching was Christ's constant practice; it was what he was used to, and wherever he came he did as he was wont. In Matthew it is said, he healed them, here it is said, he taught them; his cures were to confirm his doctrine and to recommend it, and his doctrine was to explain his cures and illustrate them. His teaching was healing to poor souls; He taught them again. Note, Even those whom Christ hath taught, have need to be taught again. Such is the fulness of the Christian doctrine, that there is still more to be learned, and such our forgetfulness, that we need to be minded of what we do know.

2. We have him disputed with by the Pharisees, who envied the progress of his spiritual arms, and did all they could to obstruct and oppose it; to divert him, to perplex him, and to prejudice the people against him.

Here is, 1. A question they started concerning divorce, ver. 2. Is it lawful for a man to put away his wife? This was a good question, if it had been well put, and with a humble desire to know the mind of God in this matter; but they proposed it tempting him, seeking an occasion against him and an opportunity to expose him, which side soever he should take of the question. Ministers must stand upon their guard, lest under pretence of being advised they may be ensnared.

2. Christ's reply to them with a question, ver. 3. What did Moses command you. This he asked them, to testify his respect to the law of Moses, and to shew that he came not to destroy it: and to engage them to an universal impartial respect for Moses's writings, and to compare one part of them with another.

3. The fair account they gave of what they found in the law of Moses, expressly concerning divorce, ver. 4. Christ asked, What Moses commanded? they own Moses only suffered or permitted a man to write his wife a bill of divorce, and to put her away, Deut. xxiv. 1. If you will do it you must do it in writing, delivered into her own hand, and so put her away, and never return to her again.

4. The answer that Christ gave to their question, in which he abides by the doctrine he had formerly laid down in this case, Matt. v. 32. That whosoever puts away his wife, except for fornication, causeth her to commit adultery. And to clear this he here shews,

1. That the reason why Moses in his law permitted divorce was such, as that they ought not to make use of that permission; for it was only for the hardness of their hearts, ver. 5. lest if they were not permitted to divorce their wives, they should murder them; so that none must put away their wives, but such as are willing to own that their hearts were so hard as to need this permission.

2. That the account which Moses, in this history, gives of the institution of marriage affords such a reason against divorce, as amounts to a prohibition of it. So that if the question be, What did Moses command? ver. 3. it must be answered, though by a temporary proviso he allowed divorce to the Jews, yet by an eternal reason he forbade it to all the children of Adam and Eve, and that is it we must abide by.

Moses tells us, 1. That God made man, male and female, one male, and one female; so that Adam could not put away his wife and take another, for there was no other to take, which was an intimation to all his sons, that they must not. (2.) When this male and this female were, by the ordinance of God, joined together in holy marriage, the law was, that a man must leave his father and mother, and cleave to his wife, ver. 7. which intimates not only the nearness of the relation, but the perpetuity of it: he shall so cleave to his wife as not to be separated from her. (3.) The result of the relation is, that though they are two, yet they are one, they are one flesh, ver. 8. The union between them is the most intimate that can be, and, as Dr. Hammond expresseth it, a sacred thing that must not be violated. (4.) God himself has joined them together; he has not only as Creator fitted them to be comforts and helps meet for each other, but he has in wisdom and goodness appointed them, who are thus joined together, to live together in love till death parts them. Marriage is not an invention of men, but a divine institution; and therefore is to be religiously observed, and the more, because it is a figure of the mystical inseparable union between Christ and his church.

Now from all this he infers, that men ought not to put their wives asunder from them, whom God has put so near to them. The bond which God himself has tied, is not to be lightly untied. They who are for divorcing their wives for every offence, would do well to consider what would become of them, if God should in like manner deal with them. See Isa. l. 1. Jer. iii. 1.

5. Christ's discourse with his disciples in private about this matter, ver. 10, 11. It was an advantage to them, that they had opportunity of personal converse with Christ, not only about gospel mysteries, but about moral duties, for their further satisfaction. No more is here related of this private conference, but the law Christ laid down in this case. That it is adultery for a man to put away his wife and marry another: it is adultery against the wife he puts away, it is a wrong to her, and a breach of his contract with her, ver. 11. He adds, if a woman shall put away her husband, i.e. elope from him, leave him by consent, and be married to another, she commits adultery, ver. 12. and it will be no excuse at all to her to say, that it was with the consent of her husband. Wisdom and grace, holiness and love, reigning in the heart, will make those commands easy, which to the carnal mind may be as a heavy yoke.

13. And they brought young children to him, that he should touch them; and his disciples rebuked those that brought them. 14. But when Jesus saw it, he was much displeased, and said unto them, Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not: for of such is the kingdom of God. 15. Verily I say unto you, Whosoever shall not receive the kingdom of God as a little child, he shall not enter therein. 16. And he took them up in his arms, put his hands upon them, and blessed them.

It is looked upon as the indication of a kind and tender disposition to take notice of little children, and this was remarkable in our Lord Jesus; which is an encouragement not only to little children to apply themselves to Christ when they are very young, but to grown people, who are conscious to themselves of weakness and childishness, and of being, through manifold infirmities, helpless and useless like other children. Here we have,

1. Little children brought to Christ, ver. 13. Their parents, or whoever they were that had the nursing of them, brought them to him that he should touch them, in token of his commanding and conferring a blessing on them. It doth not appear they needed any bodily cure, nor were they capable of being taught: But it seems, (1.) They that had the care of them were mostly concerned about their souls, their better part, which ought to be the principal care of all parents for their children; for it is the principal part, and it is well with them, if it be well with their souls. (2.) They believed that Christ's blessing would do their souls good, and therefore to him they bring them, that he might touch them, knowing that he could reach their hearts, when nothing their parents could say to them or do for them would reach them. We may present our children to Christ now he is in heaven, for from thence he can reach them with his blessing, and therein we may act faith upon the fulness and extent of his grace, the kind intimation he hath always given of favour to the seed of the faithful, the tenor of the covenant with Abraham, and the promise to us and our children, especially that great promise of pouring his Spirit upon our seed, and his blessing upon our offspring; Isa. xlv. 3.

2. The discouragement which the disciples gave to the bringing of children to Christ. They rebuked them that brought them; as if they had been sure they knew their Master's mind in this matter, whereas he had lately cautioned them not to despise the little ones.

3. The encouragement Christ gave to it. (1.) He took it very ill at his disciples for keeping them off: When he saw it he was much displeased, ver. 14. What do you mean? Will you hinder me from doing good, from doing good to the rising generation, to the lambs of the flock? Christ is very angry with his own disciples, if they discountenance any in coming to him themselves, or in bringing their children to him. (2.) He ordered that they should be brought to him, and nothing said or done to hinder them, suffer little children, as soon as they are capable, to come to me, to offer up their supplications to me, and to receive instructions from me. Little children are welcome betimes to the throne of grace with their hosannas. (3.) He owned them as members of his church, as they had been of the Jewish church. He came to set up the kingdom of God among men, and took this occasion to declare that that kingdom admitted little children to be the subjects of it, and gave them a title to the privileges of subjects. Nay, the kingdom of God is to be kept up by such: they must be taken in when they are little children, that they may be secured for hereafter, to bear up the name of Christ. (4.) That there must be something of the temper and disposition of little children found in all that Christ will own and bless. We must receive the kingdom of God as little children, ver. 15. That is, we must stand affected to Christ and his grace, as little children do to their parents, nurses, and teachers. We must be inquisitive, as children, must learn as children, that is the learning age, and in learning must believe, Oportet discentem credere. The mind of a child is white paper (tabula rasa) you may write upon it what you will, so must our minds be to the pen of the blessed Spirit. Children are under government, so must we be: Lord, what wilt thou have me to do? We must receive the kingdom of God as the child Samuel did, Speak, Lord, for thy servant heareth. Little children depend upon their parents wisdom and care, are carried in their arms, go where they send them, and take what they provide for them; and thus must we receive the kingdom of God, with a humble resignation of ourselves to Jesus Christ, and an easy dependance upon him, both for strength and righteousness, for tuition, provision and a portion. (5.) He received the children, and gave them what was desired, ver. 16. He took them up in his arms, in token of his affectionate concern for them, put his hands upon them, as was desired, and blessed them. See how he out-did the desires of these parents; they begged he would touch them, but he did more. 1. He took them in his arms. Now the scripture was fulfilled, Isa. xl. 11. He shall gather the lambs in his arms, and carry them in his bosom. Time was, when Christ himself was taken up in old Simeon's arms, Luke ii. 28. And now he took up these children, not complaining of the burden, as Moses did, when he was bid to carry Israel (that peevish child) in his bosom, as a nursing father bears the sucking child, Numb. xi. 12. but pleased with it. If we in a right manner bring our children to Christ, he will take them up not only in the arms of his power and providence, but in the arms of his pity and grace, as Ezek. xvi. 3. underneath them are the everlasting arms. 2. He put his hands upon them, noting the bestowing of his Spirit upon them, (for that is the hand of the Lord) and his setting them apart for himself. 3. He blessed them with the spiritual blessings he came to give. Our children are happy, if they have but the Mediator's blessing for their portion. It is true, we do not read that he baptised these children, baptism was not fully settled at the door of admission into the church, till after Christ's resurrection; but he asserted their visible church-membership, and by another sign bestowed those blessings upon them, which are now appointed to be conveyed and conferred by baptism, the seal of the promise, which is to us and to our children.

17. ¶ And when he was gone forth into the way, there came one running, and kneeled to him, and asked him, Good Master, what shall I do that I may inherit eternal life? 18. And Jesus said unto him, Why callest thou me good? there is none good but one, that is, God. 19. Thou knowest the commandments, Do not commit adultery, Do not kill, Do not steal, Do not bear false witness, Defraud not, Honour thy father and mother. 20. And he answered and said unto him, Master, all these have I observed from my youth. 21. Then Jesus beholding him loved him, and said unto him, One thing thou lackest: go thy way, sell whatsoever thou hast, and give to the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven: and come take up the cross, and follow me. 22. And he was sad at that saying, and went away grieved: for he had great possessions. 23. ¶ And Jesus looked round about, and saith unto his disciples, How hardly shall they that have riches enter into the kingdom of God! 24. And the disciples were astonished at his words. But Jesus answereth again, and saith unto them, Children, how hard is it for them that trust in riches to enter into the kingdom of God! 25. It is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle, than for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of God. 26. And they were astonished out of measure, saying among themselves, who then can be saved? 27. And Jesus looking upon them saith, With men it is impossible, but not with God: for with God all things are possible. 28. ¶ Then Peter began to say unto him, Lo, we have left all, and have followed thee. 29. And Jesus answered and said, Verily I say unto you, There is no man that hath left house, or brethren, or sisters, or father, or mother, or wife, or children, or lands, for my sake and the gospel's, 30. But he shall receive an hundred-fold now in this time, houses, and brethren, and sisters, and mothers, and children, and lands, with persecutions: and in the world to come eternal life. 31. But many that are first shall be last, and the last first.

Here is, 1. A hopeful meeting between Christ and a young man, so he is said to be, Matth. xix. 20, 21, 22. and a ruler, Luke xviii. 18. a person of quality. Some circumstances here are, which we had not in Matthew, which makes his address to Christ very promising.

(1.) He came running to Christ, which was an indication of his humility; he laid aside the gravity and grandeur of a ruler, when he came to Christ; and of his earnestness and importunity: he ran as one in haste, and longing to be in conversation with Christ. He had now an opportunity of consulting this great prophet, in the things that belonged to his peace, and he would not let slip the opportunity.

(2.) He came to him when he was in the way, in the midst of the company;

he did not insist upon a private conference with him by night, as Nicodemus did, though like him he was a ruler, but when he shall find him without, will embrace that opportunity of advising with him, and not be ashamed, Cant. viii. 1.

(3.) He kneeled to him, in token of the great value and veneration he had for him, as a teacher come from God, and his earnest desire to be taught by him. He bowed the knee to the Lord Jesus, as one that would not only do obedience to him now, but would yield obedience to him always; he bowed the knee, as one that meant to bow the soul to him.

(4.) His address to him was serious and weighty. Good Master, what shall I do, that I may inherit eternal life? Eternal life was an article of his creed, though then denied by the Sadducees, a prevailing party: he thinks it a thing possible, that he may inherit eternal life, looking upon it not only as set before us, but offered to us; he asks, What he shall do now that he may be happy for ever? Most men enquire for good to be had in this world. Psal. iv. 6. Any good, he asks for good to be done in this world in order to the enjoyment of the greatest good in the other world; not who will make us to see good, but to do good: he enquires for happiness in the way of duty, the summum bonum, which Solomon was in quest of, was that good for the sons of men which they should do, Eccl. ii. 3. Now this was, (1.) A very serious question in itself, it was about eternal things, and his own concern in those things. Note, Then there begins to be some hope of people, when they begin to enquire solicitously, what they shall do to get to heaven. (2.) It was proposed to a right person, one that was every way fit to answer it, being himself the way, the truth, and the life, the true way to life, to eternal life; who came from heaven on purpose, first to lay open for us, and then to lay open to us; first to make and then to make known the way to heaven. Note, Those who would know what they shall do to be saved, must apply themselves to Christ and enquire of him; it is peculiar to the Christian religion both to shew eternal life and to shew the way to it. (3.) It was proposed with a good design, to be instructed. We find this same question put by a lawyer, not kneeling but standing up, Luke x. 25. with a bad design, to pick quarrels with him, he tempted him, saying, Master, what shall I do? it is not so much the good words as the good intention of them that Christ looks at.

(5.) Christ encouraged this address. (1.) By assisting his faith, ver. 17. He called him good Master, and Christ would have him mean thereby, that he looked upon him to be God, since there is none good but one, that is God, who is one, and his name one; Zech. xiv. 9. Our English word God, doubtless hath affinity with good; as the Hebrews name God by his power Elohim, the strong God; so we by his goodness, the good God. (2.) By directing his practice, ver. 19. Keep the commandments, and thou knowest what they are; he mentions the six commandments of the second table, which prescribe our duty to our neighbour; he inverts the order, putting the seventh commandment before the sixth, to intimate that adultery is a sin no less heinous than murder itself. The fifth commandment is here put last, as that which should especially be remembered and observed, to keep us to all the rest. Instead of the tenth commandment, Thou shalt not covet, our Saviour here puts defraud not, Mn amartimonos; That is, saith Dr. Hammond, Thou shalt rest contented with thy own, and not seek to increase it by the diminution of other men's. It is a rule of justice not to advance or enrich ourselves by doing wrong or injury to any other.

(6.) The young man bid fair for heaven, having been free from any open gross violations of the divine commands. Thus far he was able to say in some measure, ver. 20. Master, all these have I observed from my youth; he thought he had, and his neighbours thought so too. Note, Ignorance of the extent and spiritual nature of the divine law, makes people think themselves in a better condition than really they are. Paul was alive without the law. But when he saw that, to be spiritual, he saw himself to be carried, Rom. vii. 9—14. However he that could say, he was free from scandalous sin, went further than many in the way to eternal life. But though we know nothing by ourselves, yet are we not thereby justified.

(7.) Christ had a kindness for him, Jesus beholding him, loved him, ver. 21. He was pleased to find that he had lived inoffensively, and pleased to see, that he was inquisitive how to live better than so. Christ particularly loves to see young people, and rich people, asking the way to heaven with their faces thitherward.

2. Here is a sorrowful parting between Christ and this young man.

1. Christ gave him a command of trial, by which it would appear whether he did in sincerity aim at eternal life, and press towards it; he seemed to have his heart much upon it, and if so, he is what he should be; but has he indeed his heart upon it? Bring him to the touchstone. (1.) Can he find it in his heart to part with his riches for the service of Christ? he hath a good estate, and now shortly at the first founding of the Christian church the necessity of the case will require, that those that have lands sell them and lay the money at the apostles feet, and how will he dispense with that? Acts iv. 34. After a while tribulation and persecution will arise, because of the word; and he must be forced to sell his estate, or have it taken from him, and how will he like that? Let him know the worst, now if he will not come up to these terms, let him quit his pretensions; as good at first as at last. Sell whatsoever thou hast over and above what is necessary for thy support; probably he had no family to provide for; let him therefore be a father to the poor, and make them his heirs. Every man according to his ability must relieve the poor; and be content, when there is occasion, to straiten himself to do it. Worldly wealth is given us not only as maintenance to bear our charges through this world according to our place in it, but as a talent, to be used and employed for the glory of our great Master in the world, who hath so ordered it, that the poor we should have always with us as his receivers. (2.) Can he find in his heart to go through the hardest costliest services he may be called to as a disciple of Christ, and depend upon him for a recompence in heaven? He asks Christ what he shall do more than he has done to obtain eternal life; and Christ puts it to him, whether he had indeed that firm belief of, and that high value for eternal life that he seems to have. Doth he really believe there is a treasure in heaven sufficient to make up all he can leave or lose; or lay out for Christ? Is he willing to deal with Christ upon trust? Can he give him credit for all he is worth; and be willing to bear a present cross in expectation of a future crown?

2. Upon this he flew off, ver. 22. He was sad at that saying, was sorry he could not be a follower of Christ, upon any easier terms than leaving all to follow him that he could not lay hold on eternal life, and keep hold of his temporal possessions too. But since he could not come up to the terms of discipleship, he was so fair as not to pretend to it, He went away grieved. Here appeared the truth of that, Matth. vi. 24. Ye cannot serve God and mammon, while he held to mammon he did in effect despise Christ, as all those do who prefer the world before him. He that bids for what he has a mind for in the market yet goes away grieved, and leaves it, because he cannot have it at his own price. Two words to a bargain. Motions are not marriages. That which ruined this young man was, he had great possessions; thus the prosperity of fools destroys them, and those who spend their days in wealth are tempted to say to God, depart from us, or to their hearts, depart from God.

3. Here is Christ's discourse with his disciples. We are tempted to wish that Christ had mollified that saying which frightened this young gentleman from following him, and by any explanation taken off the harshness of it: but he knew all men's hearts, he would not court him to be his follower, because he was a rich man and a ruler: but if he will go, let him go; Christ will keep no man against his will; and therefore we do not find that Christ called him back, but took this occasion to instruct his disciples in two things.

First, The difficulty of the salvation of those who have an abundance of this world; because there are few who have a deal to leave that can be persuaded to leave it for Christ, or to lay it out in doing good.

1. Christ asserts this here. He looked about upon his disciples, because he would have them all take notice of what he had said, that by it they might have their judgments rightly informed, and their mistakes rectified concerning worldly wealth, which they were apt to over-rate. How hardly shall they who have riches enter into the kingdom of God! ver. 23. They have many temptations to grapple with, and many difficulties to get over which lie not in the way of poor people. But he explains himself, ver. 24. where he call the disciples children, because as such they should be taught by him and portioned by him with better things than this young man left Christ to cleave to; and whereas he had said how hardly those that have riches will get to heaven; here he tells them, that the danger arose not so much from their having riches as from their trusting to them, and placing their confidence in them, expecting protection, provision, and a portion from them; saying that to their gold which they should say only to their God. Thou art my hope, Job xxii. 24. They that have such a value as this for the wealth of the world will never be brought to put a right value upon Christ and his grace. They that have never so much riches, but do not trust in them, that see the vanity of them, and their utter insufficiency to make a soul happy, have got over the difficulty, and can easily part with them for Christ: but they that have never so little, if they set their hearts upon that little, and place their happiness in it, it will keep them from Christ. He enforceth this assertion with, ver. 25. It is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle, than for a rich man, that trusts in riches, or inclines to do so, to enter into the kingdom of God. The disproportion here seems so great (though the more so, the more it answers the intention) that some have laboured to bring the camel and the eye of the needle a little nearer together. (1.) Some imagine there might be some wicket-gate or door to Jerusalem; commonly known by the name of the needle's eye for its straitness, through which a camel could not be got, unless he were unloaded, and made to kneel, as those camels, Gen. xxiv. 11. so a rich man cannot get to heaven unless he be willing to part with the burden of his worldly wealth, and stoop to the duties of a humble religion, and so enter in at the strait gate. (2.) Others suggest, that the word we translate a camel sometimes signifies a camel-rape, which though not to be got through a needle's eye, yet is of greater affinity to it. A rich man compared with the poor, is as a cable to a single thread, stronger but not so pliable, and it will not go through the needle's eye unless it be untwisted; so the rich man must be loosed and disentangled from his riches, and then there is some hopes of him, that thread by thread he may be got through the eye of the needle, otherwise he is good for nothing but to cast anchor in the earth.

2. This truth was very surprising to the disciples, they were astonished at his words, ver. 24. They were astonished out of measure and said among themselves, Who then can be saved? They knew what were generally the sentiments of the Jewish teachers, that the spirit of God chooseth to reside upon rich men; nay, they knew what abundance of promises there were in the Old Testament of temporal good things: they knew likewise that all either are rich, or fain would be so, and that they who are rich have so much the larger opportunities of doing good, and therefore were amazed to hear that it should be so hard for rich people to go to heaven.

3. Christ reconciled them to it, by referring them to the almighty power of God, to help even rich people over the difficulties that lie in the way of their salvation. Ver. 23. He looked upon them to engage their attention, and said, with men it is impossible; rich people cannot by their own skill or resolution get over these difficulties, but the grace of God can do it, for with him all things are possible. If the righteous scarcely are saved, much more may we say so of the rich; and therefore when any get to heaven they must give all the glory to God, who worketh in them both to will and to do.

Secondly, The greatness of the salvation of those that have but a little of this world, and leave it for Christ. This he speaks of upon occasion of Peter's mentioning what he and the rest of the disciples had left to follow him. Behold, (saith he) we have left all to follow thee, ver. 28. You have done well, saith Christ, and it will prove in the end that you have done well for yourselves; you shall be abundantly recompensed, and not only you shall be re-imbursed who have left but a little, but those that have never so much, though it were so much as this young man had that could not persuade himself to quit it for Christ; yet they shall have much more than an equivalent for it. (1.) The loss is supposed to be very great; he instanceth, (1.) In worldly wealth, houses are here put first, and lands last: if a man quit his house, which should be for his habitation, and his land, which should be for his maintenance, and so makes himself a beggar and an out-cast; this has been the choice of suffering saints, farewell houses and lands, though never so convenient and desirable, though the inheritance of fathers, for the house which is from heaven, and the inheritance of the saints in light, where are many mansions. (2.) In dear relations, father and mother, wife and children, brethren and sisters; in these, as much as in any temporal blessing, the comfort of life is bound up, without these the world would be a wilderness; yet when we must either forsake these or Christ, we must remember, that we stand in nearer relation to Christ than we do to any creature; and therefore to keep in with him, we must be content to break with all the world, and say to father and mother, as Levi did, I have not known you. The greatest trial of a good man's constancy is, when his love to Christ comes to stand in competition with a love that is lawful, nay, that is his duty. It is easy for such a one to forsake a lust for Christ, for he hath that within him that riseth against it; but to forsake a father, a brother, a wife, for Christ whom he knows he must love, is hard. And yet he must do so, rather than deny or disown Christ. Thus great is the loss supposed to be, but it is for Christ's sake, that he may be honoured, and the gospel's, that may be promoted and propagated. It is not the suffering, but the cause, that makes the martyr. And therefore, (2.) The advantage will be great. (1.) They shall receive an hundred fold in this time, houses, and brethren, and sisters; not in specie, but that which is equivalent. He shall have abundance of comfort while he lives sufficient to make up all his losses; his relation to Christ, his communion with his saints, and his title to eternal life, shall be to him brethren, and sisters, and houses, and all. God's providence gave Job double to what he had had, but suffering Christians shall have a hundred fold in the comforts of the Spirit sweetening their creature-comforts. But observe, it is added here in Mark, with persecutions. Even when they are gainers by Christ, let them still expect to be sufferers for him; and not to be out of the reach of persecution, till they come to heaven. Nay; the persecutions seem to come in here among the rewards in this present time, for unto you it is given, not only to believe in Christ, but also to suffer for his name; yet this is not all. (2.) They shall have eternal life in the world to come. If they receive an hundred fold in this world, one would think they should not be encouraged to expect any more. Yet as if that were a small matter, they shall have life eternal into the bargain; which is more than ten thousand fold ten thousand times fold, for all their losses. But because they talked so much, and really more than became them, of leaving all for Christ, he tells them though they were first called, yet there should be disciples called after them, that should be preferred before them; as St. Paul, who was one born out of due time, and yet laboured more abundantly than all the rest of the apostles, 1 Cor. xv. 10. Then the first were last, and the last first.

32. ¶ And they were in the way going up to Jerusalem; and Jesus went before them; and they were amazed; and as they followed, they were afraid. And he took again the twelve, and began to tell them what things should happen unto him, 33. Saying, Behold, we go up to Jerusalem, and the Son of man shall be delivered unto the chief priests, and unto the Scribes; and they shall condemn him to death, and shall deliver him to the Gentiles. 34. And they shall mock him, and shall scourge him, and shall spit upon him, and shall kill him: and the third day he shall rise again. 35. ¶ And James and John, the sons of Zebedee, come unto him, saying, Master, we would that thou shouldest do for us whatsoever we shall desire. 36. And he said, unto them, What would you that I should do for you? 37. They said unto him, Grant unto us that we may sit, one on thy right hand, and the other on thy left hand, in thy glory. 38. But Jesus said unto them, Ye know not what ye ask: can ye drink of the cup that I drink of? and be baptised with the baptism that I am baptised with? 39. And they said unto him, We can. And Jesus said unto them, Ye shall indeed drink of the cup that I drink of; and with the baptism that I am baptised withal shall ye be baptised: 40. But to sit on my right hand and on my left hand is not mine to give: but it shall be given to them for whom it is prepared. 41. And when the ten heard it, they began to be much displeased with James and John. 42. But Jesus called them to him, and saith unto them, Ye know that they which are accounted to rule over the Gentiles, exercise lordship over them; and their great ones exercise authority upon them. 43. But so shall it not be among you: but whosoever will be great among you, shall be your minister: 44. And whosoever of you will be the chiefest, shall be servant of all. 45. For even the Son of man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many.

Here is, First, Christ's prediction of his own sufferings; this string he harped much upon, though in the ears of his disciples it sounded very harsh and unpleasing.

1. See here how bold he was, when they were going up to Jerusalem, Jesus went before them, as the Captain of our salvation, that was now to be made perfect through sufferings, ver. 32. Thus he shewed himself forward to go on with his undertaking, even when he came to the hardest part of it; now the time was at hand he said, Lo, I come, so far from drawing back, that now more than ever he pressed forwards. Jesus went before them, and they were amazed. They began now to consider what imminent danger they ran themselves into when they went to Jerusalem, how very malicious the Sanhedrin which sat there was against their Master and them, and they were ready to tremble at the thought of it. To hearten them therefore, Christ went before them: Come, saith he, sure you will venture where your master ventures. Note, When we see ourselves entering upon sufferings, it is encouraging to see our Master go before us. Or, he went before them, and therefore they were amazed, they admired to see with what cheerfulness and alacrity he went on, though he knew he was going to suffer and die. Note, Christ's courage and constancy in going on with his undertaking for our salvation, is and will be the wonder of all his disciples.

2. See here how timorous and faint-hearted his disciples were. As they followed they were afraid, afraid for themselves, as being apprehensive of their own danger; and justly might they be ashamed of their being thus afraid. Their Master's courage should have put spirit into them.

3. See here what method he took to silence their fears: He did not go about to make the matter better than it was, nor to feed them with hopes that he might escape the storm, but told them again what he had often told them before, the things that should happen to him. He knew the worst of it, and therefore went on thus boldly, and he will let them know the worst of it. Come, be not afraid, for (1.) There is no remedy, the matter is determined, and cannot be avoided. (2.) It is only the Son of man that shall suffer, their time of suffering was not at hand; he will now provide for their security. (3.) He shall rise again; the issue of his sufferings will be glorious to himself, and advantageous to all that are his, ver. 33, 34. The method and particulars of Christ's sufferings are more largely foretold here, than in any other of the predictions; that he shall first be delivered up by Judas to the chief priests and the Scribes; that they shall condemn him to death, but not having power to put him to death, they shall deliver him to the Gentiles, to the Roman powers, and they shall mock him, and scourge him, and spit upon him, and kill him. Christ had a perfect foresight, not only of his own death, but of all the aggravating circumstances of it, and yet he thus went forth to meet it.

Secondly, The check he gave to two of his disciples for their ambitious request. This story is much the same here as we had it, Matt. xx. 20. only there they are said to have made their request by their mother, here they are said to make it themselves; she introduced them, and presented their petition, and then they seconded it and assented to it. Note, 1. As on the one hand there are some that do not use, so on the other hand, there are some that do abuse the great encouragements Christ has given us in prayer prayer. He hath said, ask and it shall be given you; and it is a commendable faith to ask for the great things he has promised; but it was a culpable presumption in these disciples to make such a boundless demand upon their Master. We would, that thou shouldst do for us whatsoever we shall desire; we had much better leave it to him to do for us what he sees fit, and he will do more than we can desire, Eph. iii. 20.

2. We must be cautious how we make general promises; Christ would not engage to do for them whatever they desired, but would know from them what it was they did desire. What would ye that I should do for you? He would have them go on with their suit, that they might be made ashamed of it.

3. Many have been led into a snare by false notions of Christ's kingdom, as if it were of this world, and like the kingdoms of the potentates of this world. James and John conclude, if Christ rise again he must be a king, and if he be a king his apostles must be peers, and one of these would willingly be Primus par regni, and the other next him, like Joseph in Pharaoh's court, or Daniel in Darius's.

4. Worldly honour is a glittering thing, with which the eyes of Christ's own disciples have many a time been dazzled. Whereas to be good should be more our care than to look great, or to have the pre-eminence.

5. Our weakness and short-sightedness appears as much in our prayers as in any thing. We cannot order our speech, when we speak to God by reason of darkness, both concerning him and concerning ourselves. It is folly to prescribe to God, and wisdom to subscribe.

6. It is the will of Christ that we should prepare for sufferings, and leave it to him to recompense us for them. He needs not be put in mind, as Ahasuerus did, of the services of his people, nor can he forget their work of faith and labour of love. Our care must be, that we may have wisdom and grace to know how to suffer with him, and then we may trust him to provide in the best manner how we shall reign with him, and when and where, and what the degrees of our glory shall be.

Thirdly, The check he gave to the rest of the disciples, for their un-casiness at it. They began to be much displeased, to have indignation about James and John, ver. 41. They were angry at them for affecting precedence, not because it did so ill become the disciples of Christ, but because each of them hoped to have it themselves. When the Cynic trampled on Alexander's foot cloth, with Calco fastum Alexandri, now, I tread on Alexander's pride, he was seasonably checked with sed majori fastu, but with greater pride of thine own; so these discovered their own ambition in their displeasure at the ambition of James and John; and Christ took this occasion to warn them against it, and all their successors in the ministry of the gospel, ver. 42, 43. He called them to him in a familiar way, to give them an example of condescension, then when he was reproving their ambition, and to teach them never to bid their disciples keep their distance. He shews them,

1. That dominion was generally abused in the world, ver. 42. They which seem to rule over the Gentiles, that have the name and title of rulers, they exercise lordship over them, that is all they study and aim at, not so much to protect them and provide for their welfare, as to exercise authority upon them; they will be obeyed, aim to be arbitrary, and to have their will in every thing. Sic volo, sic jubeo, stat prae ratione voluntas. Their care is what they shall get by their subjects to support their own pomp and grandeur, not what they shall do for them.

2. That therefore it ought not to be admitted into the church; it shall not be so among you; those that shall be put under your charge, must be as sheep under the charge of the shepherd; who is to tend them and feed them, and be a servant to them, not as horses under the command of the driver, that works them and beats them, and gets his pennyworths out of them. He that affects to be great and chief, that thrusts himself into a secular dignity and dominion, he shall be servant of all, he shall be mean and contemptible in the eyes of all that are wise and good; He that exalted himself shall be abased. Or rather, he that would be truly great and chief, he must lay out himself to do good to all, must stoop to the meanest services and labour in the hardest services. Those not only shall be most honoured hereafter, but are most honourable now who are most useful. To convince them of this, he sets before them his own example, ver. 45. The Son of Man submits first to the greatest hardships and hazards, and then enters into his glory, and can you expect to come to it any other way, or to have more ease and honour than he has? (1.) He takes upon him the form of a servant, comes not to be ministered to, and waited upon, but to minister, and wait to be gracious. (2.) He becomes obedient to death, and to its dominion, for he gives his life a ransom for many; did he die for the benefit of good people, and shall not we study to live for their benefit?

46. ¶ And they came to Jericho: and as he went out of Jericho with his disciples and a great number of people, blind Bartimeus, the son of Timeus, sat by the highway side begging. 47. And when he heard that it was Jesus of Nazareth, he began to cry out, and say, Jesus, thou son of David, have mercy on me. 48. And many charged him that he should hold his peace: but he cried the more a great deal, Thou son of David, have mercy on me. 49. And Jesus stood still, and commanded him to be called. And they call the blind man, saying unto him, Be of good comfort, rise; he calleth thee. 50. And he, casting away his garment, rose, and came to Jesus. 51. And Jesus answered and said unto him, What wilt thou that I should do unto thee? The blind man said unto him, Lord, that I might receive my sight. 52. And Jesus said unto him, Go thy way; thy faith hath made thee whole. And immediately he received his sight, and followed Jesus in the way.

This passage of story agrees with that, Matt. xx. 29, &c. only that there we were told of two blind men, here and Luke xviii. 35, only of one; but if there were two, there was one; this one is named here, being a blind beggar that was much talked of: Bartimeus, that is, the son of Timeus: which some think signifies, the son of a blind man; he was the blind son of a blind father, which made the case the worse, and the cure the more wonderful, and the more proper to typify the spiritual cures wrought by the grace of Christ, on those that not only are born blind, but are born of those that are blind.

1. This blind man sat begging; as they do with us. Note, Those who by the providence of God are disabled to get a livelihood by their own labour, and have not any other way of subsisting, are the most proper objects of charity: and particular care ought to be taken of them.

2. He cried out to the Lord Jesus for mercy, Have mercy on me, O Lord, thou Son of David; misery is the object of mercy, his own miserable case he recommends to the compassion of the Son of David, of whom it was foretold, that when he should come to save us, the eyes of the blind shall be opened, Isa. xxxv. 5. In coming to Christ for help and healing, we should have an eye to him as the promised Messiah, the trustee of mercy and grace.

3. Christ encouraged him to hope that he should find mercy, for he stood still and commanded him to be called. We must never reckon it a hindrance to us in our way to stand still, when it is to do a good work. Those about him, who had discouraged him at first, perhaps were now the persons that handed to him the gracious call of Christ, Be of good comfort, rise, he calls thee; and if he call thee he will cure thee. Note, The gracious invitations Christ gives us to come to him, are great encouragements to our hope, that we shall speed well if we come to him, and shall have what we come for. Let the guilty, the empty, the tempted, the hungry, the naked be of good comfort, for he calls them to be pardoned, to be supplied, to be succoured, to be filled, to be clothed, to have all that done for them which their case calls for.

4. The poor man hereupon made the best of his way to Christ. He cast away his loose upper garment, and came to Jesus, ver. 50. he cast away every thing that might be in danger of throwing him down, or might any way hinder him in coming to Christ, or retard his motion. Those who would come to Jesus, must cast away the garment of their own sufficiency, must strip themselves of all conceit of that, and must free themselves from every weight, and the sin that, like long garments, doth most easily beset them, Heb. xii. 1.

5. The particular favour he begged was, that his eyes might be opened; that so he might be able to work for his living, and might be no longer burdensome to others. It is a very desirable thing to be in a capacity of earning our own bread; and where God has given men their limbs and senses, it is a shame for men by their foolishness and slothfulness to make themselves in effect blind and lame.

6. This favour he received, his eyes were opened, ver. 52. and two things Mark here adds: which intimates, (1.) How Christ made it a double favour to him, by putting the honour of it upon his faith, Thy faith has made thee whole; faith in Christ as the son of David, and in his pity and power. Not thy importunity, but thy faith, setting Christ on work, or rather Christ setting thy faith on work. Those supplies are most comfortable, that are fetched in by our faith. (2.) How he made it a double favour to himself; when he had received his sight, he followed Jesus by the way; by this he made it appear, that he was thoroughly cured, that he no more needed one to lead him, but could go himself, and by this he evidenced the grateful sense he had of Christ's kindness to him, that when he had his sight, he made this use of it. It is not enough to come to Christ for spiritual healing, but when we are healed, we must continue to follow him; that we may do honour to him, and receive instructions from him. Those that have spiritual eye-sight see that beauty in Christ, as will effectually draw them to run after him.

CHAP. XI.

We are now come to the Passion Week, the week in which Christ died; and the great occurrences of that week. (2.) Christ's riding in triumph into Jerusalem, ver. 1—11. (3.) His cursing the barren fig-tree, ver. 12, 13, 14. (4.) His driving those out of the temple that turned it into an exchange, ver. 15—19. (5.) His discourse with his disciples concerning the power of faith and efficacy of prayer, on occasion of the withering of the fig-tree he cursed, ver. 20—26. (6.) His reply to those who questioned his authority, ver. 27—31.

1. AND when they came nigh to Jerusalem, unto Bethphage and Bethany, at the mount of Olives, he sendeth forth two of his disciples. 2. And saith unto them, Go your way into the village over against you: and as soon as ye be entered into it, ye shall find a colt tied, whereon never man sat; loose him, and bring him. 3. And if any man say unto you, Why do ye this? say ye that the Lord hath need of him: and straightway he will send him hither. 4. And they went their way, and found the colt tied by the door without in a place where two ways met: and they loose him. 5. And certain of them that stood there said unto them, What do ye, loosing the colt? 6. And they said unto them even as Jesus had commanded: and they let them go. 7. And they brought the colt to Jesus, and cast their garments on him; and he sat upon him. 8. And many spread their garments in the way: and others cut down branches off the trees, and strewed them in the way. 9. And they that went before, and they that followed, cried, saying, Hosanna; blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord: 10. Blessed be the kingdom of our father David, that cometh in the name of the Lord: Hosanna in the highest. 11. And Jesus entered into Jerusalem, and into the temple: and when he had looked round about upon all things, and now the eventide was come, he went unto Bethany with the twelve.

We have here the story of the public entry Christ made into Jerusalem, four or five days before his death. And he came into town thus remarkably, (1.) To shew that he was not afraid of the power and malice of his enemies in Jerusalem: He did not steal into the city incognito, as one that durst not shew his face; no, they needed not send spies to search him, he comes in with observation. This would be an encouragement to his disciples that were timorous, and cowed at the thought of their enemies power and rage; let them see how bravely their Master set them all at defiance. (2.) To shew that he was not cast down or disquieted at the thoughts of his approaching sufferings, he not only came publicly, but came in cheerfully, and with acclamations of joy. Though he was now but taking the field, and and girding on the harness, yet being fully assured of a complete victory, he thus triumphs as though he had put it off.

First, the outside of this triumph was very mean: he rode upon an ass's colt, that being an ass looked contemptible, and made no figure; and being but a colt whereon man never sat, we may suppose was rough and untrimmed; and not only so, but rude and ungovernable, and would disturb and disgrace the solemnity. This colt was borrowed too. Christ went upon the water in a borrowed boat, eat the passover in a borrowed chamber, was buried in a borrowed sepulchre, and here rode on a borrowed ass. Let not Christians scorn to be beholden one to another, and when need is to go a borrowing, for our Master did not. He had no rich trappings, they threw their clothes upon the colt, and so he sat upon him, ver. 7. The persons that attended were mean people; and all the shew they could make, was by spreading their garments in the way, and strewn branches of trees in the way, ver. 8. as they used to do at the feast of tabernacles. All these were marks of his humiliation, even when he would be taken notice of, he would be taken notice of for his meanness; and they are instructions to us not to mind high things, but to condescend to them of low estate. How ill doth it become Christians to take state, when Christ was so far from affecting it?

Secondly, the inside of this triumph was very great, not only as it was the fulfilling of the scripture, which is not taken notice of here as it was in Matthew, but as there were several rays of Christ's glory, shining forth in the midst of all this meanness. (1.) Christ shewed his knowledge of things distant, and his power over the wills of men, when he sent his disciples for the colt, ver. 1, 2, 3, 4. By this it appears he can do every thing, and no thought can be withholden from him. (2.) He shewed his dominion over the creatures in riding on a colt that was never backed. The subjection of the inferior part of the creation to man is spoken of, Psal. viii. 5, 6. with application to Christ, Psal. viii. 5, 6. compared with Heb. ii. 8. For to him it is owing, and to his mediation, that we have any remaining benefit by that grant God made unto man, of a sovereignty in this lower world, Gen. i. 28. And perhaps Christ, in riding the ass's colt, would give a shadow of his power over the spirit of man, who is born as the wild ass's colt, Job xi. 12. (3.) The colt was brought from a place where two ways met, ver. 4. as if Christ would shew that he came to direct those in the right way who had two ways before them, and were in danger of taking the wrong. (4.) Christ received the joyful hosannas of the people; that is, both the welcome they gave him, and their good wishes to the prosperity of his kingdom, ver. 9. It was God that put it into the hearts of these people to cry hosanna, who were not by art and management brought to it, as those were who afterwards cried, Crucify, crucify. Christ reckons himself honoured by the faith and praises of the multitude, and it is God that brings people to do him this honour beyond their own intentions.

1. They welcomed his person, ver. 9. Blessed is he that cometh, the dispenser, He that should come, so often promised, so long expected; he comes in the name of the Lord, as God's ambassador to the world, Blessed be he. Let him have our applauses and best affections; he is a blessed Saviour, and brings blessings to us, and blessed be he that sent him. Let him be blessed in the name of the Lord, and let all nations and ages call him blessed, and think and speak highly and honourably of him.

2. They wished well to his interest, ver. 10. They believed that as mean a figure as he made he had a kingdom, which should shortly be set up in the world, that it was in the kingdom of the father David, the father of his country; the kingdom promised to him and his seed for ever: a kingdom that came in the name of the Lord, supported by a divine authority. Blessed be this kingdom; let it take place, let it get ground, let it come in the power of it, and let all opposing rule, principality and power be put down; let it go on conquering and to conquer. Hosanna to this kingdom; prosperity be to it; all happiness attend it. The proper signification of Hosanna is that which we find, Rev. vii. 10. Salvation to our God that sitteth on the throne, and to the Lamb, i. e. success to religion, both natural and revealed. Hosanna in the highest. Praises be to our God, who is in the highest heavens over all, God blessed for ever; or let him be praised by his angels, that are in the highest heavens, let our hosannas be an echo to theirs.

Christ thus attended, thus applauded, came into the city, and went directly to the temple; Here was no banquet of wine prepared for his entertainment, nor the least refreshment, but he immediately applied himself to his work, for that was his meat and drink. He went to the temple, that the scripture might be fulfilled: The Lord whom ye seek shall suddenly come to his temple, without sending any immediate notice before him: he shall surprise you with a day of visitation, for he shall be like a refiner's fire, and like fuller's soap, Mal. iii. 1, 2, 3. He came to the temple and took a view of the present state of it, ver. 11. He looked round about upon all things, but as yet said nothing. He saw many disorders there, but kept silence, Psal. l. 21. Though he intended to suppress them, he would not go about the doing of it all on a sudden, lest he should seem to have done it rashly, but let things be as they were for this night, intending the next morning to apply himself to the necessary reformation, and to take the day before him. We may be confident, that God sees all the wickedness that is in this world, though he do not presently reckon for it nor cast it out. Christ having made his remarks upon what he saw in the temple, retired in the evening to a friend's house at Bethany, because there he would be more out of the noise of the town, and out of the way of being suspected, as designing to head a faction.

12. ¶ And on the morrow, when they were come from Bethany, he was hungry: 13. And seeing a fig-tree afar off having leaves, he came, if haply he might find any thing thereon: and when he came to it, he found nothing but leaves; for the time of figs was not yet. 14. And Jesus answered and said unto it, No man eat fruit of thee hereafter for ever. And his disciples heard it. 15. ¶ And they come to Jerusalem, and Jesus went into the temple, and began to cast out them that sold and bought in the temple, and overthrew the tables of the money-changers, and the seats of them that sold doves; 16. And would not suffer that any man should carry any vessel through the temple. 17. And he taught, saying unto them, Is it not written, My house shall be called of all nations the house of prayer? but ye have made it a den of thieves. 18. And the Scribes and chief priests heard it, and sought how they might destroy him: for they feared him, because all the people was astonished at his doctrine. 19. And when even was come, he went out of the city: 20. ¶ And in the morning, as they passed by, they saw the fig-tree dried up from the roots. 21. And Peter calling to remembrance saith unto him, Master, behold the fig tree which thou cursedst is withered away. 22. And Jesus answering saith unto them, Have faith in God. 23. For verily I say unto you, That whosoever shall say unto this mountain, Be thou removed, and be thou cast into the sea? and shall not doubt in his heart, but shall believe that those things which he saith shall come to pass; he shall have whatsoever he saith. 24. Therefore I say unto you, What things soever ye desire, when ye pray, believe that ye receive them, and ye shall have them. 25. And when ye stand praying, forgive, if ye have ought against any: that your Father also which is in heaven may forgive your trespasses. 26. But if ye do not forgive, neither will your Father which is in heaven forgive your trespasses.

Here is, 1. Christ's cursing the fruitless fig-tree. He had a convenient resting-place at Bethany, and therefore thither he went at resting-time, but his work lay at Jerusalem, and thither therefore he returned in the morning at working-time; and so intent was he upon his work, that he went out from Bethany without breakfast, which before he was gone far he found he wanted, and was hungry, ver. 12. for he was subject to all the sinless infirmities of our nature. Finding himself in want of food, he went to a fig-tree, which he saw at some distance, that being well adorned with green leaves, he hoped to find enriched with some sort of fruit. But he found nothing but leaves; he hoped to find some fruit, for the time of gathering in figs, though it was near, yet it was not yet; so that it could not be pretended that it had had fruit, but it was gathered and gone; for it was not come to that yet. Or, he found none, nor indeed it was not a season of figs, it was no good fig-year. But this was worse than any other fig-tree, for there was not so much as one fig to be found upon it, though it was so full of leaves. However Christ was willing to make an example of it, not to the trees, but to the men of that generation, and therefore cursed it, with that curse which is the reverse of the first blessing, Be fruitful; he said unto it, never let any man eat fruit of thee hereafter for ever, ver. 14. Sweetness and good fruit is, in Jotham's parable, the honour of the fig-tree, Judg. ix. 11. and its serviceableness therein to man, preferable to the preferment of being promoted over the tree; now to be deprived of that was a grievous curse. This was intended to be a type and figure of the doom passed upon the Jewish church, to which he came seeking fruit but found none, Luke xiii. 6, 7. and though it was not according to the doom in the parable immediately cut down, yet according to this in the history, blindness and hardness befel them, Rom. xi. 8—25. so that they were from henceforth good for nothing. The disciples heard what sentence Christ passed on this tree and took notice of it. Voes from Christ's mouth are to be observed and kept in mind, as well as blessings.

1. His clearing the temple of the market-people that frequented it, and of those that made it a thorough-fare. We do not find that Christ met with food elsewhere, when he missed of it on the fig-tree; but the zeal of God's house so eat him up, and made him forget himself, that he came hungry as he was to Jerusalem, and went straight to the temple, and began to reform those abuses, which the day before he had marked out; to shew, that when the Redeemer came to Zion, his errand was to turn away ungodliness from Jacob, Rom. xi. 26. and that he came not, as he was falsely accused, to destroy the temple, but to purify and refine it, and reduce his church to its primitive rectitude.

2. He cast out the buyers and sellers, overthrew the tables of the money-changers (and threw the money to the ground, the sifter place for it) and threw down the seats of them that sold doves. This he did as one having authority, as a son in his own house. The filth of the daughter of Zion is purged away, not by might, nor by power, but by the spirit of judgment and the spirit of burning; and he did it without opposition, for what he did was manifested to be right and good, even in the consciences of those that had connived at it and countenanced it; because they got money by it. Note, It may be some encouragement to zealous reformers, that many times the purging out of corruptions, and the correcting of abuses, proves an easier piece of work than was apprehended. Prudent attempts sometimes prove successful beyond expectation, and there are not those lions found in the way that were feared to be.

2. He would not suffer that any man should carry any vessel, any sort of goods or wares through the temple, or any of the courts of it; because it was the nearer way, and would save them the labour of going about, ver. 16. The Jews owned it was one of the instances of honour due to the temple, not to make the mountain of the house, or the court of the Gentiles, a road or common passage, or to come into it with any bundle:

3. He gave a good reason for this; because it was written, My house shall be called of all nations, The house of prayer, ver. 17. So it is written, Isa. lvi. 7. It shall pass among all people under that character. It shall be the house of prayer to all nations, it was so in the first institution of it; when Solomon dedicated it, it was with an eye to the sons of the strangers, 1 Kings viii. 41. And it was prophesied that it should be yet more so; Christ will have the temple as a type of the gospel church to be, (1.) A house of prayer; after he had turned out the oxen and doves, which were things for sacrifice, he revived the appointment of it as a house of prayer, to teach us, that when all sacrifices and offerings should be abolished, the spiritual sacrifices of prayer and praise should continue and remain for ever. (2.) That it should be so to all nations, and not to the people of the Jews only: for whosoever shall call on the name of the Lord shall be saved, though not of the seed of Jacob, according to the flesh. It was therefore insufferable for them to make it a den of thieves, which would prejudice those nations against it whom they should have invited to it. When Christ drove out the buyers and sellers at the beginning of his ministry, he only charged them with making the temple a house of merchandise, John ii. 16. But now he charged them with making it a den of thieves; because since then they had twice gone about to stone him in the temple, John viii. 59. x. 31. or because the traders there were grown notorious for cheating their customers, and imposing upon the ignorance and necessity of the country people; which is no better than downright thievery. Those that suffer vain worldly thoughts to lodge within them when they are at their devotions, turn the house of prayer into a house of merchandise. But they that make long prayers for a pretence to devour widows' houses, turn it into a den of thieves.

4. The Scribes and the chief priests were extremely nettled at this, ver. 18. They hated him, and hated to be reformed by him, and yet they feared him, lest he should next overthrow their seats and expel them, being conscious to themselves of the profaning and abusing of their power. They found he had a great interest, and that all the people were astonished at his doctrine, and every thing he said was an oracle and a law to them, and what durst he not attempt, what could he could not effect being thus supported: they therefore sought not how they might make their peace with him, but how they might destroy him: A desperate attempt! and which, one would think, they themselves could not but fear was fighting against God. But they care not what they do to support their own power and grandeur.

3. His discourse with his disciples upon occasion of the fig-tree's withering away which he had cursed. At even, as usual, he went out of the city, ver. 19. to Bethany, but it is probable it was in the dark, so that they could not see the fig-tree; but the next morning, as they passed by, they observed the fig-tree dried up from the roots, ver. 20. More is included many times in Christ's curses than is expressed, as appears by the effects of them. The curse was no more but that it should never bear fruit again, but the effect goes further, it is dried up from the roots. If it bear no fruit, it shall bear no leaves to cheat people. Now observe,

1. How the disciples were affected with it. Peter remembered Christ's words, and said with surprise, Master, behold the fig-tree which thou cursedst is withered away, ver. 21. Note, Christ's curses have wonderful effects, and make those to wither presently, that flourished like the green bay-tree. Those whom he curseth, they are cursed indeed. This represented the character and state of the Jewish church; which, from henceforward, was a tree dried up from the roots; no longer fit for food, but for fuel only. The first establishment of the Levitical priesthood was ratified and confirmed by the miracle of a dry rod, which in one night budded and blossomed and brought forth almons, Numb. xvii. 8. a happy omen of the fruitfulness and flourishing of that priesthood: And now, by a contrary miracle, the expiration of that priesthood was signified by a flourishing tree dried up in a night: the just punishment of those priests that had abused it. And this seemed very strange to the disciples, and scarce credible, that the Jews that had been so long God's own, his only professing people in the world, should be thus abandoned. They could not imagine how that fig-tree should so soon wither away, but this comes of rejecting Christ, and being rejected by him.

2. The good instructions Christ gave them from it, for of those even this withered tree was fruitful.

1. Christ teacheth them from hence to pray in faith, ver. 22. Have faith in God. They admired the power of Christ's word of command, why, saith Christ, a lively active faith would put as great a power into your prayers, ver. 23, 24. Whosoever shall say to this mountain, this mount of Olives, Be removed, and be cast into the sea: If he has but any word of God, general or particular, to build his faith upon, and if he shall not doubt in his heart, but shall believe that those things which he saith, according to the warrant he has from what God hath said, shall come to pass, he shall have whatsoever he saith: through the strength and power of God in Christ, the greatest difficulty shall be got over and the thing shall be effected. And therefore, ver. 24. What things soever ye desire when ye pray, believe that ye shall receive them: nay, believe that ye do receive them, and he that has power to give them, saith, ye shall have them. I say unto you, ye shall, ver. 24. Verily I say unto you, ye shall, ver. 23. Now this is to be applied, (1.) To that faith of miracles which the apostles and first preachers of the gospel were endued with, which did wonders in things natural, healing the sick, raising the dead, casting out devils; these were in effect the removing the mountains. The apostle speaks of a faith which would do that, and yet might be found where holy love was not, 1 Cor. xiii. 2. (2.) It may be applied to that miracle of faith, which all true Christians are endued with, which doth wonders in things spiritual. It justifies us, Rom. v. 1. and it removes mountains of guilt, and casts them into the depths of the sea, never to rise up in judgment against us, Micah vii. 19. It purifies the heart, Acts xv. 9. and so removes mountains of corruption, and makes them plain before the grace of God, Sech. iv. 7. It is by faith that the world is conquered, Satan's fiery darts quenched, a soul is crucified with Christ, and yet lives; by faith we set the Lord always before us, and see him that is invisible, and have him present to our minds, and this is effectual to remove mountains; for at the presence of the Lord, at the presence of the God of Jacob, the mountains were not only moved, but removed, Psal. cxiv. 6, 7.

2. To this is added here that necessary qualification of the prevailing prayer, that we freely forgive those who have been any way injurious to us, and be in charity with all men, ver. 25, 26. When ye stand praying, forgive. Note, Standing is no improper posture for prayer; it was generally used among the Jews; hence they called their prayers, their standings; when they would say how the world was kept up by prayer, they expressed it thus, Stationibus stat mundus: But the primitive Christians generally used the more humble and reverent gesture of kneeling, especially on fasting days, though not on Lord's days. When we are at prayer, we must remember to pray for others, particularly for our enemies, and those that have wronged us, now we cannot pray sincerely that God would do them good if we bear malice to them and wish them ill. If we have injured others before we pray, we must go and be reconciled to them, Matt. v. 23. But if they have injured us we go a nearer way to work, and must immediately from our hearts forgive them. (1.) Because this is a good step towards obtaining the pardon of our own sins: Forgive, that your Father may forgive you, i. e. That you may be qualified to receive forgiveness, that he may forgive you without injury to his honour, as it would be, if he should suffer those to have such benefit by his mercy, as are so far from being conformable to the pattern of it. (2.) Because the want of this is a certain bar to the obtaining of the pardon of our sins. If ye do not forgive those who have injured you, if you hate their persons, bear them a grudge, meditate revenge, and take all occasions to speak ill of them, neither will your Father forgive your trespasses. This ought to be remembered in prayer, because one great errand we have to the throne of grace is to pray for the pardon of our sins; And care about it ought to be our daily care, because prayer is a part of our daily work. Our Saviour often insists on this, for it was his great design to engage his disciples to love one another.

27. ¶ And they come again to Jerusalem: and as he was walking in the temple, there come to him the chief priests, and the Scribes, and the elders. 28. And say unto him, By what authority doest thou these things? and who gave thee this authority to do these things? 29. And Jesus answered and said unto them, I will also ask of you one question, and answer me, and I will tell you by what authority I do these things. 30. The baptism of John, was it from heaven, or of men? answer me. 31. And they reasoned with themselves, saying, If we shall say, From heaven; he will say, Why then did ye not believe him? 32. But if we shall say, Of men; they feared the people; for all men counted John, that he was a prophet indeed. 33. And they answered and said unto Jesus, We cannot tell. And Jesus answering saith unto them, Neither do I tell you by what authority I do these things.

We have here Christ examined by the great Sanhedrin concerning his authority; for they claimed a power to call prophets to an account concerning their mission. They came to him when he was walking in the temple; not for his diversion, but teaching the people, first one company and then another. The Peripatetic philosophers were so called from the custom they had of walking when they taught. The cloisters or piazzas in the courts of the temple, were fitted for this purpose: The great men were vexed to see him followed and heard with attention, and therefore came to him with some solemnity, and did as it were arraign him at the bar with this question, By what authority doest thou these things? ver. 28. Now observe,

1. How they designed hereby to run him aground, and to embarrass him; if they could make it out before the people that he had not a legal mission, that he was not duly ordained, though he was never so well qualified, and preached never so profitably and well, they would tell the people they ought not to hear him. And this they made the last refuge of an obstinate unbelief, because they were resolved not to receive his doctrine, they were resolved to find some flaw or other in his commission, and will conclude it invalid, if it be not produced and ratified in their court. Thus the Papists resolve their controversy with us very much into the mission of our ministers, and if they have but any pretence to overthrow that, they think they have gained their point, though we have the scripture never so much on our side. But this is indeed a question, which all that act either as magistrates or ministers ought to be furnished with a good answer to, and often put it to themselves, By what authority do I these things? For how can men preach except they be sent? Or how can they act with comfort or confidence, or hope of success, except they be authorised? Jer. xxxiii. 32.

2. How he effectually run them aground and embarrassed them with a question, what their thoughts were concerning the baptism of John, was it from heaven or of men? By what authority did John preach, and baptize, and gather disciples? Answer me, ver. 30. Deal fairly and ingenuously, and give a categorical answer either one way or the other. By the resolving of their question into this, our Saviour intimates how near akin his doctrine and baptism was to John's; they had the same original, and the same design and tendency to introduce the gospel kingdom. Christ might with the better grace put this question to them, because they had sent a committee of their own house to examine John, John i. 19. Now, saith Christ, what was the result of your enquiries concerning him?

They knew what they thought of this question; they could not but think that John Baptist was a man sent of God. But, the difficulty was what they should say to it now: And men that oblige not themselves to speak as they think, which is a certain rule, cannot avoid perplexing themselves thus.

1. If they own the baptism of John to be from heaven, as it really was, they shame themselves, for Christ will presently turn it upon them; why did ye not then believe him, and receive his baptism? They could not bear that Christ should say this, but they could bear it that their own consciences should say so, because they had an art of stifling and silencing them; and because what conscience said, though it might gall and grate them a little, it would not shame them, and then they would do well enough, who looked no further than Saul's care when he was convicted, Honour me now before this people, 1 Sam. xv. 30.

2. If they say it is of men, that he was not sent of God, but his doctrine and baptism were inventions of his own, they expose themselves, the people will be ready to do them a mischief, or at least clamour upon them; for all men counted John that he was a prophet indeed, and therefore they could not bear that he should be reflected on. Note, There is a carnal slavish fear, which not only wicked subjects but wicked rulers likewise are liable to, which God makes use of as a means to keep the world in some order, and to suppress violence, that it shall not always grow up into a rod of wickedness. Now by this dilemma to which Christ brought them, (1.) They were confounded and baffled, and forced to make a dishonourable retreat; to pretend ignorance, we cannot tell (and that was mortification enough to those proud men) but really to discover the greatest malice and wilfulness. What Christ did by his wisdom, we must labour to do by our well-doing, but to silence the ignorance of foolish men, 1 Pet. ii. 15. (2.) Christ came off with honour, and justified himself in denying to give them an answer to their imperious demand, Neither tell I you by what authority I do these things. They did not deserve to be told; who, it was plain, did not contend for truth but victory; nor did he need to tell them, for the works which he did told them plainly that he had authority from God to do what he did; since no man could do those miracles which he did unless God were with him. Let them wait but three or four days, and his resurrection shall tell them who gave him his authority, for by that he will be declared to be the Son of God with power, as by their rejecting him notwithstanding, they will be declared to be the enemies of God.

CHAP. XII.

In this chapter we have (1.) The parable of the vineyard let out to unthankful husbandmen, representing the sin and ruin of the Jewish church, ver. 1—12. (2.) Christ's silencing those who thought to ensnare him with a question about paying tribute to Caesar, ver. 13—17. (3.) His silencing the Sadducees, who attempted to perplex the doctrine of the resurrection, ver. 18—27. (4.) His conference with a Scribe about the first and great command of the law, ver. 28—34. (5.) His puzzling the Scribes with a question about Christ's being the Son of David, ver. 35, 36, 37. (6.) The caution he gave the people to take heed of the Scribes, ver. 38, 39, 40. (7.) His commendation of the poor widow that cast her two mites into the treasury, ver. 41—44.

1. AND he began to speak unto them by parables. A certain man planted a vineyard, and set an hedge about it, and digged a place for the wine fat, and built a tower; and let it out to husbandmen, and went into a far country. 2. And at the season he sent to the husbandmen a servant, that he might receive from the husbandmen of the fruit of the vineyard. 3. And they caught him, and beat him, and sent him away empty. 4. And again he sent unto them another servant; and at him they cast stones, and wounded him in the head, and and sent him away shamefully handled. 5. And again he sent another; and him they killed, and many others, beating some, and killing some. 6. Having yet therefore one son, his well-beloved, he sent him also last unto them, saying, They will reverence my son. 7. But those husbandmen said among themselves, This is the heir; come let us kill him, and the inheritance shall be ours. 8. And they took him, and killed him, and cast him out of the vineyard. 9. What shall therefore the Lord of the vineyard do? he will come and destroy the husbandmen, and will give the vineyard unto others. 10. And have ye not read this scripture; The stone which the builders rejected is become the head of the corner: 11. This was the Lord's doing, and it is marvellous in our eyes. 12. And they sought to lay hold on him, but feared the people: for they knew that he had spoken the parable against them: and they left him, and went their way.

Christ had formerly in parables shewed how he designed to set up the gospel church, now he begins in parables to shew how he would lay aside the Jewish church, which it might have been grafted into the stock of, but was built upon the ruins of. This parable we had just as we have it here, Matt. xxi. 33. We may observe here,

1. They that enjoy the privileges of the visible church have a vineyard let out to them, which is capable of great improvement, and from the occupiers of which rent is justly expected. When God shewed his word unto Jacob, his statutes and judgments unto Israel, Psalm cxlviii. 19, when he set up his temple among them, his priesthood, and other his ordinances, then he let out to them the vineyard he had planted; which he hedged, and in which he built a tower, ver. 1. Members of the church are God's tenants, and they have both a good landlord and a good bargain, and may live well upon it if it be not their own fault.

2. Those whom God lets out his vineyard to, he sends his servants to, to put them in mind of his just expectations from them, ver. 2. He was not hasty in his demands, nor high, for he did not send for the rent till they could make it at the season, nor did he put them to the trouble of making money of it, but was willing to take it in specie.

4. It is sad to think what base usage God's faithful ministers have met with in all ages, from those that have enjoyed the privileges of the church, and have not brought forth fruit answerable. The Old Testament prophets were persecuted even by those that went under the name of the Old Testament church. They beat them and sent them empty away, ver. 3. That was bad; they wounded them, and sent them away, shamefully entreated, ver. 4. That was worse; Nay, at length they came to such a pitch of wickedness that they killed them, ver. 5.

4. It was no wonder if those who abused the prophets abused Christ himself. God did at length send them his son, his well-beloved, it was therefore so much the greater kindness in him to send him; as in Jacob to send Joseph to visit his brethren, Gen. xxxvii. 14. And it might be expected that he whom their Master loved, they also should respect and love, ver. 6. they will reverence my son, and in reverence to him will pay their rent. But instead of reverencing him because he was the son and heir, they therefore hated him, ver. 7. Because Christ in calling to repentance and reformation, made his demands with more authority than the prophets had done, they were the more enraged against him, and determined to put him to death, that they might engross all church power to themselves, and all the respects and obedience of the people might be paid to them only. The inheritance shall be ours, we will be lords paramount, and bear all the sway. There is an inheritance, which if they had duly revered the Son, might have been theirs, a heavenly inheritance, but they slighted that, and would have their inheritance in the wealth and pomp, and powers of this world. So they took him and killed him; they had not done it yet, but they would do it in a little time; and they cast him out of the vineyard, i. e. they refused to admit his gospel when he was gone; it would by no means agree with their scheme, and so they threw it out with disdain and detestation.

5. For such sinful shameful doings nothing can be expected but a fearful doom, ver. 9. what shall therefore the Lord of the vineyard do? It is easy to say what, for nothing could be done more provoking. 1. He will come and destroy the husbandmen, whom he would have saved. When they only denied the fruit, he did not distrust upon them for the rent, not dispossess them and dispossess them for non-payment; but when they killed his servants and his Son, he determined to destroy them; and this was fulfilled when Jerusalem was laid waste, and the Jewish nation extirpated and made a desolation.

2. He will give the vineyard to others. If he have not the rent from them, he will have it from another people, for God will be no loser by any. This was fulfilled in the taking in of the Gentiles, and the abundance of fruit which the gospel brought forth in all the world, Col. i. 6. Note, If some from whom we expected well prove bad, it doth not follow but that others will be better. Christ encouraged himself with this in his undertaking, though Israel be not gathered, not gathered to him, but gathered against him, yet shall I be glorious, Isa. xlix. 5, 9, as a light to lighten the Gentiles.

3. Their opposition to Christ's exaltation shall be no obstruction to it, ver. 10, 11. The stone which the builders rejected, notwithstanding that, is become the head of the corner, is highly advanced as the head-stone, and of necessary use and influence as the corner-stone. God will set Christ as his King upon his holy hill of Zion, in spite of their project who would break his bands asunder. And all the world shall see and own this to be the Lord's doings in justice to the Jews, and in compassion to the Gentiles. This exaltation of Christ was the Lord's doing, and it is his doing to exalt him in our hearts, and to set up his throne there, and if it be done, it cannot but be marvellous in our eyes.

Now what effect had this parable upon the chief priests and Scribes, whose conviction was designed by it? They knew he spake this parable against them, ver. 12. They could not but see their own faces in the glass of it; and one would think it shewed them their sin so very heinous, and their ruin so certain and great, that it should have frightened them into a compliance with Christ and his gospel, should have prevailed to bring them to repentance, at least to make them desist from their malicious purpose against him; but instead of that, (1.) They sought to lay hold on him; and make him their prisoner immediately, and so to fulfil what he had just now said they would do to him, ver. 8. (2.) Nothing restrained them from it but the awe they stood in of the people; they did not reverence Christ, nor had any fear of God before their eyes, but were afraid if they should publicly lay hold on Christ, the mob would rise and lay hold on them and rescue him. (3.) They left him and went their way; if they could not do hurt to him, they resolved he should not do good to them, and therefore they got out of the hearing of his powerful preaching, lest they should be converted and healed. Note, If men's prejudices be not conquered by the evidence of truth, they are but confirmed; and if the corruptions of the heart be not subdued by faithful reproofs, they are but enraged and exasperated. If the gospel be not a savour of life unto life, it will be a savour of death unto death.

13. ¶ And they send unto him certain of the Pharisees and of the Herodians, to catch him in his words. 14. And when they were come, they say unto him, Master, we know that thou art true, and carest for no man, for thou regardest not the person of men, but teachest the way of God in truth: Is it lawful to give tribute to Cæsar, or not? 15. Shall we give or shall we not give? But he, knowing their hypocrisy, said unto them, why tempt ye me? bring me a penny, that I may see it. 16. And they brought it. And he saith unto them, Whose is this image and superscription? And they said unto him, Cæsar's. 17. And Jesus answering said unto them, Render to Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's, and to God the things that are God's. And they marvelled at him.

When the enemies of Christ who thirsted for his blood, could not find occasion against him from what he said against them, they tried to ensnare him by putting questions to him. Here we have him tempted, or attempted rather, with a question about the lawfulness of paying tribute to Cæsar: We had this story, Matt. xxii. 15.

1. The persons they employed were the Pharisees and the Herodians, men that in this matter were contrary to one another, and yet concurred against Christ, ver. 13. The Pharisees were great sticklers for the Jews' liberty, and if he should say it was lawful to give tribute to Cæsar, they would incense the common people against him, and the Herodians would underhand assist them in it: The Herodians were great sticklers for the Roman power, and if he should discountenance the paying of tribute to Cæsar, they would incense the governor against him, yea, and the Pharisees against their own principles, would join with them in it. It is no new thing for those that are at variance in other things, to join in a confederacy against Christ.

2. The pretence they made was, that they desired him to resolve them a case of conscience, which was of great importance in the present juncture; and they take on them to have a mighty opinion of his ability to resolve it, ver. 14. They complimented him at a high rate, called him Master, owned him for a teacher of the way of God, a teacher of it in truth, he taught what was good, and upon principles of truth, that he would not be brought by smiles or frowns to depart a step from the rules of equity and goodness; thou carest for no man, nor regardest the person of men, thou art not afraid of offending either the jealous prince on the one hand, or the jealous people on the other; thou art right, and always in the right, and dost in a right manner declare good and evil, truth and falsehood. If they spoke as they thought concerning Christ, when they said, we know that thou art right, their persecuting him and putting him to death as a deceiver, was a sin against knowledge; they knew him and yet crucified him. However a man's testimony shall be taken most strongly against himself, and out of their own mouths are they judged: they knew that he taught the way of God in truth, and yet rejected the counsel of God against themselves. The professions and pretences of hypocrites will be produced in evidence against them, and they will be self-condemned: But if they did not know or believe it, they lied unto God with their mouth, and flattered him with their tongue.

3. The question they put was, Is it lawful to give tribute to Cæsar, or not? They would be thought desirous to know their duty: As a nation that did righteousness they ask of God the ordinances of justice; when really they desired nothing but to know what he would say, in hopes, that which side soever he took of the question, they might take occasion from it to accuse him. Nothing more likely to ensnare ministers, than bringing them to meddle with controversies about civil rights, and to settle land marks, between the prince and the subject, which it is fit should be done, but not at all fit that they should have the doing of it. They seemed to refer the determining of this matter to Christ, and he indeed was fit to determine it, for by him kings reign and princes decree justice; for they put the question fairly, Shall we give, or shall we not give? They seemed resolved to stand to his award; and if thou sayest we must pay tribute, we will do it, though we be made beggars by it; if thou sayest we must not, we will not, though we be made traitors for it. Many seem desirous to know their duty that are no ways disposed to do it, as those proud men, Jer. xlii. 20.

4. Christ determined the question: and evaded the snare, by referring them to their natural concessions already made, by which they were precluded from disputing this matter, ver. 15, 16, 17. He knows their hypocrisy; the malice that was in their hearts against him, while with their mouth they shewed all this love. Hypocrisy, though never so artfully managed; cannot be concealed from the Lord Jesus: He sees the potsherd that is covered with the silver dross. He knew they intended to ensnare him, and therefore contrived the matter so as to ensnare them, and to oblige them by their own words to do what they were unwilling to do, which was to pay their taxes honestly and quietly, and yet at the same time to screen himself against their exceptions. He made them acknowledge that the current money of their nation was Roman money, had the emperor's image on one side, and his superscription on the reverse, and if so, (1.) Cæsar might command their money for the public benefit, because he has the custody and conduct of the state, wherein he ought to have his charges borne, Render to Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's. The circulation of the money is from him as the fountain, and therefore it must return to him. As far as it is his, so far it must be rendered to him, and how far it is his, and may be commanded by him, is to be judged by the constitution of the government, according as it is and hath settled the prerogative of the prince, and the property of the subject. (2.) Cæsar might not command their consciences, nor did he pretend to it; he offered not to make any alteration in their religion. Pay your tribute therefore without murmuring or disputing, but be sure to render to God the things that are God's. Perhaps, referring to the parable he had just now put forth, in which he had condemned them for not rendering the fruits to the Lord of the vineyard, ver. 2. Many that seem careful to give to men their due are in no care to give unto God the glory due to his name; whereas our hearts and best affections are as much due to him as ever rent was to a landlord, or tribute to a prince. All that heard Christ, marvelled at the discretion of his answer, and how ingeniously he avoided the snare; but I doubt none were brought by it, as they ought to be, to render to themselves God and their devotions. Many will commend the wit of a sermon, that will not be commanded by the divine laws of a sermon.

18. ¶ Then come unto him the Sadducees, which say there is no resurrection; and they asked him, saying, 19. Master, Moses wrote unto us, If a man's brother die, and leave his wife behind him, and leave no children, that his brother should take his wife, and raise up seed unto his brother. 20. Now there were seven brethren, and the first took a wife, and dying, left no seed. 21. And the second took her, and died, neither left he any seed: and the third likewise. 22. And the seven had her, and left no seed: last of all the woman died also. 23. In the resurrection therefore, when they shall rise, whose wife shall she be of them? for the seven had her to wife. 24. And Jesus answering said unto them, do ye not therefore err, because ye know not the scriptures, neither the power of God? 25. For when they shall rise from the dead they neither marry nor are given in marriage; but are as the angels which are in heaven. 26. And as touching the dead, that they rise: have ye not read in the book of Moses, how in the bush God spake unto him, saying, I am the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob? 27. He is not the God of the dead, but the God of the living: ye therefore do greatly err.

The Sadducees, that were the deists of that age, here attack our Lord Jesus, it should seem, not as the Scribes and Pharisees and chief priests, with any malicious design upon his person; they were not bigots and persecutors, but sceptics and infidels, and their design was upon his doctrine, to hinder the spreading of that; they denied, that there was any resurrection, any world of spirits, any state of rewards and punishments, on the other side death: now those great and fundamental truths which they denied, Christ had made it his business to establish and prove, and had carried the notion of them much further than ever it was before carried; and therefore they set themselves to perplex his doctrine.

1. See here the method they take to entangle it; they quote the ancient law, by which, if a man die without issue, his brother was obliged to marry his widow, ver. 19. They suppose a case to happen, that according to that law seven brothers were successively the husbands of one woman, ver. 20. Probably these Sadducees, according to their wonted profaneness, intended hereby to ridicule that law, and so to bring the whole frame of the Mosaic Institution into contempt, as absurd and inconvenient in the practice of it. Those who deny divine truths, commonly set themselves to disparage divine laws and ordinances. But this only by the by; their design was to expose the doctrine of the resurrection; for they suppose that if there be a future state, it must be such a one as this, and then the doctrine they think is clogged either with this invincible absurdity, that a woman in that state must have seven husbands; or else with this unsolvable difficulty, whose wife she must be. See with what subtilty these heretics undermine the truth: they do not deny it, nor say they can be no resurrection, nay they do not seem to doubt it, nor say, If there be a resurrection, whose wife shall she be? as the devil to Christ, If thou be the son of God; but as though these beasts of the field were more subtle than the serpent himself: they pretend to own the truth, as if they were not Sadducees, no, not they, who said they denied the resurrection? They take it for granted there is a resurrection, and would be thought to desire instruction concerning it, when really they are designing to give it a fatal stab, and think they shall do it. Note, It is the common artifice of heretics and Sadducees to perplex and entangle the truth, which they have not the impudence to deny.

2. See here the method Christ takes to clear and establish this truth, which they attempted to darken and give a shock to. This was a matter of moment, and therefore Christ doth not pass it over lightly, but enlargeth upon it, that if they should not be reclaimed, yet others might be confirmed.

1. He charges the Sadducees with error, and chargeth that upon their ignorance. They who haunter the doctrine of the resurrection, as some do in our age, would be thought the only knowing men, because the only free thinkers, when really they are the fools in Israel, and the most enslaved and prejudiced thinkers in the world. Do ye not therefore err? ye cannot but be sensible of it yourselves, and that the cause of your error is, (1.) Because ye do not know the scriptures; not but that the Sadducees had read the scriptures, and perhaps were ready in them, and yet they might be truly said not to know the scriptures, because they did not know the sense and meaning of them, but put false constructions upon them, or they did not receive the scriptures as the word of God, but set up their own corrupt reasonings in opposition to the scripture, and would believe nothing but what they could see. Note, A right knowledge of the scripture as the fountain whence all revealed religion now flows, and the foundation on which it is built is the best preservative against error. Keep the truth, the scripture truth, and it shall keep thee. (2.) Because you know not the power of God. They could not but know that God is Almighty, but they would not apply that doctrine to this matter, but gave up the truth to the objections of the impossibility of it, which would all have been answered if they had stuck to the doctrine of God's omnipotence, to which nothing is impossible. This therefore which God hath spoken once, we are concerned to hear twice, to hear and believe, to hear and apply, that power belongs to God, Psalm lxi. 10. Rom. iv. 19, 20, 21. The same power that made soul and body, and preserved them while they were together, can preserve the body safe, and the soul active, when they are parted, and can unite them together again, for behold, the Lord's arm is not shortened. The power of God seen in the return of the spring, Psalm cix. 30. in the reviving of the corn, John xii. 21. in the restoring of an abject people to their prosperity, Ezek. xxxvii. 12, 13, 14. in the raising so many to life miraculously, both in the Old Testament, and in the New, and especially in the resurrection of Christ, Ephes. i. 19, 20. are all earnest of our resurrection by the same power, Phil. iii. 21. According to the mighty working whereby he is able to subdue all things to himself.

2. He sets aside all the force of their objection, by setting the doctrine of the future state in a true light, ver. 25. When they shall rise from the dead, they neither marry, nor are given in marriage. It is folly to ask, Whose wife shall she be of the seven? when the relation between husband and wife, though instituted in the earthly paradise, will not be known in the heavenly one. Turks and infidels, expect sensual pleasures in their fool's paradises, but Christians know better things, that flesh and blood shall not inherit the kingdom of God, 1 Cor. xv. 50. and expect better things, even a full satisfaction in God's love and likeness, Psalm xvii. 14, 15. they are as the angels in heaven, and we know they have neither wives nor children. It is no wonder if we confound ourselves with endless absurdities; when we measure our ideas of the world of spirits, by the affairs of this world of sense.

4. He builds the doctrine of the future state, and of the blessedness of the righteous in that state, upon the covenant of God with Abraham, which God was pleased to own, being after Abraham's death, ver. 26, 27. He appeals to the scriptures, Have ye not read in the books of Moses? We have some advantage in dealing with those that have read the scriptures, though many that have read them wrest them as the Sadducees did to their own destruction. Now that which he refers them to is what God said to Moses at the bush, I am the God of Abraham, not only I was so, but I am so, I am the portion and happiness of Abraham, a God all-sufficient to him. Note, It is absurd to think that God's relation to Abraham should be continued and thus solemnly recognised, if Abraham was annihilated, or that the living God should be the portion and happiness of a man that is dead, and must be for ever so; and therefore you must conclude, (1.) That Abraham's soul exists and acts in a state of separation from the body. (2.) That therefore some time or other the body must rise again, for there is such an innate inclination in a human soul towards its body, as would make a total and everlasting separation inconsistent with the ease and repose, much more with the bliss and joy of those souls that have the Lord for their God. Upon the whole matter he concludes, ye therefore do greatly err. Those that deny the resurrection do greatly err, and ought to be told so.

28. ¶ And one of the Scribes came, and having heard them reasoning together, and perceiving that he had answered them well, asked him, which is the first commandment of all? 29. And Jesus answered him, The first of all the commandments, is, Hear, O Israel; The Lord our God is one Lord: 30. And thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind, and with all thy strength, this is the first commandment. 31. And the second is like, namely this, Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself. There is none other commandment greater than these. 32. And the Scribe said unto him, Well, Master, thou hast said the truth: for there is one God, and there is none other but he: 33. And to love him with all the heart, and with all the understanding, and with all the soul, and with all the strength, and to love his neighbour as himself, is more than all whole burnt-offerings and sacrifices. 34. And when Jesus saw that he answered discreetly he said unto him, Thou art not far from the kingdom of God. And no man after that durst ask him any question.

The Scribes and Pharisees were (however bad otherwise, yet) enemies to the Sadducees; now one would have expected, that when they heard Christ argue so well against the Sadducees, they should have countenanced him as they did Paul when he appeared against the Sadducees, Acts xxiii. 9. but it had not that effect; because he did not fall in with them in the ceremonies of religion, his agreeing with them in the essentials gained him no manner of respect with them. Only we have here an account of one of them, a scribe, who had so much civility in him as to take notice of Christ's answer to the Sadducees, and to own that he had answered well, and much to the purpose, ver. 28. and we have reason to hope he did not join with other the Scribes, in persecuting Christ; for here we have his application to Christ for instruction, and it was such a. became him; not tempting Christ, but desiring to improve his acquaintance with him.

1. He enquired, which is the first commandment of all? ver. 28. He doth not mean the first in order, but the first in weight and dignity; which is that command which we ought to have in a special manner an eye to, and our obedience to which will lay a foundation for our obedience to all the rest? Not that any commandment of God is little, they are all the commands of a great God, but some are greater than others, moral precepts than rituals, and of some we may say, they are the greatest of all.

2. Christ gave him a direct answer to this enquiry, ver. 29, 30, 31. Those that sincerely desire to be instructed concerning their duty, Christ will guide in judgment, and teach his way. He tells him,

(1.) That the great commandment of all, which is indeed inclusive of all, is that of loving God with all our hearts. (1.) Where this is the commanding principle in the soul, there is a disposition to every other duty. Love is the leading affection of the soul, the love of God is the leading grace in the renewed soul. (2.) Where this is not, nothing else that is good is done, or not done aright, or not accepted, or not done long. Loving God with all our heart, will effectually take us off from and arm us against all those things that are rivals with him for the throne in our souls, and will engage us to every thing by which we may be honoured and with which he will be pleased. And no commandment will be grievous with which he will be pleased. Now here in Mark, our Saviour prefixeth to his command the great doctrinal truth upon which it is built, ver. 29. Hear, O Israel, the Lord our God is one Lord; if we firmly believe this, it will follow, that we shall love him with all our hearts, he is Jehovah, who has all amiable perfections in himself; he is our God, to whom we stand related and obliged, and therefore we ought to love him, to set our affections on him, let out our desires towards him, and take a delight in him; and he is one Lord, therefore he must be loved with our whole heart; he has the sole right to us, and therefore ought to have the sole possession of us. If he be one, our hearts must be one with him, and since there is no God but he, no rival must be admitted with him upon the throne.

(2.) That the second great commandment is to love our neighbour as ourselves, ver. 31. as truly and sincerely as we love ourselves and in the same instances, and we must shew it by doing as we would be done by. As we must therefore love God better than ourselves because he is Jehovah, a Being infinitely better than we are; and must love him with all our heart, because he is one Lord, and there is no other like him, so we must love our neighbour as ourselves, because he is of the same nature with ourselves; our hearts are fashioned alike, and my neighbour and myself are of one body, of one society, that of the world of mankind; and if a fellow Christian and of the same sacred society, the obligation is the stronger. Has not one God created us? Mal. ii. 10. Has not one Christ redeemed us? Well might Christ say, There is no other commandment greater than these, for in these all the law is fulfilled; and if we make conscience of obedience to these, all other instances of obedience will follow of course.

3. The Scribe consented to what Christ said, and desisted upon it, ver. 32, 33. (1.) He commends Christ's decision of this question; Well Master, Thou hast said the truth. Christ's assertions needed not the Scribes' attestation, but this Scribe, being a man in authority, thought it would put some reputation upon what Christ said to have it commended by him; and it shall be brought in evidence against those who persecuted Christ, as a deceiver, that one of themselves, even a scribe of their own, confessed that he said the truth, and said it well. And thus must we subscribe to Christ's sayings, must set to our seal that they are true. (2.) He comments upon it; Christ had quoted that great doctrine, That the Lord our God is one Lord, and this he not only assented to, but added, and there is none other but he; and therefore we must have no other God but him. This excludes all rivals with him, and secures the throne in the heart entire for him. Christ had laid down that great law of loving God with all our heart; and this also he explains, that it is loving him with the understanding, as those that know what abundant reason we have to love him; our love to God, as it must be an entire, so it must be an intelligent love; we must love him with all the understanding, ἐξ ὅλης τῆς ἀνοίας, out of the whole understanding, our rational powers and faculties must all be set on work to lead out the affections of our souls towards God. Christ had said, That to love God and our neighbour is the greatest commandment of all, yea, saith the Scribe, it is better, it is more than all whole burnt-offerings and sacrifices. More acceptable to God, and will turn to a better account to ourselves. There were those who held, that the law of sacrifices was the greatest commandment of all, but this Scribe readily agreed with our Saviour in this, that the law of love to God and our neighbour is greater than that of sacrifice, even than that of whole burnt-offerings, which were intended purely for the honour of God.

4. Christ approved of what he said, and encouraged him to proceed in his enquiries of him, ver. 34. (1.) He owned that he understood himself well as far as he went; so far, so good; Jesus saw that he answered discreetly, and was the more pleased with it, because he had of late met with so many even of the Scribes, men of letters, that answered indiscreetly, as those that had no understanding, nor desired to have any. He answered σοφως, as one that had a mind; as a rational intelligent man, as one that had his wits about him. As one whose reason was not blinded, whose judgment was not biased, and whose forethought was not fettered by the prejudices which other Scribes were so much under the power of. He answered as one that allowed himself liberty and leisure to consider, and as one that had considered. (2.) He owned that he stood fair for a farther advance; Thou art not far from the kingdom of God, the kingdom of grace and glory; thou art in a likely way to be a Christian, a disciple of Christ. For the doctrine of Christ insinuates most upon these things, and is designed, and has a tendency direct to bring thee to this. Note, There is hope of those who make a good use of the light they have, and go as far as that will carry them, that by the grace of God they will be led further by the clearer discoveries God has to make to them. What came of this Scribe we are not told, but would willingly hope that he took the hint Christ hereby gave him, and that having been told by him so much to his satisfaction what was the great commandment of the law, he proceeded to enquire of him or his apostles what was the great commandment of the gospel too! yet if he did not, but took up here and went no further, we are not to think it strange, for there are many who are not far from the kingdom of God, and yet never come thither. Now one would think this should have invited many to consult him; but it had a contrary effect, no man after that durst ask him any question; every thing he said was spoken with such authority and majesty that every one stood in awe of him; those that desired to learn were ashamed to ask, and those that designed to cavil were afraid to ask.

35. ¶ And Jesus answered and said, while he taught in the temple, how say the Scribes that Christ is the Son of David? 36. For David himself said by the Holy Ghost, The LORD said to my Lord, Sit thou on my right hand, till I make thine enemies thy footstool. 37. David therefore himself calleth him Lord; and whence is he then his Son? And the common people heard him gladly. 38. ¶ And he said unto them in his doctrine, Beware of the Scribes, which love to go in long clothing, and love salutations in the market-places. 39. And the chief seats in the synagogues, and the uppermost rooms at feasts: 40. Which devour widows' houses, and for a pretence make long prayers: these shall receive greater damnation.

Here, 1. Christ shews the people how weak and defective the Scribes were in their preaching, and how unable to solve the difficulties that occurred in the scriptures of the old Testament, which they undertook to expound. Of this he gives an instance, which is not so fully related here as it was in Matthew. Christ was teaching in the temple, and many things he said which were not written; but notice is taken of this, because it will stir us up to enquire concerning Christ, and to enquire of him: for none can have the right knowledge of him but from himself; it is not to be had from the Scribes, for they will soon be run a-ground.

1. They told the people that the Messiah was to be the Son of David, ver. 35. and they were in the right; he was not only to descend from his loins, but to fill his throne, Luke i. 32. The Lord God shall give him the throne of his father David. The scripture said it often, but the people took it, as what the Scribes said, whereas the truths of God should rather be quoted from our Bibles than from our ministers, for there is the original of them, Dulcius ex ipso fonte bibuntur aquæ.

2. Yet they could not tell them how, notwithstanding that it was very proper for David in Spirit, the Spirit of prophecy, to call him his Lord, as he doth, Psal. cx. 1. They had taught the people that concerning the Messiah which would be for the honour of their nation, that he should be a branch of their royal family; but had not taken care to teach them that which was for the honour of the Messiah himself, that he should be the Son of God, and as such, and not otherwise, David's Lord; thus they hold the truth in unrighteousness, and were partial in the gospel, as well as in the law of the Old Testament. They were able to say it and prove it, that Christ was to be David's Son, but if any should object, How then doth David himself call him Lord? they would not know how to avoid the force of the objection. Note, Those are unworthy to sit in Moses's seat, who, though they are able to preach the truth, are not in some measure able to defend it when they have preached it, and to convince gainsayers.

Now this galled the Scribes, to have their ignorance thus exposed, and no doubt incensed them more against Christ; but the common people heard him gladly, ver. 37. What he preached was surprising and affecting; and though it reflected upon the Scribes, it was instructive to them, and they had never heard such preaching. Probably there was something more than ordinary commanding and charming in his voice and way of delivery, which recommended him to the affections of the common people; for we do not find that any were wrought upon to believe in him, and to follow him, but he was to them as a lovely song to one that could play well on an instrument, as Ezekiel was to his hearers, Ezek. xxxiii. 32. And perhaps some of these cried, Crucify him, as Herod heard John Baptist gladly, and yet cut off his head.

2. He cautions the people to take heed of suffering themselves to be imposed upon by the Scribes, and of being infected with their pride and hypocrisy. He said unto them in his doctrine, Beware of the Scribes, ver. 38. stand upon your guard, that you neither imitate their peculiar opinions, nor the opinions of the people concerning them. It was a long charge drawn up against them in the parallel place, Matt. xxiii. it is here contracted.

1. They affect to appear very great; for they go in long clothing, with vestures down to their feet, and in those they walk about the streets, as princes or judges or gentlemen of the long robe. Their going in such clothing was not sinful, but their loving to go in it, priding themselves in it, valuing themselves by it, commanding respect by it, saying to their long clothes, as Saul to Samuel, Honour me now before this people, this was a product of pride. Christ would have his disciples go with their loins girt.

2. They affect to appear very good; for they pray, they make long prayers, as if they were very intimate with heaven, and had a deal of business there. They took care it should be known that they prayed, that they prayed long, which, some think, intimates, that they prayed not for themselves only but for others, and therein were very particular and very large; this they did for a pretence, that they might seem to love prayer, not only for God's sake, whom hereby they pretended to glorify; but for their neighbour's sake, whom hereby they pretended to be serviceable to.

3. They herein aimed to advance themselves; they coveted applause, and were fond of it; they loved salutations in the market-places, and the chief seats in the synagogues, and the uppermost rooms at feasts, these pleased a vain fancy; to have these given them, they thought expressed the value they had for them that did know them, and gained them respect from those that did not.

4. They herein aimed to enrich themselves. They devoured widows' houses, made themselves masters of their estates by some trick or other, and it was to screen themselves from the suspicion of dishonesty, that they put on the mask of piety; and that they might not be thought as bad as the worst, they were studious to seem as good as the best. Let fraud and oppression be thought the worse of for their having profaned and disgraced long prayers; but let not prayers, no not long prayers, be thought the worse of, if made in humility and sincerity, for their having been by some thus abused. But as iniquity thus disguised with a shew of piety is double iniquity, so its doom will be doubly heavy; these shall receive greater damnation, greater than those that live without prayer; greater than they should have received for the wrong done to the poor widows, if it had not been thus disguised. Note, The damnation of hypocrites will be of all other the greatest damnation.

41. ¶ And Jesus sat over against the treasury, and beheld how the people cast money into the treasury: and many that were rich cast in much. 42. And there came a certain poor widow, and she threw in two mites, which make a farthing. 43. And he called unto him his disciples, and saith unto them, Verily I say unto you, That this poor widow hath cast more in, than all they which have cast into the treasury: 44. For all they did cast in of their abundance; but she of her want did cast in all that she had, even all her living.

This passage of story was not in Matthew, but is here and in Luke; it is Christ's commendation of the poor widow, that cast two mites into the treasury, which our Saviour, as busy as he was in preaching, found leisure to take notice of. Observe,

1. There was a public fund for charity, into which contributions were brought, and out of which distributions were made; a poor's box, and this in the temple; for works of charity and works of piety very fitly go together; where God is honoured by our worship, it is proper he should be honoured by the relief of his poor; and we often find prayers and alms in conjunction, as Acts xx. 1, 2. It is good to erect public receptacles of charity for the inviting and directing of private hands in giving to the poor; nay it is good for those who are of ability to have funds of their own, to lay by as God has prospered them, 1 Cor. xvi. 2. that they may have something ready to give when an object of charity offers itself, which is before dedicated to such uses.

2. Jesus Christ had an eye upon it. He sat over against the treasury, and beheld how the people cast money upon it; not grudging either that he had none to cast in, or had not the disposal of that which was cast in, but observing what was cast in. Note, Our Lord Jesus takes notice what we contribute to pious and charitable uses; whether we give liberally or give sparingly; whether cheerfully, or with reluctance and ill-will; nay, he looks at the heart; he observes what principles we act upon, and what our views are in giving alms; and whether we do it as unto the Lord, or only to be seen of men.

3. He saw many that were rich cast in much, and it was a good sight to see rich people charitable, to see many rich people so; and to see them not only cast in, but cast in much. Note, Those that are rich ought to give richly; if God give abundantly to us, he expects we should give abundantly to the poor; and it is not enough for those that are rich to say, they give as much as others do, who perhaps have much less of the world than they have; but they must give in proportion to their estates; and if objects of charity do not present themselves that require so much, they ought to enquire them out and to devise liberal things.

4. There was a poor widow that cast in two mites, which make a farthing, ver. 42. And our Lord Jesus highly commended her; called his disciples to him, and bid them take notice of it, ver. 43: tells them she could very ill spare that which she gave, she had scarce enough for herself, it was all her living, all she had to live upon for that day, and perhaps a great part of what she had earned by her labour the day before: and that forasmuch as he knew she did it from a truly charitable disposition, he reckoned it more than all that put together which the rich people threw in; for they did cast in of their abundance, but she of her want, ver. 44. Now many would have been ready to censure this poor widow, and to think she did ill; why should she give to others, when she had little enough for herself? Charity begins at home; or, if she would give it, why did she not bestow it upon some poor body that she knew, what need she bring it to the treasury to be disposed of by the chief priests, who we have reason to fear were partial in the disposal of it? It is so rare a thing to find any that would not blame the widow, that we cannot expect to find any that will imitate her, and yet our Saviour commends her, and therefore we are sure she did very well and wisely; if Christ saith well-done, no matter who saith otherwise; and we must from hence learn, (1.) That giving alms is an excellent good thing, and highly pleasing to the Lord Jesus; and if we be humble and sincere in it he will graciously accept of it, though in some circumstances there may not be all the discretion in the world. (2.) Those that have but a little, yet ought to give alms out of their little. Those that live by their labour, from hand to mouth, yet must give to those that need, Eph. iv. 28. (3.) It is very good for us to straiten and deny ourselves, that we may be able to give the more to the poor; not only to deny ourselves superfluities, but even conveniences for the sake of charity; we should in many cases pinch ourselves, that we may supply others necessities; this is loving our neighbours as ourselves. (4.) Public charities should be encouraged, for they bring upon a nation public blessings; and though there may be some mismanagement of them, yet that is not a good reason why we should not bring in our quota to them. (5.) Though we can give but a little in charity, yet if it be according to our ability and be given with an upright heart, it shall be accepted of Christ, who requires according to what a man has, and not according to what he has not; two mites shall be put upon the score and brought to account, if given in a right manner, as if it had been two pounds. (6.) It is much to the praise of charity when we give not only to our power, but beyond our power, as the Macedonian churches, whose deep poverty abounded to the riches of their liberality, 2 Cor. viii. 2, 3. When we can cheerfully provide for others, out of our own necessary provision, as the widow of Sarepta for Elijah, and Christ for his five thousand guests, and trust God to provide for us some other way, this is thank-worthy.

C H A P. XIII.

We have here the substance of that prophetic sermon which our Lord Jesus preached, pointing at the destruction of Jerusalem, and the consummation of all things; it was one of the last of his sermons, and not ad populum, but ad clerum; it was private, preached only to four of his disciples, with whom his secret was. Here is, 1. The occasion of his prediction, his disciples admiring the buildings of the temple, ver. 1, 2. and their enquiry, concerning the time of the desolation of them, ver. 3, 4. 2. The predictions themselves, (1.) Of the rise of deceivers, ver. 5, 6—20, 21, 22. (2.) Of the wars of the nations, ver. 7, 8. (3.) Of the perversion of Christians, ver. 9—13. (4.) Of the destruction of Jerusalem, ver. 14—20. (5.) Of the end of the world, ver. 21—27. (3.) Some general intimations concerning the time of them, ver. 28—32. (1.) Some practical inferences from all, ver. 33—37.

1. AND as he went out of the temple, one of his disciples saith unto him, Master, see what manner of stones, and what buildings are here. 2. And Jesus answering said unto him, Seest thou these great buildings? there shall not be left one stone upon another, that shall not be thrown down. 3. And as he sat upon the mount of Olives, over against the temple, Peter, and James, and John, and Andrew, asked him privately, 4. Tell us, when shall these things be? and what shall be the sign when all these things shall be fulfilled.

We may here see,

1. How apt many of Christ's own disciples are to idolize things that look great, and have been long looked upon as holy; they had heard Christ complain of those who had made the temple a den of thieves, and yet when he quitted it for the wickedness that remained in it, they court him to be as much in love as they were with the stately structure and adorning of it. One of them said to him, Look, Master, What manner of stones and what buildings are here, ver. 1. We never saw the like in Galilee: O do not leave this fine place.

2. How little Christ values external pomp, where there is not real purity; Seest thou these great buildings? saith Christ, and admirest thou them? I tell thee, the time is at hand when there shall not be left one stone upon another that shall not be thrown down, ver. 2. And the sumptuousness of the fabric shall be no security to it, no nor move any compassion in the Lord Jesus towards it. He looks with pity upon the ruin of precious souls, and weeps over them, for on them he has put a great value; but we do not find him look with any pity upon the ruin of a magnificent house, when he is driven out of it by sin, for that is of small value with him. With what little concern doth he say, Not one stone shall be left on another! Much of the strength of the temple lay in the largeness of the stones, and if these be thrown down, no footstep, no remembrance of it will remain. While any part remained standing there might be some hopes of the repair of it; but what hope is there when not one stone is left upon another?

3. How natural it is to us to desire to know things to come, and the times of them; more inquisitive we are apt to be about that than about our duty. His disciples knew not how to digest this doctrine of the ruin of the temple, which they thought must be their Master's royal palace, and in which they expected their preferment, and to have the posts of honour; and therefore were in pain till they got him alone, and got more out of him concerning this matter. As he was returning to Bethany therefore, he sat upon the mount of Olives, over against the temple, where he had a full view of it; and there four of them agreed to ask him privately, what he meant by the destroying of the temple, which they understood no more than they did the predictions of his own death, so inconsistent was it with their scheme. Probably, though these four proposed the question, yet Christ's discourse in answer to it was in the hearing of the rest of the disciples, yet privately, i. e. apart from the multitude. Their enquiry is, When shall these things be? They will not question, at least not seem to question, whether they shall be or no, for their master has said they shall; but are willing to hope it is a great way off. Yet they ask not precisely the day and year, therein they were modest, but tell us, What shall be the sign, when all these things shall be fulfilled? What prefaces shall there be of them, and how may we prognosticate their approach?

5. ¶ And Jesus answering them began to say, Take heed lest any man deceive you: 6. For many shall come in my name, saying, I am Christ; and shall deceive many. 7. And when ye shall hear of wars and rumours of wars, be ye not troubled; for such things must needs be; but the end shall not be yet. 8. For nation shall rise against nation, and kingdom against kingdom: and there shall be earthquakes in divers places, and there shall be famines and troubles: these are the beginnings of sorrows. 9. ¶ But take heed to yourselves: for they shall deliver you up to councils; and in the synagogues ye shall be beaten: and ye shall be brought before rulers and kings for my sake, for a testimony against them. 10. And the gospel must first be published among all nations. 11. But when they shall lead you, and deliver you up, take no thought beforehand what ye shall speak, neither do ye premeditate: but whatsoever shall be given you in that hour, that speak ye: for it is not ye that speak, but the Holy Ghost. 12. Now the brother shall betray the brother to death, and the father the son: and children shall rise up against their parents, and shall cause them to be put to death. 13. And ye shall be hated of all men for my name's sake: but he that shall endure unto the end, the same shall be saved.

Our Lord Jesus in reply to their question, sets himself not so much to satisfy their curiosity as to direct their consciences: leaves them still in the dark concerning the times and seasons, which the Father has kept in his own power, and which it was not for them to know; but gives them the cautions which were needful, with reference to the events that should now shortly come to pass.

1. They must take heed that they be not deceived by the seducers and impostors that should now shortly arise, ver. 5, 6. Take heed lest any man deceive you, lest having found the true Messiah, you lose him again in the crowd of pretenders, or be inveigled to embrace others in rivalry with him. Many shall come in my name, not in the name of Jesus, but saying, I am Christ, and so claiming the dignities which I only am intitled to. After the Jews had rejected the true Christ, they were imposed upon, and so exposed by many false christs, but never before; those false christs deceive many, therefore take heed lest they deceive you. Note, When many are deceived, we should thereby be awakened to look to ourselves.

2. They must take heed that they be not disturbed at the noise of wars, which they should be alarmed with, ver. 7, 8. Sin introduced wars, and they come from men's lusts. But at sometimes the nations are more distracted and wasted with wars than at other times; so it shall be now; Christ was born into the world when there was a general peace, but soon after he went out of the world there were general wars; nation shall rise against nation, and kingdom against kingdom. And what will become of them then who are to preach the gospel to every nation? Inter arma silent leges. But be not troubled at it. (1.) Let it be no surprise to you, you are bid to expect it, and such things must needs be, for God has appointed them, in order to the farther accomplishment of his purposes, and by the tears of the Jews (which Josephus has given us a large account of) God will punish the wickedness of the Jews. (2.) Let it be no terror to you, as if your interest were in danger of being overthrown, or your work obstructed by these wars; you have no concern in them, and therefore need not be apprehensive of any damage by them. Note, Those that despise the smiles of the world, and do not court and covet them, may despise the frowns of the world, and need not fear them. If we seek not to rise with them that rise in the world, why should we dread falling with them that fall in the world? (3.) Let it not be looked upon as an omen of the approaching period of the world, for the end is not yet, ver. 7. Think not that these wars will bring the world to a period, no, there are other intermediate counsels to be fulfilled betwixt that and the end of all things, which are designed to prepare you for the end, but not to hasten it out of due time. (4.) Let it not be looked upon as if in them God had done his worst, no, he has more arrows in his quiver, and they are ordained against the persecutors; be not troubled at the wars you shall hear of, for they are but the beginnings of sorrow, and therefore instead of being disturbed at them, you ought to prepare for worse; for there shall also be earthquakes in divers places, which shall bury multitudes in the ruins of their own houses, and there shall be famines, by which many of the poor shall perish for want of bread, and troubles and commotions; so that there shall be no peace to him that goes out or comes in. The world shall be full of troubles, but be not ye troubled; without are fightings, within are fears, but fear not ye their fear. Note, The disciples of Christ, if it be not their own fault, may enjoy a holy security and serenity of mind, when all about them is in the greatest disorder.

(3.) They must take heed that they be not drawn away from Christ and from their duty to him, by the sufferings they should meet with for Christ's sake. Again, he saith, take heed to yourselves, ver. 9. Though you may escape the sword of war, better than some of your neighbours, because you interest not yourselves in the public quarrels, yet be not secure; you will be exposed to the sword of justice more than others, and the parties that contend with one another will unite against you. Take heed therefore lest you deceive yourselves with the hopes of outward prosperity, and such a temporal kingdom as you have been dreaming of, when it is through many tribulations that you must enter into the kingdom of God. Take heed lest you heedlessly expose yourselves to trouble, and pull it upon your own head: Take heed what you say and do, for you will have many eyes upon you. Observe,

1. What the trouble is they must expect.

(1.) They shall be hated of all men; trouble enough! The thoughts of being hated are grievous to a tender spirit, and the fruits of that hatred must needs be a constant vexation; those that are malicious will be mischievous. It was not for any thing amiss in them or done amiss by them, that they were hated, but for Christ's name's sake, because they were called by his name, called upon his name, preached his name, and wrought miracles in his name.

The world hated them because he loved them.

(2.) Their own relations shall betray them, those to whom they were most nearly nearly allied; and on whom therefore they depended for protection; they shall betray you, shall inform against you and be your prosecutors: If a father has a child that is a Christian, he shall become void of natural affection, it shall all be swallowed up in bigotry, and he shall betray his own child to the persecutors, as if he were a worshipper of other gods, Deut. xiii. 6.

(3.) Their church rulers shall inflict their censures upon them. You shall be delivered up to the great Sanhedrin at Jerusalem, and to the inferior courts and consistories in other cities, and shall be beaten in the synagogues with forty stripes at a time, as offenders against the law which was read in the synagogue. It is no new thing for the church's artillery, through the treachery of its officers, to be turned against some of its best friends.

(4.) Governors and kings shall use their power against them: Because the Jews have not power to put them to death, they shall incense the Roman powers against them, as they did Herod against James and Peter, and they shall cause you to be put to death, as enemies to the empire. They must resist unto blood, and still resist.

(2.) What they shall have to comfort themselves with in the midst of these great and fore troubles.

1. That the work they were called to should be carried on and prosper, notwithstanding all this opposition they should meet with in it, ver. 10. The gospel shall, for all this, be published among all nations, and before the destruction of Jerusalem the sound of it shall go forth into all the earth; not only through all the nation of the Jews, but to all the nations of the earth. It is comfort to those who suffer for the gospel, that though they may be crushed and borne down, the gospel cannot; it shall keep its ground and carry the day.

2. That their sufferings, instead of obstructing their work, should forward it; your being brought before governors and kings shall be for a testimony to them, so some read it, ver. 9. It shall give you an opportunity of preaching the gospel to those before whom you are brought as criminals, to whom otherwise you could not have access. Thus St. Paul's being brought before Felix, and Festus, and Agrippa, and Nero, was a testimony to them concerning Christ and his gospel. Or, as we read it, it shall be for a testimony against them, against both the judges and the prosecutors, who pursue those with the utmost rage that appear upon examination to be not only innocent but excellent persons. The gospel is a testimony to us concerning Christ and heaven; if we receive it, it will be a testimony for us, it will justify and save us; if not, it will be a testimony against us in the great day.

3. That when they were brought before kings and governors for Christ's sake, they should have special assistance from heaven to plead Christ's cause and their own, ver. 11. Take no thought beforehand what ye shall speak, he not solicitous how to address yourselves to great men; so as to obtain their favour, your cause is just and glorious, and needs not to be supported by premeditated speeches and harangues: But whatsoever shall be given you in that hour, whatsoever shall be suggested to you, and put into your minds, and into your mouths, pro re nata, that speak you, and fear not the success of it, because it is off hand; for it is not ye that speak purely by the strength of your own wisdom, consideration, and resolution, but it is the Holy Ghost. Note, Those whom Christ calls out to be advocates for him, shall be furnished with full instructions: And when we are engaged in the service of Christ, we may depend upon the aids of the Spirit of Christ.

4. That heaven at last would make amends for all. You will meet with a great deal of hardship in your way, but have a good heart on it, your warfare will be accomplished, and your testimony finished, and he that shall endure to the end, the same shall be saved, ver. 13. Perseverance gains the crown. The salvation here promised is more than a deliverance from evil, it is an everlasting blessedness, which shall be an abundant recompence for all their services and sufferings. All this we have, Matt. x. 17, &c.

14. ¶ But when ye shall see the abomination of desolation, spoken of by Daniel the prophet, standing where it ought not, (let him that readeth understand,) then let them that be in Judeah flee to the mountains: 15. And let him that is on the house-top not go down into the house, neither enter therein, to take any thing out of his house: 16. And let him that is in the field, not turn back again for to take up his garment. 17. But woe to them that are with child, and to them that give suck in those days. 18. And pray ye that your flight be not in the winter. 19. For in those days shall be affliction, such as was not from the beginning of the creation which God created, unto this time, neither shall be. 20. And except that the Lord had shortened those days, no flesh would be saved: but for the elect's sake, whom he hath chosen, he hath shortened the days. 21. And then if any man shall say to you, Lo, here is Christ, or, lo, he is there; believe him not. 22. For false Christs, and false prophets, shall rise, and shall shew signs and wonders, to seduce, if it were possible, even the elect. 23. But take ye heed: behold, I have foretold you all things.

The Jews, in rebelling against the Romans, and in persecuting the Christians, were hastening their own ruin apace, both efficiently and meritoriously were setting both God and man against them, see 1 Thess. ii. 15. Now here we have a prediction of that ruin which came upon them within less than forty years after this; We had it before, Matt. xxiv. 15. &c. Observe,

1. What is here foretold concerning it.

(1.) That the Roman armies should make a descent upon Judeah, and invest Jerusalem the holy city. There were the abomination of desolation, which the Jews did abominate, and by which they should be made desolate. The country of thine enemy is called the land which thou abhorrest, Isa. vii. 16. Therefore it was an abomination because it brought with it nothing but desolation. They had rejected Christ as an abomination, who would have been their salvation; and now God brought upon them an abomination that would be their desolation, thus spoken of by Daniel the prophet, chap. ix. 27. as that by which this sacrifice and offering should be made to cease. This army stood where it ought not, in and about the holy city, which the heathen ought not to have approached, nor should have been suffered to do, if Jerusalem had not first profaned the crown of holiness. This the church complains of, Lam. i. 10. The heathen entered into her sanctuary, whom thou didst command that they should not enter into the congregation; but sin made the breach, at which the glory went out, and the abomination of desolation broke in, and stood where it ought not. Now, let him that readeth this understand it, and endeavour to take it right. Prophecies should not be too plain, and yet intelligible to those that search them; and they are best understood by comparing them first with one another, and at last with the event.

(2.) That when the Roman army should come into the country, there would be no safety any where but by quitting the country, and that with all possible expedition; it will be in vain to fight, the enemies will be too hard for them; in vain to abscond, the enemies will find them out; and in vain to capitulate, the enemies will give them no quarter; a man cannot have so much as his life given him for a prey, but by fleeing to the mountains out of Judeah, and let him take the first alarm, and make the best of his way. If he be on the house-top, trying from thence to discover the motions of the enemy, and spies them coming, let him not go down to take any thing out of the house, for it will lose time, which is more precious than his best goods, and will but incumber him and embarrass his flight: if he be in the field, and there discovers the approach of the enemy, let him get away as he is, and not turn back again to take up his garment, ver. 16. If he can save his life, let him reckon it a good bargain, though he can have nothing else; and be thankful to God, that though he is cut short he is not cut off.

(3.) That it would go very hard at that time with poor mothers and nurses, ver. 17. Woe to them that are with child, that dare not go into strange places, that cannot shift for themselves, nor make haste as others can. And woe to them that give suck, that know not how either to leave the tender infants behind them, or to carry them along with them. Such is the vanity of the creature, that the time may often be, when the greatest comforts may prove the greatest burdens. It would likewise be very uncomfortable, if they should be forced to flee in the winter, ver. 18. when the weather and ways were bad, when the roads will be scarce passable, especially in those mountains to which they must flee. If there be no remedy but that trouble must come, yet we may desire and pray, that if it be God's will, the circumstances of it may be so ordered as to be a mitigation of the trouble; and when things are bad, we ought to consider they might have been worse. It is bad to be forced to flee, but it would have been worse if it had been in the winter.

(4.) That throughout all the country of the Jews, there should be such destruction and desolation made, as could not be paralleled in any history, ver. 19. In those days shall be affliction, such as was not from the beginning of time, that is, of the creation which God created, for time and the creation are of equal date, unto this day, neither shall be to the end of time. Such a complication of miseries, and of such continuance. The destruction of Jerusalem by the Chaldeans was very terrible, but this exceeded it. It threatened an universal slaughter of all the people of the Jews, so barbarously did they devour one another, and the Romans devour them all; that if their arms had continued a little longer, no flesh could have been saved, not one Jew could have been left alive; but in the midst of wrath God remembered mercy; and (1.) He shortened the days, he let fall his controversy before he had made a full end. As a church and nation the ruin was complete, but many particular persons had their lives given them for a prey, by the storm taking up when it did. (2.) It was for the elect's sake that those days were shortened; many among them sared the better for the sake of the few among them that believed in Christ, and were faithful to him. There was a promise, that a remnant should be saved, Isa. x. 22. and that God would not, for his servants sakes, destroy them all, Isa. i. 9. and these promises must be fulfilled; God's own elect cry day and night to him, and their prayers must be answered, Luke xviii. 7.

2. What directions are given to the disciples with reference to it.

1. They must shift for the safety of their lives; when you see the country invaded and the city invested, flatter not yourselves with the thoughts that the enemy will retire, or that you may be able to make your part good with them; but without further deliberation or delay, let them which be in Judeah flee to the mountains, ver. 14. Meddle not with strife that belongs not to you; let the potsherds strive with the potsherds of the earth, but do you get out of the ship when you see it sinking, that you die not the death of the uncircumcised in heart.

2. They must provide for the safety of their souls; seducers will be busy at that time, for they love to fish in troubled waters, and therefore then you must double your guard; then, if any man shall say unto you, Lo, here is Christ, or Lo, he is there, you know he is in heaven, and will come again at the end of time to judge the world, and therefore believe him not; having received Christ, he not drawn into the snares of any antichrist; for false Christs, and false prophets shall arise, ver. 22. When the gospel kingdom was in the setting up, Satan mustered all his force to oppose it and made use of all his wiles; and God permitted it for the trial of the sincerity of some and the discovery of the hypocrisy of others, and the confusion of those who rejected Christ, when he was offered to them. False Christs shall rise, and false prophets that shall preach them up; or such, as though they pretend not to be Christs set up for prophets, and undertake to foretell things to come, and they shall shew signs and lying wonders? For early did the mystery of iniquity begin to work, 2 Thess. i. 7. They shall seduce, if it were possible, the very elect; so plausible shall their pretences be, and so industrious shall they be to impose upon people, that they shall draw away many that were forward and zealous professors of religion, many that were very likely to have persevered, for nothing will be effectual to secure men but that foundation of God which stands immoveably sure, The Lord knows them that are his, who shall be preserved when the faith of some is overthrown; 2 Tim. ii. 18, 19. They shall seduce, if it were possible, the very elect; but it is not possible to seduce them; the election shall obtain, whoever are blinded, Rom. xi. 7. But in consideration hereof, let the disciples be cautious who they give credit to, ver. 23. But take ye heed, Christ knew they were of the elect who could not possibly be seduced, and yet he said to them take heed. An assurance of persevering and cautious against apostasy, will very well consist. Though Christ said to them, take heed, it doth not therefore follow that their perseverance was doubtful, for they were kept by the power of God; and though their perseverance was secured, yet it doth not therefore follow that this caution was needless, because they must be kept in the use of proper means: God will keep them, but they must keep themselves. I have foretold you all things; have foretold you of this danger, that being forewarned, you may be forearmed; I have foretold all things which you needed to have foretold to you, and therefore take heed of hearkening to such as pretend to be prophets, and to foretell more than I have foretold. The sufficiency of the scripture is a good argument against listening to such as pretend to inspiration.

24. ¶ But in those days, after that tribulation, the sun shall be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light: 25. And the stars of heaven shall fall, and the powers that are in heaven shall be shaken. 26. And then shall they see the Son of man coming in the clouds clouds with great power and glory. 27. And then shall he send his angels, and shall gather together his elect from the four winds, from the uttermost part of the earth, to the uttermost part of heaven.

These verses seem to point at Christ's second coming to judge the world; the disciples in their question had confounded the destruction of Jerusalem and the end of the world, Matt. xxiv. 3. which was built upon a mistake, as if the temple must needs stand as long as the world stands; this mistake Christ rectifies, and shews that the end of the world in those days, those other days you enquire about, the day of Christ's coming and the day of judgment shall be after that tribulation, and not coincident with it; let those that live to see the Jewish nation destroyed, take heed of thinking that, because the Son of man doth not visibly come in the clouds then, he will never so come; no, he will come after that. And here he foretels,

1. The final dissolution of the present frame and fabrick of the world; even of that part of it which seems least liable to change, even the upper part; the purer and more refined part; the sun shall be darkened, and the moon shall no more give her light; for they shall be quite out-shone by the glory of the Son of man, Isa. xxiv. 23. The stars of heaven, that from the beginning had kept their place and regular motion, shall fall as leaves in autumn; and the powers that are in heaven, the heavenly bodies, the fixed stars shall be shaken.

2. The visible appearance of the Lord Jesus, to whom the judgment of that day shall be committed, ver. 26. Then shall they see the Son of man coming in the clouds. Probably over that very place where he sat when he said this; for the clouds are in the lower region of the air. He shall come with great power and glory, such as will be suited to the errand on which he comes. Every eye shall then see him.

3. The gathering together of all the elect to him, ver. 27. He shall send his angels, and gather together his elect to him, to meet him in the air, 1 Thess. iv. 17. They shall be fetched from one end of the world to the other, so that none shall be missing from that general assembly; they shall be fetched from the uttermost part of the earth, most remote from the place where Christ's tribunal shall be set, and shall be brought to the uttermost part of heaven; so sure, so swift, so easy shall their conveyance be, that there shall none of them miscarry, though they were to be brought from the uttermost part of the earth one way, to the uttermost part of the heaven another way. A faithful Israelite shall be carried safely, though it were from the utmost border of the land of bondage, to the utmost border of the land of promise.

28. Now learn a parable of the fig-tree; When her branch is yet tender, and putteth forth leaves, ye know that summer is near: 29. So ye in like manner, when ye shall see these things come to pass, know that it is nigh, even at the doors. 30. Verily I say unto you, that this generation shall not pass, till all these things be done. 31. Heaven and earth shall pass away: but my words shall not pass away. 32. ¶ But of that day and that hour knoweth no man, no, not the angels which are in heaven, neither the Son, but the Father. 33. Take ye heed, watch and pray: for ye know not when the time is. 34. For the Son of man is as a man taking a far journey, who left his house, and gave authority to his servants, and to every man his work, and commanded the porter to watch. 35. Watch ye therefore; for ye know not when the master of the house cometh, at even, or at midnight, or at the cock-crowing, or in the morning. 36. Lest coming suddenly he find you sleeping. 37. And what I say unto you I say unto all, Watch.

We have here the application of this prophetic sermon; now learn to look forward in a right manner.

1. As to the destruction of Jerusalem, expect it to come very shortly; as when the branch of the fig-tree becomes soft, and the leaves sprout forth, ye expect that summer will come shortly, ver. 28. When second causes begin to work, you expect their effects in their proper order and time. So when ye see these things come to pass, when you see the Jewish nation embroiled in wars, distracted by false christs and prophets, and drawing upon them the displeasure of the Romans, especially when you see them persecuting you for your Master's sake, and thereby standing to what they did when they put him to death, and repeating it, and so filling up the measure of their iniquities, then say that their ruin is nigh, even at the door, and provide for yourselves accordingly. The disciples themselves were indeed all of them, except John, taken away from the evil to come, but the next generation whom they were to train up, would live to see it; and by these instructions Christ left behind him, would be kept from slaring in it. This generation that is now rising up, shall not all be worn off before all these things come to pass which I have told you of relating to Jerusalem, and they shall begin to take effect now shortly. And as this destruction is near and within ken, so it is sure: The decree is gone forth, it is a consumption determined, Dan. ix. 27. Christ doth not speak these things only to frighten them; no, they are the declarations of God's fixed purpose; Heaven and earth shall pass away at the end of time: but my words shall not pass away, ver. 31. not one of these predictions shall fail of a punctual accomplishment.

2. As to the end of the world, do not enquire when it will come, for it is not a question fit to be asked, for of that day, and that hour, knoweth no man; it is a thing at a great distance, the exact time is fixed in the counsel of God, but it is not revealed by any word of God, either to men on earth or to angels in heaven; the angels shall have timely notice to prepare to attend in that day, and it shall be published when it comes to the children of men with sound of trumpet: but at present men and angels are kept in the dark concerning the precise time of it, that they may both attend to their proper services in the present day. But it follows, neither the Son; but is there any thing which the Son is ignorant of? We read indeed of a book which was sealed, till the Lamb opened the seals, but did not he know what was in it before the seals were opened? Was not he conscious to the writing of it? There were those in the primitive times who taught from this text, that there were some things that Christ as man was ignorant of; and from thence were called Agnostæ; they said it was no more absurd to say so, than to say that his human soul suffered grief and fear; and many of the orthodox fathers approved of this. Some would evade it by saying, that Christ spoke this in a way of prudential oeconomy, to divert the disciples from further enquiry: but to this one of the ancient answers, that it is not fit to speak too nicely in this matter, ὁ δὲ πᾶν ἀκριβοῦς, so Leontius in Dr. Hammond. "It is certain (saith Archbishop Tillotson) that Christ, as God, could not be ignorant of any thing, but the divine wisdom which dwelt in our Saviour, did communicate itself to his human soul, according to the divine pleasure; so that his human nature might at sometimes not know some things, therefore Christ is said to grow in wisdom, Luke ii. 52. Which he could not be said to do if the human nature of Christ did necessarily know all things by virtue of its union with the divinity." Dr. Lightfoot explains it thus. Christ calls himself the Son, as Messiah. Now the Messiah, as such, was the Father's servant, Isa. xlii. 1. sent and deputed by him, and as such a one he refers himself often to his Father's will and command, and owns he did nothing of himself, John v. 19. and in like manner he might be said to know nothing of himself. The revelation of Jesus Christ was what God gave unto him, Rev. i. 1. He thinks therefore we are to distinguish between those excellencies and perfections of his, which resulted from the personal union between the divine and human nature, and those which flowed from the anointing of the Spirit; from the former flowed the infinite dignity of his person, and his perfect freedom from all sin; but from the latter flowed his power of working miracles, and his fore-knowledge of things to come. What therefore (saith he) were to be revealed by him to this church, he was pleased to take, not from the union of the human nature with the divine, but from the revelations of the Spirit, by which he yet knew not this, but the Father only knows it; that is, God only, the deity; for (as Archbishop Tillotson explains it) it is not used here personally, in distinction from the Son and the Holy Ghost, but as the Father is, Fons & Principium Deitatis.

3. As to both, their duty is to watch and pray. Therefore the time is kept a secret, that we might be engaged to stand always upon our guard, ver. 33. Take ye heed of every thing that would indispose you for your Master's coming, and would render our accounts perplexed, and your spirits so too; watch for his coming, that it may not at any time be a surprise to you, and pray for that grace which is necessary to qualify you for it, for ye know not when the time is; and we are concerned to be ready for that every day, which may come any day. This he illustrates in the close by a parable.

1. Our Master is gone away, and left us something in trust, in charge, which we must give account of, ver. 34. He is as a man taking a far journey, for he is gone to be away a great while, he has left his house on earth, and left his servants in their offices, gave authority to some who were to be overseers, and work to others that were to be labourers; they that have authority given them, in that had work assigned them, for those that have the greatest power have the most business; and to them to whom he gave work, he gave some sort of authority to do that work. And when he took his last leave, he appointed the porter to watch, to be sure to be ready to open to him at his return; and in the mean time to take care to whom he opened his gates, not thieves and robbers, but only to his master's friends and servants. Thus our Lord Jesus, when he ascended on high, left something for all his servants to do, expecting they should all do him service in his absence, and be ready to receive him at his return. All are appointed to work, and some authorized to rule.

2. We ought to be always upon our watch, in expectation of his return, ver. 35, 36, 37. (1.) Our Lord will come, and will come as the master of the house, to take account of his servants, and of their work, and of the improvement they have made. (2.) We know not when he will come; and he has very wisely kept us at uncertainty that we might be always ready. We know not when he will come, just at what precise time; the master of the house perhaps will come at even, at nine at night; or it may be at midnight, or at cock-crowing at three in the morning, or perhaps not till six. This is applicable to his coming to us in particular, at our death, as well as to the general judgment. Our present life is a night, a dark night, compared with the other life; we know not in which watch of the night our Master will come, whether in the days of youth or middle age, or old age; but as soon as we are born we begin to die, and therefore as soon as we are capable of expecting any thing we must expect death. (3.) Our great care must be, that whenever our Lord comes, he do not find us sleeping; secure in ourselves, off our guard, indulging ourselves in ease and sloth, mindless of our work and duty, and thoughtless of our Lord's coming; ready to say he will not come, and unready to meet him. (4.) His coming will indeed be coming suddenly, it will be a great surprise and terror to those that are careless and asleep, it will come upon them as a thief in the night. (5.) It is therefore the indispensable duty of all Christ's disciples to watch, to be awake, and keep awake. What I say unto you four, ver. 3. I say unto all the twelve, or rather to you twelve, I say unto all my disciples and followers; what I say to you of this generation, I say to all that shall believe in me through your word in every age, Watch, watch, expect my second coming, prepare for it, that you may be found in peace, without spot, and blameless. ∴

C H A P. XIV.

In this chapter begins the account which this evangelist gives of the death and sufferings of our Lord Jesus, which we are all concerned to be acquainted, not only with the history of, but with the mystery of. Here is, (1.) The plot of the chief priests and Scribes against Christ, ver. 1. (2.) The anointing of Christ's head at a supper in Bethany, two days before his death, ver. 3—9. (3.) The contract Judas made with the chief priests to betray him, ver. 10—11. (4.) Christ's eating the passover with his disciples, his instituting the Lord's supper, and his discourse with his disciples, at and after supper, ver. 12—31. (5.) Christ's agony in the garden, ver. 32—42. (6.) The betraying of him by Judas, and the apprehending of him by the chief priest's agents, ver. 43—52. (7.) His arraignment before the high priest, his conviction, and the indignities done him at that bar, ver. 53—65. (8.) Peter's denying him, ver. 66—72. Most of which passages we had before, Matt. xxvi.

1. AFTER two days was the feast of the passover, and of unleavened bread: and the chief priests and the Scribes sought how they might take him by craft, and put him to death. 2. But they said, Not on the feast-day, lest there be an uproar of the people. 3. ¶ And being in Bethany in the house of Simon the leper, as he sat at meat, there came a woman having an an alabaster-box of ointment of spikenard, very precious; and she brake the box, and poured it on his head. 4. And there were some that had indignation within themselves, and said, Why was this waste of the ointment made? 5. For it might have been sold for more than three hundred pence, and have been given to the poor. And they murmured against her. 6. And Jesus said, Let her alone, why trouble ye her? she hath wrought a good work on me. 7. For ye have the poor with you always, and whensoever ye will ye may do them good: but me ye have not always. 8. She hath done what she could: she is come aforehand to anoint my body to the burying. 9. Verily I say unto you, Wheresoever this gospel shall be preached throughout the whole world, this also that she hath done shall be spoken of for a memorial of her. 10. ¶ And Judas Iscariot, one of the twelve, went unto the chief priests, to betray him unto them. 11. And when they heard it, they were glad and promised to give him money. And he sought how he might conveniently betray him.

We have here instances.

First, Of the kindness of Christ's friends, and the provision made of respects and honours for him: And some friends he had, even in and about Jerusalem that loved him, and never thought they could do enough for him, among whom, though Israel be not gathered, he is and will be glorious.

1. Here was one friend that was so kind as to invite him to sup with him, and he was so kind as to accept the invitation, ver. 3. Though he had a prospect of his death approaching, yet he did not abandon himself to a melancholy retirement from all company, but conversed as freely with his friends as usual.

2. Here was another friend, that was so kind as to anoint his head with very precious ointment as he sat at meat. This was an extraordinary piece of respect paid him by a good woman that thought nothing too good to bestow upon Christ, and to do him honour, now the scripture was fulfilled, when the king sits at his table, my spikenard sendeth forth the smell thereof, Cant. i. 12. Let us anoint Christ as our beloved, kiss him with the kisses of affection, and anoint him as our sovereign, kiss him with a kiss of allegiance, Did he pour out his soul unto death for us, and shall we think any box of ointment too precious to pour out upon him? And it is observable she took care to pour it all out upon Christ's head; she brake the box, so we read it, but because it was an alabaster box, not easily broken, nor was it necessary it should be broken to get out the ointment: some read it, she shook the box, or knocked it to the ground, to loosen what was in it, that it might be got out the better; or she rubbed and scraped out all that stuck to the sides of it. Christ must be honoured with all we have, and we must not think to keep back any part of the price. Do we give him the precious ointment of our best affections? let him have them all; love him with all the heart.

Now, 1. There were those that put a worse construction upon this than it deserved. They called it a waste of the ointment, ver. 4. Because they could not have found it in their hearts to put themselves to such an expence for the honouring of Christ, they thought she was prodigal that did. Note, As the vile person ought not to be called liberal, nor the churl said to be bountiful, Isa. xxxii. 5. so the liberal and bountiful ought not to be called wasteful. They pretended it might have been sold and given to the poor, ver. 5. But as a common piety to the corban will not excuse from a particular charity to a poor parent, chap. vii. 11. so a common charity to the poor will not excuse from a particular act of piety to the Lord Jesus. What thy hand finds to do that is good, do it with thy might.

2. Our Lord Jesus put a better construction upon it than for ought appears was designed. Probably she intended no more but to shew the great honour she had for him before all the company, and to complete his entertainment. But Christ makes it to be an act of great faith, as well as great love, ver. 8. She is come aforehand to anoint my body to the burying, as if she foresaw that my resurrection would prevent her doing it afterwards. This funeral rite was a kind of preface or prelude to his death approaching. See how Christ's heart was filled with the thoughts of his death, how every thing was construed with a reference to that, and how familiarly he spoke of it upon all occasions. It is usual for those who are condemned to die to have their coffins prepared and other provisions made for their funerals while they are yet alive; and so Christ accepted this. Christ's death and burial were the lowest steps of his humiliation, and therefore, though he cheerfully submitted to them, yet he would have some marks of honour to attend them, which might help to take off the offence of the cross, and be an intimation how precious in the sight of the Lord, the death of his saints is. Christ never rode in triumph into Jerusalem, but when he came hither to suffer, nor had ever his head anointed, but for his burial.

3. He recommended this piece of heroic piety to the applause of the church in all ages. Wherever this gospel shall be preached, it shall be spoken of for a memorial of her, ver. 9. Note, The honour which attends well-doing, even in this world, is sufficient to balance the reproach and contempt that is cast upon it. The memory of the just is blessed, and they that had trial of cruel mockings, yet obtained a good report, Heb. xi. 36—39. Thus was this good woman repaid for her box of ointment, nec oleum perdidit nec operam; she got by it that good name which is better than precious ointment. Those that honour Christ, he will honour.

Secondly, of the malice of Christ's enemies, and the preparations made by them to do him mischief.

1. The chief priests, his open enemies, consulted how they might put him to death, ver. 1, 2. The feast of the passover was now at hand, and at that feast he must be crucified. (1.) That his death and sufferings might be the more public, and that all Israel, even those of the dispersion who came from all parts to the feast, might be witnesses of it, and of the wonders that attended it. (2.) That the anti-type might answer the type. Christ, our passover, was sacrificed for us, and brought us out of the house of bondage, at the same time that the paschal lamb was sacrificed, and Israel's deliverance out of Egypt was commemorated.

Now see, (1.) How spiteful Christ's enemies were, they did not think it enough to banish or imprison him, for they aimed not only to silence him and stop his progress for the future, but to be revenged on him for all the good he had done. (2.) How subtil they were: Not on the feast-day, when the people are together, they do not say, lest they should be disturbed in their devotions and diverted from them, but lest there should be an uproar, ver. 2. lest they should rise and rescue him, and fall foul upon those that attempt any thing against him. They who desired nothing more than the praise of men, dreaded nothing more than the rage and displeasure of men.

2. Judas, his disguised enemy, contracted with them for the betraying of him, ver. 10, 11. He is said to be one of the twelve that were Christ's family, intimate with him, trained up for the service of his kingdom, and he went to the chief priests to tender his service in this affair.

1. That which he proposed to them was, to betray Christ to them, to give them notice when and where they might find him, and seize him, without making an uproar among the people, which they were afraid of if they should seize him when he appeared in public, in the midst of his admirers. Did he know then what help it was they wanted, and where they were run aground in their counsels? It is like he did not, for the debate was held in their close cabal. Did they know that he had a mind to serve them and make court to him? No, they could not imagine that any of his intimates should be so base; but Satan who was entered into Judas, knew what occasion they had for him, and could guide him to be guide to them, who were contriving to take Jesus. Note, The spirit that works in all the children of disobedience, knows how to bring them into the assistance one of another in a wicked project, and then to harden them in it, with the fancy that providence favours them.

2. That which he proposed to himself was to get money by the bargain; he had what he aimed at, when they promised to give him money. Covetousness was Judas's master-lust, his own iniquity, and that betrayed him to the sin of betraying his master; the devil suited his temptation to that and so conquered him; it is not said they promised him preferment, he was not ambitious of that, but they promised him money. See what need we have to double our guard against the sin that most easily besets us. Perhaps it was Judas's covetousness that brought him at first to follow Christ, having a promise that he should be cash-keeper or purser to the society, and he loved in his heart to be fingerling money; and now there was money to be got on the other side, he was as ready to betray him as ever he had been to follow him. Note, Where the principle of men's profession of religion is carnal and worldly, and the serving of a secular interest, the very same principle, whenever the wind turns, will be the bitter root of a vile and scandalous apostasy.

3. Having secured the money, he set himself to make good his bargain, He sought how he might conveniently betray him, how he might seasonably deliver him up, so as to answer the intention of those who had hired him. See what need we have to be careful that we do not ensnare ourselves in sinful engagements: If at any time we be so ensnared in the words of our mouth, we are concerned to deliver ourselves by a speedy retreat, Prov. vi. 1—5. It is a rule in our law as well as in our religion, that an obligation to do an evil thing is null and void; it binds to repentance, not to performance. See how the way of sin is down-hill, when men are in they must on; and what wicked contrivances many have in their sinful pursuits, to compass their deluges conveniently; but such conveniences will prove mischiefs in the end.

12. ¶ And the first day of unleavened bread, when they killed the passover, his disciples said unto him, Where wilt thou that we go, and prepare that thou mayest eat the passover? 13. And he sendeth forth two of his disciples, and saith unto them, Go ye into the city, and there shall meet you a man bearing a pitcher of water: follow him. 14. And whosoever he shall go in, say ye to the good man of the house, The Master saith, where is the guest-chamber, where I shall eat the passover with my disciples? 15. And he will shew you a large upper room furnished and prepared, there make ready for us. 16. And his disciples went forth, and came into the city, and found as he had said unto them: and they made ready the passover. 17. And in the evening he cometh with the twelve. 18. And as they sat and did eat, Jesus said, Verily I say unto you, One of you which eateth with me shall betray me. 19. And they began to be sorrowful, and to say unto him one by one, Is it I? and another said, Is it I? 20. And he answered and said unto them, It is one of the twelve that dippeth with me in the dish. 21. The Son of man indeed goeth, as it is written of him: but woe to that man by whom the Son of man is betrayed! good were it for that man if he had never been born. 22. And as they did eat, Jesus took bread, and blessed, and brake it, and gave to them, and said, Take, eat: this is my body. 23. And he took the cup, and when he had given thanks, he gave it to them: and they all drank of it. 24. And he said unto them, This is my blood of the New Testament which is shed for many. 25. Verily I say unto you, I will drink no more of the fruit of the vine, until that day that I drink it new in the kingdom of God. 26. And when they had sung an hymn, they went out into the mount of Olives. 27. And Jesus saith unto them, All ye shall be offended because of me this night: for it is written, I will smite the shepherd, and the sheep shall be scattered. 28. But after that I am risen, I will go before you into Galilee. 29. But Peter said unto him, Although all shall be offended, yet will not I. 30. And Jesus saith unto him, Verily I say unto thee, That this day, even in this night, before the cock crow twice thou shalt deny me thrice. 31. But he spake the more vehemently, If I should die with thee, I will not deny thee in any wise. Likewise also said they all.

In these verses we have,

First, Christ's eating the passover with his disciples the night before he died, with the joys and comforts of which ordinance he prepared himself for his approaching sorrows; the full prospect of which did not indispose him for that solemnity. Note, No apprehension of trouble, come or coming, should put us by, or put us out of frame for our attendance on holy ordinances, as we have opportunity for it.

1. Christ eat the passover at the usual time, when the other Jews did, as Dr. Whitby has fully made out, and not as Dr. Hammond would have it the night before. It was the first day of the feast, which (taking in all the eight days of the feast) was called The feast of unleavened bread, even that day when they killed the passover, ver. 12.

2. He directed his disciples how to find the place where he intended to eat the passover; and hereby gave such another proof of his infallible knowledge of things distant and future which to us seem altogether contingent, as he had given when he sent them for the ass on which he rode in triumph, chap. xi. 6. Go into the city (for the passover must be eaten in Jerusalem) and there shall meet you a man bearing a pitcher of water, a servant sent for water to clean the rooms in his master's house, follow him, go in where he goes, enquire for his master, the good man of the house, ver. 11 and desire him to shew you a room; no doubt the inhabitants of Jerusalem had rooms fitted up to be let out for this occasion, to those that came out of the country to keep the passover, and one of those Christ made use of; not any friend's house, nor any house he had formerly frequented, for then he would have said go to such a friend, or you know where we used to be, go thither and prepare; probably he went where he was not known, that he might be undisturbed with his disciples. Perhaps he notified by a sign to conceal it from Judas, that he might not know till he came to the place; and by such a sign to intimate that he will dwell in the clean heart, that is, washed as with pure water. Where he designs to come a pitcher of water must go before him, see Isa. i. 16, 17, 18.

3. He eat the passover in an upper room furnished, isophrasin, laid with carpets, so Dr. Hammond: it would seem to have been a very handsome dining room; Christ was far from affecting any thing that looked stately in eating his common meals; on the contrary he chose that which was homely, sat down on the grass; but when he was to keep a sacred feast, in honour of that he would be at the expence of as good a room as he could get. God looks not at outward pomp, but he looks at the tokens and expressions of inward reverence, for a divine institution, which it is to be feared those want, who to save charges deny themselves decencies in the worship of God.

4. He eat it with the twelve, who were his family, to teach those who have the charge of families, not only families of children, but families of servants, or families of scholars or pupils, to keep up religion among them, and worship God with them. If Christ came with the twelve, then Judas was with them, though he was at this time contriving to betray his Master, and it is plain by what follows, ver. 20. that he was there; he did not absent himself, lest he should have been suspected! had his seat been empty at this feast, they would have said as Saul of David, He is not clean, surely he is not clean, 1 Sam. xx. 26. Hypocrites, though they know it is at their peril, yet crowd into special ordinances to keep up their repute, and palliate their secret wickedness. Christ did not exclude him from the feast, though he knew his wickedness, for it was not as yet become public and scandalous; Christ designing to put the keys of the kingdom of heaven into the hands of men, who can but judge according to outward appearance: he would hereby both direct and encourage them in their admissions to his table to be satisfied with a justifiable profession, because they cannot discern the root of bitterness till it springs up.

Secondly, Christ's discourse with his disciples as they were eating the passover. It is likely they had discourse, according to the custom of the feast, of the deliverance of Israel out of Egypt, and the preservation of the first born, and were as pleasant as they used to be together on this occasion, till Christ told them that which would mix trembling with their joys.

1. They were pleasing themselves with the society of their Master; but he tells them they must now presently lose him; The Son of man is betrayed, and they knew, for he had often told them, what followed; if he be betrayed, the next news you will hear of him is, that he is crucified and slain; God hath determined it concerning him, and he agrees to it, The Son of man goes as it is written of him, ver. 21. It was written in the counsels of God, and written in the prophecies of the Old Testament, not one jot or tittle of either of which can fall to the ground.

2. They were pleasing themselves with the society one of another, but Christ calls a stop upon the joy of that by telling them, One of you that eateth with me shall betray me, ver. 18. Christ said this, if it might be, to startle the conscience of Judas, and to awaken him to repent of his wickedness, (and to draw back, for it was not too late) from the brink of the pit. But for ought appears, he who was most concerned in the warning, was least concerned at it. All the rest were affected with it. (1.) They began to be sorrowful. As the remembrance of our former falls into sins, so the fear of the like again doth often times much embitter the comfort of our spiritual feasts, and damp our joy. Here were the bitter herbs, with which this passover feast was taken. (2.) They began to be suspicious of themselves; they said one by one, Is it I? and another said, Is it I? They are to be commended for their charity, that they were more jealous of themselves than of one another. It is the law of charity to hope the best, 1 Cor. xiii. 5-7. because we assuredly know, therefore we may justly suspect more evil by ourselves than by our brethren. They are also to be commended for their acquiescence in what Christ said; they trusted more to his words than to their own hearts; and therefore do not say, I am sure it is not I, but Lord is it I? see if there be such a way of wickedness in us, such a root of bitterness, and discover it to us, that we may pluck up that root and stop up that way.

Now in answer to their enquiry Christ saith that, (1.) Which would make them easy; it is not you, nor you; it is this that now dips with me in the dish, the adversary and enemy is this wicked Judas. (2.) Which one would think should make Judas very uneasy. If he go on in his undertaking, it is upon the sword's point, for woe to that man by whom the Son of man is betrayed; he is undone, for ever undone; his sin will soon find him out; and it were better for him he had never been born, had never had a being than such a miserable one as he must have. It is very probable, Judas encouraged himself in it with this thought, that his Master often said he must be betrayed, and if it must be done, surely God will not find fault with him that doth it, for who has resisted his will? as that objection argues, Rom. ix. 19. But Christ tells him this will be no shelter or excuse to him; The Son of man indeed goes, as it is written of him, as a lamb to the slaughter, but woe to that man by whom he is betrayed. God's decrees to permit the sins of men and bring glory to himself out of them, do neither necessitate their sins, nor determine to them, nor will they be any excuse of the sin or mitigation of the punishment. Christ was delivered indeed by the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God; but notwithstanding that, it is with wicked hands that he is crucified and slain, Acts ii. 23.

Thirdly, The institution of the Lord's Supper.

1. It was instituted in the close of a supper, when they were sufficiently fed with the paschal lamb, to shew that in the Lord's Supper there is no bodily repast intended; to preface it with such a thing, is to revive Moses again. But it is food for the soul only, and therefore a very little of that which is for the body, as much as will serve for a sign, is enough. It was at the close of the passover supper which by this was evangelized, and then superseded and set aside. Much of the doctrine and duty of the Eucharist is illustrated to us by the law of the passover, Exod. xii. for the Old Testament institutions, though they do not bind us, yet instruct us, by the help of a gospel key to them. And these two ordinances lying here so near together, it may be good to compare them, and observe how much shorter and plainer the institution of the Lord's Supper is, than that of the passover was: Christ's yoke is easy in comparison with that of the ceremonial law, and his ordinances more spiritual.

2. It was instituted by the example of Christ himself; not with the ceremony and solemnity of a law, as the ordinance of baptism was after Christ's resurrection, Matt. xxviii. 19. with, Be it enacted by the authority aforesaid, by a power given to Christ in heaven and on earth, ver. 18. but by the practice of our Master himself, because intended for those who are already his disciples and taken into covenant with him: but it has the obligation of a law, and was intended to remain in full force, power, and virtue, till his second coming.

3. It was instituted with blessing and giving of thanks; the gifts of common providence are to be so received, 1 Tim. iv. 4, 5. much more the gifts of special grace. He blessed, ver. 22. and gave thanks, ver. 23. At his other meals he was wont to bless and give thanks, Mark vi. 41.—viii. 7. So remarkable that he was known by it, Luke xxiv. 30, 31. And he did the same at this meal.

4. It was instituted to be a memorial of his death; and therefore he brake the bread, to shew how it pleased the Lord to bruise him; and he called the wine which is the blood of the grape, the blood of the New Testament. The death Christ died was a bloody death, and frequent mention is made of the blood, the precious blood, as the price of our redemption; for the blood is the life, and made atonement for the soul, Lev. xvii. 11-14. The pouring out of the blood was the most sensible indication of the pouring out of his soul, Isa. liii. 12. Blood has a voice, Gen. iv. 10. and therefore the blood is so often mentioned because it was to speak, Heb. xii. 24. It is called the blood of the New Testament, for the covenant of grace became a testament, and of force by the death of Christ the testator, Heb. ix. 16. It is said to be shed for many, to justify many, Isa. liii. 12. to bring many sons to glory, Heb. ii. 10. It was sufficient for many, being of infinite value; it has been of use to many: we read of a great multitude which no man could number, that had all washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb, Rev. vii. 9-14. And still it is a fountain opened. How comfortable is this to poor repenting sinners, that the blood of Christ is shed for many, and if for many, why not for me? If for sinners, sinners of the Gentiles, the chief of sinners, then why not for me?

5. It was instituted to be a ratification of the covenant made with us in him, and a sign of the conveyance of those benefits to us which were purchased for us by his death; and therefore he broke the bread to them, ver. 22. and said, Take eat of it; he gave the cup to them, and ordered them to drink of it, ver. 23. Apply the doctrine of Christ crucified to yourselves, and let it be meat and drink to your souls, strengthening and nourishing, and refreshing to you, and the support and comfort of your spiritual life.

6. It was instituted with an eye to the happiness of heaven, and to be an earnest and fore-taste of that, and thereby to put our mouths out of taste to all the pleasures and delights of sense, ver. 25. I will drink no more of the fruit of the vine, as it is a bodily refreshment: I have done with it, no one having tasted spiritual delights, straightway desires sensitive ones, for no faith spiritual is better, Luke v. 39. But every one that hath tasted spiritual delights, straightway desires eternal ones, for he saith those are better still; and therefore let me drink no more of the fruit of the vine, it is dead and flat to those that have been made to drink of the river of God's pleasures; but, Lord, hasten the day, when I shall drink it new and fresh in the kingdom of God, where it shall be for ever new and in perfection.

7. It was closed with a hymn, ver. 26. Though Christ was in the midst of his enemies, yet he did not for fear of them baulk this sweet duty of singing psalms. Paul and Silas sung, when the prisoners heard them. This was an evangelical song, and gospel times are often spoken of in the Old Testament, as times of rejoicing and praise expressed by singing. This was Christ's swan like song, which he sung just before he entered upon his agony; probably that which was usually sung, Psal. cxiv. to Psal. cxix.

Fourthly, Christ's discourse with his disciples as they were returning to Bethany by moon-light. When they had sung the hymn, presently they went out. It was now pretty near bed-time, but our Lord Jesus had his heart so much upon his suffering, that he would not come into the tabernacle of his house, nor go up into his bed, nor give sleep to his eyes, when that work was to be done, Psal. cxxxii. 3, 4. The Israelites were forbidden to go out of their houses that night that they eat the passover, for fear of the sword of the destroying angel, Exod. xii. 22, 23. But because Christ the great shepherd, was to be smitten, he went out purposely to expose himself to the sword as a champion; they evaded the destroyer, but Christ conquered him and brought destructions to a perpetual end.

1. Christ here foretels, that in his sufferings he should be deserted by all his disciples. You will all be offended because of me this night. I know you will, ver. 27. and what I tell you now, is no other but what the scripture has told you before, I will smite the shepherd, and then the sheep will be scattered. Christ knew this before and yet welcomed them at his table; he foresees the falls and miscarriages of his disciples, yet doth not refuse them. Nor should we be discouraged from coming to the Lord's Supper by the fear of relapsing into sin afterward; but the greater our danger is, the more need we have to fortify ourselves by the diligent conscientious use of holy ordinances. Christ tells them they would be offended in him, would begin to question, whether he were the Messiah or no, when they saw him overpowered by his enemies. Hitherto they had continued with him in his temptations, though they had sometimes offended him, yet they had not been offended in him, nor turned the back upon him; but now the storm would be so great, that they would all slip their anchors, and be in danger of shipwreck. Some trials are more particular, as Rev. ii. 10. The devil shall cast some of you into prison; but others are more general, an hour of temptation, which shall come upon all the world, Rev. iii. 10. The smiting of the shepherd is often the scattering of the sheep: magistrates, ministers, and masters of families, if these are, as they should be, shepherds to those under their charge, when any thing comes amiss to them, the whole flock suffers for it and is endangered by it.

But Christ encourages them with a promise that they shall rally again, shall return both to their duty and to their comfort, ver. 28. After I am risen, I will gather you in from all the places whither you are scattered, Ezek. xxxiv. 12. And will go before you into Galilee, will see our friends and enjoy one another there.

2. He foretels, that he should be denied particularly by Peter. When they went out to go to the mount of Olives, we may suppose they dropped Judas, he stole away from them, whereupon the rest began to think highly of themselves, that they stuck to their Master when Judas quitted him. But Christ

Christ tells them, that though they should be kept by his grace from Judas's apostasy, yet they would have no reason to boast of their constancy. Note. Though God keep us from being as bad as the worst, yet we may well be ashamed to think that we are not better than we are.

1. Peter is confident that he should not do so ill as the rest of the disciples. ver. 29. Though all should be offended, all his brethren here present, yet will not I. He supposeth himself not only stronger than others, but so much stronger as to be able to receive the shock of a temptation, and bear up against it, all alone; to stand, though no body stood by him; it is bred in the bone with us to think well of ourselves, and trust to our own hearts.

2. Christ tells him he will do worse than any of them. They will all desert him, but he will deny him; not once, but thrice; and that presently; this day, even this night before the cock crow twice, thou wilt deny that ever thou hadst any knowledge of me or acquaintance with me, as one ashamed and afraid to own me.

3. He stands to his promise; If I should die with thee, I will not deny thee; I will stick to thee though it cost me my life; and no doubt he thought as he said. Judas said nothing like this when Christ told him he would betray him. He sinned by contrivance, Peter by surprise; he desisted the wickedness, Micah ii. 1. Peter was overtaken in this fault, Gal. vi. 1. It was ill done of Peter to contradict his Master: if he had said with fear and trembling, Lord, give me grace to keep me from denying thee, lead me not into this temptation, deliver me from this evil, it might have been prevented: but they were all thus confident; they who said, Lord, is it I? Now said, It shall never be I. Being acquitted from their fear of betraying Christ, they were now secure. But he that thinks he stands must learn to take heed lest he fall; and he that girdeth on the harness, not boast as though he had put it off.

32. And they came to a place which was named Gethsemane: and he saith to his disciples, Sit ye here, while I shall pray. 33. And he taketh with him Peter and James and John, and began to be sore amazed, and to be very heavy; 34. And saith unto them, My soul is exceeding sorrowful unto death: tarry ye here, and watch. 35. And he went forward a little, and fell on the ground, and prayed that, if it were possible the hour might pass from him. 36. And he said, Abba, Father, all things are possible unto thee; take away this cup from me: nevertheless not what I will but what thou wilt. 37. And he cometh and findeth them sleeping, and saith unto Peter, Simon, sleepest thou? couldest not thou watch one hour? 38. Watch ye and pray, lest ye enter into temptation. The spirit truly is ready, but the flesh is weak. 39. And again he went away, and prayed, and spake the same words. 40. And when he returned, he found them asleep again (for their eyes were heavy), neither wist they what to answer him. 41. And he cometh the third time and saith unto them, Sleep on now, and take your rest: it is enough, the hour is come; behold the Son of man is betrayed into the hands of sinners. 42. Rise up, let us go: lo he that betrayeth me is at hand.

Christ is here entering upon his sufferings, and begins with those which were the forest of all his sufferings in his soul. Here we have him in his agony; this melancholy story we had in Matthew; this agony in soul was the worm-wood and the gall in the affliction and misery; and thereby it appeared no sorrow was forced upon him, but it was what he freely admitted.

1. He retired for prayer. Sit ye here (saith he to his disciples) while I go a little farther and pray. He had lately prayed with them, John xvii. and now he appoints them to withdraw while he goes to his Father upon an errand peculiar to himself. Note, Our praying with our families will not excuse our neglect of secret worship. When Jacob entered into his agony, he first sent over that all he had, and was left alone, and then there wrestled a man with him, Gen. xxxii. 23, 24. though he had been at prayer before, ver. 9. it is likely with his family.

2. Even into that retirement he took with him Peter, James and John, ver. 33. three competent witnesses of this part of his humiliation; and though great spirits care not how few know any thing of their agonies, he was not ashamed they should see. These three had bragged most of their ability and willingness to suffer with him; Peter here in this chapter, and James and John, chap. x. 39. and therefore Christ takes them to stand by and see what a struggle he had with the bloody baptism and the bitter cup, to convince them they knew not what they said. It is fit that they who are most confident should be first tried, that they may be made sensible of their folly and weakness.

3. There he was in a mighty toss, ver. 33. He began to be sore amazed, ἐκθαμβήσας, a word not used in Matthew, but very significant; it speaks something like that horror of great darkness which fell upon Abraham, Gen. xv. 12. or rather something much worse and more frightful. The terrors of God set themselves in array against him, and he allowed himself the actual and intent contemplation of them. Never was sorrow like unto his at that time; never any had such experience as he had from eternity of divine favours, and therefore never any had or could have such a sense as he had of divine favours. Yet there was not the least disorder or irregularity in this commotion of his spirits; his affections rose not tumultuously, but under direction and as they were called up, for he had no corrupt nature to mix with them as we have. If water have a sediment at the bottom, though it may be pretty clear while it stands still, yet shake it and it grows muddy, so it is with our affections; but pure water in a clean glass, though never so much stirred, continues clear, and so it was with Christ. Dr. Lightfoot thinks it very probable that the devil did now appear to our Saviour in a visible shape, in his own shape and proper colour to terrify and affright him, and to drive him from his hope in God, (which he aimed at in persecuting Job, a type of Christ, to make him curse God and die) and to deter him from the farther prosecution of his undertaking; and whatever hindered him from that, he looked upon as coming from Satan, Matt. xvi. 23. When the devil had tempted him in the wilderness, it is said he departed from him for a season, Luke iv. 3. intending another grapple with him and in another way; finding that he could not by his flatteries allure him into sin, he would try by his terrors to affright him into it, and so make void his design.

4. He made a sad complaint of this toss he was in. He said, My soul is exceeding sorrowful. (1.) He was made sin for us, and therefore was thus sorrowful: he fully knew the malignity of the sins he was to suffer for; and having the highest degrees of love to God, who was offended by them, and of love to man, who was damaged and endangered by them, now those were set in order before him, no marvel that his soul was exceeding sorrowful. Now he was made to serve with our sins, and was thus wearied with our iniquities. (2.) He was made a curse for us; the curse of the law were transferred to him as our surety and representative, not as originally bound with us, but as bail to the action: And when his soul was thus exceeding sorrowful, he did as it were yield to them and lie down under the load, until by his death he had satisfied for sin, and so for ever abolished the curse. He now tasted death as he is said to do, Heb. ii. 9. which is not an extenuating expression, as if he did but taste it, no, he drank up even the dregs of the cup; but it is rather aggravating, it did not go down by wholesale, but he tasted all the bitterness of it. This was that fear the apostle speaks of, Heb. v. 7. a natural fear of pain and death, which it is natural to human nature to startle at.

Now the consideration of Christ's sufferings in his soul, and his sorrows for us, should be of use to us.

(1.) To imberber our sins; Can we ever think a favourable or so much as a slight thought of sin when we see what impression sin (though but imputed) made upon the Lord Jesus? Shall that sit light upon our souls which sat so heavy upon his? Was Christ in such an agony for our sins, and shall we never be in an agony about them? How should we look upon him whom we have pressed, whom we have pierced, but mourn, and be in bitterness? It becomes us to be exceeding sorrowful for sin, because Christ was so, and never to make a mock at it. If Christ thus suffered for sin, let us arm ourselves with the same mind.

(2.) To sweeten our sorrows; if our souls beat any time exceeding sorrowful, through the afflictions of this present time, let us remember that our Master was so before us, and the discipline is not greater than his Lord. Why should we affect to drive away sorrow when Christ for our sakes courted it, and submitted to it, and thereby not only took out the sting of it, and made it tolerable; but put virtue into it, and made it profitable for by the sadness of the countenance the heart is made better; yea, and put sweetness into it and made it comfortable. Blessed Paul was sorrowful, and yet always rejoicing. If we be exceeding sorrowful, it is but unto death; that will be the period of all our sorrows if Christ be ours; when the eyes are closed, all tears are wiped away from them.

5. He ordered his disciples to stick to him, not because he needed their help, but because he would have them to look upon him, and receive instruction. He said to them, Tarry ye here, and watch. He had bid the other disciples only sit here, ver. 32. but these three he bids to tarry, and watch, as expecting more from them than from the rest.

6. He addressed himself to God by prayer, ver. 35. He fell on the ground and prayed. It was but a little before this that in prayer he lift up his eyes, John xvi. 1. but here being in an agony, he fell upon his face, accommodating himself to his present humiliation, and teaching us thus to abase ourselves before God; it becomes us to be low when we come into the presence of the most High. (1.) As man he deprecated his sufferings, that if it were possible the hour might pass from him, ver. 35. This, short, but sharp affliction, that which I am now this hour to enter upon; let man's salvation be, if possible, accomplished without it. We have his very words ver. 36. Abba, Father. The Syriac word is here retained which Christ used, and which signifies Father, to intimate what an emphasis our Lord Jesus in his sorrows laid upon it, and would have us to lay. It is with an eye to this that St. Paul retains this word, putting it into the mouths of all that have the Spirit of adoption, they are taught to cry, Abba, Father, Rom. viii. 15. Gal. iv. 6. Father, All things are possible to thee. Note, Even that which we cannot expect should be done for us, we ought yet to believe God is able to do. And when we submit to his will, and refer ourselves to his wisdom and mercy, it must be with a believing acknowledgment of his power, that all things are possible to him. (2.) As mediator he acquiesced to the will of God concerning them; nevertheless, not what I will, but what thou wilt. I know the matter is settled and cannot be altered, I must suffer and die, and I bid it welcome.

7. He roused his disciples, who were dropped asleep while he was at prayer, ver. 37, 38. He comes to look after them, since they did not look after him, and he findeth them asleep, so little affected were they with his sorrows, his complaints and prayers. This carelessness of theirs was a preface of their farther offence in deserting him; and it was an aggravation of it that he had so lately commended them for continuing with him in his temptations though they had not been without their faults; was he so willing to make the best of them, and were they so indifferent in approving themselves to him? They had lately promised not to be offended in him, what? and yet mind him so little? He particularly upbraided Peter with his drowsiness, Simon, sleepest thou? ἐρεβώσῃς, ὦ Πέτρος, τί σπύσῃς; What thou, my son? Thou that didst so positively promise thou wouldst not deny me, dost thou slight me thus? From thee I expected better things. Couldest thou not watch one hour? He did not require him to watch all night with him, only for one hour. It aggravates our faintness and short spiritedness in Christ's service, that he doth not over-task us, nor weary us with it, Isa. xliii. 23. He puts upon us no other burden but to hold fast till he comes, Rev. ii. 24, 25. and behold he comes quickly, Rev. iii. 11.

As those whom Christ loves he rebukes when they do amiss, so those whom he rebukes he counsels and comforts. (1.) It was a very wise and faithful word of advice which Christ here gave to his disciples; watch and pray, lest ye enter into temptation, ver. 38. It was bad to sleep when Christ was in his agony, but they were entering into farther temptation, and if they did not stir up themselves, and fetch in grace and strength from God by prayer, they would do worse; and so they did, when they all forsook him and fled. (2.) It was a very kind and tender excuse that Christ made for them, the spirit truly is willing, I know it is, it is ready, it is forward; you would willingly keep awake, but you cannot. This may be taken as a reason for that exhortation, Watch and pray, because though the spirit is willing, I grant it is, you have sincerely resolved never to be offended in me; but the flesh is weak, and if you do not watch and pray, and use the means of perseverance, you may be overcome notwithstanding. The consideration of the weakness and infirmity of our flesh should engage and quicken us to prayer and watchfulness when we are entering into temptation.

8. He repeated his address to his Father, ver. 39. He went again and prayed, saying, τὸ αὐτὸ λέγων, the same word, or matter of business; he spoke to the same purpose, and again the third time. This teacheth us, that men ought always to pray, and not to faint, Luke xviii. 1. Though the answers to our prayers do not come quickly, yet we must renew our requests, and continue instant in prayer, for the vision is for an appointed time, and at the end it shall speak and not lie, Hab. ii. 3. Paul, when he was buffeted by a messenger of Satan, besought the Lord thrice, as Christ did here, before he obtained an answer of peace, 2 Cor. xii. 8. A little before this, when Christ, in the trouble of his soul, prayed, Father, glorify thy name, he had an immediate answer by a voice from heaven, I have both glorified it, and I will will glorify it yet again; but now he must come a second and a third time, for the visits of God's grace in answer to prayer come sooner or later, according to the pleasure of his will, that we may be kept depending.

9. He repeated his visits to his disciples. Thus he gave a specimen of his continued care for his church on earth, even when it is half asleep, and not duly concerned for itself, while he ever lives making intercession with his Father in heaven. See how, as became a mediator, he passeth and repasseth between them both. He came the second time to his disciples, and found them asleep again, ver. 40. See how the infirmities of Christ's disciples return upon them notwithstanding their resolutions, and overpower them notwithstanding their resistance; and what clogs those bodies of ours are to our souls, which should make us long for that blessed state in which they shall be no more our incumbrance. This second time he spoke to them as before, but they wist not what to answer him; they were ashamed of their drowsiness, and had nothing to say in excuse for it. Or, they were so overpowered with it, that, like men between sleep and wake, they knew not where they were, nor what they said. But the third time they were bid to sleep if they would, ver. 41. Sleep on now, and take your rest. I have now no more occasion for your watching, you may sleep if you will for me. It is enough; we had not that word in Matthew. You have had warning enough to keep awake, and would not take it, and now you shall see what little reason you have to be secure; Axiom, I discharge you from any further attendance; so some understand it; now the hour is come in which I knew you would all forsake me, and even take your course, as he said to Judas, What thou dost, do quickly, The Son of man is now betrayed into the hands of sinners, the chief priests and elders, those worst of sinners because they made a profession of sanctity. Come, rise up, do not lie dozing there. Let us go and meet the enemy, for, Lo, he that betrayeth me is at hand, and I must not now think of making an escape; when we see trouble at the door, we are concerned to stir up ourselves to get ready for it.

43. ¶ And immediately, while he yet spake, cometh Judas, one of the twelve, and with him a great multitude with swords and staves, from the chief priests and the Scribes and the elders. 44. And he that betrayed him had given them a token, saying, Whomsoever I shall kiss, the same is he; take him, and lead him away safely. 45. And as soon as he was come he goeth straightway to him, and saith, Master, master: and kissed him. 46. And they laid their hands on him, and took him. 47. And one of them that stood by, drew a sword, and smote a servant of the high-priest, and cut off his ear. 48. And Jesus answered and said unto them, Are ye come out, as against a thief, with swords and with staves to take me? 49. I was daily with you in the temple teaching, and ye took me not: but the scriptures must be fulfilled. 50. And they all forsook him and fled. 51. And there followed him a certain young man, having a linen cloth cast about his naked body; and the young men laid hold on him: 52. And he left the linen cloth, and fled from them naked.

We have here the seizing of our Lord Jesus by the officers of the chief priests. This was what his enemies had long aimed at, they had often sent to take him, but he had escaped out of their hands, because his hour was not come; nor could they now have taken him had he not freely surrendered himself. He began first to suffer in his soul, but afterwards suffered in his body, that he might satisfy for sin which begins in the heart, but afterwards makes the members of the body instruments of unrighteousness.

1. Here is a parcel of rude miscreants employed to take our Lord Jesus, and make him a prisoner; a great multitude with swords and staves. There is no wickedness so black, no villainy so horrid, but there may be found among the children of men fitting tools to be used in it, that will not boggle at it, so miserably depraved and vitiated is mankind. At the head of this rabble is Judas, one of the twelve, one of those that had been many years intimately conversant with our Lord Jesus, had prophesied in his name, and in his name cast out devils, and yet betrayed him. It is no new thing for a very fair and plausible profession to end in a shameful and fatal apostacy. How art thou fallen, O Lucifer!

2. Men of no less figure than the chief priests, and the Scribes, and the elders, sent them, and set them on work, who pretended to expect the Messiah and to be ready to welcome him, and yet when he is come, and has given undeniable proofs that it is he that should come, yet because he doth not make court to them, nor countenance and support their pomp and grandeur, because he appears not as a temporal prince, but sets up a spiritual kingdom, and preacheth repentance, reformation, and a holy life, and directs men's thoughts and affections, and aims to another world, they set themselves against him, and without giving the credentials he produceth an impartial examination, resolve to run him down.

3. Judas betrayed him with a kiss; abusing the freedom Christ used to allow his disciples of kissing his cheek at their return when they had been any time absent. He called him, Master, master and kissed him. Rabbi, Rabbi, as if he had been now more respectful to him than ever. It is enough to put one for ever out of conceit with being called of men, Rabbi, Rabbi, (Matt. xxiii. 7.) when it was with this compliment Christ was betrayed. He bid them take him, and lead him away safely. Some think he spoke this ironically, knowing that they could not secure him unless he pleased; this Sampson could break their bonds asunder as threads of tow, and make his escape, and then he should get the money, and Christ, the honour, and no harm done; and I should think so too, but that Satan was entered into him, so that the worst and most malicious intention of this action is not too black to be supposed. Nay, he had often heard his Master say, that being betrayed he should be crucified, and had no reason to think otherwise.

4. They arrested him, and made him their prisoner, ver. 46. They laid their hands on him, rude and violent hands, and took him into custody; triumphing, it is likely, that they had done that which had been often before attempted in vain.

5. Peter laid about him in defence of his Master, and wounded one of the assailants, being for the present mindful of his promise to venture his life with his master. He was one of them that stood by, of them that were with him, so the word signifies, of them three disciples that were with him in the garden; he drew a sword, and aimed, it is likely, to cut off the head, but missed his blow, and only cut off the ear of the servant of the high priest, ver. 47. It is easier to fight for Christ than to die for him; but Christ's good soldiers overcome not by taking away other people's lives, but by laying down their own, Rev. xii. 11.

6. Christ argues with them that had seized him, and shews them the absurdity of their proceedings against him. (1.) That they came out against him, as against a thief, whereas he was innocent of any crime; he taught daily in the temple, and if he had any wicked design, there it would some time or other have been discovered: nay, these officers of the chief priests, being retainers to the temple, may be supposed to have heard his sermons there, (I was with you in the temple) and had he not taught them an excellent doctrine, even his enemies themselves being judges; were not all the words of his mouth in righteousness? Was there any thing forward or perverse in them, Prov. viii. 8. By his fruits he was known to be a good tree; why then did they come out against him as a thief? (2.) That they came to take him thus privately whereas he was neither ashamed nor afraid to appear publicly in the temple. He was none of those evil-doers that hate the light, neither come to the light, John iii. 20. If their masters had any thing to say to him, they might meet him any day in the temple, where he was ready to answer all challenges, all charges: and there they might do as they pleased with him, for the priests had the custody of the temple and the command of the guards about it; but to come upon him thus at midnight and in the place of his retirement, was base and cowardly. This was to do as David's enemy, that sat in the lurking places of the villages to murder the innocent, Psalm x. 8. But this was not all. (3.) They came with swords and staves, as if he had been in arms against the government, and must have the posse comitatus raised to reduce him. There was no occasion for those weapons, but they made this ado, (1.) To secure themselves from the rage of some; they came armed because they feared the people; but thus were they in great fear, where no fear was, Psalm liii. 5. (2.) To expose him to the rage of others. By coming with swords and staves to take him, they represented him to the people (who are apt to take impressions this way) as a dangerous turbulent man, and so endeavoured to incense them against him, and make them cry out, Crucify him, crucify him, having no other way to gain their point.

7. He reconciled himself to all this injurious, ignominious treatment, by referring himself to the Old Testament predictions of the Messiah. I am hardly used, but I submit, for the scriptures must be fulfilled, ver. 49. (1.) See here what a regard Christ had to the scriptures: he would bear any thing rather than the least jot or tittle of the word of God should fall to the ground; and as he had an eye to them in his sufferings, so he has in his glory: for what is Christ doing in the government of the world, but fulfilling the scriptures? (2.) See what use we are to make of the Old Testament; we must search for Christ, the true treasure hid in that field; as the history of the New Testament expounds the prophecies of the Old, so the prophecies of the Old Testament illustrate the history of the New.

8. All Christ's disciples hereupon deserted him, ver. 50. they all forsook him and fled. They were very confident they should stick to him, but even good men know not what they will do till they are tried. If it was such a comfort to him, as he had lately intimated, that they had hitherto continued with him in his lesser trials, Luke xxiii. 28. we may well imagine what a grief it was to him, that they deserted him now in the greatest, when they might have done him some service, when he was abused, to protect him; and when accused to witness for him. Let not those that suffer for Christ think it strange if they be thus deserted and if all the herd stain the wounded deer; they are not better than their Master, nor can expect to be better used either by their enemies or by their friends. When St. Paul was in peril none stood by him, but all men forsook him, 2 Tim. iv. 16.

9. The noise disturbed the neighbourhood, and some of the neighbours were brought into danger by the riot, ver. 51, 52. This passage of story we have not in any other of the evangelists. Here is an account of a certain young man, that, as it should seem was no disciple of Christ, nor, as some have imagined, a servant of the house wherein Christ had eaten the passover, who followed him to see what would become of him, as the sons of the prophets, when they understood that Elijah was to be taken up, went to view afar off, 2 Kings ii. 7. but some young man that lived near the garden, perhaps in the house to which the garden belonged. Now observe concerning him,

1. How he was frightened out of his bed, to be a spectator of Christ's sufferings. Such a multitude so armed, and coming with so much fury and in the dead of the night, and in a quiet village, could not but make a mighty hubbub; this alarmed our young man, who perhaps thought there was some tumult or rising in the city, some uproar among the people, and had the curiosity to go and see what the matter was; and was in such haste to inform himself that he could not stay to dress himself, but threw a sheet about him, as if he would appear like a walking ghost in grave clothes, to frighten those who had frightened him, and run in among the thickest of them with the question, What is to do here? And being told, had a mind to see the issue, having no doubt heard much of the fame of this Jesus, and therefore when all his disciples had quitted him, he continued to follow him, desirous to hear what he would say, and see what he would do. Some think his having no other garment but this linen cloth upon his naked body, intimates that he was one of those Jews who made a greater profession of piety than their neighbours; and in token of that, among other instances of austerity and mortification of the body, they used no clothes but one linen garment, which though contrived to be modest enough, was thin and cold. But I rather think this was not his constant wear.

2. See how he was frightened into his bed again, when he was in danger of being made a sharer in Christ's sufferings. His own disciples had out-run him; but this young man having no concern for him, thought he might securely attend him, especially being so far from being armed that he was not so much as clothed; but the young men, the Roman soldiers, who were called to assist, laid hold of him, for all was fish that came to their net. Perhaps they were now vexed at themselves, that they had suffered the disciples to run away, and they being got out of their reach they resolved to seize the first they could lay their hands on; though this young man was perhaps one of the strictest sect of the Jewish church, yet the Roman soldiers made no conscience of abusing him upon this occasion. Finding himself in danger he left the linen cloth by which they had caught hold of him, and fled away naked. This passage is recorded to shew what a barbarous crew this was that was sent to seize Christ, and what a narrow escape the disciples had of falling into their hands, out of which nothing could have kept them but their Master's care of them. If ye seek me, let these go their way, John xviii. 8. It also intimates that there is no hold of those who are led by curiosity only, and not by faith and conscience to follow Christ.

53. ¶ And they led Jesus away to the high priest: and with him were assembled all the chief priests and the elders and the Scribes. 54. And Peter followed him afar off, even into the palace of the high priest: and and he sat with the servants and warmed himself at the fire. 55. And the chief priests and all the council sought for witnesses against Jesus to put him to death; and found none: 56. For many bare false witnesses against him, but their witnesses agreed not together. 57. And there arose certain, and bare false witnesses against him, saying, 58. We heard him say, I will destroy this temple that is made with hands, and within three days I will build another made without hands. 59. But neither so did their witnesses agree together. 60. And the high priest stood up in the midst, and asked Jesus, saying, answerest thou nothing? what is it which these witnesses against thee? 61. But he held his peace, and answered nothing. Again the high priest asked him, and said unto him, Art thou the Christ, the Son of the Blessed? 62. And Jesus said I am: and ye shall see the Son of man sitting on the right hand of power, and coming in the clouds of heaven. 63. Then the high priest rent his clothes, and said, What need we any further witnesses? 64. Ye have heard the blasphemy: what think ye? And they all condemned him to be guilty of death. 65. And some began to spit on him, and to cover his face, and to buffet him, and to say unto him, prophecy: and the servants did strike him with the palms of their hands.

We have here Christ's arraignment, trial, conviction, and condemnation, in the ecclesiastical court before the great Sanhedrin, of which the high priest was president or judge of the court; the same Caiaphas that had lately adjudged it expedient he should be put to death, guilty, or not guilty, John xi. 50. and therefore might justly be excepted against as partial.

1. Christ is hurried away to his house, his palace it is called, such state did he live in. And there, though in the dead of the night all the chief priests, and elders, and Scribes, that were in the secret, were assembled ready to receive the prey: so sure were they of it.

2. Peter followed at a distance, such a degree of cowardice was his late courage dwindled into, ver. 54. But when he came to the chief priest's palace he sneakily went and sat with the servants, that he might not be suspected to belong to Christ. The high priest's fire-side was no proper place, nor his servants proper company for Peter, but it was his entrance into a temptation.

3. Great diligence was used to procure for love or money false witnesses against Christ. They had seized him as a malefactor, and now they had him; they had no indictment to prefer against him, no crime to lay to his charge, but they sought for witnesses against him; pumped some with enjoining questions, offered bribes to others if they would accuse him, and endeavoured to frighten others if they would not, ver. 55, 56. The chief priests and elders were by the law intrusted with the prosecuting and punishing of false witnesses, Deut. xix. 16. yet those were now ringleaders in a crime that tends to the overthrow of all justice. It is time to cry help, Lord, when the physicians of a land are its troublers, and those that should be the conservators of peace and equity, are the corruptors of both.

4. He was at length charged with words spoken some years ago, which as they were represented seemed to threaten the temple which they had made no better than an idol of, ver. 57, 58. but the witnesses to this matter did not agree, ver. 59. for one swore that he said, I am able to destroy the temple of God, and to build it in three days, so it is in Matthew; the other swore that he said, I will destroy this temple, that is made with hands, and within three days, I will build, not it, but another made without hands; now these two differ much from each other, ἐγὼ ἰσχύω καταλύσαι τὸν ναὸν τοῦ θεοῦ καὶ ἐν τριῶν ἡμερῶν οἰκοδομῆσαι αὐτόν, their testimony was not sufficient, nor equal to the charge of a capital crime; so Dr. Hammond; they did not accuse him of that upon which a sentence of death might be founded, no not by the utmost stretch of their law.

5. He was urged to be his own accuser, ver. 60. The high priest stood up in a heat and said, Answerest thou nothing? This he said under pretence of justice and fair dealing, but really with a design to ensnare him; that they might accuse him, Luke xi. 53, 54—xx. 20. We may well imagine with what an air of haughtiness and disdain this proud high priest brought our Lord Jesus to this question: "Come you, the prisoner at the bar, you hear what is sworn against you; what have you now to say for yourself?" pleased to think that he seemed silent, who had so often silenced those that picked quarrels with him. Still Christ answered nothing, that he might set us an example, (1.) Of patience under calumnies and false accusations; when we are reviled, let us not revile again, 1 Pet. ii. 22. And (2.) Of prudence; when a man shall be made an offender for a word, Isa. xxix. 21. and our defence made our offence, it is an evil time indeed when the prudent shall keep silence, (lest they make ill worse) and commit their cause to him that judgeth righteously.

But, 6. When he was asked, whether he was the Christ, he confessed, and denied not that he was, ver. 61, 62. He asked, Art thou the Son of the blessed? i. e. the Son of God? for as Dr. Hammond observes, the Jews when they named God, generally added, blessed for ever; and thence the blessed is the title of God, a peculiar title, and applied to Christ, Rom. ix. 5. And for the proof of his being the Son of God he binds them over to his second coming, ye shall see the son of man sitting on the right hand of power; that Son of Man that now appears so mean and despicable, whom you see and trample upon: Isa. iii. 2, 3. you shall shortly see and tremble before. Now one would think such a word as this which our Lord Jesus seems to have spoken with a grandeur and majesty not agreeable to his present appearance (for through the thickest cloud of his humiliation some rays of glory were still darted forth) should have startled the court, and at least in the opinion of some of them should have amounted to a demurrer or arrest of judgment, and that they should have stayed process till they had considered farther of it; when Paul at the bar reasoned of the judgment to come, the judge trembled and adjourned the trial, Acts xxiv. 25. But the chief priests were so miserably blinded with malice and rage, that, like the horse rushing into the battle, they mocked at fear and were not affrighted, neither believing that it was the sound of the trumpet, Job xxxix. 22, 23. and see Job xv. 25, 26.

7. The high priest upon this confession of his, convicted him as a blasphemer, ver. 63. He rent his clothes χιτώνας αὐτοῦ, some think this word signifies his pontifical vestments, which for the greater state he had put on, though in the night upon this occasion. As before in his enmity to Christ, he said he knew not what, John xi. 51, 52. so now he did he knew not what. If Saul's rending Samuel's mantle was made to signify the rending of the kingdom from him, 1 Sam. xv. 27, 28. much more did Caiaphas's rending his own clothes signify the rending of the priesthood from him, as the rending of the vail at Christ's death signified the throwing of all open. Christ's clothes even when he was crucified were kept entire and not rent: for when the Levitical priesthood was rent in pieces and done away, This man, because he continues ever, has an unchangeable priesthood.

8. They agreed he was a blasphemer, and as such was guilty of a capital crime, ver. 64. The question seemed to be put fairly. What think ye? But it was really prejudged, for the high priest had said, Ye have heard the blasphemy; he gave judgment first, who as president of the court ought to have voted last. So they all condemned him to be guilty of death, what friends he had in the great Sanhedrin did not appear, it is likely they had not notice.

9. They set themselves to abuse him, and, as the Philistines with Samson, to make sport with him, ver. 65. It should seem some of the priests themselves that had condemned him, so far forgot the dignity as well as duty of their place, and the gravity which became them, that they helped their servants in playing the fool with a condemned prisoner. This they made their diversion, while they waited for the morning to complete their villany. That night of observations (as the passover night was called) they made a merry night of. If they did not think it below them to abuse Christ, shall we think any thing below us by which we may do him honour.

66. ¶ And as Peter was beneath in the palace, there cometh one of the maids of the high priest. 67. And when she saw Peter warming himself, she looked upon him and said, And thou also wast with Jesus of Nazareth. 68. But he denied, saying, I know not, neither understand I what thou sayest. And he went out into the porch; and the cock crew. 69. And a maid saw him again, and began to say to them that stood by, This is one of them. 70. And he denied it again. And a little after, they that stood by said again to Peter, Surely thou art one of them: for thou art a Galilean, and thy speech agreeth thereto. 71. But he began to curse and to swear, saying, I know not this man of whom ye speak. 72. And the second time the cock crew. And Peter called to mind the word that Jesus said unto him, Before the cock crow twice, thou shalt deny me thrice. And when he thought thereon, he wept.

We have here the story of Peter's denying Christ.

1. It begins in keeping at a distance from him. Peter had followed afar off, ver. 54. and now was beneath in the palace, at the lower end of the hall. Those that are shy of Christ are in a fair way to deny him, that are shy of attending on holy ordinances, shy of the communion of the faithful, and loth to be seen on the side of despised godliness.

2. It was occasioned by his associating with the high priest's servants and sitting among them. They that think it dangerous to be in company with Christ's disciples, because thence they may be drawn in to suffer for him, will find it much more dangerous to be in company with his enemies, because thereby they may be drawn into sin against him.

3. The temptation was his being charged as a disciple of Christ; Thou also wast with Jesus of Nazareth, ver. 67. This is one of them, ver. 69. for thou art a Galilean, one may know that by thy speaking broad, ver. 70. It doth not appear that he was challenged upon it, or in danger of being prosecuted as a criminal for it, but only bantered upon it, and in danger of being ridiculed as a fool for it. While the chief priests were abusing the Master, the servants were abusing the disciples. Sometimes the cause of Christ seems to fall much on the losing side, that every body has a stone to throw at it, and even the objects gather themselves together against it. When Job was on the dunghill he was had in derision of those that were the children of base men, Job xxx. 8. Yet all things considered, the temptation could not be called formidable; it was only a maid that casually cast her eye upon him, and for ought appears without design of giving him any trouble, said, Thou art one of them, to which he needed not to have made any reply, or might have said, and if I be I hope that is no treason.

4. The sin was very great; he denied Christ before men, at a time when he ought to have confessed and owned him, and to have appeared in court a witness for him. Christ had often given notice to his disciples of his own sufferings, yet when they came they were to Peter as great a surprise and terror, as if he had never heard of them before. He had often told them that they must suffer for him, must take up their cross and follow him; and yet Peter is so terribly afraid of suffering upon the very first alarm of it, that he will lie and swear and do any thing to avoid it. When Christ was admired and flocked after, he could readily own him, but now he is deserted and despised and run down, he is ashamed of him, and will own no relation to him.

5. His repentance was very speedy. He repeated his denial thrice, and the third was worst of all, for then he cursed and swore to confirm his denial; and that third blow which one would think should have stunned him and knocked him down, startled him and roused him up. Then the cock crew the second time, which put him in mind of his Master's words, the warning he had given him with that particular circumstance of the cock crowing twice; and by recollecting that he was made sensible of his sin, and the aggravations of it; and when he thought thereon he wept. Some observe that this evangelist who wrote, as some have thought by St. Peter's direction, speaks as fully of Peter's sin as any of them, but more briefly of his sorrow, which Peter in modesty would not have to be magnified, and because he thought he could never sorrow enough for so great a sin. His repentance here is thus expressed ἐπελάων ἑλπίαι, where something must be supplied, He added to weep, so some, making it a Hebrewism; he wept, and the more he thought on it the more he wept: he continued weeping; he flung out and wept: burst out into tears: threw himself down and wept: He covered his face and wept, so some: cast his garment about his head that he might not be seen to weep. He cast his eyes upon his Master who turned and looked upon him; so Dr. Hammond supplies it, and it is a probable conjecture. Or, as we understand it, fixing his mind upon it he wept. It is not a transient thought of that which is humbling that will suffice, but we must dwell upon it: Or, what if this word should mean his laying load upon himself, throwing confusion into his own face; he did as the publican that smote his breast in sorrow for sin; and this amounts to his weeping bitterly.

CHAPTER XV.

What we read of the sufferings of Christ in the foregoing chapter was but the prologue or introduction, here we have the completing of them. We left him condemned by the chief priests, but they could only show their teeth, they could not bite. Here we have him. (1.) Arraigned and accused before Pilate the Roman governor, ver. 1—5. (2.) Cried out against by the common people at the instigation of the priests, ver. 6—14. (3.) Condemned to be crucified immediately, ver. 15. (4.) Bantered and abused as a mock king by the Roman soldiers, ver. 16—19. (5.) Led out to the place of execution with all possible ignominy and disgrace, ver. 20—24. (6.) Nailed to the cross between two thieves, ver. 25—28. (7.) Reviled and abused by all that passed by, ver. 29—32. (8.) Forsaken for a time by his Father, ver. 33—36. (9.) Dying and rending the veil, ver. 37, 38. (10.) Attended and witnessed to by the centurion and others, ver. 39—41. (11.) Buried in the sepulchre of Joseph of Arimathea, ver. 42—47.

1. AND straightway in the morning the chief priests held a consultation with the elders and Scribes and the whole council, and bound Jesus, and carried him away, and delivered him to Pilate. 2. And Pilate asked him, Art thou the king of the Jews? And he answering said unto him, Thou sayest it. 3. And the chief priests accused him of many things, but he answered nothing. 4. And Pilate asked him again, saying, Answerest thou nothing? behold how many things they witness against thee. 5. But Jesus yet answered nothing: so that Pilate marvelled. 6. Now at that feast he released unto them one prisoner, whomsoever they desired. 7. And there was one named Barabbas, which lay bound with them that had made insurrection with him, who had committed murder in the insurrection. 8. And the multitude crying aloud, began to desire him to do as he had ever done unto them. 9. But Pilate answered them saying, Will ye that I release unto you the king of the Jews? 10. (For he knew that the chief priests had delivered him for envy) 11. But the chief priests moved the people, that he should rather release Barabbas unto them. 12. And Pilate answered, and said again unto them, What will ye then that I shall do unto him whom ye call the king of the Jews? 13. And they cried out again, Crucify him. 14. Then Pilate said unto them, Why what evil hath he done? And they cried out the more exceedingly, Crucify him.

Here we have,

1. A consultation held by the great Sanhedrin for the effectual prosecution of our Lord Jesus. They met early in the morning about it, and went into a grand committee, to find out ways and means to get him put to death; they lost no time, but followed their blow in good earnest, lest there should be an uproar among the people. The unwearied industry of wicked people in doing that which is evil should shame us for our backwardness and slothfulness in that which is good. They that war against Christ and the soul are up early, How long then wilt thou sleep, O sluggard?

2. The delivering of him up a prisoner to Pilate, they bound him. He was to be the great sacrifice, and sacrifices must be bound with cords, Psalm cxviii. 27. Christ was bound to make bonds easy to us, and to enable us as Paul and Silas, to sing in bonds. It is good for us often to remember the bonds of the Lord Jesus, as bound with him who was bound for us. They led him through the streets of Jerusalem to expose him to contempt, who whilst he taught in the temple but a day or two before, was had in veneration; and we may well imagine how miserably he looked after such a night's usage as he had had; so buffeted, spit upon, and abused. Their delivering him to the Roman power was a type of the ruin of their church, which hereby they merited and brought upon themselves; it signified that the promise and the covenant, and the oracles of God, and the visible church-state, which were the glory of Israel and had been so long in their possession, should now be delivered up to the Gentiles. By delivering up the king they do in effect deliver up the kingdom of God, which is therefore, as it were by their own consent, taken from them, and given to another nation. If they had delivered up Christ to gratify the desires of the Romans, or to satisfy any jealousies of theirs concerning him, it had been another matter, but they voluntarily betrayed him that was Israel's crown, to them that were Israel's yoke.

3. The examining of him by Pilate upon interrogatories, ver. 2. Art thou the king of the Jews? Dost thou pretend to be so, to be that Messiah whom the Jews expect as a temporal prince? Yea, said Christ it is as thou sayest, I am that Messiah, but not such a one as they expect. He is the king that rules and protects his Israel according to the Spirit, that are Jews inwardly by the circumcision of the Spirit, and the king that will restrain and punish the carnal Jews that continue in unbelief.

4. The articles of impeachment exhibited against him, and his silence under the charge and accusation. The chief priests forgot the dignity of their place when they turned informers, and did in person accuse Christ of many things, ver. 3. and witness against him, ver. 4. Many of the Old Testament prophets charge the priests of their times with great wickedness, in which well did they prophesy of these priests, see Ezek. xxii. 26. Hos. v. 1—vi. 9. Micah iii. 11. Lev. iii. 4. Mal. i. 6—ii. 8. The destruction of Jerusalem by the Chaldeans is said to be for the iniquity of the priests that shed the blood of the just, Lam. iv. 13. Note, Wicked priests are generally the worst of men. The better any thing is, the worse it is when it is corrupted. Lay-persecutors have been generally found more compassionate than ecclesiastics. These priests were very eager and noisy in their accusation; but Christ answered nothing, ver. 3. when Pilate urged him to clear himself, and was desirous he should, ver. 4. yet still he stood mute, ver. 5. he answered nothing, which Pilate thought very strange; He gave Pilate a direct answer, ver. 2. but would not answer the prosecutor and witnesses, because the things they alleged were notoriously false, and he knew Pilate himself was convinced they were so. Note, As Christ spoke to admiration so he kept silence to admiration.

5. The proposal Pilate made to the people, to have Jesus released to them, since it was the custom of the feast to grace the solemnity with the release of one prisoner. The people expected and demanded that he should do as he had ever done to them, ver. 8. it was an ill usage, but they would have it kept up. Now Pilate perceived that the chief priests delivered up Jesus for envy, because he had got such a reputation among the people as eclipsed theirs, ver. 10. it was easy to say, comparing the eagerness of the persecutors with the slenderness of the proofs, that it was not his guilt but his goodness, not any thing mischievous or scandalous, but something meritorious and glorious, that they were provoked at. And therefore hearing how much he was the darling of the crowd, he thought he might safely appeal from the priests to the people, and that they would be proud of rescuing him out of the priests' hands; and he proposeth an expedient for their doing it without danger of an uproar; let them demand him to be released, and Pilate will readily do it, and stop the mouths of the priests with it, that the people insisted upon his release. There was indeed another prisoner, one Barabbas, that had an interest and would have some votes, but he questioned not but Jesus would out-poll him.

6. The unanimous outrageous clamours of the people to have Christ put to death, and particularly to have him crucified. It was a great surprise to Pilate, when he found the people so much under the influence of the priests, that they all agreed to desire that Barabbas might be released, ver. 11. Pilate opposed it all he could, What will ye that I shall do to him whom ye call the king of the Jews? would not you then have him released too, ver. 12. No, say they, Crucify him? the priests having put that in their mouths, they insist upon it; when Pilate objected, Why, what evil has he done? A very material question in such a case, they do not pretend to answer it, but cried out the more exceedingly, as they were more and more inflamed and irritated by the priests, Crucify him, crucify him. Now the priests who were very busy dispersing themselves and their creatures among the mob, to keep up the cry promised themselves that it would influence Pilate two ways to condemn him. (1.) It might incline him to believe Christ guilty when there was so general an out-cry against him; surely might Pilate think he must needs be an ill man whom all the world is weary of; he would now conclude he had been misinformed, when he was told what an interest he had in the people, and that the matter was not so. But the priests had hurried on the prosecution with so much expedition, that we may suppose they that were Christ's friends, and would have opposed this cry, were at the other end of the town, and knew nothing of the matter. Note, It has been the common artifice of Satan to put Christ and his religion into an ill name, and so to run them down. When once this sect, as they called it, comes to be every where spoken against, though without cause, then that is looked upon as cause enough to condemn it. But let us judge of persons and things by their merits, and the standard of God's word, and not prejudice by common fame and the cry out of the country. (2.) It might induce him to condemn Christ, to please the people, and indeed for fear of displeasing them. Though he was not so weak as to be governed by their opinion to believe him guilty, yet he was so wicked as to be swayed by their outrage to condemn him, though he believed him innocent; induced thereto by reasons of state and the wisdom of this world. Our Lord Jesus dying as a sacrifice for the sins of many, he fell a sacrifice to the rage of many.

15. ¶ And so Pilate willing to content the people, released Barabbas unto them, and delivered Jesus, when he had scourged him, to be crucified. 16. And the soldiers led him away into the hall, called Pretorium: and they call together the whole band. 17. And they clothed him with purple, and platted a crown of thorns, and put it about his head. 18. And began to salute him, Hail, king of the Jews: 19. And they smote him on the head with a reed, and did spit upon him, and bowing their knees worshipped him. 20. And when they had mocked him, they took off the purple from him, and put his own clothes on him, and led him out to crucify him. 21. And they compel one Simon a Cyrenian, who passed by, coming out of the country, the father of Alexander and Rufus, to bear his cross.

Here, 1. Pilate to gratify the Jews' malice, delivers Christ to be crucified, ver. 15. willing to content the people, to do enough for them, so the word is, and make them easy, that he might keep them quiet, released Barabbas unto them, that was the scandal and plague of their nation, and delivered Jesus to be crucified, who was the glory and blessing of their nation. Though he had scourged him before, hoping that would content them, and then not designing to crucify him, yet he went on to that; for he that could persuade himself to chastise one that was innocent, (Luke xxiii. 16.) no wonder he could by degrees persuade himself to crucify him.

Christ was crucified, for that was, (1.) A bloody death, and without blood no remission, Heb. ix. 22. The blood is the life, Gen. ix. 4. it is the vehicle of the animal spirits, which connect the soul and body, so that the exhausting of the blood is the exhausting of the life. Christ was to lay down his life for us, and therefore shed his blood. Blood made atonement for the soul, Lev. xvii. 11. and therefore in every sacrifice of propitiation, special order was given for the pouring out of the blood, and the sprinkling of that before the Lord. Now, that Christ might answer all these types, he shed his blood. (2.) It was a painful death; the pains were exquisite and acute, for death made its assaults upon the vitals by the exterior parts which are quickest of sense. Christ died, so as that he might feel himself die, because he was to be both the priest and the sacrifice; so as that he might be active in dying, because he was to make his soul an offering for sin. Truly calls crucifixion, teterrimum supplicium; Christ would meet death in its greatest terror, and so conquer it. (3.) It was a shameful death, the death of slaves, and the vilest malefactors; so it was accounted among the Romans. The cross and the shame are put together; God having been injured in his honour by the sin of man, it is in his honour that Christ makes him satisfaction, not only by denying himself in and divesting himself of the honours due to his divine nature for a time, but by submitting to the greatest reproach and ignominy the human nature was capable of being loaded with. Yet this was not the worst. (4.) It was a cursed death; thus it was branded by the Jewish law, Deut. xxi. 23. He that is hanged is accursed of God, is under a particular mark of God's displeasure. It was the death that Saul's sons were put to when the guilt of their father's bloody house was to be expiated, 2 Sam. xxi. 6. Haman and his sons were hanged, Esth. vii. 10.—ix. 13. We do not read of any of the prophets of the Old Testament that were hanged; but now Christ has submitted to be hanged upon a tree, the reproach and curse curse of that kind of death is quite rolled away, so that it ought not to be any hindrance to the comfort of those who die either innocently or penitently, nor any diminution from, but rather an addition to, the glory of those who die martyrs for Christ, to be, as he was, hanged upon a tree.

2. Pilate, to gratify the gay humour of his Roman soldiers, delivered him to them to be abused and spitefully treated, while they were preparing for the execution. They called together the whole regiment that was then in waiting, and they went into an inner hall, where they ignominiously abused our Lord Jesus, as a king, just as in the high priest's hall his servants had ignominiously abused him as a Prophet and Saviour. (1.) Do kings use to wear robes of purple or scarlet? They clothed him with purple. This abuse done to Christ in his apparel should be an intimation to Christians not to make the putting on of apparel their adorning, 1 Pet. iii. 4. Shall a purple or scarlet robe be matter of pride to a Christian which was matter of reproach and shame to Christ? (2.) Do kings wear crowns? They platted a crown of thorns, and put it on his head. A crown of straw or rushes would have been harder enough, but this was pain itself. He wore the crown of thorns which we had deserved, that we might wear the crown of glory which he merited. Let us be taught by these thorns, as Gideon taught the men of Succoth, to hate sin and be uneasy under it, and to be in love with Jesus Christ, who is here a lily among thorns. If we be at any time afflicted with a thorn in the flesh, let it be our comfort, that our great high priest is touched with the feeling of our infirmities, having himself known what thorns in the flesh meant. (3.) Are kings attended with the acclamations of their subjects, O king, live for ever? That is also mimicked: they saluted him with, Hail, king of the Jews, such a prince, and such a people even good enough for one another. (4.) Kings use to have sceptres put into their hand, marks of dominion, as the crown is of dignity, and to resemble that they put a reed in his right hand. Those who despise the authority of the Lord Jesus, as not to be observed and obeyed, that regard not either the precept of his word or the threatenings of his wrath, do, in effect, put a reed in his hand; nay, and as these here smite him on the head with it, such is the indignity they do him. (5.) Subjects, when they swear allegiance, were wont to kiss their sovereign, and this they offered to do, but instead of that spit upon him. (6.) Kings used to be addressed to upon the knee, and this also they brought into the jest, they bowed the knee and worshipped him; this they did in scorn, to make themselves and one another laugh. We were by sin become liable to everlasting shame and contempt, to deliver us from which, our Lord Jesus submitted to this shame and contempt for us. He was thus mocked not in his own clothes, but in another's, to signify that he suffered not for his own sin; the crime was ours, the shame his. Those who pretend subjection to Christ, but at the same time give themselves up to the service of the world and the flesh, do in effect the same that they did, who bowed the knee to him in mockery, and abused him with, Hail, King of the Jews, when they said, We have no king but Cæsar. Those that bow the knee to Christ, but do not bow the soul, that draw nigh to him with their mouths, and honour him with their lips, but their hearts are far from him, put the same affront upon him that these here did.

The soldiers, at the hour appointed, led him away from Pilate's judgment-hall to the place of execution, ver. 20. as a sheep to the slaughter; he was led forth with the workers of iniquity, though he did no sin. But left his death, under the load of his cross, which he was to carry, should prevent the further cruelties they intended, they compelled one Simon of Cyrene to carry his cross for him. He passed by, coming out of the country, or out of the fields, not thinking of any such matter. Note, We must not think it strange if crosses come upon us suddenly, and we be surprised by them. The cross was a very troublesome unwieldy load, but he that carried it a few minutes had the honour to have his name upon record in the book of God, though otherwise an obscure person: so that wherever this gospel is preached there shall this be told for a memorial of him: so though no affliction, no cross for the present, be joyous, but grievous, yet afterwards it yields a crown of glory to them that are exercised thereby.

22. And they bring him unto the place Golgotha, which is, being interpreted, The place of a skull. 23. And they gave him to drink wine mingled with myrrh, but he received it not. 24. And when they had crucified him, they parted his garments, casting lots upon them, what every man should take. 25. And it was the third hour, and they crucified him. 26. And the superscription of his accusation was written over, THE KING OF THE JEWS. 27. And with him they crucified two thieves; the one on his right hand, and the other on his left. 28. And the scripture was fulfilled, which saith, And he was numbered with the transgressors. 29. And they that passed by reviled him, wagging their heads, and saying, Ah, thou that destroyest the temple, and buildest it in three days, 30. Save thyself, and come down from the cross. 31. Likewise also the chief priests mocking said among themselves with the Scribes, He saved others; himself he cannot save. 32. Let Christ the King of Israel descend now from the cross, that we may see and believe. And they that were crucified with him reviled him.

We have here the crucifixion of our Lord Jesus.

1. The place where he was crucified, it was called Golgotha, the place of a skull. Some think, because of the heads of malefactors that were there cut off; it was the common place of execution, as Tyburn, for he was in all respects numbered with the transgressors. I know not how to give any credit to it, but divers of the ancients mention it as a current tradition, that in this place our first father Adam was buried, and they think it highly congruous that there Christ should be crucified; for as in Adam all die, so in Christ shall all be made alive. Tertullian, Origen, Chrysostom, and Epiphanius, (great names) take notice of it; nay, Cyprian adds, credatur à piis, many good people believe that the blood of Christ crucified, did trickle down upon the skull of Adam, who was buried in the same place. Something more credible is the tradition, that this mount Calvary was that mountain in the land of Moriah, (and in the land of Moriah it is certain it was, for so the country about Jerusalem was called) on which Isaac was to be offered, and the ram was offered instead of him; and then Abraham had an eye to this day of Christ, when he called the place Jehovah-jireh, the Lord will provide, expecting that so it would be seen in the mount of the Lord.

2. The time when he was crucified; it was the third hour, ver. 25. He was brought before Pilate about the sixth hour, (John xix. 14.) according to the Roman way of reckoning, which John useth, with which ours at this day agrees, that is at six o'clock in the morning; and then at the third hour, according to the Jews way of reckoning, that is, about nine of the clock in the morning, so soon after, they nailed him to the cross. Dr. Lightfoot thinks the third hour is here mentioned to intimate an aggravation of the wickedness of the priests, that they were here prosecuting Christ to the death, though it was after the third hour, when they ought to have been attending the service of the temple and offering the peace offering; it being the first day of the feast of unleavened bread, when there was to be a holy convocation. At that very time, when they should have been, according to the duty of their place, presiding in the public devotions, were they here venting their malice against the Lord Jesus; yet these were the men that seemed so zealous for the temple, and condemned Christ for speaking against it. Note, There are many who pretend to be for the church, who yet care not how seldom they go to church.

3. The indignities that were done him, when he was nailed to the cross; as if that had not been ignominious enough, they added several things to the ignominy of it.

1. It being the custom to give wine to persons that were to be put to death, they mingled his with myrrh, which was bitter, and made it nauseous; he tasted it, but would not drink it; was willing to admit the bitterness of it, but not the benefit of it.

2. The garments of those that were crucified, being, as with us, the executioner's fee, the soldiers cast lots upon his garments, ver. 24. threw dice (as our soldiers use to do upon a drum-head) for them. So making themselves merry with his misery, and sitting at their sport while he was hanging in pain.

3. They set a superscription over his head, by which they intended to reproach him, but really did him both justice and honour, The king of the Jews, ver. 26. Here was no crime alledged, but his sovereignty owned. Perhaps Pilate meant to cast disgrace upon Christ as a baffled king, or upon the Jews, who by their importunity had forced him against his conscience to condemn Christ, as a people that deserved no better a king than he seemed to be: however God intended it to be, the proclaiming even of Christ upon the cross, the king of Israel; though Pilate knew not what he wrote, no more than Caiaphas what he said, John xi. 51. Christ crucified is King of his church, his spiritual Israel; and even then when he hung on the cross he was like a king, conquering his and his people's enemies, and triumphing over them, Col. ii. 15. Now he was writing his laws in his own blood, and preparing his favours for his subjects. Whenever we look unto Christ crucified, we must remember the inscription over his head, that he is a king, and we must give up ourselves to be his subjects, as Israelites indeed.

4. They crucified two thieves with him, one on his right hand, the other on his left, and he in the midst as the worst of the three, ver. 27. so great a degree of dishonour did they hereby intend him. And no doubt it gave him disturbance too: some that have been imprisoned in the common goals for the testimony of Jesus, have complained of the company of cursing, swearing prisoners, more than of any other of the grievances of their prison; now in the midst of such our Lord Jesus was crucified: while he lived he had, as there was occasion, associated with sinners to do them good, and now when he died, he was for the same purpose joined with them, for he came into the world and went out of it to save sinners, even the chief. But this evangelist takes particular notice of the fulfilling of the scriptures in it, ver. 28. In that famous prediction of Christ's sufferings, Isa. liii. 12. it was foretold that he should be numbered with the transgressors, because he was made sin for us.

5. The spectators, that is, the generality of them, instead of condoling his misery, added to it by insulting over him. Surely never was such an instance of barbarous inhumanity towards the vilest malefactor: but thus the devil shewed the utmost rage against him, and thus he submitted to the greatest dishonours that could be done him.

1. Even they that passed by, that were no way concerned, yet reviled on him, ver. 29. If their hearts were so hardened that their compassions were not moved with such a spectacle, yet they should have thought it enough to have their curiosity gratified, but that will not serve: as if they were not only devoid of all humanity, but were devils in human shape, they taunted him, and expressed themselves with the utmost detestation of him, and indignation at him, and shot thick at him their arrows, even bitter words. The chief priests, no doubt, put these sarcasms into their mouths, Thou that destroyest the temple, and buildest it in three days, now, if thou canst, save thyself, and come down from the cross. They triumph as if now they had got him to the cross, there were no danger of his destroying the temple, whereas the temple of which he spoke he was now destroying, and did within three days build it up: and the temple of which they spake, he did by men, that were his sword and his hand, destroy not many years after. When secure sinners think the danger is over, it is then most ready to seize them: the day of the Lord comes as a thief upon those that deny his coming, and say, Where is the promise of it, much more upon those that defy his coming, and say, Let him make speed and hasten his work.

2. Even the chief priests, who being taken from among men, and ordained for men should have compassion even on those that are out of the way, should be tender of those that are suffering and dying, Heb. v. 1, 2. yet they poured vinegar instead of oil into his wounds, they talked to the grief of him whom God had smitten, Psalm lxxix. 76. they mocked him, they said, he saved others, healed and helped them, but now it appears it was not by his own power, for himself he cannot save. They challenge him to come down from the cross if he could, ver. 32. let them but see that and they would believe; whereas they would not believe when he gave them a more convincing sign than that, when he came up from the grave. These chief priests, one would think, might now have found themselves other work to do; if they would not go to do their duty in the temple, yet they might have been employed in an office not foreign to their profession; though they would not offer any counsel or comfort to the Lord Jesus, yet they might have given some help to the thieves in their dying moments; (the monks and priests in popish countries are very officious about criminals broken upon the wheel, a death much like that of the cross) but they did not think that their business.

3. Even they that were crucified with him reviled him, ver. 32. one of them did, so wretchedly was his heart hardened even in the depth of misery and at the door of eternity.

33. And when the sixth hour was come, there was darkness over the whole land until the ninth hour. 34. And at the ninth hour Jesus cried with a loud voice, saying, Eloi, Eloi, lama sabachthani? which is, being interpreted, My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me? 35. And some of them that stood by when.

when they heard it, said, Behold, he calleth Elias. 36. And one ran and filled a sponge full of vinegar, and put it on a reed, and gave him to drink, saying, Let alone; let us see whether Elias will come to take him down. 37. And Jesus cried with a loud voice, and gave up the ghost. 38. And the veil of the temple was rent in twain from the top to the bottom. 39. ¶ And when the centurion which stood over-against him, saw that he so cried out, and gave up the ghost, he said, Truly this man was the Son of God. 40. There were also women looking on afar off: among whom was Mary Magdalene, and Mary, the mother of James the less and of Joses, and Salome; 41. Who also when he was in Galilee, followed him, and ministered unto him; and many other women which came up with him unto Jerusalem.

Here we have an account of Christ's dying, how his enemies abused him, and God honoured him at his death.

1. There was a thick darkness over the whole land (some think over the whole earth) for three hours, from noon till three of the clock. Now the scripture was fulfilled, Amos viii. 9. I will cause the sun to go down at noon and will darken the earth in the clear day and Jer. xv. 9. Her sun is gone down while it was yet day. The Jews had often demanded of Christ a sign from heaven, and now they had one, but such a one as signified the blinding of their eyes. It was a sign of the darkness that was come and coming upon the Jewish church and nation. They were doing their utmost to extinguish the Sun of righteousness which was now setting, and the rising again of which they would never own; and what then might be expected among them but a worse than Egyptian darkness. This intimated to them, that the things which belonged to their peace were now hid from their eyes, and that the day of the Lord was at hand, which should be to them a day of darkness and gloominess, Joel ii. 1, 2. It was the power of darkness they were now under, the works of darkness they were now doing, and such as this should their doom justly be who loved darkness rather than the light.

2. Towards the close of this darkness, our Lord Jesus in the agony of his soul cried out, My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me? ver. 34. The darkness signified the present cloud which the human soul of Christ was under when he was making it an offering for sin. Mr. Fox, in his Acts and Monuments, vol. iii. p. 160. tells of one Mr. Hunter, a martyr in queen Mary's time, that being fastened to the stake to be burnt, he put up this short prayer, Son of God, shine upon me; and immediately the sun in the firmament shone out of a dark cloud to shill in his face, that he was forced to look another way, which was very comfortable to him; but our Lord Jesus on the contrary, was denied the light of the sun when he was in his sufferings to signify the withdrawing of the light of God's countenance. And this he complained of more than any thing; he did not complain of his disciples forsaking him, but of his father's. (1.) Because this wounded his spirit; and that is a thing hard to bear, Prov. xviii. 14. this brought the waters into his soul, Psalm lxxix. 1, 2, 3. (2.) Because in this especially he was made sin for us; our iniquities had deserved indignation and wrath upon the soul, Rom. ii. 7. and therefore Christ being made a sacrifice, underwent as much of it as he was capable of; and it could not but bear hard indeed upon him who had laid in the bosom of the Father from eternity, and was always his delight. These symptoms of divine wrath, which Christ was under in his sufferings, were like that fire from heaven which had been sent sometimes in extraordinary cases to consume the sacrifices, as Lev. ix. 24. 2 Chron. vii. 1. 1 Kings xviii. 38. and it was always a token of God's acceptance: the fire that should have fallen upon the sinner, if God had not been pacified, fell upon the sacrifice as a token that he was so; therefore it now fell upon Christ, and extorted from him this loud and bitter cry. When Paul was to be offered as a sacrifice for the service of the saints, he could joy and rejoice, Phil. ii. 17. But it is another thing to be offered as a sacrifice for the sins of sinners. Now at the fifth hour, and so to the ninth the sun was darkened by an extraordinary eclipse; and if it be true as some astronomers compute, that in the evening of this day in which Christ died there was an eclipse of the moon that was natural and expected, in which seven digits of the moon were darkened, and it continued from five o'clock till seven; it is remarkable, and yet farther significant of the darkness of the time that then was. When the sun shall be darkened, and the moon also shall not give her light.

3. Christ's prayer was bantered by them that stood by, ver. 35, 36. because he cried, Eli, Eli, (or as Mark has it according to the Syriac dialect) Eloi, Eloi, they said he calls for Elias, though they knew very well what he said, and what it signified, my God, my God. Thus did they represent him as praying to saints, either because he had abandoned God, or God had abandoned him; and hereby they would make him more and more odious to the people: one of them filled a sponge with vinegar, and reached it up to him upon a reed, let him cool his mouth with that, it was drink good enough for him, ver. 36. this was intended for a farther affront and abuse to him; and whoever it was that checked him who did it, did but add to the reproach; Let him alone, he has called for Elias, Let us see whether Elias will come to take him down, and if not, we may conclude that he also hath abandoned him.

4. Christ did again cry with a loud voice, and so gave up the ghost, ver. 37. He was now commending his soul into his Father's hands, and though God is not moved with any bodily exercise, yet this loud voice signified that great strength and ardency of affection wherewith he did it; to teach us in every thing wherein we have to do with God, to put forth our utmost vigour, and to perform all the duties of religion, particularly that of self-resignation, with our whole heart and our whole soul; and then though speech fails, that we cannot cry with a loud voice as Christ did, yet if God be the strength of the heart, that will not fail. Christ was really and truly dead, for he gave up the ghost, his human soul departed to the world of spirits, and left his body a breathless clod of clay.

5. Just at that instant that Christ died upon mount Calvary, the veil of the temple was rent in twain from the top to the bottom, ver. 38. This spoke a great deal, (1.) Of terror to the unbelieving Jews, for it was a preface of the utter destruction of their church and nation, which followed not long after; it was like the cutting asunder the staff of beauty (for this veil was exceeding splendid and glorious, Exod. xxvi. 31.) and that was done at the same time when they gave for his price thirty pieces of silver, Zech. xi. 10—12. to break the covenant which he had made with that people. Now it was time to cry Ichabod, The glory is departed from Israel. Some think that story which Josephus relates of the temple-door opening of its own accord with that voice, Let us depart hence, some years before the destruction of Jerusalem, is the same with this here, but that is not probable; however this had the same signification, according to that, Hos. v. 14. I will tear and go away. (2.) It speaks a deal of comfort to all believing Christians, for it signified the consecrating and laying open to us a new and living way into the holiest by the blood of Jesus.

6. The centurion who commanded that detachment which had the oversight of the execution was convinced, and confessed that this Jesus was the Son of God, ver. 39. One thing that satisfied him was, that he so cried out, and gave up the ghost: that one who was ready to give up the ghost should be able to cry out so was very surprising. Of all the sad spectacles of this kind he never observed the like; and that one who had strength to cry so loud, should yet immediately give up the ghost; this also made him wonder and he said to the honour of Christ, and the shame of those that abused him, Truly this man was the Son of God. But what reason had he to say so? I answer, (1.) He had reason to say that he suffered unjustly, and had a great deal of wrong done him. Note, He suffered for saying he was the son of God; and it was true he did say so, so that if he suffered unjustly, as it was plain by all the circumstances of his sufferings he did, then what he said was true, and he was indeed the Son of God. (2.) He had reason to say that he was a favourite of heaven, and one for whom the Almighty Power was particularly engaged, seeing how heaven did him honour at his death, and frowned upon his persecutors. Surely, thinks he, this must be some divine person highly beloved of God. This he expresseth by such words as speak his eternal generation as God, and his special designation to the office of Mediator, though he meant not so. Our Lord Jesus, even in the depth of his sufferings and humiliation, was the Son of God, and was declared to be so with power.

7. There were some of his friends, the good women especially, that attended him, ver. 40, 41. There were women looking on afar off: the men durst not be seen at all, the mob was so very outrageous (currenticede furori, they thought was good counsel now.) The women durst not come near, but stood at a distance, overwhelmed with grief: some of these women are here named, Mary Magdalene was one, she had been his patient, and owed all her comfort to his power and goodness, which rescued her out of the possession of seven devils, in gratitude for which she thought she could never do enough for him. Mary the mother of James the little, (Jacobus parvus) so the word is, probably he was so called because he was like Zaccheus, little of stature. This Mary was the wife of Cleophas or Alphius, sister to the virgin Mary. These women had followed Christ from Galilee, though they were not required to attend the seals as the males were; but it is likely they came in expectation that his temporal kingdom would now shortly be set up, and big with hopes of preferment for themselves and their relations under him: it is plain the mother of Zebedee's children was so, Matt. xx. 21. and now to see him upon a cross whom they thought to have seen upon a throne, could not but be a great baulk to them. Note, Those that follow Christ, in expectation of great things in this world by him and by the profession of his religion, may probably live to see themselves sadly disappointed.

42. ¶ And now when the even was come (because it was the preparation, that is, the day before the sabbath,) 43. Joseph of Arimathea, an honourable counsellor, which also waited for the kingdom of God, came, and went in boldly unto Pilate, and craved the body of Jesus. 44. And Pilate marvelled if he were already dead: and calling unto him the centurion, he asked him whether he had been any while dead. 45. And when he knew it of the centurion, he gave the body to Joseph. 46. And he bought fine linen, and took him down, and wrapped him in the linen, and laid him in a sepulchre which was hewn out of a rock, and rolled a stone unto the door of the sepulchre. 47. And Mary Magdalene and Mary the mother of Joses beheld where he was laid.

We are here attending the funeral of our Lord Jesus, a solemn, mournful funeral: O that we may by grace be planted in the likeness of it. Observe,

1. How the body of Christ was begged. It was, as the dead bodies of malefactors used to be, at the disposal of the government. Those that hurried him to the cross designed he should make his grave with the wicked, but God designed he should make it with the rich, Isa. liii. 9. and so he did. We are here told,

1. When the body of Christ was begged, in order to its being buried, and why such haste was made with the funeral; the even was come, and it was the preparation, that is, the day before the sabbath, ver. 42. The Jews were more strict in the observation of the sabbath than of any other feast, and therefore, though this day was itself a feast day, yet they observed it more religiously as the eve of the sabbath; when they prepared their houses and tables for the splendid and joyful solemnizing of the sabbath-day. Note, The day before the sabbath should be a day of preparation for the sabbath, not of our houses and tables, but of our hearts, which as much as possible should be freed from the cares and business of the world, and fixed and put in frame for the service and enjoyment of God. Such work is to be done, and such advantages gained on the sabbath-day, that it is requisite we should get ready for it a day before; nay, the whole week should be divided between the improvement of the foregoing sabbath, and the preparation for the following sabbath.

2. Who it was that begged the body, and took care for the decent interment of it; it was Joseph of Arimathea, who is here called an honourable counsellor, ver. 43. A person of character and distinction, and in an office of public trust; some think in the state, and that he was one of Pilate's privy counsel; his post rather seems to have been in the church, he was one of the great Sanhedrin of the Jews, or one of the high priest's council. He was ἱσχυρὸς βουλευτής, a counsellor that carrieth himself in his places as did become him. Those are truly honourable, and those only, in places of power and trust that make conscience of their duty, and whose deportment is agreeable to their preferment. But here is a more shining character put upon him, he was one that waited for the kingdom of God, the kingdom of grace on earth, and of glory in heaven, the kingdom of the Messiah. Note, Those who wait for the kingdom of God, and hope for an interest in the privileges of it, must shew it by their forwardness to own Christ's cause and interest, even then when it seems to be crushed and run down. Observe, Even among the honourable counsellors there were some, there was one at least that waited for the kingdom of God, whose faith will condemn the unbelief of all the rest. This man God raised up for this necessary service, when none of Christ's disciples could or durst undertake it, having neither purse nor interest, nor courage for it. Joseph went in boldly to Pilate; though though he knew how much it would affront the chief priests, who had loaded him with so much reproach to see any honour done him, yet he put on courage; perhaps at first he was a little afraid, but taking heart on it, he determined to shew this respect to the remains of the Lord Jesus, let the worst come to the worst.

3. What a surprise it was to Pilate to hear that he was dead, perhaps expecting that he would have saved himself, and come down from the cross; especially that he was already dead, that one who seemed to have a more than ordinary vigour should so soon yield to death. Every circumstance of Christ's dying was marvellous, for from first to last his name was called wonderful. Pilate doubted (so some understand it) whether he were yet dead or no, fearing lest he should be imposed upon, and the body should be taken down alive and recovered, whereas the sentence was, as with us, to hang till the body be dead. He therefore called the centurion, his own officer, and asked him, Whether he had been any while dead, ver. 44. whether it was so long since they perceived any sign of life in him, any breath or motion, that they might conclude he was dead past recall. The centurion would assure him of this, for he had particularly observed how he gave up the ghost, ver. 39. There was a special providence in it, that Pilate should be so strict in examining this, that there might be no pretence to say he was buried alive, and so to take away the truth of his resurrection; and so fully was this determined, that objection was never started. Thus the truth of Christ gains confirmation, sometimes even from the enemies of it.

2. How the body of Christ was buried. Pilate gave Joseph leave to take down the body, and do what he pleased with it. It was a wonder the chief priests were not too quick for him, and had not first begged the body of Pilate, to expose it and drag it about the streets, but that remainder of their wrath did God restrain, and gave that invaluable prize to Joseph, who knew how to value it; and the hearts of the priests were so influenced, that they did not oppose it. Sit diuus modo non sit vivus.

1. Joseph bought five linen to wrap the body in, though in such a cold linen that had been worn might have been thought sufficient. In paying respects to Christ it becomes us to be generous, and to serve him with the best that can be got, not with that which can be got at the best hand.

2. He took down the body, mangled and macerated as it was, and wrapt it in the linen as a treasure of great worth. Our Lord Jesus hath commanded himself to be delivered to us sacramentally in the ordinance of the Lord's supper, which we should receive in such a manner as may best express our love to him, who loved us and died for us.

3. He laid it in a sepulchre of his own, in a private place. We sometimes find it spoken of in the story of the kings of Judah, as a slur upon the memory of the wicked kings, that they were not buried in the sepulchres of the kings; our Lord Jesus, though he did no evil but much good, and to him was given the throne of his father David, yet was buried in the graves of the common people, for it was not in this world, but in the other, that his rest was glorious. This sepulchre belonged to Joseph; Abraham when he had no other possession in the land of Canaan, yet had a burying-place, but Christ had not so much as that. This sepulchre was hewn out of a rock, for Christ died to make the grave a refuge and shelter to the saints, and being hewn out of a rock, it is a strong refuge. O that thou wouldst hide me in the grave! Christ himself is a hiding place to his people, that is, as the shadow of a great rock.

4. He rolled a stone to the door of the sepulchre, for so the manner of the Jews was to bury. When Daniel was put into the lion's den, a stone was laid to the mouth of it to keep him in, as here to the door of Christ's sepulchre, but neither of them could keep off the angels' visits to the prisoners.

5. Some of the good women attended the funeral, and beheld where he was laid, that they might come after the sabbath to anoint the dead body, because they had not time to do it now. When Moses the mediator and lawgiver of the Jewish church, was buried, care was taken that no man should know of his sepulchre, Deut. xxxiv. 6. because the respects of the people towards his person were to die with him; but when our great Mediator and Lawgiver was buried, special notice was taken of his sepulchre, because he was to rise again: And the care taken of his body, speaks the care which he himself will take concerning his body the church, even then when it seems to be a dead body, and as a valley full of dry bones, it shall be preserved in order to a resurrection; as shall also the dead bodies of the saints, with whose dust there is a covenant in force which shall not be forgotten. Our meditations on Christ's burial should lead us to think of our own, and should help to make the grave familiar to us, and so to make that bed easy, which we must shortly make in the darkness. Frequent thoughts of it would not only take off the dread and terror of it, but quicken us, since the graves are always ready for us, to get ready for the graves, Job xvii. 1.

C H A P. XVI.

In this chapter we have a short account of the resurrection and ascension of the Lord Jesus, and the joys and triumphs which it furnisheth all believers with, will be very acceptable to those who sympathised and suffered with Christ in the foregoing chapters. Here is, (1.) Christ's resurrection notified by an angel to the women that came to the sepulchre to anoint him, ver. 1--8. (2.) His appearance to Mary Magdalen, and the account she gave of it to the disciples, ver. 9, 10, 11. (3.) His appearance to the two disciples going to Emmaus, and the report they made of it to their brethren, ver. 12, 13. (4.) His appearance to the eleven, with the commission he gave them to set up his kingdom in the world, and full instructions and credentials in order therunto, ver. 14--18. (5.) His ascension into heaven, and the apostle's close application to their work, and God's owning them in it, ver. 19, 20.

1. AND when the sabbath was past, Mary Magdalene, and Mary the mother of James, and Salome, had bought sweet spices, that they might come and anoint him. 2. And very early in the morning, the first day of the week, they came unto the sepulchre at the rising of the sun. 3. And they said among themselves, Who shall roll us away the stone from the door of the sepulchre? 4. (And when they looked, they saw that the stone was rolled away) for it was very great. 5. And entering into the sepulchre, they saw a young man sitting on the right side, clothed in a long white garment; and they were affrighted. 6. And he saith unto them, Be not affrighted: ye seek Jesus of Nazareth, which was crucified: he is risen, he is not here; behold the place where they laid him. 7. But go your way, tell his disciples and Peter, that he goeth before you into Galilee: there shall ye see him, as he said unto you. 8. And they went out quickly, and fled from the sepulchre: for they trembled, and were amazed: neither said they any thing to any man: for they were afraid.

Never was there such a sabbath since the sabbath was first instituted as this was, which the first words of this chapter tells us was now past: during all this sabbath our Lord Jesus lay in the grave. It was to him a sabbath of rest, but a silent sabbath; it was to his disciples a melancholy sabbath, spent in tears and fears: Never were the sabbath services in the temple such an abomination to God, though they had been often so, as they were now, when the chief priests that presided in them had their hands full of blood, the blood of Christ. Well, this sabbath is over, and the first day of the week is the first day of a new world. We have here,

1. The affectionate visit which the good women that had attended Christ now made to his sepulchre, not a superstitious one, but a pious one. They set out from their lodgings very early in the morning, at break of day or sooner; but either they had a long walk or met with some hindrance, so that it was sun-rising by that time they got to the sepulchre. They had brought sweet spices, too, and came not only to bedew the dead body with their tears, for nothing could more renew their grief than this, but to perfume it with their spices, ver. 1. Nicodemus had brought a very large quantity of dry spices, myrrh and aloes, which served to dry the wounds, and dry up the blood, John xix. 39. But these good women did not think that enough, they brought spices perhaps of another kind, some perfumed oils to anoint him. Note, The respects which others have shewed to Christ's name, should not hinder us from shewing our respects to it.

2. The care they were in about the rolling away of the stone, and the superseding of that care, ver. 3, 4. They said among themselves, as they were coming along, and now drew near the sepulchre, who shall roll away the stone from the door of the sepulchre? for it was very great, more than they with their united strength could move. They should have thought of this before they came out, and then discretion would have bid them not go, unless they had those to go with them who could do it. And there was another difficulty much greater than this to be got over, which they knew nothing of, to wit, a guard of soldiers set to keep the sepulchre; who, had they come before they were frightened away, would have frightened them away. But their gracious love to Christ carried them to the sepulchre, and see how by that time they came thither both those difficulties were removed, both the stone which they knew of, and the guard which they knew not of. They saw that the stone was rolled away, which was the first thing that amazed them. Note, They who are carried by a holy zeal to seek Christ diligently, will find the difficulties that lie in their way, strangely to vanish, and themselves helped over them beyond their expectation.

3. The assurance that was given them by an angel, that the Lord Jesus was risen from the dead, and had taken leave of his sepulchre, and had left him there to tell those who came thither to enquire after him.

1. They entered into the sepulchre, at least a little way in, and saw the body of Jesus was not there where they left it the other night. He, who by his death undertook to pay our debt, in his resurrection took out our acquittance, for it was his discharge out of prison, and it was a fair and legal discharge, by which it appeared that his satisfaction was accepted to all the purposes for which it was intended, and the matter in dispute was determined by an incontestable evidence that he was the Son of God.

2. They saw a young man sitting on the right side of the sepulchre: The angel appeared in the likeness of a man, of a young man; for angels though created in the beginning grow not old, but are always in the same perfection of beauty and strength, and so shall glorified saints be when they are as the angels. This angel was sitting on the right hand as they went into the sepulchre, clothed with a long white garment, a garment down to the feet, such as great men were arrayed with. The sight of him might justly have encouraged them, but they were affrighted. Thus many times that which should be matter of comfort to us, through our own mistakes and misapprehension, proves a terror to us.

3. He silenceth their fears by assuring them there was cause enough for triumph, but none for trembling, ver. 6. He saith to them, Be not affrighted. Note, Angels as they rejoice in the conversion of sinners, so they do also in the consolation of saints. Be not affrighted, for, (1.) You are faithful lovers of Jesus Christ, and therefore instead of being confounded ought to be comforted. Ye seek Jesus of Nazareth, which was crucified. Note, The enquiries of believing souls after Christ, have a particular regard to him as crucified, 1 Cor. ii. 2. that they may know him and the fellowship of his sufferings. His being lifted up from the earth is that which draws all men unto him. Christ's cross is the ensign to which the Gentiles seek. Observe, He speaks of Jesus as one that was crucified; the thing is past, that scene is over, you must not dwell so much upon the sad circumstances of his crucifixion as to be unapt to believe the joyful news of his resurrection. He was crucified in weakness, yet that doth not hinder but that he may be raised in power, and therefore ye that seek him be not afraid of missing him: He was crucified, but he is glorified; and the shame of his sufferings is so far from lessening the glory of his exaltation, that that glory perfectly wipes away all the reproach of his sufferings. And therefore after his entrance upon his glory, he never drew any veil over his sufferings, nor was shy of having his cross spoken of: The angel here that proclaims his resurrection, calls him Jesus that was crucified. He himself owns, Rev. i. 18. I am he that liveth and was dead; and he appears in the midst of the praises of the heavenly host as a Lamb that had been slain, Rev. v. 6.

(2.) It will therefore be good news to you to hear, that instead of anointing him dead, you may rejoice in him living. He is risen, he is not here, not dead but alive again; we cannot as yet shew you him, hereafter you shall see him, but you may here see the place where they laid him, and you see he is gone hence, not stolen either by his enemies or by his friends, but risen.

4. He orders them to give speedy notice of this to his disciples: Thus they were made the apostles of the apostles, which was a recompence of their affection and fidelity to him, in attending him on the cross, to the grave and in the grave: They first came and were first served; no other of the disciples durst come near his sepulchre, or enquire after him; so little danger was there of their coming by night to steal him away, that none came near him but a few women, who were not able so much as to roll away the stone.

(1.) They must tell the disciples that he is risen: It is a dismal time with them, their dear Master is dead, and all their hopes and joys are buried in his grave, they look upon their cause as sunk, and themselves ready to fall an easy prey into the hands of their enemies, so that there remains no more spirit in them, they are perfectly at their wit's end, every one is contriving how to shift for himself: O go quickly to them, saith the angel, tell them their Master is risen, that will put some life and spirit into them, and keep them when they heard it, said, Behold, he calleth Elias. 36. And one ran and filled a sponge full of vinegar, and put it on a reed, and gave him to drink, saying, Let alone; let us see whether Elias will come to take him down. 37. And Jesus cried with a loud voice, and gave up the ghost. 38. And the veil of the temple was rent in twain from the top to the bottom. 39. ¶ And when the centurion which stood over-against him, saw that he so cried out, and gave up the ghost, he said, Truly this man was the Son of God. 40. There were also women looking on afar off: among whom was Mary Magdalene, and Mary, the mother of James the less and of Joses, and Salome; 41. Who also when he was in Galilee, followed him, and ministered unto him; and many other women which came up with him unto Jerusalem.

Here we have an account of Christ's dying, how his enemies abused him, and God honoured him at his death.

1. There was a thick darkness over the whole land (some think over the whole earth) for three hours, from noon till three of the clock. Now the scripture was fulfilled, Amos viii. 9. I will cause the sun to go down at noon and will darken the earth in the clear day and Jer. xv. 9. Her sun is gone down while it was yet day. The Jews had often demanded of Christ a sign from heaven, and now they had one, but such a one as signified the blinding of their eyes. It was a sign of the darkness that was come and coming upon the Jewish church and nation. They were doing their utmost to extinguish the Sun of righteousness which was now setting, and the rising again of which they would never own; and what then might be expected among them but a worse than Egyptian darkness. This intimated to them, that the things which belonged to their peace were now hid from their eyes, and that the day of the Lord was at hand, which should be to them a day of darkness and gloominess, Joel ii. 1, 2. It was the power of darkness they were now under, the works of darkness they were now doing, and such as this should their doom justly be who loved darkness rather than the light.

2. Towards the close of this darkness, our Lord Jesus in the agony of his soul cried out, My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me? ver. 34. The darkness signified the present cloud which the human soul of Christ was under when he was making it an offering for sin. Mr. Fox, in his Acts and Monuments, vol. iii. p. 160. tells of one Mr. Hunter, a martyr in queen Mary's time, that being fastened to the stake to be burnt, he put up this short prayer, Son of God, shine upon me; and immediately the sun in the firmament shone out of a dark cloud to hell in his face, that he was forced to look another way, which was very comfortable to him; but our Lord Jesus on the contrary, was denied the light of the sun when he was in his sufferings to signify the withdrawing of the light of God's countenance. And this he complained of more than any thing; he did not complain of his disciples forsaking him, but of his father's. (1.) Because this wounded his spirit; and that is a thing hard to bear, Prov. xviii. 14. this brought the waters into his soul, Psalms lxxxix. 1, 2, 3. (2.) Because in this especially he was made sin for us; our iniquities had deserved indignation and wrath upon the soul, Rom. ii. 7. and therefore Christ being made a sacrifice, underwent as much of it as he was capable of; and it could not but bear hard indeed upon him who had laid in the bosom of the Father from eternity, and was always his delight. These symptoms of divine wrath, which Christ was under in his sufferings, were like that fire from heaven which had been sent sometimes in extraordinary cases to consume the sacrifices, Lev. ix. 24. 2 Chron. vii. 1. 1 Kings xviii. 38. and it was always a token of God's acceptance; the fire that should have fallen upon the sinner, if God had not been pacified, fell upon the sacrifice as a token that he was so; therefore it now fell upon Christ, and extorted from him this loud and bitter cry. When Paul was to be offered as a sacrifice for the service of the saints, he could joy and rejoice, Phil. ii. 17. But it is another thing to be offered as a sacrifice for the sins of sinners. Now at the sixth hour, and so to the ninth the sun was darkened by an extraordinary eclipse; and if it be true as some astronomers compute, that in the evening of this day in which Christ died there was an eclipse of the moon that was natural and expected, in which seven digits of the moon were darkened, and it continued from five o'clock till seven: it is remarkable, and yet farther significant of the darkness of the time that then was. When the sun shall be darkened, and the moon also shall not give her light.

3. Christ's prayer was bantered by them that stood by, ver. 35, 36. because he cried, Eli, Eli, (or as Mark has it according to the Syriac dialect) Eloi, Eloi, they said he calls for Elias, though they knew very well what he said, and what it signified, my God, my God. Thus did they represent him as praying to saints, either because he had abandoned God, or God had abandoned him; and hereby they would make him more and more odious to the people: one of them filled a sponge with vinegar, and reached it up to him upon a reed, let him cool his mouth with that, it was drink good enough for him, ver. 36. this was intended for a farther affront and abuse to him; and whoever it was that checked him who did it, did but add to the reproach; Let him alone, he has called for Elias, Let us see whether Elias will come to take him down, and if not, we may conclude that he also hath abandoned him.

4. Christ did again cry with a loud voice, and so gave up the ghost, ver. 37. He was now commending his soul into his Father's hands, and though God is not moved with any bodily exercise, yet this loud voice signified that great strength and ardency of affection wherewith he did it; to teach us in every thing wherein we have to do with God, to put forth our utmost vigour, and to perform all the duties of religion, particularly that of self-surrender, with our whole heart and our whole soul; and then though speech fails, that we cannot cry with a loud voice as Christ did, yet if God be the strength of the heart, that will not fail. Christ was really and truly dead, for he gave up the ghost, his human soul departed to the world of spirits, and left his body a breathless clod of clay.

5. Just at that instant that Christ died upon mount Calvary, the veil of the temple was rent in twain from the top to the bottom, ver. 38. This spoke a great deal, (1.) Of terror to the unbelieving Jews, for it was a preface of the utter destruction of their church and nation, which followed not long after; it was like the cutting asunder the staff of beauty (for this veil was exceeding splendid and glorious, Exod. xxvi. 31.) and that was done at the same time when they gave for his price thirty pieces of silver, Zech. xi. 10—12. to break the covenant which he had made with that people. Now it was time to cry Ichabod, The glory is departed from Israel. Some think that story which Josephus relates of the temple-door opening of its own accord with that voice, Let us depart hence, some years before the destruction of Jerusalem, is the same with this here, but that is not probable; however this had the same signification, according to that, Hos. v. 11. I will tear and go away. (2.) It speaks a deal of comfort to all believing Christians, for it signified the consecrating and laying open to us a new and living way into the holiest by the blood of Jesus.

6. The centurion who commanded that detachment which had the oversight of the execution was convinced, and confessed that this Jesus was the Son of God, ver. 39. One thing that satisfied him was, that he so cried out, and gave up the ghost: that one who was ready to give up the ghost should be able to cry out so was very surprising. Of all the sad spectacles of this kind he never observed the like; and that one who had strength to cry so loud, should yet immediately give up the ghost; this also made him wonder and he said to the honour of Christ, and the shame of those that abused him, Truly this man was the Son of God. But what reason had he to say so? I answer, (1.) He had reason to say that he suffered unjustly, and had a great deal of wrong done him. Note, He suffered for saying he was the son of God; and it was true he did say so, so that if he suffered unjustly, as it was plain by all the circumstances of his sufferings he did, then what he said was true, and he was indeed the Son of God. (2.) He had reason to say that he was a favourite of heaven, and one for whom the Almighty Power was particularly engaged, seeing how heaven did him honour at his death, and frowned upon his persecutors. Surely, thinks he, this must be some divine person highly beloved of God. This he expresseth by such words as speak his eternal generation as God, and his special designation to the office of Mediator, though he meant not so. Our Lord Jesus, even in the depth of his sufferings and humiliation, was the Son of God, and was declared to be so with power.

7. There were some of his friends, the good women especially, that attended him, ver. 40, 41. There were women looking on afar off: the men durst not be seen at all, the mob was so very outrageous (currente cede furor), they thought was good counsel now. The women durst not come near, but stood at a distance, overwhelmed with grief: some of these women are here named, Mary Magdalene was one, she had been his patient, and owed all her comfort to his power and goodness, which rescued her out of the possession of seven devils, in gratitude for which she thought she could never do enough for him. Mary the mother of James the little, (Jacobus parvus) to the word is, probably he was so called because he was like Zaccheus, little of stature. This Mary was the wife of Cleophas or Alphius, sister to the virgin Mary. These women had followed Christ from Galilee, though they were not required to attend the feasts as the males were; but it is likely they came in expectation that his temporal kingdom would now shortly be set up, and big with hopes of preferment for themselves and their relations under him: it is plain the mother of Zebedee's children was so, Matt. xx. 21. and now to see him upon a cross whom they thought to have seen upon a throne, could not but be a great baulk to them. Note, Those that follow Christ, in expectation of great things in this world by him and by the profession of his religion, may probably live to see themselves sadly disappointed.

42. ¶ And now when the even was come (because it was the preparation, that is, the day before the sabbath,) 43. Joseph of Arimathea, an honourable counsellor, which also waited for the kingdom of God, came, and went in boldly unto Pilate, and craved the body of Jesus. 44. And Pilate marvelled if he were already dead: and calling unto him the centurion, he asked him whether he had been any while dead. 45. And when he knew it of the centurion, he gave the body to Joseph. 46. And he bought fine linen, and took him down, and wrapped him in the linen, and laid him in a sepulchre which was hewn out of a rock, and rolled a stone unto the door of the sepulchre. 47. And Mary Magdalene and Mary the mother of Joses beheld where he was laid.

We are here attending the funeral of our Lord Jesus, a solemn, mournful funeral: O that we may by grace be planted in the likeness of it. Observe, 1. How the body of Christ was begged. It was, as the dead bodies of malefactors used to be, at the disposal of the government. Those that hurried him to the cross designed he should make his grave with the wicked, but God designed he should make it with the rich, Isa. liii. 9. and so he did. We are here told,

1. When the body of Christ was begged, in order to its being buried, and why such haste was made with the funeral; it was even as come. And it was the preparation, that is, the day before the sabbath, ver. 42. The Jews were more strict in the observation of the sabbath than of any other feast, and therefore, though this day was itself a feast day, yet they observed it more religiously as the eve of the sabbath; when they prepared their houses and tables for the splendid and joyful solemnizing of the sabbath-day. Note, The day before the sabbath should be a day of preparation for the sabbath, not of our houses and tables, but of our hearts, which as much as possible should be freed from the cares and business of the world, and fixed and put in frame for the service and enjoyment of God. Such work is to be done, and such advantages gained on the sabbath-day, that it is requisite we should get ready for it a day before; nay, the whole week should be divided between the improvement of the foregoing sabbath, and the preparation for the following sabbath.

2. Who it was that begged the body, and took care for the decent interment of it; it was Joseph of Arimathea, who is here called an honourable counsellor, ver. 43. A person of character and distinction, and in an office of public trust; some think in the state, and that he was one of Pilate's privy counsel; his post rather seems to have been in the church, he was one of the great Sanhedrin of the Jews, or one of the high priest's council. He was εὐσεβὴς καὶ δίκαιος, a counsellor that carrieth himself in his place as did become him. Those are truly honourable, and those only, in places of power and trust that make conscience of their duty, and whose deportment is agreeable to their preferment. But here is a more shining character put upon him, he was one that waited for the kingdom of God, the kingdom of grace on earth, and of glory in heaven, the kingdom of the Messiah. Note, Those who wait for the kingdom of God, and hope for an interest in the privileges of it, must shew it by their forwardness to own Christ's cause and interest, even when it seems to be crushed and run down. Observe, Even among the honourable counsellors there were some, there was one at least that waited for the kingdom of God, whose faith will condemn the unbelief of all the rest. This man God raised up for this necessary service, when none of Christ's disciples could or durst undertake it, having neither purse nor interest, nor courage for it. Joseph went in boldly to Pilate; though

He said he knew how much it would affect the child, but he was not willing to sell her with too much reservation to her. Any labour done by her would be for the good of the children, and he was quite a frank business man. He said that he had determined to do what he felt proper to the interests of the children, and the work came to the work.

3. What a fair prize it was to Pilate to hear that he was dead, he was expecting that he would have his prisoner, and come down from the cross, especially that he was already dead, that one who seemed to have a more than ordinary vigour should so soon yield to death. Every one is sensible of Cliriff's deliver was marvellous, for from first to last his name was called Wonderful. Pilate doubted (so some understand it) whether he were yet dead or no, fearing lest he should be imposed upon, and the body should be taken down alive and recovered, whereas the sentence was, as with us, to hang till the body be dead. He therefore called the centurion, his own officer, and asked him, Whether he had been any while dead, ver. 44. whether it was so long since they perceived any sign of life in him, any breath or motion, that they might conclude he was dead past recall. The centurion would assure him of this, for he had particularly observed how he gave up the ghost, ver. 20. There was a special providence in it, that Pilate should be so strict in examining this, that there might be no pretence to say he was buried alive, and so to take away the truth of his resurrection; and so fully was this determined, that objection was never started. Thus the truth of Christ gains confirmation, sometimes even from the enemies of it.

2. How the body of Christ was buried. Pilate gave Joseph leave to take down the body, and do what he pleased with it. It was a wonder the chief priests were not too quick for him, and had not first begged the body of Pilate, to expose it and drag it about the streets, but that remainder of their wrath did God restrain, and gave that invaluable prize to Joseph, who knew how to value it: and the hearts of the priests were so influenced, that they did not oppose it. Sit deus modo non sit irasci.

1. Joseph bought fine linen to wrap the body in, though in such a case old linen that had been worn might have been thought sufficient. In paying respects to Christ it becomes us to be generous, and to serve him with the best that can be got, not with that which can be got at the best hand.

2. He took down the body, mangled and macerated as it was, and scraped it in the Lucca as a treasure of great worth. Our Lord Jesus hath commanded his fil^{ls} to be delivered to us sacramentally in the ordinance of the Lord's supper, which we should receive in such a manner as may best express love to him, who loved us and died for us.

3. He laid it in a sepulchre of his own, in a private place. We find times find it spoken of as the Parv of the kings of Judah, as a burial of the memory of the wicked kings, that they were not buried in the sepulchres of the kings; and David, though he did not die a natural death, and to him was given the throne of his father David, yet was buried in the grave of the common people, for he was not in this world, but in the other, that his rest was at peace. The sepulchre belonged to Joseph, Abraham when he had bought a piece of land with the land of Canaan, yet had a burying place, but Christ had not for more as that. The sepulchre was hewn out of a rock, for Christ died to make the grave a refuge and shelter to the poor, and being hewn out of a rock, it is a strong refuge. O that thou wouldst hide me in the shadow of Christ's rock, it is a hiding place to his people, that is, as the shadow of a great rock.

4. He knelt at the door of the sepulchre, for so the manner of the Jews was to bury. When Daniel was put into the lion's den, a door was laid to the mouth of it to keep him in, as here to the door of Chus's sepulchre, but neither of them could keep off the angry spirits to the destruction.

Some of the good women attended the funeral, and Job it were to say Job, that they might come after the Sabbath to enquire of the body, because they had not time to do it now. When Moses the mediator and Lawgiver of the Church was buried, care was taken that no man should know of his burial. Dent. xxiv. 6. because the rulers of the people would have been ready to die with him; but when our great Mediator and Lawgiver was buried, special notice was taken of his burial because he was to rise again. And the care taken of his body, speaks of the care which he himself will take concerning his body the church, even to when it seems to be a dead body, and as a valley full of dry bones, it shall be preferred in order to a resurrection; as shall also the dead bodies of the faithful, with whose resurrection is a covenant in force which shall not be forgotten. Our meditations on Christ's burial should lead us to think of our own, and should help to make the grave familiar to us, and to make that bed of rest, which we must finally make in the darkness. Frequent thoughts of it would not only take off the dread and terror of it, but quicken us, since the graves are always ready for us, to get ready for the graves, Job xvii. 1.

C H A P. XVI.

In this chapter we have a short account of the resurrection and ascension of the Lord Jesus, and the joys and triumphs which it furnishes all believers with, and be very acceptable to those who sympathized and suffered with Christ in the foregoing chapters. Here is, (1.) Christ's resurrection notified by an angel to the women that came to the sepulchre to anoint him, ver. 1-8. (2.) His appearance to Mary Magdalen, and the account she gave of it to the disciples, ver. 9, 10, 11. (3.) His appearance to the ten disciples going to Emmaus, and the report they made of it to their brethren, ver. 12, 13. (4.) His appearance to the apostles, with the command he gave them to set up his kingdom in the world, and full instructions and credentials in order thereunto, ver. 14-18. (5.) His ascension into heaven, and the apostles' close application to their work, and God's owning them in it, ver. 19, 20.

1. AN when the sabbath was past, Mary Magdalene, and Mary the mother of James, and Salome, had bought sweet spices, that they might come and anoint him. 2. And very early in the morning, the first day of the week, they came unto the sepulchre at the rising of the sun. 3. And they said among themselves, Who shall roll us away the stone from the door of the sepulchre? 4. (And when they looked, they saw that the stone was rolled away) for it was very great. 5. And entering into the sepulchre, they saw a young man sitting on the right side, clothed in a long white garment; and they were affrighted. 6. And he saith unto them, Be not affrighted: ye seek Jesus of Nazareth, which was crucified: he is risen, he is not here; behold the place where they laid him. 7. But go your way, tell his disciples and Peter, that he goeth before you into Galilee: there shall ye find him, as he hath said. And they went out quickly, and fled from the Grave: for they trembled, and were amazed: neither did they any thing to any man: for they were afraid.

Never was there such a fabbath since the fabbath was first instituted; the first words of this chapter tells us, was a sabbath day after that our Lord Jesus lay in the grave. It was to him a fabbath of rest, his sabbath; it was to his disciples a metachol Sabbath, signified by his tears; Never were the fabbath services in the temple such an abomination to God, though they had been often so, as they were now when the great priests that presided in them had their hands full of blood the blood of Christ. Well, this fabbath is over, and the first day of the week is the first day of a new world. We have here,

1. It is affectionate visit which the good women that followed Christ now made to his sepulchre, not a superstitious one, but a pious one. They set out from their lodgings very early in the morning, at break of day or sooner; but either they had a long walk or met with friendly assistance, so that it was morning by that time they got to the sepulchre. They had brought sweet spices, too, and came not only to bedew the dead body with them, as, for nothing could more renew their grief than this, but to perform it with their spices, ver. 1. Nicodemus had brought a very large quantity of spices myrrour incense, which served to dry the wounds, and dry up the blood. Jhn xix 39. But the good women did not think that enough, they brought spices of another kind, some perfum'd oils to anoint him. Note, The refreshments which others have shewed to Christ's name should not hinder us from showing respects to it.

[illegible]

3 The assurance that was given to us by an angel, that the Lord Jesus was risen from the dead, and that we should have of this victory, and had left him there to tell those who were gathered thither to engage with him.

1. They entered into the Sepulchre, it found it to be way in, and for the body of J. C. was not there where they left it the other night. How, or by what death undertook to pay our debt, in his self-reliance to do so, and put it to rest, it was his discharge out of power, and it was a true and good discharge, by which it appeared that his Father's action was a payment of the purpose for which it was intended, and the matter in itself was determined by an uncontrollable evidence that he was the Son of God.

2. They saw a young man sitting on the right side of the sepulchre: The angel appeared in the likeness of a man, of a young man; for angels though created in the beginning grow no old, but are always in the full perfection of beauty and strength, and so shall glorified Christians be when they are as the angels. This angel was sitting on the right hand as they went up to the sepulchre, clothed with a long white garment, a garment down to the feet, such as great men were arrayed with. The sight of him might justly have encouraged them, but they were affrighted. This discovery must not which should be matter of comfort to us, through our own infirmities and perhaps incontinency, proves a terror to us.

3. He silenceth th^e fears by alluring them, there was cause enough for proph^{cy}, but not for trembling, ver. 8. He saith to them, Be not affrighted. Note, Angels as th^e rep^r in the coave^l hood of heaven, so they t^{ake} also in the consolation of earth. Be not affrighted, ver. 10. (1.) You are such lovers of Jesus Christ, and therefore a minister of him is comforted ought to be comforted. For he Jesus of Nazareth, which was crucified. Note, The inquires of believing souls after Christ, have a particular regard to him as crucified, 1 Cor. ii. 2. that they may know him and the fellowship of his sufferings. His being lifted up from the earth is that which draws all men unto him. Christ's cross is the ensign to which the Gentiles flock. Observe, He speaks of Jesus as one that was crucified; the thing is past, that scene is over, you must not dwell so much upon the sad circumstance of His crucifixion as to be unapt to believe the joyful news of his resurrection. He was crucified in weakness, yet that doth not hinder but that he may be raised in power, and therefore ye that seek him be not afraid of missing him: He was crucified, but he is glorified: and the shame of his fall rings is so far from lessening the glory of his exaltation, that that glory perfectly wipes away all the reproach of his sufferings. And therefore after his entrance upon his glory, he never drew any veil over his sufferings, it was th^e way of saving his cross spoken of: The angel here that proclaims his resurrection, calls him Jesus that was crucified. He himself owns, Rev. i. 18. I am he that liveth and was dead; and he appears in the midst of the praises of the heavenly host as a Lamb that had been slain, Rev. v. 6.

(2.) It will therefore be good news to you to hear, that instead of mourning him dead, you may rejoice in him living. He is risen, he is not here, not dead but alive again ; we cannot as yet show you him, hereafter you shall see him, but you may here see the place where they laid him, and you see he is gone hence, not taken either by his enemies or by his friends, but risen.

4. He orders them to give speedy notice of this to his disciples : Thus they were made the apostles of the apostles, which was a recompence of their affection and fidelity to him, in attending him on the cross, to the cave and in the grave : They first came and were first served ; no other of the disciples durst come near his sepulchre, or enquire after him ; so little danger was there of their coming by night to steal him away, that none came near him but a few women, who were not able so much as to roll away the stone.

(1.) They must tell the disciples that he is risen: It is a dismal time with them, their dear Master is dead, and all their hopes and joys are buried in a grave, they look upon their cause as sunk, and themselves ready to fall an easy prey into the hands of their enemies, so that there remains no more light in them, they are perfectly at their wit's end, every one is contriving how to shift for himself: O go quickly to them, saith the angel, tell them their Master is risen, that will put some life and spirit into them, and keep them from sinking into despair. Note, (1.) Christ is not ashamed to own his poor disciples, no, not now he is in his exalted state; his preferment doth not make him shy of them, for he took early care to have it notified to them. (2.) Christ is not extreme to mark what they do amiss, whose hearts are upright with him. The disciples had very unkindly deserted him, and yet he testified this concern for them. (3.) Seasonable comforts shall be sent to those that are lamenting after the Lord Jesus, and he will find a time to manifest himself to them.

(2.) They must be sure to tell Peter. This is particularly taken notice of by this evangelist, who is supposed to have written by Peter's direction. If it were told the disciples, it would be told Peter, for as a token of his repentance for disowning his Master he still associated with his disciples; yet he is particularly named, tell Peter, for, (1.) It will be good news to him, more welcome to him than to any of them, for he is in sorrow for sin, and no tidings can be more welcome to true penitents than to hear of the resurrection of Christ, because he rose again for their justification. (2.) He will be afraid, lest the joy of this good news do not belong to him. Had the angel said only, go tell his disciples, poor Peter would have been ready to sigh and say, But I doubt I cannot look upon myself as one of them, for I disowned him, and deserve to be disowned by him; to obviate that, go to Peter by name, and tell him, he shall be as welcome as any of the rest to see him in Galilee. Note, A sight of Christ will be very welcome to a true penitent, and a true penitent shall be very welcome to a sight of Christ, for there is joy in heaven concerning him.

(3.) They must appoint them all, and Peter by name, to give him the meeting in Galilee, as he said unto you, Matt. xxvi. 32. In their journey down into Galilee they would have time to recollect themselves, and call to mind what he has often said to them there, that he should suffer and die, and the third day be raised again; whereas while they were at Jerusalem among strangers and enemies, they could not recover themselves from the fright they had been in, nor compose themselves to the due entertainment of better tidings. Note, 1. All the meetings between Christ and his disciples are of his own appointing. 2. Christ never forgets his appointment, but will be sure to meet his people with the promised blessing in every place where he records his name. 3. In all meetings between Christ and his disciples, he is the most forward. He goes before you.

4. The account which the women did bring of this to the disciples, ver. 8. They went out quickly, and ran from the sepulchre, to make all the haste they could to the disciples, trembling and amazed. See how much we are enemies to ourselves and our own comfort, in not considering and mixing faith with what Christ hath said to us; Christ had often told them, that the third day he would rise again, had they given that its due notice and credit, they would have received the news of it with a joyful assurance, and not with all this terror and amazement. But being ordered to tell the disciples, because they were to tell it to all the world, they would not tell it to any one else, they shewed not any thing of it to any man that they met by the way, for they were afraid, afraid it was too good news to be true. Note, Our disquieting fears often hinder us from doing that service to Christ and to the souls of men, which, if faith and the joy of faith were strong, we might do.

9. ¶ Now when Jesus was risen early the first day of the week, he appeared first to Mary Magdalene, out of whom he had cast seven devils. 10. And she went and told them that had been with him, as they mourned and wept. 11. And they, when they had heard that he was alive, and had been seen of her, believed not. 12. ¶ After that he appeared in another form unto two of them, as they walked, and went into the country. 13. And they went and told it unto the residue: neither believed they them.

We have here a very short account of two of Christ's appearances, and the little credit which the report of them gained with the disciples.

1. He appeared to Mary Magdalene, to her first in the garden, which we have a particular narrative of, John xx. 14. It was she out of whom he had cast seven devils, much was forgiven her, and much was given her, and done for her, and she loved much, and this honour Christ did her that she was the first that saw him after his resurrection. The closer we cleave to Christ, the sooner we may expect to see him, and the more to see of him.

Now, (1.) She brings notice of what she had seen to the disciples; not only to the eleven, but to the rest that followed him, as they mourned and wept, ver. 10. Now was the time of which Christ had told them, that they should mourn and lament, John xvi. 20. And it was an evidence of their great love to Christ, and the deep sense they had of their loss of him. But when their weeping had endured a night or two, comfort returned, as Christ had promised them, I will see you again, and your heart shall rejoice. Better news cannot be brought to disciples in tears, than to tell them of Christ's resurrection. And we should study to be comforters to disciples that are mourners, by communicating to them our experiences, and what we have seen of Christ.

(2.) They could not give credit to the report she brought them. They heard that he was alive, and had been seen of her; The story was plausible enough, and yet they believed not! They would not say that she made the story herself, or designed to deceive them, but they fear she is imposed upon, and it was but a fancy that she saw him. Had they believed the frequent predictions of it from his own mouth, they would not have been now so incredulous of the report of it.

2. He appeared to two of the disciples, as they went into the country, ver. 12. This refers, no doubt, to that which is largely related, Luke xxiv. 13. of what passed between Christ and the two disciples going to Emmaus. He is here said to have appeared to them in another form, in another dress than what he usually wore, in the form of a traveller, as in the garden in such a dress that Mary Magdalene took him for the gardener; but that he had really his own countenance appears by this, that their eyes were holden that they should not know him; and when that restraint on their eyes was taken off immediately they knew him, Luke xxiv. 16—31. Now,

1. These two witnesses gave in their testimony to this proof of Christ's resurrection. They went and told it to the residue, ver. 13. Being satisfied themselves they were desirous to give their brethren the satisfaction they had, that they might be comforted as they were.

2. This did not gain credit with all; neither believed they them. They suspected that their eyes also deceived them. Now there was a wise providence in it, that the proofs of Christ's resurrection were given in thus gradually, and admitted thus cautiously, that so the assurance with which the apostles preached this doctrine afterwards, when they ventured their all upon it, might be the more satisfying; we have the more reason to believe those who did themselves believe so slowly; had they swallowed it presently they might have been thought credulous, and their testimony the less to be regarded, but their disbelieving at first shews that they did not believe it afterwards but upon a full conviction.

14. ¶ Afterward he appeared unto the eleven as they sat at meat, and upbraided them with their unbelief and hardness of heart, because they believed not them which had seen him after he was risen. 15. And he said unto them, Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. 16. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved: but he that believeth not shall be damned. 17. And these signs shall follow them that believe: in my name shall they cast out devils: they shall speak with new tongues: 18. They shall take up serpents; and if they drink any deadly thing, it shall not hurt them: they shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover.

Here is, 1. The conviction which Christ gave his apostles of the truth of his resurrection, ver. 14. He appeared to them himself, when they were all together, as they sat at meat, which gave him an opportunity to eat and drink with them for their full satisfaction, see Acts x. 41. And still when he appeared to them he upbraided them with their unbelief and hardness of heart, for even at the general meeting in Galilee some doubted, as we find Matt. xxviii. 17. Note, The evidences of the truth of the gospel are so full, that those who receive it not may justly be upbraided with their unbelief; and it is owing not to any weakness or deficiency in the proofs, but to the hardness of the heart, and the senselessness and stupidity of that: Though they had not till now seen him themselves, they are justly blamed because they believed not them which had seen him after he was risen; and perhaps it was owing in part to the pride of their hearts, that they did not; for they thought if indeed he were risen, to whom should he delight to do the honour of shewing himself but to them? And if he pass them by, and shew himself to others first, they cannot believe it is he. Thus many disbelieve the doctrine of Christ, because they think it below them to give credit to such as he has chosen to be the witnesses and publishers of it. Observe it will not suffice for an excuse of our infidelity in the great day to say, we did not see him after he was risen, for we ought to have believed the testimony of those who did see him.

2. The commission which he gave them to set up his kingdom among men by the preaching of his gospel, the glad tidings of reconciliation to God through a Mediator. Now observe,

1. To whom they were to preach the gospel. Hitherto they had been sent only to the lost sheep of the house of Israel, and were forbidden to go into the way of the Gentiles, or into any city of the Samaritans: but now their commission is enlarged, and they are authorized to go into all the world, into all parts of the world, the habitable world, and to preach the gospel of Christ to every creature, to the Gentiles as well as to the Jews; to every human creature that is capable of receiving it. Inform them concerning Christ, the history of his life, and death and resurrection; instruct them in the meaning and intention of these, and of the advantages which the children of men have or may have hereby; and invite them without exception to come and share in them. This is gospel, let this be preached in all places to all persons. These eleven men could not themselves preach it to all the world, much less to every creature in it, but they and the other disciples, seventy in number, with those who should afterwards be added to them, must disperse themselves several ways, and wherever they went carry the gospel along with them. They must send others to those places whither they could not go themselves, and in short make it the business of their lives to send those glad tidings up and down the world with all possible fidelity and care, not as an amusement or entertainment, but as a solemn message from God to man, and an appointed means of making men happy. Tell as many as you can, and bid them tell others; it is a message of universal concern, and therefore ought to have an universal welcome, because it gives an universal welcome.

2. What is the summary of the gospel they are to preach, ver. 16. Set before the world life and death, good and evil. Tell the children of men that they are all in a state of misery and danger, condemned by their prince, and conquered and enslaved by their enemies. This is supposed in their being saved, which they would not need to be if they were not lost. Now go and tell them, (1.) That if they believe the gospel, and give up themselves to be Christ's disciples; if they renounce the devil, the world, and the flesh, and be devoted to Christ as their prophet, priest, and king, and to God in Christ as their God in covenant, and evidence by their constant adherence to this covenant their sincerity therein, they shall be saved from the guilt and power of sin, it shall not rule them, it shall not ruin them. He that is a true Christian shall be saved through Christ. Baptism was appointed to be the inaugurating rite, by which those that embraced Christ owned him; but it is here put rather for the thing signified than for the sign, for Simon Magus believed and was baptized, yet was not saved, Acts viii. 13. believing with the heart and confessing with the mouth the Lord Jesus, Rom. ix. 9. seems to be much the same with this here. Or thus, we must assent to gospel truths, and consent to gospel terms. (2.) If they believe not, if they receive not the record God gives concerning his son, they cannot expect any other way of salvation, but must inevitably perish; they shall be damned, by the sentence of a despised gospel, added to that of a broken law. And even this is gospel, it is good news that nothing else but unbelief shall damn men, which is a sin against the remedy. Dr. Whitby here observes, that they who hence infer, "That the infant seed of believers are not capable of baptism, because they cannot believe, must hence also infer that they cannot be saved, faith being here more expressly required to salvation than to baptism. And that in the latter clause baptism is omitted, because it is not simply the want of baptism, but the contemptuous neglect of it, which makes men guilty of damnation, otherwise infants might be damned for the mistake, or profaneness of their parents."

3. What power they should be endowed with for the confirmation of the doctrine they were to preach, ver. 17. These signs shall follow them that believe; not that all who believe shall be able to produce these signs, but some, even as many as were employed in propagating the faith, and bringing others to it; for signs are intended for them that believe not, see 1 Cor. xiv. 22. It added much to the glory and evidence of the gospel, that the preachers not only wrought miracles themselves, but conferred upon others a power to work miracles, which power followed some of them that believed wherever they went to preach. They shall do wonders in Christ's name, the same name into which they were baptized, in the virtue of power derived from him, and fetched in by prayer: some particular signs are mentioned; (1.) They shall cast out devils; this power was more common among Christians
